There were also upon the bank of the foresaid river certain houses, but some of them the stinking vapour which rose from the river did touch, and some other it touched not at all. Now those that desired to pass over the foresaid bridge, were subject to this manner of trial: if any that was wicked attempted to go over, down he fell into that dark and stinking river; but those that were just and not hindered by sin, securely and easily passed over to those pleasant and delicate places. There he said also that he saw Peter, who was steward of the Pope's family, and died some four years since, thrust into a most filthy place, where he was bound and kept down with a great weight of iron: and inquiring why he was so used, he received that answer, which all we that knew his life can affirm to be most true: for it was told him that he suffered that pain, because when himself was upon any occasion to punish other, that he did it more upon cruelty than to shew his obedience; of which his merciless disposition none that knew him can be ignorant. There also he said that he saw a Priest whom he knew: who coming to the foresaid bridge, passed over with as great security, as he lived in this world sincerely.

Likewise, upon the same bridge he said that he did see this Stephen, whom before we spake of, who being about to go over, his foot slipped, and half his body hanging beside the bridge, he was of certain terrible men, that rose out of the river, drawn by the legs downward: and by certain other white and beautiful persons, he was by the arms pulled upward: and whiles they strove thus, the wicked spirits to draw him downward, and the good to lift him upward, he that beheld all this strange sight returned to life, not knowing in conclusion what became of him. By which miraculous vision we learn thisvthing concerning the life of Stephen, to wit, that in him the sins of the flesh did strive with his works of alms. For in that he was by the legs drawn downward, and by the arms plucked upward, apparent it is, that both he loved to give alms, and yet did not perfectly resist the sins of the flesh, which did pull him downward: but in that secret examination of the supreme judge, which of them had the victory, that neither we know, nor he that saw it. Yet most certain it is, that the same Stephen, after that he had seen the places of hell, as before was said, and returned again to his body, did never perfectly amend his former wicked life, seeing many years after he departed this world, leaving us in doubt whether he were saved or damned. Whereby we may learn, that when any have the torments of hell shewn them, that to some it is for their commodity, and to others for their testimony: that the former may see those miseries to avoid them, and these other to be so much the more punished, in that they would not take heed of those torments, which they both knew and with their eyes beheld.

PETER. What, I beseech you, was meant by the building of that house in those places of delight, with bricks of gold? For it seemeth very ridiculous, that in the next life we should have need of any such kind of metal.

What is meant by the building of the house in those pleasant places. And of one Deusdedit, whose house was seen to be built upon the Saturday.

GREGORY. What man of sense can think so? but by that which was shewn there, whosoever he was, for whom that house was built, we learn plainly what virtuous works he did in this world: for he that by plenty of alms doth merit the reward of eternal light, certain it is, that he doth build his house with gold. For the same soldier who had this vision said also, which I forgot before to tell you, that old men, and young, girls, and boys, did carry those bricks of gold for the building of that house: by which we learn that those to whom we shew compassion in this world, do labour for us in the next. There dwelt also hard by us a religious man, called Deusdedit, who was a shoemaker, concerning whom another saw by revelation that he had in the next world an house a building; but the workmen thereof laboured only upon the Saturday. Who afterward enquiring more diligently how he lived, found that whatsoever he got by his labour all the week, and was not spent upon necessary provision of meat and apparel, all that upon the Saturday he bestowed upon the poor in alms at St. Peter's church: and therefore see what reason there was, that his building went forward upon the Saturday.

PETER. You have given me very good satisfaction touching this one point: yet desirous I am further to know, what the reason was that some of those habitations were touched, by the stinking vapour, and some were not; and what is meant by the bridge and river which he saw.

GREGORY. By the representation of these things, Peter, are expressed the causes which they do signify. For the bridge, by which he beheld God's servants to pass unto those pleasant places, doth teach us that the path is very strait which leadeth to everlasting life: and the stinking river, which he saw running beneath, signifieth that the filthy corruption of vice in this world doth daily run to the downfall of carnal pleasure. And that some of the habitations were touched with the stinking vapour, and some were not, what is meant else, but that there be divers which do many good works, yet in their soul they are touched with the delight of carnal sins? and therefore very great reason there is, that in the next world such should taste of a stinking vapour, whom filthy carnality did delight in this; and therefore blessed Job, perceiving the pleasure of the flesh to be stinking, pronounceth this sentence of the wanton and carnal man: His sweetness be worms. But those that do preserve their heart free from all pleasure of carnal thoughts, have not their houses touched with any such stinking vapour: and here we have also to note, that he saw one and the same thing both to be a vapour and also to have an ill savour, because carnal delight doth so obscure the soul which it hath infected, that it can not see the brightness of true light: for the more pleasure it hath in the inferior part, the more darkness it hath in the superior, which doth hinder it from the contemplation of heavenly mysteries.

PETER. Is there any text of holy scripture, to prove that carnal sins be punished with stinking and bad savours?

Of the punishment of the men of Sodom.

GREGORY. There is: for in Genesis we read that our Lord rained fire and brimstone upon the city of Sodom: that both fire might burn them, and the stench of brimstone smother and kill them: for seeing they burnt with the unlawful love of corruptible flesh, by God's just judgment they perished both by fire and an unsavoury smell; to the end they might know that they had, by the pleasure of their stinking life, incurred the sorrows of eternal death.

PETER. Concerning those things which before I doubted of, I find myself now so fully satisfied, that I have not any further question to move.

Chapter Thirty-seven: who the souls of some men, being yet in their bodies, do see some spiritual punishment: and of that which happened to the boy Theodorus.

GREGORY. We have also to know that sometime the souls, whiles they are in their bodies, do behold some spiritual punishment: which yet happeneth to some for their own good, and to others for the edification of them that hear thereof. For there was one Theodorus (which story I remember that in mine Homilies to the people I have also spoken of) who was a very unruly lad, and, more upon necessity than of his own good will, in the company of his brother entered into my Monastery: and so little pleasure he took in spiritual talk, that it was death to him to hear anything tending to the good of his own soul, for he was so far from doing any good work, that he could not endure to hear thereof: and he would openly protest, sometimes by swearing, sometimes in anger, and sometimes in scoffing sort, that he never meant to take upon him the habit of a religious life. This untoward boy, in the late mortality which consumed the greatest part of this city, was grievously strooken: whereof he lay sore sick: and being at last come to the point of death, all the monks repaired to his chamber, to pray for the happy departure of his soul, which seemed not to be far off: for the one half of his body was already dead, and only in his breast a little life remained, and therefore the nearer they saw him to his end, the more fervently did they commend him to God's mercy. Whiles they were thus busied, suddenly he cried out to them, and with great clamour went about to interrupt their devotions, saying: "Depart and away, for behold I am delivered over to a dragon to be devoured, and your presence doth let him, that he can not dispatch me. My head he hath already swallowed up in his mouth, and therefore go your ways, that my torments be not the longer, and that he may effect that which he is about to do: for if I be given him to devour, why do you keep me here in longer pain?" At these fearful words the monks said unto him: “Why do you speak thus, good brother? Bless yourself with the sign of the holy cross”: to whom he answered: “Willingly I would, but I can not, I am so loaden with this dragon’s scales.” Upon these words the monks fell prostrate upon the earth, and in great zeal with tears they prayed to God for his delivery out of the enemy’s hands, who mercifully heard them, for upon a sudden the sick person began to cry out, and say: “God be thanked, behold the dragon that had me to devour, is fled away, and overcome with your prayers, here he could not tarry. Now, I beseech you, make intercession for my sins, for I am ready to turn unto God, and wholly to renounce all kind or secular life “: and thus he that was half dead, as before was said, reserved now to a longer life, turned to God with his whole heart: and so, after he had put on a new mind, and was a long time punished with affliction, then his soul departed from the miseries of this mortal life.

Chapter Thirty-eight: of the death of Chrisorius : and of a certain Monk of Iconia.

But Chrisorius on the contrary (as his kinsman Probus, of whom I made mention before, told me) was a substantial man in this world, but as full of sin as of wealth: for he was passing proud, given to the pleasures of the flesh, covetous, and wholly set upon scraping of riches together. But when God determined to make an end of so many sins, he sent him a great sickness; and when his last time drew near, in that very hour in which his soul was to leave the body, lying with his eyes open, he saw certain cruel men and black spirits stand before him, pressing upon him to carry him away to the pit of hell: at which fearful sight he began to tremble, to wax pale, to sweat, and with pitiful outcries to crave for truce: and often with faltering tongue to call for his son Maximus (whom, when I was a monk, I knew also to profess the same kind of life), saying: "Come away, Maximus, with all speed. Never in my life did I any harm to thee, receive me now in thy faith." His son, greatly moved at these outcries, came unto him in all haste: and his whole family lamenting and crying out, repaired also to his chamber: none of all which beheld those wicked spirits, which did so urge and vex him: but by his trouble of mind, by his paleness and trembling, they made no doubt of their presence: for he was so affrighted with their terrible looks, that he turned himself every way in his bed. Lying upon his left side, he could not endure their sight: and turning to the wall, there also he found them: at last, being very much beset, and despairing of all means to escape their hands, he cried out with a loud voice: "O truce till to-morrow, O truce till to-morrow": and crying out in this sort he gave up the ghost. This being the manner of his death, certain it is that he saw this fearful sight not for himself, but for us: that his vision might do us good, whom God's patience doth yet with fatherly long sufferance expect to amendment. For what profit reaped he by seeing those foul spirits before his death, and by craving for that truce which he could not obtain?

There is also now dwelling amongst us a Priest of Isauria called Athanasius, who telleth a very fearful story which in his time happened, as he saith, at Iconium. For there was in that place, as he reporteth, a Monastery called Thongolaton , in which there lived a monk that was had in great account: for he was of good conversation, and in his life very orderly: but, as the end declared, he was far otherwise than he outwardly appeared: for though he did seem to fast with the rest of the monks, yet did he secretly take his meat: which vice of his none of the other monks ever understood. But at length it came forth by this means: for falling grievously sick, so that no hope of life remained, he caused all the monks of the Convent to be called together, who all willingly came, verily thinking that, at the departure of so notable a man, they should have heard some sweet and good exhortation: but it fell out far otherwise, for with great trouble of mind, and trembling of body, he was enforced to tell them that he died in a damnable state, saying: "When you thought that I fasted with you, then had I my meat in secret corners: and behold, now I am delivered to a dragon to be devoured, who with his tail hath enwrapped fast my hands and feet: and his head he hath thrust into my mouth, and so he lieth sucking and drawing out of my breath ": and speaking these words he departed this life, and had not any time given to deliver himself by penance from that dragon which he saw. By which we learn, that he had this vision only for the commodity of them that heard it, seeing himself could not escape from the enemy which he beheld, and into whose hands he was given to be devoured.

PETER. Desirous I am to be informed, whether we ought to believe that after death there is any fire of Purgatory.

Chapter Thirty-Nine: whether there be any fire of purgatory in the next world.

GREGORY. Our Lord saith in the Gospel: Walk whiles you have the light: and by his Prophet he saith: In time accepted have I heard thee, and in the day of salvation have I holpen thee: which the Apostle St. Paul expounding, saith: Behold, now is the time acceptable; behold, now the day of salvation. Solomon, likewise, saith: Whatsoever thy hand is able to do, work it instantly: for neither work, nor reason, nor knowledge, nor wisdom shall be in hell, whither thou dost hasten. David also saith: Because his mercy is for ever. By which sayings it is plain, that in such state as a man departeth out of this life, in the same he is presented in judgment before God. But yet we must believe that before the day of judgment there is a Purgatory fire for certain small sins: because our Saviour saith, that he which speaketh blasphemy against the holy Ghost, that it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, nor in the world to come. Out of which sentence we learn, that some sins are forgiven in this world, and some other may be pardoned in the next: for that which is denied concerning one sin, is consequently understood to be granted touching some other. But yet this, as I said, we have not to believe but only concerning little and very small sins, as, for example, daily idle talk, immoderate laughter, negligence in the care of our family (which kind of offences scarce can they avoid, that know in what sort sin is to be shunned), ignorant errors in matters of no great weight: all which sins be punished after death, if men procured not pardon and remission for them in their lifetime: for when St. Paul saith, that Christ is the foundation: and by and by addeth: And if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble: the work of every one, of what kind it is, the fire shall try. If any man's work abide which he built thereupon, he shall receive reward; if any mans work burn, he shall suffer detriment, but himself shall be saved, yet so as by fire. For although these words may be understood of the fire of tribulation, which men suffer in this world: yet if any will interpret them of the fire of Purgatory, which shall be in the next life: then must he carefully consider, that the Apostle said not that he may be saved by fire, that buildeth upon this foundation iron, brass, or lead, that is, the greater sort of sins, and therefore more hard, and consequently not remissible in that place: but wood, hay, stubble, that is, little and very light sins, which the fire doth easily consume. Yet we have here further to consider, that none can be there purged, no, not for the least sins that be, unless in his lifetime he deserved by virtuous works to find such favour in that place.

Chapter Forty: of the soul of Paschasius the Deacon.

For when I was yet in my younger years, and lived.a secular life, I heard from the mouth of mine elders, who knew it to be true: how that Paschasius, a Deacon of this Roman church (whose sound and eloquent books of the holy Ghost be extant amongst us), was a man of a wonderful holy life, a marvellous giver of alms, a lover of the poor, and one that contemned himself. This man, in that contention which, through the exceeding hot emulation of the clergy, fell out betwixt Symmachus and Lawrence, made choice of Lawrence to be Bishop of Rome: and though he was afterward by common consent overcome, yet did he continue in his former opinion till his dying day: loving and preferring him, whom the Church, by the judgment of Bishops, refused for her governor. This Deacon ending his life in the time of Symmachus, Bishop of the Apostolic see: a man possessed with a devil came and touched his dalmatic, as it lay upon the bier, and was forthwith delivered from that vexation. Long time after, Germanus, Bishop of Capua (before mentioned), by the counsel of physicians, for the recovery of his health went to the baths: into which after he was entered, he found there standing in those hot waters the foresaid Paschasius, ready to do him service. At which sight being much afraid, he demanded what so worthy a man as he was did in that place: to whom Paschasius returned this answer: "For no other cause," quoth he, "am I appointed to this place of punishment, but for that I took part with Lawrence against Symmachus: and therefore I beseech you to pray unto our Lord for me, and by this token shall you know that your prayers be heard, if, at your coming again, you find me not here." Upon this, the holy man Germanus betook himself to his devotions, and after a few days he went again to the same baths, but found not Paschasius there: for seeing his fault proceeded not of malice, but of ignorance, he might after death be purged from that sin. And yet we must withal think that the plentiful alms which he bestowed in this life, obtained favour at God's hands, that he might then deserve pardon, when he could work nothing at all for himself.

PETER. What, I pray you, is the reason, that, in these latter days, so many things come to light, which in times past were not known: in such sort that by open revelations and manifest signs, the end of the world seemeth not to be far off?

Chapter Forty-one: why in latter times so many things be known, concerning men’s souls: which in former ages were not heard of.

GREGORY. So it is, for the nearer that this present world draweth towards an end, so much the more the world to come is at hand, and sheweth itself by more plain and evident tokens. For seeing, in this world, we know not one another’s cogitations, and, in the next, men’s hearts be known to all, what fitter name can we give to this world than to term it night, and what better to the next, than to call it day? But as, when the night is almost spent, and the day beginneth to break, darkness and light be in a certain manner joined together, until the light of the day following doth perfectly banish away the dark remnants of the former night: even so, the end of this world is, as it were, mingled together with the beginning of the next, and with the darkness of this, some light of such spiritual things as be in that doth appear: and so we see many things which belong to that world, yet for all this, perfect knowledge we have not any, but as it were in the twilight of our soul behold them before the rising of that sun of knowledge, which then abundantly will cast his beams over all.

PETER. I like very well of your speech, yet, in so worthy a man as Paschasius was, this doubt doth trouble me, how he was after his death carried to any place of punishment, seeing the touching of his garment upon the bier did dispossess a wicked spirit.

GREGORY. Herein appeareth the great and manifold providence of almighty God, by whose just judgment it fell out, that Paschasius for some time entertained inwardly sin in his soul, and yet in the sight of the world wrought miracles by his body after his death, who in his lifetime did, as they know, many good works: to the end that those which had seen his virtuous life, should not be deceived concerning the opinion of his great alms; and yet himself should not without punishment have remission of his sin, which whiles he lived he thought to be no sin, and therefore did not by tears wash it away.

PETER. I understand very well what you say, but by this reason I am driven into such straights, that I must stand in fear both of those sins which I know, and also of those which I know not. But because a little before you discoursed of the places of torments: in what part of the world, I beseech you, are we to believe that hell is, whether above the earth or beneath the same?

Chapter Forty-two: in what place of the world we ought to believe that hell is.

GREGORY. Touching this point I dare not rashly define anything: for some have been of opinion that hell was in some place upon the earth; and others think that it is under the earth: but then this doubt ariseth, for if it be therefore called hell, or an infernal place, because it is below, then as the earth is distant from heaven, so likewise should hell be distant from the earth: for which cause, perhaps, the Prophet saith: Thou hast delivered my soul from the lower hell; so that the higher hell may seem to be upon the earth, and the lower under the earth: and with this opinion that sentence of John agreeth, who, when he had said, that he saw a book sealed with seven seals: and that none was found worthy, neither in heaven, nor in earth, nor under the earth, to open the book, and loose the seals thereof: he added forthwith: and I wept much: which book, notwithstanding, afterward he saith was opened by a lion of the tribe of Juda. By which book, what else can be meant but the holy scripture, which our Saviour alone did open: for being made man, by his death, resurrection, and ascension, he did reveal and make manifest all those mysteries which in that book were closed and shut up. And none in heaven, because not any Angel; none upon earth, because not man living in body; not any under the earth was found worthy: because neither the souls departed from their bodies could open unto us, beside our Lord himself, the secrets of that sacred book. Seeing, then, none under the earth is said to be found worthy to open that book, I see not what doth let, but that we should believe that hell is in the lower parts, under the earth.

PETER. I beseech you: Is there one fire in hell, or, according to the diversity of sinners, be there so many sorts of fire prepared in that place?

Chapter Forty-three: whether there is one fire in hell, or many.

GREGORY. The fire of hell is but one: yet doth it not in one manner torment all sinners. For every one there, according to the quantity of his sin, hath the measure of his pain. For as, in this world, many live under one and the same sun, and yet do not alike feel the heat thereof: for some be burnt more, and some less: so in that one fire, divers manners of burning be found, for that which in this world diversity of bodies doth, that in the next doth diversity of sins: so that although the fire be there all alike, yet doth it not in one manner and alike burn and torment them that be damned.

PETER. Shall those, I pray you, which be condemned to that place, burn always, and never have any end of their torments?

Chapter Forty-four: whether those that be in hell shall burn there for ever.

GREGORY. Certain it is, and without all doubt most true, that as the good shall have no end of their joys, so the wicked never any release of their torments: for our Saviour himself saith: The wicked shall go into everlasting punishment, and the just into everlasting life. Seeing, then, true it is, that which he hath promised to his friends: out of all question false it cannot be, that which he hath threatened to his enemies.

PETER. What if it be said that he did threaten eternal pain to wicked livers, that he might thereby restrain them from committing of sins?

GREGORY. If that which he did threaten be false, because his intent was by that means to keep men from wicked life: then likewise must we say that those things are false which he did promise: and that his mind was thereby to provoke us to virtue. But what man, though mad, dare presume so to say? For if he threatened that which he meant not to put into execution: whiles we are desirous to make him merciful, enforced we are likewise (which is horrible to speak) to affirm him to be deceitful.

PETER. Willing I am to know how that sin can justly be punished without end, which had an end when it was committed.

GREGORY. This which you say might have some reason, if the just judge did only consider the sins committed, and not the minds with which they were committed: for the reason why wicked men made an end of sinning was, because they also made an end of their life: for willingly they would, had it been in their power, have lived without end, that they might in like manner have sinned without end. For they do plainly declare that they desired always to live in sin, who never, so long as they were in this world, gave over their wicked life: and therefore it belongeth to the great justice of the supreme judge, that they should never want torments and punishment in the next world, who in this would never give over their wicked and sinful life.

PETER. But no judge that loveth justice taketh pleasure in cruelty: and the end why the just master commandeth his wicked servant to be punished is, that he may give over his lewd life. If, then, the wicked that are tormented in hell fire never come to amend themselves, to what end shall they always burn in those flames?

GREGORY. Almighty God, because he is merciful and full of pity, taketh no pleasure in the torments of wretched men: but because he is also just, therefore doth he never give over to punish the wicked. All which being condemned to perpetual pains, punished they are for their own wickedness: and yet shall they always there burn in fire for some end, and that is, that all those which be just and God's servants may in God behold the joys which they possess, and in them see the torments which they have escaped: to the end that they may thereby always acknowledge themselves grateful to God for his grace, in that they perceive through his divine assistance, what sins they have overcome, which they behold in others to be punished everlastingly.

PETER. And how, I pray you, can they be holy and saints, if they pray not for their enemies, whom they see to lie in such torments? when it is said to them: Pray for your enemies.

GREGORY. They pray for their enemies at such time as their hearts may be turned to fruitful penance, and so be saved: for what purpose else do we pray for our enemies, but, as the Apostle saith, that God may give them repentance to know the truth, and recover themselves from the devil, of whom they are held captive at his will?

PETER. I like very well of your saying: for how shall they pray for them, who by no means can be converted from their wickedness, and brought to do the works of justice?

GREGORY. You see, then, that the reason is all one, why, in the next life, none shall pray for men condemned for ever to hell fire: that there is now of not praying for the devil and his angels, sentenced to everlasting torments: and this also is the very reason why holy men do not now pray for them that die in their infidelity and known wicked life: for seeing certain it is that they be condemned to endless pains, to what purpose should they pray for them, when they know that no petition will be admitted of God, their just judge? And therefore, if now holy men living upon earth take no compassion of those that be dead and damned for their sins, when as yet they know that themselves do some thing through the frailty of the flesh, which is also to be judged: how much more straightly and severely do they behold the torments of the damned, when they be themselves delivered from all vice of corruption, and be more nearly united to true justice itself: for the force of justice doth so possess their souls, in that they be so intrinsical with the most just judge, that they list not by any means to do that which they know is not conformable to his divine pleasure.

PETER. The reason you bring is so clear, that I cannot gainsay it: but now another question cometh to my mind, and that is, how the soul can truly be called immortal, seeing certain it is that it doth die in that perpetual fire.

Chapter Forty-five: how the soul is said to be immortal and never to die: if it be punished with the sentence of death.

GREGORY. Because there be two manner of lives, consequently also there be two manner of deaths. For one kind of life there is, by which we live in God, another which we received by our creation or generation: and therefore one thing it is to live blessedly, and another thing to live naturally. The soul, therefore, is both mortal and immortal: mortal, because it loseth the felicity of an happy life: and immortal, in that it always keepeth his natural life, which can never be lost, no, not when it is sentenced to perpetual death: for in that state, though it hath not a blessed life, yet it doth retain still the former being and natural life: by reason whereof it is enforced to suffer death without death, defect without defect, and end without end: seeing the death which it endureth is immortal, the defect which it suffereth never faileth, and the end which it hath is infinite, and without end.

PETER. What man is he, though never so holy, that, cometh to leave this mortal life, hath not just cause to fear the unspeakable sentence of damnation? for although he knoweth what he hath done, yet ignorant he is not, how straightly his works shall be examined and judged.

Chapter Forty-six: of a certain holy man that was afraid when he came to die.

GREGORY. It is even so, Peter, as you say. And yet sometime the only fear of death doth purge the souls of just men from their smaller sins, as you and I have often heard of a certain holy man that was very much afraid when he came to die: and yet, after he was dead, appeared to his disciples in a white stole, reporting to them in what excellent manner he was received, when he departed out of this world.

Chapter Forty-seven: how some by divine revelation are discharged from fear at their death. And of the manner how the monks Anthony, Merulus, and John departed this life.

Sometime also almighty God doth by divine revelation strengthen the minds of them that be fearful, to the end that they should not be afraid of death. For a certain monk there was, called Anthony, that lived together with me in my Monastery, who by daily tears laboured to come to the joys of heaven: and when as he did very carefully and with great zeal of soul meditate upon the sacred scriptures, he, sought not so much for cunning and knowledge, as for tears and contrition of heart, that by means thereof his soul might be stirred up and inflamed: and that by contemning all earthly things, he might with the wings of contemplation fly unto the kingdom of heaven. This man upon a night, by revelation, was admonished in this manner: "Make yourself ready, because our Lord hath given commandment for your departure": and when he answered, that he had not wherewith to defray the charges of that journey: straightaway he heard these comfortable words: "If you take care for your sins, they be forgiven you"; which thing though he had heard once, and yet for all that was in great fear, another night he had again the same vision: and so after five days he fell sick of an ague, and as the other monks were praying and weeping about him, he departed this life.

Another monk there was in the same Monastery, called Merulus, who was wonderfully given to tears and bestowing of alms: and no time almost passed him, except it were when he was at meat or asleep, in which he did not sing psalms. This man, by vision in the night, saw a crown made of white flowers to descend upon his head: and straight after falling sick, he died with great quiet and joy of mind. Fourteen years after, when Peter, who now hath the government of my Monastery, went about to make a grave for himself hard by Merulus' sepulchre, such a fragrant and pleasant smell, as he saith, came out of it, as though it had been a storehouse of all manner of sweet flowers. By which it appeared plainly, that it was very true, which before he had seen by vision in the night.

Likewise in the same Monastery there was another, called John, who was a young man of great towardness, and one that led his life with great circumspection, humility, sweetness, and gravity. This man falling sore sick, saw in his great extremity by vision in the night an old man to come unto him, who touched him with a wand, saying: “Rise up, for you shall not die of this sickness: but make yourself ready, for you have not any long time to stay in this world”: and forthwith, though the physicians despaired of his health, yet he recovered, and became perfectly well. The vision which he saw he told to others, and for two years following, as I said, he served God in such sort, that his great devotion surpassed his young years. Three years since another monk died, who was buried in the churchyard of the same Monastery, and when we had ended all his funerals, and were departed, this John, as himself with pale face and great trembling told us, remained there still, where he heard that monk which was buried to call him out of the grave: and that it was so indeed, the end following did shew: for ten days after he fell sick of an ague and so departed this life.

PETER. Willingly would I learn whether we ought to observe such visions, as be revealed to us by night in our sleep.

Chapter Forty-eight: whether dreams are to be believed: and how many kinds of dreams there be.

GREGORY. Concerning this point, Peter, you must understand that there are six kind of dreams. For sometime they proceed of too much fulness or emptiness of the stomach: sometime by illusion: sometime both by thought and illusion: sometime by revelation: and sometime both by thought and revelation. The two first all by experience know to be true: and the four latter we find mentioned in holy scripture. For if dreams did not sometime proceed by illusion from our secret enemy, never would the wise man have said: Dreams have made many to err, and hoping in them have they been deceived: and again: Ton shall not be soothsayers, nor observe dreams: by which words we see how they are to be detested, that are compared with sooth-sayings. Again, if dreams did not sometime proceed both of thought together with illusion, the wise man would not have said: Dreams follow many cares. And if sometime also they did not come by mystical revelation, Joseph had never known by dream that he should have been exalted above his brethren: neither the Angel would ever in a dream have admonished the spouse of our Lady to fly away with the child into Egypt. Again, if sometime they did not also proceed both from thoughts and divine revelation, never would the prophet Daniel, disputing of Nabuchodonosor's dream, have begun from the root of his former thoughts, saying: Thou, O king, diddest begin to think in thy bed, what should happen in times to come; and he that revealeth mysteries did shew thee what things should come: and a little after: Thou diddest see, and behold as it were a great statue: that great statue and high of stature did stand against thee, &c. Wherefore, seeing Daniel doth with reverence insinuate that the dream should come to pass, and also declareth from what cogitation it did spring, plainly do we learn that dreams sometimes do come both of thought and revelation together. But seeing dreams do grow from such divers roots, with so much the more difficulty ought we to believe them: because it doth not easily appear unto us, from what cause they do proceed. Holy men, indeed, by a certain inward spiritual taste, do discern betwixt illusions and true revelations, by the very voices or representations of the visions themselves: so that they know what they receive from the good spirit, and what they suffer by illusion from the wicked: and therefore, if our mind be not herein very attentive and vigilant, it falleth into many vanities, through the deceit of the wicked spirit: who sometime useth to foretell many true things, that, in the end, he may by some falsehood ensnare our soul.

Chapter Forty-nine: of one who in his dream had long life promised him, and yet died shortly after.

As not long since it is most certain, that it befell to one that lived amongst us, who, being much given to observe dreams, had one night in a dream long life promised him: and when as he had made provision of great store of money for the maintenance of his many days, he was so suddenly taken out of this life, that he left it all behind him, without ever having any use thereof, and carried not with him any good works to the next world.

PETER. I remember very well who it was: but let us, I pray you, prosecute such questions as we began to entreat of: Doth any profit, think you, redound to men’s souls, if their bodies be buried in the church?

Chapter Fifty: Whether the souls receive any benefit, if their bodies be buried in the church.

GREGORY. Such as die not in mortal sin receive this benefit by having their bodies buried in the church: for when their friends come thither, and behold their sepulchres, then do they remember them, and pray unto God for their souls: but those that depart this life in the state of deadly sin, receive not any absolution from their sins, but rather be more punished in hell, for having their bodies buried in the church: which thing shall be more plain, if I do briefly tell you what concerning this point hath chanced in our time.

Chapter Fifty-one: of a certain Nun that was buried in the church, which appeared with her body half burnt

Felix, Bishop of Portua, a man of holy life, who was born and brought up in the province of Sabina, saith that there lived in that place a certain Nun, which, though she were chaste of her body, yet had she an ungracious and foolish tongue: which departing this life, was buried in the church: the keeper whereof, the night following, saw her by revelation brought before the holy altar, where she was cut in two pieces, and the one half was burnt in the fire, and the other was not touched at all. Rising up in the morning, he told unto others what a strange vision he had seen, and shewed them the very place in which she was burnt, the marble whereof appeared with the very marks and signs of a fire upon it, as though that woman had been there burnt in very deed with corporal fire. By which we may plainly see, that such as have not their sins pardoned, can reap small benefit by having their bodies after death buried in holy places.

Chapter Fifty-two: of the burial of Valerianus.

John also, an honourable man, one of the governors of this city, and one that is of great gravity and credit, as all know, told me how one Valerianus, that was a gentleman of the city of Bressa, departed this life, whose body for money the Bishop was content should be buried in the church. This Valerianus, even to his very old age, led a light and wanton life: refusing utterly to give over sin and wickedness. That very night in which he was buried, the blessed martyr Faustinus, in whose church his body lay, appeared to the keeper thereof, saying: "Go, and bid the Bishop cast out that stinking carcass which he hath here buried, and if he will not do it, tell him that thirty days hence he shall die himself." This vision the poor man was afraid to report unto the Bishop, and though he were admonished the second time to do it, yet he refused: and so upon the thirtieth day, the Bishop going safe and sound to bed (never fearing any such thing), suddenly departed this life.

Chapter Fifty-three: of the body of Valentinus, that was after his burial cast out of the church.

There be also at this time here in the city our venerable brother Venantius, Bishop of Luna, and Liberius, a noble man and one of very great credit: both which do say that themselves know it, and that their servants were present in the city of Genua, when this strange thing happened. One Valentinus, who had an office in the church of Milan, died there, a man in his life time given to wantonness and all kind of lightness, whose body was buried in the church of the blessed martyr Sirus. The midnight following, a great noise was heard in that place, as though some body by force had been drawn out from thence: whereupon the keepers ran thither, to see what the matter was, and when they were come, they saw two very terrible devils, that had tied a rope about his legs, and were drawing him out of the church, himself in the mean time crying and roaring out: at which sight they were so frighted, that they returned home again to their beds: but when the morning was come, they opened the grave in which Valentinus was buried, but his body they could not find, and therefore they sought without the church to see where it was, and so found it thrown into another place, with the feet still bound as it was drawn out of the church. Out of which, Peter, you may learn that such as die in mortal sin, and cause their bodies to be buried in holy ground, are punished also for that their presumption: the holy places not helping them, but rather the sin of their temerity accusing them.

Chapter Fifty-four: of the body of a dyer buried in the church, which afterward could not be found.

For another thing also which happened in this city, the company of dyers dwelling here do testify to be most true, and it is concerning one that was the chief of their profession, who departed this life, and was by his wife buried in the church of St. Januarius the martyr, near to the gate of St. Lawrence: whose spirit the night following, in the hearing of the sexton, cried out of his grave, saying: "I burn, I burn": and when he continued a long time crying so, the sexton told it to the dyer's wife, who thereupon sent certain of his own profession to the church, to see in what case his body was in the grave, who so cried out in that pitiful manner: and when they had opened it, there they found his garments safe and sound, which be still kept in the same church, for a perpetual memory of that which happened: but his body by no means could they find, as though it had never been buried there: by which we may gather to what torments his soul was condemned, whose body was in that sort turned out of the church. What profit, then, do holy places bring to them that be buried there, when as those, that be wicked and unworthy, be by God's appointment thrown out from those sacred places?

PETER. What thing is there, then, that can profit and relieve the souls of them that be departed?

Chapter Fifty-five: what is available for the soul after death: and of a Priest of Centumcellis, who was desired bv a certain man’s spirit, to be helped after his death, by the holy sacrifice: and of the soul of a monk called Justus.

GREGORY. If the sins after death be pardonable, then the sacred oblation of the holy host useth to help men’s souls: for which cause the souls sometime, of them that be dead, do desire the same: for Bishop Felix, whom we spake of before, saith that a virtuous Priest, who died some two years since, and dwelt in the diocese of the city of Centumcellis, and was pastor of the church of St. John in the place called Tauriana, told him that himself did use (when he had need) to wash his body in a certain place, in which there were passing hot waters: and that going thither upon a time, he found a certain man whom he knew not, ready to do him service, as to pull off his shoes, take his clothes, and to attend upon him in all dutiful manner. And when he had divers times done thus, the Priest, minding upon a day to go to the baths, began to think with himself that he would not be ungrateful to him that did him such service, but carry him somewhat for a reward, and so he took with him two singing breads : and coming thither he found the man there ready, and used his help as he was wont to do: and when he had washed himself, put on his clothes, and was ready to depart, he offered him for an holy reward that which he had brought, desiring him to take that courteously, which for charity he did give him. Then with a sad countenance, and in sorrowful manner, he spake thus unto him: “Why do you give me these, father? This is holy bread, and I cannot eat of it, for I, whom you see here, was sometime lord of these baths, and am now after my death appointed for my sins to this place: but if you desire to pleasure me, offer this bread unto almighty God, and be an intercessor for my sins: and by this shall you know that your prayers be heard, if at your next coming you find me not here.” And as he was speaking these words, he vanished out of his sight: so that he, which before seemed to be a man, shewed by that manner of departure that he was a spirit. The good Priest all the week following gave himself to tears for him, and daily offered up the holy sacrifice: and afterward returning to the bath, found him not there: whereby it appeareth what great profit the souls receive by the sacrifice of the holy oblation, seeing the spirits of them that be dead desire it of the living, and give certain tokens to let us understand how that by means thereof they have received absolution.

Here also I cannot but tell you that which happened three years since in mine own Monastery . A certain monk there was, called Justus, one very cunning in medicine, and whiles I remained in the Abbey, served me very diligently, attending upon me in my often infirmities and sickness. This man himself at length fell sore sick, so that in very deed he was brought to the last cast. A brother he had, called Copiosus, that had care of him, who yet liveth. Justus perceiving himself past all hope of life, told this brother of his where he had secretly laid up three crowns of gold; but yet they were not so closely conveyed, that they could be concealed from the monks: for they, carefully seeking, and tossing up all his medicines and boxes, found in one of them these three crowns hidden. Which thing so soon as I understood, very much grieved I was, and could not quietly digest so great a sin at his hands, that lived with us in community, because the rule of my Monastery was that all the monks thereof should so live in common, that none in particular might possess anything proper to himself. Being, therefore, much troubled and grieved at that which had happened, I began to think with myself what was best to be done, both for the soul of him that was now dying, and also for the edification and example of those that were yet living. At length I sent for Pretiosus, Prior of the Monastery, and gave him this charge: “See,” quoth I, “that none of our monks do so much as visit Justus in this his extremity, neither let any give him any comfort at all: and when his last hour draweth nigh, and he doth desire the presence of his spiritual brethren, let his carnal brother tell him that they do all detest him, for the three crowns which he had hidden: that, at least before his death, sorrow may wound his heart, and purge it from the sin committed: and when he is dead, let not his body be buried amongst the rest of the monks, but make a grave for him in some one dunghill or other, and there cast it in, together with the three crowns which he left behind him, crying out all with joint voice: 'Thy money be with thee unto perdition'; and so put earth upon him." In either of which things my mind and desire was, both to help him that was leaving the world, and also to edify the monks yet remaining behind, that both grief of death might make him pardonable for his sin, and such a severe sentence against avarice might terrify and preserve them from the like offence: both which, by God's goodness, fell out accordingly. For when the foresaid monk came to die, and carefully desired to be commended to the devotions of his brethren, and yet none of them did either visit him, or so much as speak to him: his brother Copiosus told him for what cause they had all given him over: at which words he straightways sighed for his sin, and in that sorrow gave up the ghost. And after his death, he was buried in that manner, as I had given in commandment: by which fact all the monks were so terrified, that they began each one to seek out the least and basest things in their cells, and which by the rule they might lawfully keep: and very much they feared, lest some thing they had, for which they might be blamed.

Thirty days after his departure, I began to take compassion upon him, and with great grief to think of his punishment, and what means there was to help him: whereupon I called again for Pretiosus, Prior of my Monastery, and with an heavy heart spake thus unto him: "It is now a good while since that our brother which is departed remaineth in the torments of fire, and therefore we must shew him some charity, and labour what we may to procure his delivery: wherefore go your way, and see that for thirty days following sacrifice be offered for him, so that no one day pass in which, for his absolution and discharge, the healthful sacrifice be not offered": who forthwith departed, and put my commandment in execution. In the mean time, my mind being busied about other affairs, so that I took no heed to the days how they passed: upon a certain night the same monk that was dead, appeared to his brother Copiosus: who, seeing him, enquired of his state in this manner: "What is the matter, brother? and how is it with you?" to whom he answered thus: "Hitherto have I been in bad case, but now I am well; for this day have I received the communion": with which news Copiosus straightways coming to the Monastery, told the monks: and they diligently counting the days, found it to be that in which the thirtieth sacrifice was offered for his soul: and so, though neither Copiosus knew what the monks had done for him, nor they what he had seen concerning the state of his brother, yet at one and the same time both he knew what they had done, and they what he had seen, and so the sacrifice and vision agreeing together, apparent it was that the dead monk was by the holy sacrifice delivered from his pains.

PETER. The things you report be passing strange, and yet full of joy and comfort.

Chapter Fifty-six: of the life and departure of Bishop Cassius.

GREGORY. And that we should not call in question, or doubt of that which the dead report, we have, for confirmation of the same thing, the facts of the living. For Cassius, Bishop of Narni, a man of holy life, who did usually every day offer sacrifice unto God (and whiles he was at the mysteries of those sacrifices, did also immolate himself in tears), received from our Lord this message by one of his Priests. “Do that thou doest: work that thou workest: let not thy foot cease, let not thy hand cease, upon the nativity of the Apostles thou shalt come unto me, and I will give thee thy reward.” And so, seven years after, upon that very day of the Apostles, after he had ended the solemnity of Mass and received the mysteries of the sacred communion, he departed this life.

Chapter Fifty-seven: of one that was taken by his enemies and put in prison, whose irons fell off at the time of the sacrifice: and of one Baraca, a mariner, that was by the holy sacrifice delivered from drowning.

That also which I have heard is known to many, to wit, how one was by his enemies taken and put in prison, with irons upon him: for whom his wife caused upon certain days sacrifice to be offered: who, long time after, returning home to his wife, told her upon what days his bolts used to fall off: by whose relation she found that it was upon those very days in which sacrifice had been offered for him. By another thing likewise, which happened seven years since, the very same truth is confirmed. For when Agathus, Bishop of Palermo (as many faithful and religious men both have and still do tell me), was, in the time of my predecessor of blessed memory, commanded to come to Rome, and in his journey fell into such a tempest at sea, that he despaired of ever coming to land: the mariner of the ship, called Baraca (who now is one of the clergy, and serves in the same church), governed another small vessel, tied to the poop of the former ship: the rope whereof breaking in pieces, away it went with man and all, and amongst the huge mountains of waters, quickly vanished out of sight. The ship in which the Bishop was, after many great dangers, at length arrived all weather-beaten at the island of Ostica: and when three days were past, and the Bishop could hear no news of the foresaid mariner that was so violently carried away with the storm, nor see him in any part of the sea, very sorry he was, and verily believed that he had been drowned: and so upon great charity bestowed one thing upon him being yet alive, which was not due unto him until he was dead: for he willed that the sacrifice of the healthful oblation should be offered unto almighty God for the absolution of his soul: which being done accordingly, and the ship new rigged, away he departed for Italy, where, arriving at Portua, he found the mariner alive, whom he verily supposed to have been drowned: upon which good chance altogether unlooked for, very glad he was, and demanded of him, how it was possible that he could escape so many days, in so great a danger and so terrible a tempest: who told him, how in that storm he was tossed with that little ship which he governed, and how he did swim with it being full of water: and so often as it was turned upside down, how he gat upon the keel, and held fast there: adding also that, by striving and labouring thus continually day and night, at length, with watching and hunger, his strength began to fail him: and then he told how, by the singular providence and mercy of God, he was preserved from drowning: for as even to this very day he still affirmeth, so then did he verify the same to the Bishop, telling him in this manner. "As I was," quoth he, "striving and labouring in the sea, and my strength began to fail me, suddenly I became so heavy of mind, that methought I was neither waking nor yet asleep: and being in that case in the midst of the sea, I saw one come, who brought me bread to refresh my tired body: which so soon as I had eaten, I recovered my strength again; and not long after, a ship passing by took me in, and so was I delivered from that danger of death and set safe a land. The Bishop, hearing this, enquired upon what day this strange thing happened, and he found by his relation, that it was that very day in which the Priest in the island of Ostica did sacrifice for him unto God, the host of the holy oblation.

PETER. That which you report, myself also heard at my being in Sicily.

GREGORY. I, for my part, do verily believe, that the reason why, by God's providence, this thing falleth out thus apparently to them that be living, and think nothing thereof, is that all may know how, if their sins be not irremissible, that they may after death obtain pardon and absolution for them, by the oblation of the holy sacrifice. But yet we have here to note, that the holy sacrifice doth profit those kind of persons after their death, who in their life time obtained that such good works as were by their friends done for them might be available to their souls, after they were out of this world.

Chapter Fifty-eight: of the virtue and mystery of the holy sacrifice.

And here also we have diligently to consider, that it is far more secure and safe that every man should do that for himself whiles he is yet alive, which he desireth that others should do for him after his death. For far more blessed it is, to depart free out of this world, than being in prison to seek for release: and therefore reason teacheth us, that we should with our whole soul contemn this present world, at least because we see that it is now gone and past: and to offer unto God the daily sacrifice of tears, and the daily sacrifice of his body and blood. For this sacrifice doth especially save our souls from everlasting damnation, which in mystery doth renew unto us the death of the Son of God: who although being risen from death, doth not now die any more, nor death shall not any further prevail against him: yet living in himself immortally, and without all corruption, he is again sacrificed for us in this mystery of the holy oblation: for there his body is received, there his flesh is distributed for the salvation of the people: there his blood is not now shed betwixt the hands of infidels, but poured into the mouths of the faithful. Wherefore let us hereby meditate what manner of sacrifice this is, ordained for us, which for our absolution doth always represent the passion of the only Son of God: for what right believing Christian can doubt, that in the very hour of the sacrifice, at the words of the Priest, the heavens be opened, and the quires of Angels are present in that mystery of Jesus Christ; that high things are accompanied with low, and earthly joined to heavenly, and that one thing is made of visible and invisible?

Chapter Fifty-nine: how we ought to procure sorrow of heart, at the time of the holy mysteries: and of the custody of our soul after contrition.

But necessary it is that, when we do these things, we should also, by contrition of heart, sacrifice ourselves unto almighty God: for when we celebrate the mystery of our Lord's passion, we ought to imitate what we then do: for then shall it truly be a sacrifice for us unto God, if we offer ourselves also to him in sacrifice. Careful also must we be, that after we have bestowed some time in prayer, that, as much as we can by God's grace, we keep our mind fixed in him, so that no vain thoughts make us to fall unto dissolution, nor any foolish mirth enter into our heart: lest the soul, by reason of such transitory thoughts, lose all that which it gained by former contrition. For so Anne deserved to obtain that which she craved at God's hand, because after her tears, she preserved herself in the former force of her soul: for of her thus it is written: And her looks were not any more changed to divers things. She therefore, that forgot not what she desired, was not deprived of that gift which she requested.

Chapter Sixty: that we ought to pardon other men their sins, that we may obtain remission of our own.

I We have also further to know, that he doth rightly and in good sort demand pardon for his own sin, who doth forgive that which hath been done against himself. For our gift is not received, if, before, we free not our soul from all discord and lack of charity: for our Saviour saith: If thou offer thy gift at the altar, and there thou remember that thy brother hath aught against thee, leave there thy offering before the altar, and go first to be reconciled to thy brother, and then coming thou shalt offer thy gift. Wherein we have to consider, that whereas all sin by a gift is loosed, how grievous the sin of discord is, for which no gift is received: and therefore we ought, in soul and desire, to go unto our neighbour though he be far off, and many miles distant from us, and there to humble ourselves before him, and to pacify him by humility and hearty good will, to the end that our Creator, beholding the desire of our mind, may forgive us our own sin, who receiveth a gift for sin. And our Saviour himself teacheth us, how that servant, which did owe ten thousand talents, by penance obtained of his Lord the forgiveness of that debt: but yet because he would not forgive his fellow-servant an hundred pence, which were due to him, that was again exacted at his hands, which before was pardoned. Out of which sayings we learn, that if we do not from our heart forgive that which is committed against us, how that is again required at our hands, whereof before we were glad that by penance we had obtained pardon and remission.

Wherefore, whiles time is given us, whiles our judge doth bear with us, whiles he that examineth our sins doth expect our conversion and amendment: let us mollify with tears the hardness of our heart, and with sincere charity, love our neighbours: and then dare I speak it boldly, that we shall not have any need of the holy sacrifice after our death: if, before death, we offer up ourselves for a sacrifice unto almighty God.

INTRODUCTION

THE Christian's rule of life is contained in the Gospels. They are the Book on which he should meditate, and the teaching of which he should endeavour to put into practice all the days of his life. Yet, it is to be feared that, in reading this Book, he might not have the necessary light from above, and perhaps might attach to the sacred words a meaning that was not intended by the Divine Teacher, nor by His disciples. To prevent such possibility, many learned men, well versed in Holy Writ, have carefully explained the meaning of the Gospels, and have thus imparted to Christians a greater taste and love for the reading of the Word of God. Hence we have their commentaries, meditations, lives of Jesus Christ, and divers essays on the Holy Scriptures, the titles of which alone would form a large volume. Many of these works are thoroughly well written, and the reader can be but greatly edified and instructed by them. However, it is strange, that from the beginning it never occurred to anyone to go up to the very source. Among spiritual books the oldest are the best and the surest. It seems, therefore, that the works of the holy Fathers should have obtained the preference, for they are nearly as old as the Church, and in them the tradition is preserved in all its strength and purity.

Indeed, when we follow these wise teachers in their writings from century to century, we are astonished that Christian Faith, enlightening us now, should be always one and the same, and that the doctrine of faith, taught by the Church, and the doctrine of morals, preached in the world, have never undergone any change in the succession of centuries. We see that the true Church, our glory and the foundation of our hope, has always remained calm in the midst of storms, victorious in the fiercest struggles, unhurt amidst the most powerful attacks, and always preserved from the arrows of her enemies. We see that the Bride of Jesus has always been holy and infallible in her precepts and commands, always wise and enlightened in her teaching, always prudent and reasonable in her discipline, and always pure in her religious practices. We recognise that the Church, built upon the Rock, has been, and will be to the end of the world, holy and immaculate, because she is protected by the infinitely powerful and eternal God, and guided by the Holy Ghost.

It is, therefore, a subject of astonishment that, what the holy Fathers have written and preached about the Gospels, has not more often been translated and published in modern times. Was it not quite natural to think of this pious duty, especially as they are often quoted in sermons and instructions, and consulted, when difficult passages of Holy Scripture have to be explained? Are not they our teachers, under whose guidance we cannot fall into error? There are no better sources from which to draw with greater safety. What eloquence and diversity in their works! Who would not admire the grace and strength of a St. John Chrysostom, the fecundity and sublimity of a St. Augustine, the clear penetration and depth of a St. Ambrose, the vast learning of a St. Jerome, or the penetrating knowledge of a St. Gregory? What dignity and authority in St. Leo, and what beauty in the writings of the Venerable Bede!

The works of the Fathers of the Church form a rich library. Yet this field, so fertile in an abundance of delicious fruits, remains sterile for the greater number of the Catholic people, who perhaps know not what to choose, or are ignorant of the language of these holy writers. It seems to me that a collection of Homilies from different Fathers, arranged according to the Sundays and principal festivals of the ecclesiastical year, would be a great spiritual help to all Christians. This is the reason why I undertook this collection, and I have carefully endeavoured that it should be useful to all.

Before every Homily is placed the respective part of the Gospels, thus showing the intimate relation existing between the one and the other. The literal, spiritual, allegorical, and figurative meaning of the Holy Scriptures is explained in these discourses. Their style is clear and simple, yet elegant; the comparisons are most beautiful and instructive, for they are natural. Simplicity is their ornament, and this simplicity pervades the whole discourse. The present book is, therefore, a selection of different essays which, by their number and diversity, form a collection presenting the doctrine of faith and morals, and containing the principal truths of our Holy Catholic Religion.

This is the notion or idea which may be formed of these Homilies. I have endeavoured to render, in a natural and simple style, the sublime and forcible eloquence of the holy Fathers, without weakening their thoughts. For I am of opinion that a literal translation, often dry and tiring, could not give a clear idea of the beautiful expressions found in these Homilies, A dogmatical work is not to be translated like a history or an ordinary speech.

It is to be hoped that this book will be of great and general utility, specially as priests and others, whose duty it is to instruct the faithful, have not always the time to consult the Fathers, even should they possess their works. The duties of priests in parishes, the time they spend in the confessional, their visiting the sick and the poor, the administration of the Sacraments, will not allow them to do so. Besides, would it not require a long time to find out the special subject? For, in order to discover in the writings of the Fathers a few pages, or even one passage, directly explaining the Gospel, a whole essay or a whole book must sometimes be read, the greater part of which has no direct reference to that Gospel. Again, there are many priests, whose duty it is to preach and instruct, who do not possess the works of the Fathers, who have a few books only: their small means not allowing them to buy any more.

We also offer this book to all Christians who spend some time, specially on Sundays and Feast-days, in spiritual reading. The Homilies' are also offered to all those who, through sickness or the nursing of the sick, are prevented from assisting at the instructions of their Pastor. The clergy and the laity will find in them a source of instruction and edification. As to the writer, he will be rewarded by the thought that he has placed in the hands of a great many a selection of solid instructions, a great portion of which has never been translated. Two words will explain why this book ought to be dear to all good Christians: it contains the essential parts of the Gospels, and the most important parts of the works of the Fathers.

FIRST SUNDAY OF ADVENT.

GOSPEL: Luke xxi. 25-33. At that time: Jesus said to His disciples: There shall be signs in the sun and in the moon and in the stars, and upon the earth distress of nations, by reason of the confusion of the roaring of the sea and of the waves, men withering away for fear and expectation of what shall come upon the whole world. For the powers of the heavens shall be moved, and then they shall' see the Son of Man coming in a cloud with great power and majesty. But when these things begin to come to pass, look up, and lift up your heads, because your redemption is at hand. And He spoke to them a similitude: See the fig-tree and all the trees, when they now shoot forth their fruit, you know that summer is nigh; so you also, when you shall see these things come to pass, know that the kingdom of God is at hand. Amen, I say to you, this generation shall not pass away till all things be fulfilled. Heaven and earth shall pass away, but My words shall not pass away.

FIRST HOMILY ON THE GOSPELS.

I. As our adorable Saviour will expect at His coming to find us ready, He warns us of the terrors that will accompany the latter days in order to wean us from the love of this world; and He foretells the misery which will be the prelude to this inevitable time, so that, if we neglect in the quietness of this life to fear a God of compassion, the fearful spectacle of the approaching last judgment may impress us with a wholesome dread. A short time before He had said: Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom. And there shall he great earthquakes in divers places, and pestilences and famines (Luke xxi. 10, 11). Now He added: And there shall he signs in the sun and in the moon and in the stars, and upon the earth distress of nations. Of all these events we have seen many already fulfilled, and with fear and trembling we look for the near fulfilment of the rest. As for the nations which are to rise up one against the other, and the persecutions which are to be endured on earth, what we learn from the history of our own times, and what we have seen with our own eyes, makes a far deeper impression than what we read even in Holy Scripture. With regard to the earthquakes converting numberless cities into lamentable heaps of ruins, the accounts of them are not unknown to you, and reports of the like events reach us still from various parts of the world. Epidemics also continue to cause us the greatest sorrow and anxiety; and though we have not seen the signs in the sun and in the moon and in the stars, mentioned in Holy Scripture, we know, at least, that fiery weapons have appeared shining in the sky, and even blood, the foreboding of that blood which was to be shed in Italy by the invading barbarian hordes. As to the terrible roaring of the sea and of the waves, we have not yet heard it. However, we do not doubt that this also will happen; for, the greater part of the prophecies of our Lord being fulfilled, this one will also see its fulfilment, the past being a guarantee for the future.

II. Moreover, we say this, beloved brethren, to encourage you to unceasing watchfulness over yourselves, so that no false confidence may take possession of your souls, leaving you to languish in ignorance; but that, on the contrary, a true and wholesome fear may drive you on to do good, and strengthen you in the carrying out of good works. Take special notice of the following, added by our Saviour: Men shall wither away for fear and expectation of what shall come upon the whole world. For the powers of heaven shall he moved. What is meant by our heavenly Teacher when speaking of the powers of heaven, but the angels and archangels, the thrones, principalities and powers, that will appear on the day of vengeance of that severe Judge, Who will then demand from us with severity the homage and submission, which He now, as our Creator, although unseen, asks for in love as His due. Then they shall see the Son of Man coming in a cloud, with great power and majesty. Which means that the people will then see Him, whom in His meekness and humiliations they would neither listen to nor recognise, coming in power and majesty. In that day they will feel the more compelled to acknowledge His power, since in the present time they deny Him, and refuse to submit themselves to His yoke, to which He so patiently invites them.

III. As, however, these words of our Saviour are spoken to the lost, so are the following uttered for the comfort of the elect: When these things begin to come to pass} look up and lift up your heads, became your redemption is at hand. Truth Itself teaches the chosen ones in these words, and seems to say to them: When you see the calamities which portend the end of the world increasing; when fear of that awful judgment-day takes possession of even the bravest hearts at the sight of the shaken powers of heaven, then lift up your heads, that is, rejoice with your whole heart, because the end of this world, so little loved by you, announces to you the wished-for, freedom to be enjoyed by you hereafter. The head is often used in Holy Scripture for the soul, and in this way, by warning us to lift up our heads, it reminds us to rouse up our souls to the thought of the heavenly home which is awaiting us. Those, therefore, who love God, are commanded to rejoice when they see the end of the world approaching, because, when this world, which they have not loved, is destroyed, they will find themselves in possession of Him, Who is the one true object of their love. We are assured that among these true believers, who have a real longing to see God, there is not one who will not be deeply moved by the fearful events accompanying the end of the world. For we know from Holy Scripture that Whosoever will be a friend of this world, becometh an enemy of God. (James iv. 4.) Therefore, to show no pleasure at the approach of the end of the world is as much as to declare that we love this world, and that, we are the enemies of God. This wicked clinging to the world must be far removed from the hearts of good Christians, and of those who by faith are convinced that there is another life, and by their good works deserve that life. Let those weep over the destruction of the world, whose hearts are given to it, and whose hopes are fixed upon it, and who, far from seeking this new life, refuse to believe that there will be another life. As for us who believe in this heavenly home and in its eternal bliss prepared for us, let us hasten to reach them. We should wish to attain this home as soon as possible, and endeavour to find the shortest way thither. For, are we not surrounded in this world by a great many misfortunes? Do we not experience many troubles and calamities? What, indeed, is this mortal life but a painful way? Consider, beloved brethren, what folly it would be in a man walking along a toilsome and difficult road until overcome with fatigue, and yet not wishing to see the end of it! Moreover, our Saviour teaches us by His wise similitude that this world does not deserve our affection, but that, on the contrary, we should despise it. He says: See the fig-tree and all the trees. When they now shoot forth their fruit, you know that summer is nigh. So you also, when you shall see these things come to pass, know that the kingdom of God is at hand. Is it not as though He said: In the same way that you conclude by the trees bearing fruit that summer is near, so by the downfall of the world you will know that the kingdom of God is not far off? These words show us plainly enough that the fall and destruction of this world are its real fruits, since its rise and increase are closely connected with its fall, and since it brings forth those things only which are destined to perish. If, on the contrary, we consider the kingdom of God, we are aware that we may in all truth compare it with the summer, when all the clouds of our afflictions will be dispersed and be followed by happy days, lighted up by a never disappearing sun of bliss.

IV. And that we should never doubt these truths, our Lord confirms them with an oath, saying: Amen, I say to you, this generation shall not, pass away, till all things he fulfilled. Heaven and earth shall pass away, b*ut My words shall not pass away.* Among all corporeal things and beings nothing is more durable than heaven and earth; in the same way nothing disappears more quickly than the word. Before the word is expressed it exists, and hardly is it said than it has disappeared; for the word cannot attain its perfection without at the same instant losing its existence. Now heaven and earth shall pass away, says the oracle of eternal truth, but My words shall not pass away. It is as if our Saviour said: Learn ye, that everything among you, that seems to be durable, has not been made to last for ever or to continue without any change; whereas what seems to pass away quickly, is firmly and for ever established. For even the words I speak, and which fly away, contain in themselves irrevocable utterances.

V. Now, beloved brethren, to return to what you have heard about this world being filled with continual daily increasing evils, consider what remains of the immense nation that has sustained the calamities of which I am speaking. Meanwhile, the troubles have not yet left us; we are still oppressed by lamentable and unforeseen calamities, and we are grieved and afflicted by new losses. Strip, therefore, your hearts from the love of this world which you enjoy so little; and for this purpose take to heart the precept of the Apostle: Love not the world, nor the things which are in the world. If any man love the world, the charity of the Father is not in him (1 John ii. 15). What we have experienced these last three days is not unknown to you; how suddenly raging storms have rooted out the largest and strongest trees, have pulled down houses and destroyed churches! Many of the inhabitants, who at the end of the day quietly and in good health projected new plans for the morrow, were taken away by a sudden death during the night, and buried under the ruins of their dwellings.

VI. I beseech you, beloved brethren, be careful! If the invisible Judge is letting loose the stormy winds in order to produce these terrible effects; if He only needs to move the clouds of heaven and thus to shake the whole earth, and to overthrow and ruin the strongest buildings; what can we expect from this Judge when in His wrath He comes to take revenge and to punish sinners? If a mere cloud raised by Him against us is sufficient to strike us down, how shall we be able to resist His almighty power? St. Paul, thinking of the infinite power of the Judge appearing on this awful day, exclaims: It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God (Heb x. 31). The Royal Prophet expresses himself with the same force, when in his psalm he says: The God of gods, the Lord hath spoken; and He hath called the earth. From the rising of the sun, to the going down thereof, God shall come manifestly: our God shall come, and shall not keep silence. A fire shall burn before Him; and a mighty tempest shall be round about Him. He shall call heaven from above, and the earth, to judge His people. Gather ye together His saints to Him; and the heavens shall declare His justice, for God is Judge. Hear, O My people, and I will speak; O Israel, and I will testify to thee; I am God thy God. Understand these things you that forget God; lest He snatch you away, and there be none to deliver you (Ps xlix.). It is not without a special reason that this severe judgment will be accompanied by fire and storms; for it will weigh, as in scales, men who were devoured by the natural fire. Therefore, beloved brethren, keep this great day before your mind's eye, and whatever seems difficult and troublesome, will soon become light and easy, when you compare the one with the other. The prophet Sophonias says to us: The great day of the Lord is near, it is near and exceeding swift; the voice of the day of the Lord is bitter; the mighty man shall there meet with tribulation. That day is a day of wrath, a day of tribulation and distress, a day of calamity and misery, a day of darkness and obscurity, a day of clouds and whirlwinds; a day of the trumpet and alarm against the fenced cities, and against the high bulwarks (Soph i. 14-16). And the Lord God has spoken of this day through His prophet: Yet one little while, and I will move the heaven, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land (Agg ii. 7). But, as we have already remarked, if the earth could not resist the force of the wind set in motion, how will man be able to resist the motions of the heavens? For what are all these terrible events causing us so much uneasiness and fear, but heralds announcing to us the wrath of God following them? From all this we conclude that between the evils oppressing us now, and those which will come in the latter days, there is as great a difference as between the power of the highest Judge and the power announcing Him. Therefore, beloved brethren, think of the last day with renewed attention; amend your lives; steadfastly resist all temptations leading you to sin, and wipe out with your tears the sins you have committed. Then the more you have endeavoured, through salutary fear, to anticipate the severity of His judgments, the greater will be the confidence with which you will witness the coming of this Immortal King.

THIRD SUNDAY OF ADVENT.

Gospel: John 1. 19-29. At that time; The Jews sent from Jerusalem Priests and Levites to John to ask him: Who art thou ? And he confessed and did not deny; and he confessed: I am not the Christ. And they asked him: What then ? Art thou Elias ? And he said: I am not. Art thou a Prophet ? And he answered: No. They said, therefore, unto him: Who art thou, that we may give an answer to them that sent us ? What sayest thou of thyself ? He said: I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the Lord, as said the Prophet Isaias. And they that were sent were of the Pharisees. And they asked him and said to him: Why then dost thou baptize if thou be not Christ, nor Elias, nor the Prophet ? John answered them, saying: I baptize with water, but there hath stood One in the midst of you Whom you know not. The same is He that shall come after me, Who is preferred before me; the latchet of Whose shoe I am not worthy to loose. These things were done in Bethania, beyond the Jordan, where John was baptizing.

SEVENTH HOMILY ON THE GOSPELS.

I. The words of this Gospel, beloved brethren, teach us highly to esteem the humility of St. John. His heroic virtues were so well known, that he was believed by the multitude to be Jesus Christ Himself; yet, far from being led astray by the high estimation in which he was held, or holding a good opinion of himself, he preferred to know himself and to remain in his humble position. He confessed and did not deny; and he confessed: I am not the Christ. However, by saying that he was not the Christ, Whom they believed him to be, he did not deny that which he in reality was, and so in truth he became a member of Him Whose name he would not-assume. He renounced the name and the high dignity of Jesus Christ, and thus deserved to be a member of Christ; for the confession of his humble condition raised him up to a greatness published and confirmed by our Lord Himself. If now we meditate on some words of Jesus which we find in another part of Holy Scripture, we shall have to clear up a most important question. When the disciples of our Lord asked Him about the second coming of Elias, He, answering, said to them: Elias indeed shall come. But I say to you, that Elias is already come, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they had a mind. Then the disciples understood that He had spoken to them of John the Baptist (Matt xvii. 11-13). Now, ask John the Baptist if he be Elias, and he will answer: I am not. Who can explain this mystery, beloved brethren? Why does the Prophet of truth contradict Him who is the Eternal Truth? For there is a great contradiction between these two testimonies. And if John does not agree with the Truth, who shall be recognised as the Prophet of truth? Yet, when we examine the meaning of these words, which seem to be contradictory, we at once, recognise that, although apparently announcing opposite things, they really are in perfect agreement. When the angel, appearing to Zacharias, said that John shall go before the Lord in the spirit of Elias (Luke i. 17), he wished to convey the meaning that John would come into this world with the spirit and power of the prophet Elias, in order to precede the first coming of the Redeemer, as Elias would precede His second coming. Elias will be the precursor of the great Divine Judge, as John was the precursor of the Divine Redeemer. John was Elias in spirit but not in person; therefore, he could deny to be the person of one whose spirit was in him, according to the testimony of the Lord. Besides, it was proper that Jesus, answering His disciples, should speak of the spirit of St. John; whereas the Baptist, answering a multitude of rough and sensual people, spoke of his body and person, and not of his spirit. In this manner his words do not depart from the way of truth, though at first sight they seem to contain a contradiction.

II. When he promptly added that he was not a prophet, he wished to declare that he had not only the power to announce the Redeemer of the world, but was also able to point Him out; and he declared his mission, saying: I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness. You know, beloved brethren, that the only-begotten Son is called the Word of the Father, as St. John the Evangelist tells us, saying: In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God (John i 1). Now you certainly notice that, when you speak, the sound of the voice strikes the ear before the word is distinctly heard, In the same sense John declares himself to be the voice, because he precedes the Word, for his coming preceded that of the Redeemer; therefore he was the voice through which the Word of the Father was heard. He is also the voice of one crying in the wilderness and announcing to the hopelessly forsaken Judea, the approaching consolation of the Saviour. Lastly, he teaches the meaning of his cry by adding: Make straight the way of the Lord, as said the prophet Isaias (Isa xl. 3). Now, the way of the Lord is made straight and prepared in our hearts, when we hear the word of truth in humility and resignation. His way is also made straight, when through the purity of our life we prepare ourselves to accept the teaching of His truth. Thus Jesus Christ said: If anyone love Me, he will keep My word, and My Father will love him, and We will come to him, and will make Our abode with him (John xiv. 23).. Consequently, he that extols himself in pride and is governed by avarice; he that gives himself up to luxury and lust, closes his heart against truth, opens the door to passions, and shuts every entrance of his soul against the Lord, Who then cannot take up His abode with him.

III. These same men sent by the Jews to St. John, inquired of him why he baptized, since he was not Christ, nor Elias, nor the Prophet? But it was envy, not the desire of knowing the truth, that led them to speak. This is sufficiently clear from the words of the Evangelist, who says: And they that were sent were of the Pharisees, just as if he had said: They inquired into the doings of John with such eagerness as to show that they wished to find in them something blamable, and that they did not care for his teaching, which only aroused their envy and jealousy. However, since the spirit of meekness and holy zeal does not forsake the saints, even when the envious and wicked question them, we see that John the Baptist answered with words of life and salvation the questions inspired by envy and hatred, arid said: I baptize with water; but there hath stood One in the midst of you Whom you know not. The baptism of John was only a baptism with water, as he himself confessed, therefore it did not give the Holy Ghost. It had not the power of forgiving sin; only of purifying the bodies, but not the souls, of those who received it. He gave this unfruitful baptism only to fulfil his office of precursor, preceding by this baptism the one of the Redeemer, just as in his birth he had preceded the coming of Jesus into this world. Even in his preaching he had come before the Saviour. Thus by the representation of this sacrament he signified the real Sacrament instituted by our Lord. While announcing the mystery of the Redeemer to the multitude, John taught them that this Redeemer, Whom they knew not, stood in the midst of them. For He Who was God had taken human nature, was like us in everything, and was visibly among men; yet the splendour of His Divinity was hidden from their eyes. And when he added: The same is He that shall come after me, Who is preferred before me, he wished to teach us, that if Jesus Christ, as to His birth, has come after him, according to His dignity He was infinitely preferred before him. And he gives the reason of this preference in the preceding words, He was before me, and declares that He Who was born after him far surpasses him, because time cannot enclose Him in its bounds. Though He was born of His Virgin Mother in time, yet He was begotten of His Father from all eternity. However, to show even more clearly the esteem and reverence which were due to the Redeemer, he confessed in deep humility that he was not worthy to loose the latchet of His shoe. Among the ancients there was a custom that, when a man would not accept the bride allotted to him by law, this bride was to take off his shoes. This clearly indicates that, when Jesus came to abide among men, He also showed Himself as the Bridegroom of the Holy Church, according to the words of John himself, saying: He that hath the bride is the bridegroom (John iii. 29). Now, in order to combat the opinion, according to which some thought that the person of Jesus was John the Baptist, he positively declares that he was not even worthy to loose the latchet of the Redeemer's shoe, acknowledging by this that, as he could neither assume the name nor the nature of the Bridegroom, so neither had he the power to uncover the feet of the Redeemer. There is yet another meaning in these words. Everyone knows that what serves to cover the feet is taken from the skin of dead animals. Now, our Saviour, taking a body like ours, appeared in this world with the covering of our mortal and corruptible nature. Who is able to understand the mystery of the Incarnation of the Word of God? Who can comprehend how the highest Spirit, giving life to everything, received life in the womb of a mother? How was He, who had no beginning, but is eternal, and showed Himself in time, conceived? And as the obscurity of this mystery is signified by the latchet of the Saviour of the world, we understand why John the Baptist declared that he had not the power to loose it. Though he had recognised by his prophetic spirit the Incarnation of the Word, his human mind was not able to conceive this great mystery. When he tells us that he is not worthy to loose the latchet of the Saviour's shoe, he wishes to teach us that he acknowledges his ignorance, and that we are not to be astonished at seeing that He, Who was born after him, was preferred before him; because the mystery of our Saviour's nativity was far beyond his conception and understanding. Lastly, this confession of St. John tells us that, though he might have possessed the required knowledge imparted to him in the gift of prophecy, he still remained in ignorance concerning this incomprehensible mystery.

IV. Beloved brethren, our special attention is called to the way in which the saints endeavour to preserve the virtue of humility. As soon as they are aware of the extraordinary wisdom and knowledge imparted to them, they consider all the things which they do not know, so that the consideration of their weakness may keep them humble, since the knowledge of their perfection might engender pride in them; they are convinced that, knowledge being a virtue, humility is its best preservative. For, be the mind ever so enlightened by extraordinary attainments, it must be humbled deeply, that the blessings received and acquired by knowledge may not be blown away by the wind of pride. Therefore, beloved brethren, when you do good works, remember the evil you have done in past years; for if you keep your faults before your eyes, you will never feel vain delight nor take thoughtless pleasure in any merit you may possess. Consider yourselves less than others, especially less than those not entrusted to your care. Should you notice faults in your neighbour, consider that he possesses virtues which you do not see. Everyone is intended to acquire a certain degree of eminence through his merits; yet in a certain sense he must not recognise this, lest he lose through pride the virtue he has attained. Woe to you, says the prophet Isaias, that are wise in your own eyes, and prudent in your own conceits (Isa v. 21). St. Paul confirms these words when he says: Be not wise in your own conceits (Rom xii. 16). When Saul was puffed up with pride God said to him: When thou wast a little one in thy own eyes, was thou not made the head of the tribes of Israel? (1 Kings xv. 17). That is, when thou didst esteem thyself but little among others, I exalted thee above all of them; but now, as thou thinkest thyself great, thou hast become little in My eyes. On the contrary, we see David who, in spite of his power and glory, thought but little of himself, dancing before the ark and saying: Before the Lord... I will both play and make myself meaner than I have done, and I will be little in my own eyes (2 Kings vi. 22). But who is he that would preserve himself from pride? had he done such heroic deeds as this King, and counted in his life so many wonders as we read in the history of this King? He had, by the strength of his arms, struck down lions and bears and cut them to pieces; he was preferred to his brothers, though the last of them, and was chosen to wear the royal crown; he was anointed by the prophet, in order to take the place of a reprobate King, and to govern the kingdom of Israel. With one single stone he had overthrown a powerful giant, the terror of Saul's army. Yet, in spite of these brilliant deeds, and in the midst of his triumph and exaltation, this powerful King, as seen by his humble words and feelings, thought but little of himself. If the greatest saints, amidst their wonderful deeds, thought themselves worthy of contempt, how will those who do not practise the least virtue excuse their vanity and pride? For should we deserve praise for our good works, yet they must be considered as nothing, unless humility give them their value. Virtue will lower, not exalt us, when humility is wanting. The Christian who heaps up virtues without the accompanying humility is like a man exposing dust to the wind; it will be carried away by the wind and thrown into his own eyes. Therefore, beloved brethren, cling to humility in all your actions, as to the root of all good works. Do not consider those whom you surpass in merits, but fix your eyes on those who excel you in virtues; then you will place before you as models those who are most perfect, and by your own humility you will attain the highest degree of perfection.

FOURTH SUNDAY OF ADVENT.

GOSPEL: Luke iii. 1-6. Now, in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, Pontius Pilate being Governor of Judea, and Herod Tetrarch of Galilee, and Philip his brother Tetrarch of Iturea and the country of Trachonitis, and Lysanias Tetrarch of Abilina, under the high priests Annas and Caiphas, the word of the Lord was made unto John, the son of Zachary, in the desert. And he came into all the country about the Jordan, preaching the baptism of penance for the remission of sins, as it was written in the book of the sayings of Isaias the prophet: 'A voice of one crying in the wilderness: Prepare ye the way of the Lord; make straight His paths. Every valley shall be filled, and every mountain and hill shall be brought low; and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough ways plain. And all flesh shall see the salvation of God.'

HOMILY BY POPE ST. GREGORY, PREACHED IN THE CHURCH OF ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST.

TWENTIETH HOMILY ON THE GOSPELS.

I. The Gospel, speaking of the Roman Emperor Tiberius and of the different Princes governing Judea and Galilee and other provinces, has no other motive but to tell us the year in which the word of the Lord was made unto John, the Precursor of the true Messiah. He was to announce to the world Him Who would save some among the Jews and a great number of Gentiles; therefore the time of his ministry is given by the name of the Emperor who reigned over the Gentiles and by the Princes governing in Judea. The enrolment which had taken place in the world, indicates that the Gentiles were to be united, whilst the faithless nation of the Jews would be dispersed. For the Romans recognised but one supreme chief, whilst Judea was divided into four provinces under as many Princes. Thus was verified among the Jews the word of the Redeemer: Every kingdom divided against itself shall be brought to desolation (Luke xi. 17). And the names of the high priests are given after those of the Kings, because John the Baptist announced the Messiah, who was both Priest and King. St. Luke, mentioning in his Gospel the ministry of the Precursor, speaks at the same time of the office of priests and rulers.

II. John came into all the country about the Jordan preaching the baptism of penance for the remission of sins. From the words of Holy Scripture it appears that St. John not only preached the baptism of penance, but also administered it to some of the Jews. His baptism could not forgive sins, for only the baptism instituted by Jesus can do that. However, he preached the baptism of penance; for, though he had not the power to give the baptism which sanctifies, at least he announced it to the world. This great prophet had preached, in the ministry of the Word, the Saviour Who, being the uncreated Word of the Father, was made man for us; and now he represented by his sterile baptism the Sacrament of the real Baptism, which alone can sanctify, truth and reality being preceded by shadows and symbols.

III. And the Gospel adds: As it was written in the book of the sayings of Isaias the prophet: A voice of one crying in the wilderness: Prepare ye the way of the Lord; make straight His paths. When John was asked by the priests and Levites: Who art thou? he answered: I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness (John i. 23). He was called by the prophet a voice, as we have shown elsewhere, because by his voice he had preceded the Divine Word. We also know the words uttered by this voice, for the prophet himself tells them, saying; Prepare ye the way of the Lord; make straight His paths. We learn from all this that he, who preached the true faith and the necessity of good works, wished also to prepare the hearts of those who listened to him, that is, to prepare the way by which the Lord was coming. For he removed from men's hearts whatever could prevent the grace of God from entering into and illuminating them by the Divine light. The minister of the word makes the ways straight for the steps of the Redeemer, when he awakens pious thoughts in the mind of his hearers. Therefore, when it is said:

Every valley shall he filled, and every mountain and hill shall he brought low, we understand that the humble are meant by the valleys and the proud by the mountains. We know now why at the coming of the Saviour of the world the valleys were to be filled and the mountains to be brought low, for He Himself said: Everyone that exalteth himself, shall he humbled; and he that humbleth himself, shall he exalted (Luke xiv. 11). A valley, which is filled up, rises and increases; whilst a mountain or hill brought down will decrease. Thus we see that the Gentiles, who in all humility received the faith in Jesus Christ, the Mediator between God and man, received the fulness of grace; whilst the Jews, puffed up and filled with pride and vanity, lost the grace of God through their faithlessness. The valleys are filled, because the humble, receiving into their hearts the word of salvation, obtain at the same time grace to help them to practise virtue, according to the words of the psalmist; Thou sendest forth springs in the vales (Ps ciii. 10); and again: The vales shall abound with corn (Ps lxiv. 14). The water running down the mountains represents those proud men who have forsaken the doctrine of truth; but humble souls receive the truth preached to them, like the valleys receive the waters which render them fertile. Indeed, we recognise this fact when we consider those whose meekness and simplicity are despised by the world, but who are nourished and filled with the bread of Divine truth.

IV. When the multitude saw the extraordinary holiness of John the Baptist, they believed him to be the firm and high mountain announced in Holy Scripture: It shall come to pass that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall he prepared in the top of mountains, and high above the hills; and the people shall flow to it (Mich iv. 1). These words were applied to St. John the more confidently since, according to the Gospel, he was taken for Christ Himself: The people were of opinion, and all were thinking in their hearts of John, that perhaps he might he the Christ (Luke iii. 15). The multitude, thinking this in their hearts, insisted on an answer, and said to him: Art thou not Christ? But John the Baptist, through his own humility, was in his own eyes like a deep valley. He was, therefore, filled with the grace of the Holy Ghost, and, making known the opinion he had of himself, he answered: He that shall come after me is preferred before me, the latchet of whose shoe I am not worthy to loose. Again he said: He that hath the bride is the bridegroom; but the friend of the bridegroom, who standeth and heareth him, rejoiceth with joy because of the bridegroom's voice. This my joy therefore is fulfilled. He must increase, but I must decrease (John iii. 29, 30). We see, therefore, that John the Baptist, on account of his great virtues, was taken for Jesus Christ by those who saw and heard him. In order to bring them out of this error, he answered that he was not only not Christ, but that he was not even worthy to loose the latchet of His shoe, that is, to investigate and understand the great mystery of the Incarnation. They also imagined, when taking John for Jesus Christ, that the Church was His Bride. However, he formally declared that the true Bridegroom was He who possessed the bride, as if to say: I am not the bridegroom, only the friend of the Bridegroom, giving us to understand that his only joy consisted in hearing the Bridegroom's voice, and that he did not glory in his own voice. For the joy which St. John felt in his heart did not come from the fact that the multitude listened to him in sincere humility, but from the hope that the voice of truth had gained their hearts, and that by his teaching he would then unfold the truth more fully to them. He could, therefore, say that his joy was full; for he that rejoices only because his voice was listened to, cannot possess real and entire happiness.

V. St. John, speaking of our Redeemer, added: He must increase, but I must decrease. Now, let us consider in what our Lord could increase and in what His prophet could decrease. This difficulty is easily overcome when we remember that the people, seeing the wonderful mortification of John the Baptist, and his retirement in the desert far from all intercourse with men, thought he was Christ the Messiah. Whereas, seeing Jesus among publicans, conversing and eating with them, and not avoiding the company of sinners, they took Him for a prophet only, and not for the Christ. But what John said was literally fulfilled, when the time came that the Redeemer, Whom they had looked upon as a mere prophet, was recognised as the Christ, and that John the Baptist, taken for Christ, was then known only as His prophet. Then, indeed, was fulfilled what John said of Jesus: He must increase, but I must decrease. And our Lord increased in the esteem of men as soon as they recognised Who He in reality was; whilst the honour given to John decreased, when it became known that he was only the prophet of the Messiah. Thus the holiness of John the Baptist was preserved, because he remained humble. The greater number of those who wish to attain to greatness, very often by their proud thoughts and sentiments, fall deeply, and verify in their lives these words: Every valley shall befilled, and every mountain and hill shall be brought low. For God is with the humble, and gives them His richest blessings; whereas He forsakes the heart of the proud man.

VI. Again it is said: And the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough ways plain. These words will be fulfilled when the wicked, whose hearts are corrupted by injustice, endeavour to return to God by practising Christian justice. And the rough ways are made plain, when hard and passionate hearts are softened and become peaceful through the grace of God. When the word of truth is not received, but finds an insensible heart, it is withdrawn, on account of the obstacles placed in its way. Whereas, when through the unction of the grace of God, we are softened and willingly receive the instructions and exhortations of God's ministry, the truth they announce, instead of finding rough ways, finds them smooth and plain, and thus easily penetrates the heart.

VII. And all flesh, continues the Evangelist, shall see the salvation of God; that is, all men shall see Jesus Christ. But in this life all men cannot see the Redeemer. It seems, therefore, that the prophet spoke of the future, that he saw heaven open before him, and Jesus in His glory, surrounded by angels, apostles and saints, as He will come to judge the world. Then all men, both the just and the unjust, will see the Judge. The just, that they may receive the due reward of everlasting happiness; and the wicked, that they may be punished in everlasting torments for their sins and vices. Amen.

CHRISTMAS DAY.

GOSPEL: Luke ii. 1-14, And it came to pass that in those days there went out a decree from Cæsar Augustus that the whole world should be enrolled. This enrolling was first made by Cyrinus, the Governor of Syria. And all went to be enrolled, every one into his own city. And Joseph also went up from Galilee out of the city of Nazareth into Judea, to the city of David, which is called Bethlehem, because he was of the house and family of David, to be enrolled with Mary, his espoused wife, who was with child. And it came to pass, that when they were there, her days were accomplished that she should be delivered. And she brought forth her first-born Son, and wrapped Him up in swaddling-clothes, and laid Him in a manger, because there was no room for them in the inn. And there were in the same country shepherds watching and keeping the night-watches over their flock. And behold an angel of the Lord stood by them, and the brightness of God shone round about them; and they feared with a great fear. And the angel said to them: Fear not; for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, that shall be to all the people; for this day is born to you a SAVIOUR, Who is Christ the Lord, in the city of David. And this shall be a sign unto you: You shall find the Infant wrapped in swaddling-clothes, and laid in a manger. And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly army, praising God, and saying: Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace to men of good will.

HOMILY BY POPE ST. GREGORY, PREACHED IN THE CHURCH OF OUR LADY ON CHRISTMAS DAY.

EIGHTH HOMILY ON THE GOSPELS.

I. Since by the mercy of God we are to say three Masses to-day, there is not much time left for preaching on this Gospel; at the same time the festival of the Lord's Nativity obliges us to speak a few words. Let us first ask why, when our Lord was to be born, the world was enrolled? Was it not clearly to show that He Who was to come into this world and be made man would one day enroll His elect and inscribe their names in the book of eternity? For the prophet, speaking of the reprobate, says: Let them be blotted out of the book of the living; and with the just let them not be written (Ps lxviii. 29). Then it is not without a special reason that the Lord is born in Bethlehem. For the name Bethlehem signifies the House of Bread, and this is the birthplace of Him Who said: I am the living Bread, which came down from heaven (John vi. 51). We see then that the name of Bethlehem was prophetically given to the place where Christ was born, because it was there that He was to appear in the flesh, by the eating of which the souls of the elect are fed unto life everlasting. He was born, not in His mother's house, but away from home. And this is a mystery, showing that by assuming our mortality He was born in a strange country. We say strange, considering the Divine nature of our Redeemer, and not His Divine power. For, referring to this power, Holy Scripture says that, when the Lord came into this world, He came unto His own. But, when thinking of His Divine nature, and knowing that He was begotten of the Father before all worlds, we may say that by taking our nature in time, He came into a strange country. Again, considering, as the prophet says, that all flesh is grass (Isa xl. 6), we easily understand how Jesus, taking this flesh, changed it into wheat, since He said of Himself: Unless the grain of wheat falling into the ground die, itself remaineth alone

(John xii. 24). This is the reason why the Divine Child is seen in a manger after His birth, that His flesh, like pure wheat, may draw to Him the faithful, as mysterious animals, to be fed and filled with eternal wisdom. And when it is said that the angel showed himself to the shepherds keeping the night-watches, and that a wonderful light surrounded them, we learn from this that those, who carefully attend to the flocks entrusted to them must be favoured with deeper knowledge, since their ministry is highly meritorious. For, whilst they carefully watch over their flocks, they are enlightened by God with graces more abundant than those given to others.

II. The angel announced that a King was born, and suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God and saying: Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace to men of good will. Before the Incarnation of the Son of God there was disagreement between the angels and men. Original sin and the crimes daily committed in the world were the cause of this division. It was only just that the angels, being the friends and faithful servants of God, should look upon men as strangers and have no communication with them on account of their transgressing the commandments. But since man submitted to God and recognised Him as his lawful Master, the heavenly spirits consider mankind as their fellow-citizens. Though highly superior to us, they do not despise our weakness, since the King of heaven and earth came down and took upon Him this human weakness. These blessed spirits, forgetting their former aversion, wish to live in friendship with us. Instead of despising us as frail humanity, they look upon us as their fellow-creatures. We read in Holy Scripture that Lot and Josua prostrate on the ground worshipped the angels sent by God; but when St. John fell down to adore before the feet of the angel he was prevented from doing so, for the angel said: See thou do it not, for I am thy fellow-servant and of thy brethren (Apoc xxii. 9). Why did the angels, before the coming of the Redeemer, see men prostrate before them and prevent them not? And why were they unwilling, after the birth of our Saviour, to receive such honour? Was it not because they saw the human nature, which they had before despised, now exalted high above their own in the person of Jesus, true God and true man? Also because they dread to see the human nature humbled, since they adore that humanity in the person of the King of Majesty, their own King. Lastly, the angels consider man as their equal because they adore God made man, sitting at the right hand of the Father. Let us, therefore, beloved brethren, beware of every sin, by which we might be made unworthy of that heavenly city, which God has prepared for us as well as for His angels. Let us lead such good lives that they may correspond with our dignity. Avoid, therefore, impurity and lust, even every sinful thought. Let not wickedness soil the purity of your souls; let not the poison of envy and hatred penetrate your hearts. Keep your souls free from pride, covetousness and anger, and especially from the desire of tasting the sinful pleasures of this world. Remember that you have been called the sons of the most High (Ps lxxxi. 6). Defend in yourselves the glory of God by avoiding sin, for God was made man in order to honour us and make us partakers of His eternal glory. Amen.

THE EPIPHANY OF OUR LORD.

GOSPEL: Mat ii. 1-12. When Jesus therefore was born in Bethlehem of Juda, in the days of King Herod, behold, there came wise men from the East to Jerusalem, saying: Where is He that is born King of the Jews? For we have seen His star in the East, and are come to adore Him. And King Herod, hearing this, was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him. And, assembling together all the chief priests and the scribes of the people, he inquired of them where Christ should be born. But they said to him: In Bethlehem of Juda. For so it is written by the prophet: And thou, Bethlehem, the land of Juda, art not the least among the Princes of Juda; for out of thee shall come forth the Captain that shall rule my people Israel. Then Herod, privately calling the wise men, learned diligently of them the time of the star which appeared to them, and sending them into Bethlehem, said: Go and diligently inquire after the Child, and when you have found Him, bring me word again, that I also may come and adore Him. Who, having heard the King, went their way; and behold, the star which they had seen in the East went before them until it came and stood over where the Child was. And seeing the star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy; and entering into the house, they found the Child with Mary, His mother, and falling down, they adored Him; and opening their treasures, offered Him gifts, gold and frankincense and myrrh. And having received an answer in sleep that they should not return to Herod, they went back another way into their country.

HOMILY BY POPE ST. GREGORY, PREACHED IN THE CHURCH OF ST. PETER ON THE EPIPHANY.

TENTH HOMILY ON THE GOSPELS.

I. You have heard from the Gospel lesson, beloved brethren, how, when the King of heaven was born, the king of earth was troubled. The depths of earth are stirred, whilst the heights of heaven are opened. Now, let us consider the question why, when the Redeemer was born, an angel brought the news to the shepherds of Judea, but a star led the wise men of the East to adore Him. It seems as if the Jews, as reasonable creatures, received a revelation from a reasonable being, that is, an angel; whilst the Gentiles without, not listening to their reason, are attracted, not by a voice, but by a sign, that is, a star. Hence, St. Paul says: A sign, not to believers, but to unbelievers; but prophecies, not to unbelievers, but to believers (i Cor xiv. 22). So the prophesying — that is, of an angel — was given to those who believed, and the sign to them that believed not. We also remark that later on the Redeemer was preached among the Gentiles, not by Himself, but by the Apostles, even as when a little child He is shown to them, not by the voice of angels, but merely by the vision of a star. When He Himself began to speak, He was made known to us by teachers; but when He laid silent in the manger, by the silent testimony in heaven.

II. However, whether we consider the signs accompanying His birth, or His death, this special thing is wonderful, namely, the hardness of heart of the Jews, who would not believe in Him, in spite of both prophecies and miracles. All things in creation bore witness that its Creator was come. Let us reckon them up after the manner of men. The heavens knew that He was God, and sent a star to shine over where He lay. The sea knew it, and bore Him up when He walked upon it. The earth knew it, and quaked when He died. The sun knew it, and was darkened. The rocks and walls knew it, and broke in pieces at the hour of His death. Hell knew it, and gave up the dead that were therein. And yet, up to this very hour, the hearts of the unbelieving Jews do not acknowledge that He, to Whom all nature did testify, is their God, and, being more hardened than rocks, refuse to be rent by repentance. But that which increases their guilt and punishment lies in the fact that they despise that God Whose birth had been announced to them by the prophets, hundreds of years before, and Whom they had seen after His birth in the stable. They even knew the place of His birth, for they spoke of it to the inquiring Herod, and told him that, according to the testimony of Holy Scripture, Bethlehem was to be renowned as the birthplace of the Messiah. They strengthen, therefore, our faith, whilst their own knowledge condemns them. The Jews are like Isaac, whose eyes were overtaken with the darkness of death, when he blessed, but could not see his son Jacob standing before him. Thus the unhappy nation was struck with blindness, and, knowing what the prophets had said about the Redeemer, would not recognise Him, though He stood in the midst of them.

III. When Herod heard of the birth of our King, he betook himself to his cunning wiles, and, lest he should be deprived of an earthly kingdom, he desired the wise men to search diligently for the Child, and when they had found Him, to bring him word again. He said, that he also may come and adore Him; but, in reality, if he had found Him, that he might put Him to death. Now, behold, of how little weight is the wickedness of man, when it is tried against the counsel of the Almighty. It is written: There is no wisdom, there is no prudence, there is no counsel against the Lord (Prov xxi. 30). And the star which the wise men saw in the East still led them on; they found the new-born King, and offered Him gifts; then they were warned in a dream that they should not return to Herod. And so it came to pass, that when Herod sought Jesus, he could not find Him. Even so it is with hypocrites who, whilst they make pretence to seek the Lord, to adore Him, find Him not.

IV. It is well to know that one of the errors of the Priscillianist heretics consists in believing that every man is born under the influence of a star. In order to confirm this notion, they bring forward the instance of the star of Bethlehem that appeared when the Lord was born, and which they call His star, that is, the star ruling His fate and destiny. But, consider the words of the Gospel concerning this star; they say: It went before them until it came and stood over where the Child was. Whence we see that it was not the Child who followed the star, but the star that followed the Child, as if to show that the Child ruled over the star, instead of the star ruling over Him. Let, therefore, the hearts of the faithful be free from the thought that anything rules over their destiny. In this world there is only One Who directs the destiny of man, that is, He Who made him. Neither was man made for the stars, but the stars for man; and if we say that they rule over his destiny, we set them above him, for whose service they were created. When Jacob came out of his mother's womb, and his hand took hold of his brother Esau's heel, the first could not have been perfectly born without the second immediately following. Yet such was not in after-life the position of these two brothers, whom their mother brought forth at one birth.

V. Should a ridiculous astrologer, according to his principles, pretend that the power of the stars depends on the very moment of the birth to which their whole operation is referred, we answer that the birth of man requires a certain space of time during which the stars continually change their position. These changes would consequently form as many destinies as there are limbs in those who are born during that space of time. There is another fixed rule accepted by the adepts of this pseudo-science, namely, that he who is born under the sign of Aquarius (waterman) will never have any other profession than that of a fisherman. Yet we know from history that the Gatulians never carry on that business. But who will pretend that not one of them was ever born under that special sign of the Zodiac? By the same principle they will say that all those, born under the sign of the Balance, will be bankers or money-lenders. But we know that there are many nations among which these kinds of business are unknown. These so-called learned astrologers must, therefore, confess, either that these nations have not this sign of the Zodiac, or that none of their children are born under this sign. Many nations, as we know, have a law that their rulers must be of royal blood. But are not many poor children in these countries born at the very moment when the one, who is destined to be king, sees the light? Why, then, should there be a difference between those who are born under the same sign, so that some are clothed in purple whilst others are slaves? We wish, in speaking of the star that appeared to the wise men, to say these few words against the deceptions of astrology.

VI. The wise men brought gold, frankincense and myrrh. Gold is a gift suitable for a king, frankincense is offered in sacrifice to God, and with myrrh are embalmed the bodies of the dead. By the gifts, therefore, they presented to Him, the wise men set forth three things concerning Him, to Whom they offered them. The gold signifies that He was King; the frankincense that He was God, and the myrrh that He was mortal. There are some heretics who believe Him to be God, but confess not His Kingly dominion over all things. These offer Him the frankincense, but refuse the gold. There are some others who admit that He is King, but deny that He is God. These present the gold, but withhold the frankincense. Again, there are other heretics who profess that Christ is both God and King, but deny that He took to Himself a mortal nature. These offer Him gold and frankincense, but not myrrh for the burial incident to His mortality. Let us, however, present gold to the new-born Lord, acknowledging His universal Kingship; let us offer Him frankincense, confessing that He Who had been made manifest in time, was still God before time; let us give Him myrrh, believing that He, Who cannot suffer as God, became capable of death by assuming our human, mortal nature. There is also another meaning in this gold, frankincense and myrrh. Gold is the type of wisdom, for, as Solomon says, wisdom is a treasure to be desired, and that it is found in the mouth of the wise (Prov xxi. 20, Septuag.). Frankincense, which is burnt in honour of God, is a figure of prayer; witness the words of the Psalmist: Let my prayer be directed as incense in Thy sight (Ps cxl. 2). By myrrh is represented the mortification of the body, as where Holy Church says of her children labouring in their strife after God even unto death: My hands dropped with myrrh (Cant v. 5). We offer, therefore, gold to this new King when in His sight we reflect the brilliancy of true wisdom. We offer Him frankincense when our pious prayers, like a sweet odour before God, banish all wicked thoughts and inflame good desires. We offer him myrrh, when by fasting and penance we mortify our passions; for through the effects produced by the myrrh, as we have already remarked, the bodies are preserved from corruption. Our flesh is corrupted when we give up ‘this mortal body to luxury, as the prophet says: The beasts have rotted in their dung (Joel i. 17). The image of these beasts indicates those carnal beings who give themselves up to their shameful desires, and hasten towards their own destruction. We bring, therefore, a present of myrrh to God, when by temperance and mortification we preserve our bodies from all impurity.

VII. The wise men teach us also a great lesson in that they went back another way into their country; and what they did, having received an answer in sleep, we ought to do. Our country is heaven, and when we have once known Jesus, we can never reach it by returning to the way, wherein we walked before knowing Him. We have gone far from our country by the way of pride, disobedience, worldliness, and forbidden indulgence; we must seek that heavenly fatherland by subjection, by contempt of the things which are seen, and by curbing the fleshly appetites. Let us, then, depart into our own country by another way. They that have by enjoyment put themselves away from it, must seek it again by sorrow. It behoves us, therefore, beloved brethren, to be ever fearful and watchful, having continually before the eyes of our mind, on the one hand, the guilt of our doings, and, on the other, the judgment at the last day. It behoves us to think how that awful Judge, Whose judgment is hanging over us, but has not yet fallen, will surely come. The wrath to come is before sinners, but has not yet smitten them; the Judge yet tarries, that when ‘He comes there may perhaps be less to condemn. Let us afflict ourselves for our faults with weeping, and with the psalmist, let us come before His presence with thanksgiving (Ps xciv. 2). Let us take heed that we be not befooled by the appearance of earthly happiness, or seduced by the vanity of any worldly pleasure; for the Judge is at hand, Who says: Woe to you that now laugh, for you shall mourn and weep (Luke vi. 25). Hence, also, Solomon says: Laughter shall be mingled with sorrow, and mourning taketh hold of the end of joy (Prov xiv. 13). And again: Laughter I counted error, and to mirth I said: Why art thou vainly deceived? (Eccles ii. 2). And yet again: The heart of the wise is where there is mourning, but the heart of fools where there is mirth (vii. 5). Let us fear lest we do not fulfil” the commandments given to us. If we wish to celebrate this feast to His glory, let us offer Him the acceptable sacrifice of our sorrow, for the royal prophet says: A sacrifice to God is an afflicted spirit; a contrite and humbled heart, O God, Thou wilt not despise (Ps. 1. 19). Our former faults were remitted by the Sacrament of Baptism, yet we have again offended God; and these sins which the water of baptism cannot cleanse, will be forgiven only when in real and deep sorrow we shed tears of contrition. We have gone away from our real fatherland; we have followed the false gods which allured us; let us, therefore, return by another way, the way of suffering, the bitterness of which we shall endure with the grace of God.

SEPTUAGESIMA SUNDAY.

GOSPEL: Matt xx. 1-16. At that time: Jesus spoke to His disciples this parable: The kingdom of heaven is like to a householder who went out early in the morning to hire labourers into his vineyard. And having agreed with the labourers for a penny a day, he sent them into his vineyard. And going out about the third hour, he saw others standing in the market-place idle. And he said to them: Go you also into my vineyard, and I will give you what shall be just. And they went their way. And again he went out about the sixth and the ninth hour, and did in like manner. But about the eleventh hour he went out and found others standing, and he saith to them: Why stand you here all the day idle? They say to him: Because no man hath hired us. He saith to them: Go you also into my vineyard. And when evening was come, the lord of the vineyard said to his steward: Call the labourers, and pay them their hire, beginning from the last even to the first. When, therefore, they were come that came about the eleventh hour, they received every man a penny. But when the first also came, they thought that they should have received more; and they also received every man a penny. And receiving it, they murmured against the master of the house, saying: These last have worked but one hour, and thou hast made them equal to us that have borne the burden of the day and the heats. But he answering, said to one of them: Friend, I do thee no wrong; didst thou not agree with me for a penny? Take what is thine, and go thy way. I will also give to this last even as to thee. Or, is it not lawful for me to do what I will? Is thy eye evil because I am good? So shall the last be the first, and the first last. For many are called, but few chosen.

HOMILY BY POPE ST. GREGORY, PREACHED IN THE CHURCH OF ST. LAWRENCE ON SEPTUAGESIMA SUNDAY.

NINETEENTH HOMILY ON THE GOSPELS.

I. This Gospel containing many things which need explaining, I will try as far as possible to shorten my explanation, that it may not become tedious to you. The kingdom of heaven, so we are told by our Lord, is like to a householdery who went out early in the morning to hire labourers into his vineyard. Who, indeed, is more justly to be likened to a householder than our Creator, Who is the Head of the household of faith, ruling over those He has made, and being Master of His chosen ones in the world, as a master of those in his house? He it is that has the Church as His vineyard, a vineyard that ceases not to bring forth branches of the true Vine, from just Abel to the last of the elect that shall be born in the world. This householder, then, for the cultivation of his vineyard, goes out early in the morning, and at the third hour, the sixth, the ninth, and the eleventh, to hire labourers into his vineyard. Thus the Lord, from the beginning to the end of the world, never ceases to gather together preachers for the instruction of His faithful people. The early morning of the world was from Adam until Noah; the third hour from Noah until Abraham; the sixth from Abraham until Moses; the ninth from Moses until the coming of the Lord; the eleventh from the coming of the Lord to the end of the world. At this eleventh hour were sent forth as preachers the Apostles, who received full wages, though they came in late. For the cultivation of His vineyard — that is, the instruction of His people, — the Lord has never ceased to send labourers into it. First by the patriarchs, then by the prophets and teachers of the law, and lastly by the Apostles, He dressed and tended the lives of His people, as the owner of a vineyard dresses and tends it by means of workmen. Whoever, in whatever degree, joined to a right faith the teaching of justice, was so far one of God's labourers in God's vineyard. By the labourers at early morning, at the third, the sixth, and the ninth hour, may be understood God's ancient people, the Hebrews, who, striving to worship Him with a right faith, in company with His chosen ones from the beginning of the world, continually laboured in His vineyard. And now, at the eleventh hour, it was said to the Gentiles: Why stand you here all the day idle? The Lord speaks of their carelessness and indifference concerning their salvation, for they had not yet done anything to be assured of it; yet, if you ponder upon their answer to the householder sending them to his vineyard, you will have cause of being ashamed. Their answer to the householder's question, why they stood all the day idle, was: Because no man hath hived us. Indeed, they, unlike others, had neither patriarchs nor prophets to instruct them. No one had hired them, for no one had shown them the way leading to salvation. As to us, who neglect the practice of good works, and lead an idle life, what shall we answer for our justification? For we received the true faith, so to speak, in the womb of our mother; we heard the words of life when still in the cradle, and we drank the milk of Christian doctrine, given by our holy Church at the time when, for the life of our bodies, we were sucking the breasts of our natural mothers.

II. The different hours of the parable may also be compared to the different periods of man's life. Childhood, on account of the small sphere of knowledge, is the early hour, of morning; youth may be compared to the third hour, when the sun rises and the heat of years increases; the sixth hour represents manhood, the virility, when the sun has reached the zenith of his course; by the ninth hour, showing the sun slowly retreating from his height, we recognise the elderly age of man, when he loses the strength and power of younger years; whereas old age is figured by the eleventh hour. Now, consider how some are called, already in their childhood, to lead a perfect and holy life; others in their youth; these in their manly age; some others in advanced years; and lastly others in their old age. Do you understand that all of us are labourers, who may at any time be sent into the vineyard of the Lord? Again, beloved brethren, consider your own lives, and ask yourselves whether you are worthy labourers of the Lord, whether you are mindful of the work you are doing, and lastly whether you labour indeed in the Lord’s vineyard. Be sure that those who work for their own interests only, have not entered the vineyard of the Lord; for those only are accounted as His labourers, who prefer the glory of God to their own profit and interest. Such worthy Christians endeavour to serve God with ardent love and sincere devotion; they strive to win souls to God, and exert themselves to take others along with them to the habitation of the Saints; whereas those who live for themselves and try to satisfy their vices and concupiscences, are condemned as idle labourers, making no effort to work in, or care for, the Lord’s vineyard.

III. What shall we say of those who put off their conversion to the end of their life? Are they not like those labourers standing in the market-place until the eleventh hour, to whom the householder said: Why stand you here all the day idle? Our Saviour wishes them to understand that, having spent their childhood and youth, in the service of the world and far from God, they are called upon to begin to turn to God, at least, now at the extreme limits of life, and with greater courage to walk on the road of justice, that leads to perfection and eternal life; for the work they are bid to do cannot last very long, since they came so late. Thus this good Householder invites them to come back to Him, and often rewards them before those who had been called from their childhood, since very often the last comers are called away the first. Remember the good Thief (Luke xxiii.). He came at the eleventh hour; but by the capital punishment he suffered, he obtained a reward certainly not deserved by his former sinful life. He recognised Jesus to be the Redeemer of the world, confessed Him publicly, and almost at the same moment gave up the ghost. We see thereby that the Householder, giving the promised penny, began with the last; for the good Thief was received into Paradise before St. Peter. The same happened to many good and pious souls living before the Law and under the Law. They had to wait for their reward, whilst those called after the coming of the Messiah, at once went to Paradise. We may also say, in all truth, that the same reward — that is, a penny, — was given to them that had worked one hour only, as to the others who had been working the whole day and had borne the burden of the day and the heats. For the eternal happiness, that reward given to them that worked well, will be common to all of them, both to those who came at the beginning and to those who arrived with the Redeemer. This very equality was the cause of complaints: These last have worked but one hour, and thou hast made them equal to us that have borne the burden of the day and the heats. Indeed, the first comers can say that they have borne the burden of the day and the heats, since their life was longer than ours. They came at the beginning, when the life of man was very long, and they had to fight against their own self for many years. We also feel in us the fire of concupiscence, against which we contend, and which we try to extinguish; and this continual fighting may be compared to the burden of the day and the heats.

IV. Besides all this, I ask, what is the meaning of the murmurs of those who received the reward in heaven very late? Also in what sense can we say that they murmured, since heaven will not be given to those who murmur, and since those who have entered heaven neither murmur nor complain? I answer: If I consider that the patriarchs, though leading a good and holy life, could not enter Paradise before the coming of the Son of God, Who by His death reopened the gates of heaven, we find therein, that is, in the delay preventing them to receive the reward for which they worked so hard, the real motive of their murmuring. After fighting for justice' sake, and thus deserving the crown of glory, their souls went to limbo, a place of rest and peace. To them, therefore, we may attribute the murmurs of the labourers after their day's work. However, after this presupposed murmuring, the souls of the just, leaving their prison, that is Umbo, wherein they had been detained for a long time, receive the promised penny, namely, the happiness of the eternal kingdom, of which they take possession. As to us who, though arriving at the end of the day, receive a penny, we do not murmur like those who arrived the first. Since the coming of the Redeemer into this world, we enter into the kingdom of heaven as soon as we leave this life, and we receive without any delay the crown of glory granted to the patriarchs after their very long waiting. (Note: It would be a mistake to infer from these words that St. Gregory did not believe in Purgatory. Their meaning is that a soul, leaving the body and having nothing to atone for, will be at once received into Paradise, unlike the just souls of the patriarchs which, before the coming of Christ, descended into limbo.) On this occasion the master of the house said to one of the labourers: I will also give to this last even as to thee. And, as the place in heaven assigned to a soul is an effect of His generous will, He adds: Or, is it not lawful for me to do what I will? It would be man's greatest folly to criticise the manner in which God's goodness deigns to act. Indeed, we could murmur against God, were He to refuse that which He is bound to give, but not when He refuses to grant what He is not in justice obliged to give. He, therefore, that murmurs, deserves this rebuke: Is thy eye evil because I am good? Hence we conclude that nobody is to boast of his work or of the time spent in doing it, for the Eternal Truth tells us: The last shall be first, and the first last. Though we be aware of our good works, we know not how strictly they will be scrutinized by the great Judge; yea, each of us ought to feel exceedingly happy to receive even the last place in the kingdom of God.

V. The following words of this Gospel, many are called, but few are chosen, cannot but inspire us with terror; for many receive the light of faith, but to a few only is granted the happiness of heaven. On account of the festival there are now a great many gathered together here, and there is hardly room for all within the walls of this temple. Yet, who can tell how many of them will one day be found among the number of the elect? All voices are loud in confessing Jesus, but the lives of those who confess Him do not agree with their exterior acts of faith. The greater number of those here present think it sufficient to follow Jesus in words, whilst by their acts they are separated from Him. St. Paul points them out to us, saying: They profess that they know God, but in their works they deny Him (Tit i. 16). This is confirmed by St. James: Faith without works is dead (Jas ii. 26). And the Psalmist repeats the words of God: I have declared and I have spoken; they are multiplied above number (Ps xxxix. 6). By these words we understand that, when the Lord calls men through His prophets, the number of believers greatly increases. However, not all those who by the gift of faith obtain the knowledge of the truth will be numbered among the elect. It is certain that when a great number of wicked Christians are gathered together with true servants of God, because of the same faith that they profess, they nevertheless do not deserve to be numbered with the faithful on account of their unchristian lives. For it cannot be denied that, though the holy Church includes in the same fold the sheep and the goats, the Eternal Judge will one day separate the just from the wicked, as the shepherd separates the sheep from the goats (Matt xxv. 32). Know ye, therefore, and recognise that none of those now given up to the pleasures of the world will be received among the elect; that the Judge will exclude them from the happy fate of the humble, since in this world they were lifted up on the wings of pride. They had received the gift of heavenly faith, but they clung to the earth, and heaven will not be opened to them.

VI. Meanwhile, though a great many people, whose lives are unchristian, may be found in the Church of God, I beseech you, beloved brethren, neither to imitate them nor to think them to be lost. We are aware of the unhappy condition of these people to-day, but we know not what they will be to-morrow. It often happens that those whom we see behind us on the road to holiness, soon precede us on account of their progress in spirituality; then it is with great difficulty that we follow those whom at some time we seemed to precede. When St. Stephen shed his blood for Christ, his murderers laid their garments at the feet of a young man whose name was Saul (Acts vii. 57), and who may be accused of having also stoned St. Stephen by assisting the murderers; yet, by his great labours undertaken for the Church, Saul has gone before the holy martyr, to whose death he contributed. Let us, therefore, consider these two things greatly deserving our attention. First, knowing that many are called but few are chosen, no one can help himself without the grace of God, and, though being called by faith, no one is sure of his eternal salvation. Secondly, when we see our neighbour in the clutches of sin and vice, let us not presumptuously think that he will be lost, for God's infinite mercy is unknown to us.

SEXAGESIMA SUNDAY.

GOSPEL: Luke viii. 4. 15. At that time: When a very great multitude was gathered together, and hastened out of the cities to meet Jesus, He spoke by a similitude. A sower went out to sow his seed; and as he sowed, some fell by the wayside; and it was trodden down, and the fowls of the air devoured it. And other some fell upon a rock; and as soon as it was sprung up, it withered away, because it had no moisture. And other some fell among thorns; and the thorns growing up with it choked it. And other some fell upon good ground, and sprung up, and yielded fruit a hundredfold. Saying these things, He cried out: He that hath ears to hear, let him hear. And His disciples asked Him what this parable might be. To whom He said: To you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God, but to the rest in parables; that seeing they may not see, and hearing they may not understand. Now the parable is this: The seed is the Word of God. And they by the wayside, are they that hear; then the devil cometh, and taketh the word out of their hearts, lest believing they should be saved. Now, they upon the rock are they who, when they hear, receive the word with joy; and these have no roots, for they believe for a while, and in time of temptation fall away. And that which fell among thorns are they who have heard, and going their way, are choked with the cares and the riches and pleasures of this life, and yield no fruit. But that on the good ground are they, who, in a good and perfect heart, hearing the word, keep it, and bring forth fruit in patience.

HOMILY BY POPE ST. GREGORY, PREACHED IN THE CHURCH OF ST. PETER ON SEXAGESIMA SUNDAY.

FIFTEENTH HOMILY ON THE GOSPELS.

I. The extract from the Holy Gospel which you have just heard, beloved brethren, needs not so much that it should be explained as that its lesson should be impressed on your minds. The Truth Himself has explained it, and after that, it is not becoming man's frailty to discuss His exposition as if not reliable. But there is, in that very explanation of our Lord, somewhat which it behoves us well to weigh. For, if we asked you to believe that by the seed is signified the word, by the field, the world, by the birds, the devils, and by the thorns, riches, you would perhaps doubt the truth of our exposition. Therefore, the Lord Himself deigned to give this explanation, and that, not for this parable only, but that you may know in what manner to interpret others, the meaning of which He has not given. Beginning His explanation, the Lord says that He is speaking in parables; and thereby He assures us when our weakness would unveil to you the hidden meaning of His words. For who would believe me were I to say that riches are thorns? Thorns prick, but riches afford us delight. And yet riches are thorns, indeed, for the anxiety they bring is a ceaseless pricking in the minds of their owners, and, if they lead to sin, they are thorns which tear the soul to bleed. But we understand from another Evangelist (Matt xiii. 28), that in this place our Lord speaks not of the riches themselves, but of the deceitfulness of riches. Those riches are deceitful, which can be ours for a little while only; those riches are deceitful, which cannot relieve the poverty of our souls. If, then, you seek to be rich, beloved brethren, earnestly desire the true riches; if you would be truly honourable, strive after the kingdom of heaven; if you love to reach the summit of titles and dignities, hasten to have your names written in Court above, where angels are.

II. Take to heart the Lord’s words which your ears hear. The food of the soul is the word of God. When the stomach is sick it rejects again the food that is put into it; and so is the soul sick when a man hears and digests not in his memory the word of God. And if any man cannot retain his food, that man’s life is in a desperate case. Thus we ought to fear for our soul, lest it should be lost, when receiving the food of holy admonition, we do not keep in our memory the words of life which would preserve in us true Christian justice. Further, consider that, whatsoever you are doing now, will in time pass away, and that every day you come nearer the moment of the strict account to be given to God. Are you convinced of this truth? Then why do you love such goods as you must leave, and why are you careless about that end which you will soon reach, and by which your fate in eternity will be decided? Do remember the words of your Redeemer: He that hath ears to hear let him hear. Not all of those who were present and heard these words, understood them; for our Lord wished them to be heard with the ears of the heart and mind, and not with the ears of the body only, so that His doctrine may be understood and accepted. Be careful, therefore, that the Divine word you receive be not taken from your heart and memory; be careful that this word fall not by the wayside, that is, watch, lest through your carelessness and distraction the devil take the word out of your hearts. Be careful that this precious seed fall not into your souls as upon rocks, that is, that for want of perseverance on your part, it cannot take root, and will, therefore, wither away. Many are seen receiving the words of salvation with joy; some also are noticed beginning to practise virtues, but they fall away in time of temptation. By their inconstancy and the fickleness of their mind they are like the dry and rocky ground, where the seed springs up and withers away, because it has no moisture. Such Christians perhaps hear a sermon against avarice, and at once they feel for that vice the aversion it deserves, and they praise those who despise the goods of this world. But as soon as an opportunity is at hand to gratify their own concupiscence and covetousness, the praises given to the contempt of riches disappear from their memory. When a sermon against impurity is preached, there are many who, at the terrible picture drawn of this shameful vice, not only resolve never to commit such heinous sins, but are also deeply ashamed of their past offences wherewith they are reproached by their own conscience. Yet, should a dangerous object be presented, they long for it with the same eagerness, as if they had not made the resolution to avoid such objects. They relapse into the same sins which they had previously committed and execrated. It sometimes happens that they shed tears over their debaucheries, and yet they return to them as soon as they cease to bewail them. Thus Balaam shed tears of contrition, seeing the camp of the Israelites, and wished to be in death like this people beloved by God. Let my soul die the death of the just, he said, and my last end be like to them (Num xxiii. 10). But these feelings of contrition were hardly expressed, when the desires of this impious man were again inflamed by avarice. At the sight of the presents offered to him, he gave the most abominable advice, so as to bring about the destruction of the very people to whom he had wished to be like. His sorrow and contrition were forgotten, for he had not entirely extinguished the flames of avarice burning in his soul.

III. Explaining His parable, our Redeemer says that the cares, the riches and the pleasures of this life choke the seed of the Divine word. Indeed, they choke it through the continual thoughts awakened in the mind, preventing this word of life from taking root. Then, since these useless thoughts shut the door of the heart to good desires, they also prevent the heart from receiving the inspirations of the Holy Ghost, Who preserves the life of the soul. Let us also note that, in the parable of the Lord, both the cares and the pleasures of this life are connected with the possession of riches, because the troubles about riches oppress the mind; then, by their superabundance, they deliver us up to sinful pleasures. For it is certain that rich people have many cares and troubles on account of their love for the things of this world; and it is also certain that they indulge in sensual pleasures, though it seems that these two statements do not agree. Yet, we may say, that if at one time they feel uneasy about their riches, at another they are mollified by the allurements of lust, to which they are attracted by their wealth.

IV. The good seed, falling upon good ground, yields fruit a hundredfold, yet brings forth that fruit in patience. For our good works would be of no avail to us, did we not patiently and generously bear the trials inflicted on us by our neighbour. The more we advance in virtue, the heavier become the crosses wherewith our Father in heaven allows us to be burdened, in order to try those who serve Him. How is this? Because the more a soul endeavours to be separated from the love of the world, the more it finds this same world contemptible and loathsome. Indeed, we see that the greater number of virtuous people doing good works are nevertheless overwhelmed with troubles and trials. The stronger they fight against sensual temptations, the more bitter are their sufferings. Yet it is just in this manner that, according to the Redeemer's words, the just bring forth fruit in patience. They humbly submit to the scourges wherewith they are smitten by God in this world, and afterwards rise to enjoy the eternal rest prepared for them in heaven. We may compare them with grapes, which, being trodden under feet, yield a delicious wine. They are also like the fruit of the olive-tree, which yields in the press a frothy liquid, that becomes the precious oil. Lastly, the just are like to the wheat, which, being thrashed on the floor and separated from the chaff, is preserved in the barn. Those, therefore, who wish their sins and passions to be destroyed, ought to submit willingly, for their spiritual progress, to the stripes wherewith Divine Providence chastises them. Then they will appear before the judgment-seat of God so much the purer, the more they were cleansed from the rust of sin by the fire of suffering.

V. My assertions will be proved by the example of Servulus, which I now place before you. He was begging at the door of the Church of St. Clement, and many among you have known this poor man as well as I did. Deprived of all earthly riches, yet rich in spiritual goods, he was for years afflicted with a terrible disease. From his youth to the very end of his life, he was on his sick-bed, without being able to rise or even to sit up. Palsy, which reduced him to this sad condition, had deprived him of the use of his limbs; he could neither raise his hand to his mouth, nor turn over on his bed. The mother and brother of this poor man waited on him, and gave to other poor people the remainder of the alms he received. Though he had never learnt how to read, he had a copy of the Holy Scripture bought, and pious people, whom he most hospitably received, read it out to him. Thus he acquired a thorough knowledge of the Holy Writ, according to his intellect, which, as I said, had not been cultivated. Amidst his sufferings, his principal object was to thank and praise God day and night with psalms and spiritual canticles. But when the hour came that heaven was to reward such heroic virtue, the acute pains of the palsy reached the heart, and, feeling himself at the point of death, he summoned his own people and others, and asked them to stand up and sing psalms until he died. Whilst he himself was singing with others, he suddenly stopped, and said in a strong and extraordinary voice: ‘Do you hear the songs of praise resounding in heaven?’ And while listening, to that melodious heavenly harmony, his innocent soul left his body. A delicious fragrance was noticed by the assistants, and recognised by them as a sign that his soul had been taken up to heaven. A monk belonging to a monastery, where I stayed for some time, witnessed these facts, the remembrance of which made him shed tears of joy. I was assured by him that, until the burial of the body, the same delicious odour was perceived by all those present. Beloved brethren, do think of the precious death of one who, whilst on earth, bore all the troubles and trials of life with patience and resignation. By his invincible courage, he became like to the good ground, which, according to our Redeemer, brings forth fruit in patience, and, after suffering the plough of tribulations, yields fruit a hundred-fold. Now, I ask you and entreat you to consider what answer we shall give at the terrible judgment? In spite of the graces wherewith we were enriched by Divine Providence; in spite of the hands given to us for useful work, we languish in idleness and neglect good works. Does not the example of that poor and sick man condemn our carelessness? He had in this life neither the goods of this world nor the use of his limbs, yet he strictly observed the Lord's precepts. What shall we say for our justification, when the example of the Apostles, surrounded by the innumerable nations converted by their labours and preaching, will be placed before us by the Judge; when we shall see so many praiseworthy martyrs who, making the sacrifice of their lives, bought heaven with their blood shed for Jesus Christ? What shall we answer, when blessed Servulus stands before us, he who constantly laboured and did good works, though his arms, paralyzed by disease, were of no use to him? Do think of all this, beloved brethren, in order to encourage yourselves to do good works; place before your eyes the beautiful models of virtue proposed to your imitation, and one day you will share with them the eternal beatitude in heaven.

QUINQUAGESIMA SUNDAY.

GOSPEL: Luke xviii. 31-43. At that time: Jesus took unto Him the twelve, and said to them: Behold, we go up to Jerusalem, and all things shall be accomplished which were written by the prophets concerning the Son of Man. For He shall be delivered to the Gentiles, and shall be mocked, and scourged, and spit upon; and after they have scourged Him, they will put Him to death, and the third day He shall rise again. And they understood none of these things. And this word was hid from them, and they understood not the things that were said. Now it came to pass, that when He drew nigh to Jericho, a certain blind man sat by the wayside begging. And when he heard the multitude passing by, he asked what this meant. And they told him that Jesus of Nazareth was passing by. And he cried out, saying: Jesus, Son of David, have mercy on me. And they that went before rebuked him, that he should hold his peace; but he cried out much the more: Son of David, have mercy on me. And Jesus, standing, commanded him to be brought unto Him. And when he was come near, He asked Him, saying: What wilt thou that I do to thee? But he said: Lord, that I may see. And Jesus said to him: Receive thy sight; thy faith hath made thee whole. And immediately he saw, and followed Him, glorifying God. And all the people when they saw it, gave praise to God..

SECOND HOMILY ON THE GOSPELS.

I. Foreseeing that the minds of His Apostles would be troubled by the thought of His suffering, our Redeemer told them long before, both of the pains of that suffering and of the glory of His rising again; to this end that, when they should see Him die, as He had prophesied, they might not doubt that He was likewise to rise again. But, since His disciples were as yet carnal, and could not understand His words, telling of this mystery, He wrought a miracle before them. A blind man received his sight before their eyes, that, if they could not comprehend heavenly things by words, they might be convinced of heavenly things by deeds. But we must so take the miracles of our Lord and Saviour, as believing, both that they were actually wrought, and that they have some mystic meaning for our instruction. For in His works power speaks one thing, and mystery again another. Behold, for instance: we know not historically who this blind man was, but we know of what he was mystically a figure. Mankind is blind, driven out of Paradise in the persons of our first parents, knowing not the light of heaven, and suffering the darkness of condemnation. Nevertheless, by the coming of his Redeemer man is enlightened, so that he sees by hope already the gladness of interior light, and walks by good works in the path of life.

II. Note also, beloved brethren, that, as Jesus drew nigh to Jericho, a blind man received his sight. Now, this name Jericho, being interpreted, signifies the city of the moon, and in Holy Scripture the moon is used as a figure of our imperfect flesh, of whose gradual corruption her monthly waning is a type. Therefore, as our Creator draws nigh to Jericho, a blind man receives his sight. Whilst God takes unto Himself our weak human nature, man receives again the light which he had lost. By God's suffering in the Manhood, man is raised up towards God. This blind man is also well described as sitting by the wayside begging; for the Truth says: I am the way (John xiv. 6). He that knows not Him Who is eternal light, is blind. But as soon as he believes in Jesus, the Redeemer, then he is sitting on the road leading to salvation. When man has faith, but is not continually asking to be enlightened by Divine light, he may, like the blind man, sit on the road, but he is not begging alms. But when by means of faith he begins to believe, when he recognises the blindness of his heart, and unceasingly asks to be delivered from it and to receive the light of truth, then he is like to the poor and unhappy blind man who, sitting by the wayside, was begging. Let him, therefore, who recognises his darkness, and the need of eternal light, cry out with all the desires of his heart and all the fervour of his soul: Jesus, Son of David, have mercy on me! This was the prayer of the blind man to the Redeemer, whilst those who went before rebuked him, and asked him to hold his peace.

III. And what do we understand by those who went before, but the crowd of bad desires and the restlessness of our passions disturbing our mind and troubling our heart, when we cry to our Saviour? We experience this only too often, that, when after a sinful life we wish to return to God; when we ask Him for strength to pray well, and to renounce the sins enslaving us, the image of our former sins is pictured in our memory, the light of our intellect is darkened, our courage is weakened, and we remain insensible to the voice of God's minister preaching the truth. Thus, those who went before our Lord rebuked the blind man of Jericho, that he should hold his peace; and we learn therefrom the important lesson that, before Jesus comes into our hearts, the awful image of our sensual pleasures rises in our memory, so as to prevent the effects of our prayers.

IV. However, the blind man, waiting to be cured, is our teacher. Though he was rebuked, he cried out much more: Son of David, have mercy on me!

Thus our prayer must be the more ardent and assiduous, the stronger the noise of wicked thoughts that rise in our mind and endeavour to prevent it. When the stormy crowd of temptations call back the remembrance of our sins, and assail us from all sides, trying to make us neglect, if possible, our prayers, then our powerful and repeated cry towards heaven will render all these phantoms useless and powerless. However, the things I say now, may be learned by you, through your own experience. For when we begin to tear our thoughts and desires away from the world, and to turn them to God; when we give up our mind to prayer, then the worldly thoughts and sinful pleasures of our former life return to attack and distract us. And this assault of our former thoughts is so strong that, in spite of good desires and even tears of repentance, it is only by the greatest care and watchfulness that we succeed in keeping our hearts in safety.

V. Meanwhile, we may be sure that, if we persevere in our prayers, Jesus will remain with us, as He stayed for some time with the blind man. And Jesus, standing, commanded him to be brought unto Him. And the words of the Gospel tell us, not without a special motive, that Jesus was first passing by, then was standing. We learn from this that, when powerless phantoms endeavour to disturb us in our prayers, Jesus seems to be passing by; but that when, in spite of their attacks, we persevere in these prayers, Jesus remains standing by us, and delivers us from blindness. For when God takes His abode in our heart, He dispels darkness by His Divine light.

VI. There is yet another lesson taught by our Lord in that miraculous cure of the blind man, that is, the manifestation both of the marks of His Divinity and of the signs of His humanity. For when the Man-God heard the blind man cry out to Him, He did not cure him until standing still, showing us that He was man, because He passed by, and that He was also God, because He remained standing. Was not our Redeemer, as man, to be born among us, to increase in years, to die, to rise from the dead, and to move about from one place to another? But, being at the same time God, He gives us to understand that He is immovable, and that all changes noticed in Him, came from His humanity; whilst, as God, He is always the same, without any change, present everywhere, without shifting His dwellings. Again, our Redeemer heard the voice of the blind man whilst passing by, and granted him light whilst standing still, thus teaching us that His humanity called His attention and love to the blindness of which we suffered, and His Divine power enlightened us with the light of His grace.

VII. For our further instruction we hear Jesus, as soon as He saw the blind man, say to him: What wilt thou that I do to thee? Our Saviour, having the power to restore the sight to the blind man, was certainly not ignorant of that which he was going to ask. But He wished to teach us that it was His will we should ask Him, though He knows our desires and is willing to grant them. He, therefore, very often exhorts us to pray to Him, though He assures us that His Father in heaven knows all our needs before we ask. He wishes to encourage us to trust in Him, and to awaken in our hearts real love for prayer. We hear the blind man at once uttering his request, and asking to receive the light. He was asking neither for gold nor for riches of any kind, but for light, since, without this gift, all other goods could not satisfy him. Let us, then, beloved brethren, imitate this man in his prayer, for he received therewith the health both of soul and body. Let us beseech the Lord not for the riches of this world, nor for the perishable blessings of honour and fame, but for the true lights and not for the limited light, which for a moment only interrupts the long night, and is common to us with the unreasonable animals. Let us ask for the uncreated light to be seen in the company of the elect, that light having no beginning and being eternal in its duration. Faith will lead us to this light, according to the words of Jesus to the blind man: Receive thy sight; thy faith hath made thee whole. Should the sensual man object and say that this light, being invisible, cannot be reached, that nobody can be sure of a thing which cannot be seen, he will soon be convinced of his error, when told that his interior feelings do not arise from his body, but from his thinking soul. Though nobody can see his s6ul, yet there cannot be any doubt about our having an invisible soul, ruling our visible body. For, when this invisible soul is separated from our visible body, the latter is immediately destroyed, being deprived of the essence of its existence. Therefore, since it is certain that we live by means of this invisible being, namely, the soul, not perceived by our senses, why should we doubt the Truth teaching us that there will be another life which we cannot see now?

VIII. When we perceive the good result of the blind man's prayer, we recognise from the words of the Gospel why this man at once saw the light and followed our Redeemer. He that recognises what is good and at the same time endeavours to do it, imitates the blind man who, seeing Jesus, followed Him. Whereas he who sees Jesus and does not follow Him, acknowledges what is good, but does not consider it his duty to do it. Beloved brethren, when we are aware of the blindness in which we are weeping in this vale of tears; when, by the help of faith telling us of the mystery of Redemption, we sit on the road leading to life; when daily we ask the Author of salvation to enlighten us; when, lastly, we enjoy that heavenly light, taking us out of the darkness in which we were wandering, then nothing remains to us but to follow by our good works the Saviour, Whom we see by the light of faith. Let us carefully examine the place He passes through, then follow His steps by imitating His example; for it is by imitation that we follow Him, as He Himself teaches, saying to one of His disciples: Follow Me, and let the dead bury the dead (Matt viii. 22). And to show that the words follow Me mean imitate Me, our Lord says in another place of the Gospels: If any man minister to Me, let him follow Me (John xii. 26). To be worthy of Him, we must follow His steps and examine the way in which He walked. And first we see that He, the Creator of all heavenly and reasonable beings, deigned to descend into the womb of a virgin, there to assume the human nature, which He Himself had created out of nothing. We see that He did not choose to be born of rich parents, when taking our human nature, but chose poor parents, who were not even able to offer for Him in the temple a lamb, but only a pair of turtle-doves or two young pigeons.

Thus our Redeemer did not seek happiness in this world; He endured insults, scorn, and blasphemies; He allowed Himself to be spit upon, to be buffeted, scourged, crowned with thorns, and nailed to a cross. He would give us to understand that the pleasures we derived from corporeal things, robbed us of the eternal happiness, of which we can again take possession only by drinking the bitter chalice of suffering. Yet, since God suffered so much for man, what suffering will the sinful man be ready to endure? When after all this a Christian, believing in Jesus Christ, is still ruled and led by avarice or ambition; when he is still devoured by the fire of envy or carnal pleasures; when he is eagerly rushing after the happiness of this world, then we can truly say that, instead of following Jesus, he is despising Him, because he is walking on quite a different road, and not on the road taken by the Son of God during His mortal life of bitter suffering. Let us, therefore, recall to our mind our own wickedness; let us remember that the eternal Judge will punish our sins most severely; then, let us endeavour to destroy them by sorrowful repentance. Now, let us do severe penance, and thus escape in eternity the terrible wrath of an offended God. The tears shed in this life will take us to the joys of heaven, for our Lord said: Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted (Matt v. 5); whereas the pleasures of this world will, according to the same Saviour, bring us to the eternal dwelling of tears and sorrow. Woe to you that now laugh, for you shall mourn and weep (Luke vi. 25). If we wish to obtain the highest felicity, let us now walk in the path of penance, and our penitential life will not only gain for us great merits with God, but will be to His greater glory; for, according to the words of the Gospel, others will be encouraged by our good example: And all the people, when they saw it, gave praise to God.

FIRST SUNDAY IN LENT.

GOSPEL: Matt iv. 1-11. At that time: Jesus was led by the Spirit into the desert, to be tempted by the devil. And when He had fasted forty days and forty nights, He was afterwards hungry. And the tempter coming, said to Him: If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread. Who answered and said: It is written, ‘Not by bread alone doth man live, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.’ Then the devil took Him into the holy city, and set Him upon a pinnacle of the temple, and said to Him: If Thou be the Son of God, cast Thyself down; for it is written: He hath given His angels charge over Thee, and in their hands shall they bear Thee up, lest perhaps Thou dash Thy foot against a stone. Jesus said to Him: ‘It is written, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God.’ Again the devil took Him up into a very high mountain, and showed Him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them, and said to Him: All these will I give Thee, if Thou wilt fall down and adore me. Then Jesus said to him: ‘Begone, Satan; for it is written, The Lord thy God shalt thou adore, and Him only shalt thou serve.’ Then the devil left Him, and, behold, angels came and ministered unto Him.

HOMILY BY POPE ST. GREGORY, PREACHED IN THE CHURCH OF ST. JOHN LATERAN.

SIXTEENTH HOMILY ON THE GOSPELS.

I. It is often asked by some people what spirit it was by which Jesus was led into the wilderness, on account of the words a little further on: Then the devil took Him into the holy city; and again: The devil took Him up into a very high mountain. But in truth, and without any further searching, we may believe it was the Holy Ghost who led Him up into the wilderness. His own Spirit led Him where the evil spirit found Him to tempt Him. However, when it is said that He, God and Man, was taken up by the devil, either into a very high mountain or into the holy city, the mind shrinks from believing, and the ears of man tingle when hearing it. Yet we know that these things are not incredible, when we consider certain other things concerning Him. Indeed, the devil is the head of all the wicked, and every wicked man is a member of that body, of which the devil is the head. Was not Pilate a limb of Satan? Were not the Jews who persecuted, and the soldiers who crucified Christ, likewise limbs of Satan? Is it then strange that He should allow Himself to be led up into a mountain by the head, Who allowed Himself to be crucified by the members? Therefore it is not unworthy of our Redeemer, Who came to be slain, that He should be willing to be tempted. It was meet that He should thus overcome our temptations by His own, even as He came to overcome our death, by His own. We ought to know that temptation works under three forms. There is first the suggestion, then the delectation, or pleasure, and, lastly, the consent. When we are tempted, it often happens that we fall into delectation, and even into consent, because in the sinful flesh of which we are begotten, we carry in ourselves matter to favour the attack. But God, when He took flesh in the womb of the Virgin, and came into the world without sin, did so without having in Himself anything of this lusting of the flesh against the spirit. It was possible, therefore, for Him to be tempted in the first stage, namely, suggestion; but there was nothing in His mind, in which delectation could fix its teeth. Thus all the temptation He endured from the devil was without, and none within Him.

II. If, now, we consider the order of the temptations attacking the Redeemer of the world, we see with what power our Saviour delivered us from the snares prepared for us by the enemy of our salvation. For, when the old Serpent rose against the first man, the father of the human race, he attacked him with three kinds of temptations, namely, intemperance, vain-glory and avarice. And being thus tempted, he was overcome by the devil, for he gave his consent. When Satan showed to man the forbidden fruit, and persuaded him to eat of it, he attacked him with the weapon of intemperance; then he tempted him with vain-glory, saying that he would be like to God; lastly, avarice was his weapon, since he assured him that he would possess the knowledge of good and evil. For avarice consists not only in the inordinate love of riches, but also in the desire of exaltation; and we are in reality avaricious, when in an ambitious manner we desire to obtain dignities to which we cannot lay claim. This is also the teaching of St. Paul, who, speaking of Jesus Christ, says: Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal to God; but emptied Himself taking the form of a servant (Phil ii. 6, 7). The devil, therefore, attacked our first parent with the arrows of avarice, for he awakened in him the desire of exalting himself.

III. But this tempter, the old dragon, who by his artifice had overcome the first man, was in his turn overcome by another Man, with the very same weapons he had used in former times. For our Redeemer, the Man-God, was assailed by the devil in the same manner as our first parent; first, with the sensual appetite, since he said to Him: If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread. Then he tempted Him with vain-glory, asking Him to cast Himself down from a pinnacle of the temple, and so to show that He was the Son of God, saving His life by a miracle. Lastly, he tempted Him with avarice, when he showed Him all the kingdoms of the world, and promised to give them to Him, if falling down He would adore him. But our Saviour overcame this enemy by the same means that He had employed to tempt the father of the human race. And after this defeat he was enchained by our Lord, and forced by Him to go out of our heart by the same door by which he had entered to enslave us. Yet, beloved brethren, there is another lesson contained in this temptation of our Lord. He could cast His tempter into the eternal abyss by one single word, He being the Eternal Word. But He only answered with the commandments contained in Holy Scripture, so as to give us an example of His patience and moderation, instead of a brilliant sign of His almighty power. By this He teaches us that, when our sufferings are caused by the wicked, we should make good use of such persecutions, and be instructed by them, rather than take revenge. But are we not ashamed, when we consider, on one side God's patience, and on the other our own impatience, when suffering injustice? It often happens, when we are unjustly treated or despised, that anger fills our heart at once. We try to take revenge, as far as lies in our power, and even threaten with a revenge of which we are powerless. Our Lord overcame the temptations of the devil through His patience and meek words. He bore an enemy who deserved the arrows of His justice, and He is thus the more worthy of our admiration and praise, since He was victorious over that enemy by His moderation rather than by the stripes of His anger.

IV. Take notice of the fact that, as soon as the devil left Jesus, Angels came and ministered unto Him, Thereby we are given to understand that there are two natures in Jesus Christ. By the temptation of the devil we know that He was true Man, whilst the coming of the Angels and their ministering to Him, teach us that He is also true God. Let us, then, recognise our own nature in our Saviour, for the devil would not have dared to tempt Him, had he not perceived in Him our humanity. At the same time we bring Him our adorations, for the Angels would not have considered it their duty to minister unto Him, were He not as God exalted over them and all creatures.

V. This Gospel, calling to our mind the forty days and forty nights of fasting spent by our Lord in the desert, entirely agrees with the fast we observe during this holy season. But why was this number of forty days' fasting sanctified? We read in the history of the Israelites that Moses prepared himself for the reception of the Law by fasting forty days; that Elias observed the same fast; that Jesus, before beginning His public life, abstained from food for forty days and forty nights; and lastly, that we also, as far as lies in us, observe this abstinence and fasting during the time of Lent. Though several motives may be set forth to explain this law of the Church, we can say in all truth that, by observing this commandment, we offer to God the tenth part of the year granted to us for satisfying our corporeal necessities. After living solely for ourselves during the course of the year, we now in Lent live for God, offering Him by our abstinence a part of that year. Now, after deducting from the six weeks of Lent the Sundays — on which we do not fast, — we find that there remain thirty-six days, so to speak, the tenth part of the year that we offer to God. The Lord God, beloved brethren, commands you in the Old Law to offer to Him the tithe (tenth part) of your possessions; it is, therefore, just that you should give Him the tithe of your days. For this reason it is everybody's duty to mortify his body, according to his strength, to crucify his desires and subdue his sinful passions, that he may be, as St. Paul says, a living sacrifice (Rom xii. 1). For we are a living sacrifice when, as long as we live, we mortify the desires of the flesh. Just as the lust of the flesh led us to commit sin, true penance must bring us back to God. Consider, again, that since by the eating of the forbidden fruit we were shut out of heaven, so we must endeavour to re-enter these gates by that temperance and abstinence which will atone for all the offences against God committed by our intemperance.

VI. Yet, let us not think that our fasting will be sufficient to appease God, if it is not accompanied by the merits of almsgiving; for He said to us: Is not this rather the fast that I have chosen? Loose the bonds of wickedness, undo the bundles that oppress, let them that are broken go free, and break asunder every burden. Deal thy bread to the hungry, and bring the needy and harbourless into thy house; when thou shalt see one naked, cover him, and despise not thy own flesh (Isa lviii. 6, 7), This testimony teaches us that the fasting most pleasing to God is the one accompanied by alms offered by our hands, that is, by the love for our neighbour, perfected through works of mercy. Of whatsoever you deprive yourselves, give it to your poor neighbour, to relieve him; and these goods, of which you deprive yourselves by mortifying your appetite, will rejoice your neighbour who is in need. Hear the Lord's complaint: When you fasted and mourned, did you keep a fast unto Me? And when you did eat and drink, did you not eat for yourselves, and drink for yourselves? (Zach vii. 5, 6). Now, we eat for ourselves when the needy has no share in the food we are taking, which, being a gift of God, has been created for all men. And he keeps a fast for himself, who, depriving himself for a time of the food he used to take, preserves it to satisfy his desires later on, instead of giving it to the poor. The prophet Joel exhorts us to sanctify a fast (Joel i. 14), teaching us, if we wish to make our abstinence worthy of God the Almighty, to unite the mortification of our flesh with the practice of other virtues; to refrain from anger and banish hatred from our heart. In vain do we chastise our body, if the mind is not subdued by our victory over sinful passions. God Himself declares this through His prophet: Behold, in the day of your fast your own will is found, and you exact of all your debtors. Behold, you fast for debates and strife, and strike with the fist wickedly (Isa lviii. 3, 4). No injustice is committed when you ask your debtors to pay what they owe you. Yet you easily understand that he, who practises penance, will even abstain from exacting that which is owed to him in justice. When he mortifies himself in this manner and feels real sorrow for his sins, then God will be ready to forgive the debts due to His justice, seeing that for His sake the sinner forgives to others what they owe him in justice.

FIFTH SUNDAY IN LENT, OR PASSION

SUNDAY.

GOSPEL: John viii. 46-59. At that time: Jesus said to the multitude of the Jews: Which of you shall convince Me of sin? If I say the truth to you, why do you not believe Me? He that is of God heareth the words of God. Therefore you hear them not, because you are not of God. The Jews therefore answered and said to Him: Do not we say well that Thou art a Samaritan, and hast a devil? Jesus answered: I have not a devil; but I honour My Father, and you have dishonoured Me. But I seek not Mine own glory; there is One that seeketh and judgeth. Amen, amen, I say to you: If any man keep My word, he shall not see death for ever. The Jews therefore said: Now we know that Thou hast a devil. Abraham is dead, and the prophets; and Thou sayest: If any man keep My word, he shall not taste death for ever. Art Thou greater than our father Abraham, who is dead? And the prophets are dead? Whom dost Thou make Thyself? Jesus answered: If I glorify Myself, My glory is nothing. It is My Father that glorifieth Me, of Whom you say that He is your God; and you have not known Him, but I know Him. And if I shall say that I know Him not, I shall be like to you, a liar. But I do know Him, and do keep His word. Abraham, your father, rejoiced that he might see My day. He saw it and was glad. The Jews therefore said to Him: Thou art not yet fifty years old, and Thou hast seen Abraham? Jesus said to them: Amen, amen, I say to you, before Abraham was made, I AM. They took up stones, therefore, to cast at Him. But Jesus hid Himself, and went out of the temple.

HOMILY BY POPE ST. GREGORY, PREACHED IN THE CHURCH OF ST. PETER ON PASSION SUNDAY.

EIGHTEENTH HOMILY ON THE GOSPELS.

I. Let us consider here, beloved brethren, the great goodness and meekness of the Son of God. He came into this world to take away sins, and He says to the Jews; Which of you shall convince Me of sin? He was able, through the power of His Divinity, to justify sinners, and was contented to show by argument that He was not Himself a sinner. But the words He added, He that is of God, heareth the words of God, must fill us with fear and fright; for you hear them not, because you are not of God, He at once added. If, then, whosoever is of God hears God's words, and whosoever is not of God cannot hear Him, let everyone ask himself, whether in the ear of his heart he hears God's words, and understands whose words they are. The Truth commands us to be longing for a home in heaven, to bridle the lusts of the flesh, to turn away from the glory of the world, not to seek any man's goods and to give away our own. Let, therefore, every one of you think within himself, if this voice of God be heard in the ear of his heart, and if he already know that he is of God. For there are some, who do not deign to hear the commandments of God, not even with their bodily ears. And there are some who do not mind hearing them with their bodily ears, but whose heart is far from them. And there are some, who hear the words of God with joy, and even are thereby moved to tears, but who turn again to iniquity as soon as the fit of weeping is past. Those who despise to do the words of God, do not hear them. Therefore, beloved brethren, carefully recall to your mind your own life; then with fear and trembling ponder on those awful words spoken by the mouth of the Eternal Truth: Therefore you hear them not, because you are not of God. And what the Lord here speaks about the reprobate, they themselves make the same thing concerning them manifest by their evil deeds. These words follow immediately: The Jews therefore answered and said to Him: Do not we say well that Thou art a Samaritan, and hast a devil?

II. Now let us hear what the Lord answered to such an insult. I have not a devil, but I honour My Father, and you have dishonoured Me. The Lord said, I have not a devil; but He did not say, I am not a Samaritan, for in one sense He was a Samaritan, because the word Samaritan in the Hebrew language signifies ‘a watcher.’ And the Lord is that Watcher of Whom the Psalmist says:

Unless the Lord keep the city, he watcheth in vain that keepeth it (Ps cxxviii. 2). He also is the Watchman to Whom Isaias says: Watchman, what of the night? Watchman, what of the night? (Isa xxi. 11.) Therefore the Lord said, I have not a devil, but not, I am not a Samaritan. Of the two things brought against Him He denied one, but by His silence admitted the other. Indeed, our Saviour came into this world to watch over the whole human race, therefore He said nothing when accused of being a Samaritan, but defended Himself against and denied the unjust and wicked imputation of having a devil. By the extraordinary meekness shown by our. Lord towards His enemies He puts to shame our pride and haughtiness; for, when we receive the slightest injustice, we often accuse our opponents of greater crimes than those imputed to us. We do to them whatever injury we are able to, and even threaten them with punishments that are not in our power. Now consider the example of patience given by our Lord: the blackest calumnies are invented against Him and He is not angry; when justifying Himself He never makes use of an offensive word. In truth He could have answered the Jews, who in such improper manner calumniated Him, that they were themselves possessed by the devil, since they could not blaspheme God without being animated by the evil spirit. Yet He, Who is Truth itself, did not on this occasion make use of the truth to defend Himself. His words were spoken solely for giving testimony to the truth, and not for revenging Himself on His enemies. By this action of the Son of God we are taught that, when we are attacked by our brethren with false accusations, we are not to publish the faults they are themselves guilty of, so that passion should not give to our hands weapons wherewith to satisfy our anger, instead of punishing them in a lawful manner. And since it is well known that those, who most zealously exert themselves to work for the glory and intentions of God, are very often calumniated by the wicked and freethinkers, our Lord wished to give us in His own person an example of patience, saying to the Jews, by whom He was unjustly accused: I honour My Father, but you have dishonoured Me. And in order perfectly to instruct us concerning the dispositions of our mind when we suffer for justice' sake He added: I seek not Mine own glory. There is One that seeketh and judgeth. Now the Gospel tells us that the Father hath given all judgment to the Son (John v. 22); therefore, when the Son, overwhelmed with insults and accusations, and without vindicating His own honour, leaves the duty of revenge to His Father, He wishes us to understand that we are calmly to bear any detractions or calumnies coming from our brethren. For we see that He, Who received from His Father the power to judge, did not make use of it then, to administer justice. However, should, in spite of our moderation, the malice of the wicked against us increase from day to day, let us not withhold from them the teachings of the Divine doctrine. On the contrary, let us persevere in our instructing them according to our Lord's example, Who, in spite of the insulting reproaches of His enemies, saying that He had a devil, continued even with greater zeal His kind and patient teaching. For immediately after He added: Amen, amen, I say to you: If any man keep My word, he shall not see death for ever. As it is certain that the just become more perfect by the injuries done to them, so it is also true that the wicked grow worse through the kindness shown to them. We see, that after the kind exhortations and admonitions addressed to them by Jesus, the Jews were still more angry, and had the wickedness to say to His face: Now we know that Thou hast a devil. They were spiritually blind, and could not perceive the deadly state in which they were through their sins. But since they considered temporal death as the greatest of all evils, they said to our Saviour: Abraham is dead, and the prophets, and Thou sayest: If any man keep My word, he shall not taste death for ever. By their words these Jews seem to have believed in the Scriptures, since they recognised Abraham and the prophets, and honoured their memory; yet the honour given to His servants by those who do not recognise God is neither real nor true.

III. Though our Lord saw that the Jews tried their utmost to oppose His doctrine, He never ceased to preach, the truth, and continued His teaching, for He said to them: Abraham your father rejoiced that he might see My day; he saw it and was glad. That day of the Lord, which Abraham really saw, was that on which he received into his house three Angels under the appearance of travellers. For these three Angels, appearing under a human form, represented to the faith of Abraham the adorable mystery of the Blessed Trinity which he recognised. He addressed the Three present before him, as if speaking only to one, so as to show that in the three Persons of the Holy Trinity, whom he adored, there was the Unity of the Divine Nature. As to those who keep their souls bowed down to the earth, it is in vain they hear the doctrine of heaven; their eyes never look upwards to gaze at it. Thus we see that the Jews, with their carnal thoughts, had in view only the years of our Saviour's mortal life, and said to Him: Thou art not yet fifty years old, and Thou hast seen Abraham? Thereon our Lord, to raise them up to the comprehension of His Divinity, and to shut the eyes of their bodies, wherewith alone they looked at Him, answered: Amen, amen, I say to you, before Abraham was made, I AM. You will notice that our Lord did not say, I was before Abraham, but before Abraham was made, I AM, in order to show by this expression that His Divine Nature, which is eternal, knows neither the past nor the future, but is ALWAYS PRESENT. For this reason God the Almighty, speaking to Moses, said: I AM WHO AM; then added: Then shalt thou say to the children of Israel: He who is, hath sent Me to you (Exod iii. 14). As man Jesus Christ was by His birth to come either before or after the time of Abraham. But, being the Eternal Truth, and not subject to any time, He could have neither beginning nor end. Yet, as the unbelieving Jews were not able to understand these eternal truths, announced to them by the Redeemer, They took up stones to cast at Him, and tried to kill Him Whom they were unable to understand.

IV. To avoid the fury of the Jews, who were on the point of stoning Him, Jesus, as the Gospel says, hid Himself and went out of the temple. What ought to be to you, beloved brethren, a motive of astonishment, is the fact that our Saviour is seen escaping the persecution of His enemies, whose hands He could have bound by His mere will, and whose lives He could have taken, had He made use of His almighty power. Yet, this infinitely good God, Who had come into this world to suffer and to die, would not show the severity of a judge. This was again proved at the time of His Passion, when He said to the soldiers, who had come with Judas to apprehend Him:

I am He (John xviii. 5), and they went backwards and fell to the ground. Yet, He allowed them to take hold of His Sacred Person, and He willingly submitted to all the tortures they inflicted on Him. Now, if we ask why our Lord hid Himself, since, without escaping from the presence of His enemies, He could have rendered all their efforts powerless, we shall see that this Redeemer of the world wished to teach us an important lesson both by His example and His words. His action tells us that even when we are able to scorn the attacks of our enemies, and the injuries they try to inflict on us, we are, after His example, to avoid by timely retirement, the wrath of their excited passions. St. Paul, in his Epistle to the Romans (ch xii.) repeats the same exhortation. Let us therefore carefully avoid the fury of our brethren whom we see angry with us; let us not rise against those by whom we are calumniated, nor render evil for evil; but let us be convinced by the example given by God Himself, that it is more honourable to overcome all insults and persecutions by flight and silence, than by taking revenge.

V. Yet the spirit of pride whispers into our ears: Silence brings shame, when we are attacked and do not resist. When those, witnessing the affronts put upon us, notice that we are silent, they will not be convinced of our patience, but will imagine that in the depth of our conscience we confess ourselves guilty of the sins imputed to us. Thus speaks pride. However, such thoughts arising in our mind, and trying to stifle the feelings of moderation inspired by patience, come from our human opinion, and our inclination to think more of the false honour of the world and people's opinions, than of the esteem and approval of God, Who from the heights of heaven witnesses our doings. This is not the way of following Jesus, for He says: 'I seek not Mine own glory; there is One that seeketh and judgeth.

The words of the Evangelist, Jesus hid Himself and went out of the temple, may have yet another meaning, namely, that our Saviour was forsaking the Jews, who despised the word of salvation announced to them, and of which they made no other use than to become more wicked, and even to wish to stone Him. He hid the truth before them, since by their pride and their contempt for it, they had become unworthy of His heavenly doctrine. For proud and vain souls, not knowing the value of humility, are abandoned by the Truth. Yet, are there not many Christians, perhaps among us, who, detesting the obduracy of the Jews who were deaf to the Lord's teaching, are just as guilty by refusing to put into practice this same doctrine of Jesus? Many hear what our Redeemer commands us to practise; they recognise the Divine power in His miracles, but they refuse to change their lives and thus to be converted. Jesus calls us, and we do not return to Him; He bears with us in our sinful life, and we abuse His patience. Oh, my beloved brethren! let us not hesitate to renounce our sinful ways whilst there is yet time; let us take care lest God be tired of waiting for us, and, after despising His infinite mercy, we fall into the hands of His infinite justice.

EASTER SUNDAY.

GOSPEL: Mark xvi. 1-7. At that time: Mary Magdalen and Mary, the mother of James, and Salome brought sweet spices, that coming, they might anoint Jesus. And very early in the morning, the first day of the week, they come to the sepulchre, the sun being now risen. And they said one to another: Who shall roll us back the stone from the door of the sepulchre? And looking, they saw the stone rolled back. For it was very great. And entering into the sepulchre, they saw a young man sitting on the right side, clothed with a white robe; and they were astonished. Who saith to them: Be not affrighted; you seek Jesus of Nazareth, Who was crucified; He is risen, He is not here; behold the place where they laid Him. But go, tell His disciples and Peter that He goeth before you into Galilee; there you shall see Him, as He told you.

HOMILY BY POPE ST. GREGORY, PREACHED IN THE CHURCH OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY ON EASTER SUNDAY.

TWENTY-FIRST HOMILY ON THE GOSPELS.

I. You have heard, beloved brethren, the deed of the holy women who followed our Lord, how they brought sweet spices to His sepulchre, and, having loved Him while He was still alive, they still followed Him with careful tenderness now that He was dead. But, what these holy women did, points to something which is to be done in the holy Church. And it behoves us well to give ear to what they did, that we may afterwards consider with ourselves what we must do after their example. We also, believing in Him Who is dead, we come to His sepulchre bearing sweet spices, if we seek Him with the savour of pious living and the fragrant odour of good works. These women, when they brought spices, saw a vision of angels, and those souls who are moved by the pious desire to seek the Lord with the good odour of holy lives, will see the countrymen of our Fatherland that is above.

II. If we inquire about the mystery contained in the fact of the Angel who, appearing to the holy women, sat on the fight side, we shall find that by the left side is meant the life which now is, and life everlasting by the right side. For in the Book of the Canticles it is said of the Bridegroom: His left hand is under my head, and His right hand shall embrace me (Cant ii. 6). Since, therefore, our Redeemer had passed from the corruption of this life, the Angel, who told that His eternal life was come, sat becomingly on the right side. They saw him clothed with a white robe, for he announced the joy of this our great solemnity, and the shining whiteness of his raiment told of the brightness of this our holy festival. Of ours, did I say? or of his? But, if we speak the truth, we must acknowledge that it is both his and ours. The Resurrection of our Lord is a festival of gladness for us, since we now know that we shall not die for ever; and for the angels also it is a festival of joy, for they now know that we are called to complete their number in heaven.

III. Therefore, on this glad festival, which is both his and ours, the Angel appeared in a white robe. For as the Lord, rising again from the dead, leads us to the eternal dwellings above, He repairs the breaches or gaps of the heavenly Fatherland. But what is the meaning of these words spoken by the Angel to the women who had come to the sepulchre: Be not affrighted? Is it not as though he had said openly: Let them fear who love not the coming of the heavenly citizens; let them be affrighted who are so burdened by fleshly lusts, that they despair ever to be joined to their company. But as to you, why do ye fear, since seeing us you only see your fellow-citizens? Thus also St. Matthew, describing the appearance of the Angel, says: His countenance was as lightning, and his raiment as snow (Matt, xxviii. 3). The lightning speaks of fear and terror, 'the snow of the brilliant whiteness of rejoicing. Since God the Almighty shows Himself terrible to sinners, but at the same time well pleased with good and pious souls, it was but right that the Angel, who had been sent by Him to give testimony to His Resurrection, should inspire some with fear and terror by the lightning, and others with confidence and hope by His garment. God Himself wished to convey to us this meaning, for He guided the Israelites through the desert by a pillar of fire in the night and a cloud during the day (Exod xiii.). For the life of the just may be compared to daylight, and that of the sinner to a dark night. Thus the pillar of fire is to inspire sinners with fear, whilst the just, wandering in the light of the day, see a cloud which fills them with hope and security. St. Paul, writing to converted sinners, says: You were heretofore darkness, but now light in the Lord (Eph v. 8). Lastly, all this will be accomplished by the Lord on the day of His wrath, when His loving countenance will shine on the just, while the terror of His justice will crush the wicked.

IV. You seek Jesus of Nazareth, Who was crucified? said the Angel, to prevent any mistake about Him, since there were several others bearing the same name of Jesus. Yet, this holy Name belongs in reality only to the Redeemer of the world, Who was crucified. As the Angel said: He is risen, He is not here. He is no longer here in His humanity, though His Divinity is present everywhere. But go, the Angel continued, tell His disciples and Peter that He goeth before you into Galilee. You will perhaps ask why the Angel, after speaking of the disciples, specially mentioned Peter. But when we consider that Peter, after the great misfortune of denying his Master, would probably not have dared to accompany the other disciples to seek and meet Jesus, you will easily understand why he was specially invited and his name mentioned — that is, that he should have no motive to doubt that his faithlessness was forgiven him. Acknowledge the infinite goodness of God! He had permitted that disciple, chosen by Him to be the visible head of His Church, to be so frightened by the words of a maidservant, as to deny his Redeemer, so that the remembrance of his own weakness and sin might teach him patience and forbearance with other people's misery, and with the failings of the great flock that was to be entrusted to him.

V. Not without a special reason did our Lord send word to His disciples that He expected them in Galilee, where they would find Him. The word 'Galilee' means 'change and this was entirely conformable with the state of our Saviour, for He had passed from suffering to the glory of the resurrection, from death to life, from a state of corruption to incorruptibility. He showed Himself in Galilee, glorious and risen from the dead, to manifest Himself to them by the place He had chosen, and to give us to understand that one day we shall have the joy and happiness of seeing Him in the glory of His resurrection, if now we pass from the state of sin to the heights of Christian virtues. Notice also that our Redeemer had Himself announced to the disciples near the place of His sepulchre, yet appeared to them only after changing His dwelling-place, because, according to His example, the mortification of the flesh must precede in this life if we wish for the beatific contemplation in the next. These few words, beloved brethren, I wished to address to you on the Gospel of this great festival; yet, just on account of this great day, I will add a few more remarks.

VI. It is certain that there are two kinds of life: the one we now lead in this world, the other of which we have no knowledge. The life we now know is mortal, the other is immortal; by the one we are subject to corruption, by the other we obtain incorruptibility. Death will be the end of the first, and our resurrection will be the beginning of the second. Jesus Christ, Who came as the Mediator between God and man, lived the one and the other life; for He suffered the death of the first, and He rose from the dead to give us some knowledge of the second. Had He only promised that one day we shall rise again, without giving us in His own flesh an example of that resurrection, no one perhaps would have referred to His testimony. But by taking our human nature, and becoming like ourselves, He willingly gave up His body to death; then, by His infinite power, He rose again, and gave us in His own Person a pledge of the resurrection He had promised. Should anyone say that it was easy for God to rise from the dead, since He could not be overcome by death, he will consider that, to enlighten our ignorance and strengthen our faith in a future resurrection, our Lord wished us to be convinced not by the example of His resurrection only. For notice, though He was the only one who died at that moment, yet Holy Scripture tells us (Matt, xxvii.), that many bodies of the saints, that had slept, arose at that time, thus destroying any doubts still remaining in the minds of unbelievers. Therefore, should anybody, seeing that a Man-God rose from the dead, still doubt about his own resurrection, he being only a mere man, he must remember that Providence willed people of the same nature as ours to rise with Jesus Christ. Being members of the Redeemer, we have no doubt but that what is seen in the Head will be fulfilled in the members; that what happened to those who, as the first members of the Saviour, rose from the dead, will also happen to us though the last.

VII. The Jews blasphemed the crucified Redeemer, and said: If He be the King of Israeli let Him now come down from the cross, and we will believe in Him (Matt, xxvii. 42). Had Jesus yielded to these insults and mockery, He would not have given us the beautiful example of His astonishing patience. However, He waited; He accepted and bore insults and blasphemies; He persevered in that wonderful patience, and put off the time for giving a sign of His almighty power, that would then have caused a momentary amazement only, in order to show a greater miracle, namely, the glory of His resurrection. It was a more glorious triumph to leave the sepulchre, full of renewed life, than to come down from the cross. By His resurrection He triumphed over death, whilst by descending from the cross He would only have saved His life. Meanwhile, the Jews were jubilant, for, in spite of their insults, our Lord was still hanging on the cross; and they presumed that, after His death, His name would be forgotten for ever. Yet, out of the bosom of the earth, His Name was spread abroad all over the world, and with such glory that this perfidious, nation, so eager to punish Him with an ignominious death, was quite confounded, when seeing that the torments inflicted on Him had become the cause of His triumph. It was thought of Samson by the Philistines that, being enclosed within the walls of the city of Gaza, and surrounded by guards, he would soon be overcome and bound with the chains they had prepared; but during the night He took the doors of the gate, and, laying them on His shoulders, carried them up to the top of the hill (Judg xvi. 2, 3). Thus the all-powerful Saviour, the strong God typified by Samson, burst the bonds of the sepulchre, surrounded by the Jews with guards, whilst they fancied that the Author of life, Whom they had killed and enclosed in the grave, would be for ever buried therein. And this all-powerful God, more terrible after His death than Samson in his life, came out, after descending into Limbo, and, triumphing over His enemies, ascended into heaven. Let us abide by this glorious resurrection, which, announced by the Prophets, was so happily accomplished. Let us desire to die, that we may be partakers of that resurrection. And since we heard that the angels who announced the resurrection of our Lord, are inhabitants of the eternal dwelling for which we are longing, let us endeavour to reach them, and thus celebrate this festival with them. Though we are not just now able to enjoy a glorious resurrection with these heavenly spirits, we will, nevertheless, join them with the ardour of our desires. Let us forsake sin and practise virtue, and by this change be able to see the face of our Redeemer. Ask God the Father, Who for the sake of our salvation delivered His only-begotten Son to a cruel death, to strengthen our desires, so that we may for ever praise Him, the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, Amen.

EASTER MONDAY.

GOSPEL: Luke xxiv. 13-35- At that time: Two of the disciples went the same day to a town, which was sixty furlongs from Jerusalem, named Emmaus. And they talked together of all these things which had happened. And it came to pass, that while they talked and reasoned with themselves, Jesus Himself also drawing near, went with them. But their eyes were held, that they should not know Him. And He said to them: What are these discourses that you hold one with another as you walk and are sad? And the one of them, whose name was Cleophas, answering, said to Him: Art Thou only a stranger in Jerusalem, and hast not known the things that have been done there in these days? To whom He said: What things? And they said: Concerning Jesus of Nazareth, Who was a prophet, mighty in work and word before God and all the people. And how our chief priests and princes delivered Him to be condemned to death, and crucified Him. But we hoped that it was He that should have redeemed Israel; and now besides all this, to-day is the third day since these things were done. Yea, and certain women also of our company affrighted us, who before it was light, were at the sepulchre, and, not finding His body, came saying that they had also seen a vision of angels, who say that He is alive. And some of our people went to the sepulchre, and found it so as the women had said, but Him they found not. Then He said to them: Oh, foolish and slow of heart to believe in all things which the Prophets have spoken! Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and so to enter into His glory? And 'beginning at Moses and all the Prophets, He explained to them in all the Scriptures, the things that were concerning Him. And they drew nigh to the town, whither they were going, and He made as though He would go farther. But they constrained Him, saying: Stay with us, because it is towards evening, and the day is now far spent. And He went in with them. And it came to pass, whilst He was at table with them, He took ' bread, and blessed, and brake, and gave to them. And their eyes were opened, and they knew Him: and He vanished out of their sight. And they said one to the other: Was not our heart burning within us, whilst He spoke in the way, and opened to us the Scriptures? And, rising up the same hour, they went back to Jerusalem; and they found the eleven gathered together, and those that were with them. And they told what things were done in the way, and how they knew Him in the breaking of bread.

HOMILY BY POPE ST. GREGORY, PREACHED IN THE CHURCH OF ST. PETER ON EASTER MONDAY.

TWENTY-THIRD HOMILY ON THE GOSPELS.

I. You have heard, beloved brethren, how two of the Lord's disciples went together to Emmaus, and were talking about Him. They did not believe in His resurrection, yet talked about it, when the Lord Himself appeared to them, but held their eyes so that they should not recognise Him. And this holding of their corporal eyes was a figure of the spiritual veil by which the eyes of their hearts were still covered. In their hearts they loved, yet they doubted; and the Lord drew nigh to them outwardly, though He did not show Himself to their soul. He revealed His immediate presence to them that talked of Him, and He hid from them who doubted the knowledge of His Person. By words He associated with them, and rebuked their heart-hardness: He expounded to them in all the Scriptures, the things that were concerning Him; nevertheless, seeing that He was still a stranger to faith in their hearts, He made as though He would go farther. These words, He made as though, would seem to mean, He feigned; but He, who is Truth itself, has nothing to do with feigning. He showed Himself to them in bodily manners, as He was to them spiritually; but they were put to the proof whether they could love Him, at least, as a wanderer, though they loved Him not yet as their God.

II. However, since it was impossible that they, with whom the Truth was walking, should be without love, they invited Him as a wanderer to accept their hospitality. Why do we say they invited Him, since it is written: But they constrained Him? Their example teaches us not only to bid, but even to compel wanderers, to accept our hospitality. These disciples, therefore, laid a table, and set before Him bread and meat; and they knew in the breaking of the bread that God, Whom they had not known in the expounding of the Holy Scripture. They were not enlightened in hearing the Commandments of God, but they were enlightened in doing them, as it is written: Not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law are justified (Rom ii. 13). Whosoever will understand that which he hears, let him make haste to practise in his works what he was able to hear. Behold, the Lord was not known while He spoke, but deigned to be known when breaking the bread.

III. I say this to you, beloved brethren', that you might willingly practise hospitality and all other works of charity. Remember St. Paul's words: Let the charity of the brotherhood abide in you; and hospitality do not forget; for by this some, being not aware of it, have entertained angels (Heb xiii i, 2). And St. Peter says: Using hospitality one towards another without murmuring (1 Pet iv. 9). Lastly, Truth Himself says to you: I was a stranger, and you took Me in (Matt xxv. 35). An authentic history, related in the writings of our forefathers, tells us of a father of a family who, with all the members of his household, zealously practised the virtue of hospitality. Every day he received poor strangers at his table, and waited on them. One day, among the poor strangers there was one who suddenly disappeared out of the room, at the moment when the humble and charitable man presented him, as was his custom, with water to wash his hands therewith. His surprise was great; but during the night he had a vision. Our Lord appeared, and said to him: 'On other days you received Me in My members, but yesterday you received Me in Person.' At the last judgment our Lord will say: Amen, I say to you, as long as you did it to one of these My least brethren, you did it to Me (Matt xxv. 40). All this teaches us that, before the time of the last judgment, Jesus Christ is received by us in the person of poor strangers, and that those, who receive them, are considered by Jesus as receiving Him. Yet we neglect the blessings and merits acquired by true hospitality. Consider the excellence of this virtue, and receive Jesus at your table, that one day He may receive you at His eternal banquet. Take into your house, in the persons of strangers, the Lord Jesus, that on the day of the judgment He treat you not as strangers whom He knows not, but take you as friends into His kingdom, there to enjoy His glory, Who liveth and reigneth for ever and ever. Amen.

FIRST SUNDAY AFTER EASTER, OR LOW SUNDAY

GOSPEL: John xx. 19-31. At that time: When it was late that same day, being the first day of the week, and the doors were shut, where the disciples were gathered together for fear of the Jews, Jesus came and stood in the midst, and said to them: Peace be to you. And when He had said this, He showed them His hands and His side. The disciples therefore were glad when they saw the Lord. He said, therefore, to them again: Peace be to you. As the Father hath sent Me, I also send you. When He had said this, He breathed on them, and He said to them: Receive ye the Holy Ghost; whose sins you shall forgive, they are forgiven them; and whose sins you shall retain, they are retained. Now Thomas, one of the twelve, who is called Didymus, was not with them when Jesus came. The other disciples, therefore, said to him: We have seen the Lord. But he said to them: Except I shall see in His hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the place of the nails, and put my hands into His side, I will not believe. And after eight days, again the disciples were within, and Thomas with them. Jesus cometh, the doors being shut, and stood in the midst, and said: Peace be to you. Then He said to Thomas: Put in thy finger hither, and see My hands, and bring hither thy hand, and put it into My side; and be not faithless, but believing. Thomas answered and said to Him: My Lord and my God. Jesus said to him: Because thou hast seen Me, Thomas, thou hast believed: blessed are they that have not seen, and have believed. Many other signs also did Jesus in the sight of His disciples, which are not written in this book. But these are written that you may believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that, believing, you may have life in His Name.

HOMILY BY POPE ST. GREGORY, PREACHED IN THE CHURCH OF ST. JOHN LATERAN ON THE FIRST SUNDAY AFTER EASTER.

TWENTY-SIXTH HOMILY ON THE GOSPELS.

I. When we hear this Gospel, our human mind can hardly understand how it was that the Body of the risen Lord, being a real Body, could pass through closed doors into the room where the disciples were assembled. But this will not surprise us when we consider that the works of God would no longer be wonderful, were they understood by man's reason, and that our faith would be destitute of all merit, were the human intellect able to demonstrate how these works of God are done. However, these very works of our Redeemer, which we are unable to understand, must be taken in connection with some others of His works, so that we may be led to believe in wonderful things by means of others still more wonderful. For that Body of our Lord, which came into the assembly of the disciples, the doors being shut, was the same which at His birth was manifested to the eyes of men, by passing out of the Virgin's womb without breaking the seal of her virginity. What wonder, then, is it that Jesus Christ, after His Resurrection, enjoyed a glorious and immortal life, showed Himself to His disciples, the doors being shut, since as a weak and mortal child He came out of a Virgin's womb in an incomprehensible manner? But since the Body of our Lord, after His resurrection, though real and visible, could raise doubts in the minds of the beholders, He showed them His hands and His side, and allowed them to touch that same flesh which had just passed through closed doors. In this event two strange things which, according to our understanding, are contrary the one to the other, were manifested, namely, that His Body was incorruptible and yet palpable. For, whatsoever can be touched must needs be corruptible; and whatsoever is not subject to corruption cannot be touched. But, in a way altogether wonderful and incomprehensible, our Redeemer appeared after His resurrection in a Body at the same time palpable and incorruptible. He appeared in an incorruptible Body, inviting us to seek the same glorification; and in a palpable Body to strengthen our faith. He showed Himself both incorruptible and palpable, to make manifest this fact, that His risen Body was the same in nature, though transfigured in glory.

II. He said therefore to them again: Peace be to you. As the Father hath sent Me, I also send you. The Father, Who is God, sent Me Who am God; and! Who am also man, send you who are men. The Father sent the Son, Whom He appointed to be made man for the redemption of man. He willed to send the Son into the world to suffer, though He loved that Son Who was sent to suffer. And our Lord sent His chosen Apostles into the world, not to be happy in the world, but to suffer, as He Himself had been sent. For, as the Father loves the Son, and yet sent Him to suffer, so does the Lord love His Apostles, though sending them into the world to suffer therein. Therefore it is well said: 'As the Father hath sent Me, I also send you meaning, while I send you into storms and persecutions, I love you all the same with a love like that wherewith My Father loves Me, Who yet sent me into the world to suffer. This sending of the Son may also be understood of His Eternal and Divine generation, for the Holy Ghost, equal to the Father and to the Son, and Who has not assumed our human nature, was to be sent according to the promise of our Redeemer: When the Paraclete cometh, Whom I mil send you from the Father (John xv. 26). For should the word send only mean to become man, then the Holy Ghost could not be said to have been sent, since He did not become man. We call Him, therefore, sent, in that sense that He proceeds from the Father and the Son, and, as His sending refers to His Divine procession, so may the sending of the Son be referred to His Divine generation.

III. When Jesus, standing in the midst of His disciples, had said: Peace be to you, He breathed on them and said: Receive ye the Holy Ghost. Let me remark that Holy Scripture speaks of two occasions only on which the Holy Ghost was given by our Redeemer: the first, when He was still on earth, and the second when He was already reigning in heaven. On the first occasion, as it is seen in this Gospel, He breathed on His disciples, and on the second the Holy Ghost came down from heaven upon them in the form of fiery tongues. Now, should we wish to know the reason why the Holy Ghost was imparted at two different times, and under different circumstances, we must consider that charity contains two commandments, namely, the love of God and the love of our neighbour. It seems, therefore, that the Holy Ghost was given on earth to move us to fulfil the duty of loving our neighbour; whereas He was sent from heaven to inflame our hearts with true love for God. But, since the two commandments spring forth from charity, which is one and the same, so was the one and the same Holy Ghost given by our Redeemer on two occasions — to wit, the first time when He was still on earth, and the second after His Ascension into heaven, giving us to understand that the love for our neighbour serves like steps leading us up to the love for God, according to the words of His beloved disciple: If anyone say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar. For he that loveth not his brother, whom he seeth, how can he love God, Whom he seeth not(i John iv. 20). Yet let us not conclude that the Apostles had not received the Holy Ghost before, since they possessed Him by faith. But after the Resurrection the Holy Ghost was given to them in a special and visible manner; and we understand in this sense the words, As yet the Holy Ghost was not given, because Jesus was not yet glorified (John vii. 39). Hence Moses said: He set him that he might such honey out of the rock; and oil out of the hardest stone (Deut xxxii. 13). For, perusing the Books of the Old Testament, we find that these words cannot be applied to the Israelites, since we do not see anywhere that they ever sucked honey and oil out of stones. We conclude, therefore, according to the testimony of St. Paul, that this rock was Christ. Indeed, seeing the acts and wonders of Jesus, the disciples sucked honey out of this Stone, and oil out of this Rock; for, after His Resurrection, they received the anointing of the Holy Ghost. We may also compare our Saviour with a soft stone, that, through the sweetness of His miracles, in His earthly life, He offered honey to the disciples. But since, after His Resurrection He cannot suffer any more, and has become like a hard rock, He sent them the anointing of the Holy Ghost.

IV. This is the supernatural oil spoken of by the prophets: The yoke shall putrefy at the presence of the oil (Isa x. 27). We were under the yoke of the cruel slavery of Satan; but having received the anointing of the Holy Ghost, and the grace to be set at liberty, the tyrannical yoke, under which we were groaning, has disappeared. This truth is confirmed by St. Paul, saying Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty (2 Cor iii. 17). However, take notice that these very disciples, who had already received the Holy Ghost, so as to lead a holy life with His assistance, and by their preaching to be useful to others, again received the Holy Ghost after the Resurrection, and in a most striking manner, for the benefit of the nations they were to instruct in the course of time. Hence our Lord, giving them the Holy Ghost, says: Whose sins you shall forgive, they are forgiven them; and whose sins you shall retain, they are retained. Let us wonder at the high degree of honour to which the disciples were raised at a time when destined to suffer the deepest humiliations. They were promised that not only their own sins were forgiven, but that they had power to absolve others from their sins — that is, power to sit on God's judgment-seat, and, like God Himself, to forgive or retain sins committed against His Divine justice. It was meet that those who, for the love of God, were ready to accept every humiliation and contempt, should be honoured in this way, and that their fear of being condemned by the severe Judge Whom they adored should be the motive prompting God to set them up as judges of souls, which were to be condemned or to be absolved.

V. Consider again, beloved brethren, this important truth, and carefully endeavour to be preserved from the eternal perdition. These Easter-days are celebrated with great pomp and magnificence; yet our duty is to make ourselves worthy of arriving at the eternal Festivals. You endeavour to be present at these feast-days, which pass and disappear; try, then, your utmost to be one day present, all together, at the never-ending celebration in heaven. What would it profit you to assist at our festivals now, were you never to be admitted to the festivities of the angels in heaven? Our present feast-days are only the shadow of those we are expecting, and, though year after year we are celebrating them, we are longing for those never-ending days in the kingdom of God. Renew in your hearts the desire of the eternal festivities by the celebration of the annual earthly festivals. Let the happiness granted to us in the present time penetrate us in such a way that we continue sighing for the eternal happiness prepared for us in heaven, and ardently desired by us on earth. Prepare yourselves for that eternal rest by amending your lives and practising virtue and holiness. Never forget that He Who in His Resurrection was meekness itself, will be terrible when coming to judge the world. On this awful day He will appear surrounded by Angels, Archangels, Thrones, Principalities and Powers. On that day heaven and earth and all the elements, being the ministers of His wrath, will be in a general conflagration. May this terrible Judge be ever present to the eyes of your mind, that, penetrated by a salutary fear of His severe judgment, that is to be held, you may confidently expect His coming. Let us fear now, that we may be without fear then, and this fear will help us to avoid sin and work out our salvation. For I tell you that the more we are now afraid to rouse the anger of our Judge against us, the greater will be our confidence when we appear before Him at the end of the world.

SECOND SUNDAY AFTER EASTER.

GOSPEL: John x. 11-16. At that time: Jesus said to the Pharisees: I am the Good Shepherd. The Good Shepherd giveth his life for the sheep. But the hireling, and he that is not the shepherd, whose own the sheep are not, seeth the wolf coming, and leaveth the sheep, and flieth; and the wolf catcheth and scattereth the sheep, and the hireling flieth, because he is a hireling, and he hath no care for the sheep. I am the Good Shepherd: and I know Mine and Mine know Me. As the Father knoweth Me, and I know the Father; and I lay down My life for My sheep. And other sheep I have, that are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear My voice, and there shall be one fold, and one Shepherd.

HOMILY BY POPE ST. GREGORY, PREACHED IN THE CHURCH OF ST. PETER ON THE SECOND SUNDAY AFTER EASTER.

FOURTEENTH HOMILY ON THE GOSPELS.

I. This Gospel which you have heard, beloved brethren, is to you, both an instruction and a warning against danger. For our Lord, Who is infinitely good, not by an accidental gift of nature, but by the very essence of His being, says to us: I am the Good Shepherd. Then He tells us what is the character of His goodness, even of that goodness which we must endeavour to imitate. The Good Shepherd giveth His life for His sheep. This truth was proved by our Redeemer's own example; for both the instruction and the command were literally fulfilled in His life. The Good Shepherd gave His life for the sheep, and made His own Body and Blood to be the sacramental Food of the sheep He had redeemed. In this Divine Model we perceive the way we are to go, and the manner of imitating Him. For we see in Him the duty freely and tenderly to spend our temporal goods for His sheep, and, if necessary, to give our life for them. Again, the soul being more precious than all outward things that we possess, how shall we be ready to give our life for our brethren, seeing that we refuse to them even our worldly substance? However, there are many, loving the things of this world better than the sheep entrusted to them, who deserve no longer to be called shepherds. Of them it is said by our Redeemer: The hireling, and he that is not the shepherd, whose own the sheep are not, seeth the wolf coming, and leaveth the sheep, and flieth.

II. He is called a hireling, and is deprived of all the rights of a good shepherd, because he does not in reality love the sheep entrusted to him — that is, their souls — but wishes thereby to gain earthly wealth. He that takes a shepherd's place, and seeks not the salvation of souls, is only a hireling. He is seeking his happiness in he honours rendered to his dignity, and endeavours to procure to himself the commodities of life. And does not the reward of the hireling consist in the temporal profit he acquires by the care he takes of his flock, whilst he will be deprived of the eternal inheritance prepared by God for His faithful servants? But it is not very easy to recognise the true shepherd, and to distinguish him from the hireling, unless he be discovered by special circumstances or by dangers threatening the flock. For very often, when men are kept in safety by peace and tranquillity, the hireling seems, like a true and faithful shepherd, to watch over his sheep. But when a wolf comes near the flock, then will be noticed by what spirit the selfish shepherd is animated. Under the image of the ravenous wolf attacking the flock we usually understand a violent and unjust man, who attacks souls, and tries to bring them under his power. In such circumstances he, who has only the appearance of a zealous shepherd, will leave his sheep and fly away, because he is afraid of dangers, and has not the courage to resist the unjust attempts of the enemy. But the hypocritical shepherd does not always leave his place or go away from his flock; still, he may be said to fly, because he gives not his flock the necessary assistance and the spiritual help he owes to them. He flies, since he keeps silent at the time when he ought to raise his voice against injustice; he flies when, hiding under the cloak of dissimulation, he tries to escape the strokes of the enemy. The Prophet justly complains against such faithless shepherds, saying: You have not gone up to face the enemy, nor have you set up a wall for the house of Israel, to stand in battle in the day of the Lord (Ezech xiii. 5). To face the enemy means to resist with true freedom and strength of mind every kind of power misusing, its authority and doing injustice. We stand in battle, and set up a strong wall for the protection of the house of Israel, when with the weapons of justice we defend the innocence of the faithful attacked without cause. But under such critical circumstances the hireling, perceiving the wolf coming near the flock, flies instead of resisting.

III. However, there is yet another wolf against whose fury, far more terrible than the former, we are to protect ourselves; for his cruelty ravishes not bodies, but souls. This is the infernal spirit, who kills souls and carries them off as his prey. Of the devil it is said: The wolf catcheth and scattereth the sheep, and the hireling flieth. This happens when the devil, by his temptations, tears souls to pieces, and when he, who ought to perform the duties of a good shepherd, thinks of earthly advantages only, and lets the souls go to their ruin, without even attempting to help them. The infernal wolf catches and scatters the sheep, attracting some to lust and impure sins, and others to avarice; tempting some to pride or violent anger; awakening in some sinful envy, and instructing others in the art of deceiving. Through these different temptations death is brought by the devil to Christian souls; yet the zeal of the hireling is not awakened, neither is he prompted by godliness to save his flock from ruin and destruction. For, since he seeks only the comforts and commodities of life, he is not moved by the spiritual sickness nor the eternal death of his flock. Hence our Lord adds these words: The hireling flieth, because he is a hireling, as if to say: It is not possible to one, who is a shepherd of My sheep, to remain firm amidst dangers surrounding them, if he does not give to the flock an unselfish love, but is seeking for the perishable goods of the world. For, desiring honours and trying to find happiness in the enjoyment of earthly things, he will be careful to avoid those dangers by which the things he loves so well would be lost. After unfolding before us the defects and faults of the hireling, our Lord shows us in His own Person the qualities of the one we are to imitate, and says: I am the Good Shepherd, and I know Mine — that is, I love them — and Mine know Me, namely, they are subject to Me, because they love Me. He that has no love for the truth announced by our Saviour, cannot boast of knowing Him.

IV. You have seen, beloved brethren, the dangers to which the office of a pastor or shepherd is exposed; now recognise also, according to our Lord's words, those dangers to which you are exposed. Consider first whether you are of the sheep belonging to the Divine Shepherd, and hear His voice. Ask yourselves whether you know what truth is. For it is not enough to recognise the truth by faith — it must be sincerely loved; and it is not enough to believe the truth — it must be put into practice. St. John, who wrote this Gospel, says: He who saith that he knoweth God, and keepeth not His commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him (1 John ii. 4). And our Lord added these words: As the Father knoweth Me, and I know the Father; and I lay down My life for My sheep — that is, I wish them to recognise the love I have for My Father by the love that moves Me to give My life for their salvation. And since our Saviour came to redeem not only the Jews but also the Gentiles, he continued: And other sheep I have that are not of this fold; them also I must bring, and they shall hear My voice, and there shall be one fold and one Shepherd. Our Lord, speaking of these other sheep, had in view our own salvation, for at ‘ that time we were among the number of the Gentiles. And this is fulfilled every day, as you can witness the fact; for you are aware of the mystery of reconciliation among the idolaters, by which the two nations, formerly separated, are united in the one and the same fold, and Jews and Gentiles form one spiritual nation. St. Paul speaks of this: For Jesus Christ is our peace, Who hath made both one (Eph ii. 14). Thus our Lord gives life everlasting to simple and artless souls, chosen among the one and the other nation, and brings them as His sheep into His own fold.

V. Of these sheep our Lord was speaking, when He said: My sheep hear My voice, and I know them, and they follow Me. And I give them life everlasting. By Me if any man enter in, he shall be saved; and he shall go in and out, and shall find pasture (John x. 27-29). That is, he will go in by faith, and go out of this life to see Me face to face. Then he will see with his own eyes that which he believed when on earth, and finally he will find eternal nourishment in this happy dwelling. These are the pastures promised by our Lord and found by His sheep; for since with a simple and willing heart they followed Him, they will be nourished with heavenly love, that fruitful field and that inexhaustible source of blessings. Indeed, what is the food of these beloved sheep but the interior joy felt at the ever new spectacle prepared for them in heaven? God Himself, ever present to the elect, will be their food; and since there is no deficiency in Him, their souls will be continually satiated with this Bread of Heaven. In these delicious pastures of eternity, which alone can satisfy our desires, was found real happiness by those who have already been victorious over the pleasures of this world. The heavenly court resounds with the eternal songs of its blessed inhabitants. Among the citizens of this holy city are seen those who safely arrived there after a sad and long pilgrimage in this foreign country, in which we are still living. There are seen the Prophets who announced future events; the Apostles on their thrones judging the nations; the glorious army of the Martyrs, the more praiseworthy the greater their sufferings had been; Confessors rewarded for their constancy; faithful and fearless men never overcome by the wickedness of the world; holy women who, in spite of the weakness of their sex, conquered the world; children, whose virtues were beyond the number of their years; and old men, whose infirmities never prevented them from advancing on the road to perfection.

VI. Ah, let us eagerly seek for that spiritual food! The happiness, which so many heavenly citizens wish to share with us, will be obtained, and the festivities to which we are invited will be our portion. Were a great market or fair to be held in a city, or the feast of the consecration of a church to be celebrated, we should all endeavour to be present. You would feel very sorry, were you not able to enjoy the festivities by which those present are filled with delight and happiness. And we are indifferent about the eternal blessings, and make no efforts to possess them; we are not even desirous of assisting at these eternal festivities, and, though deprived of them, we still rejoice. Let us encourage ourselves, beloved brethren; let our faith be awakened by these truths, so that our desires may be inflamed with love for the eternal goods; for to love them is the only way to reach them. Let us not be prevented by any adversity; for this place of happiness must be the aim of our efforts, notwithstanding all troubles and obstacles encountered in the way. We should be like a foolish traveller, were we to tarry on the road looking at the variety of flowers and the beauty of the fields, without caring to reach the end of our journey. All our desires ought to take us to the lands above, our real Fatherland. Let us not desire the goods of this world, which soon forsake us; but, wishing to be faithful sheep of our heavenly Shepherd, instead of loving the worthless enjoyments of this life, let us be longing after the eternal pastures by which we shall be made happy for ever. Amen.

ASCENSION DAY.

GOSPEL: Mark xvi. 14-20. At that time: Jesus appeared to the eleven as they were at table; and He upbraided them with their incredulity and hardness of heart, because they did not believe them who had seen Him after He was risen again. And He said to them: Go ye into the whole world and preach the Gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be condemned. And these signs shall follow them that believe: in My name they shall cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they shall drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands upon the sick, and they shall recover. And the Lord Jesus, after He had spoken to them, was taken up to heaven, and sitteth on the right hand of God. But they, going, preached everywhere, the Lord working withal, and confirming the word with signs that followed.

TWENTY-NINTH HOMILY ON THE GOSPELS.

I. The slowness of the disciples to believe that the Lord had indeed risen from the dead was not so much, if I may be allowed to say so, a sign of their weakness, as the motive of Divine Providence to strengthen us in our faith. Indeed, the consequence of their doubts was the demonstration of the Resurrection by many infallible proofs. And we read and acknowledge these proofs, and our faith is assured by the disciples' doubt. For my part, I do not put so much trust in Mary Magdalen, who believed at once, as in Thomas, who doubted so long; for by his doubting he came actually to touch the Lord's wounds, and thereby closed up any wound of doubt in our own hearts. However, to confirm to our minds the truth of the Resurrection of our Lord, we do well to take notice of one of the statements of St. Luke: Eating together with them, He commanded them that they should not depart, from Jerusalem (Acts i. 4); and a little afterwards: While they looked on, He was raised up, and a cloud received Him out of their sight (ver. 9). He ate, and ascended; so that the fact of His eating might show the reality of His body in which He went up. But St. Mark tells us that before the Lord ascended into heaven, He upbraided His disciples with their incredulity and hardness of heart. I know not what we should gather from this, unless that the Lord then reproached His disciples, from whom He was about to be parted in the body, to this end, that the words He spoke to them, as He left them, might be the deeper imprinted on their hearts.

II. And when He had rebuked the hardness of their heart, what command did He give them? Listen: Go ye into the whole world, and preach the Gospel to every creature. Was, then, the holy Gospel to be preached to things insensate, or to brute animals, that the Lord said to His disciples: Preach the Gospel to every creature? No; but by the words every creature we must understand man, who possesses qualities pertaining to all creatures. He has being in common with stones, life in common with trees, feeling in common with beasts, and understanding in common with angels. If, then, man has something in common with every creature, man is to some extent every creature. And if the Gospel is preached to man only, it is preached to every creature, because man has dominion over all things created by God on earth, and because every thing created has in itself something like to man. However, we may also suppose that the intention of Jesus, commanding His Apostles to preach the Gospel to every creature, was to give them to understand that His Gospel was to be preached to all the nations in the world. On a former occasion He had told them not to go to the Gentiles, but now He commanded them to preach to all men. When, therefore, the Jews despised the preaching of the Apostles announcing Jesus Christ, the preachers turned to the Gentiles and were listened to. For, instead of imitating the pernicious pride and obstinacy of the Jews, the Gentiles humbly submitted to the yoke of the Gospel. When the Apostles were sent by the Eternal Truth to preach to the world, a most precious seed was sown, which seems very small, but which, through faith, will soon bring forth a rich harvest. How could the number of the faithful have increased in the world in such marvellous manner, had not the hand of the Almighty spread abroad among the different nations the small number of Apostles chosen for the purpose of extending His kingdom on earth?

III. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be condemned. Relying on the truth of these words every one among us will perhaps say; I shall be saved, for I believe. This will undoubtedly be the case if our actions agree with the faith we profess. For we shall be saved by that faith by which our life is in conformity with the principles it teaches. St. Paul confirms this when, speaking of bad Christians, he says: They profess that they know God, but in their works they deny Him (Titus i. 16). The same is said by St. John: He who saith that he knoweth God and keepeth not His commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him (i John ii. 4). If this be so, then our life must absolutely give testimony to the faith which we profess; and if our conduct be not against the rules prescribed by our holy religion, then we may trust to belong to the number of the faithful. Indeed, we do not forget the solemn promises made at our baptism — namely, to renounce Satan, all his works and all his pomps. Let each of us earnestly examine himself, and should he be able to testify to the fact that he has fulfilled all those duties taken upon himself in the Sacrament of Baptism, he may congratulate himself on the happiness of being a good Christian. But should he be forced to confess that he has been faithless to his promises, that he has been a member of that company which he had formerly renounced, and that his actions reproach him with having lost his innocence, then let him ask himself whether he feels deep contrition for his sins, and endeavours to wash them out with tears of repentance. Our Judge is a God of mercies, who will no longer recognise as faithless the servant who, after leaving Him, now feels contrite, and sincerely returns to Him; for our penance will make Him forget the sins that had rendered us guilty in His eyes.

IV. Then our Lord added these words: And these signs shall follow them that believe; in My Name they shall cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take tip serpents; and if they shall drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands upon the sick, and they shall recover. Now, do not think because such miracles are not wrought by you, that you have not the true faith. These miracles were necessary at the beginning of the Church, that the faith should be accepted, and the number of the faithful increased by the signs of the Almighty power. For the beginning of the Church may be compared to the planting of a young tree, which is to be tended and watered until it has taken deep root in the ground. Therefore St. Paul says: Tongues are for a sign not to believers, but to unbelievers (i Cor xiv. 22). But there is also an important lesson contained in these miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghost, provided we understand their meaning. For these miracles, which in former times were wrought by the Apostles in a corporal and visible manner, now take place in the Church of God in a spiritual and invisible manner. When we, priests and ministers of the Church, lay our hands upon the faithful, and see how by the power of exorcisms the evil spirit is prevented from entering souls, is it not as if we were casting out devils? When Christians, formerly addicted to bad conversations, so common in the world, now renounce such sins, are edifying in their words, conversing about the doctrine of salvation, and everywhere praising their Creator and Redeemer, are they, not like those Christians who spoke with new tongues? Again, those who, by their zealous admonitions, withdraw others from a shameful and vicious life take up serpents, and are not poisoned by them. If anyone, hearing corrupting language, is not affected by it or led to evil, does he not seem to drink a deadly thing, and is not hurt? Lastly, all those who, seeing their brethren, not yet strong in virtue — on the point of yielding to sin, run to their help, in order to prevent their spiritual shipwreck; all others who by their good example strengthen their neighbour in virtue — all of them lay hands upon the sick, and they recover. All these miracles are the more astonishing, since they are worked on souls, the resurrection of which to the spiritual life of grace is more wonderful than the rising of bodies. Well, beloved brethren, you can do these invisible wonders with the help of God, if only you are willing. As to the visible signs, proving the holiness of those who work them, they cannot of themselves sanctify, not even those by whom they are witnessed; whereas the spiritual gifts, spoken of just now, when imparted to souls, though not proving the virtue of the receivers, nevertheless give them the life of grace. Both the good and the wicked may be favoured by exterior gifts; yet the spiritual gifts are possessed by the just only. Therefore it was said by the Eternal Truth, speaking of those who boast of having done miracles in His Name: Many will say to me in that day: Lord, Lord, have not we prophesied in Thy Name, and cast out devils in Thy name, and done many miracles in Thy Name? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from Me, you that work iniquity (Matt vii. 22, 23). Beloved brethren, do not desire these exterior signs which are sometimes granted by God to His enemies and to the reprobate; but earnestly wish for those wonders of love and examples of true piety, I have spoken of to you. Their merits are the surer the more they are hidden — merits that will be the more generously rewarded by God, the less they are shining before the eyes of men.

V. And the Lord Jesus, after He had spoken to them, was taken up to heaven, and sitteth on the right hand of God. When we read in Holy Scripture (4 Kings ii.) that Elias also was taken up to heaven, we easily understand the difference. The prophet was taken up in the air, whereas our Saviour ascended by His own power into heaven. As the birds, flying up in the air and again coming down, are called the birds of the heaven, so Elias is said to have passed through the space of the air or atmosphere, that he might be taken to an unknown land, there to spend painless and happy days, until the end of the world, when he will again appear and pay the debt of nature. Death is a punishment that was not remitted to him; it was only postponed. But our Redeemer, suffering death without delay, conquered it and destroyed its dominion by His Resurrection, the glory of which was revealed in the triumph of His Ascension. Again, observe that the prophet Elias was taken up to heaven in a fiery chariot, showing that, as a human being, he had need of exterior help. Angels carried him into the atmosphere, wherein the great weakness of his human nature could not have supported him. But our Saviour ascended into heaven by His own power, without the assistance of angels or the help of creatures; and He saw the earth under His feet, since by His Almighty power He was elevated above all things. He ascended without any effort to the eternal dwellings, for He had never left His glory; and if as man He ascended into heaven, as God He had always been present in heaven and on earth.

VI. As Joseph, sold by his brethren, was a symbol of Jesus sold by Judas, so were also Henoch, translated by God to paradise, and Elias taken up to heaven, two types of His Ascension. Our Lord wished this great mystery to be announced by these two witnesses, the one living before the Law, the other under the Law. However, there are different degrees of glory in these translations, according to the different conditions of the persons. Holy Scripture says of Henoch: He was seen no mover because God took him (Gen v. 24); of Elias, that he was taken up in a fiery chariot. But our Saviour penetrated heaven without the help of another. He was not taken up nor carried up, but went up into the dwelling of glory by His own power. In His Ascension, and also in the translation of Henoch and Elias, are shown the different degrees of the virtue of chastity, of which He is our exemplar, and which He wished to be perpetuated in His Church. When first we consider Henoch in the bonds of matrimony, then see Elias without wife and children, we notice the progress of this holy virtue manifested in these two men, as compared with Jesus in His Ascension. We know that Henoch, being begotten like other men, in his turn begot children; that Elias, coming later, though born like others, never begot; and that Jesus Christ, not only in His miraculous birth, but in His whole life, was Purity itself.

VII. St. Mark says of our Lord: And sitteth on the fight hand of God. Yet St. Stephen (Acts vii. 55) exclaimed: Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of Man standing on the right hand of God. This does not seem to agree, namely, sitting on the right hand, and standing on the right hand. Yet, beloved brethren, you will not be astonished by this seemingly disagreeing testimony of Holy Scripture. You will take into consideration that it appertains to a judge to be sitting, whereas one fighting or helping is thought to be standing. Now, the Redeemer of the world, after ascending into heaven, is the Judge of all things, and will come at the end to judge the whole world; and in this capacity of highest judge He is represented by St. Mark as sitting on the right hand of God. But when Stephen, still in the throes of the battle, saw Him standing in the midst of His glory, we are to understand that Jesus in the highest heavens was fighting with this glorious martyr, giving him His help to overcome the fury of his persecutors.

VIII. But they, going preached everywhere; the Lord working withal, and confirming the word with signs that followed.

What are we to notice in this, and what are we to remember, but that obedience followed the commandment, and that great miracles followed their obedience? But now, since by the will of God we have lightly run over our reading from the Gospel, it remains that we should give you some considerations or reflections on this great festival.

IX. And first, let us ask why the angels, appearing at the birth of our Lord, were not in white garments; whereas, when the Lord ascended into heaven, it is written that they were clad in white. It is written: While they looked on, He was raised up: and a cloud received Him out of their sight: And while they were beholding Him going up to heaven, behold two men stood by them in white garments (Acts i. 9, 10). White garments are an outward sign of an inward joy. But how is it that these heavenly spirits, announcing the blessed birth of our Saviour, were not seen in white garments? Because at the Ascension the angels, beholding the Man-God going up in triumph to heaven, were manifesting their joy, since His humanity received the glory due to Him; whereas in His Nativity the Divinity seemed to be humbled, taking the form of a servant, and the angels showed no special exterior joy. 'Their appearance in white garments at the Ascension was a sign of glory; at the Nativity a sign of the humiliation of the Son of God.

X. However, beloved brethren, what deserves our greatest consideration on this festival is the fact, that on this day Christ was blotting out the handwriting of the decree that was against us (Col, ii. 14), and that the sentence of corruption was reversed. For our human nature, of which it was said, Thou art dust, and unto dust thou shalt return (Gen iii. 19), was taken up to heaven on this day. Foreseeing this elevation of our flesh, the holy man Job compared our Lord with a bird. And seeing that the Jews would not recognise this mystery, he reproached them with their incredulity, and said: The bird hath not known the path (Job xxviii. 7). The name of a bird is well given to the Lord, Who in His human body soared up into heaven. And those who do not believe in His Ascension, do not know the path of the Bird. It is of this glorious occasion that the Psalmist says: Thy magnificence, O Lord, is elevated above the heavens (Ps viii. 2); again: God is ascended with jubilee, and the Lord with the sound of trumpet (Ps xlvi. 6). And again he says: Thou hast ascended on high, Thou hast led captivity captive; Thou hast received gifts in men (Ps lxvii. 19). Ascending to heaven, He led captivity captive, for by His Resurrection we were delivered from corruption; and He gave gifts to men when sending His Spirit: To one, indeed, by the Spirit is given the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge; to another the grace of healing; to another the working of miracles; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another interpretation of speeches (1 Cor xii. 8-10). The prophet Habacuc spoke of the glory of Christ's Ascension in the words: The Sun and the Moon stood still in their habitation (Hab iii. 11). Who is here signified by the Sun if not the Saviour? or by the Moon, if not the Church? This Church was, until the Lord's Ascension, exposed to violent storms, and lived in fear of her enemies. But when our Saviour had ascended into heaven, the Church was strengthened, took heart, and began to preach openly the faith which she had been holding secretly. Like the sun rising towards the south, the Lord rose, and gave strength and increase to His Church by the powerful command to preach His Gospel. And to confirm the truth, the Church, taking the words of Solomon, exclaims: The voice of my beloved; behold he cometh leaping upon the mountains, shipping over the hills (Cant ii. 8). For the Church contemplates the sufferings of our Saviour, Who, from the first moment of His coming into this world, leaped with giant's steps on painful roads. And would you know, beloved brethren, these steps taken by the Redeemer? Consider that from heaven He stepped into the womb of a Virgin, from the womb into the manger, from the manger on to the cross, from the cross into the sepulchre, and from the sepulchre up to heaven. Thus the truth manifested in the flesh took such steps for our sakes, that He might draw us to run after Him; and for this end He hath rejoiced as a giant to run His way (Ps xviii. 6), that we might passionately say: Draw us; we will run after Thee to the odour of Thy sweetness (Cant i. 3).

XI. Therefore, beloved brethren, we must follow in heart and mind Him Who on this day ascended into heaven. Let our hearts be separated from all earthly desires, so that we may henceforth taste no other happiness than the remembrance of Him Who is our Father in heaven. Let us remember, and often meditate, on this truth, that, though He ascended as a peaceful King, He will one day come as a terrible Judge, and require of us with justice an account of our keeping those commandments given to us by Him in mercy. Let no man neglect the time given to us for doing penance; let everyone work for the salvation of his soul whilst there is yet an opportunity. Our Redeemer will be all the sterner, when He comes in judgment, the more wondrously long-suffering He was before. Carefully consider my words, and dispose your life according to this important lesson. And should your soul be tossed about by the storms of this life, let it be fastened by the anchor of hope to the eternal dwellings, our true fatherland, and let your, eyes steadfastly gaze on that heavenly light. After considering the Ascension of our Lord, let our faith meditate on this mystery, and, though we are still fastened to this earth by the bonds of our body, let us at least follow Jesus on the wings of our love, and ask Him, Who granted us these heavenly desires, not to forsake us, until they be perfectly fulfilled. Amen.

WHIT-SUNDAY, THE FEAST OF PENTECOST.

GOSPEL: John xiv. 23-31. At that time: Jesus said to His disciples: If anyone love Me, he will keep My word, and My Father will love him, and We will come to him, and will make Our abode with him; he that loveth Me not, keepeth not My words. And the word which you have heard is not Mine; but the Father's Who sent Me. These things have I spoken to you, abiding with you. But the Paraclete, the Holy Ghost, Whom the Father will send in My name, He will teach you all things, and bring all things to your mind, whatsoever I shall have said to you. Peace I leave with you; My peace I give to you; not as the world giveth do I give unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, nor let it be afraid. You have heard that I said to you: I go away, and I come again to you. If you loved Me, you would indeed be glad, because I go to the Father; for the Father is greater than I. And now I have told you before it come to pass: that when it shall come to pass, you may believe. I will not now speak many things with you; for the Prince of this world cometh, and in Me he hath not anything. But that the world may know that I love the Father; and as the Father hath given Me commandment, so do I.

HOMILY BY POPE ST. GREGORY, PREACHED IN THE CHURCH OF ST. PETER, APOSTLE, ON THE FEAST OF PENTECOST.

THIRTIETH HOMILY ON THE GOSPELS.

I. It will be best, beloved brethren, briefly to run through the words of the Gospel, read out to you, and afterwards dwell for a longer time upon the subject of this solemn festival. This is the day whereon suddenly then came a sound from heaven, and the Holy Ghost descended upon the Apostles, and changed their fleshly minds into minds filled with the love of God. And whilst without there appeared parted tongues, as it were of fire, and it sat upon every one of them, within their hearts were inflamed. They received the visible presence of God in the form of fire, and their hearts were filled with the flames of His love. The Holy Ghost Himself is love; hence St. John says: God is charity [love] (1 John iv. 8). Whosoever, therefore, desires God with all his soul, has already obtained Him Whom he loves; for no one is able to love God, if he has not gained Him Whom he loves. Now behold, if one of you were asked whether he love God, he would with boldness and quietness of spirit answer: ‘I do love God.’ Yet at the very beginning of this day’s Gospel we heard the Divine Truth say: If anyone love Me, he will keep My word. The test of love, then, is whether it is shown by works. Hence the same John says in his Epistle: If any man say, I love God, and keep not His commandments, he is a liar (i John iv. 20, v. 3). We do indeed love God and keep His commandments, when we deny ourselves the gratification of our appetites. Whosoever goes after unlawful desires, does not love God, for he is acting against the will of God.

II. And My Father will love him, and We will come to him, and will make Our abode with him. O, beloved brethren, consider what a dignity it is to have God abiding as a guest in our heart! Surely, if some rich man, or some powerful friend were to come into our house, we would hasten to have the whole house cleaned, lest perhaps the eye of the entering friend should be offended by something, So let him, who wishes to make his heart a dwelling of God, cleanse it from all filth of sinful works. For what says the Truth? We will come to him, and will make Our abode with him. There are some hearts into which God comes, but makes not His abode therein. With a certain contrition they feel His presence, but in the time of temptation they forget that which made them sorry; and so they turn again to commit sin, as though they had never repented. Whosoever truly loves God, and keeps all His commandments, will receive the Redeemer into his heart, and be the abode of God, because Divine love will enchain him so strongly that, in the time of temptation, he will not be separated from that love. The true love of God is made manifest by our firmness amidst temptations, and our courage in overcoming them; for it is certain that we are the further from the love of supernal things, the more pleasure we find in the sinful enjoyments of this life. Therefore our Saviour added: He that loveth Me not, keepeth not My words. Examine, then, yourselves, beloved brethren, whether you really love God; and do not believe what your mind answers if you have not the testimony of your good works. The heart, the tongue, and the whole life must give testimony; for real love cannot remain idle. Love works great things, and as soon as it ceases to work, it ceases to exist. And the word which you have heard is not Mine, but the Father's Who sent Me. You know, beloved brethren, that the only-begotten Son Who speaks is the Word of the Father, and that the word He announced is not the Son's, but the Father's word, because the Son is the Word of the Father. But how do these words of Jesus — These things have I spoken unto you, abiding with you — agree with His other words promising His disciples to be with them all days, even to the consummation of the world? This will be easily understood, when we remember that the Word made flesh will after a certain time secede from the world corporally, yet remain with us by virtue of His all-powerful and invisible Divinity.

III. And our Lord added: But the Paraclete, the Holy Ghost, Whom the Father will send in My Name, He will teach you all things, and bring all things to your mind, whatsoever I shall have said to you. You know, beloved brethren, that the Greek word Paraclete means in our tongue intercessor or advocate because the Holy Ghost defends, so to speak, the poor sinner before the tribunal of the Father's justice. Therefore, when it is said that the Holy Ghost, though one and the same with the Father and the Son, is interceding for sinners, it means that by His inspirations He moves our hearts to pray to God, as St. Paul says: We know not what we should pray for as we ought, but the Spirit Himself asketh for us with unspeakable groanings (Rom viii. 26). Should you ask how it is that the Holy Ghost, not being inferior to, but as infinitely great and powerful as the Father, nevertheless intercedes for us, you will understand this to mean that He fills our hearts and inflames our desires to send our petitions to heaven and lay our necessities before the throne of the Almighty. He is also called the Comforter, because He takes away the sorrowfulness caused by the remembrance of our sins, and inspires us with the hope of being pardoned by God. Our Lord also says that the Holy Spirit will teach us all things, because the words of the most eloquent preacher would be useless, did not the Holy Ghost speak to the hearts of the hearers. Therefore, do not attribute to the art and eloquence of the teacher whatsoever you understand about the Divine doctrine, but to the Spirit of Truth speaking in your soul; for does it not every day happen that the voice of the preacher reaches the ears of his hearers, yet the meaning of his words is not understood by all in the same manner? The voice is the same, but the understanding is not the same, because the divine Spirit, this invisible Teacher, opens the mind of some, and they comprehend the doctrine, whilst others remain unmoved by the same sound of the words. St. John teaches this truth, when he says: His unction teacheth you all things (1 John ii. 27); and we understand that, were not the unction of the Holy Ghost poured forth into our hearts, the words of the preacher could not teach us. But why should we insist on this fact that human eloquence is not able to convince us of the truths of salvation, since God Himself would in vain speak for our instruction, did not the unction of the Spirit move our hearts at the same time? We are aware that God, knowing Cain's sinful intention to kill his brother, spoke to him, and said: Thou hast sinned; now stop (Gen iv., j*uxta* LXX,). Yet, though he heard the voice of God warning him not to stain his hands with the innocent blood of his brother, he remained deaf to that voice, because the unction of the Holy Spirit had not entered his heart, nor moved him to give ear to that voice. However, there is another difficulty. Our Saviour, speaking of the Holy Ghost, said to His disciples: And He will bring all things to your mind, whatsoever I shall have said to you. This seems to imply that the Son of God is superior to the Holy Ghost. But when we consider the words bring all things to your mind, we understand that the Holy Ghost does not lower Himself by such suggestions, as if drawing these things out of the innermost of the souls, but by His supernatural light makes known the truths which before were hidden to them. Peace I leave with you, My peace I give you. These words of our Lord mean that He leaves His peace with those who endeavour to walk on the road to salvation, and that He will give His peace for ever to those who enter the kingdom prepared for them.

IV. After briefly explaining the words of this day's Gospel, let us now give our attention to the mystery of this solemn festival. You heard, beloved brethren, that on this day the Holy Ghost came down upon the Apostles in parted tongues, as it were, of fire, and that they began to speak with divers tongues, according as the Holy Ghost gave them to speak. By this great wonder we understand that the holy Church, filled with the same spirit as the Apostles, and preaching to the nations of the world, will be heard by all of them. Indeed, when God, to confound the arrogance of the people building the Tower of Babel, also confounded their tongue, He in the same way united all languages in those who humbly feared Him, so that humility found its power there, where pride and arrogance felt their weakness and received their punishment.

V. Now let us examine why the Holy Ghost, one and co-eternal with the Father and the Son, appeared under the element of fire; why He appeared in fire and tongues; why He at one time appeared as a dove, and at another as fire; why He showed Himself as a dove when coming down upon the Son of God, and as tongues of fire upon the Apostles (Acts ii. 2); so that the dove was not visible when the Holy Ghost came upon the Apostles, neither the fire when He appeared upon the Person of the Son of God. These questions will be answered, when we first say that the Holy Ghost, co-eternal with the Father and the Son, showed Himself as fire, because God Himself is a spiritual and invisible fire, according to the words of St. Paul: For our God is a consuming fire (Heb xii. 29). He is indeed a fire, for He consumes the rust of our sins; and this has been confirmed by the words of the Eternal Truth: I am come to cast fire on the earth; and what will I but that it be kindled (Luke xii. 49). The earth of which He speaks are the worldly hearts of men, which, being filled with earthly thoughts, are, so to speak, trodden upon by the infernal spirits. But when, through the breathing of the Holy Ghost, the Almighty sends His Divine fire, the carnal hearts of men are at once inflamed by His love; the earth is enkindled by this heavenly fire, and the worldly and cold hearts forsake the sinful desires, by which they are bound to this world, and they endeavour to belong only to God, now the sole object of their love. The Holy Ghost comes in fire, because by Him our cold hearts are warmed and filled with desires of eternity. And, being co-eternal with the Son, the same Spirit appeared in the shape of tongues of fire, and thus showed the intimate relationship between the tongue and the Word. For the Son is the Word of the Father, and since the Holy Ghost and the Son have the same Divine Nature, it was fit that this Spirit should appear in the form of a tongue, this being the organ of words. The Holy Ghost was seen in tongues, for he that receives this Spirit will confess the Word of God, the only-begotten Son; and he cannot deny the Word, since he already possesses the tongue of the Spirit. Again He appeared in the shape of tongues of five, because all those filled with the gifts of the Holy Ghost are by Him inflamed with love and endowed with eloquence. The true teachers of the doctrine of Jesus Christ have, so to speak, fiery tongues, because they preach the love of God, and inflame the hearts of the hearers; for the most learned sermons are unprofitable, unless sparks of that holy fire are brought by them into the hearts of men. The heat of this fire was felt by the two disciples going to Emmaus, and, being taught by the Eternal Truth, they said: Was not our heart burning within us, whilst He spoke in the way, and opened to us the Scriptures? (Luke xxiv. 32). These are the effects produced in a soul listening to zealous preaching: the heart is inflamed, the ice of torpidness is melted, holy desires are aroused, and the longings for earthly things are removed. Real love, filling the soul, awakens in it sighs and tears; but by these pains, suffered under the yoke of Divine love, the real love is nourished and strengthened. Such a soul finds its delight in hearing the word of God and the Divine commandments, and these commandments are as many torches enlightening and guiding the soul on the road to salvation, whereupon it had been walking carelessly and inactively, but now zealously, because strengthened by the word of God. Thus Moses says: In His right hand a fiery law (Deut xxxiii. 2); for by the left hand are indicated the damned, one day to be placed at the left hand of the Judge; whereas the right hand shows the elect, who could not behold the fiery law in the right hand of the Almighty without being inflamed with fiery love to fulfil that law. As soon as the words of the law are heard, these souls find no other rest but in the sweetness of this fire consuming them. But as the Holy Spirit showed Himself under the form of fires, and on another occasion appeared under the form of a dove, this twofold symbol meant the effects produced by Him in the hearts of those who receive Him — that is, simplicity and ardour of love. By Him we are made artless through purity, and ardent through Divine zeal. For simplicity without zeal cannot please God, just as zeal without an artless heart cannot be accepted by Him. We hear, therefore, the Truth say to His Apostles: Be ye, therefore, wise as serpents, and simple as doves (Matt, x. 16); meaning that wise zeal must animate simplicity, whilst simplicity is to temperate our zeal. This is corroborated by "the great Apostle admonishing us in these words: Brethren, do not become children in sense, but in malice be children, and in sense be perfect (1 Cor xiv. 20). And Holy Scripture, speaking of Job as a simple man, says: And this man was simple, and upright, and fearing God. By which We are taught that there can be no uprightness without simplicity, nor simplicity agreeable to God without uprightness. And since the Holy Ghost came to teach us both these virtues, He appeared as a dove and as fire, in order to teach us meekness and peacefulness under the form of a dove, and ardent love for justice under the form of fire — virtues imparted to those that receive Him.

VI. The motive why the same Holy Spirit came upon the Redeemer as a dove, and upon the Apostles in tongues of fire, is apparent when we consider that the wrath of the justice of the Son of God could not have been borne by us, had He appeared in fire to judge and punish, before attracting us through the sweetness of His blessings. The Son of God became man to redeem all men, and He showed Himself full of meekness that we might find His yoke light and amiable; also because He wished to convert and to be merciful to all in this life, since in His justice He must condemn some of them on the day of His wrath. This is the reason why the Holy Ghost showed Himself first as a dove upon Him who had come to forgive the sins of men, and not to punish. But if on this day He appeared in consuming fire, it means that the Apostles, being mere men, and consequently sinners, were to be purified in the fire of Divine love, cleansed by their own penance from their faults, though God in His infinite mercy is always ready to forgive sins; for let us not imagine that the Apostles, entrusted with that heavenly ministry, were without sin. St. John writes: If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us ‘ (1 John i. 8). The Holy Ghost came in fire upon men, and as a dove upon our Lord; for Christ has borne our sins patiently and mercifully; whereas we are carefully to examine our sins and burn them in the fire of penance and ardent love of God.

SECOND SUNDAY AFTER PENTECOST.

GOSPEL: Luke xiv. 16-24. At that time: Jesus spoke this parable to the Pharisees: A certain man made a great supper, and invited many. And he sent his servant at the hour of supper to say to them that were invited, that they should come, for now all things are ready. And they began all at once to make excuse. The first said to him: I have bought a farm, and must needs go out and see it; I pray thee, hold me excused. And another said: I have bought five yoke of oxen, and I go to try them: I pray thee, hold me excused. And another said: I have married a wife, and therefore I cannot come. And the servant returning, told these things to his lord. Then the master of the house, being angry, said to his servant: Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor, and the feeble, and the blind, and the lame. And the servant said: Lord, it is done as thou hast commanded, and yet there is room. And the lord said to the servant: Go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled. But I say unto you, that none of those men that were invited, shall taste of my supper.

HOMILY BY POPE ST. GREGORY, PREACHED IN THE CHURCH OF SS. PHILIP AND JAMES, ON THE SECOND SUNDAY AFTER PENTECOST.

THIRTY-SIXTH HOMILY ON THE GOSPELS.

I. Between the pleasures of the body, beloved brethren, and the pleasures of the mind, there is that difference, that the pleasures of the body, when we miss them, raise up a great longing after them, and when we greedily taste them, our fulness soon produces dislike and aversion. Whereas the pleasures of the mind seem disagreeable as long as we lack them, but when we fill ourselves with them we feel hungry after them, and the more we feed on them, the more hungry we get after them. Bodily or corporal pleasures are full of sweetness when taken, but soon excite nausea; whereas in the spiritual feeding, which at first seems bitter, real pleasure is found at the end. What is sensual stirs up our appetite, yet we cannot take it for a time without feeling a strong aversion against it. But what is spiritual excites the appetite in the very act of eating. We see, therefore, that souls tasting spiritual dainties, feel greater hunger and thirst for Divine things through the sweetness they taste. If we taste them not, we cannot love them, for we know not how sweet they are. And who can love that thing whereof he knows nothing? We are, therefore, invited by the Psalmist, saying: O taste, and see that the Lord is sweet (Ps xxxiii. 9); that is, as it were, if you taste not, you shall not know His goodness, but let your heart once taste the food of life, then, indeed, having tasted and proved its sweetness, you will be able to love Him. These are the dainties which were lost to man, when he sinned in the earthly paradise; and he lost Paradise when he shut his own mouth against the sweet bread, whereof if any man eat he shall live for ever. And as we are born of the first man under the afflictions of this pilgrimage, and came into this world smitten with aversion, we know not what to desire.

And the disease of this aversion grows worse, the more our soul is estranged from this bread of sweetness. We are no longer hungering after interior dainties, since we have lost the use of eating them. And so in this aversion we starve, and the sickness of long fasting destroys our health. We would not eat of the interior sweetness made ready for us, and we love outward things, even our starvation; yet the infinite Goodness does not forsake those by whom It is forsaken.

II. This goodness of God recalls to our mind these holy dainties, so often despised, and by trying to shake off our sluggishness, invites us to overcome the aversion we feel against this spiritual food. Listen to the words of our Redeemer: A certain man made a great sapper, and invited many. This man is the same of whom the prophet said: It is a Man, and who hath known Him? (Jer xvii. 9). He prepared a great supper, for He wished to give us the fill of interior sweetness. Many were invited, but a few came; for it often happens that some of those who receive the light of faith, keep away from the eternal banquet through a bad life that is opposed to their calling. This man sends out his servant at the hour of the supper to say to them that were invited, that they should come. And what is the meaning of these words, the hour of the supper? The end of the world, as St. Paul explains, saying: All these things happened to them in figure, and they are written for our correction, upon whom the ends of the world are come (1 Cor x. 11). And since we know that the Lord calls us now, because the hour of the supper, to which we are invited, has come, we cannot find any excuse not to appear at it, especially because, on account of the offered and yet neglected grace, we must fear that the favourable hour will never return. Then, this banquet prepared by God, is called in the Gospel a supper, to give us to understand that, supper being the last meal of the day, the banquet spoken of means the eternal supper prepared by God at the end of the world. And who is the servant sent out to call them that were invited, if not the preachers bidden by God to announce His truths? As one of these servants, God has sent us, though unworthy of this high office, being bowed down under the burden of our own sins. God has sent us to you on this day; and whilst I speak to you that you may be edified and instructed, I obey the commands of the Divine Householder. Exhorting you to despise the world, I am like the servant of the Gospel, and I invite you to the supper prepared for you by God. Do not consider my person, but only my office; for if you see in me a servant unworthy to invite you, your esteem ought, at all events, to be given to the pleasures of the spiritual banquet to which you are invited. You know, beloved brethren, that a master, being of a high rank, often has a servant who, seeming low, is despised. But when this servant brings a message to his master's friends, it is gladly accepted in consideration of the master, no attention being paid to the faults or shortcomings of the servant. Do likewise, beloved brethren, and be not disturbed by my unworthiness, but highly esteem the call of the Lord. Obey, and promptly, the invitation of the Divine Householder to His Banquet. Prepare your hearts, and expel from them the mortal indifference which keeps you away from His sanctifying Banquet. And should your minds be still carnal, desiring only corporeal food, consider that the Flesh of your God is offered to you for the nourishment of your souls. The sinless Lamb of God, killed for you, is prepared for you on God's altar.

III. How shall we be made worthy of this invitation?

And they began all at once to make excuse, says the Gospel.

God in His infinite love offers, without being asked for, an actual favour, which we could not expect, not even by our most ardent desires; yet this favour is despised. He promises food for our eternal happiness; yet everyone makes excuse not to accept it. Let us take an ordinary example to understand higher things. A mighty Prince invites a poor man to his banquet. You will easily imagine that this poor man will be overwhelmed with joy, that he will express his gratitude with modest and humble words, and, taking off his tattered garments, will endeavour to appear one of the first in the banquet-hall, not to be before-handed by another. This poor man would certainly behave in this manner. And we are invited by God Himself to His Banquet, and we make excuse, and do not appear. Yet it seems to me, your answer in your heart will be that you do not excuse yourselves, and that you will be only too glad to partake of this supper prepared for you.

IV. Your testimony seems plausible enough, were it not for your own conscience telling you that you are inclined to love the world more than heaven, and corporeal and perishable things more than spiritual and invisible goods. Consider the motives alleged by the invited guests for not appearing at the supper. The first said: I have bought a farm, and must needs go out and see it; I pray thee hold me excused. This farm he speaks of, what does it mean but the earthly and perishable goods? He goes out to see it, for he is only busy with and fettered by exterior and temporal possessions. And another said: I have bought live yoke of oxen, and I go to try them; I pray thee hold me excused. Cannot the five corporal senses of man be understood under the number of these yoke of oxen? And is it not with a special reason that animals are put before us under the yoke, or in couples, as both sexes are subject to the exterior sense? By these senses we are not elevated to the knowledge of supernatural things, but we remain with the corporeal ones. Through these man forsakes the knowledge of the things within him, and clings to those without. And this is the cause of our inquisitiveness concerning the life of our neighbour, whilst we overlook our own life. The human mind is, indeed, of this disposition, trying to know things which are of no concern, and overlooking those which ought to be the first and paramount care. Not without a special reason is it said about the five yoke of oxen: I go to try them; I pray thee hold me excused. Such excuse clearly shows the curiosity of the man. This vice mastered him entirely, and led him to go and try exterior and not spiritual things. Now, consider how those who wished to be excused by the householder for not coming to his banquet — the one on account of the farm and the other on account of the five yoke of oxen — at first made use of very humble language, I pray thee hold me excused. Yet this humility is in their words only, while the contempt for the householder resides in their doings. And such is the conduct of many Christians towards the ministers of God, when punished by them for their misdeeds. Being admonished in such words as: 'Do be converted; return to God; avoid the world and its sins their answer to the zealous servant of God, inviting them to the Lord's banquet, will be: 'We are not worthy of the grace offered to us; we are sinners; we cannot obey you; but do not forget to pray the Lord for us.' Are they not like the invited guests, who asked the servant to excuse them? Saying that they are sinners, they seem to humble themselves, but adding that they cannot be converted, their pride is only too obvious. Their false humility is shown by their words, and by their acts, their real pride.

V. And another said: I have married a wife, and therefore I cannot come. The real reason of his refusal is found in the vice of voluptuousness. Indeed, though marriage is in itself good and lawful, being instituted by Divine Providence for the propagation of the human race, yet it is often desired, not for that legitimate purpose, but for the satisfaction of vicious desires; so that under the words of an action, just in itself, unlawful intentions are often hidden, The Divine Master of the house invites you to His heavenly Banquet; yet you refuse, since the love of earthly goods, inquisitiveness, and sinful lust keep you away. You act in the same manner as those who, on account of their excuses, were rejected by the householder of the Gospel. They alleged the same reasons you make use of, and showed the same aversion against the heavenly food offered to men.

VI. And the servant, returning, told these things to his lord. Then the master of the house, being angry, said to his servant: Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor, and the feeble, and the blind, and the lame. The Lord, therefore, shuts out of His Banquet those who are only and solely clinging to the goods of this earth, those addicted to useless curiosity, and those given up to sinful lust. The proud also are rejected, and the poor are chosen. How is this? Listen to St. Paul saying: The foolish things of the world hath God chosen, that He may confound the wise; and the weak things of the world hath God chosen, that He may confound the strong (i Cor i. 27). Now, notice that those brought to the banquet are called poor and feeble, to point out that they were not relying on their own strength, but recognised their weakness. For he that, in the midst of his poverty, has a high opinion of himself, is proud in spite of his needs. Again, the blind may be said to be those deprived of the interior light; the lame, those who do not go straight in the path of justice. Now, these exterior deformities seem to be the marks of interior defects; it follows, then, that they are sinners, like the first who refused to come to the Banquet. But because they are humble they are preferred and received, on account of their humble sentiments.

VII. The despised by the world are therefore chosen by God; for it often happens that the little esteem in which they are held makes them reflect on themselves, and urges them to follow the prodigal son of the Gospel, who, having wasted his substance living riotously, and being in want, returned to himself, and said: How many hived servants in my father's house abound with bread? (Luke xv. 17). As long as he was living in sinful abundance, he knew not himself, but went, so to speak, away from himself, not to see the sad condition in which he was plunged. He would not have returned to himself, had not the corporal hunger he suffered shown him the terrible spiritual distress of his soul. The poor and the feeble, the blind and the lame, are called by God, and they come, because they are infirm and despicable in the eyes of the world. They are the more willing and prompt to listen to the voice of God, the less attention and comfort they receive from the world.

VIII. However, the sentence pronounced by our Lord against all those who refused to accept the invitation, is exceedingly terrible. I entreat you, therefore, you, beloved brethren, and you, my teachers, you who are sinners and you who are just — I entreat you to give your serious attention to His words, that He may be the less feared on the day of the judgment, the more He is feared by you now, when attentively listening to my words. He adds: I say unto you, That none of those men that were invited, shall taste of My supper. At sundry times and in divers manners you have been called by God: through His Angels, sent to guide us; through the Prophets and Fathers, gone before us; through the Apostles and pastors; and, lastly, through our ministry; do not despise His invitation. Should the voice of God be heard by you in miracles or punishments, in blessings or adversities, do not refuse to listen to it. For, were you unwilling to accept the invitation now, the time might come when the entrance to the banquet will be refused to you, just when you are most desirous to obtain that favour. Remember what Wisdom tells us through Solomon: Then they shall call upon me, and I will not hear; they shall rise in the morning, and shall not find me (Prov i. 28). And the foolish virgins, coming late, exclaim: Lord, Lord, open to us. But the Bridegroom, answering, said: Amen I say to you, I know you not (Matt xxv. 11, 12). And now need I tell you, beloved brethren, to forsake all things, to renounce the cares and concerns of this world, and to think only of eternity? Such a blessing is given to a few only; and I do not flatter myself that you will be induced, in consequence of my admonitions, to forsake all the things you possess. But if you cannot do so, at least keep your earthly goods in such a way as not to be possessed by them; keep them in your possession, so that your heart may not be enslaved by them; make use of the goods of this world, and desire the eternal gifts. Temporal goods help us on the journey of this life, but eternal goods alone are deserving of our continual desires and efforts to possess them. Whatsoever happens in this world ought to be looked upon with indifference, whilst the eyes of our soul are to be continually directed towards the desired eternal' felicity. Let us entirely root out the vices of our heart, so that we may be ready not only to avoid every sinful act, but even to banish the least sinful thought. Then neither the lust of the flesh, nor over-curiosity or desire for honours will keep us away from the Banquet of the Lord. When applying ourselves to honest and necessary occupations, let not our mind be so intent on them, as to give them bur whole heart. You see, therefore, beloved brethren, that you are not asked to forsake all things, but that, though keeping what you possess, you may in spirit deprive yourselves of all things — that is to say, you will make use of earthly things, so as to found all your hopes and desires upon eternal goods. Follow this advice of St. Paul: The time is short; it remaineth, that they that weep, be as though they wept not; and they that rejoice, as if they rejoiced not; and they that buy, as though they possessed not; and they that use this world, as if they used it not; for the fashion of this world passeth away (i Cor vii. 29 and following).

THIRD SUNDAY AFTER PENTECOST.

GOSPEL: Luke xv. 1-10. At that time: The publicans and sinners drew near unto Jesus to hear Him. And the Pharisees and Scribes murmured, saying: This man receiveth sinners, and eateth with them. And He spoke to them this parable, saying: What man of you that hath an hundred sheep, and if he shall lose one of them, doth he not leave the ninety-nine in the desert, and go after that which was lost until he find it? And when he hath found it, lay it upon his shoulders rejoicing; and, coming home, call together his friends and neighbours, saying to them: Rejoice with me, because I have found my sheep that was lost. I say to you, that even so there shall be joy in heaven upon one sinner that doth penance, more than upon ninety-nine just who need not penance. Or what woman, having ten groats, if she lose one groat, doth not light a candle, and sweep the house, and seek diligently until she find it? And when she hath found it, call together her friends and neighbours, saying: Rejoice with me, because I have found the groat which I had lost. So I say to you, there shall be joy before the angels of God upon one sinner doing penance.

HOMILY BY POPE ST. GREGORY, PREACHED IN THE CHURCH OF SS. JOHN AND PAUL ON THE THIRD SUNDAY AFTER PENTECOST.

THIRTY-FOURTH HOMILY ON THE GOSPELS.

I. You have heard, beloved brethren, from the Gospel just read out to you, that the publicans and sinners drew near our Lord, and were received by Him, not only to speak, but also to eat with Him; and the Pharisees and Scribes, seeing this, murmured. Learn from this that true justice is merciful, whereas false justice is full of contempt, though even the just sometimes feel moved with indignation against sinners. However, we distinguish between a feeling of indignation through pride, and another such feeling through love for the law. He that has a true zeal feels indignant against sin, but he despises not the sinner; he feels a holy impatience, but he loses not hope; he will fight against sinners so as yet loving them; and though he will exteriorly punish them with strong words, he will always preserve in his heart the sweetness of love. The just man prefers to himself in his heart those whom he is correcting, and thinks those he judges, better than himself. And, so doing, he preserves discipline in those who are subject to him, and in himself, real humility. Whereas those possessing a false justice, by which they are rendered prouder, have only contempt for others; they spare them not; they are unmerciful to their misery, and thus are the more sinful, because they perceive not that they themselves are sinners. Such were the Pharisees who judged our Lord because He received sinners. Their hearts were mortally dry, whilst they rebuked the very fountain of mercy.

II. Their sickness was so desperate that they recognised not even they were sick. But the heavenly Physician, that they might know of their sickness, applied to them soft ointments by means of a gracious parable, and lanced the abscess of their proud heart. He said: What man of you that hath an hundred sheep, and if he shall lose one of them, doth he not leave the ninety-nine in the desert, and go after that which was lost until he find it? We cannot sufficiently admire the infinite wisdom and goodness of our Redeemer, who in this parable compels man to recognise himself, whilst his Creator's image is placed before him. Consider that one hundred is a perfect number representing angels and men, created by God and being His sheep. You will easily recognise that man is the lost sheep, since through sin he left the life-giving pastures allotted to him by God; and that this lost sheep might be found, the ninety-nine were left in the desert. For our Redeemer left the choirs of the angels in heaven, and came into this, world to His human creatures. Why is heaven compared to a desert? Because man, by his sins, deserted that place created for him. And the angels, prefigured by the other sheep, inhabited that desert, whilst the lost sheep on earth were sought after by the Divine Shepherd. This desert had its beginning, when the number of angels and men, created for the contemplation of the Almighty, was diminished by the transgression of man. The lost sheep on earth were gone after, that the full number of His sheep in heaven might be restored. Thus we see that another Evangelist (Matt, xviii. 12) uses the expression mountains instead of desert, clearly indicating that the angels, dwelling in the highest, are those sheep which remained in the heavenly pastures prepared by their Creator. And when he hath found it, lay it upon his shoulders rejoicing. Do we not recognise in this image our Saviour Himself, who, taking our human nature, burdened Himself with our sins? And, coming home, call together his friends and neighbours, saying to them: Rejoice with me, because I have found my sheep that was lost. After finding' the lost sheep He came home; for after redeeming the human nature, that lost sheep, Jesus Christ returned to His home, the eternal kingdom. There He found His friends and neighbours — that is, the choirs of the angels. They are His friends, for they have continually and faithfully done His will. They are His neighbours, for, walking in His presence, they are enlightened by the rays of His glory. The Divine Shepherd does not say: Rejoice with My sheep, but Rejoice with Me; for His joy is to give us life, and His desire and joy will be complete when we enter His kingdom.

III. This is explained by our Lord Himself: I say to you, that even so there shall be joy in heaven upon one sinner that doth penance, more than upon ninety-nine just who need not penance. Why does our Lord say that heaven will rejoice upon sinners doing penance, more than upon the just who persevere in their justice? It is because, according to our daily experience, the just, not forsaking the ways of justice, are not over anxious to win heaven, since they do not feel themselves burdened with sins, and are free from all unlawful doings. They abstain the less from lawful things, the more convinced they are of their renouncing forbidden things; thus they do not endeavour to attain to higher things, being conscious of their never committing any grievous fault. Whereas sinners, remembering their former vicious life, and penetrated by deep and sincere contrition, return to God with an ardent love. They begin to practise the most heroic virtues, and fight hard for a glorious victory over themselves. They are no longer moved by the pleasures of the world, nor by honours or dignities, but they rejoice in bearing with injustice and iniquities. Their only longing is after heaven, their only desire, to obtain the eternal felicity; and thus they make amends for their former sins by the rich treasure of their merits. Do not wonder, therefore, that there is joy in heaven upon one sinner doing penance, more than upon the just persevering in justice. A soldier who at the first shock of the battle lost heart and ran away, but at once returned with great courage to strike and overwhelm the enemy, will receive from the commander more praise than another who, though not turning his back to the enemy, never showed any act of real courage. Thus also a field, formerly covered with thistles and thorns, but now yielding a rich harvest, will be preferred by the farmer to a soil which, though never covered with thistles, has not been as fertile as the other.

IV. However, we must confess that among the just there are to be found many, who rejoice in heaven more than converted sinners do by their most sincere penance. For there are a great many who, leading a perfectly innocent life, nevertheless punish themselves with great severity, as if they had committed grievous sins. Such Christians renounce all the commodities of life; with heroic contempt they rise above the world; what is lawful seems to them sinful; justly acquired goods are rejected, whilst all visible things are despised in order to ascend to invisible riches. Tears and sighs are their comfort, and humiliations their happiness. And when others are weeping on account of their really sinful actions, they are sorry for the least sinful thought. We conclude, therefore, that such Christians, being really good and innocent, yet reap the merits of severe penance, because they continually practise the most sublime virtues. We may, therefore, recognise how much God rejoices upon the just suffering and humbling themselves for sins they never committed, since He rejoices upon a sinner deeply sorry for his past sins.

V. But, though our Lord said: There shall be joy in heaven upon one sinner that doth penance, the same Lord announces through His prophet: If the just, trusting in his justice, commit iniquity, all his justices shall be forgotten (Ezech xxxiii. 13). Consider the mystery of God's wisdom and goodness, threatening the just with His wrath, should they forsake the road of justice, and at the same time inspiring sinners with hope of forgiveness, provided they forsake and rise from their sins, and do penance. What a mystery! God inspiring the just with fear, lest their justice and good works make them presumptuous, and giving hope and courage to sinners, to prevent them from despairing on account of their sins! Learn, therefore, you good Christians, to fear the justice of God, Who may suffer you to fall, and you, sinners, hope in the mercy of God helping you to rise from your sins. Though oppressed by the burden of their wickedness, the sinners are awaited by Him, Who created them in justice, to rise again. The arms of His mercy are stretched out to receive them as soon as they return to Him. Yet, only a sincere penance can reconcile us to God, and this penance, the qualities of which must be acknowledged, consists in the deep sorrow for sins committed, and the firm purpose of avoiding them in the future. However, he that is repentant for past sins, and is again committing new ones, knows nothing about real penance, or is acting as if he knew nothing. "What does it profit you to be sorry for sins against chastity, if at the same time you are given up to avarice? What advantage will be derived from tears shed about anger, if the fire of envy is not extinguished in your heart?

VI. Our penance will be perfect if, besides true contrition for past sins and sincere purpose not to commit them again, we also abstain from lawful things, in order to satisfy Divine Justice for unlawful actions. It is meet and just to renounce some pleasure, when the great commandments were transgressed. Let me illustrate this by an example taken from Holy Scripture. It was forbidden to covet the neighbour's wife (Exod xx. 17), but the King was not forbidden to impose very difficult tasks on his soldiers, neither to ask for water by the fetching of which they would be exposed to great dangers. But all of you know how King David, yielding to his passions, took away the wife of one of his subjects; how his sin was severely punished, and how he made amends for it by severe penance and bitter tears. A long time afterwards the same King, fighting against his enemies, and suffering terrible thirst, was longing for the living waters of the cisterns at Bethlehem. Some fearless soldiers at once went, in spite of extreme dangers, through the ranks of the enemy, and brought him the longed-for fresh water. But David, reflecting on the great danger to which these soldiers exposed themselves, only to satisfy his desire, was sorry, and at once poured out the water upon the ground before the Lord, to bring Him a sacrifice, and thus to expiate by this generous self-denial the burning desire he had to get water. You see how this repentant and converted sinner deprived himself of the water so ardently desired, whilst he did not mind before that to take the wife of another man, to satisfy his lust. David, therefore, denied to himself the use of a thing allowed by the law, because he remembered the sin he had committed against the law by a forbidden act. Our penance must be of the same kind, if we wish to atone for our sinful actions. Consider also the infinite mercies of God, Who, though seeing us commit sin, bears with us in incomprehensible patience.

VII. It is true, when God had created man, He prohibited sin, yet since man's misfortune of committing sin, God's mercy has never tired in offering him forgiveness. He still calls us, though we give no ear to His voice; we forsake God, and He does not forsake us. This is expressed by Isaias the Prophet, saying: Thy eyes shall see the teacher, and thy ears shall hear the word of one admonishing thee behind thy back (Isa, xxx, 20, 21). Man was created in justice and instructed by his Creator, at Whose countenance he gazed as long as he remained in the state of innocence and accepted His commands. But when he had transgressed these commands, he turned, so to speak, his countenance from His Creator. Yet, this despised and forsaken good God did not cease running after him, following him, and continually beseeching him to return. And this is God's conduct towards us; for when He was despised by us, He nevertheless continued to call us. We offend Him, not listening to His exhortations, and considering His commandments too severe to be obeyed; nevertheless, He invites us to return to Him. His Divine commandments call us, whilst His invincible patience is awaiting us. Beloved brethren, consider a slave who, in his pride, will not listen to your words, who, instead of obeying, will turn his back on you; shall not his impudence be most severely punished? We easily recognise ourselves in this comparison, since by our repeated sins we have turned against God, our Creator, Who, in spite of them, still continues to preserve our life. We have proudly resisted Him, yet, in spite of our contempt, He meekly calls us, and is not only satisfied with remitting us the punishment deserved by our sins, but offers us, as a reward for our return, an eternal happiness in heaven. The most hardened heart ought to be moved by such infinite mercy. Let us also learn, by God's infinite patience after our heinous sins, to be ashamed of our ingratitude, which in justice deserves the most severe punishment.

NINTH SUNDAY AFTER PENTECOST.

GOSPEL: Luke xix. 41-47. At that time: When Jesus drew near to Jerusalem, seeing the city, He wept over it, saying: If thou also hadst known, and that in this thy day, the things that are to thy peace; but now they are hidden from thy eyes. For the days shall come upon thee, and thy enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and straiten thee on every side, and beat thee fiat to the ground, and thy children who are in thee; and they shall not leave in thee a stone upon a stone, because thou hast not known the time of thy visitation. And entering into the temple. He began to cast out them that sold therein and them that bought, saying to them: It is written: My house is the house of prayer; but you have made it a den of thieves. And He was teaching daily in the temple.

HOMILY BY POPE ST. GREGORY, PREACHED IN THE BASILICA OF ST. JOHN, CALLED THE CONSTANTINE.

THIRTY-NINTH HOMILY ON THE GOSPELS.

I. No one, that has read the history of the destruction of Jerusalem by the Roman princes Vespasian and Titus, can be ignorant of the fact that the Lord spoke of this destruction, when He wept over the ruin of that city. These princes were pointed at when He said: For the days shall come upon thee; and thy enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and straiten thee on every side, and beat thee flat to the ground, and thy children who are in thee. And the truth of what follows, they shall not leave in thee a stone upon a stone, is even now fulfilled by the change of site of the city, which has been rebuilt round about the place without the gates, where the Lord was crucified, whilst the ancient city, as I am told, has been destroyed down to the very foundations. And a little after the preceding words we find what the sin of Jerusalem was, which brought upon her the punishment of this destruction: Because thou hast not known the time of thy visitation. The Creator of all things was pleased to visit her through the mystery of the Incarnation, but she remembered not to fear or to love Him. Hence, also, the prophet Jeremias, rebuking man's hardness of heart, calls the birds of the air to testify against it, and says The kite in the air hath known her time, the turtle, and the swallow, and the stork have observed the time of their coming; but My people have not known the judgment of the Lord (Jer viii. 7). The Saviour wept over the ruin of the faithless city, while she herself knew not that it was coming. If thou also hadst known, He said, even thou; and we may understand Him to have meant, 'Thou wouldst have wept, instead of making merry, as thou now dost, not knowing what is hanging over thee.' And he added, at least in this thy day, the things that are to thy peace. While she was giving herself up to carnal pleasures, and never looked forward to the coming sorrows, she had still for a day in her power the things which might have brought peace to her. But now they are hidden from thy eyes, says the Lord. For, had the misfortunes threatening her been known, she would not have founded her hope and happiness upon that prosperous state by which she was deceived. And for this reason were foretold to her by the Redeemer all the evils she had later on to bear from the Roman army., II. And as we see Jerusalem destroyed, and the temple, once the abode of thieves before our Lord had cast them out, now a mass of ruins, do we not perceive in these ruins an image of the spiritual destruction of our own moral conduct, destruction which we have every reason to be afraid of? Seeing the city, He wept over it. Indeed, our Lord once wept over Jerusalem and foretold her ruin; and He does the same every day, since He and His ministers and elect behold how some souls forsake the road to holiness and give themselves up to corrupt ways. He laments the blindness of these people, who ignore His lamentations and confirm the words of Solomon: Who are glad when they have done evil and rejoice in the most wicked things (Prov ii. 14). For should these wicked people recognise their impending damnation, they would shed tears with the good Christians, who bewail their destruction. In all truth we may apply to such souls running to their perdition these words of Jesus: If thou also hadst known, and that in this thy day, the things that are to thy peace; but now they are hidden from thy eyes. These perverse souls, thinking only of the present time, and looking at this time, which quickly passes away, as their happiest days, seem to find true peace in earthly pleasures. Amidst the perishable things of this world by which they are dazzled — honours, puffing them up, carnal lust by which they are carried away with delight — such souls are in peace, and will not be disturbed by anything on the peaceful and bright day that destroys in their memory the fear of the terrible punishments awaiting them. But another, a different day will throw such souls into the eternal damnation, when they will see themselves in great affliction, whilst the just will be overwhelmed with joy and comfort; for on that terrible day the sweetness tasted now will be changed into bitterness and wrath. Then the reprobate souls will turn their anger and fury against themselves; they will upbraid themselves for not being terrified by the terrible condemnation threatened by God, and for having shut their eyes so as not to foresee the punishments heaped up and reserved for their unhappy future. Therefore it is said: But now they are hidden from thy eyes. Giving themselves entirely up to earthly things and rushing after the pleasures of this life, these souls cannot see the misery following their footsteps. And should the consideration of the future inspire such souls with fear, amidst the worldly pleasures they dismiss such a terrible sight from their mind, and blindfoldly rush amid frivolous amusements towards the everlasting flames. The wise man was right when he said: In the day of good things he not unmindful of evils; and in the day of evils he not unmindful of good things (Ecclus xi. 27). And St. Paul says: And they that rejoice be as if they rejoiced not (1 Cor vii. 30). Though it be lawful to rejoice in this world, the fear of the coming judgment should not forsake us; then our soul, at the sight of the Lord's wrath, would be penetrated with terror, be moderate in the pleasures of life, and would courageously look forward to the beginning of the great day. Blessed is the man, says Solomon, that is always fearful; but he that is hardened in mind shall fall into evil (Prov xxviii. 14). Meanwhile the wrath of God will be the more terrible on that fearful day, the less we now fear to irritate Him by our sins.

III. Our Lord continues the history of the evils befalling Jerusalem, saying: For the days shall come upon thee, and thy enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and straiten thee on every side. Who are these enemies but the devils, our sworn foes, laying snares to our soul which, by their allurements, is kept up in the love of the pleasures of this life, but will be besieged by them at the moment when it has to leave the body? Indeed, we may say that at the moment of our death the devil will make to himself a trench of our sins, and compass us round, and thus drag our soul down into hell. In that unhappy moment the sinful soul will ‘be straitened on every side by this cruel enemy, without any hope of escaping, since the time for doing penance or good works, neglected during life, will now be passed. Truly it maybe said of that poor soul, that it is attacked by the enemy on every side, for not only the wicked actions, but also the bad thoughts and desires, are brought up against it. In that day all their thoughts shall perish (Ps cxlv, 4). And these thoughts may be compared to stones, for our Lord said: And they shall not leave in thee a stone upon a stone, The perverse mind and the wicked thoughts form, so to speak, stones upon stones, and the more so, since that poor soul made such bad use of its former freedom.

IV. And what was the cause of that great evil? Listen to our Lord, saying: Because thou hast not known the time of thy visitation. Almighty God visits the soul of the sinner in different ways: now He announces by His ministers the great and Divine truths; now He chastises that soul with the scourges of His justice; again He meets that soul in a wonderful manner with His richest blessings. Acting thus, and making use of different means, God endeavours to convince that soul of the eternal truths so long unknown to it. When the word of God is not powerful enough to convert that soul; when the severity of His punishments cannot humble it, nor conquer its hardness; when all these means have been useless, then the infinitely merciful God sometimes pours out His blessings with a generous hand, that the ingratitude of the sinful soul might perhaps put it to shame. But should this soul wilfully refuse to recognise the time of visitation, then God will give it over to its enemies, with whom it must suffer the pains of damnation. Let us, therefore, make good use of the advice given by our Lord: When thou goest with thy adversary to the prince, whilst thou art in the way endeavour to be delivered from him; lest perhaps he draw thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the exacter, and the exacter cast thee into prison (Luke xii. 58). This adversary, spoken of here, is the word of God, by which our passions are continually opposed during life. If the sinner humbly submits to the commands of this adversary, and faithfully obeys them, he shall be delivered from his persecutions. Whereas if he does not endeavour to be delivered in this manner, he will be drawn to the judge, and by him delivered to the officer of justice. The word of God, now despised by the sinner, will witness against him before the judgment-seat of the Almighty. He will be delivered by his Judge to the officer of His wrath — that is, the devil — by whom the poor sinner will be tortured with so much greater fury, the easier he had yielded during life to all vicious temptations. When it is said that the sinful soul will be cast into prison by the officer of justice, this means that it will be kept in hell until the day of the last judgment, when the bodies of the damned united with their souls, will be cast into the everlasting flames, there to suffer with the infernal spirits.

V. Our Lord, after ending the description of the destruction of the unhappy city, which is applied to the perdition of a sinful soul, entering into the temple, He began to cast out them that sold therein, and them that bought. This temple is also an image of a Christian soul, for our conscience is the temple and house of God. Yet, when the human mind is filled with sinful thoughts against the neighbour, it becomes like a den of thieves and murderers; for such a soul is armed with murderous designs against simple and innocent Christians, and discharges its arrows for their destruction. Thus our soul, deprived of innocence and simplicity of justice, instead of being a house of prayer and meditation, becomes a den of thieves, as it is to others a cause of scandal and perdition. According to the Gospel, He was teaching daily in the temple. This certainly means that He is still continuing to teach — that is, that He is teaching daily in the temple, enlightening the souls of the faithful, and showing them how to avoid sin. However, we ought to know that we shall be powerfully instructed in the truth, only when the future evils we ought to be afraid of are continually placed before our eyes, and that we endeavour to avoid them, never losing sight of these words of wisdom: In all thy works remember the last end, and thou shalt never sin (Ecclus vii. 40).. So let us, then, every day consider these words Jesus addressed to us: If thou hadst known, and that in this thy day, the things that are to thy peace; but now they are hidden from thy eyes. And since that severe Judge still patiently bears with us, and does not stretch out His arm to strike us; since the day of His wrath seems to be far off, let us think of the great calamities following that day, and let us endeavour to avoid them by being sorry for our sins. Let us despise the pleasures of the present life, and let us never be dazzled by its sinful amusements; then we shall not be dragged into the deep abyss now hidden by them from our eyes.

NINETEENTH SUNDAY AFTER PENTECOST.

GOSPEL: Matt xxii. 1-14. At that time; Jesus spoke to the chief priests and Pharisees in parables, saying: The kingdom of heaven is likened to a king, who made a marriage for his son. And he sent his servants to call them that were invited to the marriage; and they would not come. Again he sent, other servants, saying: Tell them that were invited: Behold I have prepared my dinner; my beeves and failings are killed, and all things are ready: come ye to the marriage. But they neglected, and went their ways, one to his farm and another to his merchandise. And the rest laid hands on his servants, and, having treated them contumeliously, put them to death. But when the king had heard of it, he was angry, and, sending his armies, he destroyed those murderers, and burnt their city. Then he said to his servants: The marriage, indeed, is ready; but they that were invited were not worthy. Go ye, therefore, into the highways, and as many as you shall find, call to the marriage. And his servants, going forth into the ways, gathered together all they found, both bad and good; and the marriage was filled with guests. And the king went in to see the guests, and he saw there a man who had not on a wedding garment. And he saith to him: Friend, how earnest thou in hither, not having on a wedding garment? But he was silent. Then the king said to the waiters: Bind his hands and his feet, and cast him into the exterior darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. For many are called, but few are chosen.

HOMILY BY POPE ST. GREGORY, PREACHED IN THE CHURCH OF THE HOLY MARTYR CLEMENT.

THIRTY-EIGHTH HOMILY ON THE GOSPELS,

I. I remember having often said that in the holy Gospel the Church of God, as she is now, is called the kingdom of heaven, for the kingdom of heaven is indeed the assembly of the just. The Lord said by the mouth of His prophet: Heaven is My throne (Isa lxvi i). Solomon says: The soul of the just is the throne of wisdom (Wisd vii. 27); and Paul says: Christ is the power of God and the wisdom of God (1 Cor i. 24). From these passages we may clearly infer that, if wisdom be God, and wisdom's throne the soul of the just, and God's throne the heaven, then the soul of the just is heaven. Hence the Psalmist, speaking of holy preachers, says: The heavens show forth the glory of God (Ps xviii. 1). The kingdom of heaven, therefore, is the Church of the just — that is, of those whose hearts seek not for anything upon earth, but who so sigh for the things that are above, that God does already reign in them, as He reigns in heaven. Let it, then, be said: The kingdom of heaven is likened to a king, who made a marriage for his son. You understand, beloved brethren, Who is this Royal Father of a Royal Son. It is indeed He to Whom the Psalmist says: Give to the King Thy judgment, O God, and to the King's son Thy justice (Ps lxxi. 2) — Who made a marriage for His Son. God the Father made a marriage for God the Son, when He wedded Him to the human nature in the womb of the Virgin, when He willed that He, Who is God before all ages, should become Man in the end of the ages.

II. The union of two persons forms the marriage union; but God forbid that we should imagine that the one Person of our Redeemer Jesus Christ, Who is both God and Man, is formed by the union of a human person with a Divine Person. We profess that He is of and in two natures; but we shrink from the blasphemy of saying that in Him there are two persons. It will be clearer and safer to say that the marriage made by the Father for His Royal Son, was the joining Him, through the mystery of the Incarnation, to His mystic Bride, the Holy Church, and that the womb of the Virgin Mother was the bridal chamber in which this union took place. Hence it is that the Psalmist says: He hath set His tabernacle in the sun, and He as a bridegroom coming out of His bride-chamber (Ps xviii. 6). Indeed, the Divine Redeemer came out of the purest womb of the Virgin, to unite Himself with the Church chosen by Him as His Bride. He sent out His servants to call His friends that were invited to the marriage. He sent them out twice, to give us to understand that the preachers of the great mystery of the Incarnation of the Son of God were first the prophets and after them the Apostles. The former announced this great mystery in prophecies only, whilst the latter preached to the nations announcing the same, yet being now fulfilled. The proof that the first invited refused to come to the marriage feast is contained in the words addressed to the second: Behold, I have prepared my dinner; my beeves and failings are killed, and all things are ready. Come ye to the marriage. No mention of this fact was made in the first invitation; but afterwards it was said that the beeves and fatlings were killed, that everything was ready. For when we refuse to hear the words of God, He shows us by examples that, what we think impossible, becomes easy, as soon as we understand that others were able to do the things to which He invites us.

III. The invited guests neglected the invitation, according to the words of the Gospel, and went their ways, one to his farm, and another to his merchandise. The one going to his farm is a type of those persons entirely bent on this world's business, whilst the other one represents those who give themselves up to temporal gains and profits. Now, since these two kinds of persons are intent on the cares and goods of this world only, they give no thought to the mystery of God made Man for the salvation of man;

neither do they think of conforming their lives to the life of Jesus. It is, therefore, on account of these worldly goods and worldly interests that they refuse to come to the marriage. But what is still worse, they not only refuse to come, but despise the grace of God inviting them; for it is said: They laid hands on His servants, and, having treated them contumeliously, put them to death.

IV. But when the King had heard of it, He was angry, and, sending His armies, He destroyed those murderers, and burnt their city. He strikes the persecutors, and destroys the murderers. He burns their city — that is, the bodies, in which dwell these sinful souls, will be cast with them, into the everlasting fire. The armies, sent to destroy the murderers, are the Angels of God sent with His thunderbolts to take revenge. For what are the hosts of Angels but the armies of our eternal King? Hence God is called the Lord of Sabaoth, and Sabaoth means hosts — the Lord of hosts (Isa i. 9). The armies of God are composed of the countless multitudes of Angels ordered by God to execute the sentences pronounced against His enemies, and to destroy them. Our fathers heard the Son of God threatening the world with these terrible punishments, and we, their children, have witnessed their fulfilment. Where are now the cruel persecutors of so many holy Martyrs? Where are the proud princes who lifted up their arrogant heads against God, and boasted of their worldly glory? By the death of the holy Martyrs the Christian faith has been spread abroad throughout the whole world; whereas the remembrance even of their persecutors has disappeared with their sudden death. Behold the terrible effects of God's wrath, which is spoken of in the parables of our Lord!

V. And the King, Who invites guests to the marriage of His Son, will easily fill the places of those who refuse to come. For should the word of God remain fruitless in many, it will yet find docile and ready hearts making good use of it. We read: Then he said to his servants: The marriage indeed is ready, but they that were invited were not worthy. Go ye, therefore, into the highways; and as many as you shall find, call to the marriage. And our Lord continues in the parable: And his servants, going forth into the ways, gathered together all they found, both bad and good, and the marriage was filled with guests. In these different kinds of persons brought to the marriage is seen an image of the Church, including both good and bad Christians. Are you among the good? then during all your life bear generously the presence of the bad. Be not frightened at the enormous number of the wicked, nor saddened by the small number of the just; for wide is the gate and broad the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there are who go in thereat. How narrow is the gate, and strait is the way that leadeth to life; and few there are that find it l (Matt vii. 13,14).

VI. The King, says the Gospel, went in to see the guests, and he saw there a man who had not on a wedding garment. What is the meaning of this wedding garment? It is charity.

He that came to the marriage without a wedding garment had indeed the true faith, but he had not charity. It was with the garment of love that the Son of God came to celebrate the marriage union with His Bride, the Church, and in this bond of love He continues to be united with His elect. Thus St. John says: God so loved the world, as to give His only begotten Son (John iii, 16). Our Saviour, having come to us in love, indicates clearly enough that the wedding garment, in which we are to appear at His marriage-feast, is true charity. Those among you, who believe and belong to the communion of the Church, but have not charity, are in the marriage-hall indeed, but are not covered with the wedding garment. When you are invited to a wedding, beloved brethren, do you not take off your everyday garments and put on your best? By this you intend to show the great interest you take in the happiness and joy of the bride and bridegroom. You dare not appear in garments by which you would be despised by the other guests.

Yet, it is God Who invites you to His marriage feast, and you appear without the garment of love. Heaven resounds with songs of praise of the angelic choirs, when the elect are received into their company; but you, assisting by faith at their festivities — you are not ashamed to appear without the wedding garment of love, by which alone you find favour with God and His Angels.

TWENTIETH SUNDAY AFTER PENTECOST.

GOSPEL: John iv, 46-53. At that time: There was a certain ruler, whose son was sick at Capharnaum. He, having heard that Jesus was come from Judea into Galilee^ went to Him, and prayed Him to come down and heal his son, for he was at the point of death. Jesus therefore said unto him: Unless you see signs and wonders, you believe not. The ruler saith to Him: Lord, come down before that my son die. Jesus saith to him: Go thy way; thy son liveth. The man believed the word which Jesus said to him, and went his way. And as he was going down, his servants met him, and they brought word, saying that his son lived. He asked, therefore, of them the hour wherein he grew better. And they said to him: Yesterday at the seventh hour the fever left him. The father, therefore, knew that it was at the same hour that Jesus said to him: Thy son liveth; and himself believed and his whole house.

HOMILY BY POPE ST. GREGORY, PREACHED IN THE CHURCH OF SS. NEREUS AND ACHILLES ON THEIR FESTIVAL.

TWENTY-EIGHTH HOMILY ON THE GOSPELS.

I. The Gospel lesson which you have just heard, my brethren, stands in need of no explanation. However, lest I should seem to pass it by in idle silence, I will say a few words thereon, but that rather by way of exhortation than of explanation. Indeed, there seems to me to be but one point calling for explanation, namely, this: When the ruler came to Jesus and besought Him to come down and heal his son, how is it that he heard Jesus say: Unless you see signs and wonders, you believe not? The very fact that the ruler came and asked Jesus to heal his son is a proof that he believed. Had he not believed Him to be a Saviour, he would not have asked Him to save his son. Yet Jesus said: Unless you see signs and wonders, you believe not. He had not seen any signs, yet he believed. Now, think of his prayer, and you will clearly understand wherein his faith was weak. He prayed Him that He would come down and heal his son. He asked for the corporal presence of Him Who is spiritually present everywhere. He did not believe enough in Jesus, since he thought His bodily presence was required for the healing of his son. Had his faith been perfect, he would doubtless have known that God is everywhere. His faith was, therefore, imperfect for attributing the virtue of healing, not to Christ's Majesty, but to His bodily presence. Thus, even while he was asking for his son's health, his faith was not yet sound. He believed concerning Him, Whom he had come to ask, that He was mighty enough to save, yet he thought that at that very moment Jesus was absent from his son. But the Lord, being asked to go, showed that He is there, wherever He is called on; and He gave health by a single command, He Who by a single act of His will had created all things.

II. What we are to consider in this case is the answer given by Jesus, on another occasion, to the centurion asking Him to heal his servant grievously tormented by the palsy. According to the Evangelist, our Lord said: I will come and heal him (Matt viii. 7). How is it that our Lord, being asked by the ruler to come to his house and heal his son, refused to go, whereas He promised the centurion to go down and heal his servant, though He had not been asked to come down and see that servant? The reason is that the Lord wished to put down our pride, that sees and esteems in others their dignities and riches, more than their nature, the image of God. Indeed, when we consider man in the things without, like riches and honours, we do not see what he is in himself, neither do we know his real merit, when considering only his body, that seems contemptible on account of its infirmities.

Our Saviour judges differently. To give us to understand that whatsoever seems great in the eyes of the world, is often low and contemptible, and whatsoever is despicable in the estimation of the worldly-minded, is not so before God, He goes to the servant of the centurion, whilst refusing to visit the son of the ruler.

III. Indeed, should we be asked by a servant to go down to him, our pride would tell us not to do such a thing. To yield to his prayer would be to lower ourselves, to esteem our honour very little; certainly such a place as the dwelling of an humble menial does not deserve this condescension. Yet there we see God Himself coming down from heaven, and not despising to go to a poor servant, whilst we, being nothing but living dust, feel great difficulty in humbling ourselves. We are the more to be despised, since, wishing to guard our honour before the world, we fear not the eyes of that Divine Majesty searching the thoughts and hearts of men. Hence the Son of God said to the Pharisees: You are they who justify yourselves before men; but God knoweth your hearts; for that which is high before men, is an abomination before God (Luke xvi. 15). Carefully consider those words, beloved brethren. If it is true that the things which seem great to men, are abominable before God, then our conclusion will be that our thoughts are despised by God, as much as they are esteemed by men. Humility produces a different effect, since it makes us the greater before God, the less we are considered by men. Now let us look at our doings; let not even our most praiseworthy undertakings flatter our pride; neither let our vanity be tickled by honours and riches. For if we are puffed up by our possessions, whatsoever they may be, we shall be despised by God. Speaking of the humble, the Psalmist says: The Lord is the keeper of little ones (Ps cxiv. 6). The little ones are the humble. And, speaking of his own experience, he adds: I was humbled, and He delivered me (ibid.), IV. Now, consider these truths well, beloved brethren, and carefully ponder on them. When honouring your brethren, look not so much at their perishable riches, as at the fact that men are the image and likeness of God, their Creator. Honour them for the sake of God. Yet this will not be possible, as long as your proud thoughts are not banished from your hearts. He that esteems himself on account of passing things cannot honour another for his durable goods. Consider as nothing what you have, but think of what you are, for the world you love will one day perish. The Saints, before whose tomb we are now standing, despised the flowers brought forth by the world, and trampled upon them. A long life, good health, a prosperous state, a numerous posterity, tranquillity in continual peace, were flowers at which their hearts did not rejoice; they blossomed in the world, but in their own hearts they were withered. Like a tree drying up before our eyes, the world is getting weaker and darker, yet it is still blossoming in our hearts and minds. Everywhere there is death, everywhere mourning, everywhere desolation! We are struck from all sides; we are filled with bitterness; nevertheless, with lamentable blindness, we desire and love the bitter fruits of carnal concupiscence. The world flies away, and we run after it; it is shaken under our feet, and we cling to it; and since we cannot prevent its fall, we still take hold of it, and are thrown into the same abyss. At the beginning we were attracted by the deceitful world; now, seeing it is so full of scourges and misery, we ought to be brought back to God by this very world. Reflect upon all this, and know that the things disappearing in time are to be considered as nothing. By the fall of all the things once existing in the world, we understand that they were but a shadow now vanished, for they are destroyed. The ruins of those splendid monuments, which once were thought of as defying all future times, clearly tell us that nothing is durable in this world. These are subjects worthy of your meditations; such thoughts will encourage you to have only contempt for worldly greatness, and to desire what is eternal. They will also help you to obtain that eternal glory revealed to you by faith through the grace of Jesus Christ our Lord, Who, with the Father and the Holy Ghost, liveth and reigneth one God, world without end. Amen.

CAPUT PRIMUM.

Opus subsequens quando inchoatum, qua occasione, quibus hortatoribus, quidve rogitantibus. 1 Reverendissimo et sanctissimo fratri Leandro coepiscopo, Gregorius servus servorum Dei. Dudum te, frater beatissime, in Constantinopolitana urbe cognoscens, cum me illic sedis apostolicae responsa constringerent, et te illuc injuncta pro causis fidei Visigothorum legatio perduxisset, omne in tuis auribus, quod mihi de me displicebat, exposui: quoniam diu longeque conversionis gratiam distuli, et postquam coelesti sum desiderio afflatus saeculari habitu contegi melius putavi (Joan. Diac., l. I, c. 27). Aperiebatur enim mihi jam de aeternitatis amore quid quaererem, sed inolita me consuetudo devinxerat, ne 2 exteriorem cultum mutarem. Cumque adhuc me cogeret animus praesenti mundo quasi specie tenus deservire, coeperunt multa contra me ex ejusdem mundi cura succrescere, ut in eo jam non specie, sed, quod est gravius, mente retinerer. Quae tandem cuncta sollicite fugiens, portum monasterii petii, et relictis quae mundi sunt, ut frustra tunc credidi, ex hujus vitae naufragio nudus evasi. Quia enim plerumque navem incaute religatam, etiam de sinu tutissimi littoris unda excutit, cum tempestas excrescit, repente me, sub praetextu ecclesiastici ordinis, in causarum saecularium pelago reperi; et quietem monasterii, quia habendo non fortiter tenui, quam stricte tenenda fuerit, perdendo cognovi. Nam cum mihi ad percipiendum sacri altaris ministerium, obedientiae virtus opponitur, hoc sub Ecclesiae colore susceptum est, quod 3 si inulte liceat, iterum fugiendo deflectatur. Postque hoc nolenti mihi atque renitenti, cum grave esset altaris ministerium, etiam pondus est curae pastoralis injunctum. Quod tanto nunc durius tolero, quanto me ei imparem sentiens, in nulla fiduciae consolatione respiro. Quia enim mundi jam tempora, malis crebrescentibus, termino propinquante turbata sunt; ipsi nos, qui internis mysteriis deservire credimur, curis exterioribus implicamur: sicut eo quoque tempore, quo ad ministerium altaris accessi, hoc de me, ignorante me, actum est, ut sacri ordinis pondus acciperem, quatenus in terreno palatio licentius excubarem; ubi me scilicet multi ex monasterio fratres mei, germana vincti charitate, secuti sunt. Quod divina factum dispensatione conspicio, ut eorum semper exemplo ad orationis placidum littus, quasi anchorae fune restringerer, cum causarum saecularium incessabili impulsu fluctuarem. Ad illorum quippe consortium, velut ad tutissimi portus sinum, terreni actus volumina fluctusque fugiebam; et licet illud me ministerium ex monasterio abstractum, a pristinae quietis vita, mucrone suae occupationis exstinxerat; inter eos tamen per studiosae lectionis alloquium, quotidianae me aspiratio compunctionis animabat. Tunc eisdem fratribus, etiam cogente te, placuit, sicut ipse meministi, ut librum beati Job exponere importuna me petitione compellerent; et prout veritas vires infunderet, eis mysteria tantae profunditatis aperirem. Qui hoc quoque mihi in onere suae petitionis addiderunt, ut non solum verba historiae per allegoriarum sensus excuterem, sed allegoriarum sensus protinus in exercitium moralitatis inclinarem; adhuc aliquid gravius adjungentes, ut intellecta quaeque testimoniis cingerem; et prolata testimonia, si implicita fortasse viderentur, interpositione superadditae expositionis enodarem.

CAPUT II.

Qua animi demissione, qua in Deum fiducia. Idem opus qua ratione retractatum, absolutum ac divisum. Quos rimetur sensus. — Mox vero, ut in obscuro hoc opere, atque ante nos hactenus indiscusso, ad tanta me pertrahi

ac talia cognovi, solo auditus pondere victus, fateor, lassatusque succubui. Sed repente inter formidinem devotionemque deprehensus, cum in largitorem munerum oculos mentis attollerem, cunctatione postposita, illico certus attendi, quia impossibile esse non poterat, quod de fraternis mihi cordibus charitas imperabat. Fore quippe idoneum me ad ista desperavi: sed ipsa mei desperatione robustior, ad illum spem protinus erexi, per quem aperta est lingua mutorum, qui linguas infantium facit disertas (Sap. X, 21); qui immensos brutosque asinae ruditus, per sensatos humani colloquii distinxit modos. Quid igitur mirum, si intellectum stulto homini praebeat, qui veritatem suam, cum voluerit, etiam per ora jumentorum narrat (Num. XXII, 28)? Hujus ergo robore considerationis accinctus, ariditatem meam ad indagandum fontem tantae profunditatis excitavi. Et quamvis eorum, quibus exponere compellebar, longe me vita transcenderet, injuriosum tamen esse non credidi, si fluenta usibus hominum plumbi fistula ministraret. Unde mox eisdem coram positis fratribus, priora libri sub oculis dixi; et quia tempus paulo vacantius reperi, posteriora tractando 4 dictavi. Cumque mihi spatia largiora suppeterent, multa augens, pauca subtrahens, atque ita ut inventa sunt, nonnulla derelinquens, ea quae me loquente excepta sub oculis fuerant, per libros emendando composui, quia et cum postrema dictarem, quo stylo prima dixeram, sollicite attendi. Egi ergo, ut et ea quae locutus sum, studiosa emendatione transcurrens, quasi ad similitudinem dictatus erigerem; et ea quae dictaveram, non longe a colloquentis sermone discreparent; quatenus dum hoc tenditur, illud attrahitur, edita modo dissimili res non dissimilis formaretur; quamvis tertiam hujus operis partem ut colloquendo protuli, pene ita dereliqui, quia cum me fratres ad alia pertrahunt, hanc subtilius emendari noluerunt. Quibus nimirum multa jubentibus, dum parere modo per expositionis ministerium, modo per contemplationis ascensum, modo per moralitatis instrumentum volui, opus hoc per triginta et quinque volumina extensum, in sex Codicibus explevi. Unde et in eo saepe quasi postponere ordinem expositionis invenior, et paulo diutius contemplationis latitudini ac moralitatis insudo. Sed tamen quisquis de Deo loquitur, curet necesse est ut quidquid audientium mores instruit, rimetur; et hunc rectum loquendi ordinem deputet, si cum opportunitas aedificationis exigit, ab eo se, quod loqui coeperat, utiliter derivet. Sacri enim tractator eloquii morem fluminis debet imitari. Fluvius quippe dum per alveum defluit, si valles concavas ex latere contingit, in eas protinus sui impetus cursum divertit; cumque illas sufficienter impleverit, repente sese in alveum refundit. Sic nimirum, sic divini verbi esse tractator debet, ut cum de qualibet re disserit, si fortasse juxta positam occasionem congruae aedificationis invenerit, quasi ad vicinam vallem linguae undas intorqueat; et cum subjunctae instructionis campum sufficienter infuderit, ad sermonis propositi alveum recurrat.

CAPUT III.

Quo ordine singulos sensus explicet. Allegorico interdum necessario inhaerendum. — Sciendum vero est, quod quaedam historica expositione transcurrimus, et per allegoriam quaedam typica investigatione perscrutamur; quaedam per sola allegoricae moralitatis instrumenta discutimus; nonnulla autem per cuncta simul sollicitius exquirentes, tripliciter indagamus. Nam primum quidem fundamenta historiae ponimus; deinde per significationem typicam in arcem fidei fabricam mentis erigimus; ad extremum quoque per moralitatis gratiam, quasi superducto aedificium colore vestimus. Vel certe quid veritatis dicta, nisi reficiendae mentis alimenta credenda sunt? Quae modis alternantibus multipliciter disserendo, ferculum ori offerimus; ut invitati lectoris quasi convivae nostri fastidium repellamus, qui dum sibi multa oblata considerat, quod elegantius decernit, assumat. Aliquando vero exponere aperta historiae verba negligimus, ne tardius ad obscura veniamus: aliquando autem intelligi juxta litteram nequeunt; quia superficie tenus accepta, nequaquam instructionem legentibus, sed errorem gignunt. Ecce etenim dicitur: Sub quo curvantur qui portant orbem (Job. IX, 13). Et de tanto viro quis nesciat quod nequaquam vanas poetarum fabulas sequitur, ut 5 mundi molem subvehi giganteo sudore suspicetur? Qui rursum pressus percussionibus dicit: Elegit suspendium anima mea, et mortem ossa mea (Job. VII, 15). Et quis rectum sapiens credat virum tanti praeconii, quem videlicet constat ab interno judice praemia pro patientiae virtute recipere, decrevisse inter verbera suspendio vitam finire? Aliquando etiam, ne fortasse intelligi juxta litteram debeant, ipsa se verba litterae impugnant. Ait namque: Pereat dies in qua natus sum, et nox in qua dictum est: Conceptus est homo (Job. III, 2). Et paulo post subjicit: Occupet eam caligo, et involvatur amaritudine (Ibid., 5). Atque in ejusdem noctis maledictione subjungit: Sit nox illa solitaria (Ib., 7). Qui nimirum nativitatis dies, ipso impulsu temporis evolutus, stare non poterat. Quo igitur pacto hunc involvi caligine optabat? Elapsus quippe, jam non erat; et tamen si in rerum natura subsisteret, sentire amaritudinem nequaquam posset. Constat ergo quod nullo modo de die insensibili dicitur, qui sensu percuti amaritudinis optatur. Et si conceptionis nox reliquis noctibus conjuncta discesserat, quo pacto hanc fieri solitariam exoptat? Quae ut a lapsu temporis figi non potuit, ita etiam nec a reliquarum noctium conjunctione separari. Qui rursum dicit: Usquequo non parcis mihi, nec dimittis me, ut glutiam salivam meam (Job. VII, 19)? Et tamen paulo superius dixerat: Quae prius tangere nolebat anima mea, nunc prae angustia cibi mei sunt (Job. VI, 7). Quis autem nesciat salivam facilius posse glutiri quam cibum? Qui itaque se sumere cibum denuntiat, incredibile est valde quo ordine glutire posse salivam negat. Atque iterum dicit: Peccavi, quid faciam tibi, o custos hominum (Job. VII, 20)? vel certe: Consumere me vis peccatis adolescentiae meae (Job. XIII, 26)? Et tamen alia responsione subjungit: Neque enim reprehendit me cor meum in omni vita mea (Job.

XXVII, 6). Quo igitur pacto a corde suo minime in omni vita reprehenditur, qui peccasse se publica voce testatur? Neque enim simul unquam conveniunt culpa operis, et irreprehensibilitas cordis. Sed nimirum verba litterae, dum collata sibi convenire nequeunt, aliud in se aliquid quod quaeratur ostendunt, ac si quibusdam vocibus dicant: Dum nostra nos conspicitis superficie destrui, hoc in nobis quaerite, quod ordinatum sibique congruens apud nos valeat intus inveniri.

CAPUT IV.

Aliquando litterali sensui inhaerendum. — Aliquando autem qui verba accipere historiae juxta litteram negligit, oblatum sibi veritatis lumen abscondit; cumque laboriose invenire in eis aliud intrinsecus appetit, hoc quod foris sine difficultate assequi poterat, amittit. Sanctus namque vir dicit: Si negavi quod volebant pauperibus, et oculos viduae exspectare feci; si comedi buccellam meam solus, et non comedit pupillus ex ea; si despexi praetereuntem, eo quod non habuerit indumentum, et absque operimento pauperem; si non benedixerunt mihi latera ejus, et de velleribus ovium mearum calefactus est (Job. XXXI, 16 et seq.). Quae videlicet si ad allegoriae sensum violenter inflectimus, cuncta ejus misericordiae facta vacuamus. Divinus etenim sermo sicut mysteriis prudentes exercet, sic plerumque superficie simplices refovet. Habet in publico unde parvulos nutriat, servat in secreto unde mentes sublimium in admiratione suspendat. Quasi quidam quippe est 6 fluvius, ut ita dixerim, planus et altus, in quo et agnus ambulet, et elephas natet. Ut ergo uniuscujusque loci opportunitas postulat, ita se per studium expositionis ordo immutat; quatenus tanto verius sensum divinae locutionis inveniat, quanto ut res quaeque exegerit, per causarum species alternat.

CAPUT V.

Gregorius aegritudine laborans opus sequens perfecit. Artem loquendi neglexit. Quibus utatur Scripturae versionibus. — Quam videlicet expositionem recensendam tuae beatitudini, non quia velut dignam debui, sed quia te petente memini promisisse, transmisi. In qua quidquid tua sanctitas tepidum incultumque repererit, tanto mihi celerrime indulgeat, quanto hoc me aegrum dicere non ignorat. Nam dum molestia corpus atteritur, affecta mente etiam dicendi studia languescunt. Multa quippe annorum jam curricula devolvuntur, quod crebris viscerum doloribus crucior, horis momentisque omnibus fracta stomachi virtute lassesco, lentis quidem, sed tamen continuis febribus anhelo. Interque haec dum sollicitus penso quia, Scriptura teste, Omnis filius qui a Deo recipitur, flagellatur (Hebr. XII, 6), quo malis praesentibus durius deprimor, eo de aeterna certius praesumptione respiro. Et fortasse hoc divinae providentiae consilium fuit, ut percussum Job percussus exponerem, et flagellati mentem melius per flagella sentirem. Sed tamen recte considerantibus liquet, quia adversitate non modica laboris mei studiis in hoc molestia corporalis obsistit, quod carnis virtus cum locutionis ministerium exhibere vix sufficit, mens digne non potest intimare quod sentit. Quid namque est officium corporis, nisi organum cordis? Et quamlibet peritus sit cantandi artifex, explere artem non valet, nisi ad hanc sibi et ministeria exteriora concordent: quia nimirum canticum, quod docta manus imperat, quassata organa proprie non resultant; nec artem flatus exprimit, si scissa rimis fistula stridet. Quanto itaque gravius expositionis meae qualitas premitur, in qua dicendi gratiam sic fractura organi dissipat, ut hanc peritiae ars nulla componat? Quaeso autem ut hujus operis dicta percurrens, in his verborum folia non requiras, quia per sacra eloquia ab eorum tractatoribus infructuosae loquacitatis levitas studiose compescitur, dum in templo Dei nemus plantari prohibetur (Deut. XVI, 21). Et cuncti procul dubio scimus, quia quoties in foliis male laetae segetis culmi proficiunt, minori plenitudine spicarum grana turgescunt.

Unde et ipsam loquendi artem, quam magisteria disciplinae exterioris insinuant, servare despexi. Nam sicut hujus quoque epistolae tenor enuntiat, non metacismi collisionem fugio, non barbarismi confusionem devito, situs motusque et praepositionum casus servare contemno, quia indignum (Dist. 38, c. Indignum) vehementer existimo, ut verba coelestis oraculi restringam sub regulis Donati. Neque enim haec ab ulus interpretibus, in Scripturae sacrae auctoritate servata sunt. Ex qua nimirum quia nostra expositio oritur, dignum profecto est ut quasi edita soboles speciem suae matris imitetur. Novam vero translationem dissero; sed cum probationis causa exigit, nunc novam, nunc veterem per testimonia assumo; ut quia sedes apostolica, cui Deo auctore praesideo, utraque utitur, mei quoque labor studii ex utraque fulciatur. Praefatio In qua quae toto opere edisserenda sunt paucis perstringit.

CAPUT PRIMUM.

7 1. Quis scriptor libri Job. — Inter multos saepe quaeritur, quis libri beati Job scriptor habeatur. Et alii quidem Moysen, alii unum quemlibet ex prophetis scriptorem hujus operis fuisse suspicantur. Quia enim in libro Geneseos (Genes. XXXVI, 33.) Jobab de stirpe Esau descendisse, et Bale filio Beor in regnum successisse describitur, hunc beatum Job longe ante Moysi tempora exstitisse crediderunt, morem profecto sacri eloquii nescientes, quia in superioribus suis partibus solet breviter longe post secutura perstringere, cum studet ad alia subtilius enumeranda properare. Unde et illic Jobab, priusquam reges in Israel existerent, fuisse memoratur. Nequaquam ergo exstitisse ante legem cognoscitur, qui Israeliticorum judicum tempore fuisse signatur. Quod dum quidam minus caute considerant, Moysen gestorum illius quasi longe antepositi scriptorem putant; ut videlicet is qui potuit ad eruditionem nostram legis praecepta edere, ipse credatur etiam ex gentilis viri historia, virtutis ad nos exempla mandasse. Nonnulli vero, ut dictum est, scriptorem hujus operis unum quemlibet ex prophetis arbitrantur: asserentes quod nullus tam mystica Dei verba cognoscere potuit, nisi cujus mentem prophetiae spiritus ad superna sublevavit. 2. Auctor Spiritus sanctus. — Sed quis haec scripserit, valde supervacue quaeritur, cum tamen auctor libri Spiritus sanctus fideliter credatur. Ipse igitur haec scripsit, qui scribenda dictavit. Ipse scripsit, qui et in illius opere inspirator exstitit, et per scribentis vocem imitanda ad nos ejus facta transmisit. Si magni cujusdam viri susceptis epistolis legeremus verba, sed quo calamo fuissent scripta quaereremus, ridiculum profecto esset epistolarum auctorem scire sensumque cognoscere, sed quali calamo earum verba impressa fuerint indagare. Cum ergo rem cognoscimus, ejusque rei Spiritum sanctum auctorem tenemus, quia scriptorem quaerimus, quid aliud agimus, nisi legentes litteras, de calamo percontamur? 3. Quo inspirante Job sua certamina descripsit. — Arbitrari tamen verius possumus, quod idem beatus Job, qui certamina spiritalis pugnae sustinuit, etiam consummatae suae victoriae gesta narravit. Nec movere debet quod in eodem libro dicitur, Dixit Job; vel, haec atque illa pertulit Job. Moris 8 enim Scripturae sacrae est ut ipsi qui scribunt, sic de se in illa quasi de aliis loquantur. Hinc est enim quod Moyses ait: Erat Moyses vir mitissimus super omnes homines, qui morabantur in terra (Num. XII, 3). Hinc Joannes dicit: Discipulus ille, quem diligebat Jesus (Joan. XIX, 26). Hinc Lucas ait: Quod ambularent duo ex discipulis in via, Cleophas et alius (Luc. XXIV, 13); quem profecto alium, dum tam studiose tacuit, ut quidam dicunt, seipsum fuisse monstravit. Scriptores igitur sacri eloquii, quia impulsu sancti Spiritus agitantur, sic de se in illo testimonium tanquam de aliis proferunt. Ergo sanctus Spiritus per Moysen locutus est de Moyse; sanctus Spiritus per Joannem locutus est de Joanne. Paulus quoque quia non ex se ipso loqueretur, insinuat dicens: An experimentum quaeritis ejus qui in me loquitur Christus (II Cor. XIII, 3)? Hinc est quod angelus qui Moysi apparuisse describitur, modo angelus, modo Dominus memoratur: angelus videlicet, propter hoc, quod exterius loquendo serviebat; Dominus autem dicitur, quia interius praesidens loquendi efficaciam ministrabat. Cum ergo loquens ab interiori regitur, et per obsequium angelus, et per inspirationem Dominus nominatur. Hinc David ait: Attendite popule meus legem meam; inclinate aurem vestram in verba oris mei (Psal. LXXVII, 1). Non enim lex David, aut populus David, sed personam ejus, ex quo loquebatur, assumens, ipsius auctoritate loquitur, cujus inspiratione replebatur. Hoc quotidie fieri in Ecclesia cernimus, si vigilanter intuemur. Nam stans in medio populi lector clamat: Ego sum Deus Abraham, Deus Isaac, et Deus Jacob (Exod. III, 6). Et quod ipse Deus sit, vere profecto non dicit; nec tamen per hoc quod dicit, veritatis regulam deserit; quia cui ministerium lectione exhibet, ejus dominium voce praetendit. Itaque scriptores sacri eloquii, quia repleti sancto Spiritu super se trahuntur, quasi extra semetipsos fiunt; et sic de se sententias, quasi de aliis proferunt. Unde et beatus Job sancto Spiritu afflatus, potuit sua gesta, quae erant videlicet supernae aspirationis dona, quasi non sua scribere: quia eo alterius erant quae loquebatur, quo homo loquebatur quae Dei sunt; et eo alter quae erant illius loquebatur, quo Spiritus sanctus loquebatur quae hominis sunt.

CAPUT II.

9 4. Praecepta homini data. — Sed jam debemus ista postponere, et ad consideranda sacrae historiae gesta properare. Omnis homo eo ipso quo homo est, suum intelligere debet auctorem; cujus voluntati tanto magis serviat, quanto se quia de se ipso nihil sit pensat; ecce autem conditi Deum considerare neglеximus. Adhibita sunt praecepta, praeceptis quoque obtemperare noluimus. Adjunguntur exempla, ipsa quoque imitari exempla declinamus, quae edidisse nobis positos sub lege conspicimus. Quia enim Deus aperte quibusdam sub lege positis locutus est, quasi alienos nos ab eisdem praeceptis aspicimus, quibus haec specialiter locutus non est. Unde ad confutandam impudentiam nostram, gentilis homo ad exemplum deducitur; ut quia obedire homo legi sub lege positus despicit, ejus saltem comparatione evigilet, qui sine lege legaliter vixit. Erranti igitur homini data est lex; erranti vero etiam sub lege adducitur testimonium eorum qui extra legem sunt, ut quia conditionis nostrae ordinem servare noluimus, praeceptis admoneremur; et quia praeceptis obedire contempsimus, exemplis confunderemur; nec, ut dictum est, eorum exemplis, quos lex astringeret, sed quos lex a peccato nulla cohiberet. 5. Praecepta contemnenti addita exempla Job hominis gentilis. — Circumscripsit nos divina providentia, circumvenit excusationem nostram; undique conclusus est aditus tergiversationis humanae. Homo gentilis, homo sine lege, ad medium adducitur, ut eorum qui sub lege sunt pravitas confundatur. Quod bene per prophetam ac breviter dicendo ostenditur: Erubesce, Sidon, ait mare (Isai. XXIII, 4). In Sidone quippe figuratur stabilitas in lege positorum - in mari autem, vita gentilium. Erubesce ergo, Sidon, ait mare, quia ex vita gentilium redarguitur vita sub lege positorum, atque ex actione saecularium confunditur actio religiosorum: dum illi etiam promittendo non servant quae in praeceptis audiunt; et isti vivendo ea custodiunt, in quibus nequaquam mandatis legalibus astringuntur. Qua vero auctoritate liber iste sit praeditus, ipsa sacrarum paginarum soliditas attestatur, dum per Ezechielem prophetam dicitur (Ezech. XIV, 14), quod tres solummodo viri liberentur, Noe scilicet, Daniel et Job. Nec immerito inter Hebraeorum vitas, in auctoritatis reverentiam vita justi gentilis adducitur, quia Redemptor noster, sicut ad redemptionem Judaeorum et gentilium venit, ita se Judaeorum et gentilium prophetari vocibus voluit; ut per utrumque populum diceretur, qui pro utroque populo quandoque pateretur. 6. Ejus virtus, quo magis fragraret, flagellis attrita. — Vir itaque iste summis viribus fultus, sibi notus erat et Deo: qui si non flagellaretur, a nobis nullatenus agnosceretur. Virtus quippe etiam per quietem se exercuit, sed virtutis opinio commota per flagella fragravit. Et qui quietus in se ipso quod erat continuit, commotus ad notitiam omnium odorem suae fortitudinis aspersit. Sicut enim unguenta latius redolere nesciunt nisi commota, et sicut aromata fragrantiam suam non nisi cum incenduntur expandunt; ita sancti viri omne quod virtutibus redolent in tribulationibus innotescunt. Unde et recte in Evangelio dicitur: Si habueritis fidem tanquam granum sinapis, dicetis huic monti: Transi hinc, et transibit (Matth. XVII, 19). Granum quippe 10 sinapis nisi conteratur, nequaquam vis virtutis ejus agnoscitur. Nam non contritum lene est: si vero conteratur, inardescit, et quod in se acerrimum latebat, ostendit. Sic unusquisque vir sanctus, cum non pulsatur, despicabilis ac lenis aspicitur: si qua vero illum tritura persecutionis opprimat, mox omne, quod calidum sapit, ostentat; atque in fervorem virtutis vertitur, quidquid in illo ante despicabile infirmumque videbatur; quodque in se per tranquillitatis tempora libens operuerat, exagitatus tribulationibus coactus innotescit. Unde bene per prophetam dicitur: In die mandavit Dominus misericordiam suam, et in nocte declaravit (Ps. XLI, 9). Misericordia enim Domini in die mandatur, quia in tranquillo tempore cognoscendo percipitur; in nocte vero declaratur, quia donum, quod in tranquillitate sumitur, in tribulationibus manifestatur.

CAPUT III.

7. Virtutes Job recensentur. — Sed subtilius perscrutandum est cur tot flagella pertulit, qui tantam virtutum custodiam sine reprehensione servavit. Humilitatem quippe habuit, quia et ipse testatur: Si contempsi judicium subire cum servo meo, et ancilla mea, cum disceptarent adversum me (Job. XXXI, 13). Hospitalitatem exhibuit, sicut ipse perhibet, dicens: Foris non mansit peregrinus, ostium meum viatori patuit (Job. XXXI, 32). Disciplinae vigorem tenuit, sicut ipse indicat dicens: Principes cessabant loqui, et digitum superponebant ori suo (Job. XXIX, 9). Mansuetudinem in vigore custodivit, sicut ipse fatetur, dicens: Cumque sederem quasi rex, circumstante exercitu, eram tamen moerentium consolator (Ibid., 25). Eleemosynarum largitatem amplexus est, sicut ipse insinuat dicens: Si comedi buccellam meam solus, et non comedit pupillus ex ea (Job. XXXI, 17). Cum igitur omnia virtutum mandata perficeret, unum ei deerat, ut etiam flagellatus agere gratias sciret. Notum erat quia servire Deo inter dona noverat: sed dignum fuerat ut districtio severitatis inquireret utrum devotus Deo et inter flagella permaneret. Poena quippe interrogat, si quietus quis veraciter amat. Quem hostis quidem ut deficeret petiit, sed ut proficeret accepit. Fieri Dominus benigne permisit quod diabolus inique postulavit. Nam cum idcirco illum expetisset hostis ut consumeret, tentando egit ut ejus merita augeret. Scriptum quippe est: In omnibus his non peccavit Job labiis suis (Job. I, 22). Et quidem quaedam verba responsionum illius imperitis lectoribus aspera resonant, quia sanctorum dicta pie intelligere, sicut dicuntur, ignorant; et quia animum dolentis et justi in semetipsis assumere nesciunt, ideo doloris verba bene interpretari non possunt. Mentem quippe patientis bene pensare novit condescensio passionis. 8. Ab imperitorum criminationibus Dei judicio absolvitur. — Credunt ergo beatum Job in suis sermonibus deliquisse, minus caute intuentes, quia si beati Job responsa redarguunt, falsam etiam de eo Domini sententiam fuisse testantur. Diabolo namque a Domino dicitur: Considerasti servum meum Job, quod non sit ei similis super terram: vir simplex et rectus ac timens Deum, et recedens a malo (Vers. 8)? Cui a diabolo mox respondetur: Nunquid gratis Job colit Deum? Nonne tu vallasti eum cunctamque familiam ejus? Sed mitte manum tuam, et tange eum, si non in faciem benedixerit tibi (Vers. 10). Hostis itaque in beato Job vires suas exercuit, sed tamen certamen contra 11 Deum assumpsit. Inter Deum itaque et diabolum beatus Job in medio materia certaminis fuit.. Quisquis ergo sanctum virum inter flagella positum, dictis suis peccasse asserit, quid aliud, quam Deum, qui pro illo proposuerat, perdidisse reprehendit? Ipse quippe in se tentati causam suscipere voluit, qui eum et ante flagella praetulit, et praeferens tentari per flagella permisit. Si ergo excessisse Job dicitur, laudator illius succubuisse perhibetur, quamvis eum nullatenus deliquisse etiam dona testantur. Quis enim nesciat quod culpis non praemia, sed poenae debeantur? Qui ergo duplicia recipere quae amiserat meruit, ex remuneratione edocuit quia nequaquam vitium sed virtus fuit omne quod dixit. Assertioni quoque huic adhuc adjungitur, quod ipse pro amicis delinquentibus intercedit. In gravibus namque peccatis quis positus (Causa 3, q. 7, c. In gravibus), dum suis premitur, aliena non diluit. Mundus ergo ostenditur esse de se, qui emundationem potuit obtinere pro aliis. Si vero hoc quibusdam displicet, quod bona sua ipse narravit, sciendum est quia inter tot rerum damna, inter tot corporis vulnera, inter tot pignorum funera, amicis ad consolationem venientibus, et ad increpationem prorumpentibus, de vita sua desperare cogebatur; et quem tot detrimenta afflixerant, contumeliosa insuper increpantium verba feriebant. Hi namque, qui ad consolandum venerant, dum quasi ejus injustitiae exprobrabant, desperare eum de semetipso funditus compellebant. Quod ergo bona sua ad mentem revocat, non se per jactantiam elevat; sed quasi collapsum inter verba et vulnera ad spem animum reformat. Gravi enim desperationis telo mens percutitur, cum supernae irae tribulationibus premitur, et foris linguarum opprobriis urgetur. Beatus igitur Job tot dolorum jaculatione confossus, dum labefactari per opprobria timuit, ad statum se fiduciae ex anteacta vita confirmando revocavit. Nequaquam ergo in arrogantiae vitium cecidit, quia contra internum desperationis impulsum, per exteriora praeconiorum suorum verba pugnavit; ut dum bona quae fecerat diceret, nequaquam de bono quod quaesierat desperaret.

CAPUT IV.

9. Omnia Satanae machinamenta contra Job erecta. — Sed jam nunc ipsum ordinem tentationis ejus exsequamur. Inimicus saeviens, et sancti viri validissimum pectus debellare contendens, cunctas contra eum tentationum machinas erexit; abstulit substantiam, interfecit filios, percussit corpus, instigavit uxorem, amicos ad consolationem adduxit; sed in asperitatem increpationis excitavit: alium quoque amicum durius increpantem, in extrema et acriori invectione servavit, ut saltem crebrius feriendo cor attingeret, quod novo vulnere semper iteraret. Quia enim in saeculo potentem vidit, damnis substantiae eum moveri credidit, quem non concussum ex filiorum morte pulsavit. Videns autem quia ad augmentum divinae laudis etiam ex vulnere crevit orbitatis, petiit feriendam salutem corporis. Intuens etiam quia per dolorem corporis pervenire nequiverit ad passionem mentis, instigavit uxorem. Civitatem quippe, quam expugnare appetiit, nimis munitam vidit; et idcirco exterius tot plagas inferens, quasi foras exercitum admovit; animum vero uxoris in verbis malae persuasionis 12 accendens, quasi intus civium corda corrupit. Ex bellis enim exterioribus discimus quid de interioribus sentiamus. Inimicus namque saeviens, et urbem circumfusis exercitibus vallans, si ejus munimina invicta conspexerit, ad alia se pugnandi argumenta convertit, ut intus etiam quorumdam civium corda corrumpat; quatenus cum extrinsecus impugnatores admoverit, internos quoque habeat adjutores, atque increscente belli foras certamine, de quorum intus fide confiditur, eorum perfidia urbs destituta capiatur. 10. Foris bellum, virulenta intus consilia adhibuit. — Itaque exterius quasi ariete constituto, murum civitatis istius tot ictibus perculit, quot vicibus adversa nuntiavit. Intus autem quasi civium corda corrupit, dum fortia urbis hujus munimina persuasione destruere conjugis studuit. Foras itaque admovit impetum belli, intus venena consilii: ut tanto citius urbem caperet, quanto eam exterius interiusque turbaret. Quia autem nonnunquam plus conturbant verba quam vulnera, amicorum, ut dictum est, se linguis armavit. Qui quidem quia seniores erant, de eorum verbis minus fortasse doleri poterat. Heliu junior subrogatur, ut sanctum pectus tanto acriori vulnere percuteret, quanto contra illud ictus brachii vilioris excitaret. Ecce ad feriendum invictissimum robur inimicus saeviens, quot tentationum jacula invenit; ecce quot obsidionum machinamenta circumposuit; ecce quot percussionum tela transmisit: sed in his omnibus mansit mens imperterrita, stetit civitas inconcussa.

CAPUT V.

11. Patientia Job in adversis. — Student hostes, cum contra faciem veniunt, alios ex occulto transmittere, qui eo licentius pugnantis latus feriant, quo is qui pugnat intentius venientes hostes contra faciem aspectat. Igitur Job, in hujus certaminis bello deprehensus, suscepit damna, quasi hostes contra faciem; sustinuit verba consolantium, quasi hostes ex latere: sed in his omnibus circumacto gravitatis suae clypeo, ubique munitus astitit, undique venientibus gladiis vigilanter obviavit: amissam substantiam tacite despicit, carnem in filiis mortuam aequanimiter dolet, carnem in se percussam patienter tolerat, carnem in conjuge male suadentem sapienter docet. Super haec amici in asperam correptionem prosiliunt; et pro sedando dolore venientes, vim doloris adjungunt. Omnia ergo machinamenta tentationum sancto viro vertuntur in augmenta virtutum. Per vulnera quippe probatur ejus patientia; per verba vero exercetur ejus sapientia. Ubique fortiter occurrit, quia et flagella robore, et verba ratione superavit. Amici vero ejus, qui ad consolationem quidem veniunt, sed usque ad verba increpationis excedunt, ignorantia magis credendi sunt, quam malitia deliquisse. Neque enim tantum virum amicos iniquos habuisse credendum est: sed dum discernere causam flagellorum nequeunt, in culpam dilabuntur. 12. Varia percussionum genera. — Percussionum quippe diversa sunt genera. Alia namque est percussio, qua peccator percutitur, ut sine retractatione puniatur;

alia, qua peccator percutitur, ut corrigatur; alia, qua nonnunquam quisque percutitur, non ut praeterita corrigat, sed ne ventura committat; alia qua 13 plerumque percutitur, per quam nec praeterita culpa corrigitur, nec futura prohibetur; sed ut, dum inopinata salus percussionem sequitur, salvantis virtus cognita ardentius ametur; cumque innoxius flagello atteritur, ei per patientiam meritorum summa cumuletur. Aliquando enim peccator percutitur, ut absque retractatione puniatur, sicut periturae Judaeae dicitur: Plaga inimici percussi te, castigatione crudeli (Jer. XXX, 14). Et rursum: Quid clamas ad me, super contritione tua? Insanabilis est dolor tuus (Ibid., 15). Aliquando peccator percutitur, ut corrigatur, sicut cuidam in Evangelio dicitur: Ecce sanus factus es, jam noli peccare, ne tibi deterius aliquid contingat (Joan. V, 14). Verba enim salvantis indicant, quia peccata praecedentia habiti vim doloris exigebant. Aliquando quisque non pro praeterita culpa diluenda, sed pro futura vitanda percutitur; quod aperte Paulus apostolus de semetipso testatur, dicens: Ne magnitudo revelationum extollat me, datus est mihi stimulus carnis meae, angelus Satanae, qui me colaphizet (II Cor. XII, 7). Qui enim non ait, quia extulit, sed ne extollat, aperte indicat quod percussione illa, ne eveniat, compescitur, non autem quae evenit culpa purgatur. Nonnunquam vero quisque nec pro praeterita, nec pro futura iniquitate percutitur; sed ut sola divinae virtutis potentia, ex amputata percussione monstretur. Unde cum Domino in Evangelio de caeco nato diceretur: Hic peccavit, aut parentes ejus, ut caecus nasceretur (Joan. IX, 2)? respondit Dominus dicens: Neque hic peccavit, neque parentes ejus; sed ut manifestentur opera Dei (Ibid. 3)? In qua manifestatione quid agitur, nisi ut ex flagello meritorum virtus augeatur; et cum nulla praeterita iniquitas tergitur, magna de patientia fortitudo generetur. Unde idem beatus Job praefertur prius voce judicis, et post manui committitur tentatoris: quem post flagellum Deus dum remunerans familiarius alloquitur, aperte quantum de verbere creverit indicatur. Amici ergo beati Job, dum percussionum genera distinguere nesciunt, percussum pro culpa crediderunt: et dum Deum justum in percussione sua conantur asserere, beatum Job compulsi sunt de injustitia reprobare; nescientes videlicet quod idcirco flagellatus fuerat, ut pro flagello ejus divinae gloriae laus cresceret, non autem ut per flagella peccata quae nequaquam commiserat emendaret. Unde et ad veniam citius redeunt, quia ignorantia potius quam malitia peccaverunt. Quorum superbiam divina justitia eo vehementer humiliat, quo nequaquam illos ad suam gratiam, nisi per eum quem despexerant, reformat. Valde quippe elata mens retunditur, si ipsi super quem se extulit supponatur.

CAPUT VI.

13. Sancti omnes quasi stellae, noctem vitae praesentis illuminant. — Sed libet inter haec mira divinae dispensationis opera cernere quomodo ad illuminandam noctem vitae praesentis astra quaeque suis vicibus in coeli faciem veniant, quousque in finem noctis Redemptor humani generis, quasi verus lucifer, surgat. Nocturnum namque spatium, dum decedentium succedentiumque stellarum cursibus illustratur, magno coeli decore peragitur. Ut ergo noctis nostrae tenebras suo tempore editus, vicissimque permutatus stellarum radius tangeret, ad ostendendam innocentiam, venit Abel; ad docendam 14 actionis munditiam, venit Enoch; ad insinuandam longanimitatem spei et operis, venit Noe; ad manifestandam obedientiam, venit Abraham; ad demonstrandam conjugalis vitae castimoniam, venit Isaac; ad insinuandam laboris tolerantiam, venit Jacob; ad rependendam pro malo bonae retributionis gratiam, venit Joseph; ad ostendendam mansuetudinem, venit Moyses; ad informandam contra adversa fiduciam, venit Josue; ad ostendendam inter flagella patientiam, venit Job. Ecce quam fulgentes stellas in coelo cernimus, ut inoffenso pede operis iter nostrae noctis ambulemus. Nam cognitioni hominum divina dispensatio quot justos exhibuit, quasi tot astra super peccantium tenebras coelum misit, quousque verus lucifer surgeret, qui aeternum nobis mane nuntians, stellis caeteris clarius ex divinitate radiaret. 14. Cuncti Christum praenuntiarunt, maxime Job. — Quem electi omnes dum bene vivendo praeeunt, et rebus et vocibus prophetando promiserunt. Nullus etenim justus fuit, qui non ejus per figuram nuntius exstiterit. Dignum quippe erat ut in semetipsis bonum omnes ostenderent, de quo et omnes boni essent, et quod prodesse omnibus scirent. Unde et sine cessatione promitti debuit quod et sine aestimatione dabatur percipi, et sine fine retineri; ut simul omnia saecula dicerent quid in redemptione communi saeculorum finis exhiberet. Unde et necesse fuit ut etiam beatus Job, qui tanta incarnationis ejus mysteria protulit, eum quem voce diceret ex conversatione signaret; et per ea quae pertulit, quae passurus esset ostenderet; tantoque verius passionis illius sacramenta praediceret, quanto haec non loquendo tantummodo, sed etiam patiendo prophetaret. Sed quia Redemptor noster unam se personam cum sancta Ecclesia, quam assumpsit, exhibuit; de ipso enim dicitur, Qui est caput omnium nostrum (Ephes. IV, 15); et de Ecclesia ejus scriptum est: Corpus Christi, quod est Ecclesia (Colos. I, 24); quisquis eum in semetipso significat, modo hunc ex capite, modo ex corpore designat, ut non solum vocem capitis, sed etiam corporis teneat. Unde et Isaias propheta ejusdem Domini verba exprimens, ait: Quasi sponso posuit mihi mitram, et quasi sponsam ornavit me ornamento (Isaiae LXI, 10). Quia igitur ipse in capite sponsus, ipse est in corpore sponsa, necesse est ut cum nonnunquam aliquid de capite dicitur, sensim ac subito etiam ad vocem corporis derivetur; et rursum cum de corpore aliquid dicitur, repente ad vocem capitis ascendatur. Beatus ergo Job venturi cum suo corpore typum Redemptoris insinuat; uxor vero ejus, quae eum ad maledicendum provocat, vitam carnalium designat; qui intra sanctam Ecclesiam incorrectis moribus positi, quo per fidem bonis juxta sunt, eo per vitam durius premunt; quia dum quasi fideles vitari non possunt, a fidelibus tanto deterius, quanto et interius tolerantur. 15. Amici

Job haereticos adumbrant. — Amici vero ejus, qui dum consulunt invehuntur, haereticorum figuram exprimunt, qui sub specie consulendi agunt negotium seducendi. Unde et ad beatum Job quasi pro Domino loquuntur, sed tamen a Domino non approbantur; quia videlicet omnes haeretici Deum, dum defendere 15 nituntur, offendunt. Unde eis aperte et ab eodem sancto viro dicitur: Disputare cum Deo cupio: prius vos ostendens fabricatores mendacii, et cultores perversorum dogmatum (Job XIII, 3 et 4). Constat ergo eos haereticorum typum errando gerere, quos sanctus vir redarguit cultui perversorum dogmatum deservire. Omnis vero haereticus in eo quod Deum defendere cernitur, veritati illius adversatur, Psalmista attestante, qui ait: Ut destruas inimicum et defensorem (Psalm. VIII, 3). Inimicus quippe et defensor est, qui Deum quo praedicat impugnat.

CAPUT VII.

16. Nominibus suis Job Christum, amici ejus haereticos significant. — Nam quia beatus Job venturi Redemptoris speciem teneat, etiam nomine demonstrat. Job quippe interpretatur dolens. Quo nimirum dolore, vel Mediatoris passio, vel sanctae Ecclesiae labor exprimitur, quae multiplici praesentis vitae fatigatione cruciatur. Amici quoque ejus ex vocabulo nominis meritum suae indicant actionis. Nam Eliphaz Latina lingua dicitur Domini contemptus. Et quid aliud haeretici faciunt, nisi quod, dum falsa de Deo sentiunt, eum superbiendo contemnunt? Baldad interpretatur vetustas sola. Bene autem omnes haeretici in his quae de Deo loquuntur, dum non intentione recta, sed appetitione temporalis gloriae videri praedicatores appetunt, vetustas sola nominantur. Ad loquendum quippe non zelo novi hominis, sed vitae veteris pravitate concitantur. Sophar quoque Latino sermone dicitur dissipatio speculae, vel speculationem dissipans. Mentes namque fidelium ad contemplanda superna se erigunt; sed dum haereticorum verba pervertere recta contemplantes appetunt, speculam dissipare conantur. In tribus itaque amicorum Job nominibus, tres haereticarum mentium perditionis casus exprimuntur. Nisi enim Deum contemnerent, nequaquam de illo perversa sentirent; et nisi vetustatis cor traherent, in novae vitae intelligentia non errarent; et nisi speculationem bonorum destruerent, nequaquam eos superna judicia tam districto examine pro verborum suorum culpa reprobarent. Contemnendo igitur Deum, in vetustate se retinent: sed in vetustate retinendo, pravis suis sermonibus speculationi rectorum nocent.

CAPUT VIII.

17. In amicorum Job reconciliatione haereticorum conversio figuratur. — Quia vero nonnunquam haeretici divinae gratiae largitate perfusi ad unitatem sanctae Ecclesiae redeunt, bene hoc ipsa amicorum reconciliatione signatur. Pro quibus tamen beatus Job exorare praecipitur, quia haereticorum sacrificia accepta Deo esse nequeunt, nisi pro eis universalis Ecclesiae manibus offerantur; ut ejus meritis remedium salutis inveniant, quam verborum jaculis impugnando feriebant. Unde et septem pro eis sacrificia memorantur oblata; quia dum septiformis gratiae Spiritum confitentes accipiunt, quasi septem oblationibus expiantur. Hinc est quod in Joannis Apocalypsi per septem Ecclesiarum numerum universalis Ecclesia designatur (Apoc. I, 11). Hinc per Salomonem de Sapientia dicitur: Sapientia aedificavit sibi domum, excidit columnas septem (Prov. IX, 1). Ipso ergo sacrificiorum numero reconciliati haeretici, quid 16 prius fuerint exprimunt, qui perfectioni septiformis gratiae non nisi redeundo junguntur.
18. Illorum mactanda superbia, ut Ecclesiae hoc sacrificio restituantur. — Bene autem tauros pro se et arietes obtulisse describuntur. In tauro quippe cervix superbiae, in ariete autem ducatus gregum sequentium designatur. Quid est ergo pro eis tauros arietesque mactare, nisi eorum superbum ducatum interficere; ut de se humilia sentiant, et post se corda innocentium non seducant? Cervice enim tumenti ab Ecclesiae unitate resilierant, et infirmos post se populos quasi sequentes greges trahebant. Veniant igitur ad beatum Job, id est, revertantur ad Ecclesiam, et septenario sacrificio tauros et arietes mactandos offerant; qui ut universali Ecclesiae conjungantur, humilitate interveniente interficiant quidquid prius tumidum de superbo ducatu sapiebant.

CAPUT IX.

19. Superbus, licet recte sentiens, increpandus. Qua ratione non indiget sacrificio. — Per Heliu autem, qui rectis quidem sensibus loquitur, sed ad stulta elationis verba derivatur, persona uniuscujusque arrogantis exprimitur. Multi namque intra sanctam Ecclesiam positi, recta quae sapiunt recte proferre contemnunt. Unde et divinae increpationis verbis arguitur, nec tamen pro illo sacrificium offertur; quia fidelis quidem est, sed tamen arrogans: per veritatem credulitatis intus est, sed per tumoris sui obstaculum acceptabilis non est. Hinc ergo increpatio redarguit, sed sacrificium non reducit; quia in ea quidem fide est in qua esse debuit, sed superna hunc justitia increpans pro superfluis repellit. Unde et bene Heliu Latino sermone dicitur, Deus meus iste, vel Deus Dominus. Arrogantes enim viri intra sanctam Ecclesiam, quamvis Deum elate vivendo refugiunt, eum tamen veraciter credendo confitentur. Quid est enim, Deus meus iste, nomine dicere, nisi eum, cui credidit, aperta professione monstrare? vel quid est, Deum Dominum dicere, nisi hunc et Deum per divinitatem credere, et Dominum ex incarnatione perhibere?

CAPUT X.

20. Job duplicia recipiens quid praesignet. Sanctorum ante resurrectionem una beatitudo; post duplex. — Bene autem post damna rerum, post funera pignorum, post cruciatus vulnerum, post certamina pugnasque verborum, duplici remuneratione sublevatur; quia nimirum sancta Ecclesia, adhuc etiam in hac vita posita, pro laboribus quos sustinet, duplicia munera recipit; cum susceptis plene gentibus, in fine mundi Judaeorum etiam ad se corda convertit. Hinc enim scriptum est: Donec plenitudo gentium intraret, et sic omnis Israel salvus fieret (Rom. XI, 25). Duplicia et postmodum recipiet: quia finito labore praesentis temporis, non solum ad animarum gaudium, sed etiam ad beatitudinem corporum ascendit. Unde bene per prophetam dicitur: In terra sua duplicia possidebunt (Isai. LXI, 7). Sancti quippe in terra viventium duplicia possident, quia nimirum beatitudine mentis simul et corporis gaudent. Unde Joannes in Apocalypsi, quia ante resurrectionem corporum clamantes sanctorum animas vidit, accepisse eas stolas singulas aspexit, dicens: Et datae sunt illis singulae stolae albae, et dictum est illis, ut requiescerent tempus 17 adhuc modicum, donec impleretur numerus conservorum et fratrum eorum (Apoc. VI, 11). Ante resurrectionem quippe stolas singulas accepisse dicti sunt, quia sola adhuc mentis beatitudine perfruuntur. Binas ergo accepturi sunt, quando cum animarum perfecto gaudio, etiam corporum incorruptione vestientur. 21. Afflictio hic certa; quantum duratura sit, incertum. — Recte autem afflictio quidem beati Job dicitur sed quantitas temporis in ejus afflictione reticetur; quia sanctae Ecclesiae in hac vita tribulatio cernitur, sed quanto hic tempore conterenda atque differenda sit, ignoratur. Unde et ore Veritatis dicitur: Non est vestrum nosse tempora, vel momenta, 18 quae Pater posuit in sua potestate (Act. I, 7). Per hoc ergo, quod beati Job passio dicitur, docemur quod experiendo novimus. Per hoc vero quod quantitas temporis in passione reticetur, docemur quid nescire debeamus. In longum praefationis verba protraximus, ut quasi totum breviter perstringendo loqueremur. Sed quia ad loquendi initium, diu loquendo, pervenimus, debemus prius historiae radicem figere, ut valeamus mentem postmodum de allegoriarum fructu satiare.

LIBER PRIMUS.

Capitis primi libri Job priores versus primum historico, deinde allegorico, postremo morali sensu explanat.

CAPUT PRIMUM.

VERS. 1. — Vir erat in terra Hus, nomine Job. HISTORICUS SENSUS. — 1. Job inter malos bonus dicitur, quod summa laus est. — Idcirco sanctus vir ubi habitaverit dicitur, ut ejus meritum virtutis exprimatur. Hus namque quis nesciat quod sit terra gentilium? Gentilitas autem eo obligata vitiis exstitit, quo cognitionem sui conditoris ignoravit. Dicatur itaque ubi habitaverit, ut hoc ejus laudibus proficiat, quod bonus inter malos fuit. Neque enim valde laudabile est bonum esse cum bonis, sed bonum esse cum malis. Sicut enim gravioris culpae est, inter bonos bonum non esse; ita immensi est praeconii, bonum etiam inter malos exstitisse. Hinc est quod isdem beatus Job sibimet attestatur, dicens: Frater fui draconum, et socius struthionum (Job. XXX, 29). Hinc Petrus magnis Loth laudibus extulit, quod bonum inter reprobos invenit, dicens: Et justum Loth oppressum a nefandorum injusta conversatione eripuit. Aspectu enim et auditu justus erat, habitans apud eos, qui de die in diem animam justi iniquis operibus cruciabant (II Pet. II, 7, 8). Qui nimirum cruciari non posset, nisi prava propinquorum opera et audiret, et cerneret. Et tamen aspectu et auditu justus dicitur, quia iniquorum vita, non delectando justi aures atque oculos, sed feriendo tangebat. Hinc Paulus discipulis dicit: In medio nationis pravae et perversae, inter quos lucetis sicut luminaria in mundo (Philip. II, 15). Hinc angelo Pergami ecclesiae dicitur: Scio ubi habitas, ubi sedes est Satanae; et tenes nomen meum, et non negasti fidem meam (Apoc. II, 13). Hinc sancta Ecclesia sponsi voce laudatur, cum ei in amoris Cantico dicitur: Sicut lilium inter spinas, sic amica mea inter filias (Cant. II, 2). Bene ergo beatus Job, memorata terra gentili, inter iniquos vixisse describitur; ut, juxta sponsi praeconium, inter spinas lilium crevisse monstretur. Unde recte mox subditur:

CAPUT II.

IBID. — Simplex, et rectus. 2. Job simplicitas et rectitudo. Utraque necessaria. — Nonnulli namque ita sunt simplices, ut rectum quid sit ignorent. Sed eo verae simplicitatis innocentiam deserunt, quo ad virtutem rectitudinis non assurgunt; quia dum cauti esse per rectitudinem nesciunt, nequaquam innocentes persistere per simplicitatem possunt. Hinc est quod Paulus discipulos admonet dicens: Volo vos sapientes esse in bono, simplices autem in malo (Rom. XVI, 19). Hinc rursum dicit: Nolite pueri effici sensibus, sed malitia parvuli estote (I Cor. XIV, 20). Hinc per semetipsam Veritas discipulis praecipit, dicens: Estote prudentes sicut serpentes, et simplices sicut columbae (Matth, X. 16). Utraque enim necessario in admonitione conjunxit; ut et simplicitatem columbae astutia serpentis instrueret, et rursum serpentis astutiam columbae simplicitas temperaret. Hinc est quod sanctus Spiritus praesentiam suam hominibus, non in columba solummodo, sed etiam in igne patefecit (Matth. III, 11, 16). Per columbam quippe simplicitas, per ignem vero zelus indicatur. In columba igitur, et in igne ostenditur (Act. II, 3): quia quicunque illo pleni sunt, sic mansuetudini simplicitatis inserviunt, ut contra culpas delinquentium etiam zelo rectitudinis accendantur. Sequitur:

CAPUT III.

IBID. — Timens Deum, et recedens a malo. 3. Deum timere quid sit. Bona malis admista reprobantur. — Deum timere est nulla, quae facienda sunt bona praeterire. Unde per Salomonem dicitur: Qui Deum timet, nihil negligit (Eccle. VII, 19). Sed quia nonnulli sic bona quaedam faciunt, ut tamen a quibusdam malis minime suspendantur, bene postquam timens Deum dicitur, recedens quoque a malo perhibetur. Scriptum quippe est: Declina a malo, et fac bonum (Psal. XXXVI, 27). Neque enim bona Deo accepta sunt, 19 quae ante ejus oculos malorum admistione maculantur. Hinc namque per Salomonem dicitur: Qui in uno offenderit, multa bona perdet (Eccle. IX, 18). Hinc Jacobus attestatur dicens: Quicunque totam legem servaverit, offendat autem in uno, factus est omnium reus (Jac. II, 10). Hinc Paulus ait: Modicum fermentum totam massam corrumpit (I Cor. V, 6). Beatus igitur Job, ut ostendatur quam mundus in bonis exstitit, solerter indicatur quam alienus a malis fuit. 4. Cur virtutes Job ab exordio describantur. — Mos vero esse narrantium solet, ut cum palaestrae certamen insinuant, prius luctantium membra describant quam latum validumque sit pectus, quam sanum, quam pleni tumeant lacerti, quam subterpositus venter nec mole gravet, nec extenuatione debilitet; ut cum prius aptos certamini artus ostenderint, tunc demum magnae fortitudinis ictus narrent. Quia ergo athleta noster contra diabolum fuerat certaturus, quasi ante arenae spectaculum, sacrae scriptor historiae in athleta hoc spiritales virtutes enumerans, mentis membra describit, dicens: Erat vir ille simplex, et rectus, ac timens Deum, et recedens a malo, ut, dum membrorum positio magna cognoscitur, ex hac ipsa jam forti positione subsequens etiam victoria praenoscatur. Sequitur:

CAPUT IV.

VERS. 2. — Natique sunt ei septem filii et tres filiae. 5. Filiorum multitudo eum ad avaritiam non pellexit. — Saepe ad avaritiam cor parentis illicit fecunditas prolis. Eo enim ad ambitum congregandae haereditatis accenditur, quo multis haeredibus fecundatur. Ut ergo beati Job quam sancta mens fuerit, ostendatur, et justus dicitur, et multae prolis pater fuisse perhibetur. Qui in libri sui exordio devotus sacrificiis offerendis asseritur, promptus autem largitatibus etiam post a semetipso memoratur. Pensemus ergo quanta fortitudine praeditus exstitit, quem ad haereditatis tenaciam nec tot haeredum affectus inclinavit. Sequitur:

CAPUT V.

VERS. 3. — Et fuit possessio ejus septem millia ovium, et tria millia camelorum; quingenta quoque juga boum, et quingentae asinae, ac familia multa nimis. 6. Opes sine amore possedit. — Scimus, quia ad majorem dolorem mentem commovent damna majora. Ut igitur ostendatur, quantae virtutis exstitit, multum fuisse dicitur, quod patienter amisit. Nunquam quippe sine dolore amittitur, nisi quod sine amore possidetur. Itaque dum substantia magna describitur, et tamen paulo post patienter amissa perhibetur; quam sine dolore perdidit, constat quia sine amore possedit. Notandum quoque est, quod prius cordis divitiae, et post, opes corporis describuntur. Solet enim rerum abundantia tanto magis a divino timore mentem solvere, quanto magis hanc exigit diversa cogitare. Nam dum per multa spargitur, stare in intimis fixa prohibetur. Quod per semetipsam Veritas, cum parabolam seminantis exponeret, indicavit dicens: Qui seminatus est in spinis, hic est, qui verbum audit, et sollicitudo saeculi istius, et fallacia divitiarum, suffocat verbum, et sine fructu efficitur (Matth. XIII, 22; Luc. VIII, 7, 8; Marc. IV, 7). Ecce beatus Job et multa possidere dicitur, et paulo post divinis sacrificiis instanter deservire perhibetur. 7. Cuncta jam corde reliquerat. — Consideremus ergo cujus sanctitatis iste vir fuerit, qui ad tam sedula Dei obsequia, et sic occupatus vacavit. Necdum praecepti virtus emicuerat, quae omnia relinqui praeciperet; sed tamen beatus Job ejusdem jam praeceptionis vim corde servabat; quia nimirum substantiam suam mente 20 reliquerat, quam sine delectatione possidebat.

CAPUT VI.

IBID. — Eratque vir ille magnus inter omnes Orientales. 8. Quantis divitiis afflueret. — Orientales viros esse praedivites quis ignorat? Magnus ergo inter Orientales exstitit, ac si aperte diceretur: quia et divitibus ditior fuit.

CAPUT VII.

VERS. 4. — Et ibant filii ejus, et faciebant convivia per domos, unusquisque in die suo: et mittentes vocabant tres sorores suas, ut comederent et biberent cum eis. 9. Substantia dividenda inter filios, eorum corda non divisit. — Solet inter fratres major substantia, discordiae fieri gravioris causa. O inaestimabilem paternae institutionis laudem! Et pater dives dicitur, et filii concordes asseruntur. Et dum dividenda inter eos substantia aderat, corda tamen omnium indivisa charitas replebat.

CAPUT VIII.

VERS. 5. — Cumque in orbem transissent dies convivii, mittebat ad eos Job, et sanctificabat illos, surgensque diluculo offerebat holocausta per singulos. 10. Nulla pene convivia sine culpa, propter voluptatem et loquacitatem. — Cum dicitur, mittebat et sanctificabat illos, aperte demonstratur quid districtionis erga illos praesens ageret, quibus absens sollicitudine non deesset. Sed hoc nobis est solerter intuendum quod, peractis diebus convivii, purgatio per singulos adhibetur holocausti. Vir quippe sanctus noverat quia celebrari convivia sine culpa vix possent. Noverat quia magna purgatione sacrificiorum diluendae sunt epulae conviviorum; et quidquid in semetipsis filii convivantes inquinaverant, pater sacrificium immolando tergebat. Nonnulla quippe sunt vitia quae a conviviis aut separari vix possunt, aut certe nequaquam possunt. Pene semper enim epulas comitatur voluptas. Nam dum corpus in refectionis delectatione resolvitur, cor ad inane gaudium relaxatur. Unde scriptum est: Sedit populus manducare et bibere, et surrexerunt ludere (Exod. XXXII, 6).

11. Pene semper epulas loquacitas sequitur; cumque venter reficitur, lingua diffrenatur. Unde recte dives apud inferos aquam appetere describitur, dicens: Pater Abraham, miserere mei, et mitte Lazarum, ut intingat extremum digiti sui in aquam, et refrigeret linguam meam, quia crucior in hac flamma (Luc. XVI, 24). Prius epulatus quotidie splendide dicitur; et post aquam petere in lingua memoratur. Quia enim, ut diximus, inter epulas valde diffluere loquacitas solet, ex poena indicat culpam, cum eum, quem epulatum quotidie splendide Veritas dixerat, in lingua plus ardere perhibebat. Hi qui chordarum harmoniam temperant, tanta hanc arte dispensant, ut plerumque, cum una tangitur, longe alia ac multis interjacentibus posita chorda quatiatur: cumque ista sonitum reddit, illa, quae in eodem cantu temperata est, aliis impercussis, tremit. Sic ergo in Scriptura sacra plerumque de virtutibus, sic de vitiis agitur; ut dum loquendo aliud insinuat, tacendo aliud innotescat. Nihil enim contra divitem de loquacitate memoratur; sed dum poena in lingua dicitur, quae in convivio inter alias gravior fuerit culpa monstratur. 12. Job octavo die sacrificium offerens, mysterium resurrectionis colit. — Cum vero septem fratres per dies singulos convivia facere describuntur, et peractis diebus convivii, Job septem sacrificia offerre perhibetur; aperte historia indicat quod beatus Job octavo die sacrificium offerens mysterium resurrectionis colat. Dies namque qui nunc Dominicus dicitur, a morte Redemptoris est tertius, sed in ordine conditionis octavus, qui et primus in conditione est. Sed quia revolutus septimum sequitur, octavus 21 recte numeratur. Quia ergo octavo die offerre septem sacrificia dicitur, plenus septiformis gratiae Spiritu pro spe resurrectionis Domino deservisse perhibetur. Unde et psalmus pro octava praescribitur, in quo gaudium de resurrectione nuntiatur. Sed quia beati Job filii tanta fuerant disciplina bonae institutionis accincti, ut neque per facta in conviviis, neque per verba delinquerent, aperte monstratur, cum subditur:

CAPUT IX.

IBID. — Dicebat enim: Ne forte peccaverint filii mei et benedixerint Deo in cordibus suis. 13. De alterius corde non est temere judicandum. In rectores fidelium qui eorum opera nesciunt. — Perfectos quippe esse in opere et sermone docuerat, pro quibus de sola pater cogitatione metuebat. Quia vero de alienis cordibus judicare temere non debeamus, in sancti hujus viri verbis agnoscimus, qui non ait: Quia benedixerunt in cordibus suis: sed, Ne forte benedixerint Deo in cordibus suis. Unde bene per Paulum dicitur: Nolite judicare ante tempus, quoadusque veniat Dominus, qui illuminabit abscondita tenebrarum, et manifestabit consilia cordium (I Cor. IV, 5).. Quisquis enim in cogitatione a rectitudine exorbitat, in tenebris peccat. Nos ergo tanto minus debemus aliena corda audacter reprehendere, quanto scimus, quia visu nostro non possumus alienae cogitationis tenebras illustrare. Sed hac solerter intuendum est, quanta pater severitate potuit filiorum opera corrigere, qui tanta sollicitudine studuit corda mundare. Quid ad haec rectores fidelium dicunt, qui discipulorum suorum et aperta opera nesciunt? Quid in sua excusatione cogitant, qui in commissis sibi nec vulnera actionum curant? Ut vero hujus sancti operis etiam perseverantia demonstretur, recte subjungitur:

CAPUT X.

IBID. — Sic faciebat Job cunctis diebus. 14. Job perseverantia. — Scriptum quippe est: Qui perseveraverit usque in finem, hic salvus erit. (Matth. X, 22; XXIV, 13.) In sacrificio igitur sancta actio, in cunctis autem diebus sacrificii, constantia sanctae actionis ostenditur. Haec breviter historiam sequendo transcurrimus; nunc ordo expositionis exigit ut exordium repetentes, allegoriarum jam secreta pandamus.

CAPUT XI.

. VERS. 1. — Vir erat in terra Hus, nomine Job. 15. SENSUS ALLEGOR. — Christus Job nomine designatus. — Haec per historiam facta credimus, sed per allegoriam jam qualiter sint impleta, videamus. Job namque, ut diximus, interpretatur dolens: Hus vero consiliator. Quem ergo alium beatus Job suo nomine exprimit, nisi eum de quo propheta loquitur dicens: dolores nostros ipse portavit (Isai. LIII, 4)? Qui Hus terram inhabitat, quia in corda populi consiliatoris regnat. Paulus quippe ait Christum Dei virtutum, et Dei sapientiam. (I Cor. I, 24). Atque haec ipsa Sapientia per Salomonem dicit: Ego sapientia habito in consilio, et eruditis intersum cogitationibus (Proverb. VIII, 12). Hus ergo terram inhabitat Job, quia Sapientia, quae pro nobis passionis dolorem sustinuit, corda vitae consiliis dedita sibimet habitationem fecit.

CAPUT XII.

IBID. — Et erat vir ille simplex et rectus. 16. Simplicitatem et rectitudinem tenuit. — In rectitudine justitia, in simplicitate autem mansuetudo signatur. Plerumque nos cum rectitudinem justitiae exsequimur, mansuetudinem relinquimus; et cum mansuetudinem servare cupimus, justitiae rectitudinem declinamus. Incarnatus 22 vero Dominus simplicitatem cum rectitudine tenuit: quia nec in mansuetudine districtionem justitiae, nec rursum in districtione justitiae virtutem mansuetudinis amisit. Unde cum quidam, deducta adultera, hunc tentare voluissent, ut in culpam aut immansuetudinis aut injustitiae laberetur, ad utraque respondit dicens: Qui sine peccato est vestrum, primus in illam lapidem mittat (Joan., VIII, 7). Dat simplicitatem mansuetudinis qui sine peccato est vestrum; dat zelum justitiae, primus in illam lapidem mittat. Unde et ei propheta dicit: Intende, prospere procede, et regna propter veritatem et mansuetudinem et justitiam (Psal. XLIV, 5). Veritatem quippe exsequens, mansuetudinem cum justitia conservavit; ut nec zelum rectitudinis in mansuetudinis pondere amitteret, nec rursum pondus mansuetudinis zelo rectitudinis perturbaret. Sequitur:

CAPUT XIII.

IBID. — Timens Deum, et recedens a malo. 17. Deum quomodo timuit. — Scriptum est de illo: Et replevit eum spiritus timoris Domini (Isai. XI, 3). Incarnatus enim Dominus in semetipso omne quod nobis inspiravit, ostendit; ut quod praecepto diceret, exemplo suaderet. Juxta humanitatis ergo naturam Redemptor noster Deum timuit; quia ut superbum hominem redimeret mentem pro illo humilem sumpsit. Cujus bene per hoc, quod recedere a malo Job dicitur, et actio designatur. Ipse quippe recessit a malo, non quod faciendo contigit, sed quod inveniendo reprobavit: quia vetustam, quam natus invenit, humanae conversationis vitam deseruit; et novam, quam secum detulit sequacium moribus impressit.

CAPUT XIV.

Vers. 2. — Natique sunt ei septem filii, et tres filiae. 18. Septenarius numerus perfectus. — Quid in septenario numero nisi summa perfectionis accipitur? Ut enim humanae rationis causas de septenario numero taceamus, quae asserunt, quod idcirco perfectus sit, quia ex primo pari constat, et primo impari; ex primo qui dividi potest, et primo qui dividi non potest; certissime scimus quod septenarium numerum Scriptura sacra pro perfectione ponere consuevit (Genes. II, 3). Unde et septimo die Dominum requievisse ab operibus asserit. Hinc est etiam quod septimus dies in requiem hominibus, id est, in sabbatum datus est. Hinc est quod jubileus annus, in quo plenaria requies exprimitur, septem hebdomadibus consummatur, qui monade addita nostrae adunationis impletur. 19. Filii Job apostolos signant. — Nati sunt ergo ei septem filii. Ad praedicandum scilicet viriliter incedentes apostoli. Qui dum perfectionis praecepta peragunt, quasi superioris sexus fortitudinem in conversatione tenuerunt. Hinc est enim, quod perfectione septiformis gratiae Spiritus implendi duodecim sunt electi. A septenario quippe numero in duodenarium surgitur. Nam septenarius suis in se partibus multiplicatus, ad duodenarium tenditur. Sive enim quatuor per tria, sive per quatuor tria ducantur, septem in duodecim vertuntur. Unde sancti apostoli, quia sanctam Trinitatem in quatuor partibus mundi praedicare mittebantur, duodecim sunt electi; ut etiam numero perfectionem ostenderent, quam vita et voce praedicarent. 20. Filiae fidelium plebes. Fidelium tres ordines. — Natae sunt et tres filiae. Quid in filiabus, nisi 23 infirmiores fidelium plebes accipimus, quae etsi ad perfectionem operis nequaquam forti virtute permanent, fidem tamen Trinitatis cognitam constanter tenent? In septem ergo filiis ordo praedicantium, in tribus vero filiabus multitudo significatur auditorum. Possunt etiam per tres filias tres ordines fidelium designari. Post filios quippe filiae nominantur, quia post apostolorum conspectam fortitudinem, tres distinctiones fidelium in Ecclesiae conversatione secutae sunt: pastorum videlicet, et continentium, atque conjugatorum. Unde et Ezechiel propheta tres liberatos viros audisse se asserit, Noe scilicet, et Danielem, et Job (Ezechiel XIV). Quid enim per Noe, qui arcam in undis rexit, nisi praepositorum ordo signatur; qui dum ad formam vitae populis praesunt, sanctam Ecclesiam in tentationum fluctibus regunt? Quid per Danielem, cujus mira abstinentia scribitur, nisi continentium vita figuratur; qui dum cuncta, quae mundi sunt, deserunt, despectae Babyloniae alta mente dominantur? Quid per Job, nisi bonorum conjugum vita signatur; qui de rebus mundi, quas possident, dum pia opera faciunt, quasi per terrae viam ad coelestem patriam tendunt? Quia igitur post sanctos apostolos tres istae fidelium distinctiones secutae sunt, recte post filios, tres filiae natae memorantur. Sequitur:

CAPUT XV.

VERS. 3. — Et fuit possessio ejus septem millia ovium, et tria millia camelorum. 21. Ovibus innocentes, camelis vitiosi gentiles adumbrati et Samaritani. — Quia fideles auditores ex varia conversatione collecti sunt, quod prius universaliter, memoratis filiabus, dicitur, hoc distincte postmodum appellatione animalium subinfertur. Quid enim in septem millibus ovium, nisi perfectam quorumdam innocentiam exprimit, quae ad perfectionem gratiae, ex legis pascuis venit? Quid vero in tribus millibus camelorum, nisi ad plenitudinem fidei veniens, torta gentilium vitiositas designatur? In Scriptura autem sacra aliquando cameli nomine ipse Dominus, aliquando autem populus gentilis exprimitur. Cameli enim nomine Dominus designatur, sicut ab eodem Domino Judaeis adversantibus dicitur: Liquantes culicem, camelum glutientes (Matth. XXIII, 24). Culex enim susurrando vulnerat, camelus autem sponte se ad suscipienda onera inclinat. Liquaverunt ergo Judaei culicem, quia seditiosum dimitti latronem petierunt; camelum vero glutierunt, quia eum qui ad suscipienda nostrae mortalitatis onera sponte descenderat exstinguere clamando conati sunt. Rursus cameli nomine gentilitas designatur. Unde et Rebecca ad Isaac veniens (Genes. XXIV, 61), dorso cameli deducitur; quia ad Christum ex gentilitate Ecclesia properans, in tortis vitiosisque vitae veteris conversationibus invenitur. Quae, Isaac viso, descendit; quia Domino cognito, vitia sua gentilitas deseruit, et ab elatione celsitudinis ima humilitatis petiit. Quae et verecundata pallio velatur, quia coram illo ex anteacta vita confunditur. Unde et per Apostolum eisdem gentibus dicitur: Quem ergo fructum habuistis tunc in illis, in quibus nunc erubescitis? (Rom. VI, 21.) Quia igitur per oves, 24 Hebraeos a pascuis legis ad fidem venientes accipimus, nihil obstat ut per camelos, tortos moribus, atque onustos idolorum cultibus, gentilium populos sentiamus. Quia enim ex semetipsis sibi invenerunt deos quos colerent, quasi a semetipsis eis onus in dorso excreverat, quod portarent. 22. Potest etiam per camelos, quia communia sunt animalia, Samaritanorum vita signari. Cameli namque ruminant, sed nequaquam ungulam findunt. Samaritani quoque quasi ruminant, quia ex parte legis verba recipiunt; et quasi ungulam non findunt, quia eam pro parte contemnunt. Qui et grave onus in dorso mentis tolerant, quia in omne, quod faciunt, sine spe aeternitatis elaborant. Fidem quippe resurrectionis nesciunt. Et quid esse gravius atque onustius potest, quam afflictionem saeculi praetereuntis perpeti, et nequaquam ad relevationem mentis gaudia remunerationis sperare? Sed quia in carne Dominus apparens, et Hebraeorum populos perfectionis gratia implevit, et Samaritanorum quosdam ad cognitionem fidei, mira opera ostendendo, perduxit; dicatur recte de umbra, quae veritatem exprimeret, quod et septem millia ovium, et camelorum tria millia possideret. Sequitur:

CAPUT XVI.

IBID. — Quingenta juga boum, et quingentae asinae. 23. Boum nomine quid designetur. Quid nomine asinorum. — Jam superius dictum est, quod in quinquagenario numero, qui septem hebdomadibus ac monade addita impletur, requies designatur; denario autem numero summa perfectionis exprimitur. Quia vero fidelibus perfectio quietis promittitur, quasi quinquagenario decies ducto ad quingentesimum pervenitur. In Scriptura autem sacra boum nomine aliquando hebetudo fatuorum, aliquando bene operantium vita signatur. Quia enim bovis nomine stultorum vecordia figuratur, recte per Salomonem dicitur: Statimque eam sequitur quasi bos ductus ad victimam (Proverb. VII, 22). Rursum quia boum nomine vita uniuscujusque operantis exprimitur, legis praecepta testantur, quae per Moysen praecepit, dicens: Non alligabis os bovi trituranti (Deut. XXV, 4). Quod aperte rursum dicitur: Dignus est operarius mercede sua (Luc. X, 7). Asinorum quoque nomine aliquando stultorum pigritia, aliquando immoderata petulantium luxuria, aliquando gentilium simplicitas designatur. Stultorum pigritia asinorum appellatione figuratur, sicut per Moysen dicitur: Non arabis in bove simul et asino (Deut. XXII, 10). Ac si diceret: Fatuos sapientibus in praedicatione non socies, ne per eum qui implere rem non valet, illi qui praevalet obsistas. Immoderata quoque petulantium luxuria asinorum appellatione exprimitur, ut propheta testatur, qui ait: Quorum carnes sunt ut carnes asinorum (Ezech. XXIII, 20). Asinorum rursus nomine, simplicitas gentilitatis ostenditur. Unde Jerusalem tendens Dominus, asellum sedisse perhibetur (Matth. XXI, 5). Quid est enim sedendo asinum Jerusalem venire, nisi gentilitatis simplicia corda possidendo, ea ad visionem pacis regendo et praesidendo perducere? Quod uno et facili testimonio ostenditur: quia et per boves Judaeae 25 operarii, et per asinum gentiles populi designantur, cum per prophetam dicitur: Cognovit bos possessorem suum, et asinus praesepe Domini sui (Isai. I, 3). Quis enim bos, nisi Judaicus populus exstitit, cujus cervicem jugum legis attrivit? Et quis asinus, nisi gentilitas fuit, quam quilibet seductor reperit quasi brutum animal, et nulla ratione renitens, quo voluit errore substravit? Bos ergo possessorem, et asinus Domini praesepe cognovit, quia et Hebraicus populus Deum, quem colebat, sed ignorabat, reperit; et gentilitas legis pabulum, quod non habebat, accepit. Quod igitur superius nominatis ovibus et camelis dicitur, hoc inferius in bobus et asinis replicatur. 24. Praedicatores Judaeorum boves jugo legis pressi. — Habuit vero et ante Redemptoris adventum Judaea boves, quia ad praedicandum misit operarios, quibus voce Veritatis dicitur: Vae vobis, hypocritae, qui circuitis mare et aridam, ut faciatis unum proselytum; et cum fuerit factus, facitis eum filium gehennae duplo, quam vos (Matth. XXIII, 15). Quos grave jugum legis presserat, quia exteriora litterae mandata tolerabant. Quibus voce Veritatis dicitur: Venite ad me omnes, qui laboratis et onerati estis, et ego reficiam vos. Tollite jugum meum super vos, et discite a me, quia mitis sum et humilis corde (Matth. XI, 28, 29). Quod ergo in Evangelio bene laborantibus requies promittitur, hoc est quod hic juga boum quingenta memorantur: quia qui Redemptoris dominio colla subjiciunt quo, nisi ad requiem, tendunt? Unde et asinae quingentae perhibentur; quia vocatae plebes gentilium, dum ad requiem pervenire desiderant, cuncta mandatorum onera libenter portant. Unde bene, quod hanc requiem populus gentilis appeteret, Jacob filios alloquens, prophetica hoc studuit voce signare, dicens: Isachar asinus fortis, accubans inter terminos, vidit requiem quod esset bona, et terram quod optima, et supposuit humerum ad portandum (Genes, 14, 15). Inter terminos namque accubare, est praestolato mundi fine requiescere, nihilque de his quae nunc in medio versantur quaerere, sed ultima desiderare. Fortisque asinus requiem ac terram optimam videt, cum simplex gentilitas idcirco se ad robur boni operis erigit, quia ad aeternae vitae patriam tendit. Quae ad portandum humerum supponit; quia conspecta superna requie, praeceptis etiam gravibus in operatione se subjicit, et quidquid intolerabile pusillanimitas asserit, hoc ei leve ac facile spes remunerationis ostendit. Quia ergo ad aeternam requiem pro electorum parte Judaea gentilitasque colligitur, recte quingenta juga boum, et quingentae asinae haberi perhibentur. Sequitur: IBID. — Ac familia multa nimis. 25. Stulti mundi prius vocati quam sapientes. — Quid est, quod prius animalium multitudo describitur, et familia in extremo memoratur: nisi quod ad cognitionem fidei prius stulta mundi collecta sunt, ut post ejus etiam astuta vocarentur, Paulo attestante, qui ait: Non multi sapientes secundum carnem, non multi potentes, non multi nobiles, sed quae stulta sunt mundi, elegit Deus, ut confundat sapientes [I Cor. I, 27)? Ipsa namque sanctae Ecclesiae principia, litterarum perhibentur ignara, ut videlicet, cunctis in praedicatoribus suis Redemptor ostenderet quod ad vitam credentes populos non sermo, sed causa suaderet. Sequitur:

CAPUT XVIII.

CAPUT XVIII.

IBID. — Erat vir ille magnus inter omnes Orientales. 26. Christus humanitate caeteris similis, divinitate singularis. — Quod Redemptor noster Oriens dicitur, propheta 26 testante perhibetur, qui ait: Et ecce vir Oriens nomen ejus (Zach. VI, 12). Omnes ergo, qui in hoc Oriente fide consistunt, recte Orientales vocantur. Sed quia omnes homines tantummodo homines sunt, ipse autem Oriens Deus et homo, recte dicitur, Erat magnus inter omnes Orientales. Ac si aperte diceretur: Omnes, qui in fide Deo nascuntur, superat; quia non ut caeteros adoptio, sed natura illum divinitatis exaltat, qui etsi humanitate caeteris apparuit similis divinitate tamen mansit super omnia singularis.

CAPUT XIX.

Vers. 4. — Et ibant filii ejus, et faciebant convivia per domos. 27. In filiis Job convivia celebrantibus praedicatores intelligendi. — Filii facturi convivia per domos ibant, cum praedicatores apostoli in diversis mundi regionibus, virtutum epulas audientibus, quasi edentibus ministrabant. Unde et eisdem filiis de esurientibus plebibus dicitur: Date illis vos manducare (Matth. XIV, 17; XV, 32; Marc. VI, 37; Luc. IX, 13). Et rursum: Dimittere eos jejunos nolo, ne deficiant in via. Id est, in praedicatione vestra verbum consolationis accipiant, ne a veritatis pabulo jejuni remanentes, in hujus vitae labore succumbant. Hinc rursum eisdem filiis dicitur: Operamini non cibum qui perit, sed qui permanet in vitam aeternam (Joan. VI, 27). Quae convivia quomodo exhiberentur, adjungitur, cum protinus subinfertur:

CAPUT XX.

IBID. — Unusquisque in die suo. 28. Juxta mensuram intelligentiae pascendi auditores. — Si ignorantiae obscuritas sine dubitatione nox cordis est, intellectus non immerito dies vocatur. Unde et per Paulum dicitur: Alius judicat diem inter diem, alius judicat omnem diem (Rom. XIV, 5). Ac si aperte dicat: Alius quaedam nonnullis intermissis intelligit, alius vero omnia intellectu possibilia ita ut sunt videnda cognoscit. Unusquisque ergo filius in die suo convivium exhibet, quia sanctus quisque praedicator juxta mensuram illuminatae intelligentiae mentes audientium epulis veritatis pascit. In die suo Paulus fecerat convivium, cum dicebat: Beatiores erunt si sic permanserint secundum meum consilium (I Cor. VII, 40). De die suo unumquemque admonebat cogitare, cum diceret: Unusquisque in suo sensu abundet (Rom. XIV, 5). Sequitur:

CAPUT XXI.

IBID. — Et mittentes vocabant tres sorores suas, ut comederent et biberent cum eis. 29. Hi per filias Job significantur. Scriptura sacra modo cibus, modo potus. — Sorores filii ad convivium vocant: quia infirmis auditoribus sancti apostoli refectionis supernae gaudia praedicant, eorumque mentes, quia a veritatis pabulo jejunas aspiciunt, divini eloquii epulis pascunt. Bene autem dicitur: Ut comederent et biberent cum eis. Scriptura enim sacra aliquando nobis est cibus, aliquando potus. Cibus est in locis obscurioribus, quia quasi exponendo frangitur, et mandendo glutitur. Potus vero est in locis apertioribus, quia ita sorbetur sicut invenitur. Cibum vidit propheta Scripturam sacram, qui exponendo frangeretur, cum diceret: Parvuli petierunt panem, et non erat qui frangeret eis (Thren. IV, 4): id est, infirmi quique Scripturae sacrae valentiores sententias petierunt exponendo comminui; sed qui exponere debeat non valet inveniri. Potum vidit Scripturam sacram propheta, cum diceret: Omnes sitientes venite ad aquas (Isai. LV, 1). Si potus aperta mandata non essent, per semetipsam Veritas non clamaret: Si quis sitit, veniat ad me et bibat (Joan. VII, 37). Quasi cibum et potum vidit propheta Judaeae defuisse, cum diceret: Nobiles ejus interierunt fame, et multitudo ejus siti exaruit (Isai. V, 12). Paucorum quippe est fortia et occulta 27 cognoscere; multorum vero, historiae aperta sentire. Et idcirco Judaeae nobiles non siti, sed fame interiisse asserit; quia hi qui praeesse videbantur, dum totos se exteriori intelligentiae dederant, quod de intimis discutiendo manderent non habebant. Quia vero sublimioribus ab interno intellectu cadentibus, parvulorum intelligentia et in exterioribus exsiccatur, recte illic adjungitur: Multitudo ejus siti exaruit. Ac si aperte diceret: dum vulgus vitae suae studium deserit, jam nec fluenta historiae exquirit. Et occulta sacri eloquii mandata et aperta se intellexisse testantur, qui reprobanti se judici conquerentes dicunt: Manducavimus et bibimus coram te (Luc. XIII, 26). Quod aperte exponendo subjungunt: Et in plateis nostris docuisti (Ibid.). Quia ergo sacra eloquia in locis obscurioribus exponendo franguntur, in locis vero apertioribus ita, ut inventa fuerint, potantur, dicatur recte: Mittentes vocabant tres sorores suas, ut comederent et biberent cum eis. Ac si aperte diceretur: infirmos quosque blanda ad se persuasione deducebant, quatenus eorum mentes, et magna per contemplationem disserentes pascerent, et parva per historiam tradentes nutrirent. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXII.

VERS. 5. — Cumque in orbem transissent dies convivii, mittebat Job, et sanctificabat eos: consurgensque diluculo offerebat holocausta per singulos.
30. Christus praedicatorum suorum corda mundat. — In orbem dies convivii transeunt, cum praedicationum ministeria peraguntur. Peractisque conviviis, holocaustum Job pro filiis obtulit; quia pro apostolis de praedicatione redeuntibus, Patrem Redemptor exoravit. Bene autem mittendo sanctificare dicitur; quia dum sanctum Spiritum, qui a se procedit, discipulorum cordibus tribuit, quidquid culpae inesse potuit, emundavit. Recteque ad offerenda holocausta diluculo consurgere perhibetur; quia per hoc quod pro nobis intercessionis suae petitionem obtulit, discussa erroris nocte, humanae mentis tenebras illustravit; ne quo peccati contagio, ex ipsa praedicationis gratia, mens in occulto polluatur; ne sibi quae agit tribuat; ne sibi tribuendo quae agebat, amittat. Unde recte subjungitur:

CAPUT XXIII.

IBID. — Dicebat enim, Ne forte peccaverint filii mei, et benedixerint Deo in cordibus suis. 31. Maculae a praedicatoribus contractae quomodo diluendae. — Deo quippe benedicere, id est maledicere, est de ejus munere sibi gloriam praebere. Unde recte sanctis apostolis post praedicationem Dominus pedes lavit (Joan XIII, 5); ut videlicet aperte monstraret quia plerumque et in bono opere peccati pulvis contrahitur, et inde inquinantur vestigia loquentium, unde audientium corda mundantur. Nam saepe nonnulli dum exhortationis verba faciunt, quamlibet tenuiter, sese intrinsecus, quia per eos purgationis gratia derivatur, extollunt; cumque verbo aliena opera diluunt, quasi ex bono itinere pulverem malae cogitationis sumunt. Quid ergo fuit post praedicationem pedes discipulorum lavare, nisi post praedicationis gloriam, cogitationum pulverem tergere, gressusque cordis ab interna elatione mundare? Nec obstat ab omnimoda Mediatoris scientia quod dicitur: Ne forte. Nam cuncta sciens, sed in locutione sua ignorantiam nostram suscipiens, 28 atque dum suscipit docens, nonnunquam quasi ex nostra dubitatione loquitur, sicut dicit: Filius hominis veniens, putas, inveniet fidem super terram? (Luc. XVIII, 3.) Expletis ergo conviviis, sacrificium Job pro filiis offerens dicebat: Ne forte peccaverint filii mei, et benedixerint Deo in cordibus suis; quia Redemptor noster postquam praedicatores suos a malis impugnantibus diluit, etiam inter bona quae egerant a tentationibus defendit. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXIV.

IBID. — Sic faciebat Job cunctis diebus. 32. Holocaustum a Christo pro nobis jugiter oblatum. Cunctis diebus Job sacrificium offerre non cessat; quia sine intermissione pro nobis holocaustum Redemptor immolat, qui sine cessatione Patri suam pro nobis incarnationem demonstrat. Ipsa quippe ejus incarnatio nostrae emundationis oblatio est; cumque se hominem ostendit, delicta hominis interveniens diluit. Et humanitatis suae mysterio perenne sacrificium immolat, quia et haec sunt aeterna quae mundat. 33.. VERS. 1. — Vir erat in terra Hus nomine Job. 34. SENSUS MORALIS. — Job electos significat. Quae eorum affectio circa terrena et aeterna. — Si Job dolens, et Hus consiliator dicitur, non immerito per utraque nomina electus quisque figuratur; quia nimirum consiliatorem animum inhabitat, qui dolens de praesentibus ad aeterna festinat. Nam sunt nonnulli qui vitam suam negligunt; et dum transitoria appetunt, dum aeterna vel non intelligunt, vel intellecta contemnunt, nec dolorem sentiunt, nec habere consilium sciunt. Cumque superna, quae amiserunt, non considerant, esse se, heu miseri! in bonis putant. Nequaquam enim ad veritatis lucem, cui conditi fuerant, mentis oculos erigunt; nequaquam ad contemplationem aeternae patriae desiderii aciem tendunt: sed semetipsos in his ad quae projecti sunt deserentes, vice patriae diligunt exsilium quod patiuntur, et in caecitate, quam tolerant, quasi in claritate luminis exsultant. At contra electorum mentes dum cuncta transitoria nulla esse conspiciunt, ad quae sint conditae exquirunt; cumque eorum satisfactioni nihil extra Deum sufficit, ipsa inquisitionis exercitatione fatigata illorum cogitatio, in conditoris sui spe et contemplatione requiescit, supernis interseri civibus appetit; et unusquisque eorum adhuc in mundo corpore positus, mente jam extra mundum surgit, aerumnam exsilii, quam tolerat, deplorat, et ad sublimem patriam incessantibus se amoris stimulis excitat. Cum ergo dolens videt, quam sit aeternum quod perdidit, invenit salubre consilium, temporale hoc despicere quod percurrit; et quo magis crescit consilii scientia, ut peritura 29 deserat, eo augetur dolor, quod necdum ad mansura pertingat. Unde bene per Salomonem dicitur: Qui apponit scientiam, apponit dolorem (Eccles. I, 18). Qui enim scit jam summa quae adhuc non habet, magis de infimis in quibus retinetur dolet. 35. In terra Hus, id est, in consilio habitant. — Recte ergo in terra Hus habitare Job dicitur, quia in scientiae consilio electi uniuscujusque dolens animus tenetur. Intuendum quoque est quam nullus dolor mentis sit in actione praecipitationis. Qui enim sine consiliis vivunt, qui se ipsos rerum eventibus praecipites deserunt, nullo interim cogitationum dolore fatigantur. Nam qui solerter in vitae consilio figit mentem, caute sese in omni actione circumspiciendo considerat; et ne ex re quae agitur repentinus finis adversusque subripiat, hunc prius molliter posito pede cogitationis palpat; pensat ne ab his quae agenda sunt formido praepediat; ne in his quae differenda sunt praecipitatio impellat; ne prava per concupiscentiam aperto bello superent; ne recta per inanem gloriam insidiando supplantent. Job ergo in terra Hus habitat, dum mens electi quo magis per consilium vivere nititur, eo angusti itineris dolore fatigatur. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXVI.

IBID. — Simplex et rectus, timens Deum, et recedens a malo. 36. Justi simplicitas et rectitudo. — Quisquis aeternam patriam appetit, simplex procul dubio et rectus vivit: simplex videlicet opere, rectus fide; simplex in bonis quae inferius peragit, rectus in summis quae in intimis sentit. Sunt namque nonnulli qui in bonis quae faciunt simplices non sunt, dum non in his retributionem interius, sed exterius favorem quaerunt. Unde bene per quemdam sapientem dicitur: Vae peccatori terram ingredienti duabus viis (Eccli. II, 14). Duabus quippe viis peccator terram ingreditur, quando et Dei est quod opere exhibet, et mundi quod per cogitationem quaerit. 37. A timore inchoat, in charitate consummatur. — Bene autem dicitur: Timens

Deum, et recedens a malo; quia sancta electorum Ecclesia simplicitatis suae et rectitudinis vias timore inchoat, sed charitate consummat. Cui tunc est funditus a malo recedere, cum ex amore Dei coeperit jam nolle peccare. Cum vero adhuc timore bona agit, a malo penitus non recessit; quia eo ipso peccat, quo peccare vellet, si inulte potuisset. Recte ergo cum timere Deum Job dicitur, recedere etiam a malo perhibetur; quia dum metum charitas sequitur, ea quae mente relinquitur, etiam per cogitationis propositum culpa calcatur. Et quia ex timore unumquodque vitium premitur, ex charitate autem virtutes oriuntur, recte subjungitur:

CAPUT XXVII.

VERS. 2. — Natique sunt ei septem filii et tres filiae. 38. Septem filii Job totidem dona Spiritus sancti significant; tres filiae, spem, fidem et charitatem. — Septem quippe nobis filii nascuntur, cum per conceptionem bonae cogitationis, sancti Spiritus septem in nobis virtutes oriuntur. Hanc namque internam prolem propheta dinumerat, cum Spiritus mentem fecundat, dicens: Requiescet super eum Spiritus Domini, spiritus sapientiae et intellectus, spiritus consilii et fortitudinis, spiritus scientiae et pietatis, et replebit eum spiritus timoris Domini (Isai. XI, 2). Cum ergo per adventum Spiritus sancti, sapientia, intellectus, consilium, fortitudo, scientia, pietas ac timor Domini unicuique nostrum 30 gignitur, quasi mansura posteritas in mente propagatur, quae supernae nostrae nobilitatis genus eo ad vitam longius servat, quo amori aeternitatis sociat. Sed habent in nobis septem filii tres procul dubio sorores suas, quia quidquid virile hi virtutum sensus faciunt, spei, fidei charitatique conjungunt. Neque enim ad denarii perfectionem septem filii perveniunt, nisi in fide, spe et charitate fuerit omne quod agunt. Quia vero hanc praeeuntium virtutum copiam multimoda bonorum operum cogitatio sequitur, recte subjungitur:

CAPUT XXVIII.

VERS. 3. — Et fuit possessio ejus septem millia ovium et tria millia camelorum. 39. Oves possidet qui mentem innoxiam intus veritate pascit. — Servata quippe veritate historiae, imitari spiritaliter possumus, quod carnaliter audimus. Ovium enim septem millia possidemus, cum cogitationes innocuas, perfecta cordis munditia, intra nosmetipsos inquisito veritatis pabulo pascimus. 40. Camelos possidet, qui quod in se altum ac tortuosum, aut fidei subdit, aut prae charitate flectit. — Eruntque nobis in possessione etiam tria millia camelorum, si omne, quod in nobis altum ac tortuosum est, rationi fidei subditur, et sub cognitione Trinitatis, sponte in appetitu humilitatis inclinatur. Camelos quippe possidemus, si quod altum sapimus, humiliter deponamus. Camelos procul dubio possidemus, cum cogitationes nostras ad infirmitatis fraternae compassionem flectimus, ut vicissim onera nostra portantes, alienae infirmitati compati condescendendo noverimus. Possunt etiam per camelos, qui ungulam nequaquam findunt, sed tamen ruminant, terrenarum rerum bonae dispensationes intelligi: quae quia habent aliquid saeculi, et aliquid Dei, per commune eas necesse est animal designari. Neque enim terrena dispensatio, quamvis aeternae utilitati serviat, sine perturbatione mentis valet exhiberi. Quia igitur per hanc et ad praesens mens confunditur, et in perpetuum merces paratur, quasi commune animal, et aliquid de lege habet, et aliquid non habet. Ungulam namque non findit, quia non se penitus anima ab omni terreno opere disjungit; sed tamen ruminat, quia bene dispensando temporalia, per certitudinis fiduciam coelestia sperat. Terrenae igitur dispensationes, quasi camelorum more, capite legi concordant, pede discrepant; quia et coeli sunt illa quae juste viventes appetunt, et hujus mundi sunt ea in quibus opere versantur. Nos ergo cum easdem terrenas dispensationes cognitioni Trinitatis subdimus, quasi camelos fide possidemus. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXIX.

Quingenta quoque juga boum, et quingentae asinae. 41. Boum juga concordes virtutes. Asinae lascivientes, motus aut cogitationes simplices. — Juga boum in usum nostrae possessionis sunt, cum concordes virtutes exarant duritiam mentis. Quingentas quoque asinas possidemus, cum lascivientes motus restringimus; et quidquid in nobis carnale exsurgere appetit, spiritali cordis dominatu refrenamus. Vel certe asinas possidere, est cogitationes intra nos simplices regere: quae dum in subtiliori intellectu currere non valent quo quasi pigrius ambulant, eo fraterna onera mansuetius portant. Sunt namque nonnulli qui dum alta non intelligunt, ad exteriora conversationis opera se humilius premunt. Bene ergo per asinas, pigrum quidem animal, sed tamen portandis oneribus deditum, 31 simplices cogitationes accipimus; quia dum nostram plerumque ignorantiam cognoscimus, levius onera aliena toleramus. Cumque nos quasi singularis sapientiae altitudo non elevat, ad perferendam alieni cordis inertiam, mens se nostra aequanimiter inclinat. Recte autem sive juga boum, sive asinae quingentae referuntur; quia vel in hoc, quod prudenter sapimus, vel in hoc, quod humiliter ignoramus, dum aeternae pacis requiem quaerimus, quasi intra jubilei numerum tenemur. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXX.

IBID. — Ac familia multa nimis. 42. Multa familia est multitudo cogitationum cohibenda. — Multam nimis familiam possidemus, cum cogitationes innumeras sub mentis dominatione restringimus; ne ipsa sui multitudine animum superent, ne perverso ordine discretionis nostrae principatum calcent. Et bene cogitationum turba multae familiae appellatione signatur. Nam scimus quod absente domina, ancillarum linguae perstrepunt, silentium deserunt, deputati operis officia negligunt, totumque sibimet ordinem vivendi confundunt. At si repente domina veniat, mox perstrepentes linguae reticent, officia uniuscujusque operis repetunt; sicque ad opus proprium, ac si non recesserint, revertuntur. Si igitur a domo mentis ad monumentum ratio discedat, quasi absente domina, cogitationum se clamor, velut garrula ancillarum turba multiplicat. Ut autem ratio ad mentem redierit, mox se confusio tumultuosa compescit; et quasi ancillae se ad injunctum opus tacite reprimunt, dum cogitationes protinus causis se propriis ad utilitatem subdunt. Possidemus ergo multam familiam, cum recto jure innumeris cogitationibus rationis discretione dominamur. Quod nimirum cum solerter agimus, jungi per eamdem discretionem angelis conamur. Unde et recte subjungitur:

CAPUT XXXI.

IBID. — Eratque vir ille magnus inter omnes Orientales. 43. Earum refrenatione magni efficimur. — Tunc namque magni inter omnes Orientales efficimur, cum eis spiritibus, qui orienti luci inhaerent, pressa carnalis corruptionis nebula, discretionis nostrae radiis, in quantum possibilitas suppetit, sociamur. Unde et per Paulum dicitur: Nostra conversatio in coelis est (Philipp. III, 20). Quisquis temporalia ac defectiva sequitur, occasum petit; quisquis vero superna desiderat, quia in Oriente habitet, demonstrat. Magnus ergo non inter Occidentales, sed inter Orientales efficitur, qui non inter malorum actiones ima et fugitiva quaerentium, sed inter choros proficere supernorum civium conatur. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXII.

VERS. 4. Et ibant filii ejus, et faciebant convivium per domos, unusquisque in die suo. 44. Virtutes singulae, in die suo convivium faciunt. — Filii per domos convivium faciunt, dum virtutes singulae juxta modum proprium mentem pascunt. Et bene dicitur: Unusquisque in die suo. Dies enim uniuscujusque filii, est illuminatio uniuscujusque virtutis. Ut enim haec ipsa dona breviter septiformis gratiae replicem, alium diem habet sapientia, alium intellectus, alium consilium, alium fortitudo, alium scientia, alium pietas, alium timor. Neque enim hoc est sapere, quod intelligere; quia multi aeterna quidem sapiunt, sed haec intelligere nequaquam possunt. Sapientia ergo in 32 die suo convivium facit, quia mentem de aeternorum spe et certitudine reficit. Intellectus in die suo convivium parat; quia in eo quod audita penetrat, reficiendo cor, tenebras ejus illustrat. Consilium in die suo convivium exhibet; quia dum esse praecipitem prohibet, ratione animum replet. Fortitudo in die suo convivium facit; quia dum adversa non metuit, trepidanti menti cibos confidentiae apponit. Scientia in die suo convivium parat, quia in ventre mentis ignorantiae jejunium superat. Pietas in die suo convivium exhibet, quia cordis viscera misericordiae operibus replet. Timor in die suo convivium facit; quia dum premit mentem, ne de praesentibus superbiat, de futuris illam spei cibo confortat. 45. Si ab invicem separentur, deficiunt. — Sed illud in hoc filiorum convivio perscrutandum video, quod semetipsos invicem pascunt. Valde enim singula quaelibet virtus destituitur, si non una alii virtus virtuti suffragetur. Minor quippe est sapientia, si intellectu careat; et valde inutilis intellectus est, si ex sapientia non subsistat; quia cum altiora sine sapientiae pondere penetrat, sua illum levitas gravius ruiturum levat. Vile est consilium, cui robur fortitudinis deest; quia quod tractando invenit, carens viribus, usque ad perfectionem operis non perducit: et valde fortitudo destruitur, nisi per consilium fulciatur; quia quo plus se posse conspicit, eo virtus sine rationis moderamine deterius in praeceps ruit. Nulla est scientia, si utilitatem pietatis non habet; quia dum bona cognita exsequi negligit, sese ad judicium arctius stringit. Et valde inutilis est pietas, si scientiae discretione caret; quia dum nulla hanc scientia illuminat, quomodo misereatur ignorat. Timor quoque ipse nisi has etiam virtutes habuerit, ad nullum opus procul dubio bonae actionis surgit; quia dum ad cuncta trepidat, ipsa sua formidine a bonis omnibus torpens vacat. Quia ergo alternato ministerio virtus a virtute reficitur, recte dicitur quod apud se filii vicissim convivantur. Cumque una aliam sublevando sublevat, quasi per dies suos numerosa soboles pascenda convivium parat. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXIII.

IBID. — Et mittentes vocabant tres sorores suas, ut comederent et biberent cum eis. 46. Ad convivium virtutum invitandae, spes, fides, charitas. — Cum virtutes nostrae in omne quod agunt, spem, fidem, et charitatem ciunt, quasi operatores filii, tres ad convivium sorores vocant, ut fides, spes et charitas in opus bonum gaudeant quod unaquaeque virtus administrat. Quae quasi ex cibo vires accipiunt, dum-bonis operibus fidentiores fiunt; et dum post cibum contemplationis rore infundi appetunt, quasi ex poculo ebriantur. 47. Ipsis bonis quae agimus, ad deterius propinquamus. — Sed quid est, quod in hac vita sine quavis tenuissimi contagii inquinatione peragatur? Nonnunquam namque ipsis bonis quae agimus ad deterius propinquamus; quia dum laetitiam menti pariunt, quamdam etiam securitatem gignunt; dumque mens secura redditur, in torporem laxatur. Nonnunquam vero aliquantula elatione nos polluunt; et tanto dejectiores apud Deum faciunt, quanto apud nosmetipsos tumidiores reddunt. Unde bene subjungitur.

CAPUT XXXIV.

VERS. 5. Cumque in orbem transissent dies convivii, mittebat Job, et sanctificabat eos. 33 47. In bonis operibus purganda intentio. — Peracto quippe orbe dierum convivii, mittere ad filios, eosque sanctificare, est post virtutum sensum, intentionem cordis dirigere, et omne quod agitur, districta retractationis discussione mundare; ne bona aestimentur quae mala sunt; ne saltem veraciter bona putentur sufficientia, cum perfecta non sunt. Sic enim mens plerumque decipitur, ut aut qualitate mali, aut boni quantitate fallatur. Sed hos virtutum sensus melius preces quam discussiones inveniunt; nam ea quae perscrutari in nobismetipsis plenius nitimur, saepe verius orando quam investigando penetramus. Cum enim mens per quamdam compunctionis machinam ad alta sustollitur, omne, quod ei de se ipsa occurrerit, sub se ipsa dijudicando certius contemplatur. Unde et recte subjungitur:

CAPUT XXXV.

IBID. — Consurgensque diluculo offerebat holocausta per singulos. 48. Holocaustum precis pro singulis virtutibus purgandis offerendum. — Diluculo namque consurgimus, cum compunctionis luce perfusi humanitatis nostrae noctem deserimus, et ad veri luminis radios, oculos mentis aperimus. Atque holocaustum per singulos filios offerimus, cum pro unaquaque virtute Domino hostiam nostrae precis immolamus: ne sapientia elevet; ne intellectus, dum subtiliter currit, aberret; ne consilium, dum se multiplicat, confundat; ne fortitudo, dum fiduciam praebet, praecipitet; ne scientia, dum novit et non diligit, inflet; ne pietas, dum se extra rectitudinem inclinat, intorqueat; ne timor, dum plus justo trepidat, in desperationis foveam mergat. Cum ergo pro unaquaque virtute, ut pura esse debeat, preces Domino fundimus, quid aliud, quam juxta filiorum numerum holocaustum per singulos exhibemus? Holocaustum namque totum incensum dicitur. Holocaustum igitur dare, est totam mentem igne compunctionis incendere, ut in ara amoris cor ardeat, et quasi delicta propriae sobolis, inquinamenta cogitationis exurat. 49.. IBID. — Dicebat enim: Ne forte peccaverint filii mei, et benedixerint Deo in cordibus suis. 50. Variae hostis insidiae; ut bona opera vitiet, in operis initio, in progressu, in fine. — Filii in cordibus maledicunt, cum recta nostra opera a non rectis cogitationibus prodeunt; cum bona in aperto exerunt, sed in occulto noxia moliuntur. Deo quippe maledicunt, cum mentes nostrae se de se aestimant habere quod sunt. Deo maledicunt, cum se et ab illo accepisse vires intelligunt, sed tamen de ejus muneribus propriam laudem quaerunt. Sciendum vero est, quod bona nostra tribus modis antiquus hostis insequitur, ut videlicet hoc, quod rectum coram hominibus agitur, in interni judicis conspectu vitietur. Aliquando namque in bono opere intentionem polluit, ut omne, quod in actione sequitur, eo purum mundumque non exeat, quo hoc ab origine perturbat. Aliquando vero intentionem boni operis vitiare non praevalet, sed in ipsa actione se quasi in itinere opponit; ut cum per propositum mentis securior quisque egreditur, subjuncto latenter vitio, quasi ex insidiis perimatur. Aliquando vero nec intentionem vitiat, nec in itinere supplantat, sed opus bonum in fine actionis illaqueat; quantoque vel a domo cordis, vel ab itinere operis longius recessisse se simulat, tanto ad decipiendum bonae actionis terminum astutius exspectat; et quo incautum quemque quasi recedendo reddiderit, eo illum repentino nonnunquam vulnere durius insanabiliusque transfigit. 51. Intentionem quippe in bono opere polluit, quia cum facilia ad decipiendum corda hominum conspicit, eorum desideriis auram transitorii favoris apponit; ut in his, quae recta faciunt, ad appetenda ima, fortitudine intentionis inclinentur. Unde recte sub Judaeae specie, de unaquaque anima laqueo miserae intentionis capta, per prophetam dicitur: Facti sunt hostes ejus in capite. Ac si aperte (Threnn. I, 5) diceretur: Cum bonum opus non bona intentione sumitur, huic adversantes spiritus ab ipso cogitationis exordio principantur; tantoque eam plenius possident, quanto et per initium dominantes tenent. 52. Cum vero intentionem vitiare non praevalent, in via positos laqueos tegunt, ut in eo quod bene agitur cor exaltans se ex latere ad vitium derivetur; quatenus quod inchoans aliter proposuerat, in actione longe aliter quam coeperat percurrat. Saepe enim bono operi dum laus humana obviat, mentem operantis immutat: quae quamvis quaesita non fuerat, tamen oblata delectat. Cujus 35 delectatione cum mens bene operantis resolvitur, ab omni intentionis intimae vigore dissipatur. Saepe se bene inchoatae nostrae justitiae, ex latere ira subjungit; et dum zelo rectitudinis immoderatius mentem turbat, cunctam quietis intimae salutem sauciat. Saepe gravitatem cordis, quasi ex latere subjuncta tristitia sequitur; atque omne opus quod mens bona intentione inchoat, haec velamine moeroris obumbrat. Quae et nonnunquam tanto tardius repellitur, quanto et pressae menti quasi serior famulatur. Saepe se bono operi laetitia immoderata subjungit; cumque plus mentem quam decet, hilarescere exigit, ab actione bona omne pondus gravitatis repellit. Quia enim bene etiam inchoantibus subesse in itinere laqueos Psalmista conspexerat, recte prophetico plenus spiritu dicebat: In via hac, qua ambulabam, absconderunt laqueum mihi (Psal. CXLI, 4). Quod bene ac subtiliter Jeremias insinuat, qui dum gesta foris referre studuit, quae intus apud nosmetipsos gererentur indicavit, dicens: Venerunt octoginta viri de Sichem, et de Silo, et de Samaria, rasi barba, et scissis vestibus, squalentes; munera et thus habebant in manu, ut offerrent in domo Domini. Egressus autem Ismael filius Nathaniae in occursum eorum de Maspha, incedens et plorans ibat. Cumque occurrisset eis, dixit ad eos: Venite ad Godoliam filium Aicham. Qui cum venissent ad medium civitatis, interfecit eos (Jerem. XLI, 5). Barbam quippe radunt, qui sibi de propriis viribus fiduciam subtrahunt. Vestes scindunt, qui sibimetipsis in exterioris decoris laceratione non parcunt. Oblaturi in domo Domini thus et munera veniunt; qui exhibere se in Dei sacrificio orationem cum operibus pollicentur. Sed tamen si se in ipsa sanctae devotionis via caute circumspicere nesciunt, Ismael Nathaniae filius in eorum occursum venit; quia nimirum quilibet malignus spiritus, prioris sui, Satanae videlicet exemplo, in superbiae errore generatus, se ad laqueum deceptionis opponit. De quo et bene dicitur: Incedens et plorans ibat; quia ut devotas mentes interimere feriendo praevaleat, semetipsum quasi sub velamine virtutis occultat; et dum concordare se vere lugentibus simulat, ad cordis intima securius admissus, hoc, quod intus de virtute latet, occidit. Qui plerumque se spondet ad altiora provehere. Unde et dixisse perhibetur, Venite ad Godoliam filium Aicham; atque dum majora promittit, etiam minima subtrahit. Unde et recte dictum est: Qui cum venissent ad medium civitatis, interfecit eos. Viros ergo ad offerenda Deo munera venientes, in medio civitatis interficit; quia divinis deditae operibus mentes, nisi magna se circumspectione custodiant, hoste subripiente, dum devotionis portant hostiam, in ipso itinere perdunt vitam. De cujus hostis manu non evaditur, nisi citius ad poenitentiam recurratur. Unde illic apte subjungitur: Decem autem viri reperti sunt inter eos qui dixerunt ad Ismael: Noli occidere nos, quia habemus thesauros in agro frumenti et hordei, et olei, et mellis; et non occidit eos (Jer. XLI, 8). Thesaurus quippe in agro est spes in poenitentia, quae quia non cernitur, quasi in terra cordis suffossa continetur. Qui ergo thesauros in agro habuere, servati sunt; quia qui post incautelae suae vitium, ad lamentum 36 poenitentiae redeunt, nec capti moriuntur. 53. Cum vero antiquus hostis neque in exordio intentionis ferit, neque in itinere actionis intercipit, duriores in fine laqueos tendit. Quem tanto nequius obsidet, quanto solum sibi remansisse ad decipiendum videt. Hos namque fini suo appositos laqueos Propheta conspexerat, cum dicebat: Ipsi calcaneum meum observabunt (Psal. LV, 7). Quia enim in calcaneo finis est corporis, quid per hunc nisi terminus signatur actionis? Sive ergo maligni spiritus, sive pravi quique homines, illorum superbiae sequaces, calcaneum observant, cum actionis bonae finem vitiare desiderant. Unde et eidem serpenti dicitur: Ipsa tuum observabit caput, et tu calcaneum ejus (Genes. III, 15, sec. LXX). Caput quippe serpentis observare, est initia suggestionis ejus aspicere, et manu sollicitae considerationis a cordis aditu funditus exstirpare. Qui tamen cum ab initio deprehenditur, percutere calcaneum molitur, quia etsi suggestione prima intentionem non percutit, decipere in fine tendit. Si autem semel cor in intentione corrumpitur, sequentis actionis medietas, et terminus ab hoste callido secure possidetur; quoniam totam sibi arborum fructus ferre conspicit, quam veneni dente in radice vitiavit. Quia ergo summa cura vigilandum est, ne vel bonis operibus serviens mens, reproba intentione polluatur, recte dicitur: Ne forte peccaverint filii mei, et benedixerint Deo in cordibus suis. Ac si aperte diceretur: Nullum est bonum, quod foris agitur, si non pro eo intus ante Dei oculos innocentiae victima in ara cordis immolatur.. Tota itaque virtute perspiciendus est fluvius operis, si purus emanat ex fonte cogitationis. Omni cura servandus est a malitiae pulvere oculus cordis; ne hoc, quod in actione rectum hominibus ostentat, apud semetipsum per vitium pravae intentionis intorqueat. 54. Ideo curandum, ne bona opera nostra pauca sint, aut indiscussa. — Curandum itaque est ne bona nostra pauca sint; curandum ne indiscussa; ne aut pauca agentes, inveniamur steriles; aut indiscussa relinquentes, vecordes. Neque enim unaquaeque vere virtus est, si mista aliis virtutibus non est. Unde recte ad Moysen dicitur: Sume tibi aromata, stacten et onycha, galbanum boni odoris, et thus lucidissimum; aequalis ponderis erunt omnia, faciesque thymiama compositum opere unguentarii, mistum diligenter et purum (Exod. XXX, 34). Thymiama quippe ex aromatibus compositum facimus, cum in altari boni operis, virtutum multiplicitate redolemus. Quod mistum et purum fit; quia quanto virtus virtuti jungitur, tanto incensum boni operis sincerius exhibetur. Unde et bene subjungitur: Cumque in tenuissimum pulverem universa contuderis, pones ex eo coram testimonii tabernaculo (Ibid., 36). In tenuissimum pulverem aromata universa conterimus, cum bona nostra quasi in pilo cordis, occulta discussione tundimus; et si veraciter bona sint, subtiliter retractamus. Aromata ergo in pulverem redigere, est virtutes recogitando terere, et usque ad subtilitatem occulti examinis revocare. Et notandum, quod de eodem pulvere dicitur: Pones ex eo coram testimonii tabernaculo; quia tunc nimirum bona nostra veraciter in conspectu judicis placent, cum haec mens subtilius recogitando conterit, et quasi de aromatibus pulverem reddit; ne 37 grossum durumque sit bonum quod agitur; ne si hoc arcta retractationis manus non comminuat, odorem de se subtilius non aspergat. Hinc est enim quod sponsae virtus, sponsi voce laudatur, cum dicitur: Quae est ista, quae ascendit per desertum, sicut virgula fumi ex aromatibus myrrhae et thuris, et universi pulveris pigmentarii (Cant. III, 6)? Sancta quippe Ecclesia sicut fumi virgula ex aromatibus ascendit; quia ex vitae suae virtutibus in interni quotidie incensi rectitudinem proficit, nec sparsa per cogitationes defluit, sed sese intra arcana cordis in rigoris virga constringit. Quae ea quae agit, dum recogitare semper ac retractare non desinit, myrrham quidem et thus habet in opere, sed pulverem in cogitatione. Hinc est, quod de oblatoribus hostiae ad Moysen iterum dicitur: Detracta pelle hostiae, artus in frusta concidant (Levit. I, 6). Pellem namque hostiae subtrahimus, cum a mentis nostrae oculis superficiem virtutis amovemus. Cujus artus in frusta concidimus, cum distinguentes subtiliter ejus intima, membratimque cogitamus. Curandum ergo est, ne cum mala vincimus, bonis lascivientibus supplantemur; ne fortasse fluxa prodeant, ne incircumspecta capiantur, ne per errorem, viam deserant, ne per lassitudinem fracta, anteacti laboris meritum perdant. In cunctis enim vigilanter debet se mens circumspicere, atque in ipsa circumspectionis 38 suae providentia perseverare. Unde et recte subjungitur:

CAPUT XXXVII.

IBID. — Sic faciebat Job cunctis diebus. 55. Perseverantia necessaria. — Incassum quippe bonum agitur (De poenit., dist. 3, can. 17, incassum), si ante terminum vitae deseratur; quia et frustra velociter currit, qui prius quam ad metas veniat deficit. Hinc est enim quod de reprobis dicitur: Vae his qui perdiderunt sustinentiam (Eccli. II, 16). Hinc electis suis Veritas dicit: Vos estis qui permansistis mecum in tentationibus meis (Luc. XXII, 28). Hinc Joseph, qui inter fratres usque ad finem justus perseverasse describitur, solus talarem tunicam habuisse perhibitur (Genes. XXXVII, 24, sec. LXX). Nam quid est talaris tunica, nisi actio consummata? Quasi enim protensa tunica talum corporis operit, cum bona actio ante Dei oculos usque ad vitae nos terminum tegit. Hinc est quod per Moysen caudam hostiae in altari offerre praecipitur (Exod. XXIX, 22; Levit. III, 9); ut videlicet omne bonum quod incipimus, etiam perseveranti fine compleamus. Bene igitur coepta cunctis diebus agenda sunt; ut cum malum pugnando repellitur, ipsa boni victoria constantiae manu teneatur. 56. Haec itaque sub intellectu triplici diximus, ut fastidienti animae varia alimenta proponentes, aliquid, quod eligendo sumat, offeramus. Hoc tamen magnopere petimus, ut qui ad spiritalem intelligentiam mentem sublevat, a veneratione historiae non recedat.

LIBER SECUNDUS.

Capitis primi a versu sexto ad finem usque, secundum triplicem sensum prosequitur enarrationem.

CAPUT PRIMUM.

1. S. scriptura Speculum est. — Scriptura sacra mentis oculis quasi quoddam speculum opponitur (Vid. August. in Psal. CIII, ser. 1, n. 4), ut interna nostra facies in ipsa videatur. Ibi etenim foeda, ibi pulchra nostra cognoscimus. Ibi sentimus, quantum proficimus, ibi a provectu quam longe distamus. Narrat autem gesta sanctorum, et ad imitationem corda provocat infirmorum. Dumque illorum victricia facta commemorat, contra vitiorum praelia, debilia nostra confirmat; fitque verbis illius, ut eo mens minus inter certamina trepidet, quo ante se positos tot virorum fortium triumphos videt. Nonnunquam vero non solum nobis eorum virtutes asserit, sed etiam casus innotescit; ut et in victoria fortium quod imitando arripere, et rursum videamus in lapsibus quod debeamus timere. Ecce enim Job describitur tentatione auctus, sed David tentatione prostratus; ut et majorum virtus spem nostram foveat, et majorum casus ad cautelam nos humilitatis accingat; quatenus dum illa gaudentes sublevant, ista metuentes premant; et audientis animus illinc spei fiducia, hinc humilitate timoris eruditus, nec temeritate superbiat, quia formidine premitur, nec pressus timore desperet, quia ad spei fiduciam virtutis exemplo roboratur.

CAPUT II.

VERS. 6. — Quadam die cum venissent filii Dei, ut assisterent coram Domino, adfuit inter eos etiam Satan. 2. HISTORICUS SENSUS. Quam accurate S. Scriptura facta describat. — Intueri libet quomodo sacra eloquia in exordiis narrationum qualitates exprimant, terminosque causarum.

Aliquando namque a positione loci, aliquando a positione corporis, aliquando a qualitate aeris, aliquando a qualitate temporis signant, quid de ventura actione subjiciant. A positione quippe locorum divina Scriptura exprimit subsequentium merita finesque causarum, sicut de Israel dicit quia verba Dei in monte audire non potuit, sed praecepta in campestribus accepit: subsequentem nimirum infirmitatem populi indicans, qui ascendere ad summa non valuit, sed semetipsum in infimis neglecte vivendo laxavit. A positione corporis futura denuntiat, sicut in apostolorum Actibus Stephanus Jesum, qui a dextris virtutis Dei sedet, stantem se vidisse manifestat (Act. VII, 55, 56). Stare quippe adjuvantis est. Et recte stare cernitur, qui in bello certaminis opitulatur. A qualitate aeris res subsequens demonstratur, sicut evangelista, cum praedicante Domino, nullos tunc ex Judaea credituros diceret, praemisit dicens: Hiems autem erat (Joan. X, 22). Scriptum namque est: Quoniam abundabit iniquitas, refrigescet charitas multorum (Matth. XXIV, 12). Idcirco ergo hiemis curavit tempus exprimere, ut inesse auditorum cordibus malitiae frigus indicaret. Hinc est quod de negaturo Petro praemittitur: Quia frigus erat, et stans ad prunas calefaciebat se (Joan. XVIII, 18). Jam namque intus a charitatis calore torpuerat, et ad amorem praesentis vitae, quasi ad persecutorum prunas infirmitate aestuante recalebat. A qualitate quoque temporis finis exprimitur actionis, sicut non rediturus ad veniam, ad traditionis perfidiam nocte Judas 39 exiisse perhibetur, cum egrediente illo, ab evangelista dicitur: Erat autem nox (Joan. XIII, 30). Hinc enim et iniquo diviti dicitur: Hac nocte repetent animam tuam abs te (Luc. XII, 20). Anima quippe, quae ad tenebras ducitur, non in die repeti, sed in nocte memoratur. Hinc est quod Salomon, qui sapientiam non perseveraturus accepit, in somnis hanc et nocte accepisse describitur (III Reg. III, 11). Hinc est quod angeli ad Abraham meridie veniunt; punituri autem Sodomam, ad eam vespere venisse memorantur

(Gen. XVIII, 1, 2; XIX, 1). Quia igitur beati Job tentatio ad victoriam deducitur, a die coepta perhibetur, cum dicitur:

CAPUT III.

IBID. — Quadam die, cum venissent filii Dei, ut assisterent coram Domino, adfuit inter eos etiam Satan. 3. Quomodo Angeli Deo adsunt, etiam in ministerium missi. Quantae subtilitatis sint angeli. — Qui autem Dei filii, nisi electi angeli vocantur? De quibus cum constet, quod obtutibus majestatis inserviant, valde quaerendum est unde veniant, ut coram Domino assistant. De his quippe voce Veritatis dicitur: Angeli eorum in coelis semper vident faciem Patris mei, qui in coelis est (Matth. XVIII, 10). De his propheta ait: Millia millium ministrabant ei, et decies millies centena millia assistebant ei (Daniel. VII, 10). Si igitur semper vident, et semper assistunt, vigilanti cura quaerendum est unde veniunt, qui nunquam recedunt. Sed cum de illis per Paulum dicitur: Nonne omnes sunt administratorii spiritus in ministerium missi, propter eos qui haereditatem capiunt salutis (Heb. I, 14)? Per hoc, quod missos cognoscimus, unde veniant invenimus. Sed ecce quaestioni quaestionem jungimus, et quasi dum ansam solvere nitimur, nodum ligamus. Quomodo enim aut semper assistere, aut videre semper faciem Patris possunt, si ad ministerium exterius pro nostra salute mittuntur? Quod tamen citius solvimus, si quantae subtilitatis sit angelica natura pensamus. Neque enim sic a divina visione foras exeunt, ut internae contemplationis gaudiis priventur; quia si conditoris aspectum exeuntes amitterent, nec jacentes erigere, nec ignorantibus vera nuntiare potuissent; fontemque lucis, quem egredientes ipsi perderent, caecis nullatenus propinarent. In hoc itaque est nunc natura angelica a naturae nostrae conditione distincta, quod nos et loco circumscribimur, et caecitatis ignorantia coarctamur: angelorum vero spiritus loco quidem circumscripti sunt, sed tamen eorum scientiae longe super nos incomparabiliter dilatantur.

Interius quippe exteriusque sciendo distenti sunt, quia ipsum fontem scientiae contemplantur. Quid enim de his quae scienda sunt nesciunt, qui scientem omnia sciunt? Eorum itaque scientia comparatione nostrae valde dilatata est, sed tamen comparatione divinae scientiae angusta: sicut et ipsi illorum spiritus comparatione quidem nostrorum corporum, spiritus sunt, sed comparatione summi et incircumscripti spiritus, corpus. Et mittuntur igitur, et assistunt: quia et per hoc, quod circumscripti sunt, exeunt; et per hoc, quod intus quoque praesentes sunt nunquam recedunt. Et faciem ergo Patris semper vident, et tamen ad nos veniunt; quia et ad nos spiritali praesentia foras exeunt, et tamen ibi se, unde recesserant, per internam contemplationem servant. Dicatur ergo: Venerunt filii Dei, ut 40 assisterent coram Domino, quia illuc spiritus conversione redeunt, unde nulla mentis aversione discedunt.

CAPUT IV.

IBID. — Affuit inter eos etiam Satan. 4. Satan inter angelos, quia naturam non amisit. — Valde quaerendum est quomodo inter electos angelos Satan adesse potuerit, qui ab eorum sorte, exigente superbia, dudum damnatus exivit. Sed recte inter eos adfuisse describitur, quia etsi beatitudinem perdidit, naturam tamen eis similem non amisit; et si meritis praegravatur, conditione naturae subtilis attollitur. Inter Dei ergo filios coram Domino adfuisse dicitur; quia eo intuitu, quo omnipotens Deus cuncta spiritalia conspicit, etiam Satan in ordine naturae subtilioris videt, attestante Scriptura, quae dicit: Oculi Domini contemplantur malos et bonos (Prov. XV, 3). Sed hoc, quod adfuisse Satan coram Domino dicitur, in gravi nobis quaestione versatur. Scriptum quippe est: Beati mundo corde, quoniam ipsi Deum videbunt (Matth. V, 8). Satan vero, qui mundo corde esse non potest, quomodo ad videndum Dominum adfuisse potest. 5. Deo adest, quia ab eo videtur. — Sed intuendum est quia adfuisse coram Domino, non autem

Dominum vidisse perhibetur. Venit quippe, ut videretur, non ut videret. Ipse in conspectu Domini, non autem in conspectu ejus Dominus fuit: sicut caecus cum in sole consistit, ipse quidem radiis solis perfunditur, sed tamen lumen non videt quo illustratur. Ita ergo etiam inter angelos in conspectu Domini Satan adfuit; quia vis divina, quae intuendo penetrat omnia, non se videntem immundum spiritum vidit. Quia enim et ipsa, quae Deum fugiunt, latere non possunt, dum cuncta nuda sunt superno conspectui, Satan adfuit absens praesenti. Sequitur:

CAPUT V.

VERS. 7. — Cui dixit Dominus, Unde venis? 6. Nescire Dei est reprobare. — Quid est, quod venientibus angelis electis nequaquam dicitur, Unde venitis? Satan vero unde veniat percontatur? non enim requirimus, nisi utique quae nescimus. Nescire autem Dei, reprobare est. Unde quibusdam in fine dicturus est: Nescio vos unde sitis, discedite a me, omnes operarii iniquitatis (Luc. XIII, 27). Sicut et nescire mentiri vir verax dicitur qui labi per mendacium dedignatur; non quo si mentiri velit, nesciat, sed quo falsa loqui veritatis amore contemnat. Quid est ergo ad Satan dicere, Unde venis, nisi vias illius quasi incognitas reprobare? Veritatis igitur lumen tenebras, quas reprobat, ignorat; et Satanae itinera, quia judicans damnat, dignum est ut quasi nesciens requirat. Hinc est quod Adae peccanti conditoris voce dicitur, Adam ubi es? (Genes. III, 9.) Neque enim divina potentia nesciebat, post culpam servus ad quae latibula fugerat; sed quia vidit in culpa lapsum, jam sub peccato velut ab oculis veritatis absconditum, quia tenebras erroris ejus non approbat, quasi ubi sit peccator ignorat; eumque et vocat, et requirit, dicens, Adam ubi es? Per hoc quod vocat, signum dat quia ad poenitentiam revocat. Per hoc quod requirit, aperte insinuat, quia peccatores jure damnandos ignorat. Satan ergo Dominus non vocat, sed tamen requirit, dicens: Unde venis? quia nimirum Deus apostatam spiritum ad poenitentiam nequaquam revocat; sed vias superbiae ejus nesciens, damnat. 41 Igitur dum Satan de itinere suo discutitur, electi angeli requirendi unde veniant non sunt: quia eorum viae tanto Deo notae sunt, quanto et ipso auctore peraguntur; dumque soli ejus voluntati inserviunt, eo esse incognitae nequeunt, quo per approbationis oculum ex ipso semper ante ipsum fiunt. Sequitur:

CAPUT VI.

IBID. — Respondens Satan, ait: Circuivi terram, et perambulavi eam. 7. Satanae circuitus, ejus anxietatis argumentum. — Solet per gyrum circuitus, laboris anxietas designari. Satan ergo laborans terram circuivit, quia quietus in coeli culmine stare contempsit. Cumque se non volasse, sed perambulasse insinuat, quanto peccati pondere in imis prematur, demonstrat. Perambulans ergo terram circuivit; quia ab illo spiritalis potentiae volatu corruens, malitiae suae pressus gravedine, foras ad gyrum laboris venit. Hinc est enim quod et de ejus membris per Psalmistam dicitur: In circuitu impii ambulant (Psal. XI, 9); quia dum interiora non appetunt, in exteriorum labore fatigantur. Sequitur:

CAPUT VII.

VERS. 8. — Nunquid considerasti servum meum Job, quod non sit ei similis in terra, homo simplex et rectus, ac timens Deum, et recedens a malo? 8. Variae Dei spirituumque locutiones. — Hoc quod divina voce beatus Job simplex et rectus, ac timens Deum, et recedens a malo dicitur, quia subtiliter membratimque supra exposuimus, replicare quae diximus devitamus; ne dum discussa repetimus, tardius ad indiscussa veniamus. Hoc ergo nobis est solerter intuendum, quid sit, quod vel ad Satan loqui Dominus dicitur, vel quod Satan Domino respondere perhibetur. Discutienda quippe est quaenam sit ista locutio. Neque enim vel a Domino, qui summus atque incircumscriptus est spiritus, vel a Satan, qui nulla est carnea natura vestitus, humano modo aereus flatus folle ventris attrahitur, ut per organum gutturis, vocis expressione reddatur. Sed dum naturae invisibili natura incomprehensibilis loquitur, dignum est ut mens nostra qualitatem corporeae locutionis excedens, ad sublimes atque incognitos modos locutionis intimae suspendatur. Nos namque ut ea quae sentimus intrinsecus extrinsecus exprimamus, haec per organum gutturis, per sonum vocis ejicimus. Alienis quippe oculis intra secretum mentis, quasi post parietem corporis stamus; sed cum manifestare nosmetipsos cupimus, quasi per linguae januam egredimur, ut quales sumus intrinsecus ostendamus. Spiritalis autem natura non ita est, quae ex mente et corpore composita dupliciter non est. Sed rursus sciendum est quia ipsa etiam natura incorporea cum loqui dicitur, ejus locutio nequaquam una atque eadem qualitate formatur. Aliter enim loquitur Deus ad angelos, aliter angeli ad Deum; aliter Deus ad sanctorum animas, aliter sanctorum animae ad Deum; aliter Deus ad diabolum, aliter diabolus ad Deum. 9. Aliter Deus loquitur ad angelos. — Nam quia spiritali naturae ex corporea oppositione nihil obstat, loquitur Deus ad angelos sanctos eo ipso, quo eorum cordibus occulta sua invisibilia ostentat: ut quidquid agere debeant, in ipsa contemplatione veritatis legant, et velut quaedam praecepta vocis sint ipsa gaudia contemplationis. Quasi enim audientibus dicitur, quod videntibus 42 inspiratur. Unde cum eorum cordibus, Deus contra humanam superbiam, animadversionem ultionis infunderet, dixit: Venite descendamus, et confundamus ibi linguam eorum (Genes. II, 7). Dicitur eis qui adhaerent, Venite; quia nimirum hoc ipsum nunquam a divina contemplatione decrescere, in divina contemplatione semper accrescere est; et nunquam corde recedere, quasi quodam stabili motu est semper venire. Quibus et dicit: Descendamus et confundamus linguam eorum. Ascendunt angeli, in eo quod creatorem conspiciunt. Descendunt angeli, in eo quod creaturam sese in illicitis erigentem examine districtionis premunt. Dicere ergo Dei est: Descendamus et confundamus linguam eorum, in seipso eis hoc, quod recte agatur ostendere, et per vim internae visionis, eorum mentibus exhibenda judicia occultis motibus inspirare. 10. Aliter angeli ad Deum. — Aliter loquuntur angeli ad Deum, sicut et per Joannis Apocalypsim dicunt: Dignus est Agnus, qui occisus est, accipere virtutem, et divinitatem, et sapientiam (Apoc. V, 12). Vox namque angelorum est in laude conditoris, ipsa admiratio intimae contemplationis. Virtutis divinae miracula obstupuisse, dixisse est, quia excitatus cum reverentia motus cordis, magnus est ad aures incircumscripti spiritus clamor vocis. Quae vox se quasi per distincta verba explicat, dum sese per innumeros modos admirationis format. Deus ergo angelis loquitur, cum eis voluntas ejus intima videnda manifestatur. Angeli autem loquuntur Domino, cum per hoc, quod super semetipsos respiciunt, in motum admirationis surgunt. Aliter Deus ad sanctorum animas, et illae ad Deum. — Aliter Deus ad sanctorum animas, aliter sanctorum animae loquuntur ad Deum. Unde et in Joannis Apocalypsi rursum dicitur: Vidi subter altare animas interfectorum propter verbum Dei, et propter testimonium quod habebant; et clamabant voce magna dicentes: Usquequo, Domine, sanctus et verus, non judicas et vindicas sanguinem nostrum de his qui habitant in terra? Ubi illico adjungitur, Datae sunt illis singulae stolae albae, et dictum est illis, ut requiescerent tempus adhuc modicum, donec impleatur numerus conservorum et fratrum eorum. Quid est enim animas vindictae petitionem dicere, nisi diem extremi judicii, et resurrectionem exstinctorum corporum desiderare? Magnus quippe earum clamor, magnum est desiderium. Tanto enim quisque minus clamat, quanto minus desiderat; et tanto majorem vocem in aures incircumscripti spiritus exprimit, quanto se in ejus desiderium plenius fundit. Animarum igitur verba ipsa sunt desideria. Nam si desiderium sermo non esset, Propheta non diceret: Desiderium cordis eorum audivit auris tua (Psal. IX, 17). Sed cum aliter moveri soleat mens quae petit, aliterque quae petitur, et sanctorum animae ita in interni secreti sinu Deo inhaereant, ut inhaerendo requiescant; quomodo dicuntur petere, quas ab interna voluntate constat nullatenus discrepare? quomodo dicuntur petere, quas et voluntatem Dei certum est, et ea quae futura sunt, non ignorare? Sed in ipso positae, ab ipso aliquid petere dicuntur, non quo quidquam desiderent, quod ab 43 ejus voluntate, quem cernunt, discordat: sed quo mente ardentius inhaerent, eo etiam de ipso accipiunt, ut ab ipso petant, quod eum facere velle noverunt. De ipso ergo bibunt, quod ab ipso sitiunt; et modo nobis adhuc incomprehensibili, in hoc, quod petendo esuriunt, praesciendo satiantur. Discordarent ergo a voluntate conditoris, si quae eum vident velle, non peterent; eique minus inhaererent, si volentem dare, desiderio pigriori pulsarent. Quibus responsum divinitus dicitur: Requiescite tempus adhuc modicum, donec compleatur numerus conservorum et fratrum vestrorum. Desiderantibus animabus, Requiescite tempus adhuc modicum, dicere, est inter ardorem desiderii ex ipsa praescientia solatium consolationis aspirare; ut et animarum vox sit hoc, quod amantes desiderant; et respondentis Dei sermo sit hoc, quod eas retributionis certitudine inter desideria confirmat. Respondere ergo ejus est, ut collectionem fratrum exspectare debeant, eorum mentibus libenter exspectandi moras infundere; ut cum carnis resurrectionem appetunt, etiam ex colligendorum fratrum augmento gratulentur. 12. Aliter Deus ad diabolum, et ille ad Deum. Aliter Deus loquitur ad diabolum, aliter diabolus ad Deum. Loqui enim Dei est ad diabolum, vias ejus ac negotia animadversione occultae districtionis increpare, sicut hic dicitur: Unde venis? Diaboli autem ei respondere, est omnipotenti majestati ejus nihil posse celare. Unde hic ait, Circuivi terram, et perambulavi eam. Quasi enim dicere ejus est quid egerit, scire quod actus suos illius oculis occultare non possit. Sciendum vero est, quia sicut hoc loco discimus, quatuor modis loquitur Deus ad diabolum; tribus modis diabolus ad Deum. Quatuor modis loquitur Deus ad diabolum; quia et injustas vias ejus arguit, et electorum suorum contra illum justitiam proponit, et tentandam eorum innocentiam ei concedendo permittit, et aliquando eum, ne tentare audeat, prohibet. Injustas enim vias ejus redarguit, sicut jam dictum est: Unde venis? Electorum suorum contra illum justitiam proponit, sicut ait: Considerasti servum meum Job, quod non sit ei similis super terram? Tentandam eorum innocentiam concedendo permittit, sicut dicit: Ecce universa quae habet in manu tua sunt. Rursumque eum a tentatione prohibet, cum dicit: Tantum in eum ne extendas manum tuam. Tribus autem modis loquitur diabolus ad Deum, cum vel vias suas insinuat, vel electorum innocentiam fictis criminibus accusat, vel tentandam eamdem innocentiam postulat. Vias quippe suas insinuat, qui ait: Circuivi terram, et perambulavi eam. Electorum innocentiam accusat, qui dicit: (Vers. 9, 10) Nunquid frustra Job timet Deum? Nonne tu vallasti eum, ac domum ejus, universamque substantiam per circuitum? Tentandam eamdem innocentiam postulat, cum dicit: Extende manum tuam, et tange cuncta quae possidet, nisi in faciem benedixerit tibi. Sed dicere Dei est, Unde venis? sicut et supra insinuavimus, vi suae justitiae itinera malitiae ejus inerepare. Dicere Dei est, Considerasti servum meum Job, quod non sit ei similis super terram? tales electos suos justificando facere, qualibus nimirum apostata angelus possit invidere. Dicere Dei est, Ecce universa quae habet in manu tua sunt, 44 ad probationem fidelium, contra eos occulta vi incursum illum suae malitiae relaxare. Dicere Dei est, Tantum in eum ne extendas manum tuam, ab immoderatae tentationis impetu eum etiam permittendo restringere. Dicere autem diaboli est, Circuivi terram, et perambulavi eam, sagacitatem suae malitiae invisibilibus ejus oculis occultare non posse. Dicere diaboli est, Nunquid frustra Job timet Deum? contra bonos intra cogitationum suarum latibula conqueri; eorumque provectibus invidere, atque invidendo reprobationis rimas exquirere. Dicere diaboli est, Extende paululum manum

tuam, et tange cuncta quae possidet (Vers. 11), ad afflictionem bonorum, malitiae aestibus anhelare. Quo enim eorum tentationem invidens appetit, eo illorum quasi probationem deprecans petit. Quia igitur internarum locutionum modos succincte diximus, ad intermissum paululum expositionis ordinem revertamur

CAPUT VIII.

VERS. 8. — Considerasti servum meum Job, quod non sit similis ei super terram, vir simplex et rectus, ac timens Deum, et recedens a malo? 13. Dei diabolique pugna, cujus materia Job fuit. — Praecedenti jam sermone tractatum est, quia diabolus non contra Job, sed contra Deum certamen proposuit; materia vero certaminis beatus Job in medio fuit. Et si in sermonibus suis dicimus Job inter flagella deliquisse, quod sentire nefas est, Deum dicimus in sua propositione perdidisse. Nam ecce et in hoc loco intuendum est, quia non prius diabolus beatum Job a Domino petiit, sed eum Dominus in diaboli despectum laudavit. Et nisi in sua justitia permansurum nosset, non utique pro illo proponeret. Nec periturum in tentatione concederet, de quo ante tentationem, ex Dei laudibus, in tentatoris mente invidiae fuerant faces excitatae. 14. Quam astute quaerat diabolus unde nos accuset. — Sed antiquus adversarius cum quae accuset mala, non invenit, ipsa ad malum inflectere bona quaerit. Cumque de operibus vincitur, ad accusandum verba nostra perscrutatur. Cum nec in verbis accusationem reperit, intentionem cordis fuscare contendit; tanquam bona facta bono animo non fiant, et idcirco perpendi a judice bona non debeant. Quia enim fructus arboris esse et in aestu virides conspicit, quasi vermem ponere ad radicem quaerit. Nam dicit:

CAPUT IX.

VERS. 9, 10. — Nunquid frustra Job timet Deum? Nonne tu vallasti eum ac domum ejus, universamque substantiam per circuitum? Operibus manuum ejus benedixisti, et possessio illius crevit in terra. 15. Ex prosperis et ex adversis tentat. — Ac si aperte dicat: Qui tot bona in terra recepit, quid mirum est, si pro eis se innocenter gerit? Innocens vere esset, si bonus inter adversa persisteret. Cur autem magnus dicitur, quem merces sui uniuscujusque operis tanta rerum multiplicitate comitatur? Astutus quippe adversarius, cum sanctum virum inter prospera bene egisse considerat, reprobare apud judicem per adversa festinat. Unde recte in Apocalypsi voce angelica dicitur: Projectus est accusator fratrum nostrorum, qui accusabat illos ante conspectum Dei nostri die ac nocte (Apoc. XII, 10). Scriptura autem sacra saepe diem pro prosperis, noctem autem pro adversis ponere consuevit. In die ergo et nocte accusare non desinit, quia modo nos in prosperis, modo in adversis accusabiles ostendere contendit. In die accusat, cum prosperis male nos uti insinuat. In nocte accusat, cum in adversis 45 nos non habere patientiam demonstrat. Beatum ergo Job quia necdum flagella attigerant, quasi adhuc unde in nocte accusare posset, omnino non habebat. Quia vero in prosperis magna sanctitate viguerat, pro eisdem prosperis bona illum egisse simulabat: versuta assertione mentiens quod non ad usum Domini substantiam possideret, sed ad usum substantiae Dominum coleret. Sunt enim nonnulli qui ut fruantur Deo, dispensatorie utuntur hoc saeculo. Et sunt nonnulli qui ut fruantur hoc saeculo, transitorie uti volunt Deo. Cum igitur bona divini muneris narrat, putat quod facta fortis operarii leviget; ut cujus vitam reprehendere de operibus non valet, ejus mentem quasi ex cogitationibus addicat; mentiens quod non amori Domini, sed temporalis prosperitatis appetitioni servierit omne, quod innocue exterius vixit. Vires ergo beati Job nesciens, sed tamen unumquemque adversis probari verius sciens, tentandum hunc expetit; ut qui per diem prosperitatis inoffenso gressu incesserat, saltem in nocte adversitatis impingeret, et ante laudatoris sui oculos offensione impatientiae prostratus jaceret. Unde subjungit: CAPUT. X. VERS. 11. — Sed extende paululum manum tuam, et tange cuncta quae possidet, nisi in faciem benedixerit tibi. 16. Diabolus nihil nisi Deo permittente potest. — Cum sanctum virum Satan tentare appetit, et tamen Domino, ut manum suam extendere debeat, dicit; valde notandum est quia feriendi vires nec ipse sibi tribuit, qui contra auctorem omnium singulariter superbit. Scit namque diabolus, quia quodlibet agere ex semetipso non sufficit, quia nec per semetipsum in eo quod est spiritus existit. Hinc est quod in Evangelio expellenda de homine legio dicebat: Si ejicis nos, mitte nos in gregem porcorum (Matth. VIII, 31). Qui enim per semetipsum ire in porcos non poterat, quid mirum si sine auctoris manu, sancti viri domum contingere non valebat?. VERS. 12. — Ecce universa, quae habet, in manu tua sunt: tantum in eum ne extendas manum tuam. 19. Deus tentatori alia permittit, alia negat. — Consideranda est in verbis Domini dispensatio sanctae pietatis, quomodo hostem nostrum permittit, et retinet; relaxat, et refrenat. Alia ad tentandum dat, sed ab aliis religat. Universa quae habet, in manu tua sunt, tantum in eum ne extendus manum tuam. Substantiam prodit, sed tamen corpus ejus protegit, quod quidem postmodum tentatori traditurus est; sed tamen non simul ad omnia relaxat hostem, ne undique feriens frangat civem. Mala enim cum multa electis eveniunt, mira conditoris gratia ex tempore dispensantur; ut quae coacervata perimerent, possint divisa tolerari. Hinc Paulus ait: Fidelis Deus, qui non patietur vos tentari supra id quod potestis, sed faciet cum tentatione etiam exitum, ut possitis sustinere (I Cor. X, 13). Hinc David ait: Proba me, Domine, et tenta me (Psal. XXV, 2). Ac si aperte dicat: Prius vires inspice, et tunc ut ferre valeo, tentari permitte. Hoc tamen quod dicitur: Ecce universa, quae habet, in manu tua sunt, tantum in eum ne extendas manum tuam, intelligi et aliter potest, quia fortem quidem pugnatorem suum Dominus noverat, sed tamen dividere ei certamina contra hostem volebat; ut quamvis robusto bellatori victoria in cunctis suppeteret, prius tamen de uno certamine hostis ad Dominum victus rediret: tuncque ei aliud iterum vincendo concederet, quatenus fidelis famulus eo mirabilius victor existeret, quo victus hostis se contra illum iterum ad nova bella repararet. Sequitur:

CAPUT XII.

IBID. — Egressusque est Satan a facie Domini. 20. Deus est intra et extra omnia, supra et infra omnia. — Quid est quod Satan a facie Domini egressus dicitur? Quo enim exitur ab eo qui ubique est? Hinc namque ait: Coelum et terram ego impleo (Jer. XXIII, 24). Hinc est, quod Sapientia illius dicit: Gyrum coeli circuivi sola (Eccli. XXIV, 8). Hinc de ejus Spiritu scriptum est: Spiritus Domini implevit orbem terrarum (Sap. I, 7). Hinc est quod Dominus iterum dicit: Coelum mihi sedes est, terra autem scabellum pedum meorum (Isai. LXVI, 1). Rursumque de eo scriptum est: Coelum metitur palmo et omnem terram pugillo concludit (Isa. XL, 12). Sedi quippe, cui praesidet, interior et exterior manet. Coelum palmo metiens, et terram pugillo concludens ostenditur, quod ipse sit circumquaque cunctis rebus, quas creavit, exterior. Id namque quod interius concluditur, a concludente exterius continetur. Per sedem ergo, cui praesidet, 47 intelligitur esse interius supraque; per pugillum, quo continet, esse exterius subterque signatur. Quia enim ipse manet intra omnia, ipse extra omnia, ipse supra omnia, ipse infra omnia; et superior est per potentiam, et inferior per sustentationem; exterior per magnitudinem, et interior per subtilitatem: sursum regens, deorsum continens; extra circumdans, interius penetrans; nec alia ex parte superior, alia inferior, aut alia ex parte exterior, atque ex alia manet interior: sed unus idemque totus ubique praesidendo sustinens, sustinendo praesidens, circumdando penetrans, penetrando circumdans; unde superius praesidens, inde inferius sustinens; et unde exterius ambiens, inde interius replens: sine inquietudine superius regens, sine labore inferius sustinens; interius sine extenuatione penetrans, exterius sine extensione circumdans. Est itaque inferior et superior sine loco; est amplior sine latitudine, est subtilior sine extenuatione. 21. A facie Domini exit Satan, cum ad desiderii sui effectum venit. — Quo igitur exitur ab eo, qui dum per molem corporis nusquam est, per incircumscriptam substantiam nusquam deest? Sed quandiu Satan pressus majestatis potentia, appetitum suae malitiae exercere non valuit, quasi ante faciem Domini stetit. A facie autem Domini exiit; quia relaxatus divinitus ab internae retentionis angustia, ad sui desiderii effectum venit. A facie Domini exiit, quia diu vinculis disciplinae religata quandoque voluntas noxia ad opus processit. Cum enim, sicut dictum est, id quod voluit implere non valuit, quasi ante faciem Domini stetit; quia illum ab effectu malitiae superna dispensatio coactavit. Sed a facie ejus exiit, quia potestatem tentationis accipiens, ad malitiae suae vota pervenit. Sequitur:

CAPUT XIII.

VERS. 13, 14, 15. — Cum autem quadam die filii et filiae ejus comederent, et biberent vinum in domo fratris sui primogeniti, nuntius venit ad Job, qui diceret: Boves arabant, et asinae pascebantur juxta eos, et irruerunt Sabaei, tuleruntque omnia, et pueros percusserunt gladio, et evasi ego solus, ut nuntiarem tibi. 22. Diabolus tentandi tempora eligit. — Notandum quae tempora tentationibus congruant. Tunc quippe diabolus tentandi tempus elegit, quando beati Job filios in convivio invenit. Neque enim solummodo intuetur hostis quid faciat, sed etiam quando faciat. Nam quamvis potestatem acceperit, aptum tamen ad subversionem tempus exquisivit; ut videl cet nobis Deo dispensante proderetur, quia praenuntia tribulationis est laetitia satietatis. Intuendum vero est, quam callide ipsa damna, quae illata sunt, nuntiantur. Non enim dicitur, boves a Sabaeis ablati sunt: sed qui ablati sunt, boves arabant; ut videlicet memorato fructu operis, causa crescat doloris. Unde et apud Graecos non solum asinae, sed fetae asinae raptae referuntur; ut dum minima animalia audientis animum minus ex sui qualitate percuterent, amplius ex fecunditate vulnerarent. Et quia eo magis adversa animum feriunt, quo cum multa sunt, etiam subita nuntiantur, aucta est mensura gemituum, etiam per articula nuntiorum. Nam sequitur:

CAPUT XIV.

VERS. 16. — 48 Cumque adhuc ille loqueretur, venitalius, et dixit: Ignis Dei cecidit de coelo, et tactas oves puorosque consumpsit, et effugi ego solus, ut nuntiarem tibi. 23. Casibus repentinis constantiam Job evertere conatur. — Ne rebus perditis minorem audienti dolorem moveat, ejus animum ad excedendum etiam ipsis nuntiorum verbis instigat. Intuendum quippe est, quam callide dicitur: Ignis Dei, ac si diceretur: Illius animadversionem sustines, quem tot hostiis placare voluisti; illius iram toleras, cui quotidie serviens insudabas. Dum enim Deum, cui servierat, adversa intulisse indicat, laesum commemorat, in quo excedat; quatenus anteacta obsequia ad mentem reduceret, et frustra se servisse aestimans, in auctoris injuriam superbiret. Pia etenim mens, cum se adversa ab hominibus perpeti conspicit, in divinae gratiae consolatione requiescit; cumque tentationum procellas increscere extrinsecus viderit, secessum spei Dominicae appetens, intra conscientiae portum fugit. Ut vero versutus hostis uno eodemque tempore sancti viri robustissimum pectus et humanis adversitatibus, et divina desperatione concuteret, et prius Sabaeos irruisse intulit, et mox ignem Dei de coelo cecidisse nuntiavit; ut quasi omnem aditum consolationis excluderet, dum et ipsum adversantem ostenderet, qui consolari animum inter adversa potuisset: quatenus dum se tentatus undique destitui atque undique premi considerat, in contumeliam tanto audacius, quanto et desperatius erumpat. Sequitur:

CAPUT XV.

VERS. 17. — Sed et illo adhuc loquente, venit alius et dixit: Chaldaei fecerunt tres turmas, et invaserunt camelos, et tulerunt eos, necnon et pueros percusserunt gladio, et effugi ego solus, ut nuntiarem tibi. 24. Vulnera ingeminat. — Ecce iterum, ne quid minus de humana adversitate doluisset, Chaldaeorum turmas irruisse denuntiat; et ne illum minus desuper veniens adversitas feriat, iteratam iram in aere demonstrat. Nam sequitur:

CAPUT XVI.

VERS. 18, 19. — Loquebatur ille, et ecce alius intravit, et dixit: Filiis tuis et filiabus vescentibus et bibentibus vinum in domo fratris sui primogeniti, repente ventus vehemens irruit a regione deserti, et concussit quatuor angulos domus, quae corruens oppressit liberos tuos, et mortui sunt, et effugi ego solus, ut nuntiarem tibi. 25. Ad odium Dei provocare conatur. — Qui uno vulnere non prosternitur, idcirco bis, terque percutitur, ut usque ad intima quandoque feriatur. Nuntiata itaque fuerat adversitas de Sabaeis, nuntiata divina animadversio per ignem de coelo, nuntiatur ab hominibus iterum camelorum raptus, caedesque puerorum, et divinae indignationis ira repetitur, dum ventus irruens concussisse domus angulos, atque exstinxisse liberos indicatur. Quia enim notum est, quod absque superno nutu moveri elementa non possint, latenter infertur quod ipse contra illum elementa moverit, qui moveri permisit; quamvis Satan semel accepta a Domino potestate ad usum suae nequitiae etiam elementa concutere praevalet. Nec movere debet, si spiritus de summis projectus turbare in ventos aerem potuit; cum nimirum constet quia et damnatis 49 in metallum, ad usum aqua et ignis servit. Quaesitum est igitur ut nuntiarentur mala, quaesitum ut multa, quaesitum ut subita. Sed cum prius adversa nuntiavit, tranquillo adhuc pectori quasi sanis membris vulnus inflixit; cum vero percussum cor feriendo repetiit, ut ad impatientiae verba compelleret, super vulnera vulnus irrogavit. 26. Plagae Job subitae et multiplices. — Intuendum vero est quam callide curavit hostis antiquus, non tam jactura rerum sancti viri patientiam rumpere, quam ipso ordine nuntiorum. Qui studens prius parva, et post nuntiare majora, in extremo filiorum mortem intulit, ne vilia pater rei familiaris damna duceret, si illa jam orbatus audiret; et minus percuteret rerum amissio, praecognita morte filiorum, quia videlicet nulla esset haereditas, si illos prius subtraheret qui servabantur haeredes. Sed a minimis incipiens, in ultimum graviora nuntiavit; ut dum gradatim deteriora cognosceret, in ejus corde doloris locum omne vulnus inveniret. Notandum quam callide tot malorum pondera, et divisa, et subita nuntiantur, ut et repente, et particulatim crescens, in audientis corde sese dolor ipse non caperet; et tanto ardentius in blasphemiam accenderet, quanto subitis ac multiplicibus nuntiis in se angustius aestuaret.. VERS. 20. — Tunc surrexit Job, et scidit vestimenta sua, et tonso capite corruens in terram adoravit. 28. Flagella Dei aut non sentire, aut nimis, vitium est. — Nonnulli magnae constantiae philosophiam putant, si disciplinae asperitate correpti, ictus verberum doloresque non sentiant. Nonnulli vero tam nimis percussionum flagella sentiunt, ut immoderato dolore commoti, etiam in excessum linguae dilabantur. Sed quisquis veram tenere philosophiam 50 nititur, necesse est ut inter utraque gradiatur. Non est enim pondus verae virtutis, insensibilitas cordis: quia et valde insana per stuporem membra sunt, quae et incisa dolore nequaquam possunt. Rursus virtutis custodiam deserit, qui dolorem verberum ultra quam necesse est sentit; quia dum nimia afflictione cor tangitur, usque ad impatientiae contumelias excitatur, et qui per flagella corrigere malefacta debuerat, agit ut nequitia per flagellum crescat. Contra insensibilitatem quippe percussorum per prophetam dicitur: Percussisti eos, nec doluerunt; attrivisti eos, et renuerunt accipere disciplinam (Jerem. V, 3). Contra pusillanimitatem percussorum per Psalmistam dicitur: In miseriis non subsistent (Psal. CXXXIX 11). In miseriis namque subsisterent, si aequanimiter adversa tolerarent. At postquam mente inter flagella corruunt, quasi inter illatas miserias subsistendi constantiam perdunt.. VERS. 21. — Nudus egressus sum de utero matris meae, nudus revertar illuc. 30. Temporalia parvi facienda, quod ea aliquando non habuerimus, nec habituri simus. — O quam altae sedi interni consilii praesidet iste, qui scissis vestibus in terra prostratus jacet! Quia enim judicante Domino, cuncta amiserat, pro servanda 51 patientia illud tempus ad memoriam reduxit, quo necdum ista quae perdidit habebat; ut dum intuetur quod aliquando illa non habuit, dolorem temperet quod amisit. Magna enim consolatio est in rerum amissione, illa tempora ad mentem reducere, quibus nos contigit res quas perdidimus non habuisse. Quia vero omnes nos terra genuit, hanc non immerito matrem vocamus. Unde scriptum est: Grave jugum super filios Adam a die exitus de ventre matris eorum, usque in diem sepulturae in matrem omnium (Eccli. XL, 1). Beatus igitur Job, ut patienter lugeat quod hic amisit, vigilanter attendit qualis huc venerit. Ad augmentum autem servandae patientiae, adhuc solertius inspicit hinc qualis recedit, et dicit: Nudus egressus sum de utero matris meae, nudus revertar illuc. Ac si dicat: Nudum me huc intrantem terra protulit, nudum me hinc exeuntem terra recipiet. Qui ergo accepta, sed relinquenda perdidi, quid proprium amisi? Quia vero consolatio non solum ex consideratione conditionis adhibenda est, sed etiam ex justitia conditoris, recte subjungit: IBID. — Dominus dedit, Dominus abstulit, sicut Domino placuit, ita factum est. 31. Deus bonis nos spolians, non nostra aufert, sed sua. — Sanctus vir, tentante adversario, cuncta perdiderat; sed tamen sciens, quia contra se Satan tentandi vires, nisi permittente Domino, non habebat, non ait: Dominus dedit, diabolus abstulit; sed: Dominus dedit, Dominus abstulit; fortasse enim fuerat dolendum, si quod conditor dederat hostis abstulisset: at postquam non abstulit nisi ipse qui dedit, sua recepit, non nostra abstulit. Si enim ab illo accipimus, quibus in hac vita utimur, cur doleat quod ipso judicante exigimur, quo largiente feneramur? Nec aliquando injustus est creditor, qui dum praefixo reddendi tempore non constrigitur; quando vult, exigit quod feneratur. Ubi et bene subjungitur: Sicut Domino placuit, ita factum est. Cum enim in hac vita ea quae nolumus, patimur, necesse est ut ad eum qui injustum velle nil potest, studia nostrae voluntatis inclinemus. Magna quippe est consolatio in eo quod displicet, quod illo ordinante erga nos agitur, cui nonnisi justum placet. Si igitur justa placere Domino scimus, pati autem nulla, nisi quae Domino placuerint, possumus; justa sunt cuncta quae patimur, et valde injustum est, si de justa passione murmuramus. 32. Diabolus nos aggrediens, humilitate ac patientia nostra confoditur. — Sed quia orator fortis quomodo assertionem partis suae contra adversarium allegavit, audivimus; nunc quomodo in orationis suae termino judicem benedicendo laudet audiamus. Sequitur: Sit nomen Domini benedictum. Ecce omne quod rectum sensit, Domini benedictione conclusit; ut hinc adversarius inspiciat, et ad poenam suam victus erubescat, quia ipse Domino contumax etiam in beatitudine conditus exstitit, cui homo hymnum gloriae etiam percussus dicit. Intuendum vero est, quia hostis noster tot nos jaculis percutit, quot tentationibus affligit. Quotidie namque in acie stamus, quotidie tentationum ejus tela excipimus. Sed et nos contra illum jacula mittimus, si confossi tribulationibus, humilia respondemus. Beatus igitur Job percussus damno rerum, percussus morte filiorum, quia vim doloris vertit in laudem conditoris, 52 dicens: Dominus dedit, Dominus abstulit; sicut Domino placuit, ita factum est; sit nomen Domini benedictum; superbum hostem humilitate perculit, crudelem patientia stravit. Nec credamus, quod bellator noster accepit vulnera, et non inflixit. Quot enim voces patientiae in Dei laudem percussus reddidit, quasi tot in adversarii pectore jacula intorsit, et acriora valde quam sustinuit infixit. Afflictus enim terrena perdidit, sed afflictionem humiliter sustinens coelestia multiplicavit. Sequitur:

CAPUT XIX.

VERS. 22. — In omnibus his non peccavit Job: neque stultum aliquid contra Deum locutus est. 33. Job a murmuratione oris et cordis abstinuit. — Quia tentationum tribulationibus deprehensi, etiam tacito cogitationum motu possumus non loquendo peccare, beato Job et oris testimonium perhibetur, et cordis. Prius enim dicitur: Non peccavit; et tunc demum subditur: Neque stultum aliquid contra Deum locutus est. Qui enim stultum locutus non est, culpam a lingua compescuit; sed cum praemittitur, Non peccavit, constat quod murmurationis vitium etiam a cogitatione restrinxit. Nec peccavit ergo, nec stulte locutus est, quia nec per conscientiam tacitus tumuit, nec linguam in contumaciam relaxavit. Stulte enim contra Deum loquitur, qui inter divinae animadversionis flagella positus, justificare semetipsum conatur. Si enim innocentem se asserere superbe audeat, quid aliud quam justitiam ferientis accusat? Hucusque nos verba historiae transcurrisse sufficiat: jam nunc ad indaganda allegoriae mysteria expositionis se sermo convertat. Sed in hoc quod scriptum est:

CAPUT XX.

VERS. 6. — Quadam die cum venissent filii Dei coram Domino; adfuit inter eos etiam Satan: 34. Deus tempora sine tempore disponit. — Discutiendum prius est, cur quadam die factum aliquid coram Domino dicitur, cum apud illum nequaquam cursus temporis, mutatione diei noctisque varietur. Neque enim in ea luce, quae sine accessu ea quae eligit illustrat, et sine recessu ea quae respuit deserit, defectus mutabilitatis venit; quia in semetipsa manendo immutabilis, mutabilia cuncta disponit; sicque in se transeuntia condidit, ut apud se transire nequaquam possint; nec tempus intus in conspectu ejus defluit, quod apud nos foras decurrit. Unde fit ut in aeternitate ejus fixa maneant ea quae non fixa exterius saeculorum volumina emanant. Cur ergo apud eum dicitur, Quadam die, cui nimirum dies una est aeternitas sua? quam videlicet nec fine claudi, nec initio vidit aperiri Psalmista, cum dicit: Melior est dies una in atriis tuis super millia (Psal. LXXXIII, 11). 35. Assuetos temporalibus sensim ad aeterna deducit. — Sed cum Scriptura sacra temporaliter editis loquitur, dignum est ut verbis temporalibus utatur, quatenus condescendendo levet; et dum de aeternitate aliquid temporaliter narrat, assuetos temporalibus sensim ad aeterna trajiciat; seque bene nostris mentibus aeternitas incognita, dum verbis cognitis blanditur, infundat. Quid autem mirum, si in sacro eloquio incommutabilitatem suam Deus praepropere humanae menti non aperit; quando et resurrectionis suae solemnitate celebrata, quibusdam provectionum accessibus innotuit, incorruptionem corporis, quod resumpsit? Luca quippe attestante (Luc. XXIV, 4) didicimus quod quibusdam se in monumento quaerentibus prius angelos misit; et rursum 53 discipulis de se in via loquentibus ipse quidem, sed non cognoscendus apparuit (Ibid., 15), qui post exhortationis moras, cognoscendum se in panis fractione monstravit; ad extremum vero repente ingrediens, non solum se cognoscibilem, sed etiam palpabilem praebuit. Quia enim infirma adhuc gestabant corda discipuli, in cognitione tanti mysterii ista fuerant dispensatione nutriendi, ut paulisper aliquid quaerentes invenirent; invenientes crescerent, et crescentes cognita robustius tenerent. Quia igitur non repente, sed causarum verborumque incrementis, quasi quibusdam ad aeternitatem passibus ducimur, intus apud eum quadam die aliquid factum dicitur, qui ipsa quoque tempora sine tempore contuetur. 36. In luce tenebras videt. — An quia etiam Satan adfuit, dum quadam die hoc factum dicitur, indicare sacra Scriptura studuit quia in luce Deus tenebras vidit? Nos quippe uno eodemque contuitu lucem et tenebras intueri non possumus:

quia cum in tenebras oculus figitur, lux fugatur; et cum ad lucis se coruscationem verterit, tenebrarum umbra discedit. Illa autem vis, quae cuncta mutabilia immutabiliter videt, quasi in die ei Satan adfuit, quia apostatae angeli tenebras sine obscuritate comprehendit. Nos, ut dictum est, uno eodemque intuitu contemplari non possumus, et quae approbando eligimus, et quae reprobando damnamus: quia cum ad hanc animus vertitur, ab illa cogitatione separatur; cum vero ad illam reducitur, ab hac cui inhaesit removetur. 37. Diversa ordinans non est diversus. — Deus vero, quia sine mutabilitate simul cuncta respicit, sine distentione comprehendit, videlicet et bona quae juvat, et mala quae judicat, et quae adjuta remunerat, et quae judicans damnat, in his quae diverso disponit ordine, diversus non est. In die ergo ei Satan adfuisse describitur, quia lumen aeternitatis ejus nulla mutabilitatis fuscatione tangitur; et in hoc, quod ei tenebrae praesentes fiunt, adfuisse inter filios Dei dicitur: quia ea vi justitiae immundus spiritus penetratur, qua videlicet mundorum spirituum corda complentur; eoque radio luminis iste transfigitur, quo illi ut luceant perfunduntur. 38. Deo serviunt angeli boni ad adjutorium, mali ad probationem. — Inter filios Dei adfuit, quia etsi illi Deo ad electorum adjutorium, iste ad probationem servit. Inter filios Dei adfuit, quia etsi ab illis in hac vita laborantibus auxilium pietatis impenditur, iste occultae ejus justitiae nesciendo serviens, ministerium exsequi reprobationis conatur. Unde bene in libris Regum per prophetam dicitur: Vidi Dominum sedentem super solium suum, et exercitum coeli a dextris et sinistris ejus, et dictum est: In quo decipiam Achab, ut ascendat et cadat in Ramoth Galaath? Et dixit alius ita, et alius aliter. Et egressus est unus, et dixit: Ego decipiam Achab. Et dictum est: In quo decipies? Qui respondit, dicens: Egrediar, et ero Spiritus mendax in ore omnium prophetarum ejus (III Reg. XXII, 19 seq.). Quid enim solium Domini, nisi angelicas potestates accipimus, quarum mentibus altius praesidens, inferius cuncta disponit? Et quid exercitus coeli, nisi ministrantium angelorum multitudo describitur? Quid est ergo, quod exercitus coeli a dextris et sinistris ejus stare perhibetur? Deus enim, 54 qui ita est intra omnia, ut etiam sit extra omnia, nec dextra, nec sinistra concluditur. Sed dextra Dei, angelorum pars electa; sinistra autem Dei, pars angelorum reproba designatur. Non enim ministrant Deo solummodo boni, qui adjuvent; sed etiam mali, qui probent; non solum qui a culpa redeuntes sublevent, sed etiam qui redire nolentes gravent. Nec quod coeli exercitus dicitur, angelorum pars reproba in eo intelligi posse prohibetur. Quas enim suspendi in aere novimus, aves coeli nominamus. Et de eisdem spiritibus Paulus dicit: Contra spiritalia nequitiae in coelestibus (Ephes. VI, 12). Quorum caput enuntians, ait: Secundum principem potestatis aeris ejus (Ephes. II, 2). A dextra ergo Dei et sinistra angelorum exercitus stat: quia et voluntas electorum spirituum divinae pietati concordat; et reproborum sensus suae malitiae serviens, judicio districtionis ejus obtemperat. Unde et mox fallax spiritus in medium prosiliisse describitur, per quem Achab rex, exigentibus suis meritis, decipiatur. Neque enim fas est credere bonum spiritum fallaciae deservire voluisse, ut diceret: Egrediar, et ero spiritus mendax in ore omnium prophetarum ejus. Sed quia Achab rex peccatis praecedentibus dignus erat, ut tali debuisset deceptione damnari: quatenus qui saepe volens ceciderat in culpam, quandoque nolens caperetur ad poenam, occulta justitia licentia malignis spiritibus datur, ut quos volentes in peccati laqueo strangulant, in peccati poenam etiam nolentes trahant. Quod ergo illic a dextris atque sinistris Dei, exercitus coeli astitisse describitur, hoc hic inter filios Dei Satan adfuisse perhibetur. Ecce a dextris Dei steterunt angeli, quia nominantur filii Dei; ecce a sinistris stant angeli, quia adfuit inter eos etiam Satan.. VERS. 11. — Sed extende paululum manum tuam, et tange cuncta quae possidet, nisi in faciem benedixerit tibi. 45. Ejus divinitatem tentationibus exploravit. — Quem enim tranquillitatis tempore, Dei gratia custoditum credidit, peccare posse per passionem putavit. Ac si aperte dicat: Interrogatus afflictionibus homo, et peccator agnoscitur, qui in miraculis Deus putatur, Dixit ergo Dominus ad Satan:

CAPUT XXVII.

VERS. 12. — Ecce universa quae habet, in manu tua sunt: tantum in eum ne extendas manum tuam. 46. Satanae manus, non potestas, sed tentatio debet intelligi. — Cum sacram historiam sub figurali intellectu discutimus, Satanae manus non potestas, sed tentatio debet intelligi. Universa itaque quae habet, in manum tentantis dantur, et in eum tentationis manus extendi prohibetur, quod tamen fieri substantia amissa conceditur: quia nimirum prius Judaea, quae possessio ejus fuerat, in infidelitate sublata est, et post ejus caro patibulo crucis affixa. Qui igitur prius Judaeam adversantem pertulit, et postmodum usque ad crucem venit, quasi prius habita amisit, et post in semetipso adversantis nequitiam pertulit.

CAPUT XXVIII.

IBID. — Egressusque est Satan a facie Domini. 47. Diabolus voti compos factus a facie Domini exit. — Sicut et superius dictum est, Satan a facie Domini exiit, quia ad desiderii sui vota pervenit. Quasi enim ante ipsum erat, dum propter ipsum quae male sitiebat implere non poterat.

CAPUT XXIX.

VERS. 13. — Cum autem quadam die filii ejus et filiae comederent et biberent vinum in domo fratris sui primogeniti. 18. Filius Domini major Judaicus populus. — Beati Job filios ac filias, vel apostolorum ordinem, vel cunctorum fidelium multitudinem diximus designasse. Incarnatus autem Dominus prius ex Judaea ad fidem paucos elegit, et post sibi 57 multitudinem populi gentilis aggregavit. Quis autem major Domini filius, nisi Judaicus accipi populus debet, qui ei dudum datae legis fuerat doctrina generatus: minor autem gentilis populus, qui et in mundi extremitate collectus est? Quia igitur cum Satan utilitati hominum nesciens deserviret, et corruptis persecutorum cordibus licentiam Dominicae passionis expeteret, sancti apostoli necdum aggregandam Deo gentilitatem noverant, et soli Judaeae fidei arcana praedicabant; cum Satan exiisse a Domino dicitur, filii et filiae in domo fratris primogeniti convivari referuntur. Dictum quippe eis fuerat: In viam gentium ne abieritis (Matth. X, 5). Post mortem namque resurrectionemque Domini in gentium praedicationem conversi sunt. Unde et in suis Actibus dicunt: Vobis oportebat loqui primum verbum Dei; sed quia repulistis illud, et indignos vos judicastis aeternae vitae, ecce convertimur ad gentes (Act. XIII, 46). Hi itaque filii sponsi, de quibus et ejusdem voce sponsi dicitur: Non jejunabunt filii sponsi, quandiu cum illis est sponsus (Matth. IX, 15), in domo fratris primogeniti convivantur, quia videlicet adhuc apostoli sacrae Scripturae deliciis in solius Judaici populi collectione vescebantur.

CAPUT XXX.

VERS. 14, 15. — Nuntius venit ad Job, qui diceret: Boves arabant, et asinae pascebantur juxta eos, et irruerunt Sabaei, tuleruntque omnia, et pueros percusserunt gladio, et evasi ego solus, ut nuntiarem tibi. 49. Simplices perfectioribus adhaerentes, eorum intellectu pascuntur. — Quid aliud per figuram boves, quam bene operantes; quid aliud asinas, quam quosdam simpliciter viventes accipimus? Quae bene juxta boves pasci referuntur; quia mentes simplicium etiam cum alta capere non possunt, eo magis vicinae sunt, quo et fraterna bona, sua per charitatem credunt; cumque invidere alienis sensibus nesciunt, quasi in pastu se minime dividunt. Simul ergo se asinae cum bobus reficiunt, quia prudentibus conjuncti tardiores, eorum intelligentia pascuntur. Sabaei autem captivantes interpretantur. Et qui alii captivantium nomine, nisi immundi spiritus designantur, qui cunctos quos sibi subjiciunt in infidelitatem captivos ducunt? Qui et pueros gladio feriunt, quia eos tentationis suae graviter jaculis vulnerant, quos necdum juvenilis constantia liberos vel robustos servat. Qui bene quidem bona incipiunt, sed in ipsa adhuc inchoationis suae teneritudine captivantibus immundis spiritibus substernuntur. Quos gladio hostis percutit, quia aeternitatis desperatione transfigit. [REC. XIX.] 50. Prophetia, caeteris pereuntibus, in aeternum manet. — Quid est autem hoc quod nuntius venit, qui diceret: Evasi ego solus? Quis est iste nuntius, qui, aliis pereuntibus, solus evadit, nisi propheticus sermo, qui, dum fiunt omnia mala quae praedixit, quasi sanus ad Dominum solus redit? Dum enim vera dixisse de perditorum casu cognoscitur, quasi inter mortuos vixisse monstratur. Hinc est, quod ad Rebeccam in Isaac conjugio deducendam puer mittitur (Genes. XXIV, 9), quia videlicet ad desponsandam Ecclesiam Domino, interposita prophetia famulatur. Sabaeis ergo irruentibus, solus puer qui nuntiaret evasit, quia malignis spiritibus infirmorum mentes in captivitatem ducentibus, sententia prophetiae convaluit; 58 quae eamdem captivitatem praenuntians dicit: Propterea captivus ductus est populus meus, quia non habuit scientiam (Isai. V, 13). Prophetia ergo quasi salvatur, dum captivitas, quam praedixit, ostenditur. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXI.

VERS. 16. — Cumque adhuc ille loqueretur, venit alter, et dixit: Ignis Dei cecidit de coelo, et tactas oves, puerosque consumpsit, et effugi ego solus, ut nuntiarem tibi. 51. Ignis oves et pueros Job consumens, invidiam sacerdotum contra Christum significat. Malos ignis nunc cruciat per livorem, postea per vindictam. — Omnes qui praedicationis officium in synagoga tenuerunt, coelum recte vocati sunt, quia nimirum sapere superna credebantur. Unde et Moyses, cum sacerdotes ac populum ad verba suae admonitionis excitaret, dixit: Attende, coelum, et loquar; et audiat terra verba ex ore meo (Deut. XXXII, 1, sec. LXX); per coelum videlicet signans praepositorum ordinem, per terram vero subditam plebem. Hoc igitur loco coelum, sacerdotes, vel Pharisaeos, vel legis doctores non inconvenienter accipimus, qui ante oculos hominum dum coelestibus officiis inservirent, quasi desuper lucere videbantur. Sed quia ipsi summopere in redemptoris nostri adversitate commoti sunt, quasi ignis de coelo cecidit, dum ad decipiendum imperitum populum, ab his etiam qui vera docere putabantur, flamma invidiae exarsit. Teste quippe Evangelio novimus quod doctrinae veritatis invidentes, opportunitatem Dominicae traditionis exquirebant; sed metuentes populum, quae moliebantur innotescere non audebant. Hinc etiam in eo scriptum est, quod dissuadendis populis dicunt: Nunquid aliquis ex principibus credidit in eum, aut ex Pharisaeis? Sed turba haec quae non novit legem, maledicti sunt (Joan. VII, 48). Quid autem in ovibus atque in pueris, nisi innocentes quosque, sed tamen adhuc infirmos, accipimus? qui dum adversitatem Pharisaeorum ac principum tolerare timuerunt, infidelitatis concrematione consumpti sunt. Dicatur ergo: Ignis Dei cecidit de coelo, et tactas oves, puerosque consumpsit, id est, a praepositorum cordibus flamma invidiae corruit, et quidquid boni in plebibus oriebatur, incendit; quia dum mali praepositi suum contra veritatem honorem exigunt, ab omni rectitudine corda sequentium subvertunt. Ubi et bene adjungitur: Et effugi ego solus, ut nuntiarem tibi; quia dum impletur praedicta causa malitiae, fallaciae interitum evadit sermo prophetiae, qui ait: Et nunc ignis adversarios consumit (Isai. XXVI, 11). Ac si aperte dicat: Malos non solum ignis per vindictam post cruciat, sed nunc etiam per livorem cremat, quia qui post puniendi sunt retributionis supplicio, nunc semetipsos afficiunt invidiae tormento. Puer ergo solus fugiens remeat, et igne periisse oves puerosque denuntiat, dum prophetia Judaicum populum deserens, vera se dixisse manifestat, quae ait: Zelus apprehendit populum ineruditum. Ac si aperte dicat: Dum verba prophetarum plebs discutere noluit, sed credulitatem suam verbis invidentium dedit, zeli igne periit, quia in alienae invidiae se flamma concremavit. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXII.

VERS. 17. — Sed et illo adhuc loquente, venit alius, et dixit: Chaldaei fecerunt tres turmas, et invaserunt camelos, et tulerunt eos, necnon et pueros percusserunt gladio, et effugi ego solus, ut nuntiarem tibi. 59 52. Chaldaei tres turmas facientes Pharisaei, Herodiani et Sadducaei. Cameli, Samaritani, aut Judaei merae legis litterae adhaerentes. — Quia Chaldaeos interpretari feroces novimus, qui alii Chaldaeorum nomine designantur, nisi persecutionis auctores usque ad apertos clamores malitiae prorumpentes, cum dicunt: Crucifige, crucifige (Luc. XXIII, 21; Marc. III, 6)? Qui de semetipsis tres turmas faciunt, cum se ad proponendas quaestiones Domino Pharisaei, Herodiam et Sadducaei diviserunt. Qui ore quidem Sapientiae victi sunt: sed quia stultos quosdam post se eos traxisse credendum est, factis turmis camelos tulerunt. Unusquisque namque eorum ordo in prava quae sapuit, insipientium corda corrupit; et dum persuadendo ad interitum pertraxit, quasi tortuosas mentes infirmantium ad captivitatem duxit. Praedicante quippe in Samaria Domino, multi ex Samaritanis fuerunt in possessionem ejusdem Redemptoris nostri asciti. Sed nunquid ii qui pro septem viris unius mulieris mortuis, de resurrectionis desperatione Dominum tentant (Matth. XXII, 25), nequaquam conati sunt credentes Samaritanos a fide reducere, quos constat spem resurrectionis ignorare? Qui dum ex lege nonnulla recipiunt, nonnulla contemnunt, quasi camelorum more, velut mundum animal ruminant, sed ut immundum ungulam nequaquam findunt. Quamvis et eos cameli ruminantes, sed tamen ungulam non findentes, indicant qui in Judaea juxta litteram, historiam audierant, sed virtutem ejus discernere spiritaliter nesciebant. Quos tribus turmis Chaldaei rapiunt; dum Pharisaei, Herodiani et Sadducaei ab omni sensus rectitudine iniqua persuasione pervertunt. Simulque pueros gladio feriunt, quia etsi qui in populo uti jam ratione poterant, eis ipsi non virtute rationis, sed potestatis auctoritate contraibant; dumque se quasi praepositos imitari a subditis volunt, etsi intelligere aliquid sequentes possunt, ex auctoritate tamen suscepti regiminis eos ad perniciem pertrahunt. A quibus bene solus puer qui nuntiet fugit: quia Pharisaeis, Herodianis, atque Sadducaeis iniqua patrantibus, eos nimirum deserens propheticus sermo convalescit, qui ait: Et tenentes legem nescierunt me (Jer. II, 8). Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXIII.

VERS. 18, 19. — Loquebatur ille, et ecce alius intravit, et dixit: Filiis tuis et filiabus vescentibus et bibentibus vinum in domo fratris sui primogeniti, repente ventus vehemens irruit a regione deserti, et concussit quatuor angulos domus. Quae corruens oppressit liberos tuos, et mortui sunt. 53. Judaicus populus in primogenito Job figuratus. — Paulo ante jam diximus quod filios et filias, praedicantes apostolos et plebes subditas sentiamus: qui in domo fratris primogeniti convivari referuntur, quia in habitatione adhuc Judaici populi sacrae praedicationis deliciis vescebantur. Repente autem vehemens ventus irruit a regione deserti. Regio deserti est cor infidelium, quod dum Creator deserit, nullus inhabitator colit. Ventus autem vehemens quid aliud, quam tentatio fortis accipitur? Ventus ergo vehemens a regione deserti irruit; quia in passione Redemptoris nostri contra fideles ejus, fortis tentatio a cordibus Judaeorum venit. Potest etiam deserti regio, derelicta immundorum spirituum multitudo non inconvenienter intelligi. A qua ventus venit, et domum concutit, quia ab 60 eis tentatio prodiit, et persecutorum corda commovit. 54. Ejus domus eversa, est synagoga, quatuor angulis, hoc est quatuor ordinibus concussis diruta. Unde et oppressi liberi. — Sed haec domus, in qua convivabantur filii, in quatuor angulis stabat. Tres enim regentium ordines in synagoga cognovimus, sacerdotum scilicet, scribarum atque seniorum populi. Quibus si et Pharisaeos jungimus, quatuor in hac domo angulos invenimus. A regione igitur deserti ventus venit, et quatuor domus angulos concutit, quia ab immundis spiritibus tentatio irruit, et mentes quatuor ordinum, in malitiam persecutionis excitavit. Quae domus corruens, oppressit liberos, quia dum Judaea in crudelitatem Dominicae persecutionis cecidit, apostolorum fidem desperationis formidine obruit. Teneri enim tantummodo magistrum viderunt, et jam negantes per diversa fugiebant. Et quamvis interna manus eorum spiritum in praescientia ad vitam tenuit, a vita tamen fidei eos interim carnalis timor exstinxit. Qui ergo auctorem suum, Judae saeviente, reliquerunt, quasi concussis angulis domo eversa necati sunt. Quid autem illo tempore de grege fidelium factum credimus, quo fugisse ipsos etiam arietes scimus? Sed inter haec unus qui nuntiet evadit, quia convaluisse se sermo propheticus, qui haec denuntiaverat, ostendit, dicens de persecutore populo: Dilectus meus in domo mea fecit scelera multa (Jerem. XI, 15); dicens de bonis praedicatoribus, sed tamen in passione fugientibus: Proximi mei a longe steterunt (Psal. XXXVII, 12); dicens de cunctis valde formidantibus: Percutiam pastorem, et dispergentur oves gregis (Zach. XIII, 7; Matth. XXVI, 31). Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXIV Vet.

[XXIX, Rec. XXII]. VERS. 20. — Tunc surrexit Job, et scidit vestimenta sua. 55. Job surgens et vestem scindens Christum adumbrat. — Ruente domo exstinctis filiis, Job surrexit, quia Judaea in infidelitate perdita, praedicatoribus in pavoris morte cadentibus, Redemptor humani generis semetipsum a carnis suae morte suscitavit: quanto judicio persecutores suos deseruit, demonstravit. Surgere quippe ejus est qua districtione peccatores derelinquat ostendere, quasi enim jacere ejus est patienter mala tolerare.

Surgit ergo, cum contra reprobos judicium justitiae exerit. Unde et recte vestimenta scidisse perhibetur. Quid enim vestimentum Domini nisi Synagoga exstitit, quae prophetis praedicantibus expectationi incarnationis illius adhaesit? Sicut enim his nunc vestitur, a quibus diligitur, Paulo attestante qui ait: Ut exhiberet sibi gloriosam Ecclesiam, non habentem maculam aut rugam (Ephes. V, 27). Quae enim maculam aut rugam non habere dicitur, profecto vestis rationalis et per actionem munda, et per spem tensa monstratur. Ita cum incarnandum eum Judaea credidit, adhaerendo nihilominus vestis fuit. 56. Synagoga ejus vestis scissa, aliis credentibus, aliis non credentibus. — Sed quia exspectatus venit, veniens nova docuit, docens mira exercuit, mira faciens prava toleravit; vestem quam indutus fuerat scidit, dum in Judaea alios ab infidelitate sustulit, alios in infidelitate dereliquit. Quid est igitur vestis scissa, nisi Judaea in contrariis sententiis divisa? Si enim vestis ejus scissa non esset, evangelista non diceret quod praedicante Domino contentio oriebatur in populo, Ut alii dicerent, Bonus est; alii autem, Non, sed seducit turbas (Joan. VII, 12). Quasi scissa vestis illius fuit quae divisa 61 per sententias unitatem concordiae perdidit. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXV.

IBID. — Et tonso capite corruens in terram, adoravit. 57. Quasi tonso capite in terram ruit, dum Judaico sacerdotio rejecto, ad gentes descendit. — Quid per decisos capillos, nisi sacramentorum subtilitas; quid per caput, nisi summa sacerdotii designatur? Unde et ad Ezechielem prophetam dicitur: Tu, fili hominis, sume tibi gladium acutum, radentem pilos, et assumes eum, et duces per caput tuum et barbam (Ezech. V, 1), ut videlicet prophetae facto judicium Redemptoris exprimatur, qui in carne apparens caput rasit, quia a Judaico sacerdotio praeceptorum suorum sacramenta abstulit; barbam rasit, quia regnum Israeliticum deserens, decorem virtutis ejus amputavit.

Quid vero hoc loco per terram, nisi homo peccator exprimitur? Primo quippe peccanti homini dictum est: Terra es, et in terram ibis (Genes. III, 19). Terrae ergo nomine peccatrix gentilitas designatur. Nam cum justam Judaea se crederet, constat quam reproba de gentilitate sentiret, Paulo attestante, qui ait: Nos natura Judaei, et non ex gentibus peccatores (Gal. II, 15). Mediator igitur noster quasi detonso capite in terram corruit, quia Judaeam deserens, dum sacramenta sua ab ejus sacerdotio abstulit, ad notitiam gentium venit. Capillos enim a capite rasit, quia sacramenta legis ab illo primo suo sacerdotio sustulit; et in terram corruit, quia salvandis se peccatoribus dedit; dumque eos qui sibi justi videbantur deseruit, hos qui se injustos et noverant, et fatebantur, assumpsit. Hinc et ipse in Evangelio dicit: Ego in judicium veni in hunc mundum, ut qui non vident videant, et qui vident caeci fiant (Joan. IX, 39). Hinc et columna nubis, quae in eremo populum praeibat (Exod. XIII. 21), splendore ignis non in die, sed in nocte radiabat, quia videlicet redemptor noster, suae conversationis exemplo, ducatum sequentibus praestans, de justitia sua confidentibus nulla luce claruit; peccatorum vero suorum tenebras agnoscentibus, igne sui amoris infulsit. Nec quod corruere Job dicitur, indignum mens hoc significatione Redemptoris arbitretur. Scriptum namque est: Verbum misit Dominus in Jacob, et cecidit in Israel (Isai. IX, 8). Jacob quippe supplantator, Israël vero videns Deum dicitur. Et quid per Jacob, nisi Judaicus populus; quid per Israël nisi gentilis populus designatur? Quia quem Jacob per carnis mortem supplantare studuit, hunc nimirum per oculos fidei gentilitas Deum vidit. Ad Jacob ergo missum verbum, in Israël cecidit, quia eum quem ad se venientem Judaicus respuit, hunc repente confitens populus gentilis invenit. De sancto quippe Spiritu scriptum est: Cecidit spiritus Domini super eos (Act. X, 44). 58. Cadere qui dicatur verbum Dei aut Spiritus sanctus. — Idcirco autem vel verbum Dei, vel Spiritus sanctus in sacra Scriptura cadere dicitur, ut inopinatus ejus adventus exprimatur. Quod enim ruit vel cadit, ad ima repente venit. Mediatori ergo in terram quasi corruisse est, nullis signis praecurrentibus inopinate ad gentes venisse. Bene autem dicitur quod corruens adoravit, quia dum ipse humilitatem carnis suscepit, in se credentibus vota humilitatis infudit. Fecit enim, quia fieri docuit; sicut et de ejus Spiritu dicitur: Ipse Spiritus postulat 62 pro nobis gemitibus inenarrabilibus (Rom. VIII, 26). Neque enim petit, qui aequalis est, sed postulare dicitur; quia nimirum quos repleverit, postulantes facit: quamvis hoc et in semetipso Redemptor noster ostendit, qui Patrem etiam, dum passioni propinquaret, exoravit. Quid enim mirum, si in forma servi exorando so Patri subdidit, in qua etiam manus peccantium usque ad mortis extrema toleravit? Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXVI.

VERS. 21. — Nudus egressus sum de utero matris meae, nudus revertar illuc. 59. Christus ad Judaeos e quibus exivit, in fine mundi est reversurus. — Redemptoris mater juxta carnem Synagoga exstitit, ex qua ad nos per corpus visibilis processit. Sed hunc intra se tegmine litterae adopertum tenuit, dum ad spiritalem ejus intelligentiam mentis oculos aperire neglexit. Hunc quia in carne humani corporis latentem videre Deum noluit, quasi in divinitate nudum considerare contempsit. Sed nudus de utero matris exiit: quia a Synagogae carne prodiens conspicuus ad gentes venit. Quod bene Joseph relicto pallio fugiente signatum est (Genes. XXXIX, 12). Dum enim mulier adultera male illo uti voluisset, relicto pallio fugit foras, quia dum Synagoga Dominum purum hominem credens, quasi adulterino complexu constringere voluit, ipse tegmen litterae ejus oculis reliquit, et ad cognoscendam divinitatis suae potentiam conspicuum se gentibus praebuit. Unde et Paulus dixit: Usque hodie, dum legitur Moyses, velamen est super cor eorum (II Cor. III, 15), quia videlicet adultera mulier apud semetipsam pallium retinuit, et quem male tenebat, nudum amisit. Qui ergo a Synagoga veniens, fidei gentium conspicuus apparuit, ex utero matris nudus exivit. Sed nunquid hanc omnimodo deserit? Et ubi est quod per prophetam dicitur: Si fuerit numerus filiorum Israël quasi arena maris, reliquiae salvae fient (Isai. X, 22, Rom. IX, 27)? Ubi quod scriptum est: Donec plenitudo gentium introiret, et sic omnis Israel salvus fieret (Rom. XI, 25)? Erit ergo quando conspicuus etiam Synagogae appareat. Erit in fine mundi procul dubio, quando gentis suae reliquiis semetipsum, sicut est Deus, innotescat. Unde et bene hic dicitur: Nudus revertar illuc. Nudus quippe ad uterum matris revertitur, cum in mundi hujus termino is, qui in saeculo factus homo despicitur, Synagogae suae oculis, Deus ante saecula declaratur. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXVII.

IBID. — Dominus dedit, Dominus abstulit: sicut Domino placuit, ita factum est: sit nomen Domini benedictum. 60. Deus Christo Judaeam dedit et abstulit. — Redemptor noster per hoc quod Deus est, cum Patre dat omnia; per hoc vero quod homo est, a Patre accipit inter omnia. Dicat igitur de Judaea, cum venturum incarnationis ejus mysterium crederet: Dominus dedit. Dicat de Judaea, cum exspectatam incarnationis ejus praesentiam contempsisset: Dominus abstulit. Data quippe est, cum per quosdam futura credidit; sed exigente merito suae caecitatis ablata est, cum credita per quosdam venerari contempsit. 61. Christus exemplo docuit Deo in flagellis benedicere. — In se autem credentes edoceat, ut in flagellis positi benedicere Domino sciant, cum subditur: Sicut Domino placuit, ita factum est; sit nomen Domini benedictum. Unde et teste Evangelio (Matth. XXVI, 26), cum 63 propinquare passioni dicitur, accepto pane gratias egisse perhibetur. Gratias itaque agit, qui flagella alienae iniquitatis suscipit. Et qui nihil dignum percussione exhibuit, humiliter in percussione benedicit; ut hinc videlicet ostendat quid unusquisque in flagello culpae propriae facere debeat, si ipse aequanimiter flagella culpae portat alienae ut hinc ostendat quid in correptione faciat subditus, si in flagello positus Patri gratias agit aequalis. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXVIII.

VERS. 22. — In omnibus his non peccavit Job neque stultum aliquid contra Deum locutus est. 62. Dolus apud homines prudentia, apud Deum stultitia est. — Quod nec peccasse, nec stultum aliquid contra Deum locutus asseritur; hoc de illo Petrus, sicut jam praediximus, aperte testatur, dicens: Qui peccatum non fecit, nec dolus inventus est in ore ejus (I Pet. II, 22). Dolus quippe in ore, quanto apud homines prudentius callet, tanto apud Deum stultius desipit, Paulo attestante, qui ait: Sapientia hujus mundi stultitia est apud Deum (I Cor. III, 19). Quia ergo dolus in ore ejus non fuit, stultum proculdubio nihil dixit. Hunc contra Deum sacerdotes et principes locutum stulte crediderunt, cum interrogatus passionis tempore, Dei se Filium testaretur. Unde et conquirentes dicunt: Quid adhuc egemus testibus? ecce ipsi audivimus blasphemiam (Matth. XXVI, 65). Sed contra Deum stulte nihil dixit: quia vera loquens, hoc de se infidelibus etiam moriendo intulit, quod paulo post redemptis omnibus resurgendo monstravit. 63. SENSUS MORALIS. — Satan Deo cum sanctis angelis assistit, cogitationes malas bonis interserendo. — Haec in significationem nostri capitis breviter tractata transcurrimus: nunc in aedificationem ejus corporis, ea moraliter tractanda replicemus, ut quod actum foris narratur in opere, sciamus quomodo intus agatur in mente. Nam cum filii Dei assistunt coram Deo, inter eos quoque assistit et Satan, quia plerumque bonis nostris cogitationibus, quae in corde nostro, adventu sancti Spiritus operante, seminantur, antiquus ille callide se interserit et subjungit inimicus, ut bene cogitata perturbet, maleque perturbata dilaniet. Sed nequaquam nos in tentatione deserit, qui creavit. Nam hostem nostrum, qui se contra nos in insidiis contegit, illustratione sui luminis nobis deprehensibilem reddit; propter quod ei mox dicit:

CAPUT XXXIX.

VERS. 7. — Unde venis? 64. Cui dicendum unde venis? — Callidum namque hostem requirere, est ejus nobis insidias declarare, ut quo eum subintrare cor cernimus, forti contra illum circumspectione vigilemus.

CAPUT XL.

IBID. — Qui respondens ait: Circuivi terram, et perambulavi eam. 65. Qui insidias ejus Deus nobis detegat. — Satanae terram circuire, est carnalia corda perscrutari, et unde occasionem accusationis invenire possit, exquirere. Terram circuit, quia humana corda circumvenit, ut bona tollat, ut mala mentibus inserat, ut inserta cumulet, ut cumulata perficiat, ut perfectos in iniquitatibus ad poenam socios acquirat. Et notandum quod non transvolasse, sed perambulasse se asserit, quia nimirum nequaquam quem tentat velociter deserit; sed ubi molle cor invenit, ibi pedem miserae persuasionis figit, ut immorando actionis pravae vestigia imprimat, et ex suae iniquitatis similitudine, quos valet, reprobos reddat. Sed contra hunc beatus Job laudatur, et dicitur:

CAPUT LXI.

VERS. 8. — Nunquid considerasti servum meum Job, quod 64 non sit ei similis super terram, vir simplex, et rectus, ac timens Deum, et recedens a malo? 66. Laudare Dei est bona dare, ac data custodire. — Quem divina inspiratio contra hostem roborat, hunc quasi in Satanae auribus Deus laudat. Laudare quippe ejus est, et prius bona concedere, et post concessa custodire.

Sed antiquus hostis eo contra bonos gravius saevit, quo vallari eos divinae protectionis munere conspicit. Unde et subjungens dicit:

CAPUT XLII.

VERS. 9. — Nunquid frustra Job timet Deum? Nonne tu vallasti eum, ac domum ejus, universamque substantiam per circuitum? Operibus manuum ejus benedixisti, et possessio illius crevit in terra. 67. Suis viribus homo non stat. — Ac si aperte dicat: Cur laudas quem protegendo roboras? Despecto enim me, dignus tuis laudibus homo esset, si suis contra me viribus staret. Unde mox et malitiose de homine expetit, quod tamen protector hominis benigne concedit. Nam subditur:

CAPUT XLIII.

VERS. 11. Sed extende paululum manum tuam, et tange cuncta quae possidet, nisi in faciem benedixerit tibi. 68. Electi in tentatione proficiunt. — Plerumque enim, dum virtutum fructus fecunde reddimus, dum continua prosperitate pollemus, aliquantulum mens erigitur, ut a semetipsa sibi existere bona quae habet, arbitretur. Quae nimirum bona antiquus hostis malitiose attrectare appetit; sed haec tentari Deus nonnisi benigne permittit, ut dum mens tentatione pulsante, in bonis de quibus gaudebat concutitur, imbecillitatis suae debilitate cognita, in spe divini adjutorii robustius solidetur. Fitque mira dispensatione pietatis, ut unde malignus hostis cor tentat, ut interimat, inde misericors conditor hoc erudiat, ut vivat. Unde et bene subjungitur:

CAPUT XLIV.

VERS. 12. — Ecce universa quae habet, in manu tua sunt, tantum in eum ne extendas manum tuam. 69. Deo perseverantiam tribuente. — Ac si aperte dicat: Electi uniuscujusque bona sic tibi tentanda exterius tribuo, ut tamen ipse noveris, quia perseverantem mihi illum in mentis radice conservo. Ubi et bene subditur:

CAPUT XLV.

IBID. — Egressusque est Satan a facie Domini: 70. Quo moderante, diabolus bonorum corda usque ad interitum non vulnerat. — Quia per hoc, quod usque ad defectum cordis praevalere nequaquam permittitur, exclusus ab intimis, exterius vagatur. Qui etiam si virtutes mentis plerumque turbat, eo ipso foris est, quo resistente Deo, usque ad interitum bonorum corda non vulnerat. Tantum quippe contra illa saevire permittitur, in quantum necesse est ut tentationibus erudita solidentur; ne ea quae agunt bona, suis viribus tribuant, ne in securitatis torpore se deserant, et a formidinis accinctione dissolvant: sed ad provectus sui custodiam tanto solertius invigilent, quanto se contra adversarium stare semper in acie tentationum vident.

CAPUT XLVI.

VERS. 13, 14, 15. — Cum autem quadam die filii et filiae ejus comederent et biberent vinum in domo fratris sui primogeniti, nuntius venit ad Job, qui diceret: Boves arabant, et asinae pascebantur juxta eos, et irruerunt Sabaei, tuleruntque omnia, et pueros percusserunt gladio; et evasi ego solus, ut nuntiarem tibi. 71. Fides virtutum omnium prima. — In electorum corde prior bonorum sequentium sapientia nascitur, atque haec per donum Spiritus quasi primogenita proles profertur. Quae profecto sapientia, nostra fides est, propheta attestante, qui ait: Nisi credideritis non intelligetis (Isai. VII, 9. sec. LXX). Tunc enim vere ad intelligendum sapimus, cum cunctis 65 quae conditor dicit, credulitatis nostrae fidem praebemus. In domo ergo fratris primogeniti convivantur filii, cum virtutes reliquae epulantur in fide. Quae si non prima in corde nostro gignitur, reliqua quaeque esse bona non possunt, etiamsi bona videantur. In domo fratris primogeniti filii convivantur, dum virtutes nostrae in habitaculo fidei, sacri eloquii cibo satiantur. Scriptum quippe est: Sine fide impossibile est placere Deo (Hebr. XI, 6). Tunc ergo virtutes nostrae veras vitae epulas sumunt, cum nutriri fidei sacramentis incipiunt. In domo fratris primogeniti convivantur filii, quia nisi virtutes reliquae sapientiae epulis repletae, ea quae appetunt prudenter agant, virtutes esse nequaquam possunt. 72. Virtutibus nostris quam varie insidietur diabolus. — Sed ecce dum bona quae agimus, sapientiae epulis fideique pascuntur, hostis noster arantes boves et pascentes asinas subtrahit, et pueros gladio occidit. Quid arantes boves, nisi graviores nostras cogitationes accipimus? quae dum cor studiosa exercitatione conficiunt, uberes provectuum fructus reddunt. Quid pascentes intelligimus asinas, nisi simplices motus cordis? quos dum studiose a duplicitatis errore compescimus, quasi in campo liberae puritatis nutrimus. Sed plerumque hostis callidus, cum graves cogitationes in corde conspicit, eas sub introducta voluptatis delectatione corrumpit; et dum motus cordis simplices videt, subtilia inventionum acumina ostendit; ut dum laus de subtilitate quaeritur, puritatis simplicitas amittatur; et si usque ad opus pravum pertrahere non valet, tentando tamen bonorum cogitationibus subripiens nocet; ut dum turbare bona mentis agnoscitur, ea quasi funditus abstulisse videatur. Possunt etiam per arantes boves, cogitationes charitatis accipi; quibus prodesse aliis conamur, cum fraterni cordis duritiam praedicando scindere cupimus. Potest etiam per asinas, quae nimirum sese onerantibus, nulla ferocitatis insania resistunt, patientiae mansuetudo signari. Et saepe hostis antiquus cum velle prodesse nos loquendo aliis conspicit, in quodam torpore otii mentem mergit; ut aliis prodesse non libeat, etiam cum a propriis vacat. Arantes ergo boves subtrahit, cum cogitationes mentis fraternae utilitatis fructibus deditas, per submissum negligentiae torporem frangit. Et quamvis electorum corda intra arcana suae cogitationis invigilant, et quid a tentatore sustineat, superantes pensant, eo tamen ipso malignus inimicus aliquid rapuisse se gaudet, quo cogitationibus bonorum vel ad momentum praevalet.. VERS. 17. — Sed et illo adhuc loquente, venit alius, et dixit: Chaldaei fecerunt tres turmas, et invaserunt camelos, et tulerunt eos, necnon et pueros percusserunt gladio; et effugi ego solus, ut nuntiarem tibi. 75. Quantis periculis terrenarum rerum dispensatio sit obnoxia. — Per camelos, qui mundum aliquid habent, dum ruminant, et immundum, dum nequaquam ungulam findunt, supra jam diximus bonas rerum temporalium dispensationes intelligi, in quibus quo est cura distensior, eo nobis multiplicius insidiatur inimicus. Omnis enim, qui dispensandis terrenis rebus praesidet, occulti hostis jaculis latius patet. Nonnulla enim providens agere nititur, et saepe dum cautus futura subtiliter praevidet, incautus damna praesentia nequaquam videt; saepe dum praesentibus invigilat, ad instantia praevidenda dormitat; saepe dum aliqua torpens agit, quae vigilanter agenda sunt negligit; saepe dum plus justo vigilantem se in actione exhibet, ipsa actionis suae inquietudine rebus subditis pejus nocet. Aliquando autem linguae modum ponere nititur, sed onere dispensationis exigente, silere prohibetur. Aliquando dum nimia se censura restringit, tacet etiam 67 quae loqui debuit. Aliquando ad inferenda necessaria dum se latius relaxat, dicit etiam quae loqui non debuit. Plerumque autem tantis cogitationum voluminibus implicatur, ut ipsa ferre vix valeat, quae intra se providus versat; et cum nil opere faciat, sub magno cordis sui pondere vehementer insudat. Quia enim dura sunt quae apud semetipsum intus patitur, quietus foris otiosusque lassatur. Plerumque enim quasi ventura animus conspicit, totamque contra haec intentionem proponit; magnusque ardor contentionis se inserit, sopor fugit, nox in diem vertitur; et cum quieta foris membra lectulus teneat, intus magnis clamoribus in cordis foro litigatur. Et fit plerumque ut nulla eveniant quae praevidentur: totaque illa cogitatio, quae diu se plena intentione paraverat, repente vacua quiescat.

Tanto autem longius mens a necessariis cessat, quanto inania latius cogitat. Quia igitur dispensationis curas maligni spiritus modo torpenti vel praecipitata actione feriunt, modo pigra vel immoderata locutione confundunt, pene autem semper nimiis cogitationum molibus premunt, tribus turmis Chaldaei camelos rapiunt. Quasi enim tres turmas contra camelos facere, est terrenarum dispensationum studia modo illicito opere, modo superflua locutione, modo inordinata cogitatione vastare; ut dum se ad administranda exterius mens efficaciter extendere nititur, a sui consideratione separetur; et eo damna quae de semetipsa patitur nesciat, quo erga aliena fortiori studio quam decet elaborat. Recta autem mens cum curas dispensationis suscipit, quid sibi, quid proximis debeat attendit; et nec per alienae sollicitudinis immoderationem sua studia negligit, nec per suae utilitatis vigilantiam aliena postponit. Sed tamen plerumque dum ad utraque mens solerter invigilat, dum magnis erga se, et ea quae sibi commissa sunt, circumspectionibus vacat, repentino turbata cujuslibet causae emergentis articulo, ita in praeceps rapitur, ut ab ea subito cunctae circumspectiones ejus obruantur. Unde et custodes camelorum pueros Chaldaei gladio feriunt. Sed tamen unus redit; quia inter haec discretionis ratio mentis nostrae oculis occurrit, et sollicita sibimet anima quid subito impulsu tentationis intrinsecus amittat, intelligit. Sequitur.

CAPUT XLIX.

VERS. 18, 19. — Loquebatur ille, et ecce alius intravit, et dixit: Filiis tuis et filiabus vescentibus et bibentibus vinum in domo fratris sui primogeniti, repentè ventus vehemens irruit a regione deserti, et concussit quatuor angulos domus, quae corruens oppressit liberos tuos, et mortui sunt: et effugi ego solus, ut nuntiarem tibi. 76. Virtutibus quatuor innititur spiritale aedificium. Unde concutiatur. — Sicut supra jam diximus, regio deserti est immundorum spirituum multitudo derelicta: quae dum conditoris sui beatitudinem deseruit, quasi manum cultoris amisit a qua ventus vehemens venit, et domum subruit; quia ab immundis spiritibus fortis tentatio subripit, et a tranquillitatis suae statu conscientiam evertit. In quatuor vero angulis domus ista consistit, quia nimirum solidum mentis nostrae aedificium, prudentia, temperantia, fortitudo, justitia sustinet. In quatuor angulis domus ista subsistit, quia in his quatuor virtutibus tota boni 68 operis structura consurgit. Unde et quatuor paradisi flumina terram irrigant, quia dum his quatuor virtutibus cor infunditur, ab omni desideriorum carnalium aestu temperatur. Sed nonnunquam dum menti ignavia subripit, prudentia frigescit; nam cum fessa torpet, ventura non providet. Nonnunquam dum nonnulla menti delectatio subripit, temperantia nostra marcescit; in quantum enim ad delectationem praesentium ducimur, in tantum minus ab illicitis temperamus. Nonnunquam se timor cordi insinuat, et vires nostrae fortitudinis turbat; et eo minores contra adversa existimus, quo quaedam perdere immoderatius dilecta formidamus. Nonnunquam vero amor suus se menti ingerit, eamque latenti motu a rectitudine justitiae divertit; et quo se totam auctori reddere negligit, eo in se justitiae juri contradicit. Ventus ergo vehemens quatuor angulos domus concutit; dum fortis tentatio occultis motibus quatuor virtutes quatit; et quasi quassatis angulis domus eruitur, dum pulsatis virtutibus conscientia turbatur. 77. Inde virtutes caeterae quasi cordis soboles se invicem pascunt. — Intra hos autem quatuor domus angulos filii convivantur, quia intra arcana mentis, quae principaliter his quatuor virtutibus ad summae rectitudinis culmen erigitur, virtutes caeterae quasi quaedam cordis soboles se invicem pascunt. Donum quippe Spiritus, quod in subjecta mente ante alia prudentiam, temperantiam, fortitudinem, justitiam format, eamdem mentem ut contra singula quaeque tentamenta erudiat, in septem mox virtutibus temperat, ut contra stultitiam, sapientiam; contra hebetudinem, intellectum; contra praecipitationem, consilium; contra timorem, fortitudinem; contra ignorantiam, scientiam; contra duritiam, pietatem; contra superbiam det timorem. 78. His qui virtutibus praediti sunt, gratia aliquando utiliter se subtrahit. — Sed nonnunquam, dum mens nostra tanti muneris plenitudine atque ubertate fulcitur, si continua in his securitate perfruitur, a quo sibi haec sint obliviscitur; seque a se habere putat, quod nunquam sibi abesse considerat. Unde fit ut aliquando se haec eadem gratia utiliter subtrahat, et praesumenti menti, quantum in se infirmatur, ostendat. Tunc enim vere cognoscimus bona nostra unde sunt, quando haec quasi amittendo, sentimus quia a nobis servari non possunt. Ad hoc itaque intimandae humilitatis magisterium, fit plerumque ut irruente tentationis articulo, tanta stultitia sapientiam nostram feriat, ut turbata mens, qualiter malis imminentibus obviet, vel contra tentationem quomodo se praeparet, ignoret. Sed hac ipsa stultitia cor prudenter eruditur, quia unde ad momentum desipit, eo post verius, quo et humilius, sapit; et sapientia unde quasi amittitur, inde certius possidetur. Aliquando dum sublimia intelligendo in elatione se animus erigit, in rebus imis et vilibus gravi hebetudine pigrescit, ut repente sibi etiam ima clausa videat, qui pernix summa penetrabat. Sed haec ipsa hebetudo intellectum nobis, dum subtrahit, servat, quia dum ad momentum cor humiliat, verius ad sublimia intelligenda confirmat. Aliquando dum cuncta nos agere consilii gravitate gaudemus, pulsante causae emergentis articulo, praecipitatione subita rapimur; et qui nos semper disposite vixisse credidimus, repente 69 intima confusione vastamur. Sed tamen ejusdem confusionis eruditione discimus, ne nostris viribus consilia nostra tribuamus; et tanto maturius ad gravitatem restringimur, quanto ad hanc quasi amissam redimus. Aliquando dum mens fortiter adversa contemnit, subortis adversitatis eventibus, hanc metus vehemens percutit. Sed per hunc concussa discit cui tribuat quod in quibusdam fortiter stetit; et tanto post validius fortitudinem retinet, quanto hanc repente irruente formidine sibi jam quasi elapsam videt. Aliquando dum magna nos scire gaudemus, repentinae ignorantiae caecitate torpescimus. Sed quo ignorantia mentis oculus ad momentum clauditur, eo post ad scientiam verius aperitur, ut nimirum flagello suae caecitatis eruditus, et scire ipsum a quo habeat sciat. Aliquando dum religiose cuncta disponimus, dum pietatis viscera plene nos habere gratulamur, quadam mentis duritia irruente percutimur. Sed quasi obdurati cognoscimus, cui pietatis habitae bona tribuamus; et pietas verius velut exstincta recipitur, dum quasi amissa amplius amatur. Aliquando dum subjectum se divinae formidini animus gaudet, repente superbia tentante rigescit. Sed tamen valde mox timens quia non timet, ad humilitatem se iterum festinus inflectit; et tanto hanc solidius recipit, quanto ejus virtutis pondus quasi amittendo pensavit. 79. Tentationibus acquiruntur humilitas et vigilantia. — Eversa igitur domo, moriuntur filii quia turbata in tentatione conscientia, ad utilitatem propriae cognitionis raptim et in momento temporis obruuntur genitae in corde virtutes. Qui profecto filii intus per spiritum vivunt, dum exterius carne moriuntur, quia videlicet virtutes nostrae tentationis tempore etsi in momento turbatae ab status sui incolumitate deficiunt, per intentionis tamen perseverantiam integrae in mentis radice subsistunt. Cum quibus etiam tres sorores occumbunt, quia in corde nonnunquam per flagella turbatur charitas, per formidinem concutitur spes, per quaestiones pulsatur fides. Saepe enim quasi a conditoris amore torpescimus, dum ultra quam nobis congruere credimus, flagello fatigamur. Saepe dum plus quam necesse est mens formidat, fiduciam sibimet spei debilitat. Saepe dum immensis quaestionibus animus tenditur, perturbata fides quasi defectura fatigatur. Sed tamen vivunt filiae, quae domo concussa moriuntur, quia etsi intra conscientiam, spem, fidem, charitatemque pene occumbere perturbatio ipsa renuntiat, has tamen ante Dei oculos vivas perseverantia rectae intentionis servat. Unde et puer qui haec nuntiet solus evadit, quia mentis discretio etiam inter tentamenta incolumis permanet. Agitque puer ut Job filios fiendo recipiat, dum, discretione nuntiante, dolens animus vires quas quasi amittere coeperat poenitendo conservat. Mira autem hoc nobiscum dispensatione agitur, ut mens nostra culpae nonnunquam pulsatione feriatur. Nam esse se magnarum virium homo crederet, si nullum unquam earumdem virium defectum intra mentis arcana sentiret. Sed dum tentatione irruente quatitur, et quasi ultra quam sufficit fatigatur, ei contra hostis sui insidias munimen humilitatis ostenditur, et unde se pertimescit enerviter cadere, inde accipit fortiter stare. Tentatus autem, non solum vires a quo accipiat discit, sed quanta eas vigilantia servet intelligit. 70 Saepe enim quem tentationis certamen superare non valuit, sua deterius securitas stravit. Nam dum lassum se quisque in otio remittit, dissolutam mentem corruptori prostituit; at si eum ex dispensatione supernae pietatis tentatio non repente vehementer irruens, sed temperato accessu erudiens pulsat, nimirum ad insidias providendas evigilat, ut contra hostem se in certamine cautus accingat. Unde et bene subjungitur:

CAPUT L.

VERS. 20. — Tunc surrexit Job. 80. Discretio tentationibus proficit. — Sedere enim, quiescentis est; assurgere, decertantis. Auditis ergo adversis surgere, est expertis tentationibus mentem ad certamina robustius parare. Quibus nimirum tentationibus etiam discretio proficit, quia ut virtutes a vitiis subtilius distinguat, agnoscit. Unde et bene subjungitur:

CAPUT LI.

IBID. — Scidit vestimenta sua. 81. Tentationibus pulsati ad luctum poenitentiae humilitatemque confugiant ut sanentur. — Vestimenta scindimus, cum discernendo nostra opera retractamus. Si enim apud Deum nos opera nostra quasi vestimenta non tegerent, nequaquam voce angelica diceretur: Beatus qui vigilat, et custodit vestimenta sua, ne nudus ambulet, et videant turpitudinem ejus (Apoc. XVI, 15). Turpitudo enim nostra tunc cernitur, cum vita reprehensibilis ante justorum oculos in judicio, nequaquam subsequentis boni operis tegmine velatur. Sed quia cum culpa tentamur, ad lamenta accendimur; atque ipsis lamentis excitati, ad perspiciendam lucem justitiae subtilius oculos mentis aperimus, quasi in dolore vestimenta scindimus, quia ex fletu, discretione crescente, cuncta quae agimus, districtius irata manu judicamus. Tunc omnis nostra elatio corruit, tunc cuncta ab animo cogitationum superfluitas cadit. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT LII.

IBID. — Et tonso capite corruens in terram adoravit. 82. Elatio et cogitationum vanitas, quomodo resecentur. — Nam quid moraliter per capillos, nisi defluentes animi cogitationes accipimus? Unde et alias Ecclesiae dicitur: Sicut vitta coccinea labia tua, sponsa, et eloquium tuum dulce (Cant. IV, 3). Vitta quippe crines capitis astringit. Labia ergo sponsae sicut vitta sunt, quia exhortatione sanctae Ecclesiae, cunctae in auditorum mentibus diffusae cogitationes ligantur; ne remissae defluant, ne sese per illicita spargant, ne sparsae cordis oculos deprimant; sed quasi ad unam se intentionem colligant, dum vitta eas sanctae praedicationis ligat. Quam recte et coccineam asserit; quia sanctorum praedicatio solo charitatis ardore flammescit. Quid vero per caput, nisi ea, quae principale uniuscujusque actionis est, mens ipsa signatur? Unde et alias dicitur: Et oleum de capite tuo non deficiat (Eccles. IX, 8). Oleum quippe in capite, est charitas in mente; et a capite deficit oleum, cum charitas a mente discedit. Caput ergo detondere est cogitationes superfluas a mente resecare. Et detonso capite in terram corruit, qui repressis praesumptionis suae cogitationibus, quam in semetipso infirmus sit humiliter agnoscit. Et notandum quod in terram corruens adoravit. Ille enim veram Deo adorationem exhibet qui semetipsum, quia pulvis sit, humiliter videt, qui nihil sibi virtutis tribuit, qui bona quae agit esse de misericordia conditoris agnoscit. Unde et competenter dicit:

CAPUT LIII.

VERS. 21. — Nudus egressus sum de utero matris meae: nudus revertar illuc. 85. Qui se a virtutibus nudum putat, ipsa melius humilitate vestitur. — Ac si tentatus animus et in infirmitatis suae inopia deprehensus dicat: Nudum me in fide prima gratia genuit, nudum eadem gratia in assumptione salvabit. Est namque magnum animi turbati solatium, ut pulsatus vitiis, cum se quasi nudari virtutibus conspicit, ad solam misericordiae spem recurrat; et eo se nudari non sinat, quo se a virtutibus humiliter nudum putat: qui etsi fortasse aliqua virtute in tentatione detegitur, infirmitatem tamen propriam agnoscens, ipsa melius humilitate vestitur; et valde robustius quam steterat jacet, cum sibi sine divino adjutorio cessat tribuere quod habet. Unde et manum mox largitoris et judicis humiliter agnoscit, dicens:

CAPUT LIV.

IBID. — Dominus dedit, Dominus abstulit. 86. Tentatione eruditi crescimus. — Ecce tentationibus eruditus crevit, qui et in virtute habita largitatem dantis, et in perturbatione fortitudinis, potestatem tollentis agnoscit. Quae tamen fortitudo non tollitur, sed perturbata fatigatur; quatenus concussa mens, dum se hanc jamjamque quasi amittere trepidat, semper facta humilis nunquam perdat.

CAPUT LV.

IBID. — Sicut Domino placuit, ita factum est, sit nomen 72 Domini benedictum. 87. Tentato quid agendum. — In hoc, quod interna perturbatione concutimur, dignum est ut ad conditoris judicium recurramus; ut inde cor nostrum adjutori suo majores laudes exhibeat, unde pulsatum verius imbecillitatem suae infirmitatis pensat. Bene autem dicitur:

CAPUT LVI.

In omnibus his non peccavit Iob nec stultum aliquid contra Deum locutus est.

2 Quia solerti cura custodire dolens animus debet, ne cum se intus tentatio stimulat, in verbis foras illicitae locutionis erumpat, ne de probatione murmuret, et ignis qui hunc velut aurum concremat, per excessum sermonis illiciti in paleae favillam vertat.

3 Nihil vero obstat si hoc quod de virtutibus diximus, de his quae in ostensione virtutis dantur donis sancti Spiritus sentiamus. Alii namque prophetiae, alii genera linguarum, alii virtutes curationum dantur. Sed quia haec ipsa dona non semper in mente eodem modo sunt, liquido ostenditur quod ne se mens in praesumptione elevet, aliquando utiliter subtrahuntur. Nam si prophetiae spiritus prophetis semper adesset, nimirum Elisaeus propheta non diceret; Dimitte eam, anima enim eius in amaritudine est, et Dominus celavit a me verbum. Si prophetiae spiritus prophetis semper adesset, inquisitus Amos propheta non diceret: Non sum propheta, ubi et subdidit: Neque filius prophetae; sed armentarius ego sum, vellicans sycomoros. Quomodo autem propheta non fuit, qui de futuris tot vera praedixit? Aut quomodo propheta fuit, si de se in praesenti vera denegavit? Sed quia eadem hora qua requisitus est prophetiae sibi spiritum deesse sensit, de semetipso testimonium veraciter intulit, dicens: Non sum propheta. Qui tamen secutus adiunxit: Et nunc audi verbum Domini. Haec dicit Dominus: Uxor tua in civitate fornicabitur, et filii tui et filiae tuae in gladio cadent, et humus tua funiculo metietur; et tu in terra polluta morieris. Quibus prophetae verbis aperte ostenditur quia dum de se illa loqueretur, impletus est; et mox habere prophetandi spiritum meruit, quia se prophetam non esse humiliter agnovit. Et si prophetiae spiritus prophetis semper adesset, David regi de templi se constructione consulenti, nequaquam Nathan propheta concederet quod post paululum negaret.

4 Unde bene et in Evangelio scriptum est: Super quem videris Spiritum descendentem et manentem super eum, hic est qui baptizat. In cunctis namque fidelibus Spiritus venit, sed in solo Mediatore singulariter permanet, quia eius humanitatem nunquam deseruit, ex cuius divinitate procedit. In illo igitur manet, qui solus et omnia et semper potest. Nam fideles, qui hunc accipiunt, cum signorum dona habere semper, ut volunt, non possunt, hunc se accepisse quasi in transitus ostensione testantur. Sed cum rursum de eodem Spiritu Veritatis ore discipulis dicitur, Apud vos manebit, et in vobis erit, quid est quod divina voce Mediatoris signum haec eadem sancti Spiritus mansio declaratur, cum dicitur: Super quem videris Spiritum descendentem, et manentem super eum? Si igitur iuxta magistri vocem et in discipulis manet, quomodo iam singulare signum erit quod in Mediatore permanet? Quod tamen citius cognoscimus, si dona eiusdem Spiritus discernamus.

aliquando se eis a signorum ostensionibus subtrahit, ut eo humilius virtutes eius habeantur, quo habitae teneri non possunt.

6 Mediator autem Dei et hominum homo Christus Iesus, in cunctis eum et semper et continue habet praesentem, quia et ex illo isdem Spiritus per substantiam profertur. Recte ergo et cum in sanctis praedicatoribus maneat, in Mediatore singulariter manere perhibetur, quia in istis per gratiam manet ad aliquid, in illo autem per substantiam manet ad cuncta. Sicut enim corpus nostrum sensum tantummodo tactus agnoscit, caput autem corporis usum simul omnium quinque sensuum possidet, ut videat, audiat, gustet, odoretur, et tangat; ita membra superni capitis in quibusdam virtutibus emicant, ipsum vero caput in cunctis virtutibus flagrat. Dissimiliter ergo Spiritus in illo manet, a quo per naturam nunquam recedit. Dona vero eius quibus ad vitam tenditur, sine periculo amitti non possunt; dona autem quibus vitae sanctitas demonstratur, plerumque, ut dictum est, sine dipendio subtrahuntur. Illa ergo pro nostra eruditione tenenda sunt, haec pro alienis provectibus exquirenda. In illis nos terreat formido, ne pereant; in istis vero ad tempus aliquando sublatis consoletur humilitas, quia ad elationem mentem fortasse sublevant. Cum igitur concessa nobis virtutum signa subtrahuntur, dicamus recte: Dominus dedit, Dominus abstulit; sicut Domino placuit, ita factum est; sit nomen Domini benedictum. Tunc enim vere ostendimus quia accepta recte tenuimus, cum profecto aequanimiter ad momentum sublata toleramus.

LIBER TERTIUS

1. Beatus Iob ad mortem petitus in tentatione, ad vitam crevit ex verbere; et antiquus hostis unde se bona eius aestimavit exstinguere, inde doluit multiplicasse. Sed quia in primo certamine se succubuisse considerat, ad alia se tentationum bella restaurat, et de sancto viro mala adhuc impudenter sperat; quia bona malus credere non potest, vel experta. Ea autem quae in prima eius percussione praemissa sunt, iterum subnectuntur, cum dicitur:

2 Factum est cum quadam die venissent filii Dei et assisterent coram Domino, venissetque Satan inter eos, et staret in conspectu eius, ut diceret Dominus ad Satan: Unde venis? Qui respondens, ait: Circuivi terram, et perambulavi eam. Et dixit Dominus ad Satan: Nunquid considerasti servum meum Iob, quod non sit ei similis super terram, homo simplex et rectus, timens Deum, et recedens a malo.

3 Haec quia latius supra disseruimus, melius silendo praeterimus: ne, dum saepius discussa repetimus, tardius ad indiscussa veniamus. Quamvis hoc, quod voce Domini ad Satan dicitur: Unde venis? nequaquam aestimo quod ei, ut prius, dicatur. Cum enim ab eo certamine in quo relaxatus fuerat victus redit; et unde venit requiritur, qui unde veniat scitur; quid aliud quam infirmitas superbiae eius increpatur? ac si ei aperte divina vox dicat: Ecce ab uno et in infirma carne posito homine vinceris, qui te contra me auctorem omnium erigere conaris. Unde mox Dominus cum beati Iob bona, sicut prius diceret, haec cum victoriae triumphis enumerans adiungit:

1 Et adhuc retinens innocentiam suam.

2 Ac si aperte dicat: Tu quidem exercuisti malitiam, sed ille innocentiam non amisit; et unde te aestimasti provectum eius imminuere, inde compulsus es eius provectui deservire, quia mentis innocentiam, quam gloriose tenuit in tranquillitate, gloriosius servavit in verbere. Sequitur:

1 Tu autem commovisti me adversus eum, ut affligerem illum frustra.

2 Cum sit Deus iustus et verax, valde quaerendum est quomodo beatum Iob frustra afflixisse se indicat. Quia enim iustus est, frustra affligere non potuit; sed rursum quia verax est, aliter non potuit dixisse quam fecit. Ut ergo iusto et veraci utraque conveniant, quatenus et vera dicat, et iniusta non faciat; cognoscamus beatum Iob et iuxta aliquid frustra, et rursum iuxta aliquid non frustra percussum. Quia enim iustus et verax haec de semetipso asserit, ostendamus et verum exstitisse quod dixit, et rectum fuisse quod fecit. Necesse quippe erat, ut sanctus vir Deo soli sibique cognitus, quanta virtute polleret, ad imitandum cunctis innotesceret. Aperte namque aliis virtutis exempla non daret, si ipse sine tentatione remaneret. Actum ergo est ut et vires eius cunctis imitandas ipsa vis percussionis ostenderet, et flagella proderent quod in tranquillitate latuisset. Sed eisdem flagellis crevit virtus patientiae, atque ex dolore verberis aucta est gloria remunerationis. Ut ergo in dicto Domini veritas, rectitudo autem teneatur in facto, beatus Iob et non frustra percutitur, quia augetur meritum; et tamen frustra percutitur, quia nullum punitur admissum. Frustra enim percussus est, cui culpa nulla reciditur; et non frustra percussus est, cui virtutis meritum cumulatur.

3 Sed quid est quod dicitur: Commovisti me adversus eum? Nunquid Satanae verbis Veritas accenditur, ut in subditorum suorum cruciatibus instigetur? Quis haec de Deo senserit, quae recto etiam homine indigna perpendit? Sed quia nos ferire nisi commoti nescimus, ipsa divina percussio commotio vocatur; et ad nostra verba divina voce descenditur, ut eius factum ab homine utcunque capiatur. Illa enim vis quae absque necessitate omnia creavit, et sine despectu omnibus praesidet, et sine labore cuncta sustentat, et sine occupatione regit, etiam sine commotione corrigit, sicque humanas mentes ad ea quae voluerit flagellis format, ut in diversitatis umbram a suae incommutabilitatis luce non transeat. Sequitur: et tunc videbis quod in faciem benedicat tibi.

2 Antiquus hostis ex rebus exterioribus colligit, quod beato viro ad mentis crimen infligit. Pellem enim pro pelle dari asserit, quia saepe dum venire ictum contra faciem cernimus, manum palpebris opponimus, ut ab ictu oculos defendamus; et corpus vulneri obiicimus, ne in corpore teneriori vulneremur. Satan ergo haec consuete fieri sciens, dicit: Pellem pro pelle, et cuncta quae habet homo, dabit pro anima sua. Ac si aperte dicat: Idcirco Iob tot extra se flagella aequanimiter patitur, quia pavet, ne ipse feriatur. Cura ergo carnis est, quod damno affectuum carnalium motus non est, quia dum sibimetipsi metuit, minus suorum percussiones sentit. Unde et mox eius carnem feriendam postulat, dicens: Mitte manum tuam, et tange os eius et carnem, et tunc videbis quod in faciem benedicat tibi. Superius dixerat: Tange cuncta quae possidet, et tunc videbis quod in faciem benedicat tibi . Nunc quasi prioris propositionis oblitus, fractus de aliis alia postulat. Quod tamen recte divina dispensatione permittitur, quatenus altercator impudens vel saepe victus obmutescat. Sequitur:

1 Dixit ergo Dominus ad Satan: Ecce in manu tua est, verumtamen animam illius serva.

2 Ecce iterum permissionem verberis comitatur custodia protectionis, et electum suum divina dispensatio custodiendo deserit, deserendo custodit, alia illius prodit, alia protegit. Si enim totum Iob desereret in manu tanti adversarii, homo quid esset? In ipsa ergo iustitia permissionis miscetur quaedam libra pietatis, quatenus in uno eodemque certamine et servus humilis ex oppressione proficiat, et hostis superbiens ex permissione succumbat. Manui itaque adversarii sanctus vir traditur, sed tamen in intimis adiutoris sui manu retinetur. De illis quippe ovibus fuit, de quibus in Evangelio ipsa Veritas dicit: Non rapiet eas quisquam de manu mea; et tamen expetenti hosti dicitur: Ecce in manu tua est. Isdem ergo in manu Dei, isdem in manu est diaboli. Nam dicens: In manu tua est; cum protinus adiungit: Verumtamen animam illius serva; patenter pius adiutor innotuit, quia tenuit quem concessit, et dando non dedit, quem adversarii sui iaculis eiiciens abscondit.

3 Quid est autem hoc, quod ad Satan dicitur: Animam illius serva? Quo enim pacto ille custodit, qui custodita semper irrumpere appetit? Sed servare Satan dicitur, irrumpere non audere, sicut e contrario Patrem in oratione postulamus, dicentes: Ne nos inducas in tentationem. Neque enim in tentationem Dominus inducit, qui semper a tentatione subditos misericorditer protegit: sed tamen in tentationem quasi eius inducere est, a tentationis nos illecebra non munire. Et tunc nos in tentationis laqueum non inducit, cum tentari nos ultra quam possumus non permittit. Sicut ergo Deus inducere nos in tentationem dicitur, si nos ab adversario induci patiatur; ita adversarius servare animam dicitur cum hanc tentando superare prohibetur.

4 Egressus igitur Satan a facie Domini.

1 Percussit Iob ulcere pessimo, a planta pedis usque ad verticem eius.

2 Duobus semper modis flagella pensanda sunt, ut scilicet perpendantur, aut qualia sint, aut quanta. Nam saepe multa ex qualitate, saepe gravia ex quantitate levigantur: si videlicet cum multa sunt, non sint gravia; cum vero gravia, non sint multa. Ut igitur ostendatur quomodo per asperitatem flagelli adversarius contra sanctum virum non solum per nequitiam qualitatis, sed etiam per pondus quantitatis exarsit, ad demonstrandam qualitatem dicitur: Percussit eum ulcere pessimo; ad insinuandam vero quantitatem subiungitur: A planta pedis usque ad verticem, ut nimirum nihil in mente vacet a gloria, in cuius corpore nil vacat a poena. Sequitur:

1 Qui testa saniem radebat, sedens in sterquilinio.

2 Unde testa, nisi ex luto conficitur? Quid vero est sanies corporis, nisi lutum? Saniem ergo radere testa perhibetur, ac si aperte diceretur: Luto

tergebat lutum. Pensabat quippe vir sanctus unde sumptum fuerat quod gestabat, et fragmento vasis fictilis confractum vas fictile radebat. Quo facto patenter ostenditur corpus suum quomodo sibi sanum subdidit, quod et percussum sic despiciens curavit; quam ille mollitiem sanae suae carni concessit, qui non vestem, non digitos, sed testam etiam vulneribus admovit. Testa ergo radebat saniem, ut semetipsum et in fragmento considerans, etiam de extersione vulneris sumeret curam mentis.

3 Quia vero saepe per ea quae circa corpus sunt, animus inflatur, et per hoc quod erga nos agitur fragilitas nostri corporis ab oculis cordis amovetur (sicut nonnulli saeculares cum temporalibus dignitatibus fulciuntur, dum locis altioribus praesident, dum multorum obsequia sibi suppetere ad votum vident, fragilitatem suam intueri negligunt, et vas quod gestant fictile, quam sit velociter conterendum, obliviscentes omni modo non attendunt), beatus Iob ut considerationem fragilitatis suae etiam ex circumstantibus traheret, et ante oculos suos vim suae despectionis augeret, non quolibet in terra, quae pene ubique munda reperitur, sed in sterquilinio sedisse describitur. In sterquilinio ponebat corpus, ut ex terra sumpta quae esset carnis substantia, bene proficiens perpenderet animus. In sterquilinio ponebat corpus ut etiam ex loci fetore caperet, quod festine corpus ad fetorem rediret.

4 Sed ecce cum beatus Iob tot rerum damna sustinet, tot funeribus pignerum percussus dolet, tot vulnera tolerat; dum decurrentem saniem testa radit, dum per putredinem defluens in sterquilinio residet; intueri libet quid est, quod omnipotens Deus quos sibi tam charos in aeternum conspicit, tam vehementer quasi despiciens affligit. Ecce autem dum beati Iob vulnera cruciatusque considero, repente mentis oculos ad Ioannem reduco, et non sine gravissima admiratione perpendo, quod ille prophetiae spiritu intra matris uterum impletus, atque, ut ita dixerim, priusquam nasceretur, renatus: ille amicus sponsi, ille, quo inter natos mulierum maior nemo surrexit; ille sic propheta, ut plus etiam quam propheta, ab iniquis in carcerem mittitur, et pro puellae saltatu, capite truncatur, et vir tantae severitatis pro risu turpium moritur. Nunquidnam credimus aliquid fuisse, quod in eius vita illa sic despecta mors tergeret? Sed quando ille vel in cibo peccavit, qui locustas solummodo et mel silvestre comedit? Quid Deo vel de qualitate sui tegminis deliquit, qui camelorum pilis corpus operuit? Quid de conversatione sua offendere potuit, qui de eremo non recessit? Quid illum loquacitatis reatus polluit, qui disiunctus longe ab hominibus fuit? Quando illum vel silentii culpa attigit, qui ad se venientes tam vehementer increpavit, dicens: Genimina viperarum, quis demonstravit vobis fugere a ventura ira? Quid est ergo, quod Iob Dei testimonio praefertur, et tamen plagis usque ad sterquilinium sternitur? Quid est, quod Ioannes Dei voce laudatur, et tamen pro temulenti verbis in saltationis praemium moritur? Quid est, quod omnipotens Deus sic vehementer in hoc saeculo despicit, quos sic sublimiter ante saecula elegit: nisi hoc, quod pietati fidelium patet, quoniam idcirco sic eos premit in infimis, quia videt quomodo remuneret in summis; et foras usque ad despecta deiicit, quia intus usque ad incomprehensibilia perducit. Hinc ergo unusquisque colligat quid illic sint passuri quos reprobat, si hic sic cruciat quos amat; aut quomodo ferientur qui in iudicio arguendi sunt, si sic eorum vita premitur, qui ipso iudice teste laudantur. Sequitur:

1 Dixit autem illi uxor sua: Adhuc permanes in simplicitate tua? Benedic Deo, et morere.

2 Antiquus hostis humanum genus duobus modis tentare consuevit; ut videlicet corda stantium aut tribulationibus frangat, aut persuasionibus molliat. In utrisque ergo contra beatum Iob se vehementer exercuit. Nam prius patrifamilias intulit damna rerum, orbavit patrem morte filiorum, percussit incolumem putredine vulnerum. Sed quia putrescentem foras, sanum adhuc interius stare conspexit; et quem exterius nudum reddidit, hunc interius ditiorem fieri per exhibitam laudem conditoris invidit; callide

cogitans pensat quod contra se athleta Dei unde premitur, inde sublevatur, victusque ad subtilia tentandi argumenta convertitur. Nam antiquae artis insidias repetit; et quia scit quomodo Adam decipi soleat, ad Evam recurrit. Beatum enim Iob inter tot rerum damna, inter tot percussionum vulnera, quasi in quadam virtutum arce stare invictum vidit. In alto quippe mentem fixerat; et idcirco hanc hostiles insidiae irrumpere non valebant. Quaeritur ergo ab adversario in hanc arcem munitissimam quibus gradibus ascendatur. Vicina est autem viro mulier atque subiuncta. Cor igitur mulieris tenuit, et quasi scalam, qua ad cor viri ascendere potuisset invenit. Occupavit animum coniugis, scalam mariti. Sed nihil hac arte praevaluit, quia sanctus vir subiectam sibi mulierem, et non praepositam attendit; et recta loquens docuit, quam serpens, ut perversa loqueretur, instigavit. Dignum quippe erat ut fluxam mentem virilis censura restringeret, cum profecto et de ipso primo lapsu humani generis nosset quod docere mulier recta nesciret. Unde bene et per Paulum dicitur: Docere autem mulieri non permitto; quia nimirum aliquando cum docuit, a sapientiae aeternitate separavit. Antiquus itaque hostis ab Adam in sterquilinio perdidit, qui Adam in paradiso superavit; atque adiutricem suam mulierem dum ad verba malae persuasionis accendit, ad doctrinam sanctae eruditionis misit; et quae excitata fuerat ut perderet, erudita est ne periret. Sic sic a nostris viris fortibus hostis percutitur, ut sua ei etiam tela rapiantur. Unde enim se exaggerare aestimat dolorem vulneris, inde eis contra semetipsum suggerit arma virtutis.

3 Ex verbis autem male persuadentis coniugis vigilanter debemus aspicere quod antiquus adversarius non solum per semetipsum, sed per eos etiam qui nobis adhaerent, statum satagit nostrae mentis inclinare. Cum enim cor nostrum sua persuasione non subruit, ad hoc nimirum per linguas adhaerentium repit. Hinc enim scriptum est: A filiis tuis cave, et a domesticis tuis attende. Hinc per prophetam dicitur: Unusquisque se a proximo suo custodiat, et in omni fratre suo non habeat fiduciam. Hinc rursum scriptum est: Inimici hominis domestici eius. Callidus namque adversarius, cum a bonorum cordibus repelli se conspicit, eos qui ab illis valde diliguntur exquirit; et per eorum verba blandiens loquitur, qui plus caeteris amantur; ut dum vis amoris cor perforat, facile persuasionis eius gladius ad intimae rectitudinis munimina irrumpat. Post damna igitur rerum, post funera pignorum, post vulnera scissurasque membrorum, antiquus hostis linguam movit uxoris.

4 Et notandum quo tempore viri mentem studuit virulento sermone corrumpere. Verba enim post vulnera intulit, ut nimirum cum vis doloris ingravesceret, facile persuasionis suggestio perversa praevaleret. Sed si ipsum subtiliter tentationis eius ordinem perpendimus, qua calliditate saeviat invenimus. Movit namque prius damna substantiae, quae et extra naturam profecto essent, et extra corpus. Subtraxit filios, quod iam quidem extra naturam non esset, sed tamen adhuc aliquatenus extra proprium corpus. Ad extremum percussit et corpus. Sed quia vulneribus carnis ad mentis vulnus pervenire non valuit, etiam coniunctae mulieris linguam quaesivit. Quia enim aperto certamine superari se doluit, de ore coniugis iaculum quasi de insidiis intorsit, quae profecto diceret: Adhuc permanes in simplicitate tua? Benedic Deo, et morere. Ecce tentando omnia abstulit, ecce tentando mulierem reliquit, et sancto viro callide cuncta diripuit; sed valde callidius adiutricem suam mulierem reservavit, quae dicat: Adhuc permanes in simplicitate tua? Verba sua Eva repetit. Nam quid est dicere: Simplicitatem desere, nisi: Obedientiam, vetitum comedendo, contemne? Et quid est dicere: Benedic Deo, et morere, nisi: Transcendendo praeceptum, ultra quam es conditus, vive? Sed Adam noster fortis in sterquilinio iacuit, qui in paradiso quondam debilis stetit. Nam illico ad male suadentis verba respondit, dicens:

CAPUT IX.

VERS. 10. — Quasi una de stultis mulieribus locuta es. Si bona accipimus de manu Domini, mala quare non sustineamus? 15. Job externis rebus vacuus, intus Deo plenus. Mala quatenus vocentur flagella. — Ecce ubique hostis frangitur, ubique superatur, per cuncta tentationum argumenta succubuit, quia et illud suum familiare solatium etiam de muliere amisit. Inter haec igitur sanctum virum intueri libet, foras rebus vacuum, intrinsecus Deo plenum. Paulus cum in seipso divitias sapientiae internae conspiceret, seque ipsum exterius esse corruptibile corpus videret, ait: Habemus thesaurum istum in vasis fictilibus (II Cor. IV, 7). Ecce in beato Job vas fictile scissuras ulcerum exterius sensit; sed hic thesaurus interius integer mansit. Foras enim per vulnera crepuit, sed indeficienter interius nascens thesaurus sapientiae per verba sanctae eruditionis emanavit, dicens: Si bona accepimus de manu Domini, mala quare non sustineamus? bona scilicet, dona Dei vel temporalia vel aeterna; mala autem, flagella praesentia appellans, de quibus per prophetam Dominus dicit: Ego Dominus, et non est alter, formans lucem, et creans tenebras; faciens pacem, et creans mala (Isai. XLV, 7). Neque enim mala, quae nulla sua natura subsistunt, a Domino creantur; sed creare se mala Dominus indicat, cum res bene conditas nobis male agentibus in flagellum format, ut ea ipsa et per dolorem, quo feriunt, delinquentibus mala sint; et per naturam, qua existunt, bona. Unde et venenum mors quidem est homini, sed tamen vita serpenti. Amore enim praesentium ab auctoris nostri dilectione recessimus; et perversa mens dum dilectioni creaturae se subdidit, a creatoris societate disjunxit. Ex his ergo ab auctore ferienda erat, quae errans auctori praeposuerat, ut unde homo culpam non timuit superbus admittere, inde poenam corrigendus inveniret; et tanto citius resipisceret ad illa quae perdidit, quanto doloris plena esse conspiceret quae quaesivit. Unde et bene dicitur: Formans lucem, et creans tenebras, quia cum per flagella exterius doloris tenebrae creantur, intus per eruditionem lux mentis accenditur. Faciens pacem, et creans mala, quia tunc nobis pax cum Deo redditur, cum haec quae bene sunt condita, sed non bene concupita, in ea quae nobis mala sunt, flagella vertuntur. Per culpam quippe Deo discordes exstitimus; dignum ergo est ut ad pacem illius per flagella redeamus; ut cum unaquaeque res bene condita nobis in dolorem vertitur, correcti 80 mens ad auctoris pacem humiliter reformetur. Haec itaque flagella beatus Job mala nominat; quia salutis et tranquillitatis bonum, qua perturbatione feriant, pensat. 16. Flagelli poena memoria doni, laetitia metu flagelli temperanda. Sensus pravis, non sexus in vitio. — Sed illud valde in ejus verbis intuendum est, contra persuasionem conjugis quanta considerationis arte se colligat, dicens: Si bona accepimus de manu Domini, mala quare non sustineamus? Magna quippe consolatio tribulationis est, si cum adversa patimur, auctoris nostri ad memoriam dona revocemus. Nec frangit quod ex dolore obviat, si menti citius hoc, quod ex munere sublevat, occurrat. Hinc namque scriptum est: In die bonorum ne immemor sis malorum, et in die malorum ne immemor sis bonorum (Eccli. XI, 27). Quisquis enim dona percipit, sed donorum tempore nequaquam etiam flagella pertimescit, in elatione per laetitiam corruit. Quisquis autem flagellis atteritur, sed flagellorum tempore nequaquam se ex donis, quae eum contigit accepisse, consolatur, ab statu mentis omnimoda desperatione destruitur. Sic ergo utraque jungenda sunt, ut unum semper ex altero fulciatur; quatenus et flagelli poenam memoria temperet doni, et doni laetitiam mordeat suspicio ac formido flagelli. Sanctus igitur vir, ut oppressam mentem inter vulnera mulceat, in flagellorum doloribus blandimenta donorum pensat, dicens: Si bona accepimus de manu Domini, mala quare non sustineamus? Ubi et bene praemittit, Locuta es quasi una ex insipientibus mulieribus. Quia enim sensus pravae mulieris, non autem sexus in vitio est, nequaquam ait: Locuta es quasi una ex mulieribus, sed, ex ineptis mulieribus, ut videlicet ostendatur quia quod pravum sapit, accedentis stultitiae, non autem conditae sit naturae. Sequitur:

CAPUT X.

IBID. — In omnibus his non peccavit Job labiis suis. 17. Job non peccavit labiis, quia nec injusta dixit, nec justa reticuit. — Duobus modis labiis delinquimus, cum aut injusta dicimus, aut justa reticemus. Nam si aliquando et tacere culpa non esset, propheta non diceret: Vae mihi, quia tacui (Isai. VI, 5). Beatus igitur Job in cunctis quae egit, labiis suis minime peccavit, quia nec contra ferientem superba dixit, nec contra suadentem recta reticuit. Nec loquens ergo, nec tacens deliquit, qui et flagellanti patri gratias reddidit, et male suadenti conjugi doctrinae sapientiam ministravit. Quia enim scivit quid deberet Deo, quid proximo, scilicet patientiam conditori, sapientiam conjugi, idcirco et hanc redarguendo docuit, et illum gratias agendo laudavit. Quis autem nostrum, si unum quodlibet vulnus tantae hujus percussionis acciperet, non mox ab intimis prostratus jaceret? Ecce stratus foris vulneribus carnis, erectus intrinsecus munimine permanet mentis; et sub semetipso omne jaculum transvolare conspicit, quod in se exterius districta manu saeviens hostis figit, vigilanter deprehendit jacula, modo vulneribus contra se a facie, modo verbis quasi ex latere intorta. Et bellator noster circumvallantium certaminum fervore deprehensus, ubique patientiae suae clypeum opponit; undique venientibus spiculis obviat, et per cuncta virtutum latera circumspectam contra irruentia vulnera mentem rotat.. VERS. 11. — Igitur audientes tres amici Job omne malum quod accidisset ei, venerunt singuli de loco suo: Eliphaz Themanites, Baldad Suhites, et Sophar Naamathites. Condixerant enim sibi, ut pariter venientes visitarent eum, et consolarentur. 19. Amicorum Job recta intentio indiscretione fuscatur. — Qui ex condicto ad afflicti consolationem veniunt, et inter se et erga percussum quantae chariratis fuerint, demonstrantur. Quamvis et per hoc, quod Scriptura eos tanti viri amicos fuisse testatur, quia boni studii et rectae fuerint intentionis ostenditur; sed tamen haec ipsa illorum intentio, eis ad verba prorumpentibus, ante districti judicis oculos, suborta indiscretione, fuscatur. Sequitur:

CAPUT XII.

VERS. 12. — Cumque elevassent procul oculos suos, non cognoverunt eum; et exclamantes ploraverunt, scissisque vestibus sparserunt pulverem super caput suum in coelum. 20. Consolaturus afflictum debet moerere. At modum dolori ponat. — Quia percussi speciem plaga mutaverat, amici plorantes exclamant, vestes scindunt, capita pulvere aspergunt; ut cum mutatum eum, ad quem venerant, cernerent, ipsam etiam consolatorum speciem spontaneus dolor immutaret. Ordo quippe consolationis est, ut cum volumus afflictum quempiam a moerore suspendere, studeamus prius moerendo ejus luctui concordare. Dolentem namque non potest consolari, qui non concordat ejus dolori, quia eo ipso, quo a moerentis afflictione discrepat, minus ab illo recipitur, a quo mentis qualitate separatur. Emolliri itaque prius debet animus, ut afflicto congruat, congruens inhaereat, inhaerens trahat. Neque enim ferrum ferro conjungitur, si non utrumque exustione ignis liquetur; et durum molli non adhaeret nisi prius duritia ejus temperata mollescat, ut quasi hoc ipsum fiat, quod curatur ut teneat. Sic nec jacentes erigimus, nisi a rigore nostri status inclinemur, quia dum rectitudo stantis a jacentis situ discrepat, eum, cui condescendere negligit, nequaquam levat. Amici igitur beati Job ut afflictum a dolore suspenderent, curaverunt necessario simul dolere; et cum vulneratum illius corpus viderent, studuerunt ipsi vestes scindere; et cum immutatum conspicerent, studuerunt pulvere capita foedare; quatenus afflictus vir tanto facilius eorum verba reciperet, quanto in eis suum aliquid de afflictione cognovisset. 21. Sed inter haec sciendum est quia is qui afflictum consolari desiderat, mensuram necesse est dolori quem suscipit ponat, ne non solum dolentem non mulceat, sed intemperate dolens, afflicti animum ad pondus desperationis premat. Sic enim dolor noster moerentium dolori jungendus est, ut per temperamentum sublevet, non autem per augmentum gravet. Unde fortasse colligendum est 82 quod amici beati Job plusquam necesse fuerat, in consolatione doluerunt, qui dum percussionem cernunt, sed percussi mentem nesciunt, ita in immensum luctum versi sunt, ac si percussus vir tantae fortitudinis, in plaga corporis, etiam a corde cecidisset. Sequitur:

CAPUT XIII.

VERS. 13. — Sederuntque cum eo in terra septem diebus et septem noctibus, et nemo loquebatur ei verbum; videbant enim dolorem ejus esse vehementem. 22. Continuis ne, an intermissis septem diebus ac noctibus, amici cum Job sederint incertum. — Utrum continuis septem diebus et septem noctibus cum afflicto Job sederint, an certe diebus septem et noctibus totidem instantia ei crebrae visitationis adhaeserint, ignoramus. Saepe enim rem quamlibet tot diebus agere dicimur, quamvis non eisdem diebus ad eam continue vacemus. Saepe vero Scriptura sacra sic totum pro parte, sicut pro toto partem ponere consuevit. Pro toto enim partem loquitur, sicut Jacob familiam describens dicit: Intravit Jacob in Aegyptum cum animabus septuaginta (Gen. XLVI, 27). Quae nimirum cum animas memorat, constat quia intrantium et corpora comprehendit. Rursum totum pro parte insinuat, sicut ad monumentum Maria queritur, dicens: Tulerunt Dominum de monumento, et nescimus ubi posuerunt eum (Joan. XX, 2). Solum quippe corpus Domini quaesitura venerat, et quasi totum simul Dominum tultum deplorat. An ergo et hoc in loco totum pro parte dicatur incertum est. 23. Nec sermo sit praeceps, nec post debitum silentium indiscretus. — Sed tamen hoc, quod diu tacuerunt, et quandoque loquendo reprobati sunt, neglecte praetereundum non est. Sunt namque nonnulli qui et loqui praecipitanter incipiunt, et effrenate coepta effrenatius exsequuntur. Et sunt nonnulli qui tarde quidem loqui inchoant, sed semel inchoantes, habere modum locutionis ignorant. Amici igitur beati Job dolorem videntes, diu tacuerunt; sed tarde inchoantes, indiscrete locuti sunt, quia parcere dolenti noluerunt. Tenuerunt linguam, ne praepropere inciperet; sed incipientem semel nequaquam moderati sunt, ne se ex consolatione usque ad contumelias effrenaret. Et bona quidem intentione ad consolandum venerant; sed hoc, quod pia mens mundum Deo obtulit, locutio praecipitata vitiavit. Scriptum quippe est: Si recte offeras, non recte autem dividas, peccasti (Genes. IV, 7, sec. LXX). Recte namque offertur, cum recta intentione quid agitur. Sed recte non dividitur, si non hoc, quod die agitur, etiam subtiliter discernatur. Oblata enim recte dividere est quaelibet bona nostra studia sollicite discernendo pensare. Quod nimirum qui agere dissimulat, etiam recte offerens peccat. 25. ALLEGORICUS SENSUS. — Christi et Ecclesiae quanta sit conjunctio. — Haec juxta historiam breviter tractata percurrimus, nunc ad allegoriarum mysterium verba vertamus. Sed quia in exordio hujus operis dum de unitate capitis et corporis tractaremus, sollicita intentione praemisimus quanta in eis sit compago charitatis, quia nimirum et Dominus multa adhuc per corpus, quod nos sumus, patitur, et jam corpus ejus, id est Ecclesia, de suo capite, videlicet Domino, in coelo gloriatur; ita nunc passiones exprimi ejusdem capitis debent, ut ostendatur quam multa etiam in corpore suo sustinet. Si enim caput nostrum tormenta nostra non tangerent, nequaquam pro afflictis membris persecutori suo etiam de coelo clamaret: Saule, Saule, quid me persequeris? (Act. IX, 5.) Si cruciatus nostri ejus poenae non essent, conversus afflictusque Paulus minime diceret: Suppleo ea quae desunt passionum Christi, in carne mea (Col. I, 24). Et tamen resurrectione jam sui capitis exaltatus dicit: Qui nos conresuscitavit, et consedere fecit in coelestibus (Ephes. II, 6). Nempe hunc in terra persecutionum tormenta constrinxerant; sed poenarum suarum ponderibus pressus, ecce jam per gloriam capitis in coelo residebat. Quia ergo in omnibus unitum caput et corpus novimus, sic a percussione capitis incipimus, ut subsequenter tamen ad corporis flagella veniamus. Sed hoc, quod quadam die Satan coram Domino astitisse dicitur, quod unde veniat 84 percontatur, quod beatus Job magnis conditoris praeconiis praefertur, quia jam saepe discussimus, replicare devitamus. Si enim diu mens rebus discussis involvitur, pervenire ad indiscussa praepeditur. Ibi ergo allegoriae nunc initium ponimus, ubi post verba saepe repetita, adjunctum novi aliquid scimus. Itaque ait:

CAPUT XIV.

Commovisti me adversus eum, ut affligerem illum frustra. 26. Christus pro se frustra, pro nobis non frustra afflictus. — Si beatus Job Redemptoris nostri in passione positi speciem tenet, quomodo ad Satan a Domino dicitur: Commovisti me adversus eum? Mediator quidem Dei et hominum, homo Christus Jesus, ut culpas nostrae transgressionis exstingueret, venit mortalitatis nostrae flagella tolerare; sed quia unius cum Patre ejusdemque naturae est, quomodo per Satan motum se adversus eum Pater asserit, cum constet quod Patris Filiique concordiam nulla potestatis inaequalitas, nulla voluntatis diversitas interrumpat? Sed tamen isdem, qui Patri aequalis est per divinitatem, venit propter nos ad flagella per carnem. Quae nimirum flagella non susciperet, nisi formam damnati hominis redimendo sumpsisset. Et nisi primus homo delinqueret, secundus ad passionis probra minime veniret. Cum ergo primus homo per Satan a Domino motus est, tunc est Dominus in homine secundo commotus. Satan itaque ad hujus afflictionem, Dominum tunc commovit, quando in paradiso primum hominem a justitiae culmine inobedientiae culpa prostravit. Nisi enim Adam primum per voluntarium vitium in animae mortem traxisset, Adam secundus sine vitio in carnis mortem voluntariam non veniret. Bene ergo ei etiam de Redemptore nostro dicitur: Commovisti me adversus eum, ut affligerem illum frustra. Ac si apertius dicatur: Dum iste non sua, sed illius causa moritur, tunc me in hujus afflictionem commovisti, cum illum a me callida persuasione traxisti. De quo et bene additur, frustra. Frustra quippe afflictus est, qui et culpae ultione pressus est, et culpae contagio inquinatus non est. Frustra afflictus est, qui incarnatus, propria admissa non habuit, et tamen poenam carnalium sine culpa suscepit. Hinc est enim quod per Prophetam loquitur, dicens: Quae non rapui, tunc exsolvebam (Psal. LXVIII, 5). Alius namque ad paradisum conditus, divinae potentiae similitudinem superbe rapere voluit, sed tamen culpam hujus superbiae sine culpa Mediator exsolvit. Hinc est quod Patri quidam sapiens dicit: Cum sis justus, juste omnia disponis, eum quoque qui non debet puniri condemnas (Sap. XII, 15). 27. Qui Deus Christum innocentem poenis affecit. — Sed pensandum est quomodo justus sit, et omnia juste disponat, si eum, qui non debet puniri condemnat. Mediator etenim noster puniri pro semetipso non debuit, quia nullum culpae contagium perpetravit. Sed si ipse indebitam non susciperet, nunquam nos a debita morte liberaret. Pater ergo cum justus sit, justum puniens, omnia juste disponit; quia per hoc cuncta justificat, quod eum qui sine peccato est, pro peccatoribus damnat; ut eo electa omnia ad culmen justitiae surgerent; quo is qui est super omnia damna injustitiae nostrae sustineret. Quod ergo illic damnatus cum non debeat dicitur, hoc hic afflictus frustra memoratur. Qui tamen juxta semetipsum frustra afflictus est, juxta vero nostra acta non frustra. 85 Rubigo quippe vitii purgari non potuit, nisi igne tormenti. Venit itaque sine vitio, qui se subjiceret sponte tormento; ut debita nostrae iniquitati supplicia eo reos suos juste amitterent, quo hunc a semetipsis liberum injuste tenuissent. Frustra ergo et non frustra afflictus est, qui in se quidem admissa non habuit, sed cruore proprio reatus nostri maculam tersit.

CAPUT XV.

VERS. 4, 5. — Respondens Satan ait: Pellem pro pelle, et cuncta quae habet homo, dabit pro anima sua. Alioquin mitte manum tuam, et tange os ejus et carnem, et tunc videbis quod in faciem benedicat tibi. 28. Satan unde sciat Christum, unde de eo dubitet. In charitate ac patientia Christi aestimanda unde fallatur. Satanae loquela tum per se, tum per suos. — Malignus spiritus cum Redemptorem nostrum miraculis coruscare conspicit, clamat: Scimus qui sis, Sanctus Dei (Luc. IV, 34). Qui haec dicens, cognoscendo Dei Filium pertimescit; sed tamen vim supernae pietatis ignorans, nonnunquam dum passibilem considerat, hominem purum putat. Multos autem sub sanctitatis specie in pastorali positos loco didicerat, qui a visceribus charitatis alieni valde, pro minimo aliena damna pensabant. Hunc ergo quasi ex aliis colligens, quia subtractis multis, superari non vidit, usque ad ejus carnem, per tactum passionis sic exarsit, ut diceret: Pellem pro pelle, et cuncta quae habet homo, dabit pro anima sua. Alioquin mitte manum tuam, et tange os ejus et carnem, et tunc videbis quod in faciem benedicat tibi. Ac si aperte dicat: Moveri ex his, quae extra se sunt, negligit; sed tunc veraciter qui sit agnoscitur, si in se ipso quod doleat, experiatur. Haec per se Satan cum fieri appetit, non verbis, sed desideriis dixit. Haec per membra sua et verbis et desideriis intulit. Ipse quippe loquitur, cum juxta prophetae vocem ejus, sequaces dicunt: Mittamus lignum in panem ejus, et eradamus eum de terra viventium (Jerem. XI, 19). Lignum quippe in panem mittere, est configendo ejus corpori stipitem crucis adhibere; et vitam illius de terra viventium eradere se posse existimant, quem dum mortalem conspiciunt, finiri morte suspicantur.

CAPUT XVI.

VERS. 6. — Dixit autem Dominus ad Satan: Ecce in manu tua est, verumtamen animam illius serva. 29. Satanae membra, omnes male viventes. Satanae manus, potestas ejus. Illi se tradens Dominus, eum sibi servire cogit. — Conditorem omnium Satanae manui traditum quis vel disipiens credat? sed tamen edoctus veritate, quis nesciat quod ejusdem Satanae membra sunt omnes, qui ei perverse vivendo junguntur? Membrum quippe ejus Pilatus exstitit, qui, usque ad mortis extrema, venientem in redemptionem nostram Dominum non cognovit. Corpus ejus sacerdotum principes exstiterunt, qui Redemptorem mundi a mundo repellere, usque ad crucem persequendo, conati sunt. Cum ergo se pro nostra redemptione Dominus membrorum Satanae manibus tradidit, quid aliud quam ejusdem Satanae manum in se saevire permisit; ut unde ipse exterius occumberet, inde nos exterius interiusque liberaret? Si igitur Satanae manus, ejus potestas accipitur, ejus manum juxta carnem pertulit, cujus potestatem corporis usque ad sputa, colaphos, flagella, crucem lanceamque toleravit. Unde et Pilato, ejus videlicet corpori, ad passionem veniens dicit: Non haberes in me potestatem, nisi tibi data esset desuper (Joan. XIX, 11). Sed tamen hanc potestatem, quam contra se ei extrinsecus dederat, suis servire lucris intrinsecus 86 compellebat. Pilatus enim vel Satan, qui ejusdem Pilati caput exstiterat, sub potestate illius, super quem potestatem acceperat, tenebatur; quia et superior ipse disposuerat hoc quod inferius accedens a persecutore tolerabat; ut cum ex mala mente infidelium surgeret, utilitati tamen electorum omnium ipsa quoque crudelitas deserviret. Pie igitur disponebat intus quod semetipsum pati nequiter permittebat foris. Hinc est enim quod de illo in coena dicitur: Sciens Jesus, quia omnia dedit ei Pater in manus, et quia a Deo exivit, et ad Deum vadit, surgit a coena, et ponit vestimenta sua (Joan. XIII, 3). Ecce in manus persequentium iturus, sciebat quod in manu sua ipsos etiam persecutores acceperat. Qui enim omnia accepisse se noverat, constat quia et ipsos a quibus tenebatur tenebat; ut ipse in se ad usum pietatis intorqueret quidquid eorum contra se malitia permissa saeviret. Dicatur ergo ei: Ecce in manu tua est; quia ad feriendam carnem saeviens licentiam accepit, sed potestati illius nesciens deservivit..

VERS. 7. — Egressus igitur Satan a facie Domini, percussit Job ulcere pessimo, a planta pedis usque ad verticem. 32. Christus ab exordio mundi in suis percussus. — Nullus in hanc vitam electorum venit, qui non hujus hostis adversa sustinuit. Membra autem nostri Redemptoris exstiterunt, etiam qui ab ipso mundi exordio, dum pie vivunt, crudelia passi 87 sunt. An non hujus membrum Abel se esse perhibuit, qui ejus mortem, de quo scriptum est, Sicut agnus coram tondente se obmutescet, et non aperiet os suum (Isai. LIII, 7), non solum placens in sacrificio, sed etiam moriens tacendo signavit? Ab ipso itaque mundi exordio Redemptoris nostri corpus expugnare conatus est. A planta ergo pedis usque ad verticem vulnus intulit, quia a puris hominibus inchoans, usque ad ipsum caput Ecclesiae saeviendo pervenit. Bene autem dicitur:

CAPUT XVIII.

VERS. 8. — Testa saniem radebat. 33. Testa, hoc est, carne sua e terra sumpta, saniem peccati rasit. — Quid enim aliud in manu Domini testa est, nisi caro ex nostrae substantiae luto sumpta? Etenim testa igne solidatur. Caro autem Domini eo ex passione sua robustior exstitit, quo per infirmitatem moriens, a morte sine infirmitate surrexit. Unde recte etiam per Prophetam dicitur: Exaruit velut testa virtus mea (Psal. XXI, 16). Sicut testa enim ejus virtus exaruit, qui susceptae carnis infirmitatem passionis suae igne roboravit. Quid vero per saniem, nisi peccatum, debet intelligi? Per carnem quippe et sanguinem solent carnis peccata designari. Unde per Psalmistam dicitur: Libera me de sanguinibus (Psal. L, 16). Sanies itaque putredo est sanguinis. Quid ergo accipimus saniem, nisi peccata carnis ex longa vetustate pejora? Vulnus itaque in saniem vertitur, cum neglecta culpa usu deterius gravatur. Mediator itaque Dei et hominum homo Christus Jesus (I Tim. II, 5) corpus suum manibus persequentium tradens, saniem testa rasit, quia peccatum carne delevit. Venit enim, sicut scriptum est, in similitudinem carnis peccati, ut de peccato damnaret peccatum (Rom. VIII, 3). Dumque hosti objicit innocentiam carnis suae, extersit contagia carnis nostrae; et ex qua nos captivos inimicus tenuit, per illam nos liberos expiavit; quia quam nos instrumentum fecimus culpae, haec nobis per Mediatorem versa est in arma justitiae. Testa ergo sanies raditur, cum carne culpa superatur. Bene autem subditur:

CAPUT XIX.

IBID. — Sedens in sterquilinio. 34. In sterquilinio sedit, quia infirma mundi elegit. — Non in foro, in quo lex perstrepit; non in aedificio, quod se culmine in alta sustollit; sed in sterquilinio residet, quia videlicet Redemptor humani generis ad carnem veniens, attestante Paulo, Infirma mundi elegit, ut confunderet fortia (I Cor. I, 27). An non quasi ruentibus aedificiis in sterquilinio residet, qui relictis Judaeis superbientibus, in ea quam dudum abjecerat gentilitate requiescit? Extra habitaculum reperitur in vulnere, qui in eo quod Judaeam adversantem pertulit, passionis dolorem a gente propria despectus sensit; Joanne attestante, qui ait: In propria venit, et sui eum non receperunt (Joan. I, 11). Sed quomodo sedens in sterquilinio conquiescat, haec eadem de semetipsa Veritas dicat: Ait enim: Gaudium erit in coelo super uno peccatore poenitentiam agente, quam super nonaginta novem justis, qui non indigent poenitentia (Luc. XV, 10). Ecce dolens in sterquilinio sedet, qui post perpetratas culpas libenter corda poenitentium possidet. An non quasi quoddam sterquilinium sunt corda poenitentium, qui dum mala sua flendo considerant, quasi ante se stercora, sese abjiciendo coacervant? Percussus ergo Job montem non petiit, sed in sterquilinio resedit, quia ad passionem Redemptor veniens, alta superborum corda deseruit, et in afflictorum humilitate requievit. 88 Quod tamen de se et prius quam incarnaretur, indicavit, cum per Prophetam dixit: Ad quem respiciam, nisi ad humilem et quietum et trementem sermones meos? (Isai. LVI, 2, sec.

LXX.) 35. Christus in suis, et ab infidelibus, et a fidelibus carnalibus multa patitur. — Quis vero consideret, is qui tot pia hominibus intulit, quot ab hominibus perversa toleravit? Quis consideret, quanta nunc usque tolerat, etiam cum de coelo super corda fidelium regnat? Ipse quippe quotidie patitur omne quod a reprobis ejus electi lacerantur. Et quamvis caput hujus corporis, quod videlicet nos sumus, jam sese super omnia liberum exerit, reproborum tamen vulnera adhuc per suum, quod deorsum retinet, corpus sentit. Sed quid ista de infidelibus dicimus, cum in ipsa quoque Ecclesia multos carnalium, pravis moribus contra Redemptoris vitam pugnare videamus? Sunt namque nonnulli qui hunc, quia gladiis non possunt, perversis actibus insequuntur; quia dum sibi in Ecclesia vident deesse quod ambiunt, hostes bonorum fiunt; et non solum pravae semetipsos actioni inserunt, sed etiam justorum rectitudinem inflectere ad perversa moliuntur. Aeterna quippe intueri negligunt, et appetitui temporalium mentis pusillanimitate succumbunt; tantoque ab aeternis altius corruunt, quanto bona temporalia esse quasi sola suspicantur. His justorum simplicitas displicet, et cum occasionem perturbationis inveniunt, suam eos arripere duplicitatem suadent. Unde hoc quoque congruit apte quod subditur:

CAPUT XX.

VERS. 9. — Dixit autem illi uxor sua: Adhuc permanens in simplicitate tua? Benedic Deo et morere. 36. Uxor Job male suadens, figura est carnalium in Ecclesiae sinu positorum. — Cujus enim speciem male suadens mulier tenuit, nisi quorumlibet carnalium in Ecclesiae sinu positorum, qui quo verbis professae fidei intus sunt, eo bonos incorrectis suis moribus pejus premunt. Nam minus fortasse nocuissent, si non eos sancta Ecclesia introrsus admittens usque ad fidei cubile reciperet, quos dum per professam fidem recipit, sibi procul dubio pene inevitabiles facit. Hinc est, quod premente turba, una Redemptorem nostrum mulier tetigit;

unde et isdem Redemptor noster protinus dicit: Quis me tetigit? Cui cum discipuli responderent: Turbae te comprimunt et affligunt, et dicis: Quis me tetigit? illico adjunxit: Tetigit me aliquis, nam et ego novi virtutem de me exisse (Luc. VIII, 44, 45, 46). Sed electi quique cum prava intus a carnalibus tolerant, quantae se formam rectitudinis ostendant, discamus ex verbis vulnerati et incolumis, sedentis et erecti, qui ait:

CAPUT XXI.

VERS. 10. — Locuta es quasi una ex stultis mulieribus. Si bona accepimus de manu Domini, mala quare non sustineamus? 39. Sancti ferientibus opponunt scutum patientiae, male suadentibus jacula intorquent doctrinae. — Sancti viri tribulationum bello deprehensi, cum uno eodemque tempore alios ferientes, alios suadentes ferunt, illis opponunt scutum patientiae, istis intorquent jacula doctrinae; atque ad utrumque pugnandi modum mira virtutis arte se erigunt; quatenus et perversa intus sapienter doceant, et foras fortiter adversa contemnant; hos docentes corrigant, illos tolerantes premant. Insurgentes namque hostes patiendo despiciunt, infirmantes vero cives compatiendo ad salutem reducunt: illis resistunt, ne et alios subtrahant; istis metuunt, ne vitam rectitudinis funditus perdant.. IBID. ET VERS. 11. — In omnibus his non peccavit Job labiis suis; neque stultum aliquid contra Deum locutus est. Igitur audientes tres amici Job omne malum, quod accidisset ei, venerunt singuli de loco suo: Eliphaz Themanites, et Baldad Suhites, et Sophar Naamathites. 42. In amicis Job adumbrati haeretici. — In praefatione hujus operis diximus, quia amici beati Job, etsi bona ad eum intentione conveniunt, haereticorum tamen idcirco speciem tenent, quia ad culpam indiscrete loquendo dilabuntur. 91 Unde et illis ab eodem beato Job dicitur: Disputare cum Deo cupio, prius vos ostendens fabricatores mendacii, et cultores perversorum dogmatum. [Rec. XIII]. Sancta itaque Ecclesia omni hoc tempore peregrinationis suae in afflictione constituta, cum vulnera sustinet, cum membrorum suorum lapsus dolet, insuper alios sub Christi nomine tolerat hostes Christi. Ad augmentum namque doloris ejus, etiam haeretici in contentione conveniunt, eamque quasi quibusdam jaculis, irrationabilibus verbis transfigunt. 43. Locus unde venerunt superbia. — Bene autem dicitur: Venerunt de loco suo. Haereticorum quippe locus ipsa superbia est; quia nisi prius in corde intumescerent, ad pravae assertionis certamina non venirent. Ita namque malorum locus superbia, sicut est e contra humilitas locus bonorum. De quo per Salomonem dicitur: Si spiritus potestatem habentis ascenderit super te, locum tuum ne dimiseris (Ephes. X, 4). Ac si aperte dicat: Si tentatoris spiritum contra te in aliquo praevalere consideras, humilitatem poenitentiae non relinquas. Qui quia locum nostrum humilitatem poenitentiae dixerit, verbis sequentibus ostendit, dicens: Quia curatio cessare faciet peccata maxima (Ibid.). Quid est enim aliud humilitas lamenti, nisi medicina peccati? Haeretici igitur de loco suo veniunt, quia contra sanctam Ecclesiam ex superbia moventur. 44. Amicorum Job nomina actionem signant haereticorum. — Quorum perversa quoque actio ex ipsa suorum nominum interpretatione colligitur. Dicuntur enim, Eliphaz, Baldad, Sophar; et, sicut superius diximus, Eliphaz interpretatus dicitur, Dei contemptus. Nisi enim Deum contemnerent, nequaquam de eo perversa sentirent. Baldad autem interpretatur, vetustas sola. Dum enim vere vinci refugiunt, et perverso studio esse victores quaerunt, novae vitae conversationem negligunt; et ex sola vetustate est quod intendunt, Sophar vero speculam dissipans. Hi etenim, qui in sancta Ecclesia siti sunt, Redemptoris sui mysteria fide vera humiliter contemplantur; sed dum haeretici cum falsis allegationibus veniunt, speculam dissipant, quia eorum mentes, quos ad se attrahunt, ab intentione rectae contemplationis inclinant.. IBID. — Scissisque vestibus, sparserunt pulverem super caput suum in coelum. 48. Multas in partes scinduntur. — Sicut vestimenta Ecclesiae cunctos fideles accipimus; unde et per prophetam dicitur: Omnibus his velut ornamento vestieris; ita haereticorum vestes sunt omnes, qui eis concorditer inhaerentes, illorum erroribus involvuntur. Habent vero haeretici hoc proprium, quod in eo gradu in quo de Ecclesia exeunt, diu stare non possunt; sed ad deteriora quotidie ruunt, et sentiendo pejora, in multis se partibus scindunt, atque a semetipsis plerumque longius confusionis suae altercatione dividuntur. Quia ergo hos quos suae perfidiae adjungunt, 93 adhuc in multa divisione dilaniant, dicatur recte quod amici qui veniunt vestes rumpant. Ruptis autem vestibus corpus ostenditur, quia saepe scissis sequacibus, malitia eorum cogitationis aperitur; ut discordia dolos patefaciat, quos gravis prius concordiae culpa claudebat. 49. Terrena de verbis coelestibus sapiunt. — Pulverem vero in coelum super capita spargunt. Quid per pulverem, nisi terrena intelligentia? quid per caput, nisi hoc, quod principale nostrum est, mens videlicet, designatur? Quid per coelum, nisi praeceptum supernae locutionis exprimitur? Pulverem ergo super caput in coelum spargere, est saeculari intellectu mentem corrumpere, et de verbis coelestibus terrena sentire. Divina autem verba plus discutiunt plerumque, quam capiunt. Super capita igitur pulvorem spargunt, quia in praeceptis Dei per terrenam intelligentiam ultra suarum mentium vires enituntur.

CAPUT XXVI.

Vers. 13. — Sederuntque cum eo in terra septem diebus et septem noctibus. 50. Per fictam humilitatem persuadere tentant superba. — In die quae videmus agnoscimus; in nocte autem, aut caecitate nil cernimus, aut dubietate caligamus. Per diem itaque intelligentia, per noctem vero ignorantia designatur. Septenario autem numero summa universitatis exprimitur. Unde et non amplius, quam diebus septem, omne hoc tempus transitorium consummatur. Quid est ergo, quod amici beati Job consedere ei septem diebus et septem noctibus referuntur, nisi quod haeretici, vel in his in quibus verum lumen intelligunt, vel in his in quibus ignorantiae tenebras patiuntur, quasi infirmanti sanctae Ecclesiae se condescendere simulant, eique sub blandimentorum specie, dolos deceptionis parant? Et quamvis vel in his quae intelligunt, vel in his quae intelligere non possunt, elationis typo turgidi, magnos se apud semetipsos existimant, nonnunquam tamen sanctae Ecclesiae specie tenus inclinant; et dum verba molliunt, virus infundunt. In terra ergo consedere, est aliquid de imagine humilitatis ostendere; ut dum humilia exhibent, persuadeant superba quae docent.. VERS. 8. — Quia testa saniem radebat. 58. Quia testa saniem radere est se judicando fragilitatemque suam contemplando peccatum purgare. — Quid enim per testam, nisi vigor districtionis; quid per saniem, nisi fluxus illicitae cogitationis accipitur? Percussi ergo testa saniem radimus, cum post pollutiones cogitationis illicitae, nosmetipsos aspere dijudicando mundamus. Potest etiam testa fragilitas mortalitatis intelligi. Testa ergo saniem mundare, est mortalitatis cursum fragilitatemque pensare, et putredinem miserae delectationis abstergere. Nam dum quisque considerat, quam citius caro ad pulverem redeat, festine superat hoc, quod se de carne intus turpiter impugnat. Cum ergo ex tentatione prava mentem cogitatio influit, quasi ex vulnere sanies decurrit. Sed citius sanies tergitur, si in consideratione nostra fragilitas quasi in manu testa teneatur. 59. Cogitationes pravae non sunt spernendae. — Neque enim parvi pendenda sunt quae, quamvis usque ad effectum non pertrahunt, tamen illicite in mente versantur. Hinc est quod quasi a vulneribus Redemptor noster saniem radere venerat, cum dicebat: Audistis quia dictum est antiquis: Non moechaberis. Ego autem dico vobis quod si quis viderit mulierem ad concupiscendum eam, jam moechatus est eam in corde suo (Matth. V, 27). Sanies itaque tergitur, cum culpa non solum ab opere, sed etiam a cogitatione resecatur. Hinc est, quod Jerobaal cum a paleis frumenta excuteret, angelum vidit, ad cujus imperium protinus haedum coxit, quem super petram posuit, et jus carnium desuper effudit; quae angelus virga tetigit, eaque ignis exiens de petra consumpsit (Jud. VI, 11, 12, 19). Quid est enim frumentum virga caedere, nisi rectitudine judicii, a vitiorum paleis virtutum grana separare? Sed haec agentibus angelus apparet, quia tanto magis Dominus interiora denuntiat, quanto se studiosius homines ab exterioribus purgant. Qui occidi haedum praecipit, id est, omnem appetitum nostrae carnis immolari, carnesque super petram poni, et jus carnium desuper fundi. Quem alium signat petra, nisi eum, de quo per Paulum dicitur: Petra autem erat Christus (I Cor. X, 4). Carnes ergo super petram ponimus, cum corpus nostrum in Christi imitatione cruciamus. Jus etiam carnium desuper fundit, qui in conversatione Christi ipsas a se etiam carnales cogitationes exinanit. Quasi enim jus ex carne liquida in petram funditur, quando mens et a cogitationum carnalium fluxu vacuatur. Quae tamen mox angelus 97 virga tangit, quia intentionem nostram nequaquam potestas divini adjutorii deserit. De petra autem ignis exit, et jus carnesque consumit, quia afflatus a Redemptore spiritus, tanta cor nostrum flamma compunctionis concremat, ut omne quod in eo est illicitum et operis et cogitationis exurat. Quod ergo illic est jus in petram fundere, hoc est hic saniem testa mundare. Perfecta enim mens solerter invigilat, ut non solum perversa agere renuat, sed omne etiam quod in se per cogitationes turpiter liquatur tergat. Sed saepe de ipsa victoria bellum oritur, ut cum immunda cogitatio vincitur, victoris animus elatione pulsetur. Sic ergo mentem necesse est per munditiam erigi, ut tamen sollicite debeat in humilitate substerni. Unde et cum de sancto viro diceretur, Testa saniem radebat, protinus apte subjungitur,

CAPUT XXXI.

IBID. — Sedens in sterquilinio. 60. Tentationis victor humilitatem servet. Elatio parva agentium, et magna de se sentientium. Elatio iniquorum, ubi

alii peccant in quibus ipsi non peccent. — In sterquilinio quippe sedere, est vilia de se quempiam et abjecta sentire. In sterquilinio nobis sedere, est ad ea quae illicite gessimus mentis oculos poenitendo reducere; ut cum ante nos peccatorum stercora cernimus, omne quod in animo de elatione surgit inclinemus. In sterquilinio sedet, qui infirmitatem suam sollicitus respicit, et sese de bonis, quae per gratiam perceperit, non extollit. An non apud se in sterquilinio Abraham sederat, qui dicebat: Loquar ad Dominum meum, cum sim pulvis et cinis (Genes. XVIII, 27)? Aperte enim cernimus, in quo se apud se loco posuerat, qui pulverem se ac cinerem, etiam dum cum Deo loqueretur, aestimabat. Si igitur ita se despicit, qui usque ad honorem divinae collocutionis ascendit, sollicita intentione pensandum est qua poena illi feriendi sunt qui et ad summa non proficiunt, et tamen de minimis extolluntur. Nam sunt nonnulli, qui cum parva agunt, de semetipsis magna sentiunt: in altum mentem sublevant, et praeire se caeteros virtutum meritis putant. Hi nimirum apud se introrsus humilitatis sterquilinium deserunt, et elationis fastigia ascendunt; illum videlicet imitantes, qui primus se apud se extulit, sed elevando prostravit; illum imitantes, qui accepta conditionis dignitate contentus non fuit, dicens: In coelum conscendam, super astra coeli exaltabo solium meum (Isai. XIV, 13). Unde et ei male conjuncta Babylonia, id est, confusa multitudo peccantium, dicit: Sedeo regina, et vidua non sum (Isai. XLVII, 8, sec. LXX.) Quisquis ergo introrsus intumescit, in altum se apud semetipsum posuit. Sed eo se gravius in infimis deprimit, quo de se infima veraciter sentire contemnit. Sunt vero nonnulli qui nihil quidem virtutis agere student, sed tamen cum alios peccare conspiciunt, justos se in eorum comparatione suspicantur. Neque enim corda omnium una vel similis culpa transfigit. Hunc namque superbia illaqueat, illum forsitan ira supplantat, hunc autem avaritia cruciat, illum vero luxuria inflammat. Et plerumque contingit ut is quem superbia deprimit, alium respiciat qualiter ira succendat; et quia se ira non citius instigat, meliorem iracundo jam reputat, atque apud semetipsum quasi de justitia extollitur, quia pensare negligit vitium quo gravius tenetur. Plerumque contingit ut is quem avaritia sauciat, alium in luxuriae voragine mersum cernat; et quia se a pollutione carnali alienum respicit, 98 quibus ipse sordibus spiritalis vitii intrinsecus polluitur, non attendit; dumque in alio pensat malum quod ipse non habet, in se negligit considerare quod habet: sicque fit, ut dum ad aliena dijudicanda mens ducitur, proprii judicii lumine privetur; et eo durius contra aliena superbiat, quo sua negligentius ignorat.. VERS. 10. — Locuta es quasi una ex stultis mulieribus. Si bona accepimus de manu Domini, mala quare non sustineamus? 64. Contra aspera aut blanda quomodo resistendum. — Dignum quippe est ut sancta mens spiritali correptione comprimat, quidquid apud se carnale insolenter immurmurat; ne caro aut loquens aspera, ad impatientiam illam pertrahat, aut loquens blanda, ad libidinis fluxa dissolvat. Censura igitur virilis, illicitae cogitationis suggestionem redarguens, dissolutam turpitudinis mollitiem reprimat, dicens: Locuta es quasi una ex stultis mulieribus. Et rursum consideratio munerum 99 cogitationis asperae impatientiam refrenet, dicens: Si bona accepimus de manu Domini, mala quare non sustineamus? Quisquis autem subigere vitia appetit, et ad aeterna internae retributionis culmina, verae intentionis gressibus tendit, quo magis vallari se vitiorum bello undique conspicit, eo se virtutum armis robustius accingit; et tanto minus jacula metuit, quanto contra haec venientia fortiter pectus munit. 65. Vitia se sub virtutum specie tegunt. — Sed plerumque dum contra hoc tentationum bellum fulciri magnis virtutibus nitimur, quaedam se nobis vitia sub specie virtutum tegunt, et quasi blanda ad nos facie veniunt; sed cujus adversitatis sint, discussa sentiuntur. Unde et amici beati Job quasi pro consolatione conveniunt, sed in contumelias erumpunt; quia insidiantia vitia virtutum faciem sumunt, sed hostili invectione nos feriunt. Nam saepe immoderata ira, justitia; et saepe dissoluta remissio, misericordia vult videri. Saepe incautus timor humilitas; saepe effrenata superbia appetit libertas apparere. Ad consolandum ergo amici veniunt, sed ad increpationis verba dilabuntur; quia nimirum vitia virtutum specie palliata, blanda quidem superficie inchoant, sed aspera nos contrarietate perturbant. Bene autem dicitur:

CAPUT XXXIV.

VERS. 11. — Condixerant enim sibi, ut pariter venientes visitarent eum. 66. Foedus adversum nos ineunt. — Vitia quippe sibi sub virtutum praetextu condicunt, quia sunt quaedam quae adversum nos inter se quadam convenientia conjunguntur, sicut superbia et ira, remissio et timor. Vicina namque est ira superbiae, remissio timori. Condicendo ergo veniunt, quae contra nos sibi ex quadam pravitatis cognatione sociantur. Sed si aerumnam nostrae captivitatis agnoscimus, si ex amore aeternae patriae in intimis dolemus, vitia, quae male laetis surrepunt, bene tristibus praevalere non possunt. Unde et bene subditur:

CAPUT XXXV.

VERS. 12. — Cumque elevassent procul oculos suos, non agnoverunt eum. 67. Afflictio fugat vitia. — Afflictos enim nos vitia minime cognoscunt, quia triste cor mox ut pulsaverint, reprobata resiliunt; et quae nos laetos quasi noverant, quia penetrabant, moerentes cognoscere nequeunt, quia ipso nostro rigore franguntur. Sed antiquus hostis, quo in eis fortiter deprehendi se conspicit, eo illa sub virtutum imagine altius abscondit. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT XXXVI.

IBID. — Et exclamantes ploraverunt, scissisque vestibus sparserunt pulverem super caput suum in coelum, et sederunt cum eo in terra septem diebus et septem noctibus. 68. Nisi sub virtutum specie illudant. — Signatur enim pietas per ploratum, discretio per scissionem vestium, affectus operum per 100 pulverem capitum, humilitas per sessionem. Aliquando enim pium quid hostis insidians simulat, ut ad crudelitatis terminum deducat; sicut est, cum plecti per disciplinam culpam prohibet, quatenus quae hic non reprimitur, gehennae igne feriatur. Aliquando discretionis imaginem oculis objicit, et ad indiscretionis laqueos perducit; sicut est cum impulsu ejus pro infirmitate nobis plus alimentorum quasi discrete concedimus, sed indiscrete contra nos bella carnis excitamus. Aliquando affectum simulat bonorum operum, sed per hunc inquietudinem irrogat laborum; sicut est cum quis quiescere non valet, et quasi de otio judicari timet. Aliquando imaginem humilitatis ostentat, ut affectum utilitatis subtrahat; sicut est cum quosdam, plusquam sunt infirmos atque inutiles sibimetipsis asserit, ut dum se nimis indignos considerant, res in quibus prodesse proximis poterant, ministrare pertimescant. 69. Compunctio contra vitia munit. — Sed haec vitia quae sub virtutum specie antiquus hostis occultat, valde subtiliter manus compunctionis examinat. Qui enim veraciter intus dolet, quae agenda foras, quae non agenda sint, fortiter praevidet. Si enim nos virtus compunctionis in intimis afficit, omnis strepitus pravae suggestionis obmutescit. Unde et sequitur:

CAPUT XXXVII.

VERS. 13. — Et nemo loquebatur ei verbum: videbant enim dolorem esse vehementem. 70. Qui vitia ad virtutis usum possunt famulari. — Si enim cor veraciter dolet, linguam contra nos vitia non habent. Nam cum plene vita rectitudinis quaeritur, supervacua suggestio pravitatis obturatur. Saepe autem si forti nos studio contra vitiorum incentiva stringimus, ipsa etiam vitia ad usum virtutis immutamus. Nonnullos namque ira possidet: sed hanc, dum rationi subjiciunt, in sancti zeli ministerium vertunt. Nonnullos superbia erigit; sed dum divinae formidini animum inclinant, hanc ad defensionem justitiae in vocem liberae auctoritatis immutant. Nonnullos fortitudo carnis illecebrat; sed dum exercendis piis operibus corpus subdunt, unde iniquitatis stimulum passi sunt, inde pietatis lucra mercantur. Unde et bene isdem beatus Job post multa certamina hostiam pro amicis immolat. Quos enim per contentionem diu hostes pertulit, quandoque per sacrificium cives reddit; quia dum vitiosas quasque cogitationes subigendo in virtutes vertimus, tentationum adversa studia per intentionis hostiam, quasi ad amica corda permutamus. Haec nos in tribus voluminibus tripliciter disseruisse sufficiat. In ipso namque operis hujus exordio velut in molem nasciturae arboris, linguae radicem fiximus, ut expositionis ramos postmodum, prout singula expetunt loca, producamus.

LIBER QUARTUS.

In quo Gregorius paucis praefatus Scripturae litteram secum aliquando pugnare, et imprecationes Job sicut Jeremiae ac David, secundum id quod sonant, sine absurditate intelligi non posse, verba Job ab initio capitis tertii, ad versum vigesimum historice, mystice ac moraliter exponit.

CAPUT PRIMUM.

PRAEFATIO. 101 Scripturae littera aliquando sibi contradicit. Scripturae sensus ab humilibus assiduitate legendi penetratur. — Qui textum considerat, et sensum sacrae locutionis ignorat, non tam se eruditione instruit, quam ambiguitate confundit, quia nonnunquam sibi litterae verba contradicunt; sed dum a semetipsis per cotrarietatem dissident, lectorem ad intelligentiam veritatis mittunt. Quid enim est quod Salomon ait: Melius est comedere et bibere (Eccle. II, 24); et non longe post subjicit: Melius est ire ad domum luctus, quam ad domum convivii (Eccle. VII, 3)? Cur luctum convivio praetulit, qui prius esum potumque laudavit? Si enim per electionem bonum est comedere et bibere, procul dubio esse melius debet ad domum gaudii, quam ad domum lamenti properare. Hinc est quod iterum dicit: Laetare, juvenis, in adolescentia tua (Eccle. XI, 9). Et paulo post subjicit: Adolescentia enim et voluptas vana sunt (Ibid., 10). Quid est hoc quod vel prius reprehendenda praecipit, vel post praecepta reprehendit, nisi quod ipsis litterae verbis innuit, ut qui difficultatem exterius patitur, veritatis intelligentiam consideret, quam sequatur? quae nimirum veritatis intelligentia cum per cordis humilitatem quaeritur, legendi assiduitate penetratur. Sicut enim ignotorum hominum facies cernimus, et corda nescimus, sed si familiari eis locutione conjungimur, usu colloquii eorum etiam cogitationes indagamus; ita cum in sacro eloquio sola historia aspicitur, nihil aliud quam facies videtur; sed si huic assiduo usu conjungimur, ejus nimirum mentem quasi ex collocutionis familiaritate penetramus. Dum enim alia ex aliis colligimus, facile in ejus verbis agnoscimus, aliud esse quod intimant, aliud quod sonant. Tanto autem quisque notitiae illius extraneus redditur, quanto in sola ejus superficie ligatur.

CAPUT II.

Imprecationes Job intelligi ad litteram sine absurditate nequeunt. — Ecce enim quod beatus Job diei suo maledixisse describitur dicens: Pereat dies in qua natus sum, et nox in qua dictum est: Conceptus est homo, si superficie tenus attenditur, quid his verbis reprehensibilius invenitur? Quis autem nesciat, diem in quo natus est nequaquam tunc stare potuisse? Modus quippe est temporis, ut statum non habeat mansionis. Quia enim per ventura tendit ad esse, semper ex praeteritis festinat non esse. Cur ergo vir tantus malediceret rei, quam nequaquam subsistere non ignoraret? Sed fortasse aliquis dicat, quod ex eo pondus virtutis ejus aspicitur, quia tribulatione commotus, illi rei maledictum 102 irrogat quae constat quod minime subsistat. Sed hoc citius perspecta ratio destruit, quia si subsistebat res cui malediceret, perniciosum maledictum intulit: si autem non subsistebat, otiosum. Quisquis vero ejus spiritu plenus est, qui ait: Omne verbum otiosum, quod locuti fuerint homines, rationem reddent de eo in die judicii (Matth. XII, 36), ita otiosa admittere, sicut etiam perniciosa formidat. Cui adhuc sententiae adjungitur: Dies ille vertatur in tenebras, non requirat eum Deus desuper, et non sit in recordatione, et non illustret lumine: obscurent eum tenebrae et umbra mortis, occupet eum caligo, et involvatur amaritudine. Noctem illam tenebrosus turbo possideat, sit nox illa solitaria, nec laude digna; exspectet lucem, et non videat, nec ortum surgentis aurorae. Dies qui elapsus cursu temporis scitur, cur verti in tenebras dicitur? Et cum constaret quia non subsisteret, cur optatur ut eum umbra mortis obscuret; vel quae caligo occupat, quae implicatio amaritudinis involvit; aut quis noctem tenebrosus turbo possidet, quam nullus status tenet? Aut quomodo optatur fieri solitaria, quae transeundo jam fuerat nulla? Aut lucem quomodo exspectat, quae et sensu caret, et in proprio statu non permanet? Quibus adhuc verbis subjicit:

CAPUT III.

Quare non in vulva mortuus sum, egressus ex utero non statim perii? Quare exceptus genibus? Cur lactatus uberibus? Nunc enim dormiens silerem, et somno meo requiescerem. Argumenti propositi confirmatio. Qui liberarentur homines ab originali peccato, ante institutum baptismum. — Nunquid si egressus ex utero statim periisset, retributionis meritum ex hac ipsa perditione conciperet? Nunquid aeterna requie abortivi perfruuntur? Quisquis enim regenerationis unda non solvitur, reatu primi vinculi ligatus tenetur. Quod vero (De cons., dist. 4, c, 5, Quod autem) apud nos valet aqua baptismatis, hoc egit apud veteres vel pro parvulis sola fides, vel pro majoribus virtus sacrificii, vel pro his qui ex Abrahae stirpe prodierant, mysterium circumcisionis. Nam quia unusquisque cum primi parentis culpa concipitur, Propheta testatur, dicens: Ecce enim in iniquitatibus conceptus sum (Psal. L, 7). Et quia is quem salutis unda non diluit, originalis culpae supplicia non amittit, aperte per semetipsam Veritas perhibet, dicens: Nisi quis renatus fuerit ex aqua et Spiritu sancto, non habebit vitam aeternam (Joan. III, 5). Quid est ergo quod in vulva se mortuum fuisse desiderat, et potuisse se quiescere ejusdem mortis beneficiis sperat, dum constet quod nequaquam eum requies vitae susciperet, si a reatu illum originalis culpae 103 nequaquam divinae cognitionis sacramenta liberassent? Qui adhuc cum quibus quiescere potuisset, adjungit dicens: Cum regibus et consulibus terrae, qui aedificant sibi solitudines. Quis ignoret quod reges terrae ac consules eo a solitudine longe sunt, quo innumeris obsequentium cuncis constipantur? Vel quam difficile hi ad requiem tendunt, qui tam duris rationum multiplicium nexibus astringuntur? Scriptura attestante, quae ait: Judicium durissimum in his qui praesunt fiet (Sap. VI, 6). Unde in Evangelio Veritas dicit: Cui multum datum est, multum quaeretur ab eo (Luc. XII, 48). Qui adhuc quos in eadem requie socios habuisset, insinuat dicens: Aut cum principibus, qui possident aurum, et replent domos suas argento. Rarum valde est ut qui aurum possident, ad requiem tendant, dum per semetipsam Veritas dicat: Difficile, qui pecunias habent, intrabunt in regnum coelorum (Matth. XIX, 24). Nam qui hic multiplicandis divitiis inhiant, quae alterius vitae gaudia sperant? Quod tamen, ut Redemptor noster valde rarum, et ex solo divino miraculo evenire posse monstraret: Apud homines, inquit, hoc impossibile est, apud Deum autem possibilia omnia sunt. Quia igitur verba haec in superficie a ratione discordant, ipsa jam littera indicat, quod in eis sanctus vir juxta litteram nihil dicat.

CAPUT IV.

Nec David nec Jeremiae imprecationes ad litteram accipiendae. — Sed si prius in sacro eloquio alia maledicta discutimus, hoc quod beati Job ore prolatum est, subtilius indagamus. Quid est enim, quod David, qui retribuentibus sibi mala non reddidit, cum Saul et Jonathas bello occumberent, Gelboe montibus maledicit, dicens: Montes Gelboe, nec ros nec pluvia veniat super vos, neque sint agri primitiarum, quia ibi abjectus est clypeus Saul, quasi non esset unctus oleo (II Reg. I, 21)? Quid est quod Jeremias, cum praedicationem suam cerneret audientium difficultate praepediri, maledicit dicens: Maledictus vir qui annuntiavit patri meo, dicens: Natus est tibi puer masculus (Jerem. XX, 15)? Quid ergo montes Gelboe, Saul moriente deliquerunt, quatenus in eis nec ros nec pluvia caderet, et ab omni eos viriditatis germine sententiae sermo siccaret? Sed quia Gelboe interpretatur decursus, per Saul autem unctum et mortuum, mors nostri Mediatoris exprimitur; non immerito per Gelboe montes superba Judaeorum corda signantur, quae dum in hujus mundi desideriis defluunt, in Christi, id est uncti, se morte miscuerunt. Et quia in eis unctus rex corporaliter moritur, ipsi ab omni gratiae rore siccantur. De quibus et bene dicitur: Ut agri primitiarum esse non possint. Superbae quippe Hebraeorum mentes primitivos fructus non ferunt, quia in Redemptoris adventu ex parte maxima in perfidia remanentes, primordia fidei sequi noluerunt. Sancta namque Ecclesia in primitiis suis multitudine gentium fecundata, vix in mundi fine Judaeos, quos invenerit, suscipiet; et extrema colligens, eos quasi reliquias frugum ponet. De quibus nimirum reliquiis Isaias dicit: Si fuerit numerus filiorum Israel sicut arena maris, reliquiae salvae fient (Isaiae X, 22, sec. LXX; Rom. IX, 27). Possunt tamen idcirco Gelboe montes ore prophetae maledici, ut dum fructus exarescente terra non oritur, possessores terrae sterilitatis damno feriantur, quatenus ipsi maledictionis sententiam 104 acciperent, qui apud se mortem regis suscipere iniquitate sua exigente meruissent. Sed quid est quod a Propheta maledictionis sententiam vir ille suscepit, qui nativitatem illius patri nuntiavit? Hoc nimirum tanto intrinsecus majori mysterio plenum est, quanto extrinsecus humana ratione vacuum. Nam si quid exterius rationabile fortasse sonuisset, nequaquam nos ad studium interioris intellectus accenderet. Eo ergo nobis plenius aliquid intus innuit, quo foris rationabile nihil ostendit. Si enim ex matris suae utero hoc in mundo propheta affligendus prodiit, nativitatis ejus nuntius quid deliquit? Sed quid persona prophetae fluctuantis, nisi per poenae meritum veniens humani generis mutabilitas designatur? Et quid per patrem illius, nisi iste de quo nascimur mundus exprimitur? Et quis est ille vir qui nativitatem nostram patri annuntiat, nisi antiquus hostis, qui cum nos in cogitationibus fluctuare considerat, malorum mentes, qui ex auctoritate hujus mundi praeeminent, ad persuasionem nostrae deceptionis instigat; cumque nos agere infirma conspexerit, ea quasi fortia favoribus extollit, et quasi natos masculos loquitur, cum corruptores veritatis per mendacium nos exstitisse gratulatur? Patri ergo masculum natum denuntiat, quando huic mundo eum, quem persuaserit, factum innocentiae corruptorem demonstrat. Nam cum cuilibet peccanti ac superbienti dicitur, Fecisti sicut vir, quid aliud quam natus masculus in mundo perhibetur? Jure itaque vir, qui masculum natum nuntiat, maledicitur, quia ipso ejus nuntio reprobum gaudium nostri corruptoris indicatur. His ergo Scripturae sacrae maledictionibus discimus quid apud beatum Job in voce maledictionis inquiramus, ne quem Deus post vulnera et verba remunerat, lector verba ejus redarguere non intelligens praesumat. Quia igitur utcunque haec quae in praefatione fuerant exquirenda distinximus, verba jam historiae disserentes exsequamur.

CAPUT PRIMUM.

CAP. III. VERS. 1-3. — Post haec aperuit Job os suum, et maledixit diei suo, dicens: Pereat dies in qua natus sum. 1. HISTORICUS ET MYSTICUS SENSUS. — Job ex impatientia maledictum non protulit. — Non est neglecte disserendum quod dicitur, Aperuit os suum. Scriptura enim sacra ex his quae tenuiter praemittit, reverenter exspectanda indicat quae subjungit. Sicut enim clausa vascula quid intus habeant ignoramus, aperto vero ore vasculorum quid intrinsecus contineatur agnoscimus; ita sanctorum corda, quae clauso ore occulta sunt, aperto ore deteguntur; et cum cogitationes detegunt, os aperire referuntur, ut intenta mente, quasi apertis vasculis, quid intus contineant festinemus cognoscere, ac nosmetipsos eorum intimo odore recreare. Unde et sublimia praecepta Domino in monte dicturo praemittitur: Aperiens os suum dixit (Matth. V, 2); quamvis illic et hoc accipi debeat, quia tunc os suum in praeceptis aperuit, in quibus dudum aperuerat ora prophetarum. Valde autem solerter intuendum est quod dicitur, Post haec, ut nimirum rei virtus quae agitur veraciter ex tempore sentiatur.

Prius enim vastitas rerum, exstinctio pignorum, 105 dolor vulnerum, persuasio conjugis, adventus amicorum describitur, qui scidisse vestes, exclamantesque flevisse, pulvere capita conspersisse, et diu considentes in terra tacuisse memorantur, ac deinde subjungitur: Post haec aperuit Job os suum, et maledixit diei suo; ut ipso videlicet narrationis ordine perpendatur quia nequaquam maledictum per impatientiam protulit, qui ad maledictionis vocem amicis adhuc tacentibus erupit. Si enim ira motus malediceret, audito damno substantiae, cognita morte filiorum, eum procul dubio ad maledictionem dolor excitaret. Sed quid tunc dixit audivimus. Ait namque: Dominus dedit, Dominus abstulit (Job. I, 21). Rursum, si ira motus malediceret saltem percussus in corpore, vel male suasus a conjuge, maledictum inferre potuisset. Sed quid tunc respondit agnovimus. Ait namque: Locuta es quasi una ex stultis mulieribus. Si bona accepimus de manu Domini, mala quare non sustineamus? (Job. II, 10.) Post haec vero describitur, quia amici veniunt, flent, consident, tacent; moxque subjungitur hoc, quod diei suo maledixisse perhibetur. Nimis itaque incongruum est ut suspicemur eum, nullo instigante, nullo pulsante, ex impatientia ad vocem maledictionis erumpere, quem nimirum novimus inter damna rerum mortemque filiorum, inter vulnera corporis, inter verba male suadentis uxoris, magna creatori praeconia humili mente reddidisse. Patefecit ergo qua mente haec quietus dixerit, qui tot Dei laudes etiam percussus emanavit. Neque enim postmodum non percussus superbire potuit, quem et in percussione dolor humilem ostendit. Sed cum certo novimus quod maledictum sacra Scriptura prohibet, cur recte aliquando fieri dicimus quod vitari eodem sacro eloquio non ignoramus? Cum vero sancti viri maledictionis sententiam proferunt (24, q. 3, can. 12, Cum sancti), non ad hanc ex voto ultionis, sed ex justitiae examine erumpunt. Intus enim subtile Dei judicium aspiciunt, et mala foras exsurgentia, quia maledicto debeant ferire, cognoscunt; et eo in maledicto non peccant, quo ab interno judicio non discordant. Hinc est quod Petrus in offerentem sibi pecuniam Simonem, sententiam maledictionis intorsit, dicens: Pecunia tua tecum sit in perditionem (Act. VIII, 20). Qui enim non ait, est; sed sit, non indicativo, sed optativo modo se haec dixisse 106 signavit. Hinc Elias duobus quinquagenariis ad se venientibus dixit: Si homo Dei sum, descendat ignis de coelo, et consumat vos (IV Reg. I, 10). Quorum utrorumque sententia quanta veritatis ratione convaluit, terminus causae monstravit. Nam et Simon aeterna perditione interiit, et duos quinquagenarios desuper veniens flamma consumpsit. Virtus ergo subsequens testificatur, qua mente maledictionis sententia promitur. Cum enim et maledicentis innocentia permanet, et tamen eum qui maledicitur, usque ad interitum maledictio absorbet, ex utriusque partis fine colligitur, quia ab uno et intimo judice in reum sententia sumpta jaculatur. 3. Maledictio Job ex rectitudine judicis. — Igitur si subtiliter beati Job verba pensamus, non est ejus maledictio ex malitia delinquentis, sed ex rectitudine judicis; non est ira commoti, sed doctrina tranquilli. Qui enim tam recta maledicens intulit, non perturbationis vitio succubuit, sed doctrinae magisterium impendit. Vidit quippe amicos cum clamore flere, vidit vestes scindere, vidit pulvere capita conspersisse, vidit consideratione suae percussionis obmutescere; et vir sanctus inspexit, quia hi qui prospera temporalia requirebant, ex comparatione mentis propriae eum temporali fractum adversitate crediderant. Perspexit quod transitoria afflictione percussum desperate non flerent, nisi ipsi desperatam mentem ab spe incolumitatis internae subtraherent; et dum erumpit foras in vocem doloris, vulneratis intus ostendit virtutem medicaminis, dicens: Pereat dies in qua natus sum. Dum igitur dies ut pereat optatur, et paulo post involvendus amaritudine dicitur; quem credamus, quod vir sanctus diei nomine exprimere voluit, nisi apostatam spiritum, qui in vivendi essentia etiam moriendo subsistit? quem perditio vitae non subtrahit, quia in aeterno dolore positum, servando mors immortalis exstinguit: qui jam a beatitudinis gloria dejectus, adhuc optatur ut pereat, ut videlicet retrusus dignis suppliciis, etiam tentandi licentiam amittat.. IBID. — Non requirat eum Deus desuper, et non illustret lumine. 8. Cur humana natura reparata, non angelica. — Omnipotens Deus sicut ex nihilo bona facere potuit, ita, cum voluit, per incarnationis suae mysterium etiam perdita bona reparavit. Duas vero ad intelligendum se creaturas fecerat, angelicam videlicet, et humanam: utramque vero superbia perculit, atque ab statu ingenitae rectitudinis fregit. Sed una tegmen carnis habuit, alia vero nihil infirmum de carne gestavit. Angelus namque solummodo spiritus, homo vero et spiritus est et caro. Misertus ergo creator ut redimeret, illam ad se debuit reducere, quam in perpetratione culpae ex infirmitate aliquid constat habuisse; et eo altius debuit apostatam angelum repellere, quo cum a persistendi fortitudine corruit, nihil infirmum ex carne gestavit. Unde recte Psalmista, cum misertum Redemptorem hominibus diceret, ipsam quoque causam misericordiae expressit, dicens: Et memoratus est, quia caro sunt (Psal. LXXVII, 39). Ac si diceret: Quo eorum infirma vidit, eo districte culpas punire noluit. Est adhuc aliud, quo et perditus homo reparari debuit, et superbiens spiritus reparari non possit, quia nimirum angelus sua malitia cecidit, hominem vero aliena prostravit. Quia ergo humanum genus ad lucem poenitentiae Redemptoris adventu reducitur, apostata vero angelus ad restaurationis lucem nulla spe veniae, nulla conversionis emendatione revocatur; dicatur recte: Non requirat eum Deus desuper, et non illustret lumine. Ac si aperte diceretur: Quia ipse tenebras intulit, toleret sine fine quod fecit; nec unquam lumen pristini status recipiat, quia hoc etiam non suasus amisit. Sequitur:

CAPUT IV.

VERS. 5. — Obscurent eum tenebrae et umbra mortis. 9. Diabolum erroris caecitas sic obruit, ut ad poenitentiae lucem non sit resurrecturus. — Per umbram mortis, oblivio debet intelligi; quia sicut mors interimit vitam, ita oblivio exstinguit memoriam. Quia ergo apostata angelus aeternae oblivioni traditur, umbra mortis obscuratur. Dicatur igitur: Obscurent eum tenebrae et umbra mortis; id est, sic eum erroris sui caecitas obruat, ut nequaquam ulterius ad lucem poenitentiae per divini respectus memoriam resurgat. Sequitur:

CAPUT V.

IBID. — Occupet eum caligo, et involvatur amaritudine. 10. Quid nunc patiatur, et quid passurus sit post judicium. — Antiquus hostis nequitiae suae vinculis astrictus, aliud est quod nunc patitur, aliud quod in fine patietur. Quia enim a lucis intimae ordine cecidit, nunc semetipsum intrinsecus erroris caligine confundit. Sed post hoc amaritudine involvitur, quia ex merito spontaneae caliginis aeterno gehennae tormento cruciatur. Dicatur ergo: Is qui serenitatem lucis intimae perdidit, quid est quod ante extremum supplicium tolerat? Occupet eum caligo. Subjungatur etiam, quae illum poena subsequens etiam sine termino devastat: Involvatur amaritudine. Omne quippe quod involutum est finem suum quasi nusquam indicat; quia sicut non ostendit quo incipit, ita non detegit quo desistit. Involvi ergo amaritudine antiquus hostis dicitur, quia superbiae ejus supplicia non solum omnimoda, sed etiam infinita praeparantur. Quae videlicet ejus poena tunc initium accipit, cum districtus ad extremum judicium judex venit. Unde et bene subditur: 109

CAPUT VI.

VERS. 6. — Noctem illam tenebrosus turbo possideat. 11. Quanta tempestate ad aeterna supplicia raptus. — Scriptum quippe est: Deus manifestus veniet, Deus noster, et non silebit. Ignis in conspectu ejus ardebit, et in circuitu ejus tempestas valida (Psal. XLIX, 3). Tenebrosus ergo turbo hanc noctem possidet, quia apostatam spiritum a conspectu districti judicis ad aeterna supplicia, pavenda illa tempestas rapit. Turbine ergo nox ista possidetur, quia superba ejus caecitas districta animadversione percutitur. Sequitur:

CAPUT VII.

IBID. — Non computetur in diebus anni, nec numeretur in mensibus. 12. Quid diei mensis et anni nomine, in verbis Job intelligendum. — Annum praedicationem supernae gratiae non inconvenienter accipimus; quia sicut in anno congestis diebus tempus perficitur, ita in superna gratia virtutum multiplex vita completur. Potest per annum etiam multitudo intelligi redemptorum; quia sicut ex dierum multitudine annus ducitur, ita ex collectione bonorum omnium, illa electorum innumerabilis universitas expletur. Hunc namque annum perfectae multitudinis Isaias praedicat, dicens: Spiritus Domini super me, eo quod unxerit me Dominus: ad annuntiandum mansuetis misit me, ut mederer contritis corde, et praedicarem captivis indulgentiam, et clausis apertionem, ut praedicarem annum placabilem Domini (Isai. LXI, 1). Annus enim placabilis Domini praedicatur, cum futura plebs fidelium veritatis lumine illustranda praedicitur. Quid vero per dies, nisi singulae quaeque electorum mentes; quid per menses, nisi multiplicatae eorum Ecclesiae, quae unam catholicam faciunt, designatur? Illa ergo nox non computetur in diebus anni, nec numeretur in mensibus; quia antiquus hostis superbiae suae tenebris pressus, adventum quidem Redemptoris conspicit, sed nequaquam ad veniam cum electis redit. Hinc enim scriptum est: Nusquam enim angelos apprehendit, sed semen Abrahae apprehendit (Hebr. II, 16). Idcirco namque Redemptor noster non angelus, sed homo factus est, quia hoc procul dubio fieri debuit, quod redemit; ut et perditum angelum non apprehendendo desereret, et hominem in semetipso apprehendendo repararet. Possunt etiam dies hi qui in interna luce permanent, angelici spiritus; menses autem, eorum ordines et dignitates intelligi. Singuli enim quique spiritus, quia lucent, dies sunt. Sed quia certis quibusdam dignitatibus distinguuntur, ut alii throni, alii dominationes, alii principatus, alii potestates sint; pro hac ipsa distributione agminum, menses vocantur. Sed quia antiquus hostis nequaquam ad meritum lucis, nequaquam ad ordinem supernorum agminum reducitur: nec in diebus anni, nec in mensibus numeratur. Sic quippe illum perpetratae superbiae caecitas gravat, ut ultra ad illa claritatis intimae agmina superna non redeat. Nequaquam jam stantibus lucis dignitatibus admiscetur, quia tenebrarum suarum merito semper ad ima deprimitur. Qui quia ab illa patriae coelestis frequentia exsors in perpetuum permanet, recte adhuc subjungitur:

CAPUT VIII.

VERS. 7. — Sit nox illa solitaria, nec laude digna. 13. Diabolus redempto homine et idolis reprobatis fit solitarius et sine laude. — Nox illa solitaria efficitur, quia distinctione perpetua a frequentia patriae supernae separatur. Quod tamen intelligi et aliter potest, ut videlicet hominem, quem sibi socium ad perditionem fecerat, 110 amittat; et solus cum suo corpore hostis pereat, dum multos quos destruxerat, Redemptoris gratia reformat. Solitaria ergo nox efficitur, cum sublatis eis qui electi sunt, solus hostis antiquus aeternis ignibus gehennae mancipatur. Bene autem dicitur: Nec laude digna. Cum enim humanum genus, erroris tenebris pressum, deos lapides crederet, per hoc quod idolis serviebat, quid aliud quam seductoris sui facta laudabat? Unde bene per Paulum dicitur: Scimus, quia nihil est idolum; sed quae immolant gentes, daemoniis immolant (I Cor. VIII, 4). Qui ergo idolorum venerationi substrati sunt, quid aliud quam noctis tenebras laudaverunt? Sed ecce jam cernimus, quia nox illa non esse laude digna cognoscitur, cum jam a redempto humano genere idolorum veneratio reprobatur; et solitaria nox relinquitur, quia cum damnato apostata spiritu ad tormenta non itur. Sequitur:

CAPUT IX.

VERS. 8. — Maledicant ei qui maledicunt diei, qui parati sunt suscitare Leviathan. 14. A Christo ejus malitia jam destruitur; in fine mundi potentia exstinguetur. — In translatione veteri ita non dicitur; sed, Maledicat eam, qui maledixit diem, qui capturus est grandem cetum. Quibus verbis aperte ostenditur quod a sancto viro in fine mundi ventura Antichristi perditio praevidetur. Malignus namque spiritus, qui per meritum nox est, diem se in mundi fine simulat, cum se quasi Deum hominibus ostentat, cum claritatem sibi Divinitatis fallaciter tribuit, et se supra omne quod Deus vel dicitur, vel colitur, extollit. Noctem igitur maledicit, qui maledicit diem; quia ille nunc ejus malitiam destruit, qui illustratione adventus sui tunc etiam potentiam ejus fortitudinis exstinguet. Unde et bene subjungitur: Qui capturus est grandem cetum. Hujus enim ceti fortitudo in aquis capitur, quia antiqui hostis versutia baptismi sacramento superatur. 15. Electi angeli ejus doli tenebras nobis indicant. — Sed quod translatione veteri de auctore omnium dicitur, hoc translatione hac, quae ad nos ex Hebraeo est Arabicoque sermone derivata, de electis ejus angelis memoratur (Consule quae diximus l. XXXV, cap. olim 13, ad vers. 14 c. ult. l. Job.) De his namque dicitur: Maledicant ei qui maledicunt diei. Diem se quippe iste superbiens spiritus ostentare etiam angelicis potestatibus voluit, cum se super caeteros quasi in potentia divinitatis extollens; tot post se ad interitum legiones traxit. Sed hi nimirum, qui in auctore suo humili corde perstiterunt, cum errori ejus noctem inesse conspicerent, diem claritatis illius de semetipsis humilia sentiendo calcaverunt: qui nunc nobis doli ejus tenebras indicant, et quam sit illius despicienda ficta claritas, demonstrant. Dicatur ergo de tenebrosa nocte, quae humanae infirmitatis oculos claudit: Maledicant ei, qui maledicunt diei, id est, illi electi spiritus erroris ejus tenebras damnando denuntient, qui magnitudinem claritatis illius jam ab exordio fictam vident. Bene autem subditur: Qui parati sunt suscitare Leviathan. Leviathan quippe intepretatus dicitur additamentum eorum. Quorum scilicet, nisi hominum? Recta autem additamentum eorum dicitur, quia postquam primam culpam mala suggestione intulit, hanc quotidie augere gravioribus persuasionibus non desistit. Vel certe per exprobrationem Leviathan vocatus est, id est, additamentum hominum dictus. Eos namque in paradiso immortales reperit; sed divinitatem immortalibus 111 promittendo, quasi eis aliquid ultra quam erant se addere spopondit. Sed dum blande non habita se daturum perhibuit, callide et habita subtraxit. Unde et eumdem Leviathan ita propheta describit dicens: Super Leviathan serpentem vectem, super Leviathan serpentem tortuosum (Isai. XXVII, 1). Leviathan quippe iste in eo, quod se addere homini spopondit, tortuosis ad eum sinibus irrepsit; quia dum falso impossibilia promisit, vere et possibilia sustulit. Quaerendum vero nobis est cur qui serpentem dixerat, tortuosumque illico subjungens, interposuit vectem, nisi forte quod in serpentis tortitudine fluxa mollities, in vecte autem est duritia rigiditatis. Ut ergo hunc et durum signaret, et mollem; et vectem nominat, et serpentem. Durus quippe est per malitiam, mollis per blandimenta. Vectis ergo dicitur, quia usque ad necem percutit; serpens autem, quia se per insidias molliter infundit. 16. Diabolum electi angelorum in puteo abyssi clausum premunt. — Sed hunc Leviathan electi angelorum spiritus nunc in puteo abyssi clausum premunt. Unde scriptum est: Vidi angelum descendentem de coelo, habentem clavem abyssi, et catenam magnam in manu sua: et apprehendit draconem serpentem antiquum, qui est diabolus et Satanas, et ligavit eum per annos mille, et misit eum in abyssum (Apocal. XX, 1, 2 et seq.). Quem tamen in mundi fine ad apertiora certamina revocant, et totum contra nos in suis viribus ralaxant. Unde et illic rursum scriptum est: Cum completi fuerint mille anni, solvetur Satanas

(Ibid., 7). Ille enim apostata angelus, quia ita conditus fuerat, ut angelorum caeteris legionibus emineret, ita superbiendo succubuit, ut hunc stantium angelorum ditioni substratus sit; quatenus vel nunc ad utilitatem nostram eis ministrantibus religatus lateat, vel tunc ad probationem nostram eis relaxantibus, totis se contra nos suis viribus solutus exerceat. Quia igitur hi electi spiritus superbum apostatam comprimunt, qui humiles hunc sequi noluerunt, ipsisque administrantibus disponitur, ut ad intentionem aperti certaminis destruendus funditus quandoque revocetur, dicatur recte: Qui parati sunt suscitare Leviathan. Quia tamen hostis callidus ad aperta bella necdum suscitatus est, quomodo quorumdam mentes nox ista nunc latenter obscuret, insinuet. Sequitur:

CAPUT X.

VERS. 9. — Obtenebrentur stellae caligine ejus. 17. Stellae aliquando sancti, aliquando hypocritae in Scripturis dicuntur. Hypocritarum lux obscuratur aperto errore. — In Scriptura sacra stellarum stellarum nomine aliquando sanctorum justitia, quae in hujus vitae tenebris lucet, aliquando vero hypocritarum fictio demonstratur, qui bona quae faciunt, ad percipiendas laudes hominibus ostendunt. Si enim recte viventes, stellae non essent, nequaquam Paulus discipulis diceret: In medio nationis pravae et perversae, inter quos lucetis sicut luminaria in mundo (Philip. II, 15). Rursum, si inter eos qui recta agere videntur, quidam de actione sua retributionem favoris humani non quaererent, nequaquam stellas Joannes ruere a coelestibus videret, dicens: Misit draco caudam, et traxit tertiam partem stellarum (Apoc. XII, 4). Draconis enim cauda stellarum pars trahitur, quia extrema persuasione Antichristi quidam qui videntur lucere rapientur. 112 Stellas namque in terram trahere, est eos qui videntur studio vitae coelestis inhaerere, ex amore terreno iniquitate aperti erroris involvere. Sunt namque nonnulli qui ante humanos oculos velut magnis operibus lucent; sed quia haec ipsa opera a mundo corde non prodeunt, capti in occultis cogitationibus, noctis hujus tenebris obscurantur; qui saepe ea quae mundo corde non faciunt, etiam opera amittunt. Quia ergo nox praevalere permittitur, quando et inter bona opera cordis intentio minime mundatur, dicatur recte: Obscurentur stellae caligine ejus; id est, contra eos qui ante humanos oculos quasi bonis operibus splendent, malitia antiqui hostis obscura praevaleat; et hoc, quod ante humana judicia sumpserant, lumen laudis deponant. Caligine quippe noctis obscurantur, cum eorum vita aperto errore confunditur; ut nimirum tales etiam foris in actione appareant, quales apud semetipsos intus divino parere judicio non formidant. Sequitur:

CAPUT XI.

IBID. Exspectet lucem, et non videat, nec ortum surgentis aurorae. 18. Christus cum bonis una est persona, et diabolus una cum reprobis. Qui prava agunt, aut recta non recto corde, mercedem aeternam frustra sperant. — In Evangelio Veritas dicit: Ego sum lux mundi (Joan. VIII, 12). Sicut autem isdem Redemptor noster una persona est cum congregatione bonorum; ipse namque caput est corporis, et nos hujus capitis corpus; ita antiquus hostis una persona est cum cuncta collectione reproborum, quia ipse eis ad iniquitatem quasi caput praeeminet, illi autem dum ad persuasa deserviunt, velut subjunctum capiti corpus inhaerent. Quod ergo de hac nocte, id est antiquo hoste dicitur, dignum est ut ad corpus ejus, id est ad iniquos quosque, derivetur. Quia igitur Redemptor humani generis lux est, quid est quod de hac nocte dicitur: Exspectet lucem, et non videat: nisi quod sunt nonnulli qui fidem, quam operibus destruunt, tenere se sermonibus ostendunt? De quibus per Paulum dicitur: Qui confitentur se nosse Deum, factis autem negant (Tit. I, 16). Hi nimirum aut prava sunt quae faciunt, aut recta opera non recto corde sectantur. Non enim de suis operibus retributiones perpetuas, sed transitorios favores quaerunt; et tamen quia quasi sanctos laudari se audiunt, esse se veraciter sanctos arbitrantur; et quanto se ex multorum aestimatione irreprehensibiles putant, tanto diem districti judicii securius exspectant. De quibus bene per prophetam dicitur: Vae desiderantibus diem Domini (Amos V, 18). Quibus beatus Job debitam sententiam profert, praedicentis studio; non optantis voto dicens: Exspectet lucem, et non videat. Nox quippe illa, videlicet tenebrosus hostis, in membris suis lucem exspectat, et non videt, quia vel hi qui fidem sine operibus retinent, cum pro eadem fide in extremo judicio salvari se posse confidunt, spes eorum frustrabitur, quia hanc vivendo demoliti sunt, quam confitendo tenuerunt, vel hi qui pro humana laude in bona actione se exhibent, incassum a veniente judice retributionem bonorum operum sperant; quia dum haec in ostentationem faciunt laudis, jam praemium ab humano ore receperunt, Veritate attestante, quae ait: Amen dico vobis, receperunt mercedem 113 suam (Matth. VI, 2, 5). Ubi et bene subditur: Nec ortum surgentis aurorae. Beatus Job considerans, postquam a mentis statu succubuit genus humanum, quanta in rebus prosperis fiducia sublevetur, vel quanta ex adversis perturbatione frangatur, ad illum, quem habere in paradiso potuit, incommutabilitatis statum mente recurrit, et mortalitatis lapsum per prospera et adversa variantem, quam despicabilem cerneret, maledicendo declaravit dicens:

CAPUT XIII.

VERS. 3. Pereat dies in qua natus sum, et nox in qua dictum est, Conceptus est homo. 24. Dies est prosperitas, nox tribulatio. Dies peccati delectatio, nox caecitas mentis. — Quasi dies quaedam est, cum mundi hujus prosperitas arridet. Sed dies iste in noctem desinit, quia saepe temporalis prosperitas ad tribulationis tenebras perducit. Hunc prosperitatis diem propheta despexerat, cum dicebat: Diem hominis non concupivi, tu scis (Jerem. XVII, 16). Hanc tribulationis noctem postremo incarnationis suae tempore passurum se Dominus nuntiabat, cum per Psalmistam quasi ex praeterito diceret: Usque ad noctem increpuerunt me renes mei (Psal. XV, 7). Potest autem per diem, peccati delectatio, per noctem vero caecitas mentis intelligi, per quam se homo patitur in culpae perpetratione prosterni. Optat igitur perire diem, ut omne quod blandiri culpa cernitur, vigore justitiae interveniente destruatur. Optat etiam perire noctem, ut quod caecata mens etiam per consensum perpetrat, animadversione poenitentiae exstinguat. 115 25. Scriptura tribus modis hominem appellat. Homo per voluntarias mentis tenebras a delectatione peccati rapitur. — Sed quaerendum nobis est cur in die homo natus dicitur, in nocte conceptus? Scriptura sacra tribus modis hominem appellat, scilicet aliquando per naturam, aliquando per culpam, aliquando per infirmitatem. Homo quippe per naturam dicitur, sicut scriptum est: Faciamus hominem ad imaginem et similitudinem nostram (Genes. I, 26). Homo per culpam, sicut scriptum est: Ego dixi, Dii estis, et filii Excelsi omnes; vos autem sicut homines moriemini (Psal. LXXXI, 6). Ac si aperte dicat: Sicut delinquentes obibitis. Unde et Paulus ait: Cum sit inter vos zelus et contentio, nonne carnales estis, et secundum hominem ambulatis (I Cor. III, 3)? Ac si dicat: Qui discordes mentes ducitis, nonne adhuc ex reprehensibili humanitate peccatis? Homo per infirmitatem dicitur, sicut scriptum est: Maledictus homo, qui spem suam ponit in homine (Jerem. XVII, 5). Ac si aperte diceret, in infirmitate. Homo ergo in die nascitur, sed in nocte concipitur, quia nequaquam a delectatione peccati rapitur, nisi prius per voluntarias mentis tenebras infirmetur. Ante enim caecus in mente fit, et postmodum se reprobae delectationi substernit. Dicatur ergo: Pereat dies in qua natus sum, et nox in qua dictum est, Conceptus est homo: id est, pereat delectatio, quae in culpam hominem rapuit, pereat incauta mentis infirmitas, quae usque ad tenebras pravi consensus excaecavit. Homo enim dum blandimenta delectationis caute non perspicit, etiam in noctem nequissimae perpetrationis ruit. Solerter ergo vigilandum est, ut cum blandiri culpa inchoat, ad quantum interitum mens trahatur, agnoscat. Unde et apte subditur:

CAPUT XIV.

VERS. 4. — Dies illa vertatur in tenebras. 26. Delectationis initium poenitentiae lamentis castigandum. — Dies quippe in tenebras vertitur, cum culpa in ipso delectationis exordio, ad quem perditionis finem rapiat, videtur. In tenebras diem vertimus, cum nosmetipsos districte punientes, ipsa delectationis pravae blandimenta per districta poenitentiae lamenta cruciamus, cum flendo insequimur quidquid in corde taciti ex delectatione peccamus. Quia enim fidelis quisque cogitationes in judicio exquiri subtiliter non ignorat, Paulo attestante, qui ait: Inter se invicem cogitationum accusantium, aut etiam defendentium (Rom. II, 15); semetipsum introrsus discutiens, ante judicium vehementer examinat, ut districtus judex eo jam tranquillius veniat, quo reatum suum, quem discutere appetit, jam pro culpa punitum cernit. Unde et recte subjungitur:

CAPUT XV.

IBID. — Non requirat eum Deus desuper. 27. Ut a Deo in judicio non puniatur. — Requirit Deus quae judicando discutit; non requirit quae ignoscendo in suo jam judicio impunita derelinquit. Hic itaque dies, id est, haec peccati delectatio, a Domino non requiretur, si animadversione spontanea punitur, Paulo attestante, qui ait: Si nosmetipsos dijudicaremus, non utique a Domino judicaremur (I Cor. XI, 31). Deo ergo diem nostrum requirere, est contra mentem nostram subtiliter in judicio omne quod de culpa gratulatur indagare; in qua scilicet requisitione illum tunc severius percutit, quem sibi nunc mollius pepercisse deprehendit. Bene autem sequitur: Et non illustret lumine. In judicio namque Dominus apparens, 116 omne quod tunc redarguit, lumine illustrat. Quasi enim sub quadam obscuritate tegitur, quidquid tunc in memoriam judicis non revocatur. Scriptum quippe est: Omnia autem quae arguuntur, a lumine manifestantur (Ephes. V, 13). Quasi quaedam tenebrae peccata poenitentium abscondunt, de quibus per Prophetam dicitur: Beati quorum remissae sunt iniquitates, et quorum tecta sunt peccata (Psal. XXXI, 1). Quia ergo omne quod tegitur, velut in tenebris occultatur; in die extremi judicii non illustratur lumine, quod non discutitur ultione. Actus namque nostros, quos tunc juste punire noluerit, ipsa sibi aliquo modo sciens divina misericordia abscondit. In lumine vero ostenditur, quidquid tunc in conspectu omnium demonstratur. Hic ergo dies vertatur in tenebras, ut videlicet omne quod delinquimus, nos per poenitentiam feriamus. Hunc diem Dominus non requirat, et lumine non illustret; ut scilicet nobis culpam nostram ferientibus, ipse hanc extremi judicii animadversione non increpet. 28. Poenitens solus locum invenit, quo se Deo judici abscondat. — Ipse autem judex venturus est, qui cuncta penetret, cuncta perstringat. Qui quia ubique est, locus quo fugiatur, non est. Sed quia correctionis nostrae fletibus placatur, solus ab illo locum fugae invenit, qui post perpetratam culpam nunc se ei in poenitentia abscondit. Unde et apte adhuc de hoc delectationis die subjungitur:

CAPUT XVI.

VERS. 5. — Obscurent eum tenebrae et umbra mortis. 29. Occulta Dei judicia, quaedam tenebrae sunt. — Diem profecto tenebrae obscurant, quando delectationem mentis inflicta poenitentiae lamenta transverberant. Possunt etiam per tenebras occulta judicia designari. In luce namque quod videmus agnoscimus; in tenebris vero aut omnino nihil cernimus, aut incerto visu caligamus. Occulta ergo judicia quasi quaedam ante oculos nostros tenebrae sunt, quia perscrutari nequaquam possunt. Unde et de Deo scriptum est: Posuit tenebras latibulum suum (Psal. XVII, 12). Et quia absolvi non meremur, agnoscimus: sed praeveniente nos divina gratia, per ejus judicia occulta liberamur. Diem igitur tenebrae obscurant, cum flendum nostrae delectationis gaudium, ab illo justae animadversionis radio inscrutabilia ejus judicia misericorditer occultant. Ubi et apte subjungitur: Et umbra mortis. Sed quia nullum peccatum Dominus inultum relaxat, aut enim nos hoc flendo insequimur, aut ipse judicando, restat ut ad emendationem suam semper mens solerter invigilet. In quo ergo sibi quisque misericorditer subveniri considerat, hoc necesse est ut confitens tergat. Unde et apte subjungitur:

CAPUT XVII.

IBID. — Occupet eum caligo. 32. Mentis poenitentis salubris caligo. — Quia enim in caligine oculus confunditur, ipsa per poenitentiam mentis nostrae confusio, caligo nominatur. Nam sicut caligo nebulosa congerie obscurat diem, ita confusio perturbatis cogitationibus obnubilat mentem. De qua per quemdam dicitur: Est confusio adducens gloriam (Eccli. IV, 25). Cum enim ad mentem male gesta poenitendo reducimus, gravi mox moerore confundimur, perstrepit in animo turba cogitationum, moeror conterit, anxietas devastat, in aerumnam mens vertitur, et quasi quodam nubilo caliginis obscuratur. Haec namque caligo confusionis eorum mentem salubriter oppresserat; quibus Paulus dicebat: Quem enim fructum habuistis tunc in illis, in quibus nunc erubescitis (Rom. VI, 21)? Hunc ergo peccati diem caligo occupet, id est, blandimentum nequitiae afflictio poenitentiae digno moerore perturbet. Unde et apte subjungitur:

CAPUT XVIII.

IBID. — Involvatur amaritudine. 33. Salubris moeror de prava delectatione. — Dies enim amaritudine involvitur, cum ad cognitionem mente redeunte, peccati blandimenta 118 cruciatus poenitentiae sequuntur. Diem amaritudine involvimus, cum pravae delectationis gaudium, quae supplicia sequantur aspicimus, et asperis hoc fletibus circumdamus. Quia enim hoc quod involvitur, ex latere omnis partis operitur, involvi dies amaritudine optatur, quatenus quae mala incorrectis imminent, ex omni parte quisque conspiciat, et voluptatis suae lasciviam tristitiae lamentis tergat. 34. Quanto major esse debeat de consensu ad culpam. — Sed si diem, quam peccati delectationem diximus, tot impeti precibus audivimus, ut videlicet circumdantes fletus expient quidquid delectatus per negligentiam animus delinquit, quanta animadversione poenitentiae hujus diei nox ferienda est, videlicet ipse jam consensus ad culpam? Sicut enim minoris culpae est, cum carnaliter mens in delectatione rapitur, sed tamen delectationi suae per spiritum reluctatur; ita gravioris et plenae est nequitiae, ad peccati illecebram non solum delectatione pertrahi, sed etiam consensu famulari. Tanto igitur arctiori manu poenitentiae, mens a pollutione tergenda est, quanto se per consensum conspicit sordidius inquinatam. Unde et apte subjungitur:

CAPUT XIX.

VERS. 6. — Noctem illam tenebrosus turbo possideat. 35. Vis compunctionis. — Quasi enim quidam turbo tempestatis est concitatus spiritus moeroris. Nam dum peccatum quisque quod fecit, intelligit; dum pravitatis suae nequitiam subtiliter pensat, moerore mentem obnubilat et quasi concusso serenae laetitiae aere, omnem in se tranquillitatem cordis poenitentiae turbine devastat. Nisi enim recognoscentem se animum iste turbo contereret, nequaquam Propheta dixisset: In spiritu vehementi conteres naves Tharsis (Psal. XLVII, 8). Tharsis quippe exploratio gaudii dicitur. Sed cum vehemens poenitentiae spiritus mentem occupat, omnem in ea explorationem reprehensibilis gaudii perturbat, ut nihil ei jam nisi flere libeat, nihil nisi quod se terrere possit attendat. Ponit namque ante oculos illinc districtionem justitiae, hinc meritum culpae: conspicit quo supplicio digna sit, si parcentis pietas desit, quae per lamenta praesentia ab aeterna eruere poena consuevit. Spiritus ergo vehemens Tharsis naves conterit, cum vis compunctionis valida mentes nostras huic mundo, quasi mari deditas, salubri terrore confundit. Dicat igitur: Noctem illam tenebrosus turbo possideat; id est, perpetrationem culpae, non blandimenta securae quietis foveant, sed pie desaeviens amaritudo poenitentiae irrumpat. 36. Quid sit possidere noctem, et a nocte possideri. — Sciendum vero est, quia cum peccata impunita relinquimus, a nocte possidemur; cum vero haec animadversione poenitentiae plectimus, nimirum nos noctem, quam fecimus, possidemus. Sed tunc peccatum cordis sub juris nostri possessionem reducitur, si cum incipit, reprimatur. Unde et divina voce Cain prava cogitanti dicitur: In foribus peccatum tuum aderit, sed sub te erit appetitus ejus, et tu dominaberis illius (Genes. IV, 7). In foribus quippe peccatum adest, cum in cogitationibus pulsat. Cujus appetitus subter est, eique homo dominatur, si cordis nequitia inspecta, citius prematur, et priusquam ad duritiam crescat, reluctanti mente subigatur. Ut ergo delictum suum citius animus sentiat, 119 et culpae tyrannidem sub jure suo poenitendo restringat, dicatur recte: Noctem illam tenebrosus turbo possideat. Ac si aperte diceretur: Ne captiva mens culpae serviat, culpam a poenitentia liberam non relinquat. Et quia quod flendo insequimur, nequaquam nobis a venturo judice hoc objici certe speramus, bene subditur:

CAPUT XX.

IBID. — Non computetur in diebus anni, nec numeretur in mensibus. 37. Rogandus Deus ne mala quae gessimus, in judicio nobis objiciantur. — Illuminationis nostrae annus tunc perficitur, quando apparente aeterno judice sanctae Ecclesiae, peregrinationis suae vita completur. Tunc laboris sui remunerationem recipit, cum expleto hoc belli tempore, ad patriam redit.

Unde bene per Prophetam dicitur: Benedices coronae anni benignitatis tuae (Psal. LXIV, 12). Quasi enim corona anni benedicitur, cum finito laboris tempore, virtutum remuneratio confertur. Dies vero hujus anni sunt singulae quaeque virtutes; menses autem multiplicia facta virtutum. Sed ecce cum per fiduciam mens erigitur, ut speret quod veniente judice de virtutibus remuneretur, occurrunt ejus memoriae etiam mala quae gessit; et valde formidat, ne districtus judex qui venit ut virtutes remuneret, etiam ea quae illicite gesta sunt examinans, subtiliter penset; ne cum annum complet, etiam noctem numeret. Dicat itaque de hac nocte: Non computetur in diebus anni, nec numeretur in mensibus. Ac si districtum judicem exoret, dicens: Cum completo sanctae Ecclesiae tempore, extremo te examini manifestas, sic dona quae contulisti remunera, ut mala quae commisimus non requiras. Si enim nox illa in diebus anni computatur, omne quod egimus, ex pravitatis nostrae aestimatione confunditur. Et dies virtutum jam non lucent, si hos in conspectu tuo annum eratanostrae noctis tenebrosa confusio obscuret.. VERS. 7. — Sit nox illa solitaria, nec laude digna. 39. Nulla excusando exaggeremus. — Sunt nonnulli, qui non solum nequaquam deflent quod faciunt, sed etiam laudare et defendere non desistunt. Et nimirum dum defenditur culpa, geminatur. Contra quod recte per quemdam dicitur: Peccasti, ne adjicias iterum (Eccli. XXI, 1). Peccatum quippe peccato adjicit, qui male gesta etiam defendit; et noctem solitariam non relinquit, qui culpae suae tenebris etiam patrocinia defensionis adjungit. Hinc est, quod primus homo de erroris sui nocte requisitus, eamdem noctem esse solitariam noluit; quia dum requisitione ad poenitentiam vocaretur, ei adminicula excusationis adjunxit, dicens: Mulier, quam dedisti mihi sociam, dedit mihi de ligno, et comedi (Genes. III, 12); scilicet excessus sui vitium in auctorem latenter intorquens, ac si diceret: Tu occasionem delinquendi praebuisti, qui mulierem dedisti. Hinc est, quod hujus erroris ramus in humano genere ex illa nunc usque radice 120 protrahitur, ut quod male agitur, adhuc etiam defendatur. Dicat ergo: Sit nox illa solitaria, nec laude digna. Ac si aperte exoret, dicens: Culpa, quam fecimus, sola remaneat, ne dum laudatur et defenditur, in conspectu nos nostri judicis multiplicius astringat. Peccare quidem non debuimus; sed utinam alia non jungentes, vel ea quae fecimus sola deseramus. 40. Culpam suam veraciter insequitur, qui prosperitatem saeculi calcat. — Sed inter haec sciendum est, quia ille culpam suam veraciter insequitur, qui jam ad amorem praesentis saeculi nullo appetitu prosperitatis instigatur; qui hujus mundi blandimenta quam sint fraudulenta considerat, favoresque ejus quasi quasdam persecutiones pensat. Unde et bene subditur:

CAPUT XXII.

VERS. 8. — Maledicant ei, qui maledicunt diei. 41. Transactas culpas punit qui seductoris insidias in ipsa suggestione deprehendit. — Ac si aperte dicat: Illi hujus noctis tenebras vere poenitendo feriant, qui jam lucem prosperitatis saeculi despicientes calcant. Si enim diem laetitiam delectationis accipimus, recte de hac nocte dicitur: Maledicant ei qui maledicunt diei; quia nimirum illi veraciter mala transacta per animadversionem poenitentiae corrigunt, qui jam ad bona fallentia nulla delectatione rapiuntur. Nam quos adhuc noxia alia delectant, falsum est quod cernitur, quia perpetrata alia deplorant. Si autem, ut supra dictum est, suggestionem callidam antiqui hostis accipimus, illi maledicere noctem intelligendi sunt, qui diei maledicunt; quia scilicet illi transactas culpas vere puniunt, qui maligni seductoris insidias in ipsa blanda suggestione deprehendunt. Bene autem subditur:

CAPUT XXIII.

IBID. — Qui parati sunt suscitare Leviathan. 42. Diabolum contra se suscitant, qui ejus tyrannidem despiciunt. — Omnes enim, qui ea quae mundi sunt mente calcant, et ea quae Dei sunt plena intentione desiderant, Leviathan contra se suscitant, quia ejus malitiam instigatione suae conversationis inflammant. Nam qui ejus voluntati subjecti sunt, quasi quieto ab illo jure possidentur, et superbus eorum rex quasi quadam securitate perfruitur, dum eorum cordibus inconcussa potestate dominatur. Sed cum uniuscujusque spiritus ad conditoris sui desiderium recalescit, cum torporem negligentiae deserit, et frigus insensibilitatis pristinae igne sancti amoris accendit; cum libertatis ingenitae meminit, et teneri ab hoste servus erubescit, quia isdem hostis se considerat despici, quia vias Dei videt apprehendi, dolet contra se captum reniti, et mox zelo accenditur, mox ad certamen movetur, mox ad tentationes innumeras contra rebellantem mentem se excitat, atque in omni arte lacerationis instigat, ut tentationum jacula intorquendo confodiat cor, quod dudum quieto jure possidebat. Quasi dormiebat quippe, dum sopitus in pravo corde quiesceret: sed excitatur in provocatione certaminis, cum jus amiserit perversae dominationis. Huic ergo nocti maledicant, qui parati sunt suscitare Leviathan: id est, hi se contra peccatum fortiter judicio districtionis erigant, qui in suis tentationibus excitare antiquum adversarium non formidant. Scriptum namque est: Fili, accedens ad servitutem Dei, sta in justitia 121 et timore, et praepara animam tuam ad tentationem (Eccli. II, 1). Quisquis enim accingi in divino servitio properat, quid aliud, quam se contra antiqui adversarii certamen parat, ut liber in certamine ictus suscipiat, qui quietus sub tyrannide in captivitate serviebat? Sed in eo ipso, quod mens contra hostem accingitur, quod alia vitia subigit, aliis reluctatur, aliquando de culpa aliquid, quod tamen non valde noceat, remanere permittitur. 43. Ob humilitatem Deus sinit ut qui multa et gravia vitia subegit, unum minimum non expugnet. — Et saepe mens, quae adversa multa et fortia superat, unum in se, et fortasse minimum, quamvis magna intentione invigilet, non expugnat. Quod divina nimirum dispensatione agitur, ne ex omni parte virtutibus splendens, in elatione sublevetur; ut dum in se parvum quid reprehensibile videt, et tamen hoc subigere non valet, nequaquam sibi, sed auctori victoriam tribuat in his quae subigere fortiter valet. Unde et bene subjungitur:

CAPUT XXIV.

VERS. 9. — Obtenebrentur stellae caligine ejus. 44. Sic qui stellae sunt, aliqua caligine obscurantur. — Stellae quippe hujus noctis caligine tenebrantur, quando et hi qui magnis jam virtutibus splendent, adhuc de obscuritate culpae aliquid renitentes sustinent, ut etiam magna vitae claritate luceant, et tamen adhuc noctis reliquias nolentes trahant. Quod ad hoc, sicut dictum est, agitur, ut mens proficiens ad virtutem justitiae suae, melius infirmitate roboretur; et inde verius in bonis luceat, unde eam etiam nolentem parva reprehensibilia humiliter obscurant. Unde et bene cum Israelitico populo, percepta repromissionis terra, partiretur, Ephraim tribui Chananaeus gentilis populus non occisus, sed factus tributarius dicitur, sicut scriptum est: Habitavit Chananaeus in medio Ephraim tributarius (Jos. XVI, 10). Quid enim Chananaeus, gentilis videlicet populus, nisi vitium significat? Et saepe magnis virtutibus terram repromissionis ingredimur, quia spe intima de aeternitate roboramur. Sed dum inter acta sublimia, vitia quaedam parva retinemus, quasi Chananaeum vivere in terra nostra concedimus. Qui tamen tributarius efficitur, quia hoc ipsum vitium, quod subigere non possumus, ad usum nostrae utilitatis humiliter retorquemus; ut eo de se mens et in summis vilia sentiat, quo suis viribus etiam parva quae appetit, non expugnat. Unde bene rursum scriptum est: Hae sunt gentes quas Dominus dereliquit, ut erudiret in eis Israelem (Jud. III, 1). Ad hoc namque quaedam minima vitia nostra retinentur, ut sese nostra intentio sollicitam in certamine semper exerceat; et eo de victoria non superbiat, quo vivere in se hostes conspicit, a quibus adhuc vinci formidat. Israel ergo reservatis gentibus eruditur, quando in quibusdam minimis vitiis elatio virtutis nostrae comprimitur, et in parvis sibi resistentibus discit, quod ex se majora non subigit. 45. Nemo in hac vita, quantalibet sanctitate fulgeat, Deum sicut est videre valet. — Hoc tamen quod dicitur: Obtenebrentur stellae caligine ejus; intelligi et aliter potest. Nox quippe illa, videlicet consensus ad culpam, quae ad nos primi parentis est excessu propagata, mentis nostrae oculum tanta obscuritate perculit, ut in hujus vitae exsilio, caecitatis suae tenebris pressus, quantalibet vi aeternitatis lumen intenderit, penetrare non possit. Post poenam namque damnati 122 peccatores nascimur, atque ad hanc vitam cum mortis nostrae merito venimus; et cum ad supernae lucis radium aciem mentis erigimus, ipsa infirmitatis nostrae obscuritate caligamus. Et quidem multi in hac infirmitate carnis tanta virtute roborati sunt, ut resplendere mundo quasi stellae potuissent. Multi in tenebris vitae praesentis, dum superiora de se exempla exhibent, astrorum more nobis desuper lucent; sed quantalibet coruscatione operis fulgeant, quantolibet se igne compunctionis accendant; nimirum constat quia dum corruptibili adhuc carne gravati sunt, aeternum lumen, sicut est, videre nequaquam possunt. Dicat ergo: Obtenebrentur stellae caligine ejus; id est, etiam illi in contemplatione sua, antiquae noctis adhuc tenebras sentiant, de quibus nimirum constat quod humano generi in hujus vitae caligine virtutum suarum jam radios expandant, quia etsi mente jam ad summa exsiliunt, adhuc tamen in infimis primae culpae pondere gravantur. Unde fit ut et foras exempla lucis velut astra praebeant, sed tamen intus usque ad fixae visionis certitudinem pressi noctis caligine non ascendant. Saepe autem ita mens accenditur, ut quamvis in carne sit posita, in Deum tamen omni subjugata carnali cogitatione rapiatur; nec tamen Deum sicut est conspicit, quia hanc nimirum, sicut dictum est, in carne corruptibili pondus primae damnationis premit. Saepe ita ut est, absorberi desiderat, ut aeternam vitam, si possit fieri, sine interventu corporeae mortis attingat.

Unde Paulus, cum ardenter internam lucem quaereret, sed tamen utcunque exterioris mortis damna formidaret, ait: Quandiu sumus in hoc habitaculo, ingemiscimus gravati, eo quod nolumus exspoliari, sed supervestiri, ut absorbeatur quod mortale est a vita (II Cor. V, 4). Sancti igitur viri videre verum mane appetunt, et, si concedatur, etiam cum corpore illud attingere lucis intimae secretum volunt. Sed quantolibet ardore intentionis exsiliant, adhuc antiqua nox gravat, et corruptibilis hujus carnis oculos, quos hostis callidus ad concupiscentiam aperuit, judex justus a contuitu interni sui fulgoris premit. Unde et bene subditur:

CAPUT XXV.

IBID. — Exspectet lucem, et non videat, nec ortum surgentis aurorae. 46. Ortus aurorae est internae veritatis claritas. — Quantalibet namque intentione adhuc peregrina mens satagat videre lucem sicut est, non valet, quia hanc ei damnationis suae caecitas abscondit. (Ortus vero aurorae est internae veritatis claritas, quae semper nobis debet esse nova. Quam nox procul dubio non videt, quia per culpam caeca nostra infirmitas ad illud lumen, quod supernos jam cives irradiat, in carne adhuc corruptibili posita non ascendit. Intus namque haec aurora surgit, ubi angelorum spiritibus divinitatis claritas nova semper ostenditur; et quasi semper gaudium lucis oritur, quod nunquam finitur.) Ortus vero aurorae est illa nova nativitas resurrectionis, qua sancta Ecclesia etiam carne suscitata oritur ad contemplandum lumen aeternitatis. Si enim ipsa carnis nostrae resurrectio quasi quaedam nativitas non esset, de ea Veritas non dixisset: In regeneratione, cum sederit Filius hominis in sede majestatis suae (Matth. XIX, 28; Luc. XXII, 69). Esse ergo hanc ortum vidit, quam regenerationem 123 vocavit. Sed quantalibet virtute electi nunc fulgeant, penetrare nequeunt, quae erit illa novae nativitatis gloria, qua tunc cum carne ad contemplandum aeternitatis lumen ascendunt. Unde et Paulus ait: Quod oculus non vidit, nec auris audivit, nec in cor hominis ascendit, quae praeparavit Deus diligentibus se (I Cor. II, 9). Dicat ergo: Exspectet lucem, et non videat, nec ortum surgentis aurorae; quia spontaneo vitio tenebrata nostra infirmitas, nisi prius per mortem poenae suae debitum solvat, claritatem lucis internae non penetrat. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXVI.

VERS. 10. — Quia non conclusit ostia ventris qui portavit me, nec abstulit mala ab oculis meis. 47. Concupiscentiae ostia consensus noster aperuit, unde innumera mala. — Sicut et superius dictum est, non conclusit, dicit aperuit; et non abstulit, irrogavit. Haec itaque nox, videlicet culpa, ostia ventris aperuit, quia concepto ad peccatum homini desideria concupiscentiae reseravit. Ostia quippe ventris sunt desideria concupiscentiae, de quibus per prophetam dicitur: Intra in cubicula tua, claude ostia tua (Isai. XXVI, 20). Cubicula quippe ingredimur, cum secreta nostrae mentis intramus. Ostia autem claudimus, cum desideria illicita coercemus. Haec itaque concupiscentiae carnalis ostia, dum consensus noster aperuit, ad innumera nos mala corruptionis pertraxit. Unde jam nunc sub mortalitatis pondere gemimus, quamvis ad hoc arbitrio nostro venerimus; quia et judicii sic justitia exigit, ut quod sponte fecimus, inviti toleremus. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXVII.

VERS. 11, 12. — Quare non in vulva mortuus sum; egressus ex utero non statim perii? cur exceptus genibus? cur lactatus uberibus? 48. Quid intelligendum in verbis Job cum se optat abortivum. — Absit nos credere quod beatus Job, tanta spiritus scientia praeditus, tanta interni judicis attestatione laudatus, abortivum se optet interiisse. Sed quia, sicut etiam per remunerationem cognoscitur, intus habet testem suae fortitudinis, intus pensanda sunt ejus pondera locutionis. Unde et primus homo post culpam audacior exstitit, dicens: Mulier, quam dedisti mihi sociam, ipsa dedit mihi de ligno, et comedi (Genes. III, 12). Qui quidem per timorem semetipsum absconsurus fugerat; sed tamen requisitus innotuit quantum etiam timens tumebat. Cum enim ex peccato praesens poena metuitur, et amissa Dei facies non amatur; timor ex tumore est, non ex humilitate. Superbit quippe, qui peccatum, si liceat non puniri, non deserit. 51. Deplorat ac deprecatur quatuor modos quibus homines peccant in opere. — Sed his, sicut dictum est, quatuor modis culpa, ut in corde agitur, etiam in opere perpetratur. Ait enim: Quare non in vulva mortuus sum? Vulva quippe peccantis, est hominis culpa latens, quae occulte peccatorem concipit, et reatum suum adhuc in tenebris abscondit. Egressus ex utero non statim perii? A vulva de utero exitur, cum peccator quae in occulto commiserit, haec etiam in aperto committere non erubescit. Quasi enim ab occultationis suae vulva processerant, de quibus Propheta dicebat: Et peccatum suum quasi Sodoma praedicaverunt, nec absconderunt (Isai. III, 9). Quare exceptus genibus? Quia nimirum peccator, cum jam de iniquitate sua non confunditur, in iniquitate eadem etiam adminiculis pessimae consuetudinis roboratur. Quasi genibus peccator fovetur ut crescat, dum culpa consuetudinibus firmatur ut vigeat. Cur lactatus uberibus? Quia dum prodire culpa in usum coeperit, nimirum se vel falsa spe divinae misericordiae, vel aperta miseria desperationis pascit; ut eo nequaquam ad correptionem redeat, quo vel factorem suum pium sibi inordinate simulat, vel hoc quod fecit, inordinate formidat. Beatus igitur vir humani generis lapsus aspiciat, et quibus praecipitiis mersum sit in foveam iniquitatis intendat, dicens: Quare non in vulva mortuus sum? id est, in ipsa occulta perpetratione peccati, cur a carnis vita mortificare me nolui? Egressus ex utero non statim perii? id est, postquam ad apertam 125 iniquitatem exii, cur me tunc saltem perditum non cognovi? Perisset quippe in suo judicio, si se perditum cognovisset. Quare exceptus genibus? id est, etiam post apertam culpam, cur me adhuc in illa etiam consuetudo suscepit, ut valentiorem ad nequitias redderet, et pravis me usibus sustinens foveret? Cur lactatus uberibus? id est, postquam in culpae consuetudinem veni, cur me ad atrociorem nequitiam vel falsae spei fiducia, vel lacte miserae desperationis enutrivi? Cum enim culpa in usum venerit, ei jam animus etiam si appetat, debilius resistit; quia quot vicibus pravae frequentationis astringitur, quasi tot vinculis ad mentem ligatur. Unde fit ut enervis animus, cum solvi non valet, ad quaedam se solatia falsae consolationis inclinet; quatenus venturum judicem tantae sibi misericordiae spondeat, ut eos etiam quos arguendos invenerit penitus non occidat. Cui rei hoc deterius accidit, quod ei multorum similium lingua consentit, cum multi etiam male gesta laudibus exaggerant: unde fit ut incessanter crescat culpa, favoribus nutrita. Curari autem vulnus negligitur, quod dignum praemio laudis videtur. Unde bene per Salomonem dicitur: Fili mi, si te lactaverint peccatores, ne acquiescas eis (Prov. I, 10). Peccatores etenim lactant, cum vel perpetranda mala blandimentis inferunt, vel perpetrata favoribus extollunt. An non lactantur, de quo per Psalmistam dicitur: Quoniam laudatur peccator in desideriis animae suae: et qui iniqua gerit benedicitur (Psal. IX, 24)? 52. Peccati quartus gradus difficilius corrigitur. — Sciendum quoque est, quod tres illi modi peccantium juxta descensus sui ordinem facilius corriguntur, quartus vero iste difficilius emendatur. Unde et Redemptor noster puellam in domo, juvenem extra portam, in sepulcro autem Lazarum suscitat. Adhuc quippe in domo mortuus jacet, qui latet in peccato. Jam quasi extra portam educitur, cujus iniquitas usque ad inverecundiam publicae perpetrationis aperitur. Sepulturae vero aggere premitur, qui in perpetratione nequitiae etiam usu consuetudinis pressus gravatur. Sed hos ad vitam miseratus revocat, quia plerumque divina gratia, non solum in occultis, sed etiam in apertis iniquitatibus mortuos, et mole pravae consuetudinis pressos, respectus sui lumine illustrat. Quartum vero mortuum Redemptor noster nuntiante discipulo agnoscit, nec tamen suscitat, quia valde difficile est ut is quem post usum malae consuetudinis etiam adulantium linguae excipiunt, a mentis suae morte revocetur. De quo et bene dicitur: Sine mortuos sepelire mortuos suos (Luc. IX, 60). Mortui enim mortuos sepeliunt, cum peccatores peccatorem favoribus premunt. Quid enim aliud est peccare, quam occumbere; et sepelire, quam abscondere? Sed qui peccantem laudibus prosequuntur, exstinctum sub verborum suorum aggere abscondunt. Erat autem et Lazarus mortuus, sed tamen non a mortuis sepultus. Fideles quippe mulieres illum obruerant, quae et ejus mortem vivificatori nuntiabant. Unde et protinus ad lucem rediit, quia cum in peccato animus moritur, citius ad vitam reducitur, si super hunc sollicitae cogitationes vivunt. Aliquando autem, sicut et superius 126 dictum est, falsa spes mentem non intercipit, sed hanc deterior desperatio configit, quae dum omnem spem veniae funditus interimit, erroris lacte animam uberius nutrit.. VERS. 14. — Cum regibus et consulibus terrae. 55. Angelici gaudii socius fuisset. Qui angeli sint reges et consules. — Ex rebus insensibilibus discimus quid de sensibilibus atque intelligibilibus sentiamus. Terra namque aere fecundatur, aer autem ex coeli qualitate disponitur. Sic jumentis homines, hominibus angeli, archangeli vero angelis praesunt. Nam quod jumentis homines praesint, et usu cernimus, et verbis Psalmistae docemur, qui ait: Omnia subjecisti sub pedibus ejus, oves et boves universas, insuper et pecora campi (Psal. VIII, 8). Quia vero angeli hominibus praesint, per prophetam testatur angelus, dicens: Princeps regni Persarum restitit mihi (Dan. X, 13). Quod vero angeli a superiorum angelorum potestatibus dispensentur, Zacharias perhibet propheta, qui ait: Ecce angelus, qui loquebatur in me, egrediebatur; et angelus alius egrediebatur in occursum ejus, et dixit ad eum: Curre, loquere ad puerum istum, dicens: Absque muro habitabitur Jerusalem (Zach. II, 3). Si enim in ipsis officiis sanctorum spirituum nequaquam potestates summae minimas disponerent, nullo modo hoc, quod homini diceret, angelus ab angelo cognovisset. Quia igitur cunctorum conditor omnia per semetipsum tenet, et tamen ad distinguendum pulchrae universitatis ordinem, alia aliis dispensantibus regit, non immerito reges, angelorum spiritus accipimus, qui quo auctori omnium familiarius serviunt, eo subjecta potius regunt. Cum regibus ergo dormiret, quia nimirum jam cum angelis homo quiesceret, si persuasoris linguam sequi noluisset. Qui bene etiam consules vocantur, quia spiritali reipublicae consulunt, dum nos sibi ad regnum socios jungunt. Bene consules vocantur, quia dum ipsis nuntiantibus voluntatem conditoris agnoscimus, in eis procul dubio consultum ab hac angustia nostrae tribulationis invenimus.. Reges quippe sunt sancti praedicatores res Ecclesiae, qui et commissos sibi recte disponere, et sua bene regere corpora sciunt; qui dum desideriorum in se motus temperant, super subjectis cogitationibus lege virtutis regnant. Qui bene etiam terrae consules vocantur. Reges enim sunt, quia sibimetipsis praesident; terrae autem consules, quia exstinctis peccatoribus vitae consultum praebent. Reges sunt, quia semetipsos regere sciunt; terrae sunt consules, quia terrenas mentes per exhortationis suae consilium ad coelestia pertrahunt. An terrae consul non erat, qui dicebat: De virginibus autem praeceptum Domini non habeo, consilium autem do (I Cor. VII, 25)? Et iterum: Beatior erit, si sic permanserit, secundum meum consilium (Ibid., 40). Bene autem subditur:

CAPUT XXX IBID.

— Qui aedificant sibi solitudines. 57. Turbam tumultuantem in se gestant. Luxuriae deditus, iracundus, avarus, superbus, curis saecularibus deserviens. — Omnes enim, qui vel illicita appetunt, vel in hoc mundo videri aliquid volunt, densis cogitationum tumultibus in corde comprimuntur; dumque desideriorum turbas intra se excitant, prostratam mentem pede miserae frequentationis calcant. Alius namque juri se luxuriae subdidit, atque ante mentis oculos schemata turpium perpetrationum fingit: et cum effectus non tribuitur operis, hoc crebrius agitur intentione cogitationis. Voluptatis perfectio quaeritur, et concussus enerviter animus, hinc inde et sollicitus et caecatus, occasionem nequissimae expletionis rimatur. Mens itaque haec quasi quemdam populum patitur, quae insolenti cogitationum tumultu vastatur. Alius irae se dominio stravit; et quid in corde, nisi jurgia, etiam quae desunt peragit? Hic saepe praesentes non videt, absentibus contradicit, intra semetipsum contumelias profert et recipit, receptis autem durius respondet; et cum qui obviet nullus adsit, magnis clamoribus rixas in corde componit. Turbam itaque hic intus sustinet, quem pondus vehemens inflammatae cogitationis premit. Alius juri se avaritiae tradidit, et fastidiens propria, aliena concupiscit: Hic plerumque concupita adipisci non valens, diem quidem in otium, noctem vero in cogitationem versat: torpet ab utili opere, quia fatigatur illicita cogitatione; consilia multiplicat, et sinum mentis cogitationum inventionibus latius expandit; pervenire ad concupita satagit, atque ad obtinenda haec quosdam secretissimos causarum meatus quaerit. Qui mox ut in causa aliquid subtile invenisse se aestimat, jam se obtinuisse quod concupierat, 129 exsultat: jam quid etiam adeptae rei adjungat, excogitat, atque ut in meliori statu debeat excoli, pertractat. Quam quia jam quasi possidet, et quasi ad meliorem speciem adducit, mox insidias invidentium considerat, et quid contra se jurgii moveatur, pensat: exquirit quid respondeat, et cum rem nullam teneat, jam in defensione rei quam appetit, vacuus litigator elaborat. Quamvis ergo nihil de concupita re ceperit, habet tamen in corde jam fructum concupiscentiae, laborem rixae. Gravi itaque populo premitur, qui instigantis avaritiae tumultu vastatur. Alius se tyrannidi superbiae subjecit; et cor miserum, dum contra homines erigit, vitio substernit. Honorum sublimium infulas appetit, exaltari successibus exquirit, totumque quod esse desiderat, sibi apud semetipsum in cogitationibus depingit: jam quasi tribunali praesidet, jam sibi parere obsequia subjectorum videt, jam caeteris eminet, jam aliis mala irrogat, aliis quia irrogaverint recompensat. Jam apud semetipsum stipatus cuneis ad publicum procedit, jam quibus obsequiis fulciatur conspicit; qui tamen haec cogitans solus repit; jam alia conculcat, alia sublevat; jam de conculcatis satisfacit odiis, jam de sublevatis recipit favores. Qui igitur tot phantasmata cordi imprimit, quid iste aliud quam somnium vigilans videt? Quia ergo tot rerum causas quas fingit tolerat, nimirum intrinsecus natas ex desideriis turbas portat. Alius jam illicita refugit, sed tamen bonis mundi carere pertimescit: concessa tenere appetit, videri inter homines minor erubescit, et curat summopere ne inops in domo sit, ne despectus in publico. Exquirit quid sibi sufficiat, quid necessitas subjectorum petat; atque ut sufficienter jura patronatus subditis expleat, patronos quaerit quibus ipse famuletur; sed his dum familiariter jungitur, eorum procul dubio causis implicatur, quibus saepe consentit in illicitis, et mala quae propter semetipsum non appetit, committit propter alia quae non derelinquit. Nam saepe dum honorem suum in hoc mundo imminui trepidat, ea apud majores personas approbat, quae jam per proprium judicium damnat. Is dum sollicite cogitat, quid patronis debeat, quid subjectis; quid sibi augeat, quid affectibus prosit, quasi tanta frequentia turbarum premitur, quanta curarum importunitate laceratur. 60. Sed iste consul an sibi etiam solitudinem aedificet, narret. Ait enim: Ecce elongavi fugiens, et mansi in solitudine (Psal. LIV, 8). Fugiens elongat, quia a turba desideriorum temporalium in alta Dei contemplatione se sublevat. Manet vero in solitudine, quia perseverat in remota mentis intentione. De qua bene solitudine Domino Jeremias ait: A facie manus tuae solus sedebam, quoniam comminatione replesti me (Jerem. XV, 17). Facies quippe manus Dei, est illa percussio justi judicii, qua superbientem hominem a paradiso repulit, et in hac caecitate praesentis exsilii exclusit. Comminatio vero ejus, est terror adhuc supplicii sequentis. Post faciem igitur manus adhuc nos minae terrificant, quia per experimentum judicii jam nos et poena praesentis exsilii perculit, et si peccare non desistimus, aeternis adhuc suppliciis addicit. Consideret ergo vir sanctus, projectus huc, unde homo ceciderit, atque hunc post ista peccantem, quo adhuc justitia judicantis rapit; et cunctas a se desideriorum temporalium turbas ejiciat, seque in magna mentis 131 solitudine abscondat, dicens: A facie manus tuae solus sedebam, quoniam comminatione replesti me. Ac si aperte dicat: Dum considero quid jam per judicii experimentum patior, a tumultu desideriorum temporalium trepidus mentis secessum peto, quia et adhuc acrius illa quae minaris, aeterna supplicia formido. Bene ergo de regibus atque consulibus dicitur: Qui aedificant sibi solitudines. Quia ii qui et se bene regere, et consulere aliis sciunt, quoniam praesentari interim illi intimae quieti non possunt, hanc apud semetipsos per studium tranquillae mentis imitantur Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXI.

VERS. 15. — Cum principibus, qui possident aurum, et replent domos suas argento. 61. Principes sunt rectores Ecclesiae, aurum sapientia, argentum verbum Dei. — Quos alios principes, nisi sanctae Ecclesiae rectores vocat, quos indesinenter in loco praedicatorum praecedentium divina dispensatio subrogat? De quibus eidem Ecclesiae Psalmista ait: Pro patribus tuis nati sunt tibi filii: constitues eos principes super omnem terram (Psal. XLIV, 17). Quid vero aurum, nisi sapientiam appellat? de qua per Salomonem dicitur: Thesaurus desiderabilis requiescit in ore sapientis (Prov. XXI, 20). Aurum nempe sapientiam vidit, quam thesaurum vocavit. Quae et recte auri appellatione signatur; quia sicut auro temporalia, ita sapientia bona aeterna mercantur. Si aurum sapientia non esset, nequaquam Laodiceae Ecclesiae ab angelo diceretur: Suadeo tibi emere a me aurum ignitum (Apoc. III, 18). Aurum quippe emimus, cum accepturi sapientiam, prius obedientiam praebemus. Ad quem videlicet nos contractum bene quidam sapiens excitat, dicens: Concupisti sapientiam? Serva mandata, et Dominus praebebit illam tibi (Eccli. I, 33). Quid autem per domos, nisi conscientiae designantur? Unde sanato cuidam dicitur: Vade in domum tuam (Matth. IX, 6). Ac si aperte audiat: Post exterius miraculum ad conscientiam revertere, et qualem te intrinsecus Deo debeas exhibere, perpende. Quid etiam per argentum, nisi eloquia divina figurantur? de quibus per Psalmistam dicitur: Eloquia Domini, eloquia casta, argentum igne examinatum (Psal. XI, 7). Eloquium Domini argentum igne examinatum dicitur, quia sermo Dei si in corde figitur, tribulationibus probatur.. VERS. 16. — Aut sicut abortivum absconditum non subsisterem: vel qui concepti non viderunt lucem. 63. Sancti ante redemptionis tempus orti, sunt velut abortivi. Plures fuerunt quam quos memorat Moyses — Abortivum, quia ante plenum tempus oritur, exstinctum protinus occultatur. Quos ergo sanctus vir alios abortivos vocat, cum quibus se quiescere potuisse considerat, nisi electos quosque, qui ab ipso mundi primordio ante redemptionis tempus exorti sunt, et tamen huic mundo semetipsos mortificare curaverunt? Qui conscriptae legis tabulas non habentes, quasi ab utero mortui sunt, quia auctorem suum naturali lege timuerunt; et cum venturum Mediatorem crederent, studuerunt summopere, mortificandis voluptatibus, etiam quae scripto non acceperant praecepta servare. Tempus itaque illud, quod juxta mundi initium mortuos huic saeculo patres nostros protulit, quasi abortivi uterus fuit. Ibi namque Abel, qui occidenti se fratri restitisse non legitur (Genes. IV, 8, 24). Ibi Enoch, qui talem se exhibuit, ut ambulaturus cum Domino transferretur (Genes. V, 22, 24). Ibi Noe, qui per hoc, quod divino examini placuit, in mundo mundo superstes fuit (Genes. VII, 23). Ibi Abraham, qui dum peregrinus est in saeculo, factus est amicus Deo (Genes. XII, 1). Ibi Isaac, qui caligantibus carnis oculis, per aetatem quidem praesentia non vidit, sed per virtutem prophetici spiritus in futuris etiam saeculis magna videndi luce radiavit (Genes. XXVII, 1). Ibi Jacob, qui iram fratris humiliter fugit, clementer edomuit; qui prole quidem fecundus exstitit, sed tamen spiritus ubertate fecundior, eamdem prolem sub prophetiae suae vinculis astrinxit (Genes. XXXIII, 4). Bene autem abortivum hoc absconditum dicitur, quia a mundi primordiis, dum quosdam paucos Moyse scribente cognoscimus, pars nobis maxima humani generis occultatur. Neque enim tot justos solummodo usque ad acceptam legem exstitisse credendum est, quot Moyses brevissima descriptione perstrinxit. Quia ergo a mundi primordio edita multitudo bonorum, ex magna parte notitiae nostrae subtrahitur, abortivum hoc absconditum vocatur. Quod et non substitisse dicitur, quia, enumeratis paucis, eorum frequentia nullo apud nos memoriae scripto retinetur.. VERS. 17. — Ibi impii cessaverunt a tumultu, et ibi requieverunt fessi robore. 66. Impii Incarnationis beneficio a gravi labore erepti. — Paulo ante jam diximus quia corda peccantium per hoc quod strepitus desideriorum possidet, gravis cogitationum instigantium tumultus premit. Sed in hac luce, quam concepti minime viderunt, a tumultu suo impii cessare perhibentur, quia nimirum Mediatoris adventum, quem patres in lege positi diu praestolati sunt, ad vitae suae requiem populi gentiles invenerunt, Paulo attestante, qui ait: Quod quaerebat Israel, hoc non est consecutus, electio autem consecuta est (Rom. XI, 7). In hac itaque luce impii a tumultu cessant, dum perversorum mentes, veritate cognita, laboriosa mundi desideria fugiunt, et tranquillitati intimi amoris acquiescunt. An non ad cessationem vocat Lux ipsa, quae ait: Venite ad me omnes qui laboratis et onerati estis, et ego vos reficiam: tollite jugum meum super vos, et discite a me, quia mitis sum et humilis corde, et invenietis requiem animabus vestris; jugum enim meum suave est, et onus meum leve est (Matth. XI, 28, 29, 30)? Quid enim grave mentis nostrae cervicibus imponit, qui vitari omne desiderium quod perturbat praecipit? Quid grave subjectis jubet, qui declinari laboriosa mundi hujus itinera admonet?

Attestante autem Paulo apostolo, Christus pro impiis mortuus est (Rom. V, 6). Sed idcirco dignata est pro impiis ipsa Lux occumbere, ne impii in tenebrarum suarum tumultu remanerent. Contempletur ergo vir sanctus quod Lux per incarnationis suae mysterium ex gravi labore impios eripit, dum ab eorum cordibus desideria pravitatis tergit; contempletur quod conversi quique quietem, quam percipere in aeternitate desiderant, hic jam per tranquillitatem mentis degustant, et dicat: Ibi impii cessaverunt a tumultu, et ibi requieverunt fessi robore. 134 67. Quo plus in amore Dei roboramur, eo magis deficimus a propria virtute. Lux aeterna locus noster. — Omnes enim qui in hoc mundo fortes sunt, robore quasi fortes sunt, non robore defessi. Qui vero in auctoris sui amore roborantur, quo magis in concupita Dei fortitudine convalescunt, eo a propria virtute deficiunt; et quo robustius aeterna appetunt, eo a temporalibus salubri defectione lassantur. Hinc Psalmista amoris sui robore fessus dicebat: Defecit in salutari tuo anima mea (Psal. CXVIII, 81). In salutare enim Dei proficiendo defecerat, quia aeternitatis lucem desiderans, a carnis jam fiducia fractus anhelabat. Hinc rursum dicit: Concupivit, et defecit anima mea in atria Domini (Psal. LXXXIII, 3). Qui nimirum cum diceret, Concupivit, recte subdidit, Et defecit: quia valde minor est divinitatis concupiscentia, quam non mox etiam proprius sequitur defectus. Qui enim ad appetenda aeternitatis atria accenditur, dignum profecto est ut ab hoc temporalitatis amore lassetur, ut tanto frigescat ab studio saeculi, quanto surgit ardentior in amorem Dei. Quem scilicet si perfecte arripit, mundum etiam plene derelinquit; et eo funditus temporalibus moritur, quo ad supernam vitam altius afflatu aeternitatis animatur. An non robore suo fessam se invenerat, quae dicebat: Anima mea liquefacta est, ut locutus est (Cant. V, 6)? Quia nimirum mens dum occultae locutionis aspiratione tangitur, a statu suae fortitudinis infirmata, ipso quo absorbetur desiderio liquatur; et inde se apud semetipsam fessam invenit, unde ultra se esse conspicit fortitudinem, quam conscendit. Hinc propheta, cum visionem Dei se conspexisse diceret, adjungit, Elangui et aegrotavi per dies plurimos (Dan. VIII, 27), quia cum ad virtutem Dei mens stringitur, a fortitudine propria caro lassatur. Hinc Jacob, qui angelum tenuit, uno mox pede claudicavit (Genes. XXXII, 25), quia qui vero amore sublimia respicit, jam in hunc mundum duplicibus incedere desideriis nescit. Uno enim pede innititur, qui solo Dei amore roboratur; et necesse est ut alius marceat, quia, mentis virtute crescente, oportet procul dubio ut carnis fortitudo torpescat. Beatus igitur Job alta fidelium corda respiciat, atque perpendat quem sinum intimae quietis inveniunt, dum a viribus propriis in Deum proficiendo lassantur, et dicat: Ibi requieverunt fessi robore. Ac si aperte insinuet, dicens: Illic requies lucis remunerat, quos hic interius recreans provectus fatigat. Nec movere debet quod lucem nominans, nequaquam subdidit: In hac, sed Ibi. Quam enim continere electos conspicit, quasi locum nostrum hanc esse deprehendit. Unde Psalmista cum incommutabilitatem aeternitatis aspiceret, dicens: Tu autem idem ipse es, et anni tui non deficient (Psal. CI, 28), hunc electorum locum esse denuntiat, subdens: Filii servorum tuorum inhabitabunt ibi (Ibid., 29). Deus enim, qui sine situ omnia continet, nobis ad se venientibus locus non localis manet. Quem locum dum pertingimus, etiam ipsa in hac vita mentis nostrae tranquillitas, quanta fuerit perturbatio videmus; quia etsi jam justi in pravorum comparatione quieti sunt, in aestimatione tamen quietis intimae omni modo quieti non sunt. Unde et bene subditur:

CAPUT XXXIV.

VERS. 18. — Et quondam vincti pariter sine molestia. 68. Vincula dura quibus hic ligantur etiam justi. — Justos enim quamvis nullus desideriorum carnalium tumultus possideat, duris tamen vinculis eos in hac vita positos suae molestia corruptionis 135 ligat. Scriptum quippe est: Corpus quod corrumpitur, aggravat animam, et deprimit terrena inhabitatio sensum multa cogitantem (Sap. IX, 15). Eo itaque ipso quo adhuc mortales sunt, corruptionis suae pondere gravantur, et astricti molestia vincti sunt, quia in illa adhuc libertate vitae incorruptibilis non exsurgunt. Aliud namque de mente, aliud de corpore tolerant, et contra semetipsos quotidie in interno certamine desudant. An non duro molestiae vinculo ligantur, quorum nimirum mens sine labore in ignorantia solvitur, et non nisi cum studio laboris eruditur? Coacta erigitur, libens jacet, ab infimis vix levatur, et tamen elevata protinus labitur. Semetipsam laboriose vincendo, superna conspicit; sed reverberata, lumen, quod se irradiaverat, refugit. An non duro molestiae vinculo ligantur, quos cum accensus spiritus ad sinum pacis intimae pleno desiderio pertrahat, fervente certamine caro perturbat? Quae etsi jam ante faciem velut ex adverso acie erecta non obviat, adhuc tamen a mentis dorso quasi captiva submurmurat: et quamvis timendo, sed tamen turpi strepitu in corde speciem pulchrae quietis foedat. Electi igitur etsi valenter omnia superant, cum securitatem pacis internae desiderant, gravis eis est molestia, adhuc habere quod vincant. Qui his exceptis, ea etiam vincula sustinent, quae gravis exterius necessitas astringit. Esurire quippe, sitire, lassescere, vincula corruptionis sunt: quae scilicet solvi nequeunt, nisi cum in illam immortalitatis gloriam nostra mortalitas permutatur. Replemus etenim refectionibus corpus, ne extenuatum deficiat; extenuamus abstinentia, ne nos repletum premat. Vegetamus hoc motibus, ne situ immobilitatis intereat; sed citius hoc collocando sistimus, ne ipsa sua vegetatione succumbat. Adjumentis hoc vestium tegimus, ne frigus interimat, et quaesita adjumenta projicimus, ne calor exurat. Tot igitur diversitatibus occurrentes quid agimus, nisi corruptibilitati servimus, ut saltem multiplicitas impensi obsequii corpus sustineat, quod anxietas infirmae mutabilitatis gravat? Unde bene per Paulum dicitur: Vanitati enim creatura subjecta est non volens, sed propter eum qui subjecit in spe: quia et ipsa creatura liberabitur a servitute corruptionis, in libertatem gloriae filiorum Dei (Rom. VIII, 20). Vanitati quippe creatura non volens subditur, quia homo, qui ingenitae constantiae statum volens deseruit, pressus justae mortalitatis pondere, nolens mutabilitatis suae corruptioni servit. Sed creatura haec tunc a servitute corruptionis eripitur, cum ad filiorum Dei gloriam incorrupta resurgendo sublevatur. Hic itaque electi molestia vincti sunt, quia adhuc corruptioni suae poena deprimuntur. Sed cum corruptibili carne exuimur, quasi ab his, quibus nunc astringimur, molestiae vinculis relaxamur. Praesentari namque jam Deo cupimus, sed adhuc mortalis corporis obligatione praepedimur. Jure ergo vincti dicimur, quia adhuc incessum 136 nostri desiderii ad Deum liberum non habemus. Unde bene Paulus aeterna desiderans, sed tamen adhuc corruptionis suae sarcinam portans, vinctus clamat: Cupio dissolvi et esse cum Christo (Phil. I, 23). Dissolvi enim non quaereret, nisi se procul dubio vinctum videret. Haec autem vincula, quia certissime rumpenda in resurrectione conspexerat, jam quasi rupta gaudebat Propheta, cum diceret: Dirupisti vincula mea, tibi sacrificabo hostiam laudis (Psal. CXV, 7). Epilogus. — Contempletur itaque vir sanctus, quod conversos peccatores lux interna recipiat, et dicat: Ibi impii cessaverunt a tumultu. Contempletur, quod sancti viri desiderii exercitatione fatigati, altius in illo intimo sinu requiescant, et dicat: Et ibi requieverunt fessi robore. Contempletur, quod cunctis simul corruptionis suae vinculis absoluti, ad illa libertatis gaudia incorrupta perveniant, et dicat: Et quondam vincti pariter sine molestia. Bene autem dicitur, Quondam vincti; quia dum illa semper praesens laetitia cernitur, omne quod erit et defluit, quasi praeteritum jam videtur. Dum enim rerum finis attenditur, omne quod praeterit, quasi jam fuisse pensatur. Sed omnes hi quos illuc quies interna suscipiet, hic interim quid egerint, narret. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXV.

IBID. — Non exaudierunt vocem exactoris. 69. Diabolus exactor. Non exauditur, cum tentanti resistitur. — Quis alius debet nomine exactoris intelligi, nisi importunus ille persuasor, qui humano generi semel nummum deceptionis contulit, et ab hoc quotidie expetere mortis debitum non desistit? Qui in paradiso homini peccati pecuniam commodavit; sed iniquitate crescente, hanc quotidie cum usuris exigit. De hoc exactore in Evangelio Veritas dicit, Et judex tradet te exactori (Luc. XII, 58). Hujus igitur exactoris vox est tentatio miserae suggestionis. Audimus autem vocem exactoris, cum ejus tentatione pulsamur; sed non exaudimus, si pulsanti resistimus. Audit enim, qui tentationem sentit; exaudit vero qui tentationi consentit. Dicatur itaque de justis: Non exaudierent vocem exactoris, quoniam suggestionem ejus etsi audiunt, quia tentantur; non exaudiunt, quia consentire contemnunt. Sed quia quod valde mens amat, etiam in sermone saepius replicat, beatus Job, quia internae pacis frequentiam diligens conspicit, descriptioni ejus iterum servit, dicens:

CAPUT XXXVI.

VERS. 19. — Parvus et magnus ibi sunt, et servus liber a domino suo. 70. Ut hic merita, ita in coelo erunt praemia diversa. — Quia in hac vita nobis est discretio operum, erit in illa procul dubio discretio dignitatum, ut quod hic alius alium merito superat, illic alius alium retributione transcendat. Unde in Evangelio Veritas dicit: In domo Patris mei mansiones multae sunt (Joan. XIV, 2). Sed in eisdem multis mansionibus erit aliquo modo ipsa retributionum diversitas concors; quia tanta vis in illa pace nos sociat, ut quod in se quisque non acceperit, hoc se accepisse in alio exsultet. Unde et non aeque laborantes in vinea (Matth. XX, 10), aeque 137 cuncti denarium sortiuntur. Et quidem apud Patrem mansiones multae sunt, et tamen eumdem denarium dispares laboratores accipiunt; quia una cunctis erit beatitudo laetitiae, quamvis non una sit omnibus sublimitas vitae. Parvum et magnum in hac luce conspexerat, qui ex voce capitis dicebat: Imperfectum meum viderunt oculi tui, et in libro tuo omnes scribentur (Psal. CXXXVIII, 16). Parvum et magnum conspexerat, cum dicebat: Benedixit omnes timentes se Dominus, pusillos cum majoribus (Psal. CXIII, 13). 71. Quis peccati servus, quis ab eo liber, et quod hic nemo ab eo liber. — Bene autem subditur: Et servus liber a domino suo. Scriptum quippe est, Omnis qui peccat, servus est peccati (Joan. VIII, 34); quia nimirum quisquis se pravo desiderio subjicit, iniquitatis dominio dudum libera mentis colla supponit. Sed huic domino contradicimus, cum iniquitati quae nos ceperat, reluctamur; cum consuetudini violenter resistimus, et desideria perversa calcantes contra hanc jus nobis libertatis ingenitae vindicamus; cum culpam poenitendo percutimus, et maculas sordium fletibus lavamus. Plerumque autem jam mens quidem quod perverse egisse se meminit, deplorat; jam prave acta non solum deserit, sed amarissimis etiam lamentis punit; sed tamen dum eorum quae egit reminiscitur, gravi de judicio pavore terretur. Jam se perfecte convertit; sed adhuc se perfecte in securitatem non erigit, quia dum quanta sit districtio extremi examinis pensat, inter spem ac formidinem sollicita trepidat, quia justus judex veniens, quid de perpetratis reputet, quid relaxet, ignorat. Nam quam prava commiserit, meminit; sed an commissa digne defleverit, nescit; ac ne culpae immanitas modum poenitentiae transeat, metuit. Et plerumque culpam jam veritas relaxat, sed mens afflicta adhuc de venia, dum valde sibi est sollicita, trepidat. Servus ergo hic jam fugit dominum, sed liber non est, quia peccatum suum homo jam corrigendo et poenitendo deserit, sed tamen adhuc districtum judicem de ejus retributione pertimescit. Ibi ergo servus a domino liber erit, ubi jam de peccati venia dubietas non erit, ubi jam securam mentem culpae suae memoria non addicit, ubi non sub reatu animus trepidat, sed de ejus in dulgentia liber exsultat. 138 72. An nulla in coelo peccati memoria: qui haec beatitudini non officiat. — Sed si nulla ibi homo peccati sui memoria tangitur, ereptum se unde gratulatur? Aut quomodo largitori gratias refert de venia quam accepit, si interveniente oblivione transactae nequitiae, esse se poenae debitorem nescit? Neque enim neglecte praetereundum est quod Psalmista ait: Misericordias tuas, Domine, in aeternum cantabo (Psal. LXXXVIII, 1). Quomodo enim Dei misericordias in aeternum cantat, si se fuisse miserum ignorat? Et si miseriae transactae non meminit, unde largitati misericordiae laudes reddit? Sed rursum quaerendum est, quomodo electorum mens perfecta esse in beatitudine poterit, si hanc inter gaudia memoria sui reatus tangit? Aut quomodo perfectae lucis clarescit gloria, quam reducta ad animum obumbrat culpa? Sed sciendum est quia sicut saepe nunc tristium laeti reminiscimur, ita tunc transactae nequitiae sine laesione nostrae beatitudinis recordamur. Plerumque enim incolumitatis tempore ad memoriam dolores praeteritos sine dolore reducimus; et quo aegros recolimus, eo nos incolumes plus amamus. Erit ergo et in illa beatitudine culpae memoria, non quae mentem polluat, sed quae nos arctius laetitiae astringat; ut dum doloris sui animus sine dolore reminiscitur, et debitorem se medico verius intelligat, et eo magis acceptam salutem diligat, quo de molestia meminit, quid evasit. In illa itaque laetitia sic tunc sine taedio mala nostra conspicimus, sicut nunc in luce positi, sine ulla cordis caligine animo tenebras videmus; quia etsi obscurum est quod mente cernimus, de judicio est hoc luminis, non de passione caecitatis. Et in aeternum ergo laudem misericordiae largitori nostro referimus, et nequaquam miseriae conscientia gravamur; quia dum mala nostra sine aliquo mentis malo respicimus, et nunquam erit quod corda laudantium de transactis iniquitatibus polluat, et semper erit quod haec ad laudem liberatoris accendat. Quia ergo internae lucis requies sic in se magnos sublevat, ut tamen nec parvulos derelinquat, dicatur recte: Parvus et magnus ibi sunt. Quia autem sic ibi conversi peccatoris animus culpae suae memoria tangitur, ut tamen nulla ejusdem memoriae confusione deprimatur, congrue subjungitur: Et servus liber a domino suo.

LIBER QUINTUS.

Reliquam capitis tertii partem a XX versu, totum caput quartum, et quinti duos priores versus enarrat.

CAPUT PRIMUM.

1. Sancti hic prospera magis formidare, quam adversa. — Cum valde occulta sint divina judicia, cur in hac vita nonnunquam bonis male sit, malis bene, tunc occultiora sunt, cum et bonis hic bene est, et malis male. Nam cum bonis male est, malis bene, hoc fortasse deprehenditur, quia et boni, si qua deliquerunt, hic recipiunt, ut ab aeterna plenius damnatione liberentur; et mali bona, quae pro hac vita faciunt, hic inveniunt, ut ad sola in posterum tormenta pertrahantur. Unde et ardenti in inferno diviti dicitur: Memento, fili, quia recepisti bona in vita tua, et Lazarus similiter mala (Luc. XVI, 25). At cum bonis hic bene est, et malis male, incertum valde fit utrum boni idcirco bona accipiant, ut provocati ad aliquid melius crescant; an justo latentique judicio hic suorum operum remunerationem percipiant, ut a praemiis vitae sequentis inanescant; et utrum malos idcirco adversa feriant, ut ab aeternis suppliciis corrigentia defendant; an hic eorum poena incipiat, ut quandoque complenda eos ad ultima gehennae 139 tormenta perducat. Quia ergo inter divina judicia gravi incertitudinis suae caligine humana mens premitur, sancti viri cum sibi suppetere prospera hujus mundi conspiciunt, pavida suspicione turbantur. Timent enim ne hic laborum suorum fructus recipiant; timent ne quod divina justitia latens in eis vulnus aspiciat, et exterioribus eos muneribus cumulans, ab intimis repellat. Cum vero taciti cogitant quod nec bona agunt, nisi ut soli Domino placeant, nec in ipsa affluentia suae prosperitatis exsultant, minus quidem de prosperis occulta contra se judicia metuunt, sed tamen eadem prospera, quia se ab intima intentione praepediunt, aegre ferunt; et moleste praesentis vitae blandimenta tolerant, quia per haec se utcunque tardari in interno desiderio non ignorant. Plus enim in hoc mundo honor quam despectio occupat, et magis prosperitatis sublimitas quam necessitatis adversitas gravat. Per hanc namque nonnunquam cum homo exterius premitur, ad concupiscenda quae intus sunt, liberius relaxatur. Per illam vero animus, dum multis parere cogitur, a desiderii sui cursu retinetur. Unde fit ut sancti viri magis in hoc mundo prospera quam adversa formident. Sciunt namque quia mens dum blanda occupatione premitur, aliquando libens ad exteriora derivatur. Sciunt quia saepe sic hanc clandestina cogitatio decipit, ut quomodo permutetur ignoret. Pensant autem quae sint aeterna bona quae cupiunt, et cognoscunt quam nihil sit omne quod blandum temporaliter arridet; cunctaque hujus mundi prospera mens eorum eo aegre tolerat, quo supernae felicitatis est amore sauciata, tantoque magis in praesentis dulcedinis aspernatione erigitur, quanto hanc conspicit, quia furtive sibi in aeternae gloriae despectu blanditur. Unde beatus Job cum supernam requiem contemplatus diceret: Parvus et magnus ibi sunt, et servus liber a domino suo, illico adjungit:

CAPUT II.

VERS. 20. — Quare data est misero lux? 2. Aeterna contemplantes terrenam prosperitatem refugiunt. — In Scriptura sacra nonnunquam lucis appellatione prosperitas, noctis autem nomine hujus mundi adversitas designatur. Unde et bene per Psalmistam dicitur: Sicut tenebrae ejus, ita et lumen ejus (Psal. CXXXVIII, 12). Quia enim sancti viri ita prosperitatem saeculi despicientes calcant, sicut et adversitatem ejus calcantes tolerant, per magnam mentis celsitudinem mundi sibi et adversa et prospera substernentes dicunt: Sicut tenebrae ejus, ita et lumen ejus. Ac si apertius dicant: Sicut intentionis nostrae fortitudinem ejus tristia non premunt, ita hanc nec blanda corrumpunt. Sed quia haec, ut diximus, bonorum mentem etiam cum non sublevant, perturbant, sancti viri, qui se in hujus exsilii aerumna miseros cognoscunt, clarescere in ejus prosperitate refugiunt. Unde bene nunc dicitur: Quare data est misero lux? Lux enim miseris datur, quando ii qui sublimia contemplantes, esse se in hac peregrinatione miseros agnoscunt, claritatem transitoriae prosperitatis accipiunt. Et cum valde defleant quia tarde ad patriam redeunt, tolerare insuper honoris onera compelluntur. Amor eos aeternorum conterit, et gloria de temporalibus arridet. Qui dum cogitant 140 quae sint quae in infimis tenent, et quae sint quae de sublimibus non vident; quae sint quae in terra fulciunt, quae autem de coelestibus perdiderunt, prosperitatis suae moerore mordentur; quia etsi vident nequaquam se ab ea funditus opprimi, pensant tamen sollicite cogitationem suam in amore Domini et in ejus dispensatione partiri. Unde bene cum dicit: Quare data est misero lux? protinus adjungit:

CAPUT III.

VERS. 20. — Et vita his qui in amaritudine animae sunt. 3. Hic in amaritudine sunt electi et reprobi; quo discrimine. — In amaritudine quippe animae sunt omnes electi, quia vel punire flendo non desinunt quae deliquerunt, vel gravi se moerore afficiunt, quia longe huc a facie conditoris projecti, adhuc in aeternae patriae gaudiis non sunt. De quorum corde per Salomonem bene dicitur: Cor, quod novit amaritudinem animae suae, in gaudio illius non miscebitur extraneus (Prov. XIV, 10). In amaritudine namque sunt et corda reproborum, quia ipsis etiam pravis suis desideriis affliguntur; sed eamdem amaritudinem nesciunt, quia pensare quod tolerant, sponte sua excaecati non possunt. At contra cor bonorum amaritudinem suam novit, quia aerumnam exsilii, in qua projectum laceratur, intelligit; et quam sint tranquilla quae perdidit, quam confusa in quibus cecidit, sentit. Sed hoc amaricatum cor ad gaudium suum quandoque reducitur, atque in ejus gaudio extraneus non miscetur; quia is qui nunc ab hoc moerore cordis foras se per desideria ejicit, seclusus tunc ab illa intima ejus solemnitate remanebit. 4. Quis mortuus mundo, et cui mundus mortuus. — Hi itaque qui in amaritudine animae sunt, mori mundo funditus concupiscunt; ut sicut in saeculo ipsi nihil appetunt, ita jam a saeculo nulla obligatione teneantur. Et plerumque contingit ut jam homo mundum mente non teneat, sed tamen mundus hominem occupationibus astringat: et ipse quidem mundo jam mortuus est, sed ipsi mundus adhuc mortuus non est. Quasi enim adhuc vivus mundus eum conspicit, dum alio intentum in suis actibus rapere contendit. Unde bene Paulus, cum et ipse saeculum perfecte despiceret, et talem se factum videret, quem jam hoc saeculum concupiscere omnino non posset, ruptis hujus vitae vinculis liber dicit: Mihi mundus crucifixus est, et ego mundo (Gal. VI, 14). Mundus quippe ei crucifixus fuerat, quia hunc cordi suo jam mortuum non amabat. Sed et se ipsum mundo crucifixerat, quia talem se ei exhibere studuit, ut ab eo quasi mortuus concupisci non posset. Si enim uno in loco sint mortuus et vivens; etsi mortuus vivum non videt, vivus tamen mortuum videt; si vero utrique sint mortui, alter alterum nequaquam videt. Ita qui jam mundum non amat, sed tamen ab illo vel non volens amatur, etsi ipse velut mortuus mundum non videt, hunc tamen mundus adhuc non mortuus videt. Si vero nec ipse in amore mundum retinet, nec rursum a mundi amore retinetur, vicissim sibi utrique exstincti sunt; quia dum alter alterum non appetit, quasi mortuum mortuus non attendit. Quia igitur Paulus nec mundi gloriam quaerebat, nec a mundi gloria ipse quaerebatur, et se mundo, et mundum sibi crucifixum esse gloriatur. Quod quia multi appetunt, sed tamen usque ad culmen exstinctionis 141 omni modo non assurgunt, recte gementes dicunt: Quare data est misero lux, et vita his qui in amaritudine animae sunt? Vita quippe amaricatis datur, cum hujus mundi gloria tristibus gementibusque tribuitur. In qua nimirum vita poena se validissimi timoris afficiunt, quia etsi ipsi mundum non tenent, adhuc tamen tales esse se metuunt, qui a mundo teneantur; quia nisi ei quantulumcunque viverent, hos ad usum suum procul dubio non amaret. Mare enim viva corpora in semetipso retinet; nam mortua extra se protinus expellit. Sequitur:

CAPUT IV.

VERS. 21. — Qui exspectant mortem, et non venit. 5. Mori saeculo appetentes, saepe humanis ministeriis servire coguntur. Non sine suo et aliorum lucro. — Desiderant quippe mortificare se funditus, atque ab omni vita gloriae temporalis exstinguere; sed occultis saepe Dei judiciis vel praeesse in regimine, vel occupari injunctis honoribus compelluntur, atque inter haec mortificationem plenissimam indesinenter exspectant. Sed exspectata mors non venit, quia eorum usus temporali gloriae etiam nolens vivit, quam tamen pro divino timore tolerant. Et intus quidem servant desiderium pietatis, foris autem explent ministerium ordinis; quatenus nec a perfectione per intentionem recedant, nec dispositioni conditoris per superbiam contradicant. Mira enim divinitatis pietate agitur, cum is qui perfecto corde ad contemplationem tendit, humanis ministeriis occupatur; ut et multis infirmioribus ejus mens perfecta proficiat, et quo se ipse imperfectum respicit, inde ad humilitatis culmen perfectior assurgat. Nonnunquam etenim sancti viri unde desideriorum suorum detrimenta tolerant, inde majora lucra, conversis aliis, reportant; quia dum eis vacare ut appetunt non licet, rapere secum alios, quibus admiscentur, libet. Fit ergo mira dispensatione pietatis ut unde se destructiores aestimant, inde locupletiores ad coelestis patriae constructionem surgant. 6. Desideria pia saepe Deus explere differt, ut crescant. — Nonnunquam vero idcirco ad concepta desideria minime perveniunt, ut ipsa interveniente tarditate, ad eadem desideria laxato mentis sinu dilatentur; et quae extenuari fortasse impleta poterant, magna dispositione agitur, ut repulsa crescant. Sic quippe mortificari appetunt, ut jam perfecte, si liceat, conditoris sui faciem contemplentur. Sed eorum desiderium differtur, ut proficiat; et tarditatis suae sinu nutritur, ut crescat. Unde bene sponsa in sponsi sui desiderio anhelans clamat: In lectulo meo per noctes quaesivi quem diligit anima mea; quaesivi illum, et non inveni (Cant. III, 1). Abscondit se sponsus cum quaeritur, ut non inventus ardentius quaeratur; et differtur quaerens sponsa, ne inveniat, ut tarditate sua capacior reddita, multiplicius quandoque inveniat quod quaerebat. Unde beatus Job cum diceret: Exspectant mortem, et non venit, ut hoc ipsum quaerentium desiderium subtilius expleret, illico adjungit: CAPUT. IBID. — Quasi effodientes thesaurum. 7. Crescunt, ubi finis propinquior. — Omnes namque qui fodiendo thesaurum quaerunt, cum fodere altius coeperint, ad laborem instantius inardescunt; quia quo se thesauro abscondito jam jamque appropinquare aestimant, eo in effossione enixius laborant. Qui igitur plene 142 mortificationem suam appetunt, quasi effodientes thesaurum quaerunt; quia quanto fiunt viciniores ad finem, tanto se exhibent ardentiores in opere. Laborando ergo non deficiunt, sed magis ad usum laboris crescunt; quia quo jam praemia propinquiora considerant, eo in opere delectabilius exsudant. Unde bene Paulus quibusdam absconditum aeternae patriae thesaurum quaerentibus dicit: Non deserentes collectionem nostram, sicut est consuetudinis quibusdam, sed consolantes, et tanto magis, quanto videritis appropinquantem diem (Hebr. X, 25). Laborantem quippe consolari, est pariter in labore persistere, quia sublevatio laboris est visio collaborantis: sicut cum in itinere comes jungitur, via quidem non abstrahitur, sed tamen de societate comitis labor itineris leviatur. Dum itaque Paulus consolantes se in laboribus quaereret, adjunxit dicens: Tanto magis, quanto videritis appropinquantem diem. Ac si diceret: Eo labor crescat, quo ipsa jam praemia laboris appropinquant, velut si aperte dicat: Thesaurum quaeritis? sed eo fodere ardentius debetis, quo jam juxta quaesitum aurum fodiendo pervenistis. 8. Mortui mundo se intra se a terrenis abscondunt. — Quamvis hoc quod dicitur: Exspectant mortem, et non venit, quasi effodientes thesaurum, intelligi et aliter potest. Quia enim perfecte mori mundo non possumus, nisi intra mentis nostrae invisibilia a visibilibus abscondamur, recte ii qui mortificationem suam appetunt, thesaurum effodientibus comparantur. Mundo enim per invisibilem sapientiam morimur, de qua per Salomonem dicitur: Si quaesieris illam quasi pecuniam, et sicut thesauros effoderis eam (Prov. II, 4, 5). Sapientia quippe in rerum superficie non jacet; quia in invisibilibus latet. Et tunc mortificationem nostram sapientiam contingentes apprehendimus, si relictis visibilibus in invisibilibus abscondamur; si sic hanc, cor effodientes, quaerimus, ut omne quod terrenum mens cogitat, a semetipsa, manu sanctae discretionis ejiciat, et thesaurum virtutis, qui se latebat, agnoscat. Facile enim in se thesaurum invenit, si eam quae se male presserat molem a se terrenae cogitationis repellit. Quia autem quaesitam mortem sicut thesaurum dicit, recte subjungit:

CAPUT VI.

VERS. 22. — Gaudentque vehementer, cum invenerint sepulcrum. 9. Divina contemplatio sepulcrum est in quo mens mundo mortua quiescit. — Sicut enim sepulcrum locus est quo absconditur corpus, ita divina contemplatio quoddam sepulcrum mentis est, quo absconditur anima. Quasi enim huic adhuc mundo vivimus, cum mente in eum foras vagamur; sed mortui in sepulcro abscondimur, cum mortificati exterius, in secreto internae contemplationis celamur. Sancti igitur viri ab importunitate desideriorum temporalium, a tumultu inutilium curarum, a clamore perstrepentium perturbationum, semetipsos sacri verbi gladio mortificare non desinunt, atque intus ante Dei faciem in sinu mentis abscondunt. Unde bene per Psalmistam dicitur: Abscondes eos in abscondito vultus tui, a conturbatione hominum (Psal. XXX, 21). Quod quamvis perfecte postmodum fiat, etiam nunc ex magna parte agitur, cum a temporalium desideriorum tumultibus delectatione in interiora rapiuntur; 143 ut mens eorum dum in amorem Dei tota tenditur, nulla inutili perturbatione laceretur. Hinc est quod Paulus per contemplationem mortuos et quasi in sepulcro absconditos discipulos viderat, quibus dicebat: Mortui enim estis, et vita vestra abscondita est cum Christo in Deo (Col. III, 3, 4). Qui ergo mortem quaerit, gaudet dum sepulcrum invenit, quia qui mortificare se appetit, valde ad inventam requiem contemplationis hilarescit; ut exstinctus mundo lateat, et a cunctis exteriorum rerum perturbationibus intra sinum se intimi amoris abscondat. 10. Mortui olim cum divitiis sepulti. — Si vero ad hoc quod thesaurus effodi dicitur, etiam sepulcri inventio subinfertur, hoc necesse est ut intentio nostra conspiciat, quod antiqui mortuos cum divitiis obruebant. Qui igitur thesaurum quaerit, gaudet cum sepulcrum invenerit, quia sapientiam perquirentes, cum sacrae Scripturae paginas volvimus, cum exempla praecedentium perscrutamur, quasi ex sepulcro gaudium sumimus, quia mentis divitias apud mortuos invenimus: qui quia huic mundo perfecte exstincti sunt, in occulto cum divitiis requiescunt. Sepulcro ergo dives efficitur, qui per exempla justorum in contemplationis virtute sublevatur. Sed cum requirens dicat: Quare data est misero lux? cur hoc ipsum requirere praesumat, insinuat dicens:

CAPUT VII.

VERS. 23. — Viro, cujus abscondita est via, et circumdedit eum Deus tenebris. 11. Ignorat recte agens utrum perseveraturus sit. — Via enim sua viro abscondita est, quia etsi jam in qua sit vitae qualitate considerat, adhuc tamen ad quem finem tendat, ignorat. Etsi jam superna appetit, etsi plenis haec desideriis quaerit, adhuc tamen si in eisdem desideriis permaneat, nescit. Peccata quippe deserentes, ad justitiam tendimus; et unde venimus, novimus; sed quo perveniamus, ignoramus. Quid hesterna die fuimus, scimus; sed quid contingat crastina nos esse, nescimus. Via ergo sua viro abscondita est, quia sic pedem ponit operis, ut tamen praevidere nequeat exitum consummationis ejus.. VERS. 24. — Antequam comedam, suspiro. 14. Lacrymas saepe excipit gaudium contemplationis. — Comedere namque est animae, supernae lucis contemplationibus pasci. Suspirat ergo antequam comedat, quia prius gemitibus tribulationis afficitur, et postmodum contemplationis refectione satiatur. Nisi enim suspiret, non comedit; quia qui se in hoc exsilio per desideriorum coelestium lamenta non humiliat, aeternae patriae gaudia non degustat. A veritatis enim pabulo jejuni sunt, qui in hac peregrinationis inopia laetantur. Suspirat autem qui comedit, quia quos amor veritatis afficit, etiam refectio contemplationis pascit. Suspirans Propheta comedebat, cum diceret: Fuerunt mihi lacrymae meae panes (Psal. XIV, 4). Luctu enim suo anima pascitur, cum ad superna gaudia flendo sublevatur, et intus quidem doloris sui gemitus tolerat; sed eo refectionis pabulum percipit, quo vis amoris per lacrymas emanat. Unde et eamdem lacrymarum vim beatus Job adhuc sequitur, subdens:

CAPUT IX.

IBID. — Et quasiinundantes aquae, sic rugitus meus. 15. Quae sanctis lugendi et trepidandi causae. — Aquae cum inundant, cum impetu veniunt; et crescentibus multipliciter voluminibus, intumescunt. Electi vero dum mentis suae oculis divina judicia opponunt, dum de occulta super se sententia trepidant, dum se ad Deum pervenire posse confidunt, sed tamen ne non perveniant metuunt, dum praeteritorum suorum recolunt, 145 quae deflent, dum quae sibi adhuc futura sunt, quia nesciunt, pertimescunt; quasi quaedam in eis aquarum more volumina colliguntur, quae in moeroris rugitus quasi in subjecta littora defluunt. Vir igitur sanctus vidit, quanta sint in lamentis poenitentiae volumina cogitationum; atque ipsas moeroris undas inundantes aquas vocavit, dicens: Et quasi inundantes aquae, sic rugitus meus. [Vet. V.] Nonnunquam vero justi, sicut et paulo superius diximus, in ipsis bonis operibus positi trepidant, ac ne in eisdem occulto aliquo errore displiceant, continuis lamentis vacant. Quos cum divina subito flagella corripiunt, auctoris sui se gratiam offendisse suspicantur, quia vel infirmitatibus praepediti, vel amaritudinibus pressi, ad impendenda proximis pia opera non assurgunt. Et cor in lamentum vertitur, quia corpus a devotionis suae ministerio retardatur. Cumque se mercedem non augere considerant, etiam transacta opera displicuisse formidant. Unde bene beatus Job cum rugitum suum quasi inundantes aquas diceret, illico adjunxit:

CAPUT X.

VERS. 25. — Quia timor quem timebam evenit mihi, et quod verebar, accidit. 16. Judicia Dei quam metuenda. — Justi igitur deflent et pavent, et magnis se lamentis cruciant, quia deseri formidant; et quamvis de correptione sua gaudeant, eorum tamen trepidam mentem correptio ipsa perturbat; ne malum quod tolerant, non pia percussio disciplinae sit, sed animadversio justa vindictae. Quod bene Psalmista considerans ait: Quis novit potestatem irae tuae (Psal. LXXXIX, 11)? Potestas quippe divinae irae nostra non potest mente comprehendi, quia ejus dispensatio obscuris super nos dispositionibus, saepe unde aestimatur deserere, inde nos recipit; et unde nos recipere creditur, inde derelinquit; ut plerumque hoc fiat gratia, quod ira dicitur, et hoc aliquando ira sit, quod gratia putatur. Nonnullos enim flagella corrigunt, nonnullos ad impatientiae vesaniam perducunt; et alios prospera quia demulcent, ab insania mitigant; alios quia elevant, funditus ab omni spe conversionis eradicant. Cunctos autem vitia ad ima pertrahunt: sed tamen quidam eo ab his facilius redeunt, quo se in eis corruisse altius erubescunt. Et semper virtutes ad superna sublevant; sed nonnunquam quidam dum tumorem de virtute concipiunt, per ipsum tramitem ascensionis cadunt. Quia ergo potestas divinae irae minime cognoscitur, in cunctis necesse est ut sine cessatione timeatur. Sequitur:

CAPUT XI.

VERS. 26. — Nonne dissimulavi? nonne silui? nonne quievi? et venit super me indignatio. 17. Quae cogitando, loquendo, agendo peccare soleant in potestate constituti. — Quamvis quolibet in loco positi, cogitando, loquendo, agendo peccemus, tunc tamen per tria haec animus effrenatius rapitur, cum mundi hujus prosperitate sublevatur. Nam cum praeire se potestate caeteros conspicit, alta de se elate cogitans sentit. Et cum auctoritati vocis a nullo resistitur, lingua licentius per abrupta diffrenatur. Cumque facere quod libet, licet, juste sibi omne aestimat licere, quod libet. Sed sancti viri cum mundi hujus potestate fulciuntur, tanto sub majore mentis disciplina se redigunt, quanto sibi per impatientiam potestatis suaderi illicita quasi licentius sciunt. Cor namque a consideranda sua gloria reprimunt, linguam ab immoderata 146 locutione restringunt, opus ab inquietudinis vagatione custodiunt. Saepe enim qui in potestate sunt, ea quae recte faciunt, quia elate cogitant, amittunt; dumque se ad cuncta utiles aestimant, etiam impensae utilitatis sibi meritum damnant. Ut enim cujuslibet facta digniora sint, necesse est ut ei apud se semper indigna videantur, ne eadem bona actio agentis cor sublevet, et sublevando plus auctorem de elatione dejiciat, quam ipsos quibus forte impenditur juvet. Hinc est enim quod rex Babyloniae, dum elata mente apud se tacitus volveret, dicens: Nonne haec est Babylon, quam ego aedificavi (Dan. IV, 27)? in irrationale animal protinus versus est. Quod enim factus fuerat perdidit, quia humiliter noluit dissimulare quod fecit. Et quia elatione cogitationis se super homines extulit, ipsum, quem communem cum hominibus habuit, sensum hominis amisit. Saepe vero qui in potestate sunt, ad subjectorum passim contumelias erumpunt; et hoc quod invigilantes regimini serviunt, per linguae procacitatem perdunt, minori scilicet formidine judicis verba pensantes, quia qui sine causa fratri, fatue dixerit, gehennae se ignibus addicit (Math. V, 22). Saepe ii qui in potestate sunt, dum sese a licitis retinere nesciunt, ad illicita opera et inquieta dilabuntur. Solus enim in illicitis non cadit, qui se aliquando et a licitis caute restringit. Qua videlicet constrictione religatum bene se Paulus insinuat, dicens: Omnia mihi licent, sed non omnia expediunt (I Cor. VI, 12). Atque ut ex ipsa religatione ostenderet in quanta se mentis libertate dilataret, illico adjunxit: Omnia mihi licent, sed ego sub nullius redigar potestate (Ibid., 12). Cum enim mens concepta desideria sequitur, servire rebus convincitur, quarum amore superatur. Sed Paulus, cui cuncta licent, sub nullius potestate se redigit, quia semetipsum etiam a licitis restringendo, ea quae delectata premerent, despecta transcendit. 18. Quomodo Job haec vitavit. — Beatus igitur Job, ut nos erudiat, qualis in potestate fuit innotescat, dicens: Nonne dissimulavi? Potestas namque cum habetur, et cogitanda est ad utilitatem, et dissimulanda propter tumorem; quatenus is qui ea utitur, et ut prodesse debeat, posse se sciat; et ut extolli non debeat, posse se nesciat. Qualis vero in ore fuerit, adjungat dicens: Nonne silui? Qualis erga illicita opera, adhuc subjiciat: Nonne quievi? Potest autem silere et quiescere, adhuc subtilius perscrutari. Silere namque est mentem a terrenorum desideriorum voce restringere. Vis enim magni clamoris est tumultus cordis. 19. Qui praesunt, occupationes temporales, ut Deo vacent, intermittere debent. — Quiescunt quoque qui bene in potestate sunt, cum terrenarum actionum strepitus pro divino amore intermittendo postponunt; ne dum ima indesinenter occupant, cor funditus a summis cadat. Sciunt enim quia nequaquam mens ad superna attollitur, si curarum tumultibus continue in infimis occupatur. Quid enim de Deo occupata obtineat, quae de illo apprehendere aliquid etiam vacans laborat. Bene autem per Psalmistam dicitur: Vacate et videte, quoniam ego sum Deus (Psal. XLV, 11); quia qui vacare Deo negligit, suo sibi judicio lumen ejus visionis abscondit. Hinc etiam per Moysen dicitur ut pisces qui pennulas non habent non edantur (Lev. XI, 12, 13). Pisces namque qui habent pennulas, saltus dare super aquas solent. 147 Soli ergo in electorum corpore quasi cibus transeunt, qui in eo quod imis deserviunt, aliquando ad superna conscendere mentis saltibus sciunt, ne semper in profundis curarum lateant, et nulla eos amoris summi quasi liberi aeris aura contingat. Qui ergo rebus temporalibus occupantur, tunc bene exteriora disponunt, cum sollicite ad interiora refugiunt; cum nequaquam foras perturbationum strepitus diligunt, sed apud semetipsos intus in tranquillitatis sinu requiescunt. Dissimulanda ergo sunt quae exterius favent, reprimenda quae interius perstrepunt, declinanda quae quasi necessaria involvunt; et tamen in his omnibus adhuc districti examinis flagella metuenda, quia et ipsa nostra perfectio culpa non caret, nisi hanc severus judex in subtili lance examinis misericorditer penset. Quid est namque mens justi, nisi arca testamenti? Quae gestata a bobus calcitrantibus inclinatur; quia nonnunquam etiam qui bene praeest, dum subjectorum populorum confusione concutitur, ad dispensationis condescensionem ex sola dilectione permovetur. Sed in hoc, quod dispensatorie agitur, inclinatio ipsa fortitudinis, casus putatur imperitis. Unde et nonnulli subditi contra hanc, manum reprehensionis mittunt, sed a vita protinus ipsa sua temeritate deficiunt. Levites ergo quasi adjuvans, manum tetendit, sed delinquens vitam perdidit, quia dum infirmi quique fortium facta corripiunt, ipsi a viventium sorte reprobantur. Aliquando etiam sancti viri quaedam minimis condescendentes dicunt, quaedam vero summa contemplantes proferunt; dumque vim vel condescensionis vel altitudinis nesciunt, audacter haec stulti reprehendunt. Et quid est justum de sua condescensione velle corrigere, nisi inclinatam arcam superba reprehensionis manu relevare? Quid est justum de incognita locutione reprehendere, nisi motum ejus fortitudinis, erroris lapsum putare? Sed perdit vitam, qui arcam Dei tumide sublevat, quia nequaquam quis sanctorum corrigere recta praesumeret, nisi de se prius meliora sensisset. Unde et Levites isdem recte Oza dicitur, quod videlicet robustus Domini interpretatur; quia praesumptores quique nisi audaci mente robustos se in

Domino crederent, nequaquam meliorum facta vel dicta velut infirma judicarent. Amici igitur Job, dum contra eum quasi in Dei defensionem prosiliunt, divini praecepti regulam superbientes excedunt. 25. Si aliquid in his displicet, non est reticendum, sed magna humilitate promendum. — Cum vero quaedam facta meliorum deterioribus displicent, nequaquam hoc quod mentem movet, reticendum est, sed cum magna humilitate proferendum; quatenus intentio pie sentientis eo vere servet formam rectitudinis, quo per iter graditur humilitatis. Et libere ergo dicenda sunt quae sentimus, et valde humiliter promenda quae dicimus, ne et quae recte intendimus, haec elate proferendo non recta faciamus. Paulus auditoribus suis multa humiliter dixerat; sed de ipsa exhortatione humili placare eos adhuc humilius satagebat, dicens: Rogo autem vos, fratres, ut sufferatis verbum solatii; etenim perpaucis scripsi vobis (Hebr. XIII, 22). Ephesiis quoque Mileti valedicens, afflictis ac gementibus, humilitatem suam ad memoriam revocat, dicens: Vigilate, memoria retinentes quoniam per triennium nocte ac die non cessavi cum lacrymis monens unumquemque vestrum (Act. XX, 31). Eisdem rursum per Epistolam dicit: Obsecro vos, fratres, ego vinctus in Domino, ut digne ambuletis vocatione, qua vocati estis (Ephes. IV, 1). Hinc ergo colligat, si quando aliquid recte sentit, quanta 150 humilitate debeat magistro loqui discipulus; si ipse magister gentium in his quae cum auctoritate praedicat, tam submisse discipulos rogat. Hinc unusquisque colligat, eis a quibus bene vivendi exempla percepit, hoc quod bene intelligit, quam humiliter dicat; si Paulus illis humili se voce subdidit, quos ad vitam ipse suscitavit. 26. Humiliter loqui nesciens consolationis regulam ignorat. — Eliphaz autem, qui primus amicorum loquitur, quamvis ad consolandum pietate veniat, humilitatem tamen locutionis deserens, regulam consolationis ignorat. Qui dum loquendi custodiam negligit, usque ad afflicti contumelias excedit, dicens: Tigris periit eo quod non haberet praedam. Rugitus leonis, et vox leaenae, et dentes catulorum leonum dissipati sunt (Job. IV, 11). Beatum videlicet Job nomine tigridis, quasi vitio varietatis notans, per leonis rugitum ejusdem viri terrorem, per leaenae vocem loquacitatem conjugis, per dissipatos vero dentes catulorum leonum destructam filiorum edacitatem signans. Unde et bene amicorum sensum, qui in tumida correptione se extulit, sententia divina reprehendit, dicens: Non estis locuti coram me rectum, sicut servus meus Job (Job. XXXII, 7).. CAP. IV. VERS. 1, 2. — Respondens autem Eliphaz Themanites, dixit: Si coeperimus loqui tibi, forsitan moleste accipies. 29. Haereticorum verba blanda primum, post aspera. — Jam superius dicta sunt quae his vocabulorum interpretationibus exprimantur. Quia ergo festine ad indiscussa tendimus, prolata replicare devitamus. Hoc itaque est solerter intuendum, quod ii qui haereticorum speciem tenent, loqui molliter inchoant, dicentes: Si coeperimus loqui tibi, forsitan moleste accipies. Exasperare quippe haeretici auditores suos in exordio locutionis suae metuunt, ne vigilanter audiantur, eorumque valde tristitiam declinant, ut negligentiam capiant. Et pene semper blanda sunt quae proponunt; sed aspera quae prosequendo subinferunt. Unde et nunc amici Job a reverentia mansuetae locutionis incipiunt, sed usque ad jacula asperrimae invectionis erumpunt; quia et radices spinarum molles sunt, sed tamen ex ipsa sua mollitie proferunt unde pungunt. Sequitur:

CAPUT XIII.

VERS. 2. — Sed conceptum sermonem tenere quis possit? 30. Verba prava alii concipiunt et proferunt, alii concepta reprimunt, alii nec concipiunt. — Tria sunt hominum genera, quae gradatim ductis a se qualitatibus dissident. Sunt namque alii qui et ad loquendum prava concipiunt, a locutione sua nulla silentii gravitate refrenantur. Et sunt alii qui cum prava concipiunt, magno se silentii vigore restringunt. Et sunt nonnulli qui, virtutum usu roborati, usque ad eam celsitudinem provehuntur, ut ad loquendum, ne in corde quidem perversa concipiant, quae silendo 152 compescant. Eliphaz itaque ex quo sit ordine, ostenditur, qui conceptum sermonem tenere se non posse testatur. Qua in re et illud innotuit, quod se loquendo offensurum novit. Neque enim retinere verba quae non potest vellet, nisi per haec se vulnera inferre praenosceret. Boni enim viri freno consilii retinent praecipitationem verbi, et caute considerant ne relaxantes linguae lasciviam auditorum conscientiam incauta locutione transfigant. Unde bene per Salomonem dicitur: Qui dimittit aquam, caput est jurgiorum (Prov. XVII, 14). Aqua quippe dimittitur, cum linguae fluxus effrenatur. Sed dimissor aquae jurgiorum caput efficitur, quia per linguae incontinentiam, discordiae origo propinatur. Pravi igitur sicut in sensu leves sunt, ita in locutione praecipites, et reticere pertractando negligunt quae loquantur. Sed quod levis conscientia concipit, levior protinus lingua prodit. Unde nunc Eliphaz ex suo experimento colligit, quod desperate de omnibus sentit, dicens: Sed conceptum sermonem tenere quis possit? Sequitur:

CAPUT XIV.

VERS. 3, 4. — Ecce docuisti plurimos, et manus lassas roborasti; vacillantes confirmaverunt sermones tui, et genua trementia confortasti. 31. Quantus Job fuerit, cujus laudes nec silere valet qui crimen ingerere conatur. — Si ipse historiae textus aspicitur, magna est lectoris utilitas, quod ab amicis jurgantibus in beato Job pro laceratione vitiorum, virtutum praeconia proferuntur. Nunquam quippe est tam robustum vitae testimonium, quam cum ille laudanda loquitur, qui ingerere crimen conatur. Pensemus autem cujus celsitudinis iste vir fuerit, qui indoctos docens, lassos roborans, vacillantesque confirmans, inter curas domus, inter multiplicium rerum custodiam, inter affectus pignorum, inter studia tot laborum, erudiendis se caeteris impendit. Et illa quidem occupatus exercuit, sed tamen liber magisterio doctrinae militavit. Temporalia regendo disposuit; aeterna praedicando nuntiavit; vitae rectitudinem et agendo videntibus ostendit, et loquendo audientibus ingessit. Sed sive haeretici, seu perversi quilibet, cum bona justorum referunt, haec in argumentum criminis inflectunt. Inde namque Eliphaz contra beatum Job occasionem objurgationis colligit, unde laudanda narravit. Nam sequitur:

CAPUT XV.

VERS. 5. — Nunc autem venit super te plaga, et defecisti; tetigitte, et conturbatus es. 32. Perversi bonorum vitam duobus modis impetunt. — Perversi quique duobus modis bonorum vitam impetunt, quia aut prava eos dicere asserunt, aut recta non servare quae dicunt. Unde et beatus Job inferius ab amicis suis de locutione reprehenditur; nunc autem recta dixisse, sed haec non servasse laceratur. Ab iniquis ergo modo bonorum locutio, modo actio reprobatur, quatenus aut reprehensa lingua taceat, aut ejusdem linguae suae adjudicata testimonio, in crimine vita succumbat. Et notandum quod prius laudes linguae inferunt, et postmodum de vitae infirmitate conqueruntur. Iniqui etenim, ne publice pravi videantur, loquuntur aliquando bona de justis, quae esse jam cognita et aliis noverunt. Sed sicut praediximus, haec ipsa protinus ad cumulum 153 reatus pertrahunt, et credendum sibi in contrariis, ex eo quod et prospera loquebantur, ostendunt; tantoque mala quasi verius insinuant, quanto et bona quasi devote laudabant. Ad usum ergo intorquent criminis voces favoris, dum justorum vitam inde post gravius vulnerant, unde hanc paulo ante specie tenus defendebant. Saepe autem eorum bona quae prius habita despiciunt, haec postmodum quasi perdita mirantur. Unde et Eliphaz sancti viri virtutes, quia amissas asserit, enumerando subjungit, dicens:

CAPUT XVI.

VERS. 6. — Ubi est timor tuus, fortitudo tua, et patientia tua, et perfectio viarum tuarum? 33. Virtutum quatuor gradus. — Quae nimirum cuncta ei sententiae subrogat, quam praemisit, dicens: Nunc autem venit super te plaga, et defecisti; tetigit te, et conturbatus es. Omnia ergo simul interisse asserit, in eo quod beatum Job turbatum flagello reprehendit. Sed intuendum valde est, quia quamvis inconvenienter increpat, congruenter tamen ordines virtutum narrat. Quatuor quippe gradibus vitam beati Job virtutes enumerando distinxit, dum et timori fortitudinem, et fortitudini patientiam, et patientiae perfectionem junxit. In via etenim Dei a timore incipitur, ut ad fortitudinem veniatur. Nam sicut in via saeculi audacia fortitudinem, ita in via Dei audacia debilitatem parit; et sicut in via saeculi timor debilitatem, ita in via Dei timor fortitudinem gignit, Salomone attestante, qui ait: In timore Domini fiducia fortitudinis (Prov. XIV, 26). Timori quippe Domini inesse fiducia fortitudinis dicitur, quia nimirum mens nostra tanto valentius terrores rerum temporalium despicit, quanto se auctori eorumdem temporalium veracius per formidinem subdit. Quae in timore Domini constituta, non invenit extra quod metuat, quia dum recto metu conditori omnium jungitur, potestate quadam supra omnia sublevatur. Fortitudo autem nonnisi in adversitate ostenditur, unde et mox post fortitudinem patientia subrogatur. Tanto enim se unusquisque ad fortitudinem profecisse verius demonstrat, quanto aliena mala robustius tolerat. Nam minus in se convaluit, quem aliena iniquitas sternit. Qui in eo quod ferre contrarietatem non valet, pusillanimitatis suae gladio confossus jacet. Quia vero perfectio de patientia nascitur, statim post patientiam, viarum perfectio subinfertur. Ille enim vere perfectus est, qui erga imperfectionem proximi impatiens non est. Nam qui alienam imperfectionem ferre non valens deserit, ipse sibi testis est quod perfecte necdum proficit. Hinc in Evangelio Veritas dicit: In patientia vestra possidebitis animas vestras (Luc. XXI, 19). Quid est enim animas possidere, nisi perfecte in omnibus vivere, cunctis mentis motibus ex virtutis arce dominari? Qui igitur patientiam tenet, animam possidet; quia inde contra adversa omnia fortis efficitur, unde sibi et semetipsum vincendo dominatur. Et quo se laudabiliter frangit, infractum se fortiter exerit; quia cum in suis se voluptatibus superat, sese ad contraria invictum parat. Sed quia Eliphaz invehendo corripuit, nunc aliqua velut exhortando subjungit, dicens:

CAPUT XVII.

VERS. 7. — Recordare, obsecro, quis unquam innocens perit? aut quando recti deleti sunt? 154 34. Saepe innocentes hic perire et deleri, rectos. — Sive haeretici, quorum amicos beati Job tenere speciem diximus, sive perversi quilibet, quam inordinate redarguunt, tam reprehensibiliter exhortantur. Ait namque: Quis unquam innocens periit, aut quando recti deleti sunt? Saepe quippe hic et innocentes pereunt, et recti funditus delentur; sed tamen ad aeternam gloriam pereundo servantur. Si enim nullus innocens periret, Propheta non diceret: Justus periit, et nemo est qui recogitet (Isai. LVII, 1). Si rectos Deus providendo non raperet, nequaquam de justo Sapientia dixisset: Raptus est, ne malitia mutaret intellectum ejus (Sap. IV, 11). Si justos animadversio nulla percuteret, Petrus minime praenuntiaret, dicens: Tempus est ut incipiat judicium de domo Dei (I Pet. IV, 17). Illi ergo veraciter recti sunt, qui amore supernae patriae ad cuncta praesentis vitae adversa praeparantur. Nam qui pro aeternis bonis mala hic perpeti metuunt, videlicet recti non sunt. Sed Eliphaz vel deleri rectos, vel innocentes hic perire non aestimat, quia saepe hi qui non spe coelestis gloriae, sed pro terrena Deo retributione deserviunt, ipsi sibimet fingunt quod quaerunt; et docere praesumentes, cum terrenam securitatem praedicant, cunctis suis laboribus ostendunt quid amant. Sequitur:

CAPUT XVIII.

VERS. 8, 9. — Quin potius vidi eos qui operantur iniquitatem, et seminant dolores, et metunt eos, flante Deo perisse, et spiritu irae ejus esse consumptos. 35. Dolores seminant ac metunt. Cur malos Deus aliquando toleret, aliquando statim feriat. — Dolores seminare, est fraudulenta dicere; dolores autem metere, est dicendo praevalere. Vel certe dolores seminant, qui perversa agunt; dolores metunt, cum de eadem perversitate puniuntur. Fructus quippe doloris est retributio damnationis. Sed cum protinus subinfertur quia qui dolores seminant et metunt, flante Deo pereunt, et irae ejus spiritu consumuntur, hoc loco doloris messio, non jam poena, sed adhuc perfectio iniquitatis ostenditur, quia ex divinae irae spiritu, ejusdem messionis poena subrogatur. Seminant ergo hic dolores et metunt, quia iniqua sunt quae faciunt, et in ipsa iniquitate prosperantur; sicut de iniquo per Psalmistam dicitur: Polluuntur viae ejus in omni tempore; auferuntur judicia tua a facie ejus, omnium inimicorum suorum dominabitur (Psal. X, 5, sec. Heb.). De quo paulo post subditur: Sub lingua ejus labor et dolor (Ibid., 7). Dolores itaque seminat, cum perversa agit; dolores metit, cum ex eisdem perversitatibus temporaliter excrescit. Quomodo ergo flante Deo pereunt, qui plerumque diu hic subsistere, et justis felicius, permittuntur? Hinc namque de illis iterum per Psalmistam dicitur: In laboribus hominum non sunt, et cum hominibus non flagellabuntur (Psal. LXXII, 5). Hinc Jeremias ait: Quare via impiorum prosperatur (Jerem. XII, 1). Quia enim, sicut scriptum est, Dominus patiens redditor est (Eccli. V, 4), saepe diu tolerat quos in perpetuum damnat; nonnunquam vero concite percutit, qui pusillanimitati innocentium consolando concurrit. Aliquando ergo omnipotens Deus diu praevalere iniquos patitur, ut justorum mundius vita purgetur. Aliquando vero injustos celeriter trucidat, eorumque interitu innocentium corda confirmat. Si enim nunc omnes male agentes percuteret, extremum jam judicium quibus exhiberet? Si autem nullum omnino percuteret, quis Deum res humanas curare credidisset? Nonnunquam ergo

155 iniquos ferit, ut ostendat quia inulta mala non deserit. Nonnunquam vero iniquos diu tolerat, ut considerantibus insinuet, ad quod eos judicium reservet. 36. Iniquos deleri quo sensu falsum, quo verum. — Haec itaque sententia deletionis iniquorum, si non cum fine praesentis saeculi de cunctis generaliter dicitur, ex magna parte procul dubio veritatis virtute evacuatur. Sed tunc vera erit, cum jam iniquitatis dilatio non erit. Quae hoc fortasse modo intelligi rectius potest, quoniam nec innocens perit, nec rectus deletur; quia etsi carne hic atteritur, in conspectu aeterni judicis vera salute reparatur. Et qui seminant dolores et metunt, flante Deo pereunt; quia quanto hic altius perverse agendo proficiunt, tanto durius subsequenti damnatione feriuntur. Sed cum eidem sententiae praemittitur, Recordare, videlicet patet quia transacta res ad mentem reducitur, non autem futura nuntiatur. Tunc ergo Eliphaz verius diceret, si haec de iniquis generaliter fieri extrema animadversione credidisset. 37. Flare Deus apte dicitur, cum vindictam retribuit. Tunc qui in se tranquillus, pereuntibus videtur turbulentus. — Sed hoc quod flare Deus dicitur, urget ut subtilius discernatur. Nos quippe cum flamus, aerem ab exterioribus introrsus trahimus, et introrsus tractum hunc exterius reddimus. Flare ergo Deus in vindictae retributione dicitur, quia ab exterioribus causis introrsus judicii consilium concipit, et ab interno consilio extrorsus sententiam emittit. Quasi flante Deo, ab exterioribus aliquid introrsus trahitur, quando foras mala nostra conspicit, et intus judicium disponit. Et rursum, quasi flante Deo, ab interioribus spiritus extrorsus emittitur, quando ab interno conceptu consilii, exterius judicium damnationis infertur. Bene itaque dicitur quod qui dolores seminant, flante Deo pereunt; quia unde foris perversa faciunt, inde ab intimis recte feriuntur. Vel certe cum flare Deus dicitur, quia et statim irae ejus spiritus subinfertur, appellatione flatus illius potest ipsa ejus animadversio designari. Nos quippe cum irascimur, flatu furoris inflammamur. Ut ergo vindictam cogitans Dominus demonstretur, flare irascendo dicitur; non quo ipse in natura sua mutabilitatis vicissitudinem recipiat, sed quo post longam patientiam, quando vindictam peccatoris exsequitur, is qui in semetipso tranquillus est, pereuntibus turbulentus videtur. Mens quippe reproba, quia adversum suis actibus judicem conspicit, quasi commotus ei ostenditur, quia in conspectu illius suo reatu ipsa turbatur. Sed postquam quasi clementer admonuit, aperte increpationis verba subjungit, dicens:

CAPUT XIX.

VERS. 10. — Rugitus leonis, et vox leaenae, et dentes catulorum leonum contriti sunt. 38. Dura in Job Eliphaz verba. — Quid enim rugitum leonis appellat, nisi, ut paulo ante praemisimus, severitatem viri? quid vocem leaenae, nisi loquacitatem conjugis? quid dentes catulorum leonum, nisi edacitatem prolis? Quia enim filii convivantes exstincti sunt, dentium expressione signantur. Quae cuncta dum contrita Eliphaz rigidus exsultat, quasi jure damnata denuntiat. Cujus adhuc duritiam increpationis ingeminat, cum subjungit:

CAPUT XX.

VERS. 11. — Tigris periit, eo quod non haberet praedam, et 156 catuli leonum dissipati sunt. 39. Tigris varia ac rapax hypocritas apte significat. — Quem enim nomine tigridis, nisi beatum Job nota varietatis signat, vel aspersum maculis simulationis? Omnis namque simulator in eo quod videri rectus appetit, mundum se per omnia non ostendit; quia dum virtutes quasdam per hypocrisin assumit, et occulte semetipsum vitiis subjicit, quaedam latentia vitia repente in faciem erumpunt, et superductae simulationis, quasi visionis corium, ex admistione sua varium ostendunt; ut plerumque sit mirum cur homo, qui tantis virtutibus pollere cernitur, etiam tam reprobis actibus inquinetur. Sed nimirum omnis hypocrita tigris est, quia dum mundus color de simulatione ducitur, vitiorum nigredine interrumpente variatur. Saepe enim dum de castitatis munditia extollitur, sorde avaritiae foedatur. Saepe dum virtute largitatis speciosus ostenditur, luxuriae maculis inquinatur. Saepe dum castitatis atque largitatis decore vestitur, velut ex zelo justitiae, crudelitatis atrocitate fuscatur. Saepe largitate, castitate, pietate ex pulchra visione induitur, sed interfusa obscuritate superbiae notatur. Sicque fit ut intermistis vitiis dum mundam in se speciem hypocrita non ostendit, quasi unum colorem tigris habere nequaquam possit. Quae videlicet tigris rapit praedam, quia humani sibi favoris usurpat gloriam. Qui enim rapta laude extollitur, quasi praeda satiatur. Bene autem hypocritarum laus praeda dicitur. Praeda quippe est, cum aliena violenter auferuntur. Omnis autem hypocrita, quia vitam justitiae simulans, justorum sibi laudem arripit, alienum profecto est quod tollit. Eliphaz itaque, quia beatum Job incolumitatis suae tempore laudanda egisse cognovit, percussione subsequente, haec illum tenuisse per hypocrisin credidit, dicens: Tigris periit, eo quod non haberet praedam. Ac si aperte dicat: Varietas tuae simulationis exstincta est, quia et adulatio laudis ablata est; et jam tua hypocrisis praedam non habet, quia percussa divinitus, humanis favoribus caret. 40. Myrmicoleon eos adumbrat qui timidi in fortiores, audaces in parvos sunt. — Translatione autem Septuaginta interpretum nequaquam tigris dicitur, sed, Myrmicoleon periit, eo quod non haberet praedam. Myrmicoleon quippe parvum valde est animal, formicis adversum, quod se sub pulvere abscondit, et formicas frumenta gestantes interficit, interfectasque consumit. Myrmicoleon autem Latine dicitur, vel formicarum leo, vel certe expressius formica pariter et leo. Recte autem formica et leo nominatur, quia sive volatilibus, seu quibuslibet aliis minutis animalibus formica est, ipsis autem formicis leo. Has enim quasi leo devorat, sed ab illis quasi formica devoratur. Cum igitur Eliphaz dicit: Myrmicoleon periit, quid in beato Job sub myrmicoleontis nomine, nisi pavorem et audaciam reprehendit? Ac si ei aperte dicat: Non injuste percussus es, quia contra erectos timidus, contra subditos audax fuisti. Ac si aperte dicat: Contra astutos te formido pressit, contra simplices temeritas inflavit. Sed praedam jam myrmicoleon non habet, quia timida tua elatio dum verberibus premitur, ab aliena laesione 157 prohibetur. Sed quia amicos beati Job haereticorum tenere speciem diximus, urget necessario, ut haec eadem Eliphaz verba quomodo etiam typice sentienda sint intimemus.

CAPUT XXI.

VERS. 10. — Rugitus leonis, et vox leaenae, et dentes catulorum leonum contriti sunt. SENSUS ALLEGORICUS. — 41. Eadem re in Scripturis figurantur diversa. — Quia natura uniuscujusque rei ex diversitate componitur, in sacro eloquio per rem quamlibet licite diversa figurantur. Habet quippe leo virtutem, habet et saevitiam. Virtute ergo Dominum, saevitia diabolum signat. Hinc enim de Domino dicitur: Vicit leo de tribu Juda, radix David (Apoc. V, 5). Hinc de diabolo scriptum est: Adversarius vester diabolus, sicut leo rugiens circuit, quaerens quem devoret (I Pet. V, 8). Leaenae autem nomine aliquando sancta Ecclesia, aliquando Babylonia designatur. Pro eo enim quod contra adversa audax est, leaena Ecclesia dicitur; sicut ejusdem beati Job vocibus approbatur, qui derelictam ab Ecclesia Judaeam indicans, ait: Non calcaverunt eam filii institorum, nec pertransivit per eam leaena (Job. XXVIII, 8). Aliquando vero leaenae nomine hujus mundi civitas, id est Babylonia, exprimitur, quae contra vitam innocentium immanitate crudelitatis efferatur, quae antiquo hosti, quasi saevissimo leoni sociata, perversae persuasionis ejus semina concipit, et reprobos ex se filios ad similitudinem illius, quasi crudeles catulos gignit. Catuli autem leonum sunt quilibet reprobi, ad iniquam vitam, malignorum spirituum errore generati: qui et simul omnes universam mundi civitatem, quam praediximus, Babyloniam faciunt, et tamen iidem singuli Babyloniae filii, quasi non leaena, sed leaenae catuli vocantur. Sicut enim Sion tota simul Ecclesia dicitur, filii autem Sion sanctorum quique singuli memorantur, ita et filii Babyloniae singuli quique reproborum, et eadem Babylonia simul omnes reprobi vocantur.. VERS. 12. — Porro ad me dictum est verbum absconditum. 45. Haeretici novum et occultam doctrinam affectant, cur. — Verbum absconditum haeretici audire se simulant, ut auditorum mentibus quamdam praedicationis suae reverentiam obducant. Unde et latenter praedicant, quatenus eorum praedicatio tanto sancta, quanto et occulta videatur. Communem autem scientiam habere refugiunt, ne caeteris aequales aestimentur; et quaedam nova semper exquirunt, quae dum alii nesciunt, apud imperitorum 159 mentes ipsi de scientiae singularitate gloriantur. Quam, ut diximus, occultam insinuant, quia scilicet ut miram ostendere valeant, hanc se latenter percepisse confirmant. Unde apud Salomonem haereticorum speciem mulier tenens, dicit: Aquae furtivae dulciores sunt, et panis absconditus suavior (Prov. IX, 17). Unde hic quoque subditur: Et quasi furtive suscepit auris mea venas susurrii ejus. Furtive susurrii venas percipiunt, quia socialis scientiae gratiam deserentes, ad hanc nequaquam per ostium ingrediuntur, Domino attestante, qui ait: Qui non intrat per ostium in ovile ovium, sed ascendit aliunde, ille fur est et latro (Joan. X, 1, 2). Venas itaque divini susurrii furtive suscipit, qui ad percipiendam virtutis ejus notitiam, deserto publicae praedicationis ostio, pravae intelligentiae rimas quaerit. Quia vero fur et latro, qui intrat aliunde, et tenebras diligit, et claritatem luminis perhorrescit, recte subjungitur:

CAPUT XXIV.

VERS. 13. — In horrore visionis nocturnae, quando solet sopor occupare homines. 46. Ut alta esse ostendant quae docent, ea se vix capere declarant. Modo de sapientiae singularitate extolluntur. — Saepe haeretici dum altiora dicere conantur, ipsi sibi testes sunt quia quae proferunt, vera non sunt. In nocturna quippe visione dubie cernitur. Rimas ergo susurrii in pavore nocturnae visionis se percepisse asserunt, quia ut quae docent alta aliis ostendant, vix ea se capere posse denuntiant. Sed hinc colligendum est quomodo audientibus certa esse poterunt, quae ipsi dubie viderunt. Miro ergo ordine cum alta loquentes profluunt, in patefactione stultitiae, ipsis suae altitudinis vocibus ligantur. Quantum vero de singularitate sapientiae elevantur, ostenditur cum protinus subdit: Quando solet sopor occupare homines. Ac si aperte ab haereticis diceretur: Cum homines inferius dormiunt, nos ad percipienda superna vigilamus, quia ea nobis nota sunt, ad quae videlicet cognoscenda caeterorum hominum corda torpentia non assurgunt. Ac si apertius dicant: In quibus intelligentia nostra se erigit, reliquorum hominum sensus dormit. Nonnunquam vero cum hoc despici ab auditore conspiciunt, semetipsos simulant timere quod dicunt. Unde subditur:

CAPUT XXV.

VERS. 14. — Pavor tenuit me et tremor, et omnia ossa mea perterrita sunt. 47. Modo pavidos se simulant. — Quia enim de doctrinae suae altitudine miri videri appetunt, quasi pertimescunt quae fingunt; et cum minoris laboris sit audire quam dicere, ad ea proferenda audaces sunt, quae scilicet astruunt quia ipsi vix audire potuerunt. Unde adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XXVI.

VERS. 15, 16. — Et cum spiritus me praesente transiret, inhorruerunt pili carnis meae; stetit quidam, cujus non agnoscebam vultum. 48. Modo fingunt in se incomprehensibilia novisse. — Ut incomprehensibilia se cognovisse indicent, non stetisse, sed transisse coram se spiritum narrant; et vultum se vidisse incognitum simulant, ut esse se ei cognitos qui ab humana mente cognosci non valet ostendant. Ubi adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XXVII.

VERS. 16. — Imago coram oculis meis, et vocem quasi aurae lenis audivi.
49. Deum intueri spiritaliter nequeunt, neque tamen semper errant. Quaedam vera et sublimia loquuntur. — Saepe haeretici Deum sibi imaginaliter fingunt quem intueri spiritaliter nequeunt; ejusque 160 vocem quasi aurae lenis audire se perhibent, quia ad secreta illius cognoscenda, quasi esse se caeteris familiariores gaudent. Non enim ea docent quae Deus publice loquitur, sed quae eorum auri quasi latenter aspirantur. Haec igitur diximus, ut quid sub haereticorum specie in Eliphaz sermonibus sentiendum sit intimenius. Sed qui amici beati Job tanti viri amici non essent, nisi manifeste aliquid ex veritate didicissent, quia quamvis in sententiis correptionis errant, in veritatis tamen cognitione non in toto titubant: haec eadem paulo superius verba replicemus, ut subtilius discernamus quomodo ea quae de perceptione veritatis dicuntur, a recte sentientibus proferri veraciter possint. Nonnunquam vero haeretici vera quaedam et sublimia loquuntur, non quod haec divinitus ipsi percipiunt, sed quod ex sanctae Ecclesiae contentione didicerunt; neque haec ad profectum conscientiae, sed ad scientiae ostentationem trahunt. Unde fit plerumque ut alta sciendo dicant, sed vivendo quae dicunt nesciant. Sive igitur ex haereticorum specie, videlicet non vitam scientiae, sed verba tenentium, seu certe ex persona amicorum beati Job, qui de cognitione veritatis potuerunt procul dubio percipiendo experiri, quod studuerunt docendo eloqui, haec eadem quae transcurrimus, subtilius dicta disseramus; ut dum sollicite Eliphaz sermo discutitur, quantae scientiae fuerit, demonstretur; quamvis in eadem scientia humilitatem non tenuit, qui commune bonum sibi specialiter arrogavit. Ait namque:

CAPUT XXVIII.

VERS. 12. — Porro ad me dictum est verbum absconditum. ALLEGORICUS SENSUS. — 50. Verbum absconditum, Dei Filius, vel Spiritus sancti locutio. Haec a paucis percipitur. Sentiri potest, non exprimi. — Verbum quippe absconditum, invisibilis Filius vocatur, de quo Joannes ait: In principio erat Verbum. Quod ipse quoque absconditum insinuat, dum subjungit: Et Verbum erat apud Deum, et Deus erat Verbum. Sed hoc verbum absconditum electorum mentibus dicitur, cum potestas unigeniti Filii credentibus manifestatur. Potest etiam per verbum absconditum, allocutio intimae aspirationis intelligi; de qua Joannes dicit: Unctio ejus docet vos de omnibus (I Joan. II, 27). Quae nimirum aspiratio humanam mentem contingendo sublevat, et temporales cogitationes deprimens, aeternis hanc desideriis inflammat, ut nihil ei jam, nisi quae superna sunt, libeat, et cuncta quae inferius de humana perstrepunt corruptione contemnat. Absconditum ergo verbum audire, est locutionem sancti Spiritus corde concipere. Quae profecto sciri non potest, nisi a quo haberi potest. Unde et Veritatis voce de hac abscondita locutione dicitur: Ego rogabo Patrem, et alium Paraclitum dabit vobis, ut maneat vobiscum in aeternum, Spiritum veritatis, quem mundus non potest accipere (Joan. XIV, 16). Sicut enim isdem Paraclitus post Mediatoris ascensum, alius humani generis consolator, in semetipso invisibilis est; ita omnem, quem repleverit, ad desideranda invisibilia accendit. Et quoniam mundana corda sola visibilia diligunt, hunc mundus non accipit, quia ad diligenda invisibilia non assurgit. Saeculares etenim mentes quanto se foras per desideria dilatant, tanto ad receptionem illius sinum cordis angustant. Et quoniam valde in 161 humano genere pauci sunt, qui a desideriorum temporalium sorde purgati, ad perceptionem sancti Spiritus ipsa hac purgatione dilatentur, verbum hoc absconditum dicitur, quia illud a quibusdam procul dubio in corde percipitur, quod a maxima hominum parte nescitur. Vel certe haec ipsa afflatio sancti Spiritus absconditum verbum est, quia sentiri potest, sed strepitu locutionis exprimi non potest. Cum igitur divina aspiratio sine strepitu mentem sublevat, verbum absconditum auditur, quia sermo Spiritus in aure cordis silenter sonat. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT XXIX.

IBID. — Et quasi furtive suscepit auris mea venas susurrii ejus. 51. Mentem quaerit a visibilibus abstractam. Quam variis modis eam alloquatur. — Venas susurrii superni auris cordis furtive suscipit, quia subtilitatem locutionis intimae afflata mens et raptim et occulte cognoscit. Nisi enim se ab exterioribus desideriis abscondat, interna non penetrat. Et occultatur ut audiat, et audit ut occultetur; quia et subtracta a visibilibus, invisibilia conspicit, et repleta invisibilibus, visibilia perfecte contemnit. Notandum vero quod non ait: Quasi furtive suscepit auris mea susurrium ejus; sed venas susurrii ejus. Susurrium quippe occulti verbi, est haec ipsa locutio aspirationis internae. Venae autem susurrii dicuntur causarum origines, quibus haec ipsa aspiratio ad mentem ducitur. Quasi enim venas susurrii sui aperit, cum nobis Deus latenter insinuat, quibus modis ad nostrae intelligentiae aurem venit. Aliquando enim nos amore, aliquando terrore compungit; aliquando praesentia quam nulla sint ostendit, et ad aeterna diligenda desiderium erigit; aliquando prius aeterna indicat, ut post temporalia vilescant. Aliquando nostra nobis mala aperit, et ad hoc nos usque, ut alienis etiam malis doleamus, extendit. Aliquando mala aliena nostris obtutibus objicit, et compunctos mirabiliter a nostra pravitate nos corrigit. Venas itaque divini susurrii furtive audire, est occultos divinae aspirationis modos tenuiter et latenter agnoscere. 52. Susurrat nobis Deus, quia non se plene manifestum facit. Per creata opera velut per quasdam rimas se admirandum praebet. — Quamvis adhuc vel susurrium, vel venas susurrii intelligere aliter valemus. Qui enim susurrat, occulte loquitur, et vocem non exprimit, sed imitatur. Nos igitur quousque carnis corruptione premimur, nullo modo claritatem divinae potentiae, sicut in se incommutabilis manet, videmus: quia acies infirmitatis nostrae non sustinet hoc quod de ejus aeternitatis radio super nos intolerabiliter fulget. Cum ergo se nobis omnipotens Deus per rimas contemplationis indicat, nequaquam nobis loquitur, sed susurrat, quia etsi se plene non intimat, quiddam tamen de se humanae menti manifestat. Tunc autem nequaquam jam susurrat, sed loquitur, cum ejus nobis species certa revelatur. Hinc est enim quod in Evangelio Veritas dicit: Palam de Patre annuntiabo vobis (Joan. XVI, 26). Hinc Joannes ait: Videbimus eum sicuti est (I Joan. III, 2). Hinc Paulus dicit: Tunc cognoscam, sicut et cognitus sum (I Cor. XIII, 12). Nunc autem divinum susurrium tot ad nos venas habet, quot creatis operibus ipsa divinitas praesidet. Dum enim quae sunt cuncta creata cernimus, in creatoris admiratione sublevamur. Nam sicut aqua leniter fluens, rimata per venas quaeritur, ut augeatur, tantoque se vastius fundit, quanto venas apertiores invenerit; ita nos dum studiose divinitatis 162 notitiam ex creaturae ejus consideratione colligimus, quasi susurrii illius ad nos venas aperimus; quia per hoc quod factum cernimus, virtutem factoris admiramur; et per ea quae sunt in publico, illud ad nos emanat, quod latet in occulto. Quasi enim per quemdam ad nos sonitum erumpit, dum consideranda nobis sua opera ostendit, in quo semetipsum utcunque indicat, dum quam sit incomprehensibilis manifestat. Quia igitur considerare eum digne non possumus, non ejus vocem, sed vix susurrium audimus. Plene enim quia perpendere neque ipsa quae sunt creata sufficimus, recte dicitur: Quasi furtive suscepit auris mea venas susurrii ejus. Projecti quippe a paradisi gaudiis, et caecitatis poena multati, vix susurrii venas apprehendimus, quia ipse quoque mira ejus opera raptim tenuiterque pensamus. Sciendum vero est, quia quanto virtutem illius mens sublevata considerat, tanto ejus rectitudinem repressa formidat. Unde et recte subjungitur:

CAPUT XXX.

VERS. 13. — In horrore visionis nocturnae. 53. Mens eo amplius de suis factis trepidat, quo altius in Deum elevatur. Hinc Deum magis metuit et diligit. — Horror nocturnae visionis, est pavor occultae contemplationis. Humana etenim mens quo altius elevata, quae sint aeterna considerat, eo de factis temporalibus gravius tremefacta formidat; quia tanto se ream verius cernit, quanto se ab illo lumine discrepasse quod super se intermicat conspicit; sicque fit ut illuminata plus metuat, quia magis aspicit a veritatis regula per quanta discordat; eamque gravi formidine suus ipse profectus quatit, quae prius quasi securius nihil videbat. Quamvis quantalibet virtute profecerit, non jam manifestum aliquid de aeternitate comprehendit, sed adhuc sub cujusdam caligine imaginationis conspicit. Unde et haec eadem, nocturna visio dicitur. In nocte quippe, sicut et superius diximus, dubie; in die autem constanter videmus. Quia igitur ad contemplandum interni solis radium, nubes sese nostrae corruptionis interserit, nec ad infirmos nostrae mentis oculos illud, sicut est, incommutabile lumen erumpit; adhuc Deum quasi in nocturna visione cernimus, cum procul dubio sub incerta contemplatione caligamus. Sed quamvis extremum de illo aliquid mens conceperit, in consideratione tamen ejus magnitudinis inhorrescit, et magis metuit, quia ipsis contemplationis ejus vestigiis se imparem sentit, atque ad se relapsa, eum arctius diligit, cujus miram dulcedinem ferre non valens, vix hanc sub incerta visione gustavit. Sed quia ad hujus sublevationis culmen minime pertingitur, nisi prius desideriorum carnalium importune perstrepens turba reprimatur, recte subjungitur:

CAPUT XXXI.

IBID. — Quando solet sopor occupare homines. 54. Ad contemplationem non pervenitur nisi sopitis carnalibus desideriis. Somnus tribus modis

accipitur. — Quisquis ea quae mundi sunt agere appetit, quasi vigilat; quisquis vero internam quietem quaerens, hujus mundi strepitum fugit, velut obdormiscit. Sed prius sciendum est quia in Scriptura sacra figurate positus tribus modis somnus accipitur. Aliquando enim somno mors carnis, aliquando torpor negligentiae, aliquando vero exprimitur, calcatis terrenis desideriis, quies vitae. Somni namque vel dormitionis nomine carnis mors intimatur, sicut Paulus ait: Nolo vos ignorare fratres de dormientibus. Et paulo post: Ita et Deus eos qui dormierunt per Jesum, adducet cum eo (I Thess. IV, 12). Somno 163 rursum torpor negligentiae designatur, sicut ab eodem Paulo dicitur: Hora est jam nos de somno surgere (Rom. XIII, 11). Et rursum: Evigilate, justi, et nolite peccare (I Cor. XV, 34). Somno quoque calcatis carnis desideriis quies vitae figuratur, sicut sponsae voce in canticorum Cantico dicitur: Ego dormio, et cor meum vigilat (Cant. V, 2); quia videlicet sancta mens quo se ab strepitu temporalis concupiscentiae comprimit, eo verius interna cognoscit; et tanto alacrius ad intima vigilat, quanto se ab exteriori inquietudine occultat. Quod bene per Jacob in itinere dormientem figuratur (Genes. XXVIII, 11), qui ad caput lapidem posuit, et obdormivit: a terra scalam coelo inhaerentem, innixum scalae Dominum, ascendentes quoque et descendentes angelos vidit. In itinere quippe dormire, est in hoc praesentis vitae transitu a rerum temporalium amore quiescere. In itinere dormire, est in dierum labentium cursu ab appetitu visibilium mentis oculos claudere: quos primis hominibus seductor aperuit, qui dixit: Scit enim Deus quod in quocunque die comederitis ex eo, aperientur oculi vestri (Genes. III, 5, 6). Unde et paulo post subditur: Tulit de fructu illius, et comedit; deditque viro suo, qui comedit, et aperti sunt oculi amborum. Culpa quippe oculos concupiscentiae aperuit, quos innocentia clausos tenebat. Angelos vero ascendentes et descendentes cernere, est cives supernae patriae contemplari, vel quanto amore auctori suo super semetipsos inhaereant, vel quanta compassione charitatis nostris infirmitatibus condescendant. 55. Ad contemplationem non sufficit a mundi actionibus quiescere, nisi et virtutes exerceantur. — Et notandum valde est quod ille dormiens angelos conspicit, qui in lapide caput ponit; quia nimirum ipse ab exterioribus operibus cessans, interna penetrat, qui intentamente, quae principale est Sunt namque nonnulli qui mundi quidem actiones fugiunt, sed nullis virtutibus exercentur. Hi nimirum torpore, non studio dormiunt; et idcirco interna non conspiciunt, quia caput non in lapide sed in terra posuerunt. Quibus plerumque contingit ut quanto securius ab externis actionibus cessant, tanto latius in se immundae cogitationis strepitum per otium congerant. Unde sub Judaeae specie per Prophetam torpens otio anima defletur, cum dicitur: Viderunt eam hostes, et deriserunt Sabbata ejus (Thren. I, 7). Praecepto etenim legis ab exteriori opere in sabbato cessatur. Hostes ergo sabbata videntes irrident, cum maligni spiritus ipsa vacationis otia ad cogitationes illicitas pertrahunt; ut unaquaeque anima quo remota ab externis actionibus servire Deo creditur, eo magis eorum tyrannidi illicita cogitando famuletur. Sancti autem viri, qui a mundi operibus non torpore, sed virtute sopiuntur, laboriosius dormiunt, quam vigilare potuerunt, quia in eo quod actiones hujus saeculi deserentes superant, robusto conflictu quotidie contra semetipsos pugnant, ne mens per negligentiam torpeat, ne subacta otio ad desideria immunda frigescat, ne in ipsis bonis desideriis plus justo inferveat, ne sub 164 discretionis specie sibimet parcendo, a perfectione languescat. Agit haec, et ab hujus mundi inquieta concupiscentia se penitus subtrahit, ac terrenarum actionum strepitum deserit, et per quietis studium virtutibus intenta, vigilans dormit. Neque enim ad contemplanda interna perducitur, nisi ab his quae exterius implicant studiose subtrahatur. Hinc est enim quod per semetipsam Veritas dicit: Nemo potest duobus dominis servire (Matth. VI, 24). Hinc Paulus ait: Nemo militans Deo, implicat se negotiis saecularibus, ut ei placeat, cui se probavit (II Tim. II, 4). Hinc per Prophetam Dominus admonens dicit:

Vacate, et videte, quoniam ego sum Deus (Psal. XLV, 11). Quia igitur nequaquam notitia interna conspicitur, nisi ab externa implicatione cessetur, recte nunc verbi absconditi et divini susurrii tempus exprimitur, cum dicitur: in horrore visionis nocturnae, quando solet sopor occupare homines, quia nimirum mens nostra nullo modo ad vim intimae contemplationis rapitur, nisi studiose prius a terrenorum desideriorum tumultu sopiatur. Sed humanus animus quadam suae contemplationis machina sublevatus, quo super se altiora conspicit, eo in semetipso terribilius contremiscit. Unde et apte subditur:

CAPUT XXXII.

VERS. 14. — Pavor tenuit me, et tremor, et omnia ossa mea perterrita sunt.
56. Quo altius Dei rectitudinem contemplamur, eo de nostra magis formidamus. — Quid per ossa, nisi fortia acta signantur? De quibus et per Prophetam dicitur: Dominus custodit omnia ossa eorum (Psal. XXXIII, 21). Et saepe ea quae agunt homines, esse alicujus momenti aestimant, quia districtionis intimae quam sit subtile judicium ignorant. Sed cum per contemplationem rapti superna conspiciunt, ab ipsa aliquo modo praesumptionis suae securitate liquefiunt; et tanto magis in divino conspectu trepidant, quanto nec bona sua digna ejus examine, quem conspiciunt, pensant. Hinc est etenim quod is qui fortia operando profecerat, per spiritum sublevatus clamabat: Omnia ossa mea dicent: Domine, quis similis tibi (Psalm. XXXIV, 10)? Ac si diceret: Carnes meae verba non habent, quia infirma mea apud te funditus silent; ossa autem mea tuae magnitudinis laudem dicunt, quia ipsa quoque, quae esse in me fortia credidi, tua consideratione contremiscunt. Hinc est quod Manue, viso angelo pertimescens, dicit: Morte moriemur, quia vidimus Dominum (Jud. XIII, 22). Quem uxor protinus consolatur, dicens: Si Dominus nos vellet occidere, de manibus nostris holocaustum et libamenta non suscepisset

(Ibid., 23). Quid est autem quod ad visionem angeli vir fit timidus, et mulier audax, nisi quod nobis quoties coelestia demonstrantur, spiritus quidem pavore se concutit, sed tamen spes praesumit? Inde namque spes ad majora audenda sese erigit, unde turbatur spiritus, quia ea quae superna sunt, prior videt. Quia igitur cum altiora secretorum coelestium sublevata mens conspicit, cuncta humanarum virium soliditas contremiscit, recte nunc dicitur: Pavor tenuit me, et tremor, et omnia ossa mea perterrita sunt. Ac si aperte diceretur: Subtilitatis intimae arcana percipiens, unde me apud me fortem credidi, ante conspectum judicis inde titubavi. Districtionem quippe divinae justitiae contemplantes, etiam de ipsis operibus jure pertimescimus, quae nos fortia egisse putabamus. Ducta namque ad internam regulam nostra rectitudo, si 165 districtum judicium invenit, multis tortitudinum suarum sinibus in intimam rectitudinem impingit. Unde bene Paulus cum et virtutum ossa habere se cerneret, et tamen sub districto examine haec eadem ejus ossa trepidarent, ait: Mihi pro minimo est, ut a vobis judicer, aut ab humano die. Sed neque me ipsum judico; nihil enim mihi conscius sum (I Cor. IV, 3). Sed quia auditis venis divini susurrii, haec eadem ejus ossa contremuerunt, illico adjunxit: Sed non in hoc justificatus sum: qui autem judicat me, Dominus est. Ac si diceret: recta egisse me recolo, et tamen de meritis non praesumo, quia ad ejus examen vita nostra ducitur, sub quo nostrae fortitudinis et ossa turbantur. 57. Contemplationis gratia non est diuturna. — Sed cum mens in contemplatione suspenditur, cum carnis angustias superans, per speculationis vim de libertate aliquid intimae securitatis rimatur, stare diu super semetipsam non potest; quia etsi hanc spiritus ad summa evehit, caro tamen ipso adhuc corruptionis suae pondere deorsum premit. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT XXXIII.

VERS. 15. — Et cum spiritus me praesente transiret, inhorruerunt pili carnis meae. 58. Invisibilia quidem cognoscimus, sed raptim. — Nobis praesentibus spiritus transit, quando invisibilia cognoscimus, et tamen haec non solide, sed raptim videmus. Neque enim in suavitate contemplationis intimae diu mens figitur, quia ad semetipsam ipsa immensitate luminis reverberata revocatur. Cumque internam dulcedinem degustat, amore aestuat, ire super semetipsam nititur, sed ad infirmitatis suae tenebras fracta relabitur; et magna virtute proficiens, videt quia videre non possit hoc quod ardenter diligit, nec tamen ardenter diligeret, nisi aliquatenus videret. Non ergo stat, sed transit spiritus, quia supernam lucem nostra nobis contemplatio et inhiantibus aperit, et mox infirmantibus abscondit. Et quia in hac vita quantalibet virtute quis profecerit, adhuc tamen corruptionis suae stimulum sentit: Corpus quippe, quod corrumpitur, aggravat animam, et deprimit terrena inhabitatio sensum multa cogitantem (Sap. IX, 15), recte subditur: Inhorruerunt pili carnis meae.. VERS. 16. — Stetit quidam, cujus non agnoscebam vultum. 61. Homo per peccatum totus carnalis factus, non cogitat sine imaginibus corporum. Qui sine his animam suam, ac deinde Deum percipiat. — Quidam namque non dicimus, nisi de eo utique, quem exprimere aut nolumus, aut non valemus. Sed qua mente hoc loco dicitur quidam, videlicet exponitur, cum protinus subinfertur: Cujus non agnoscebam vultum. Humana quippe anima, primorum hominum vitio a paradisi gaudiis expulsa, lucem invisibilium perdidit, et totam se in amorem visibilium fudit; tantoque ab interna speculatione caecata est, quanto foras deformiter sparsa; unde fit ut nulla noverit nisi ea quae corporeis oculis, ut ita dixerim, palpando cognoscit. Homo enim, qui si praeceptum servare voluisset, etiam carne spiritalis futurus erat, peccando factus est etiam mente carnalis ut sola cogitet, quae ad animum per imagines corporum trahit. Corpus quippe est coeli, terrae, aquarum, animalium, cunctarumque rerum visibilium, quas indesinenter intuetur, in quibus dum totam se delectata mens projicit, ab internae intelligentiae subtilitate grossescit; et quia jam erigere ad summa se non valet, in his infirma libenter jacet. Cum vero miris conatibus ab his exsurgere nititur, magnum valde est, si ad cognitionem suam, repressa corporali specie, anima perducatur; ut semetipsam sine corporea imagine cogitet, et cogitando se, viam sibi usque ad considerandam aeternitatis substantiam paret.. IBID. — Et vocem quasi aurae lenis audivi. 65. Spiritus Sancti vox et aura lenis et spiritus vehemens. — Quid enim per vocem aurae lenis, nisi cognitio sancti Spiritus designatur, qui de Patre procedens, et de eo quod est Filii accipiens, nostrae tenuiter notitiae infirmitatis infunditur? Qui tamen super apostolos veniens, per exteriorem sonum tanquam per vehementem spiritum demonstratur, cum dicitur: Factusque est repente de coelo sonus tanquam advenientis spiritus vehementis (Act. II, 2). Sanctus enim Spiritus cum se notitiae humanae infirmitatis insinuat, et sonitu vehementis spiritus, et voce aurae lenis exprimitur; quia videlicet veniens, et vehemens est et lenis: lenis, quia notitiam suam, quatenus cognosci utcunque valeat, nostris sensibus temperat; vehemens, quia quantumlibet hanc temperet, adventu tamen suo infirmitatis nostrae caecitatem illuminando perturbat. Illustratione enim sua nos leniter tangit, sed inopiam nostram immaniter concutit. 66. Aura lenis quia se quantumlibet sanctis hic modicum aperit. In contemplatione quidquid mens perfecte valet conspicere, non est Deus. — Vox ergo Dei quasi aurae lenis auditur, quia in hac adhuc vita positis contemplatoribus suis, nequaquam se Divinitas sicut est insinuat, sed lippientibus mentis nostrae oculis claritatem suam tenuiter demonstrat. Quod bene ipsa legis acceptione signatur, cum dicitur, quia Moyses ascendit, et Dominus in monte descendit (Exod. XXIV, 1). Mons quippe est ipsa nostra contemplatio, in quam nos ascendimus, ut ad ea quae ultra infirmitatem nostram sunt videnda sublevemur. Sed in hanc Dominus descendit, quia nobis multum proficientibus parum de se aliquid nostris sensibus aperit; si tamen dici in illo vel parum, vel aliquid potest, qui unus semper et idem permanens, intelligi partiliter non potest, et tamen a suis fidelibus participari dicitur, cum in ejus substantia pars nullatenus admittatur. Sed quia hunc exprimere perfecto sermone non possumus, humanitatis nostrae modulo, quasi infantiae imbecillitate praepediti, eum aliquatenus balbutiendo resonamus. Quia vero et in magna contemplatione sublevati, subtile quid de aeternitatis cognitione pertingimus, sacrae historiae verbis ostenditur, cum de cognitione Dei propheta nobilis Elias edocetur. Cui cum transiturum ante eum se Dominus promitteret, dicens: Ecce Dominus transit, spiritus grandis et fortis, subvertens montes et conterens petras ante Dominum; illico adjunxit: Non in spiritu Dominus; et post spiritum commotio, non in commotione Dominus; et post commotionem ignis, non in igne Dominus; et post ignem sibilus aurae tenuis (III Reg. XIX, 11, 12). Spiritus quippe ante Dominum evertit montes, et petras 169 conterit; quia pavor, qui ex adventu ejus irruit, et altitudinem cordis nostri dejicit, et duritiam liquefacit. Sed spiritui commotionis et igni non inesse Dominus dicitur, esse vero in sibilo aurae tenuis non negatur; quia nimirum mens cum in contemplationis sublimitate suspenditur, quidquid perfecte conspicere praevalet, Deus non est: cum vero subtile aliquid conspicit, hoc est quod de incomprehensibili substantia aeternitatis audit. Quasi enim sibilum tenuis aurae percipimus, cum saporem incircumscriptae veritatis contemplatione subita subtiliter degustamus. Tunc ergo verum est quod de Deo cognoscimus, cum plene nos aliquid de illo cognoscere non posse sentimus. Unde bene illic subditur: Quod cum audisset Elias, operuit vultum suum pallio, et ingressus stetit in ostio speluncae (Ibid.). Post aurae tenuis sibilum, vultum suum propheta pallio operit, quia in ipsa subtilissima contemplatione veritatis, quanta ignorantia homo tegatur, agnoscit. Vultui namque pallium superducere est, ne altiora mens quaerere audeat, hanc ex consideratione propriae infirmitatis velare; ut nequaquam intelligentiae oculos ultra se praecipitanter aperiat, sed ad hoc quod apprehendere non valet, reverenter claudat. Qui haec agens, in speluncae ostio stetisse describitur. Quid namque spelunca nostra est, nisi haec corruptionis habitatio, in qua adhuc ex vetustate retinemur? Sed cum aliquid percipere de cognitione Divinitatis incipimus, quasi jam in speluncae nostrae ostio stamus. Quia enim progredi perfecte non possumus, ad cognitionem tamen veritatis inhiantes, jam aliquid de libertatis aura captamus. In ingressu ergo speluncae stare, est represso nostrae corruptionis obstaculo, ad cognitionem veritatis incipere exire. Unde et nube in tabernaculum descendente Israelitae e longinquo cernentes, in papilionum suorum ostiis stetisse memorantur (Exod., XXXIII, 9) quia ii, qui adventum Divinitatis utcunque conspiciunt, quasi jam ex habitaculo carnis procedunt. Quia igitur humana mens quantalibet se virtute tetenderit, vix de intimis extrema cognoscit, recte nunc dicitur: Et vocem quasi aurae lenis audivi. Sed quoniam cum de se saltem parum nobis divina cognitio exbibet, infirmitatis nostrae ignorantiam perfecte docet, qui vocem aurae lenis audivit, dicat quae ex ipsa hac auditione didicerit. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXVII.

VERS. 17. — Nunquid homo Dei comparatione justificabitur, aut factore suo purior erit vir? 67. Justitia humana divinae comparata, injustitia est. Qui compescendae de Dei flagellis querelae. — Humana justitia divinae justitiae comparata, injustitia est: quia et lucerna in tenebris fulgere cernitur, sed in solis radio posita tenebratur. Quid ergo Eliphaz raptus in contemplatione cognovit, nisi quod justificari homo Dei comparatione non possit? Recta namque credimus quae exterius operamur, sed cum minime interna cognoscimus, quasi in solis radio positi caligamus. Cum vero illa utcunque percipimus, ista non utcunque judicamus, quia tanto quisque subtilius de tenebris judicat, quanto ei verius claritas lucis constat. Qui enim lucem videt, scit quid de tenebris aestimet. Nam qui candorem lucis ignorat, et obscura pro lucidis approbat. Bene autem subditur: 170 Aut factore suo purior erit vir? Quisquis de percussione murmurat, quid aliud quam justitiam ferientis accusat? Puriorem se ergo vir factore suo existimat, si contra flagellum querelam parat; eumque sibi procul dubio postponit, cujus judicium de sua afflictione redarguit. Ut ergo homo reprehendere non audeat judicem culpae, hunc humiliter cogitet auctorem naturae, quia qui mire ex nihilo hominem fecit, factum impie non affligit. Quod tunc Eliphaz didicit, cum vocem quasi aurae lenis audivit. In consideratione namque divinae magnitudinis discitur quam humiliter in sua animadversione timeatur. Et qui superna degustat, inferiora aequanimiter tolerat, quia plene intus conspicit, quanti aestimet quod foris agit. Male enim se rectum putat, qui regulam summae rectitudinis ignorat; et saepe lignum rectum creditur, si ad regulam non ducatur; sed cum regulae jungitur, per quantam tortitudinem tumescit invenitur, quia nimirum rectitudo abcidens increpat, quod oculus deceptus approbabat. Eliphaz itaque quia superna conspexit, districtum judicium de inferioribus exerit; et quamvis beatum Job non recte redarguit, in comparatione tamen creatoris omnium, creaturae modum recte describit dicens: [

CAPUT XXXVIII.

VERS. 18, 19. Ecce qui serviunt ei, non sunt stabiles, et in angelis suis reperit pravitatem: quanto magis hi, qui habitant domos luteas, qui terrenum habent fundamentum, consumentur velut tinea? 68. Natura angelica cur mutabilis, et unde fiat immutabilis. Angelorum lapsus homines admonet de sua infirmitate diffidere. Tinea, concupiscentia. — Natura angelica etsi contemplationi auctoris inhaerendo, in statu suo immutabiliter permanet; eo ipso tamen quo creatura est, in semetipsa vicissitudinem mutabilitatis habet. Mutari autem, ex alio ad aliud ire est, et in semetipso stabilem non esse. Unaquaeque enim res quasi tot passibus ad aliud tendit, quot mutabilitatis

suae motibus subjacet. Sola autem natura incomprehensibilis a statu suo nescit moveri, quae ab eo quod semper idem est, nescit immutari. Nam si angelorum substantia a mutabilitatis motu fuisset aliena, bene ab auctore condita, nequaquam in reprobis spiritibus a beatitudinis suae arce cecidisset. Mire autem omnipotens Deus naturam summorum spirituum bonam, sed mutabilem condidit, ut et qui permanere nollent, ruerent, et qui in conditione persisterent, tanto in ea jam dignius, quanto et ex arbitrio starent; et eo majoris apud Deum meriti fierent; quo mutabilitatis suae motum voluntatis statione fixissent. Quia ergo ipsa quoque natura angelica est in semetipsa mutabilis, quam videlicet mutabilitatem vicit per hoc, quod ei qui semper idem est vinculis amoris illigatur, recte nunc dicitur: Ecce qui serviunt ei, non sunt stabiles. Atque ejusdem protinus documentum mutabilitatis adjungitur, cum de apostatis spiritibus subinfertur: Et in angelis suis reperit pravitatem. Ex quorum casu bene infirmitatis humanae considerationem colligit, cum illico subnectit: Quanto magis hi, qui habitant domos luteas, qui terrenum habent fundamentum, consumentur velut tinea? Luteas quippe domos habitamus, quia in corporibus terrenis subsistimus. Quae bene Paulus considerans 171 ait: Habemus thesaurum istum in vasis fictilibus (II Cor. IV, 7). Et rursum: Scimus quia si terrestris domus nostra hujus habitationis dissolvatur, quod aedificationem ex Deo habemus, domum non manufactam (II Cor. V, 1). Terrenum quoque fundamentum est substantia carnis. Quod in se sollicite Psalmista conspexerat, cum dicebat: Non est occultatum os meum a te, quod fecisti in occulto, et substantia mea in inferioribus terrae (Psal. CXXXVIII, 15). Tinea autem de veste nascitur, et eamdem vestem, de qua oritur, oriendo corrumpit. Quasi quaedam vero vestis animae caro est; sed haec nimirum vestis habet tineam suam, quia ab ipsa carnalis tentatio oritur, ex qua laceratur. Quasi enim quadam sua tinea vestis nostra consumitur, cum caro corruptibilis tentationem gignit, et per hanc ad interitum pervenit. Velut tinea homo consumitur, cum de se oritur unde conteratur. Ac si aperte dicat: Si illi spiritus esse ex se incommutabiles nequeunt, qui nulla carnis infirmitate deprimuntur; qua temeritate se homines in bono permanere constanter existimant, quos in eo quod intellectus ad summa evehit, carnalis infirmitas aggravans praepedit, ut per corruptionis vitium in semetipsis habeant unde ab intima novitate veterascant? 72. Qui prosperis vel adversis bene utantur. — Sed quia nequaquam sic humani generis multitudo deseritur, ut cuncta ad interitum tendere permittatur, sunt nonnulli qui praesentis vitae oblectamentum despiciunt, etiam cum adsunt, transitoria esse considerant, atque haec ex amore aeternitatis calcant. Cumque in hoc primo gradu judicii gressum ponunt, vegetiores ad altiora perveniunt, ut cuncta temporalia non solum quia citius sunt amittenda, despiciant, sed his inhaerere non appetant, etiam si aeterna esse potuissent; et a pulchre conditis amorem subtrahunt, quia in ipsum auctorem pulchritudinis cordis passibus tendunt. Et sunt nonnulli qui bona vitae praesentis diligunt, sed tamen haec nullatenus assequuntur: qui rebus temporalibus totis desideriis inhiant, mundi gloriam quaerunt, sed adipisci nequaquam possunt. Hos, ut ita dixerim, cor ad mundum 173 pertrahit, mundus ad cor repellit. Nam saepe contingit ut ipsis suis adversitatibus fracti ad mentem redeant, et in semetipsis reversi considerent, quam sint inania quae quaerebant, seseque pro tam stulto desiderio protinus ad lamentum vertant; et tanto valentius aeterna desiderent, quanto se stultius laborasse pro temporalibus dolent. Unde bene descriptis reprobis subditur:

CAPUT XLI.

Vers. 21. — Qui autem reliqui fuerint, auferentur ex iis. 73. Quos mundus despicit, Deus eligit. — Quos alios reliquos, nisi hujus mundi despectos accipimus? Quos dum praesens saeculum ad nullius gloriae usum eligit, quasi minimos indignosque derelinquit. Sed mundi reliquos auferre Dominus dicitur, quia despectos hujus saeculi eligere dignatur, Paulo attestante qui ait: Non multi sapientes secundum carnem, non multi potentes, non multi nobiles; sed quae stulta sunt mundi elegit Deus, ut confundat sapientes; et infirma mundi elegit Deus, ut confundat fortia (I Cor. I, 26, 27). Quod bene in libris Regum Aegyptio puero in via lassescente signatur, quem Amalecita aegrotum in itinere deserit, David vero invenit, cibo reficit, ducem sui itineris facit; Amalecitam persequitur, epulantem reperit, et funditus exstinguit (I Reg. XXX, 13). Quid est enim quod Aegyptius Amalecitae puer in itinere lassatur, nisi quod amator praesentis saeculi peccati sui nigredine opertus, saepe ab eodem saeculo infirmus despectusque relinquitur, ut cum eo currere nequaquam valeat, sed fractus adversitate torpescat? Sed hunc David invenit, quia Redemptor noster veraciter manu fortis nonnunquam quos despectos a mundi gloria reperit, in suum amorem convertit. Cibo pascit, quia verbi scientia reficit. Ducem itineris eligit, quia suum etiam praedicatorem facit. Et qui Amalecitam sequi non valuit, dux David efficitur, quia is, quem indignum mundus deseruit, non solum conversus in suas mentes Dominum recipit, sed praedicando hunc etiam usque ad aliena corda perducit. Quo videlicet duce David Amalecitam convivantem invenit et exstinguit, quia ipsis Christus praedicantibus mundi laetitiam destruit, quos mundus comites habere despexit. Quia igitur plerumque quos mundus relinquit, Dominus eligit, recte nunc dicitur: Qui reliqui fuerint, auferentur ex eis. Sequitur:

CAPUT XLII.

IBID. — Morientur, et non in sapientia. 74. Scripturae mos, ut ubi quid interponit peregrinum, mox ad tractatum argumentum redeat. — Quid est quod superius reproborum interitum protulit, dicens: Quia nullus intelligit, in aeternum peribunt; et de electis Dei illico adjunxit: Qui reliqui fuerint, auferentur ex eis; et hoc protinus, quod eisdem electis non conveniat, subdit dicens: Morientur, et non in sapientia? Si enim a reprobis divinitus auferuntur, quo pacto mori non in sapientia dicuntur? Sed nimirum sacrae Scripturae consuetudo est, ut cum aliquid narrat, interposita alterius causae sententia, ad superiora protinus redeat. Nam postquam dixit: Et quia nullus est qui intelligat, in aeternum peribunt, electorum mox sortem subintulit, dicens: Qui autem reliqui fuerint, auferentur ex eis. Et rursum sententiae suae oculum in eum, quem praedixerat, interitum reproborum mittens, subito adjunxit: Morientur, 174 et non in sapientia. Ac si diceret: Hi quos dixi quia non intelligentes in aeternum peribunt, procul dubio non in sapientia morientur. Sed hunc esse nonnunquam morem sacri eloquii melius ostendemus, si ex eo aliquam hujus rei similitudinem proferamus. Paulus namque apostolus cum dilectum discipulum de instituendis Ecclesiae officiis admoneret, ne quos forte ad sacros ordines inordinate proveheret, dixit: Manus cito nemini imposueris, neque communicaveris peccatis alienis, te ipsum castum custodi (I Tim. V, 22). Qui ad infirmitatem ejus corporis protinus verba convertens ait: Noli adhuc aquam bibere, sed modico vino utere propter stomachum tuum, et frequentes tuas infirmitates (Ibid., 23). Statimque subjungit, dicens: Quorumdam hominum peccata manifesta sunt praecedentia ad judicium, quorumdam autem et subsequuntur (Ibid., 24). Quid ergo ad illud pertinet, quod ab infirmo bibi aquam prohibuit, hoc quod de peccatis absconditis quorumdam hominum manifestisque subjunxit, nisi quod interposita de ejus infirmitate sententia, ad hoc in extremo rediit, quod superius dixit: Manus cito nemini imposueris, neque communicaveris peccatis alienis? Ut enim haec eadem peccata quanta sollicitudine perquirenda essent ostenderet, interposita contra infirmitatis molestiam discretionis admonitione, protinus intulit quod in aliis patescerent, in aliis laterent, dicens: Quorumdam hominum peccata manifesta sunt praecedentia ad judicium, quorumdam autem et subsequuntur. Sicut ergo per hanc sententiam Paulus non eisdem verbis congruit, quibus eam loquens de Timothei infirmitate subjunxit; sed ad illud rediit, quod superius intermittendo narravit; ita hoc loco Eliphaz cum de electis diceret: Qui reliqui fuerint, auferentur ex eis, illico adjungens: Morientur, et non in sapientia, ad illud protinus recurrit, quod superius de reprobis protulit, dicens: Et quia nullus intelligit, in aeternum peribunt. 75. Moriuntur reprobi et electi, hi in sapientia, illi in insipientia. — Idcirco autem reprobi electos despiciunt, quod ad vitam invisibilem per visibilem mortem tendunt. De quibus bene nunc dicitur: Morientur, et non in sapientia. Ac si aperte diceretur: Mortem quidem et sapientiam pariter fugiunt; sed sapientiam penitus deserunt, mortis autem laqueos non evadunt. Et quia quandoque morituri vivere moriendo potuerant, dum mortem quae procul dubio ventura est metuunt, et vitam simul et sapientiam perdunt. At contra justi in sapientia moriuntur, quia mortem quam devitare funditus nequeunt, cum pro veritate imminet, differre contemnunt; eamque dum aequanimiter ferunt, poenam propaginis vertunt in instrumentum virtutis, ut inde debeat vita recipi, unde per primae culpae meritum cogitur finiri. Sed quia haec Eliphaz contra iniquos veraciter protulit, beatum Job reprehensibilem aestimans, de fastu se sapientiae inflavit. Unde et post praedicamenta tantae rectitudinis, irrisionis verba subjungit, dicens:

CAPUT XLIII.

CAP. V. VERS. 1. — Voca ergo si est qui tibi respondeat. 76. Vocare Deum quid sit, quid Dei respondere. — Omnipotens enim Deus saepe ejus precem 175 in perturbatione deserit, qui praecepta illius in tranquillitate contemnit. Unde scriptum est: Qui avertit aurem suam ne audiat legem, oratio ejus erit exsecrabilis (Prov. XXVIII, 9). Vocare autem nostrum, est humili Deum prece deposcere; respondere vero Dei, est effectum precibus praebere. Ait ergo: Voca, si est qui tibi respondeat. Ac si aperte dicat: Quantumlibet afflictus clames, Deum respondentem non habes, quia vox in tribulatione non invenit, quem mens in tranquillitate contempsit. Ubi adhuc deridendo subjungit:

CAPUT XLIV.

IBID. — Et ad aliquem sanctorum convertere. 77. Ac si despiciens dicat: Sanctos quoque invenire in afflictione adjutores non vales, quos habere socios in hilaritate noluisti. Qui post irrisionem protinus sententiam subdit, dicens:

CAPUT XLV.

VERS. 2. — Virum stultum interficit iracundia, et parvulum occidit invidia. 78. Vera dicit Eliphaz, sed non vere in Job. Irae quanta culpa, quot mala. — Quae nimirum sententia vera esset, si illata contra tanti viri patientiam non fuisset. Sed nos pensemus quod dicitur, quamvis ab auditoris sui virtute relidatur, ut ostendamus quam rectum est quod promitur, si non in beatum Job injuste promeretur, cum scriptum sit, Tu autem, Domine, cum tranquillitate judicas (Sap. XII, 18); sciendum nobis magnopere est quia quotiens turbulentos motus animi sub mansuetudinis virtute restringimus, redire ad similitudinem conditoris conamur. Nam cum tranquillitatem mentis ira diverberat, dilaniatam quodam modo scissamque perturbat, ut sibimetipsi non congruat, ac vim intimae similitudinis amittat. Quanta ergo sit iracundiae culpa pensemus, per quam dum mansuetudo amittitur, supernae imaginis similitudo vitiatur. Per iram sapientia perditur, ut quid quove ordine agendum sit omnino nesciatur, sicut scriptum est: Ira in sinu stulti requiescit (Eccl. VII, 10); quia nimirum intelligentiae lucem subtrahit, cum mentem permovendo confundit. Per iram vita amittitur, etsi sapientia teneri videatur, sicut scriptum est: Ira perdit etiam prudentes (Prov. XV, 1, sec. LXX); quia scilicet confusus animus nequaquam explet, etiam si quid intelligere prudenter valet. Per iram justitia relinquitur, sicut scriptum est:

Ira viri justitiam Dei non operatur (Jac. I, 20); quia dum perturbata mens judicium suae rationis exasperat, omne quod furor suggerit, rectum putat. Per iram gratiae vitae socialis amittitur, sicut scriptum est: Noli esse assiduus cum homine iracundo, ne discas semitas ejus, et sumas scandalum animae tuae (Prov. XXII, 24, 25). Et idem: Quis poterit habitare cum homine, cujus spiritus facilis est ad irascendum? (Prov. XVIII, 14.) Quia qui se ex humana ratione non temperat, necesse est, ut bestialiter solus vivat. Per iram concordia rumpitur, sicut scriptum est: Vir animosus parit rixas. Et vir iracundus effodit peccata (Prov. XV, 18). Iracundus quippe peccata effodit, quia etiam malos, quos incaute ad discordiam provocat, pejores facit. Per iram lux veritatis amittitur, sicut scriptum est: Sol non occidat super iracundiam vestram (Ephes. IV, 26); quia cum menti iracundia confusionis tenebras incutit, huic Deus radium suae cognitionis abscondit. Per iram sancti Spiritus splendor excluditur; quo contra, juxta vetustam translationem scriptum est: Super quem 176 requiescet spiritus meus, nisi super humilem et quietum et trementem sermones meos (Isa. LXVI, 2)? Cum enim humilem diceret, quietum protinus adjunxit. Si ergo ira quietem mentis subtrahit, suam sancto Spiritui habitationem claudit, cujus recessione animus vacuus, ad apertam mox insaniam ducitur, et usque ad superficiem ab intimo cogitationum fundamento dissipatur. 79. Imago irati optimis coloribus expressa. — Nam irae suae stimulis accensum cor palpitat, corpus tremit, lingua se praepedit, facies ignescit, exasperantur oculi, et nequaquam recognoscuntur noti. Ore quidem clamorem format, sed sensus quid loquatur ignorat. In quo itaque iste ab arreptitiis longe est, qui actionis suae conscius non est? Unde fit plerumque ut usque ad manus ira prosiliat, et quo ratio longius recedit, audacior exsurgat; seque ipsum retinere animus non valet, quia, factus est potestatis alienae; et eo furor membra foras in ictibus exercet, quo intus ipsam membrorum dominam mentem captivam tenet. Aliquando autem manus non exerit, sed in maledictionis jaculum linguam vertit. Fratris namque interitum precibus exposcit, et hoc Deum perpetrare expetit, quod ipse perversus homo facere vel metuit, vel erubescit. Fitque ut voto et voce homicidium peragat, etiam cum a laesione proximi manibus cessat. Aliquando ira perturbato animo, quasi ex judicio silentium indicit; et quo se foras per linguam non exprimit, intus deterius ignescit, ut iratus quisque collocutionem suam proximo subtrahat, et nihil dicendo, quam sit aversus dicat. Et nonnunquam haec silentii severitas per disciplinae dispensationem geritur, si tamen sollicite in intimis discretionis forma teneatur. Nonnunquam vero dum accensus animus a consueta locutione restringitur, per accessum temporis penitus a proximi dilectione separatur, et acriores stimuli ad mentem veniunt, causae quoque quae gravius exasperant oriuntur; atque in irati oculo festuca in trabem vertitur, dum ira in odium permutatur. Plerumque ira per silentium clausa intra mentem vehementius aestuat et clamosas tacita voces format; verba sibi, quibus exasperetur objicit, et quasi in causae examine posita durius exaperata respondet; quod Salomon breviter insinuat, dicens: Praestolatio impiorum furor (Prov. XI, 23). Sicque fit ut perturbatus animus majorem strepitum sui silentii sentiat, eumque gravius clausae irae flamma consumat. Unde bene ante nos quidam sapiens dixit: Cogitationes iracundi vipereae sunt generationes, mentem comedunt matrem suam. 80. Gradus quatuor quibus ad iram sumus affecti. — Sciendum vero est quo nonnullos ira citius accendit, facilius deserit. Nonnullos vero tarde quidem commovet, sed diutius tenet. Alii namque accensis calamis similes, dum vocibus perstrepunt, quasi quosdam accensionis suae sonitus reddunt; citius quidem flammam faciunt, sed protinus in favillam frigescunt. Alii autem lignis gravioribus durioribusque non dispares, accensionem tarde suscipiunt, sed tamen accensi semel difficilius exstinguuntur, et quia se tardius in asperitatem concitant, furoris, sui diutius ignem 177 servant. Alii autem, quod est nequius, et citius iracundiae flammas accipiunt, et tardius deponunt. Nonnulli vero has et tarde suscipiunt, et citius amittunt. In quibus nimirum quatuor modis liquido lector agnoscit, quia et ad tranquillitatis bonum ultimus plusquam primus appropinquat, et in malo secundum tertius superat. Sed quid prodest quod iracundia quomodo mentem teneat, dicimus, si non etiam qualiter compesci debeat exprimamus? 81. Irae compescendae duo modi. — Duobus etenim modis fracta possidere animum ira desuescit. Primus quippe est, ut mens sollicita antequam agere quodlibet incipiat, omnes sibi, quas pati potest, contumelias proponat, quatenus Redemptoris sui probra cogitans, ad adversa se praeparet. Quae nimirum venientia tanto fortior excipit, quanto se cautius ex praescientia armavit. Qui enim improvidus ab adversitate deprehenditur, quasi ab hoste dormiens invenitur; eumque citius inimicus necat, quia non repugnantem perforat. Nam qui mala imminentia per sollicitudinem praenotat, hostiles incursus quasi in insidiis vigilans exspectat; et inde ad victoriam valenter aecingitur, unde nesciens deprehendi putabatur. Solerter ergo animus ante actionis suae primordia, cuncta debet adversa meditari; ut semper haec cogitans, semper contra haec thorace patientiae munitus, et quidquid accesserit providus superet, et quidquid non accesserit lucrum putet. Secundus autem servandae mansuetudinis modus est, ut cum alienos excessus aspicimus, nostra, quibus in aliis excessimus, delicta cogitemus. Considerata quippe infirmitas propria, mala nobis excusat aliena. Patienter namque illatam injuriam tolerat, qui pie meminit quod fortasse adhuc habeat, in quo debeat ipse tolerari. Et quasi aqua ignis exstinguitur, cum surgente furore animi, sua cuique ad mentem culpa revocatur, quia erubescit peccata non parcere, qui vel Deo, vel proximo saepe se recolit parcenda peccasse. 82. Ira alia ex impatientia, alia ex zelo. Prima oculum excaecat, altera ita turbat, ut ad clarius videndum disponat. — Sed inter haec solerter sciendum est quod alia est ira, quam impatientia excitat, alia quam zelus format. Illa ex vitio, haec ex virtute generatur. Si enim nulla ira ex virtute surgeret, divinae animadversionis impetum Phinees per gladium non placasset. Hanc iram quia Heli non habuit, motum contra se implacabiliter supernae ultionis excitavit. Nam quo contra subditorum vitia tepuit, eo contra illum districtio aeterni rectoris exarsit. De hac per Psalmistam dicitur: Irascimini, et nolite peccare (Psal. IV, 5). Quod nimirum non recte intelligunt, qui irasci nos nobis tantummodo, non etiam proximis delinquentibus volunt. Si enim sic proximos ut nos amare praecipimur, restat ut sic eorum erratibus sicut nostris vitiis irascamur. De hac per Salomonem dicitur: Melior est ira risu, quia per tristitiam vultus corrigitur animus delinquentis (Eccle. VII, 4). De hac iterum Psalmista ait: Turbatus est prae ira oculus meus (Psal. VI, 8). Ira quippe per vitium oculum mentis excaecat, ira autem per zelum turbat; quia quo saltem recti aemulatione concutitur, ea quae nisi tranquillo corde percipi non potest, contemplatio dissipatur. Ipse namque zelus rectitudinis, quia inquietudine mentem agitat, ejus mox aciem obscurat, 178 ut altiora in commotione non videat, quae pene prius tranquilla cernebat. Sed inde subtilius ad alta reducitur, unde ad tempus, ne videat, reverberatur. Nam ipsa recti aemulatio aeterna post paululum in tranquillitate largius aperit, quae haec interim per commotionem claudit; et unde mens turbatur ne videat, inde proficit ut ad videndum verius clarescat: sicut infirmanti oculo cum collyrium immittitur, lux penitus negatur; sed inde eam post paululum veraciter recipit, unde hanc ad tempus salubriter amittit. Nunquam vero commotioni contemplatio jungitur, nec praevalet mens perturbata conspicere, ad quod vix tranquilla valet inhiare, quia nec solis radius cernitur, cum commotae nubes coeli faciem obducunt, nec turbatus fons respicientis imaginem reddit, quam tranquillus proprie ostendit, quia quo ejus unda palpitat, eo in se speciem similitudinis obscurat. 83. Cavendum ne ira menti ex zelo commotae dominetur. — Sed cum per zelum animus movetur, curandum summopere est ne haec eadem, quae instrumento virtutis assumitur, menti ira dominetur, nec quasi domina praeeat, sed velut ancilla ad obsequium parata, a rationis tergo nunquam recedat. Tunc enim robustius contra vitia erigitur, cum subdita rationi famulatur. Nam quantumlibet ira ex zelo rectitudinis surgat, si immoderata mentem vicerit, rationi protinus servire contemnit; et tanto se impudentius dilatat, quanto impatientiae vitium virtutem putat. Unde necesse est ut hoc ante omnia, qui zelo rectitudinis movetur, attendat, ne ira extra mentis dominium transeat, sed in ultione peccati tempus modumque considerans, surgentem animi perturbationem subtilius retractando restringat, animositatem reprimat, et motus fervidos sub aequitate disponat; ut eo fiat justior ultor alienus, quo prius exstitit victor suus, quatenus sic culpas delinquentium corrigat, ut ante ipse qui corrigit, per patientiam crescat, et fervorem suum transcendendo dijudicet, ne intemperanter excitatus ipso zelo rectitudinis, longe a rectitudine aberret. Quia vero, sicut diximus, etiam laudanda boni aemulatio mentis oculum turbat, recte nunc dicitur: Virum stultum interficit iracundia. Ac si aperte diceretur: Ira per zelum sapientes turbat, ira vero per vitium stultos trucidat, quia illa sub ratione restringitur, haec vero irrationabiliter devictae menti dominatur. Bene autem subditur.

CAPUT XLVI.

IBID. — Et parvulum occidit invidia. 84. Invidus eo cui invidet, se minorem testatur. — Invidere enim non possumus, nisi eis quos nobis in aliquo meliores putamus. Parvulus ergo est qui livore occiditur, quia ipse sibi testimonium perhibet, quod ei minor sit cujus invidia torquetur. Hinc est quod hostis callidus primo homini invidendo subripuit, quia amissa beatitudine, minorem se immortalitati illius agnovit. Hinc est quod Cain ad perpetrandum fratricidium corruit (Genes. IV, 5-7); quia despecto suo sacrificio, praelatum sibi infremuit, cujus Deus hostiam accepit: et quem meliorem se esse exhorruit, ne utcunque esset, amputavit. Hinc Esau ad persecutionem fratris exarsit (Genes. XXV, 34; XXVII, 41), quia primogenitorum benedictione perdita, quam tamen esu lenticulae ipse vendiderat, minorem se ei, 179 quem nascendo praeibat, ingemuit. Hinc Joseph fratres sui Ismaelitis transeuntibus vendiderunt (Genes. XXXVII, 27, 28), quia cognito revelationis mysterio, ne se melior fieret, ejus provectibus obviare conati sunt. Hinc Saul David subditum, lanceam intorquendo, persequitur (I Reg. XVIII, 11), quia quem magnis quotidie augeri virtutum successibus sensit, ultra se excrescere expavit. Parvulus itaque est qui invidia occiditur, quia nisi ipse inferior existeret, de bono alterius non doleret. 85. In invidia serpens antiquus totum virus suum concutit ac vomit. Invidi descriptio. — Sed inter haec sciendum est quia quamvis per omne vitium quod perpetratur, humano cordi antiqui hostis virus infunditur, in hac tamen nequitia, tota sua viscera serpens concutit, et imprimendae malitiae pestem vomit. De quo nimirum scriptum est: Invidia diaboli mors intravit in orbem terrarum (Sap. II, 24). Nam cum devictum cor livoris putredo corruperit, ipsa quoque exteriora indicant, quam graviter animum vesania instigat. Color quippe pallore afficitur, oculi deprimuntur, mens accenditur, et membra frigescunt, fit in cogitatione rabies, in dentibus stridor; cumque in latebris cordis crescens absconditur odium, dolore caeco terebrat conscientiam vulnus inclusum. Nil laetum de propriis libet, quia tabescentem mentem sua poena sauciat, quam felicitas torquet aliena; quantoque extranei operis in altum fabrica ducitur, tanto fundamentum mentis lividae profundius suffoditur; ut quo alii ad meliora properant, eo ipse deterius ruat; qua ruina videlicet etiam illud destruitur, quod in aliis actibus perfecto opere surrexisse putabatur. Nam invidia cum mentem tabefecerit, cuncta quae invenerit bene gesta consumit. Unde bene per Salomonem dicitur: Vita carnium, sanitas cordis; putredo ossium invidia (Prov. XIV, 30). Quid enim per carnes, nisi infirma quaedam ac tenera; et quid per ossa, nisi fortia acta signantur? Et plerumque contingit ut quidam cum vera cordis innocentia in nonnullis suis actibus infirmi videantur;

quidam vero jam quaedam ante humanos oculos robusta exerceant, sed tamen erga aliorum bona, 180 intus invidiae pestilentia tabescant. Bene ergo dicitur: Vita carnium, sanitas, cordis, quia si mentis innocentia custoditur, etiam si qua foris infirma sunt, quandoque roborantur. Et recte subditur: Putredo ossium invidia, quia per livoris vitium, ante Dei oculos pereunt etiam fortia acta virtutum. Ossa quippe per invidiam putrescere, est quaedam etiam robusta deperire. 86. Invidiae imminutio et mors, inchoatus aut perfectus amor aeternitatis. — Sed cur haec de invidia dicimus, si non etiam qualiter eruatur intimemus? Difficile namque est ut hoc alteri non invideat, quod adipisci alter exoptat; quia quidquid temporale percipitur, tanto fit minus singulis, quanto dividitur in multis; et idcirco desiderantis mentem livor excruciat, quia hoc quod appetit, aut funditus alter accipiens adimit, aut a quantitate restringit. Qui ergo livoris peste plene carere desiderat, illam haereditatem diligat, quam cohaeredum numerus non angustat; quae et omnibus una est, et singulis tota; quae tanto largior ostenditur, quanto ad hanc percipientium multitudo dilatatur. Imminutio ergo livoris est affectus surgens internae dulcedinis et plena mors est ejus, perfectus amor aeternitatis. Nam cum mens ab ejus rei appetitu retrahitur, quae accipientium numero partitur, tanto magis proximum diligit; quanto minus ex provectu illius sua damna pertimescit. Quae si perfecte in amore coelestis patriae rapitur, plene etiam in proximi dilectione sine omni invidia solidatur; quia cum nulla terrena desiderat, nihil est quod ejus erga proximum charitati contradicat. Quae nimirum charitas quid est aliud quam oculus mentis; qui si terreni amoris pulvere tangitur, ab internae lucis mox intuitu laesus reverberatur? Quia autem parvulus est qui terrena diligit, magnus qui aeterna concupiscit, potest etiam sic non inconvenienter intelligi: Parvulum occidit invidia, quoniam hujus pestis languore non moritur, nisi qui adhuc in desideriis infirmatur.

LIBER SEXTUS.

Totum caput quintum, a versu tertio orsus, spiritali intellectu, pauca quidem allegorico, pleraque autem morali exponit.

CAPUT PRIMUM.

181 Job Christum et Ecclesiam, ejus amicis haereticos praesignari. — Servata historiae veritate beati Job dicta, amicorumque illius mystica proposui interpretatione discutere; quia cunctis vera scientibus liquet quod redemptorem mundi totis suis allegationibus curat sancta scriptura promittere, eumque per electos omnes, ut per ejus scilicet membra, studuit signare. Unde et idem beatus Job latino eloquio dolens dicitur, ut per ejus et nomen et vulnera, Redemptoris nostri passio designetur, de quo propheta ait: Vere languores nostros ipse tulit, et dolores nostros ipse portavit (Isai. LIII, 4). Cui tentator, ablatis omnibus, et servos et filios occidit; quia non solum Judaicum populum ex timore servientem, sed ipsos quoque apostolos in suo amore regeneratos, passionis ejus tempore telo perfidiae perculit. Vulnere beati Job corpus atteritur, quia Redemptor noster configi clavis in crucis patibulo non dedignatur. A planta autem pedis usque ad verticem vulnera suscepit, quia sanctam Ecclesiam, quae corpus ejus est, non solum per extrema et ultima, sed usque ad summa membra persecutione saeviens tentator affligit. Unde etiam Paulus dixit: Compleo ea quae desunt passionum Christi in carne mea (Coloss. I, 24). Cui suadere uxor ad maledicendum nititur, quia carnales quique intra sanctam Ecclesiam adjutores callidi tentatoris existunt. Quae enim eum ad maledicendum provocat, vitam carnalium designat; quia, ut jam supra diximus (l. III, c. 20. n. 36, 37), intra sanctam Ecclesiam incorrectis moribus positi, quo per fidem bonis juxta sunt, eo per vitam durius premunt. Quia enim quasi fideles vitari nequeunt, a fidelibus tanto deterius, quanto et interius tolerantur. Amici vero illius, qui quasi ad consolandum veniunt, sed ad verba asperae invectionis excedunt, haereticorum speciem tenent, qui cum contra bonos Deum defendere nituntur, offendunt. 2. Spiritales sensus quos edit Gregorius, prodeunt ex historiae radice. Amicorum Job dicta nequaquam per omnia reprobanda. — Haec itaque superius latius dicta, nunc breviter studui ex mystica designatione succingere, ut lector meus ex ipsa hac replicatione meminerit me in hoc opere spiritali intellectui deservire. Et tamen cum utilitatis usus postulat, subtiliter quoque 182 studeo historiae verba discutere. Cum vero necesse est, simul utrumque complector, ut spiritales fructus allegoria germinet, quos tamen ex radice historiae veritas producit. Amicos vero beati Job, quos haereticorum tenere speciem diximus, in dictis suis nequaquam per omnia reprobamus, quia dum per supernam sententiam contra eos dicitur: Non estis locuti coram me rectum, et protinus subditur, sicut servus meus Job (Job XLII, 7), profecto liquet quia non omnino despicitur quod ex melioris comparatione reprobatur. In reprehensionem quippe ejus incaute dilabuntur; sed tamen quia tanti viri amici sunt, ex familiaritate illius mystica multa didicerunt. Unde sicut et superius diximus (Lib. V, n. 27), eorum verbis etiam Paulus utitur, et haec in assertionis suae adjutorium assumens, prolata ex veritate testatur. Quae tamen veritas recte reprehendit, quia quamlibet fortis sententia contra sanctum virum proferri non debuit. Possunt ergo mystice Eliphaz verba pensari, quibus ad beatum Job loquitur, dicens:

CAPUT II.

VERS. 3. — Ego vidi stultum firma radice, et maledixi pulchritudini ejus statim. ALLEGORICUS SENSUS. 3. Judaei sunt stulti, etiam haereticorum maledictioni ob Christi repulsam obnoxii. — Stultus quippe Judaeorum populus exstitit, quia ipsam in carne praesentiam aeternae Sapientiae sprevit. Qui quasi firma radice convaluit, quia electorum vitam temporaliter exstinguendo superavit. Sed hunc Eliphaz maledicendo despicit, quia nimirum omnes haeretici, quorum tenere speciem amicos beati Job diximus, cum de nomine Christi gloriantur, Judaeorum perfidiam ex auctoritate reprehendunt. De quo stulto protinus subditur:

CAPUT III.

VERS. 4. — Longe fiant filii ejus a salute, et conterentur in porta, et non erit qui eripiat. 4. Horum filii omnes perfidi. In Christo, qui est porta, conteruntur. — Filii hujus stulti sunt omnes qui perfidiae illius praedicatione generantur. Qui scilicet a salute longe sunt, quia etsi temporalem vitam sine afflictione percipiunt, aeterna gravius ultione feriuntur, sicut de eisdem filiis illius Dominus dicit: Vae vobis, Scribae et Pharisaei hypocritae, qui circuitis mare et aridam, ut faciatis unum proselytum, et cum fuerit factus, facitis eum filium gehennae 183 duplo quam vos (Matth. XXIII, 15). Sequitur: Et conterentur in porta, et non erit qui eripiat. Quis alius portae nomine, nisi mediator Dei et hominum debet intelligi, qui ait: Ego sum ostium, per me si quis introierit, salvabitur (Joann. X, 9)? Filii igitur hujus stulti extra portam proficiunt, et in porta conteruntur, quia pravae Judaeorum soboles ante Mediatoris adventum in legis observatione floruerunt; sed in ipsa Redemptoris nostri praesentia a Divinitatis obsequio, perfidiae suae meritis repulsi ceciderunt. Quos nimirum non est qui eripiat, quia scilicet dum ipsum Redemptorem exstinguere persequendo conati sunt, oblata sibi ereptionis remedia absciderunt; de quo bene subditur:

CAPUT IV.

VERS. 5. — Cujus messem famelicus comedet, et ipsum rapiet armatus. 5. Gentiles messem eorum, id est, sacra eloquia, comedunt, ac divitias rapiunt. — Hujus enim stulti messis fuerat sacri seges eloquii. Quaedam namque spicarum grana, sunt verba prophetarum, quae stultus habuit, sed non comedit, quia Judaicus populus legem quidem verbo tenus tenuit, sed per fatuitatis fastidium ab ejus intellectu jejunavit. Hujus vero stulti messem famelicus comedit, quia nimirum gentilis populus verba legis intelligendo edit, ad quae plebs Judaica sine intellectu laboravit. Hos famelicos fidei Dominus praevidit, cum per evangelistam dixit: Beati qui esuriunt et sitiunt justitiam, quoniam ipsi saturabuntur (Matth. V, 6). De his famelicis Anna prophetante dicitur: Repleti prius, pro panibus se locaverunt, et famelici saturati sunt (I Reg. II, 5). Sed quia messem perdidit, recte subjungitur qualiter ipse etiam stultus perit, cum dicitur: Et ipsum rapiet armatus. Antiquus hostis Judaicum populum armatus rapuit, quia in eo vitam fidei fraudulentae suggestionis jaculis exstinxit, ut unde se inhaerere Deo crederet, inde ejus ordinationi repugnaret. Quod profecto discipulos Veritas praemonet, dicens: Venit hora ut omnis qui interficit vos arbitretur obsequium se praestare Deo (Joann. XVI, 2). Sequitur:

CAPUT V.

IBID. — Et bibent sitientes divitias ejus. 6. Eloquia Dei et messis et divitiae. Quomodo et comedi, et bibi dicuntur. — Hujus stulti divitias sitientes bibunt, quia fluentis sacrae locutionis, quae Judaicus populus in superbiae ostentatione possederat, conversae gentilium mentes irrigantur. Unde et eisdem per prophetam dicitur: Omnes sitientes venite ad aquas; et qui non habetis argentum, properate (Isai. LV, 1). Quia enim argenti vocabulo eloquia divina signantur, Psalmista testatur, dicens: Eloquia Domini, eloquia casta, argentum igne examinatum (Psal. XI, 7). Qui ergo argentum non habent, ad aquas vocantur, quia nimirum gentilitas, quae Scripturae sacrae praecepta non acceperat, sacri eloquii inundatione satiatur, quam tanto nunc avidius potat, quanto hanc diu sicca sitiebat. Eadem ergo divina eloquia et messes et divitiae vocantur: messes quia jejunam mentem reficiunt; divitiae, quia magna nos morum venustate componunt. Eadem et comedi dicuntur et bibi, quia nimirum dum quaedam in eis obscura sunt, quae non nisi interpretata intelligimus, haec quasi mandendo glutimus; dum quaedam vero ad intelligendum facilia ita sumimus ut invenimus, ea quasi non mansa bibimus, quia non fracta sorbemus. Haec sub intellectu mystico brevi locutione transcurrimus, ne quid forsitan praeterisse videremur. Sed quia beati 184 Job amici esse non possent, nisi in quibusdam quoque magna morum honestate fulgerent, restat ut in eorum verbis virtutem sensuum moraliter inquiramus, quatenus dum locutionis eorum pondus discutitur, cujus doctrinae fuerint, ostendatur.

CAPUT VI.

VERS. 3. — Ego vidi stultum firma radice, et maledixi pulchritudini ejus statim. SENSUS MORALIS. 7. Terrena sectantes in prosperis videntur firma radice. — Quasi firma radice stultus in terra figitur, quia totis desideriis in terreno amore solidatur. Unde et primus Cain civitatem in terra construxisse describitur (Genes. IV, 17), ut aperte monstraretur quia ipse in terra fundamentum posuit, qui a soliditate coelestis patriae alienus fuit. Quasi firma radice stultus attollitur, quando hic temporali prosperitate fulcitur; ut omne quod appetit assequatur, adversa nulla sustineat, contra infirmos sine repugnatione praevaleat, bene agentibus ex auctoritate contradicat, ad majora commoda ex pejori semper actione perveniat, ut unde viam vitae deserit, inde ad tempus felicior vivat. Sed cum malos florere infirmi conspiciunt, trepidant; et apud semetipsos peccantium prosperitate turbati, intus in gressibus mentis nutant. Quorum profecto speciem sumpsit Psalmista cum diceret: Mei autem pene moti sunt pedes, pene effusi sunt gressus mei; quia zelavi in peccatoribus, pacem peccatorum videns (Psal. LXXII, 2). 8. Prudentes eorum gloriam despiciunt. Nec damnare differunt. — Cum vero eorum gloriam fortes aspiciunt, protinus quae post gloriam poena sequatur, attendunt; et alta intus cogitatione despiciunt hoc, quod superbi foras fastu vacuae inflationis intumescunt. Bene ergo dicitur: Ego vidi stultum firma radice, et maledixi pulchritudini ejus statim. Pulchritudini quippe stulti maledicere, est ejus gloriam ex considerata damnatione judicare, quia eo atrocius in tormentis obruitur, quo altius in peccatis elevatur; quia transit quod extollitur, permanet quod punitur; quia qui honoratur in via, in perventione damnabitur; et quasi per amoena prata ad carcerem pervenit, qui per praesentis vitae prospera ad interitum tendit. Notandum vero, quod cum stulti pulchritudini maledixisse se diceret, protinus addidit, statim. Mos namque humanae et infirmae mentis est, ut cum earum rerum quas respicit qualitate varietur. Saepe enim ejus judicium cum ipsa praesentis rei specie ducitur, et juxta hoc quod aspicit, intentio illius sensusque formatur. Nam plerumque nonnulli, dum quorumdam gloriam cernunt, ejusdem gloriae aspectibus delectantur, ac magnum aliquid existimant, seque ut talia mereantur exoptant. Cum vero gloriosos quosque, aut dejectos subito, aut fortasse etiam morientes aspiciunt, quia humana gloria omni modo nihil sit, cum gemitu fatentur, ita ut protinus dicant: Ecce quam nihil est homo. Qui hoc nimirum rectius dicerent, si cum in gloria hominem cernerent, tunc ejus interitum cogitantes, transeuntem potentiam nihil esse sensissent. Tunc quippe est humana elatio pensanda quam nihil sit, cum sese super caeteros successibus extollit. Tunc considerandum est quo cursu felicitas transvolet, cum ante humanos oculos quasi permanens pollet. Nam gloriam morituri nihil esse, in ipsa jam morte pensare infirmi 185 quilibet possunt. Tunc enim ei etiam illi derogant, qui hanc et usque ad mortem sequentes amant. Bene itaque dicitur: Ego vidi stultum firma radice, et maledixi pulchritudini ejus statim. Ac si aperte diceret: Contra stulti pulchritudinem, moram in maledictione non habui, quia cum hanc cernerem, simul etiam poenam sequentem vidi. Non enim statim maledicerem, si qua me gloriae illius delectatio tenuisset; sed sine tarditate maledixi, quia supplicia mansura conspiciens, ejus potentiam sine dubitatione reprobavi. Sed quia iniqui quique quo plus in hoc mundo proficiunt, plures secum ad interitum trahunt, recte subditur: Longe fiant filii ejus a salute. Filii quippe stulti sunt, qui in ambitione hujus saeculi ex ejus imitatione nascuntur; qui profecto a salute tanto longius fiunt, quanto in perpetratione nequitiae nulla infirmitate feriuntur. De quibus bene additur:

CAPUT VII.

VERS. 4. — Et conterentur in porta, et non erit qui eripiat. 9. Judicii dies porta regni. Tunc non valet eripi, qui renuit hic corripi. — Nam sicut urbis aditus porta dicitur; ita est dies judicii porta regni, quia per eum ab electis omnibus ad coelestis patriae gloriam intratur. Unde et hunc diem cum ad retributionem sanctae Ecclesiae Salomon appropinquare conspiceret, dixit: Nobilis in portis vir ejus, quando sederit cum senatoribus terrae (Prov. XXXI, 23). Vir quippe est Ecclesiae humani generis Redemptor, qui in portis se nobilem ostendit, qui despectus prius in contumeliis exstitit, sed in ingressu regni sublimis apparebit. Qui cum terrae senatoribus residet, quia judicii sententiam cum sanctis ejusdem Ecclesiae praedicatoribus decernet, sicut ipse in Evangelio dicit: Vos qui secuti estis me, in regeneratione cum sederit Filius hominis in sede majestatis suae, sedebitis et vos super sedes duodecim, judicantes duodecim tribus Israel (Matth. XIX, 28). Quod Isaias quoque longe ante praenuntians ait: Dominus ad judicium veniet cum senioribus populi sui (Isai. III, 14). De his portis Salomon iterum dicit: Date ei de fructu manuum suarum, et laudent eam in portis opera ejus (Prov. XXXI, 31). Tunc quippe sancta Ecclesia de fructu manuum suarum accipit, cum eam ad percipienda coelestia laboris sui retributio attollit. Tunc eam sua opera in portis laudant, quando ejus membris in ipso regni aditu dicitur: Esurivi, et dedistis mihi manducare; sitivi, et dedistis mihi bibere; hospes eram, et collegistis me; nudus, et cooperuistis me (Matth. XXV, 35), et caetera. Filii igitur hujus stulti ante portam elati sunt, sed in porta conterentur, quia amatores hujus saeculi in praesenti vita superbiunt, sed in ipso regni aditu aeterna animadversione feriuntur. Bene autem subditur: Et non erit qui eripiat. Illos quippe veritas ab aeterna adversitate eripit, quos in temporalibus prosperis per disciplinam premit. Qui ergo nunc renuit premi, tunc non valet eripi, quia iniqui eum, quem per disciplinam habere negligunt patrem, afflictionis suae tempore per adjutorium non inveniunt ereptorem. Sequitur:

CAPUT VIII.

VERS. 5. — Cujus messem famelicus comedet. 10. Malus recta et intelligens et dicens, messem habet quam alii comedant. — Habet etiam stultus messem, quando iniquus quisque donum recte intelligentiae accipit: Scripturae sacrae sententiis docetur, bona loquitur, sed tamen nullo modo hoc quod dicit operatur: 186 verba Dei profert, nec tamen diligit; laudando exaggerat, vivendo calcat. Quia ergo stultus iste recta et intelligit et dicit, sed tamen haec operando non amat, messem habendo jejunat. Quam nimirum famelicus comedit, quia is qui ad Deum sanctis desideriis anhelat, discit quod audit, agit quod didicerit; et dum doctoris pravi recta praedicatione reficitur, quid aliud quam stulti fruge satiatur? An non famelicos suos Veritas, ut stulti messem comederent, admonebat, cum per desideria sancta flagrantibus, de Pharisaeis praeciperet, dicens: Quae dicunt facite, juxta opera vero eorum nolite facere (Matth. XXIII, 3). Ac si aperte diceret: Verbi messem loquendo excolunt, sed hanc male vivendo minime contingunt. Vestram ergo famem messis ista reficiat, quia vobis hanc per fatuitatis suae fastidium servant. Bene autem subditur:

CAPUT IX.

IBID. — Et ipsum rapiet armatus. 11. Diabolus saepe scientiam permittit, ut corrumpat vitam. — Antiquus namque hostis quasi inermis vincitur, cum mala aperte suggerens humanae menti, bona omnia simul destruere conatur. Sed armatus venit, quando bona alia intacta deserens, latenter alia corrumpit. Nam saepe quosdam in intellectu non tentat, eisque in sacri eloquii meditatione non obviat; sed tamen eorum vitam in operatione supplantat, qui dum de scientiae virtute laudantur, nequaquam suorum operum damna respiciunt; cumque in favoris delectationem animus ducitur, vitae suae vulneribus non medetur. Hunc ergo armatus hostis rapuit, quem fraude tectus in alia deserens, ex alia parte superavit. Sequitur:

CAPUT X.

IBID. — Et bibent sitientes divitias ejus. 12. Saepe hebes hoc in divinae legis eruditione studendo intelligit, quod per negligentiam ingeniosus nescit. — Saepe stultus habet interni liquoris fontem, sed non bibit, quia ingenium quidem intelligentiae accipit, sed tamen veritatis sententias cognoscere legendo contemnit; scit quia intelligere studendo praevaleat, sed ab omni doctrinae studio fastidiosus cessat. Divitiae quoque mentis, sunt verba sacrae locutionis; sed has divitias stultus oculis aspicit, et in ornamenti sui usum minime assumit, quia verba legis audiens, magna quidem esse considerat, sed ad comprehendenda haec nullo studio amoris elaborat. At contra alius sitim habet, ingenium non habet; amor ad meditandum pertrahit, sensus hebetudo contradicit; et saepe hoc in divinae legis eruditione quandoque studendo intelligit, quod per negligentiam ingeniosus nescit. Hujus ergo stulti divitias sitientes bibunt, dum praecepta Dei, quae ingeniosi fastidientes nesciunt, hebetes amantes assequuntur. In his nimirum tenebras hebetudinis illustrat oculus amoris; nam hoc tardioribus sitis aperit, quod velocioribus fastidium claudit. Qui et idcirco ad intelligentiae alta perveniunt, quia agere quae intellexerunt, vel minima nulla contemnunt; et dum sensum manibus adjuvant, sese ultra altitudinem ingeniosorum levant. Unde bene per Salomonem dicitur: Stellio manibus nititur, et moratur in aedibus regis (Prov. XXX, 28). Plerumque enim aves, quas ad volatum penna sublevat, in vepribus resident; et stellio, qui ad volatum pennas non habet, nitens manibus, regni aedificium tenet, quia nimirum saepe ingeniosi quique dum per negligentiam torpent, in pravis 187 actibus remanent, et simplices, quos ingenii penna non adjuvat, ad obtinenda aeterni regni moenia virtus operationis levat. Stellio ergo dum manibus nititur, in regis aedibus moratur, quia illo simplex per intentionem recti operis pervenit, quo ingeniosus minime ascendit. Sed his auditis, quaestio nostro cordi suboritur, cur vel negligenti intelligentiae donum tribuitur, vel studiosus quisque sensus sui tarditate praepeditur? Ad quam citius respondetur, dum protinus subditur:

CAPUT XI.

VERS. 6. — Nihil in terra sine causa. 13. Cur ingenium studio tardum, negligenti acre tribuatur. — Idcirco enim saepe et desidiosus ingenium accipit, ut de negligentia justius puniatur, quia quod sine labore assequi potuit, scire contemnit. Et idcirco nonnunquam studiosus tarditate intelligentiae premitur, ut eo majora praemia retributionis inveniat; quo magis in studio inventionis elaborat. Nihil ergo est in terra sine causa, quando et studioso tarditas ad praemium proficit, et desidioso velocitas ad supplicium crescit. Ad intelligenda autem quae recta sunt, aliquando laboris studio, aliquando vero dolore percussionis erudimur. Unde cum dictum sit, Nihil in terra sine causa; apte protinus additur:

CAPUT XII.

IBID. — Et de humo non egredietur dolor. 14. Per occulta merita mentium, aperta prodeunt flagella poenarum. — Dolor namque quasi de humo egreditur, cum homo ad Dei imaginem conditus de rebus insensibilibus flagellatur. Sed quia per occulta mentium merita, aperta prodeunt flagella poenarum, et de humo dolor non egreditur, quoniam sensus nostri malitia exigit ut a rebus insensibilibus feriatur. Ecce enim cernimus quod ad correptionem nostram exspectatus imber arente terra suspenditur, et caliginosus aer inardescente sole siccatur; mare procellis tumescentibus saevit, et alios ad transmeandum susceptos intercipit, aliis desideratum iter erecta in cumulum unda contradicit; terra non solum germina fecunditatis imminuit, sed etiam semina accepta consumit. In quibus nimirum cunctis patenter aspicitur hoc, quod quidam sapiens de Domino testatur, dicens: Et pugnabit cum eo orbis terrarum contra insensatos (Sap. V, 21). Orbis quippe terrarum cum Domino contra insensatos pugnat, quando in poena delinquentium et elementorum adversitas militat. Sed tamen de humo dolor non egreditur, quia res quaelibet insensibilis ad afflictionem nostram stimulo nostrae actionis excitatur. De humo dolor non egreditur, quia nequaquam poena de ea nascitur creatura, quae percutit, sed de ea procul dubio, quae peccando vim percussionis extorsit. Sed curandum magnopere est ut cum in rebus exterioribus pondere doloris afficimur, spe ad superna tendamus; quatenus eo mens ad alta perveniat, quo nos exterior poena castigat. Unde et apte subjungitur:

CAPUT XIII.

VERS. 7. — Homo ad laborem nascitur, et avis ad volatum. 15. Quantum caro flagellis afficitur, mens ad altiora sublevatur. — Ad laborem quippe nascitur homo quia nimirum is qui accepta est praeditus ratione, considerat quod valde sibi sit impossibile, ut haec peregrinationis suae tempora sine gemitu evadat. Unde bene Paulus cum tribulationes suas discipulis enumeraret, adjunxit: Ipsi enim scitis quod in hoc positi sumus (I Thess. III, 3). Sed in eo quod caro flagellis afficitur, 188 mens ad appetenda altiora sublevatur; Paulo rursus attestante, qui ait: Et licet is qui foris est noster homo corrumpitur, tamen is qui intus est, renovatur de die in diem (II Cor. IV, 16). Homo ergo ad laborem nascitur, et avis ad volatum, quia inde mens ad summa evolat, unde caro in infimis durius laborat. 16. Carnalium gravis labor, spiritalium nullus. — Potest quoque appellatione hominis carnalium vita signari. Unde et Paulus ait: Cum enim sit inter vos zelus et contentio, nonne carnales estis? (I Cor. III, 3.) Quibus paulo post subjecit, dicens: Nonne homines estis? (Ibid., 4.) In hac itaque vita homo ad laborem nascitur, quia carnalis quisque cum transeuntia appetit, desideriorum suorum se pondere affligit. Gravis quippe labor est, hanc ipsam praesentis vitae gloriam quaerere, quaesitam quandoque percipere, et perceptam cum circumspectione custodire. Gravis labor est, hoc cum magna fatigatione apprehendere, quod is qui apprehendet, noverit diu stare non posse. Sancti autem viri quia transeuntia non amant, non solum nulla temporalium desideriorum pondera tolerant; sed et si qua adversa consurgunt, in ipsis suis pressuris et languoribus non laborant. Quid enim flagellis durius? et tamen de flagellatis apostolis scriptum est: Ibant gaudentes a conspectu concilii, quoniam digni habiti sunt pro nomine Jesu contumeliam pati (Act. V, 41). Quid ergo eorum mentibus labor est, quibus et poena verberum labor non est? Homo ergo ad laborem nascitur, quia ille hujus mundi veraciter mala sentit, qui ejus bona inhianter appetit. Nam cujus mens ad alta suspenditur, sub ipsa est quidquid exterius contra ipsam movetur. Bene itaque subditur, Et avis ad volatum. Quia tanto animus a laboris afflictione se subtrahit, quanto per spem ad summa sustollit. An non quasi avis, Paulus ad volatum natus fuerat, qui tot adversa sustinens dicebat: Nostra conversatio in coelis est (Philip. XXXI, 20)? Et rursum: Scimus quoniam si terrestris domus nostra hujus habitationis dissolvatur, quod aedificationem habemus ex Deo, domum non manufactam, aeternam in coelis (II Cor. V, 1). Velut avis ergo ima transcenderat, quem adhuc corpore in terra demorantem, jam in sublimibus spei penna sublevabat. Sed quia nullus suis viribus valet sese in alta sustollere, ut cum visibilibus affligitur, in invisibilia sublevetur, recte mox subditur:

CAPUT XIV.

VERS. 8 — Quamobrem ego deprecabor Dominum, et ad Deum ponam eloquium meum. 17. Hoc Dei donum est. — Ac si aperte diceret: illum rogo, per quem haec tribui scio. Si enim hoc per se habere se crederet, deprecari Deum non indigeret. Sequitur:

CAPUT XV.

VERS. 9. — Qui facit magna et inscrutabilia et mirabilia absque numero. 18. Mira Dei opera humanis oculis usu viluerunt. — Quis omnipotentis Dei mirabilia perscrutari sufficiat, quod cuncta ex nihilo creavit, quod ipsa mundi fabrica mira potentiae virtute disposita est, et super aera coelum suspenditur, et super abyssum terra libratur; quod ex rebus invisibilibus omnis haec universitas ac visibilibus existit, quod hominem fecit, ut ita dixerim, in brevi colligens mundum alterum, sed rationalem; quod hunc ex anima et carne constituens, investigabili virtutis dispositione permiscuit spiritum et lutum? Ex his 189 itaque aliud novimus, aliud et sumus; sed tamen mirari negligimus, quia ea quae incomprehensibili indagatione mira sunt, humanis oculis usu viluerunt. Unde fit ut si mortuus homo suscitetur, in admirationem omnes exsiliant, et quotidie homo qui non erat nascitur, et nemo miratur, cum procul dubio omnibus constet quia plus sit creari quod non erat, quam reparari quod erat. Quia arida Aaron virga floruit, cuncti mirati sunt; quotidie ex arente terra arbor producitur, virtusque pulveris in lignum vertitur, et nemo miratur. Quia quinque sunt panibus quinque millia homines satiati, crevisse escas in dentibus cuncti mirati sunt; quotidie sparsa grana seminum, plenitudine multiplicantur spicarum, et nemo miratur. Aquam semel in vinum permutatam videntes cuncti mirati sunt; quotidie humor terrae in radicem vitis attractus, per botrum in vinum vertitur, et nemo miratur. Mira sunt itaque omnia quae mirari homines negligunt, quia ad considerandum, ut praediximus, usu torpescunt. Bene autem cum diceret: Qui facit magna, adjunxit statim: Et inscrutabilia. Minus enim fuerat magna facere, si tamen ea quae facta sunt, perscrutari potuissent. Recte autem subditur: Et mirabilia absque numero, quia minoris esset magnitudinis, si quae inscrutabilia condidit, pauca fuisset. 19. Miracula Dei per studium consideranda, non discutienda per intellectum. Fides ubi titubat, qui firmanda. Unde resurrectio fiat credibilis. — Sed inter haec sciendum est quia divina miracula et semper debent considerari per studium, et nunquam discuti per intellectum. Saepe namque humanus sensus dum quarumdam rerum rationem quaerens non invenit, in dubitationis se voraginem mergit. Unde fit ut nonnulli homines mortuorum corpora in pulverem redacta considerent; dumque resurrectionis vim ex ratione colligere non possunt, haec ad statum pristinum redire posse desperent. Mira igitur, ex fide credenda sunt, perscrutanda per rationem non sunt; quia si haec nostris oculis ratio expanderet, mira non essent. Sed cum in his fortasse animus titubat, necesse est ut ea quae per usum novit, nec tamen per rationem colligit, ad memoriam reducat; quatenus rei similis argumento fidem roboret, quam labefactari sua sagacitate deprehendit. Considerato quippe humanae carnis pulvere, quorumdam mens concussa desperat, quando pulvis ad carnem redeat, et redivivum corpus per membrorum lineamenta componat; quando illa terrae ariditas per viventia membra viridescat, ac se per eorum species formasque distinguat. Hoc nimirum comprehendi per rationem non potest, sed tamen credi facile per exemplum potest. Quis enim ab uno grano seminis, immensam surgere arborem crederet, nisi certum hoc per experimentum teneret? In tanta namque unius grani parvitate et pene nulla sui dissimilitudine, ubi latet ligni duritia, et ligno tenerior vel durior medulla, asperitas corticis, viriditas radicis, sapor fructuum, suavitas odorum, colorum diversitas, mollities foliorum? Et tamen quia hoc per experimentum novimus, ex uno grano seminis prodire omnia non dubitamus. Quid ergo est difficile, ut 190 pulvis in membra redeat, dum conditoris potentiam quotidie cernimus, qui et ex grano ligna mirabiliter, et adhuc mirabilius fructus ex lignis creat? Dicat ergo: Qui facit magna et inscrutabilia, et mirabilia absque numero, quia divinorum operum magnitudo nec ex qualitate valet discuti, nec ex quantitate numerari. Unde et adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XVI.

VERS. 10, 11. — Qui dat pluviam super faciem terrae, et irrigat aquis universa. Qui ponit humiles in sublimi, et maerentes erigit sospitate. SENSUS MYSTICUS. — 20. Aquis gratiae Deus universa irrigat. Universitatis nomine homo signatur. — Quia amicos beati Job eruditos ejus societate credimus, necesse est ut haec Eliphaz verba mystice disseramus. Omnipotens enim Deus terrae pluviam tribuit, cum arentia corda gentilium, supernae gratia praedicationis infundit. Et aquis universa irrigat, quia sterelitatem perditi hominis repletione Spiritus ad fructificationem format, sicut per semetipsam Veritas dicit: Qui biberit ex aqua, quam ego dabo ei, non sitiet in aeternum (Joan. IV, 13). Universitatis autem nomine homo signatur, quia in ipso vera species, et magna communio universitatis ostenditur. Omne namque quod est, aut est, et non vivit; aut est, et vivit, sed nequaquam sentit; aut est, et vivit, et sentit, sed non intelligit, nec discernit; aut est, aut vivit, et sentit, et intelligit, discernit. Sunt namque lapides, nec tamen vivunt. Sunt arbusta, vivunt quidem, nec tamen sentiunt. Herbarum namque atque arborum vita viriditas vocatur, sicut per Paulum de seminibus dicitur: Insipiens, tu quod seminas, non vivificatur, nisi prius moriatur (I Cor. XV, 36). Sunt bruta animalia, vivunt et sentiunt, nec tamen intelligunt.

Sunt angeli, et vivunt, et sentiunt, et intelligendo discernunt. Homo itaque, quia habet commune esse cum lapidibus, vivere cum arboribus, sentire cum animalibus, discernere cum angelis, recte nomine universitatis exprimitur, in quo juxta aliquid ipsa universitas tenetur. Unde et discipulis Veritas dicit: Euntes in mundum universum, praedicate Evangelium omni creaturae (Marc. XVI, 15). Omnem videlicet creaturam solum intelligi hominem voluit, cui commune aliquid cum omnibus creavit. 21. Universa Deus irrigat, cum ex omni hominum genere ad suam cognitionem vocat. — Quamvis hoc loco universa intelligi et aliter possunt. Sancti enim Spiritus gratia cum sibi divites subjicit, pauperes non repellit, cum fortes humiliat, venire ad se debiles non recusat; cum nobiles colligit, simul et ignobiles apprehendit; cum sapientes suscipit, imperitorum stultitiam non contemnit. Universa ergo Deus aquis irrigat, qui dono sancti Spiritus ex omni genere hominum ad suam cognitionem vocat. 22. Universa Deus irrigat, quia vim sui sermonis in singulis juxta morum diversitatem format. — Possunt autem universorum nomine ipsae morum dissimilitudines designari. Alius namque elatione erigitur, alius pondere timoris inclinatur, alius libidine aestuat, alius avaritia anhelat, alius remissione se dejicit, alius ira fervescit. Sed per doctrinam sacri eloquii, dum superbo humilitas tribuitur, timido confidentia praebetur, luxuriosus per castitatis studium ab immunditia tergitur, avarus per continentiam ab ambitionis aestu temperatur, remissus zeli rectitudine erigitur, 191 iracundus a praecipitationis suae excitatione refrenatur, universa Deus aquis irrigat; quia vim sui sermonis in singulis juxta morum diversitatem format, ut hoc in ejus eloquio quisque inveniat, per quod virtutis necessariae germen ferat. Unde per quemdam sapientem de mannae dulcedine dicitur: Paratum panem de coelo praestitisti illis sine labore, omne delectamentum in se habentem, atque omnis saporis suavitatem (Sap. XXVI, 20). Manna quippe omne delectamentum atque omnis saporis in se suavitatem habuit, quod videlicet in ore spiritalium, juxta voluntatem edentium, saporem dedit, quia divinus sermo et omnibus congruens, et a semetipso non discrepans, qualitati audientium condescendit; quem dum electus quisque utiliter juxta modum suum intelligit, quasi acceptum manna in voluntarium saporem vertit. Et quia laborem boni operis gloria sequitur retributionis, post aquarum rigationem recte subjungitur: Qui ponit humiles in sublimi, et moerentes erigit sospitate. 23. Servos Dei nunc despectos et afflictos gloria et gaudium excipient. — In sublimi humiles ponuntur, quia hi qui nunc pro Dei amore despecti sunt, tunc cum Deo judices veniunt, sicut hoc quod paulo ante jam diximus, eisdem humilibus Veritas pollicetur, dicens: Vos qui secuti estis me, in regeneratione cum sederit Filius hominis in sede majestatis suae, sedebitis et vos super duodecim sedes, judicantes duodecim tribus Israel (Matth. XIX, 28). Tunc moerentes Dominus sospitate erigit, quia hi qui, ejus desideriis accensi, prospera fugiunt, adversa patiuntur, cruciatus persequentium tolerant, seque ipsi per lamenta castigant, tanto sublimiorem tunc sospitatem recipiunt, quanto nunc cunctis mundi gaudiis devote moriuntur. Hinc est enim quod per Salomonem dicitur: Cor quod novit amaritudinem animae suae, in gaudio ejus non miscebitur extraneus (Prov. XIV, 10). Humana etenim mens amaritudinem animae suae scit, cum, aeternae patriae desideriis accensa, peregrinationis suae poenam flendo cognoscit; sed in ejus gaudio extraneus non miscebitur, quia qui nunc a moerore compunctionis alienus est, tunc particeps ad laetitiam consolationis non est. Hinc est quod in Evangelio Veritas dicit: Amen amen dico vobis, quid plorabitis et flebitis vos, mundus autem gaudebit; vos autem contristabimini, sed tristitia vestra vertetur in gaudium (Joan. XVI, 20). Et rursum: Vos igitur nunc quidem tristitiam habetis, iterum autem videbo vos, et gaudebit cor vestrum, et gaudium vestrum nemo auferet a vobis (Ibid., 22). Sospitate ergo Dominus moerentes erigere dicitur, quia pro se afflictos temporaliter vera salute consolatur. Quod tamen de electis Dei etiam in hac vita nil obstat intelligi. 24. Humiles jam ex hac vita in sublimi sunt positi. — In sublimi quippe humiles ponuntur, quia cum se ex humilitate substernunt, altae mentis judicio cuncta temporalia transeunt; cumque se indignos in omnibus aestimant, rectae cogitationis examine hujus mundi gloriam transcendentes calcant. Videamus humilem Paulum. Ecce discipulis dicit: Non enim nosmetipsos praedicamus, sed Jesum Christum Dominum nostrum, nos antem servos vestros per Christum (II Cor. IV, 5). Videamus hunc humilem in sublimi jam positum. Ait: An nescitis quia angelos judicabimus (I Cor. VI, 3)? Et rursum: Conresuscitavit et consedere nos fecit in coelestibus (Ephes. II, 6). Fortasse hunc exterius tunc catena religabat, mente tamen positus in sublimibus fuerat, qui jam per spei suae certitudinem in coelestibus sedebat. Sancti itaque viri foris despecti sunt, et velut indigni omnia tolerant; 192 sed dignos se supernis sedibus confidentes, aeternitatis gloriam cum certitudine exspectant; cumque laborant foris adversitate persecutionis, ad munitam recurrunt intrinsecus arcem mentis; et inde cuncta sub se ire despiciunt, inter quae et transi e corporaliter etiam semetipsos cernunt; minas non metuunt, quia et tormenta patiendo contemnunt. Hinc enim per Salomonem dicitur: Justus quasi leo confidens absque terrore erit (Prov. XXVIII, 1). Hinc ab eo iterum scriptum est: Non contristabit justum, quidquid ei acciderit (Prov. XII, 21). Quia enim recti quique in alto intentionis suae vertice siti sunt, dum mortem moriendo non sentiunt, miro modo eos reproborum jacula et feriunt, et non contingunt. In sublimi ergo humiles sunt positi, quia unde se in omnibus despiciunt, inde contra omnia securiores fiunt. Mens ad ea quae supra ipsam sunt inhiare cessans, sub semetipsam indesinenter ruit. — Quo contra recte sub Babylonis specie per prophetam menti reprobae dicitur: Descende, sede in pulvere, virgo filia Babylonis, sede in terra; non est solium filiae Chaldaeorum (Isai. XLVII, 1). Hoc enim loco humana mens virgo non incorrupta, ut arbitror, dicitur, sed infecunda. Et quia Babylon confusio interpretatur, recte infecunda mens Babylonis filia vocatur, quae in eo quod nequaquam bona opera germinat, dum nullo ordine rectae vitae componitur, quasi confusione matre generatur. Sin autem virgo non infecunda dicitur, sed incorrupta, postquam statum salutis perdidit, ad confusionis suae cumulum appellatur quod fuit. Cui apte per increpationem dicitur divina voce: Descende. In alto quippe humanus animus stat, quando supernis retributionibus inhiat; sed ab hoc statu descendit, cum turpiter victus sese defluentibus mundi desideriis subjicit. Cui bene mox additur: Sede in pulvere. Descendens enim in pulvere residet, quia coelestia deserens, terrenis cogitationibus aspersus in infirmis vilescit. Ubi adhuc ingeminando subjungitur: Sede in terra. Ac si aperte exprobrans dicat: Quia coelesti conversatione noluisti te erigere, sub temetipso prostratus in terrenis actibus humiliare. Unde et necessario protinus additur: Non est solium filiae Chaldaeorum. Chaldaei namque feroces interpretantur. Valde autem feroces sunt, qui voluntates proprias sequentes, nec suis parcere mortibus sciunt. Ferocia sunt terrena desideria, quae non solum contra praecepta conditoris, sed saepe etiam contra percussionum verbera, duram atque insensibilem mentem reddunt. Sed filia ferocium solium non habet, quia mens, quae ad amorem mundi ex pravis desideriis nascitur, atque eisdem desideriis obduratur, in eo quod se terrenis concupiscentiis subjicit, sedem judicii amittit; nullique apud se solio praesidet, quia examine discretionis caret, et quasi a judicii sui sessione repellitur, quia per exteriores concupiscentias vagatur. Liquet enim, quod mens, quae intus consilii sedem perdiderit, foras se per desideria innumerabiliter spargit. Et quia agere intellecta dissimulat, caecatur recte, ut etiam nesciat quod agat; et saepe justo judicio in sua ipsa voluntate relinquitur, et sub ea quae anxie appetit laboriosa mundi ministeria relaxatur. Unde apte illic subditur: Quia ultra non vocaberis mollis et tenera; tolle molam, et mole farinam (Ibid., 2). Constat nimirum quod tenerae suae filiae parentes parcunt, nec duris atque servilibus hanc operibus affligunt. Omnipotens ergo Deus quasi teneram filiam vocat, 193

quando dilectam uniuscujusque animam a laboriosis hujus mundi servitiis revocat; ne dum exterioribus actibus afficitur, ab internis desideriis obduretur. Sed Chaldaeorum filia mollis et tenera non vocatur; quia mens pravis desideriis dedita, in eo quod anxie appetit hujus saeculi labore relinquitur, ut foras mundo velut ancilla serviat, quae intus Deum ut filia nequaquam amat. Unde et molam tollere, ac farinam molere jubetur. Mola in gyrum ducitur, et farina profertur. Unaquaeque autem mundi hujus actio mola est, quae dum multas curas congerit, humanas mentes quasi per gyrum vertit; atque ex se velut farinas projicit, quia seducto corde, semper minutissimas cogitationes gignit. Nonnunquam vero qui quietus alicujus esse meriti creditur, positus in qualibet actione denudatur, unde illic protinus subinfertur: Denuda turpitudinem tuam, discooperi humerum, revela crura, transi flumina (Ibid., 2). In administratione quippe operis turpitudo denudatur, dum vilis mens abjectaque in actionis ostentatione cognoscitur, quae quieta prius magna putabatur. Humerum mens discooperit, quando opus suum quod ignorabatur ostendit. Crura revelat, quia quibus desideriorum passibus lucris mundi inhiet manifestat. Flumina etiam transit, quia actiones hujus saeculi, quae quotidie ad terminum defluunt, indesinenter appetit; dumque alias relinquit, alias assequitur, quasi semper de flumine ad flumen tendit. Haec paucis per excessum diximus, ut mens a solio sanctae intentionis excussa quo jaceat monstraremus, quia si ad ea quae super ipsam sunt inhiare cessaverit, sub semetipsam etiam indesinenter ruit. In alto autem figitur, si amorem temporalium deserens, ad spem incommutabilis aeternitatis ligatur. 26. Laetitia servorum Dei vera; laetitia iniquorum ex insania, non ex sospitate. — Bene ergo dicitur: Qui ponit humiles in sublimi. Atque apte subjungitur: Et moerentes erigit sospitate. Saepe in hoc mundo etiam laeti quilibet erecti sunt, dum de ipsa gloria suae prosperitatis intumescunt. Sed moerentes Dominus sospitate erigit, quia afflictos suos ad gloriam verae laetitiae soliditate sustollit.

Sospitate quippe, non insania erecti sunt, qui in bonis actibus positi, spe in Deum firma gratulantur. Nonnulli enim, sicut diximus, et iniquitates perpetrant, et gaudere non cessant; de quibus per Salomonem dicitur: Qui laetantur cum malefecerint, et exsultant in rebus pessimis (Prov. II, 14). Et rursum: Sunt impii, qui ita securi sunt, ac si justorum facta habeant (Eccle. VIII, 14). Hi nimirum non sospitate eriguntur, sed insania, qui superbiunt cum affligi debuerant; et inde miseri in exsultatione defluunt, unde a bonis flentur. Phreneticorum videlicet sensibus similes, insaniam qua praevalent, virtutem putant; qui ex morbo esse nesciunt hoc, quod amplius sanis possunt; et quasi crevisse se viribus aestimant, dum ad vitae terminum per augmenta languoris appropinquant. Qui quia rationis sensum non habent, flentur, et rident; et tanto in magna exsultatione se dilatant, quanto et insensibiles malum quod patiuntur ignorant. Sospitate ergo Dominus moerentes erigit, quia electorum mens non de praesentis vitae insania, sed de certitudine aeternae salutis hilarescit. Unde apte mox de hac ipsa pravorum destructione subjungitur:

CAPUT XVII.

CAPUT XVIII.

VERS. 13. — Qui comprehendit sapientes in astutia eorum, et consilia pravorum dissipat. 28. Dei consiliis renitentes, ipsis famulantur inviti. Ostenditur exemplis fratrum Joseph, Saulis, Jonae, Judaeorum. — Saepe enim nonnulli humana sapientia inflati, dum desideriis suis divina judicia contraire conspiciunt, astutis eis reluctari machinationibus conantur; et quo ad votum suum vim supernae dispensationis intorqueant, callidis cogitationibus insistunt, subtiliora consilia exquirunt; sed inde voluntatem Dei peragunt, unde hanc immutare contendunt; atque omnipotentis Dei consilio, dum resistere nituntur, obsequuntur, quia saepe et hoc ejus dispositioni apte militat, quod ei per humanum studium frivole resultat. Sapientes ergo Dominus in ipsa eorum astutia comprehendit, quando ejus consiliis humana facta etiam tunc congrue serviunt, cum resistunt. Quod melius ostendimus, si pauca gestarum rerum ad medium exempla proferamus. 29. Joseph somnium viderat, quod suo manipulo fratrum ejus se manipuli prosternebant (Genes. XXXVII, 7); somnium viderat, quod sol et luna se cum reliquis stellis adorabant. Quae quia pure fratribus retulit, eorum corda protinus futurae dominationis invidia pavorque percussit. Cumque ad se hunc venire conspicerent, malitia saeviente dixerunt: Ecce somniator ille venit, venite occidamus eum, et videamus quid illi proderunt somnia sua (Ibid., 20). Cumque se ejus dominio subjici metuunt, somniatorem in puteum deponunt, eumque Ismaelitis transeuntibus vendunt: qui in Aegyptum ductus, servituti subditus, luxuriae accusatione damnatus, castitatis merito adjutus, prophetiae judicio erectus, omni Aegypto praelatus est; per supernam vero sapientiam providus frumenta congessit, et futuro periculo necessitatis obviavit. Cumque in orbem fames irruit, de alimentorum praeparatione sollicitus Jacob filios suos in Aegyptum misit: qui frumentorum dispensationi praepositum Joseph nescientes inveniunt, atque ut mererentur alimenta percipere, eorum dispensatorem compulsi sunt pronis in terram cervicibus adorare. Pensemus ergo gestae rei ordinem, pensemus quomodo sapientes in ipsa sua astutia vis divina comprehendat. Ideo ab eis venditus fuerat Joseph, ne adoraretur; sed ideo est adoratus, quia venditus. Astute namque aliquid agere ausi sunt, ut Dei consilium mutaretur; sed divino judicio, quod declinare conati sunt, renitendo servierunt. Inde quippe coacti sunt Dei voluntatem peragere, unde hanc moliti sunt astute commutare. Sic divinum consilium dum devitatur, impletur; sic humana sapientia dum reluctatur, comprehenditur. Timuerunt fratres, 195 ne Joseph super eos excresceret; sed hoc quod divinitus dispositum fuerat, cavendo factum est ut eveniret. Humana ergo sapientia in se ipsa comprehensa est, quae voluntati Dei, unde per intentionem restitit, inde ejus impletioni militavit. 30. Sic Saul dum David subjectum quotidiano succrescere virtutum successu conspiceret, suam ei in conjugium filiam spopondit, atque in ejus dotem centum dari ab eo Philistinorum praeputia petiit, ut cum provocatus miles ultra se excrescere quaereret, inimicorum gladiis traditus vitam finiret, sicut scriptum est: Non habet rex necesse sponsalia, nisi tantum centum praeputia Philistinorum, ut fiat ultio de inimicis regis (I Reg. XVIII, 25). Porro Saul cogitabat tradere David in manus Philistinorum; sed David dispositionis intimae favore roboratus, centum se dare perhibuit, et ducenta praeputia reportavit. Cujus nimirum operis Saul argumento superatus, superna providentia in sapientiae suae est consilio comprehensus; quia unde succrescentis militis vitam se exstinguere credidit, virtutis ejus gloriam inde cumulavit. 31. Sed quia nonnunquam astute aliquid sapere etiam electi moliuntur, libet ad medium alium sapientem deducere, et quomodo in internis consiliis astutia mortalium comprehendatur, demonstrare. Prudenter quippe Jonas sapere voluit, cum ad praedicandam Ninivitarum poenitentiam missus, quia electis gentibus Judaeam deseri timuit, praedicationis officium implere recusavit (Jonae I, 2, 3, seq.). Navim petiit, fugere Tharsis elegit; sed protinus tempestas exoritur, sors mittitur, ut videlicet cognoscatur cujus culpa mare turbetur. Jonas in culpa deprehenditur, in profundum mergitur, ceto sorbente devoratur, atque illuc gestante bellua pervenit, quo ire sponte contemnit. Ecce fugitivum Dei tempestas invenit, sors ligat, mare suscipit, bellua includit, et quia auctori suo obedire renititur, ad locum quo missus fuerat, suo reus carcere portatur. Jubente Deo ministrare homo prophetiam noluit, aspirante Deo bellua prophetam vomit. Comprehendit erge Dominus sapientes in astutia eorum, quando et hoc in usum suae voluntatis redigit, per quod sibi voluntas humana contradicit. 32. Perscrutemur adhuc Hebraeorum sapientiam, ut videamus quid providendo prohibuit, quid prohibendo provocavit. Certe cum ad Redemptoris nostri miracula credentium turba conflueret, cum sacerdotes populi, invidiae facibus accensi, mundum post eum ire proclamarent dicentes: Videtis quia nihil proficimus, ecce mundus totus post eum abiit (Joan. XII, 19); ut ab illo vim tantae concursionis absciderent, finire ejus potentiam morte conati sunt, dicentes: Expedit ut unus homo moriatur, et non tota gens pereat (Joan. XI, 50). Sed Redemptoris mors ad conjunctionem sui corporis, id est Ecclesiae, valuit, non ad separationem. Unde et per legem turturi vel columbae, in figura nostri sacrificii, secari guttur praecipitur, et non penitus abscidi, ut et post mortem corpori caput inhaereat (Levit. I, 15); quia videlicet mediator Dei et hominum (I Tim. II, 5), id est, caput omnium nostrum, 196 et verae mundationis hostia, unde pro nobis mortem pertulit, inde nobis verius inhaesit. Post sectionem ergo caput turturis suo corpori inhaeret, quia Christum ab Ecclesia nec mors interveniens dividit. Persecutores igitur peregerunt hoc quod perniciose moliti sunt, intulerunt mortem, ut ab eo absciderent fidelium devotionem; sed inde fides crevit, unde hanc se exstinguere infidelium crudelitas credidit. Cumque se aestimant ejus miracula persequendo abscidere, haec nimirum compulsi sunt nesciendo dilatare. Comprehendit ergo Dominus sapientes in astutia eorum, quando et hoc ad pietatis suae obsequium redigit, quod contra illum humana crudelitas exarsit. 33. Deus alia concedit propitius, alia permittit iratus. — Justus namque et misericors mortalium acta disponens, alia concedit propitius, alia permittit iratus; atque ea quae permittit, sic tolerat, ut haec in sui consilii usum vertat. Unde miro modo fit ut et quod sine voluntate Dei agitur, voluntati Dei contrarium non sit, quia dum in bonum usum mala facta vertuntur, ejus consilio militant etiam quae ejus consilio repugnant. Hinc enim per Psalmistam dicitur: Magna opera Domini, exquisita in omnes voluntates ejus (Psal. CX, 2). Sic quippe ejus opera magna sunt, ut per omne quod ab hominibus agitur, ejus voluntas exquiratur. Nam saepe inde perficitur, unde repelli putabatur. Hinc rursum dicitur: Omnia quaecunque voluit Dominus fecit in coelo et in terra (Psal. CXXXIV, 6). Hinc Salomon ait: Non est sapientia, non est prudentia, non est consilium contra Dominum (Prov. XXI, 30). Restat ergo ut in cunctis quae agimus vim supernae voluntatis inquiramus, cui videlicet cognitae debet nostra actio devote famulari, et quasi ducem sui itineris persequi, ne ei etiam nolens serviat, si hanc superbiens declinat. Vitari enim vis superni consilii nequaquam potest; sed magna sibi virtute hanc temperat, qui se sub ejus nutibus refrenat; ejusque sibi pondera levigat, qui hanc subjecto cordis humero volens portat. Sed quia persecutorum superius memoriam fecimus, qualiter etiam ea quae subjuncta sunt, eorum caecitati congruant, ostendamus. Sequitur:

CAPUT XIX.

VERS. 14. — Per diem incurrent tenebras, et quasi in nocte, sic palpabunt in meridie. 34. Christi persecutores in die tenebras passi sunt. Et quasi caeci palparunt in meridie. — Per diem tenebras incurrerunt, quia in ipsa veritatis praesentia perfidiae errore caecati sunt. Clare quippe per diem cernitur, per noctem vero nostra acies obscuratur. Persecutores igitur Redemptoris nostri dum divinae virtutis miracula cernerent, et tamen de ejus divinitate dubitarent, in die tenebras passi sunt, quia visum in luce perdiderunt. Hinc est quod eos ipsa Lux admonet dicens: Ambulate dum lucem habetis, ne vos tenebrae comprehendant (Joan. XII, 35). Hinc est quod de Judaea dicitur: Occidit ei sol, cum adhuc esset dies (Jerem. XV, 9). Hinc est quod vocem poenitentium in se propheta iterum sumpsit, dicens: Impegimus meridie quasi in tenebris, in caliginosis quasi mortui (Isai. LIX, 10). Hinc iterum dicit: Custos quid de nocte? custos quid de nocte? Dixit custos: Venit mane et nox (Isai. XXI, 11). De nocte etenim custos venit, quia humani generis protector et manifestus in 197 carne apparuit, et tamen hunc pressa perfidiae suae tenebris Judaea minime agnovit. Ubi bene ex voce custodis additur, Venit mane et nox, quia per ejus praesentiam et nova lux mundo inclaruit, et tamen in corde infidelium vetusta caecitas remansit. Bene autem dicitur: Quasi in nocte, sic palpabunt in meridie. Hoc quippe palpando exquirimus, quod oculis non videmus. Judaei autem aperta ejus miracula viderant, et adhuc cum quasi palpantes quaerebant, cum dicerent: Quo usque animam nostram tollis? Si tu es Christus, dic nobis palam (Joan. X, 24). Ecce miraculorum lux ante oculos aderat, et tamen in cordis sui tenebras offendentes, adhuc requirendo palpabant. Quorum nimirum caecitas ad crudelitatem, crudelitas etiam usque ad aperta opera persecutionis exarsit. Sed Redemptor humani generis persecutorum suorum manibus diu teneri non potuit. Unde et protinus subditur:

CAPUT XX.

VERS. 15. — Porro salvum faciet egenum de gladio oris eorum, et de manu violenti pauperem. 35. Christus Judaeorum linguas et gentilium gladium resurgendo superavit. — Ipse quippe iste pauper est, de quo per Paulum dicitur: Propter nos egenus factus est, cum dives esset. Et quia Judaei Dominum accusando tradiderunt, quem traditum gentiles occiderunt (II Cor. VIII, 9), potest per oris gladium accusantium Hebraeorum lingua signari, de quibus per Psalmistam dicitur: Filii hominum, dentes eorum arma et sagittae, et lingua eorum muchaera acuta (Psal. LVI, 5); quia Evangelio etiam teste clamaverunt: Crucifige, crucifige (Luc. XXIII, 21). Per violenti vero manum, ipsa crucifigens gentilitas exprimi potest, quae in Redemptoris morte Hebraeorum voces opere implevit. Deus itaque hunc pauperem et de violenti manu, et de oris gladio salvum fecit; quia videlicet Redemptor noster et vires gentilium, et linguas Judaeorum moriendo ex humanitate pertulit, sed ex divinitatis suae potentia resurgendo superavit. Qua videlicet resurrectione quid aliud agitur, nisi ut ad spem vitae subsequentis infirmitas nostra roboretur? Unde et bene mox subditur:

CAPUT XXI.

VERS. 16. — Et erit egeno spes. 36. Suorum spem solidavit. — Erepto quippe paupere, egenus ad spem reducitur, quia humilis fidelium populus, Redemptore moriente, pavore concutitur, sed resurgente solidatur. Ipsos namque primos hujus populi pauperes, electos videlicet praedicatores, visa ejus mors perculit, sed resurrectio ostensa reparavit. Salvato ergo paupere, spem egenus recipit, quia resurgente in carne Domino, fidelis quisque ad aeternae vitae fiduciam convalescit. Sed ecce jam in manifesta ostensione Veritas venit, jam carnis mortem pertulit, eamque resurgendo destruxit, jam resurrectionem gloria ascensionis honoravit; et tamen Hebraeorum lingua adhuc cum contumeliis lacessere non desinit, quos nimirum aequanimiter tolerat, ut alios tolerando convertat, atque alios minime conversos quandoque districtius feriat. Tunc enim lingua infidelium ab effrenatione suae loquacitatis obmutescet, cum venire eum justum judicem viderit, quem nunc injuste judicavit. Unde et bene subditur:

CAPUT XXII.

IBID. — Iniquitas autem contrahet os suum. 37. Judaei a contumeliis in Christum cessabunt. — Os enim suum nunc adhuc iniquitas dilatat, quia humani generis Redemptorem lingua infidelium contumeliis lacessere nequaquam cessat. Sed tunc os contrahet, cum hoc quod non vult per 198 studium, per supplicium claudet. Quod tamen bene accipi etiam de conversis persecutoribus potest. Salvato enim paupere, dum egenus ad spem redit, contracto ore iniquitas obmutescit, quia resurrectionis ejus clarescente miraculo, dum copiosa multitudo infidelium credit, a Redemptoris sui injuriis contumeliisque cessavit. Os enim suum, quod Deum deridendo aperuit, jam formidando contraxit. SENSUS MORALIS. — 38. Invidorum tenebrae et anxia malitia. — Libet haec moraliter, postposita Judaeorum significatione, transcurrere, atque a pravis generaliter quomodo agantur indagare. Iniquorum quippe hominum mentes cum quaedam a proximis bene gesta conspiciunt, in extenso livoris sui equuleo torquentur, et gravem malitiae suae poenam sustinent, cum bona in aliis tabescentes vident. Recte itaque dicitur: Per diem incurrent tenebras, quia mens eorum cum de aliena melioratione affligitur, de radio lucis obscuratur; quia saepe in proximis dum bona aperta considerant, si qua mala lateant investigant, et sollicitis inquisitionibus laborant, si quid forte quod accusare possint inveniant. Sana quidem membra conspiciunt: sed clausis cordis oculis vulnus palpantes quaerunt. Unde et bene subditur: Et quasi in nocte, sic palpabunt in meridie. Dies boni operis in proximo exterius lucet; sed quasi in nocte palpant, quia livoris sui intus tenebras tolerant. Pervenire ad aliqua, quae reprehendant, satagunt, detractionis aditum quaerunt; sed quia hunc invenire non valent, caeci exterius circumeunt. Quod bene exprimitur, cum Lot, protegentibus angelis, in domo ejus ostium Sodomitae non invenerunt, sicut scriptum est: Vim faciebant Lot vehementissime, et jam proximum erat ut frangerent fores, et miserunt manum viri, et introduxerunt ad se Lot, clauseruntque ostium, et eos qui erant foris, percusserunt caecitate a minimo usque ad maximum, ita ut ostium invenire non possent (Gen. XIX, 9, 10 seq.). Quid est quod malis adversantibus, intra domum Lot reducitur et munitur, nisi quod justus quisque dum pravorum insidias sustinet, ad mentem revertitur, et imperterritus manet? Sodomitae autem viri in domo Lot invenire ostium nequeunt, quia corruptores mentium contra vitam justi nullum accusationis aditum deprehendunt. Percussi enim caecitate quasi domum circumeunt, qui invidentes facta dictaque perscrutantur. Sed quia eis de vita justi fortis undique ac laudabilis actio obviat, errantes nihil aliud quam parietem palpant. Bene ergo dicitur: Quasi in nocte, sic palpabunt in meridie, quia dum bonum quod vident accusare nequeunt, caecati malitia, malum quod non vident ad accusationem quaerunt. 39. Ad culpam nos trahit delectatio aut terror; neutrum valet in humilem. — Ubi et recte subjungitur: Porro salvum faciet de gladio oris eorum, et de manu violenti pauperem. Pauper quippe est, quisquis apud semetipsum elatus non est. Unde et per Evangelium Veritas dicit: Beati pauperes spiritu, quoniam ipsorum est regnum coelorum (Matth. V, 3). Duobus autem modis ad culpam unusquisque pertrahitur. Aut enim delectatione ducitur, aut terrore superatur. Gladius namque oris est iniquitas persuasionis, manus autem violenti est adversitas potestatis. Sed quia veraciter humilis, qui hoc loco pauper vocatur, quo nulla hujus mundi prospera appetit, 199 eo audenter etiam adversa contemnit, recte dicitur: Salvum faciet de gladio oris eorum et de manu violenti pauperem. Ac si aperte diceretur: Sic in se Deus mentes humilium solidat, ut eas ad perpetrandam nequitiam nec blandimenta suasionum pertrahant, nec dolores suppliciorum frangant. Spes quippe in aeternitatem animum erigit, et idcirco nulla mala exterius quae tolerat sentit. Unde et subditur: Et erit egeno spes. Ad cujus spei videlicet fructum eum pauper pervenerit, omnis elatus obmutescit. Unde et adhuc subditur: Iniquitas autem contrahet os suum. Nunc enim malus bonis derogat, et recta quae agere negligit. haec in aliis obtrectando lacerare non cessat. Sed tunc iniquitas os suum contrahit, cum justis quanta suppetat gloria retributionis agnoscit. Tunc enim ei loqui contra bonos non vacat, quia malorum suorum digna retributione linguam tormenta ligant. Unde bene, Anna prophetante, dicitur: Pedes sanctorum suorum servabit, et impii in tenebris conticescent (I Reg. II, 9). Sed ut electus quisque aeterna supplicia evadat, et ad perennem gloriam pauper ascendat, debet hic assiduis flagellis atteri, quatenus in judicio valeat purgatus inveniri. Ipso namque infirmitatis nostrae pondere deorsum quotidie ducimur, nisi mira manu artificis per subvenientia flagella relevemur. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT XXIII.

VERS. 17. — Beatus homo qui corripitur a Domino. 40. Assiduis flagellis hic atteri electus debet. — Prima virtus est, ne perpetrari debeant, vitare peccata; secunda autem, saltem perpetrata corrigere. Sed plerumque culpas non solum imminentes minime vitamus, verum etiam nec commissas agnoscimus. Et peccatorum mens tanto altius tenebrescit, quanto nec damnum suae caecitatis intelligit. Unde fit plerumque divini muneris largitate, ut culpam poena subsequatur, et flagella oculos delinquentis aperiant, quos inter vitia securitas caecabat. Torpens quippe animus percussione tangitur, ut excitetur; quatenus qui statum suae rectitudinis securus perdidit, afflictus consideret quo jacet. Hinc itaque ipsa asperitas correptionis origo fit luminis. Unde et per Paulum dicitur: Omne quod arguitur, a lumine manifestatur (Ephes. V, 13), argumentum enim salutis est vis doloris. Hinc est enim quod Salomon ait: Curatio cessare faciet peccata maxima (Eccle. X, 4). Hinc iterum dicit: Quem enim diligit Dominus, castigat; flagellat autem omnem filium quem recipit (Hebr. XII, 6). Hinc voce angelica Dominus ad Joannem loquitur, dicens: Ego quos amo, redarguo et castigo (Apoc. III, 19). Hinc Paulus ait: Omnis autem disciplina in praesenti quidem non videtur esse gaudii, sed moeroris; postea autem fructum pacatissimum exercitatis per eam reddit justitiae (Hebr. XII, 11). Quamvis ergo convenire simul nequeant dolor et beatitudo, recte tamen nunc dicitur, Beatus homo qui corripitur a Domino; quia per hoc, quod peccator dolore correptionis premitur, quandoque ad beatitudinem, quae sine interventu est doloris, eruditur. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXIV.

IBID. — Increpationem ergo Domini ne reprobes. 41. Correptio Dei alia punit, alia probat. — Quisquis pro culpa percutitur, sed in querela suae percussionis elevatur, increpationem Domini reprobat, quia hanc injuste se perpeti accusat. Qui autem non pro purgatione criminis, sed pro 200 fortitudinis probatione feriuntur, cum causas suae percussionis inquirunt, nequaquam increpationem Domini reprobare dicendi sunt, quia in semetipsis satagunt invenire quod nesciunt. Unde et beatus Job ad libertatis verba inter percussionis verbera erumpens, tanto de se rectius judicia ferientis interrogat, quanto in semetipso verius causas passionis ignorat. Eliphaz itaque, quia hunc percussum non probationis examine, sed purgationis aestimavit, dum libere inter flagella loqueretur, reprobasse Dei increpationem credidit. Quem apte etiam haereticorum tenere speciem diximus, qui omne quod a sancta Ecclesia recte agitur, apud judicium suum semper ad vitium tortitudinis inflectunt. Quia vero bona intentione ad loquendum ducitur, sed non curat discernere cui loquatur, adhuc supernae dispensationis moderamina praedicando subjungit, dicens:

CAPUT XXV.

VERS. 18. — Quia ipse vulnerat, et medetur; percutit, et manus ejus sanabunt. 42. Duobus modis Deus ad salutem vulnerat. Menti ad Deum redeunti, ad tentationem vertitur, quidquia prius in saeculo blandum. — Duobus modis omnipotens Deus vulnerat, quos reducere ad salutem curat.

Aliquando enim carnem percutit, et mentis duritiam suo pavore tabefacit. Vulnerando ergo ad salutem revocat, cum electos suos affligit exterius, ut interius vivant. Unde per Moysen quoque loquitur, dicens: Ego occidam, et vivere faciam: percutiam, et ego sanabo (Deut. XXXII, 39). Occidit enim ut vivificet, percutit ut sanet; quia idcirco foras verbera admovet, ut intus vulnera delictorum curet. Aliquando autem etiam si flagella exterius cessare videantur, intus vulnera infligit, quia mentis nostrae duritiam suo desiderio percutit. Sed percutiendo sanat, quia terroris sui jaculo transfixos ad sensum nos rectitudinis revocat. Corda enim nostra male sana sunt, cum nullo Dei amore sauciantur, cum peregrinationis suae aerumnam non sentiunt, cum erga infirmitatem proximi nec quamlibet minimo affectu languescunt. Sed vulnerantur ut sanentur, quia amoris sui spiculis mentes Deus insensibiles percutit, moxque eas sensibiles per ardorem charitatis reddit. Unde et sponsa in Canticis canticorum dicit: Vulnerata charitate ego sum (Cant. II, 5, sec. LXX). Male enim sana anima, atque in hujus exsilii stratum caeca securitate prostrata, nec videbat Dominum, nec videre requirebat; percussa autem charitatis ejus spiculis, vulneratur in intimis affectu pietatis, ardet desiderio contemplationis, et miro modo vivificatur ex vulnere, quae prius mortua jacebat in salute; aestuat, anhelat, et jam videre desiderat quem fugiebat. Percussione ergo ad salutem reducitur, quae ad securitatem quietis intimae, amoris sui perturbatione revocatur. Sed cum sauciata mens anhelare in Deum coeperit, cum cuncta mundi hujus blandimenta despiciens, ad supernam patriam per desiderium tendit, ad tentationem ei protinus vertitur, quidquid amicum prius in saeculo blandumque putabatur. Nam qui peccantem amare consueverant, recte viventem crudeliter impugnant. Et erectus in Deum animus, carnis suae bella tolerat, in qua prius vitiis serviens, delectabiliter jacebat; voluptates priscae ad memoriam redeunt, et contradicentem mentem gravi certamine affligunt. Sed quia dum

201 transitorio labore atterimur, a perpetuo dolore liberamur, apte subjungitur:

CAPUT XXVI.

VERS. 19. — In sex tribulationibus liberabit te, et in septima non tanget te malum. 43. Transitorio labore eruimur a perpetuo dolore. — Quid enim senario numero, quem septimus sequitur, nisi praesentis vitae operatio decursusque signatur? Sexto quippe die omnia perficiens, hominem condidit, et septimo Deus die requievit. Qui scilicet septimus vesperam non habet, quia subsequentem requiem nullus jam terminus claudit. Perfectis ergo omnibus requies sequitur; quia post bona vitae praesentis opera, retributio aeternae quietis invenitur. In sex itaque nos tribulationibus Dominus liberat, ne nos in septima malum tangat, quia per paternae pietatis eruditionem praesentis vitae labore nos atterit, sed in adventu judicis a verbere abscondit; ut tanto tunc ad salutem certiores exhibeat, quanto nunc nos flagella durius secant. Qui apte mox et mala vitae praesentis, et adjutoria supernae protectionis enumerans subdit:

CAPUT XXVII.

VERS. 20. — In fame eruet te de morte, et in bello de manu gladii. 44. Deus dum verbi sui pabulo mentes reficit, contra tentationes fortes reddit. — Sicut fames carnis est subtractum subsidium corporis, ita fames mentis est silentium divinae locutionis. Unde recte per prophetam dicitur: Emittam famem in terram, non famem panis, neque sitim aquae, sed famem audiendi verbum Dei (Amos VIII, 11). Et quia humanam mentem cum divina allocutio deserit, contra eam tentatio carnis invalescit, apte subjungitur: Et in bello de manu gladii. Bellum quippe patimur, cum carnis nostrae tentationibus impugnamur; de quo nimirum bello per Psalmistam dicitur: Obumbra caput meum in die belli (Psal. CXXXIX, 3). Quia igitur reprobi dum fame verbi Dei deficiunt, etiam belli gladio transfiguntur; electos suos Dominus et in fame a morte eripit, et in bello a gladio abscondit, quia eorum mentes dum verbi sui pabulo reficit, contra tentationes corporis fortes reddit. Sed sunt nonnulli qui etsi ex divino eloquio ab interna se fame reficiunt, si jam contra tentationes corporis continentiae virtute fulciuntur, adhuc tamen percuti humanis detractionibus metuunt, et saepe dum linguarum jacula formidant, peccati se laqueo strangulant. Unde et apte subditur:

CAPUT XXVIII.

VERS. 21. — A flagello linguae absconderis. 45. Contra flagellum linguae, contra poenas corporales armare se oportet. — Flagellum linguae est exprobratio illatae contumeliae. Flagello linguae bonos feriunt, qui eorum opera irridendo persequuntur. Saepe enim lingua a bono opere, dum vituperat, revocat; et quasi flagellum se exerit, quia dorsum timidae mentis caedit. Hoc flagellum linguae, electae menti insidiari Propheta conspexerat, cum supernum adjutorium pollicens dicebat: Ipse liberabit de laqueo venantium, et a verbo aspero (Psal. XC, 3). Venantes enim nihil aliud quam carnem quaerunt. Sed a venantium laqueo, atque ab aspero verbo eripimur, quando et insidias carnalium, et irrisionum probra despiciendo superamus. Aspera quippe eorum verba sunt, quae bonis nostris itineribus adversantur. Sed asperitatem verbi evadere, est irrisiones detrahentium dissimulando calcare. Sancta ergo 202 anima a flagello linguae absconditur, quia dum in hoc mundo honorem laudis non quaerit, nec contumelias detractionis sentit. Sed sunt nonnulli qui jam derogantium verba despiciunt, jam irrisiones pro nihilo attendunt, adhuc tamen poenas corporis cruciatusque pertimescunt. Antiquus namque adversarius ut a recta intentione nos retrahat, multiformiter impugnat; et tentationem nostram modo verbi fame, modo carnis certamine, modo flagello sermonis, modo calamitate persecutionis aggreditur. Sed quia perfectus quisque cum in seipso vitia vicerit, statim mentem etiam contra vulnera passionis accingit, apte subjungitur:

CAPUT XXIX.

IBID. — Et non timebis calamitatem, cum venerit. 46. Contra multiformem adversarium pugnantes multiplicius nos parare debemus. — Sancti enim viri quia contra multiformem adversarium se pugnare considerant, semetipsos in certamine multipliciter parant. Habent enim contra famem divini verbi pabulum, contra belli gladium, continentiae scutum; contra flagellum linguae, protectionem patientiae; contra exterioris calamitatis damnum, interni amoris adjutorium. Unde miro modo agitur, ut quo eos hostis callidus numerosius tentat, eo circumspecti Dei milites virtutibus ditiores fiant. Et quia electi quique dum praesentis vitae certamina fortiter tolerant, in terrore sibi venturi judicii securitatem parant, recte subjungitur:

CAPUT XXX.

VERS. 22. — In vastitate et fame ridebis. 47. Reprobi interius exteriusque torquebuntur. — Tunc quippe reprobi vastitatem famemque passuri sunt, cum damnati in extremo judicio ab aeterni panis visione separantur. Scriptum namque est: Tollatur impius, ne videat gloriam Dei (Isai. XXVI, 10, sec. LXX). Et per semetipsum Dominus dicit: Ego sum panis vivus, qui de coelo descendi (Joan. VI, 51). Simul ergo eos vastitas famesque cruciat, qui non solum foras tormenta sentiunt, sed intus etiam inediae peste moriuntur. Vastat gehenna, quia concremat, fames interficit, quia suam illis faciem Redemptor abscondit. Bene namque retributionem interius exteriusque recipiunt, quia et cogitando miseri et operando deliquerunt. Unde bene per Psalmistam dicitur: Pones eos ut clibanum ignis in tempore vultus tui; Dominus in ira sua conturbabit eos, et devorabit eos ignis (Psal. XX, 10). Quod enim ab igne devoratur, ab exteriori parte accenditur, clibanus vero interius inflammatur. In tempore ergo vultus Domini injusti omnes et ut clibanus ponuntur, et ab igne devorantur; quia, apparente judice, cum a visione illius eorum multitudo repellitur, et intus per desiderium ardet conscientia, et foris carnem cruciat gehenna. 48. Justi tunc ridebunt, nec ulla in damnatos misericordia movebuntur. — Potest etiam flagellum linguae, sententia ultimae animadversionis intelligi, qua districtus judex reprobis dicit: Discedite a me, maledicti, in ignem aeternum, qui paratus est diabolo et angelis ejus (Matth. XXV, 41). Justus ergo a flagello linguae atque a calamitate veniente absconditur, quia in tanta districtione sententiae blanda tunc judicis voce refovetur cum dicitur: Esurivi, et dedistis mihi manducare; sitivi, et dedistis mihi bibere; hospes eram, et collegistis me; nudus, et cooperuistis me; infirmus, et visitastis me; in carcere eram, et venistis ad me (Ibid., 35, 36). Quibus praemittitur: Venite, benedicti 203 Patris mei, possidete paratum vobis regnum a constitutione mundi (Ibid., 34). In vastitate ergo et fame justus ridebit; quia cum iniquos omnes extrema ultio percutit, ipse de gloria dignae retributionis hilarescit. Nec damnatis jam tunc ex humanitate compatitur; quia divinae justitiae per speciem inhaerens, inconcusso districtionis intimae vigore solidatur. Erectas namque in claritate supernae rectitudinis electorum mentes nulla misericordia afficit, quia has a miseriis altitudo beatitudinis alienas reddit. Unde bene etiam per Psalmistam dicitur: Videbunt justi et timebunt, et super eum ridebunt, et dicent: Ecce homo qui non posuit Deum adjutorem suum (Psal. LI, 8). Iniquos enim justi nunc vident et metuunt, tunc visuri sunt et ridebunt. Quia enim modo ad eorum labi imitationem possunt, hic habent formidinem; quia vero damnatis tunc prodesse nequeunt, illic non habent compassionem. Aeterno itaque supplicio deditis non esse miserendum, in ipsa qua beati sunt justitia judicantis legunt, qui, quod suspicari fas non est, qualitatem sibi perceptae felicitatis imminuunt, si in regno positi volunt quod implere nequaquam possunt. Sed quisquis ad vitae praecepta se dirigit, priusquam praemia aeterna percipiat, hic jam initia secuturae in perpetuum securitatis degustat; ut antiquum hostem non metuat, ut interveniente mortis articulo violentos ejus impetus nullatenus perhorrescat. Justis namque initium retributionis est ipsa plerumque in obitu securitas mentis. Unde et recte subjungitur:

CAPUT XXXI.

VERS. 22. — Et bestiam terrae non formidabis. 49. Saepe in obitu percipiunt securitatem mentis. — Callidus quippe adversarius bestia terrae dicitur, quia ad rapiendas mortis tempore peccatorum animas violentia crudelitatis efferatur. Quos enim viventes blandiens decipit, morientes saeviens rapit. Quo contra de electorum Ecclesia per prophetam Dominus pollicetur, dicens: Mala bestia non transibit per eam (Isai. XXXV, 9). Illi igitur terrae bestiam morientes timent, qui conditoris sui potentiam viventes non timent. Sancti etenim viri quia divinae se formidini medullitus subdunt, omne de adventu adversarii pondus timoris abjiciunt. Hinc est enim quod Psalmista Dominum exorat, dicens: Ne quando rapiat ut leo animam meam (Psal. VII, 3). Hinc rursus ait: Exaudi, Deus, orationem meam cum tribulor, a timore inimici eripe animam meam (Psal. LXIII, 1, 2). Viventes quippe perfecte timent judicem, ne morientes metuant accusatorem. Bene ergo dicitur: Et bestiam terrae non formidabis. Ac si aperte diceretur: Quia a blandiente hoste modo non vinceris, hunc saevientem postmodum non timebis. Sed cum bene vivitur, valde cavendum est ne mens, despectis caeteris, de gloria singularitatis elevetur. Unde apte ad memoriam bonum sociale reducitur, cum protinus subinfertur:

CAPUT XXXII.

VERS. 23. — Sed cum lapidibus regionum pactum tuum. 50. Pie viventibus cavenda singularitas. — Quasi distinctae in mundo regiones sunt Ecclesiae gentium, quae in una fide positae, morum linguarumque diversitate dividuntur. Quid ergo regionum lapides, nisi Ecclesiarum electos accipimus? quibus primi instructoris voce dicitur: Vosautem tanquam lapides vivi superaedificamini (I Petr. II, 5). De quibus sanctae Ecclesiae per prophetam Dominus pollicetur dicens: Ecce ego sternam per ordinem lapides tuos (Isai. LIV, 11). Qui igitur recte vivit, pacto se lapidibus 204 regionum jungit, quia in eo quod mundi desideria superat, vitam suam procul dubio ad sanctorum praecedentium imitationem ligat. Sed cum a mundi actione disjungitur, malignorum spirituum impugnationes crescunt: quae tamen quo magis in moerore quemquam atterunt, eo conditori humilius subdunt. Unde et subjungitur:

CAPUT XXXIII.

IBID. — Et bestiae terrae pacificae erunt tibi. 51. Acriores hostis insidiae, ad gratiae adjutorium postulandum nos compellunt. — Notandum prius est quod non ait pacatae, sed pacificae, videlicet, non quia pacem habent, sed quia pacem faciunt. Hostes quippe callidi dum insidiantur, affligunt; sed afflicta mens tanto magis ad aeternam patriam reditum diligit, quanto in hoc aerumnoso exsilio laboriosius vivit; et verius se gratiae sui adjutoris humiliat, cum contra se insidias hostium acriores pensat. Terrae ergo bestiae pacificae electis fiunt, quia maligni spiritus, cum bonorum corda adversantes deprimunt, haec nolentes ad amorem Domini impellunt. Inde ergo cum Deo pax robustior oritur, unde nobis ab adversariis durior pugna generatur. 52. Motus carnis tentando rugiunt, sed usque ad morsum non perveniunt. Imo nobis pacem cum Deo procurant. — Possunt etiam per terrae bestias motus carnis intelligi, qui dum mentem nostram irrationabilia suadendo lacessunt, contra nos bestialiter insurgunt. Sed cum cor sub divina lege deprimitur, etiam carnis incentiva detumescunt; ut etsi tentando submurmurant, nequaquam tamen usque ad effectum operum, quasi ad aperti morsus rabiem exsurgant. Quis enim in hac adhuc corruptibili carne subsistens, has terrae bestias plene edomat, cum ille ad tertium coelum raptus egregius praedicator dicat: Video aliam legem in membris meis repugnantem legi mentis meae, et captivum me ducentem in lege peccati, quae est in membris meis (Rom. VII, 23)? Sed alius est has bestias in campo operis saevientes aspicere, aliud intra cordis caveam frementes tenere. Redactae namque intra claustra continentiae, etsi adhuc tentando rugiunt, usque ad morsum tamen, ut diximus, actionis illicitae non excedunt. Pacificae itaque sunt terrae bestiae, quia motus carnis etsi per desideria palpitant, aperta nos tamen contradictione operis non impugnant. Quamvis per hoc ipsum quod pacificae dicuntur, etiam id quod de malignis spiritibus diximus, non inconvenienter accipitur. Motus etenim carnis pacem nobis cum Deo faciunt, cum tentando contradicunt. Nam justi mens in eo quod ad superna dirigitur, ex corruptibili corpore gravi bello fatigatur. Quae si quando a desideriis coelestibus, hujus mundi quamlibet minima delectatione tardatur, ipso bello suae tentationis impellitur, ut illud toto corde diligat, quod contradictio nulla perturbat. Unde fit, ut quietem intimam ad memoriam revocet, et carnis suae illecebras fugiens, ad illam pleno amore suspiret. Considerare enim ex tentatione unusquisque compellitur, unde quo cecidit, qui postquam pacem Dei deseruit, rixam sibi contra se exsurgere ex semetipso sentit, et tunc verius videt de secura Dei dilectione quid perdidit, qui ad se dilapsus, suam in se contumeliam invenit. Pacem ergo nobis terrae bestiae faciunt, quia motus carnis, dum nos tentando lacessunt, ad amorem quietis intimae impellunt. Bene autem subditur:

CAPUT XXXIV VERS.

24. — Et scies quod pacem habeat tabernaculum tuum. 205 53. In Scripturis pax plena et pax inchoata. — In Scriptura sacra aliter pax plena dicitur, atque aliter inchoata. Inchoatam quippe pacem Veritas discipulis dederat, cum dicebat: Pacem relinquo vobis, pacem meam do vobis (Joan. XIV, 27), et plenam Simeon desideraverat, cum exoraret dicens: Nunc dimittis servum tuum, Domine, secundum verbum tuum in pace (Luc. II, 29). Pax enim nostra ex desiderio conditoris inchoatur, ex manifesta autem visione perficitur. Plena quippe tunc erit, cum mens nostra nec ignorantia caecatur, nec carnis suae impugnatione concutitur. Sed quia ejus exordia tangimus, cum vel mentem Deo, vel carnem menti subjugamus, tabernaculum justi habere pacem dicitur, quia videlicet ejus corpus, quod mente inhabitat, a perversis desideriorum motibus sub justitiae dispositione refrenatur. Sed quid prodest per continentiam carnem restringere, si mens se per compassionem nesciat in proximi amore dilatare? Nulla namque est castitas carnis quam non commendat suavitas mentis. Unde post pacem tabernaculi apte subjungitur:

CAPUT XXXV.

IBID. — Et visitans speciem tuam, non peccabis. 54. Se quisque in altero cogitet et amet. Paulus omnibus omnia factus condescendendo, non cadendo. — Species quippe hominis est alter homo. Recte enim species nostra dicitur proximus noster, quia in illo cernimus quid ipsi sumus. Corporali enim visitatione ad proximum gressuum accessu imus; spiritali vero, non gressu, sed affectu ducimur. Speciem ergo suam visitat, quisquis ad eum, quem sibi similem per naturam conspicit, passibus amoris tendit; ut in altero sua considerans, ex se ipso colligat, qualiter infirmanti alteri condescendat. Speciem suam visitat, qui ut in se alterum reficiat, se in altero pensat. Hinc namque per Moysen Veritas cum gesta describeret, gerenda signabat, dicens: Protulit terra herbam virentem et afferentem semen juxta genus suum, lignumque faciens fructum, et habens unumquodque sementem secundum speciem suam (Genes. I, 12). Lignum quippe secundum speciem suam semen producit, cum mens nostra ex se considerationem in alterum colligit, et recti operis germen parit. Hinc quidam sapiens dicit: Quod tibi non vis fieri, alteri ne feceris (Tob. IV, 16). Hinc in Evangelio Dominus dicit: Quae vultis ut faciant vobis homines, et vos eadem facite illis (Matth. VII, 12). Ac si aperte diceret: Speciem vestram in altero visitate, atque ex vobismetipsis cognoscite, quid vos oporteat aliis exhibere. Hinc Paulus ait: Factus sum Judaeis tanquam Judaeus, ut Judaeos lucrarer; et his qui sub lege sunt, quasi sub lege essem, cum ipse non essem sub lege, ut eos qui sub lege erant lucrifacerem; et his qui sine lege sunt quasi sine lege essem, cum sine lege Dei non essem, sed in lege essem Christi. (I Cor. IX, 20 et 21). Et paulo post: Omnibus omnia factus sum, ut omnes facerem salvos (Ibid., 23). Neque enim egregius praedicator, ut quasi Judaeus fieret, ad perfidiam erupit; neque ut quasi sub lege esset, ad carnale sacrificium rediit; neque ut omnibus omnia fieret, simplicitatem mentis in erroris varietatem commutavit; sed condescendendo appropinquavit infidelibus, non cadendo; ut videlicet singulos in se suscipiens, et se in singulos transfigurans, compatiendo colligeret, si ita 206 ipse, ut illi, esset quid impendi sibi ab aliis recte voluisset; et tanto verius unicuique erranti concurreret, quanto salutis ejus modum ex propria consideratione didicisset. Bene ergo dicitur: Et visitans speciem tuam non peccabis, quia tunc peccatum plene vincitur, cum ex sua similitudine unusquisque perpendit, quomodo in proximi dilectione dilatetur. Cum vero a vitiis caro restringitur, cum mens virtutibus exercetur, restat ut loquendo quisque doceat vitam quam moribus servat. Ille namque uberes fructus praedicationis colligit, qui semina bonae operationis praemittit. Unde post pacem tabernaculi, et speciei nostrae visitationem, recte subjungitur:

CAPUT XXXVI.

VERS. 25. — Et scies quoniam multiplex erit semen tuum, et progenies tua sicut herba terrae. 55. Semen justi multiplex. — Post pacem quippe tabernaculi, post speciei nostrae visitationem, semen justi multiplex surgit, quia nimirum post membrorum macerationem, ac morum magnitudinem, tanto ei fecundius praedicationis verbum tribuitur, quanto hoc in ejus pectore perfecti operis exaratione praevenitur. Ille namque bene loquendi facundiam accipit, qui sinum cordis per recte vivendi studia extendit. Nec loquentem conscientia praepedit, cum vita linguam antecedit. Hinc est quod Aegypti, servitio publico, Joseph dispensante, subjecti (Genes. XLVII, 20 seq.); cum juri regis semetipsos tradentes humiliant, frumenta etiam ad semen reportant. Frugem quippe ad esum etiam liberi accipimus, cum et sacro eloquio pascimur, et tamen ad quaedam, quae in hoc mundo appetimus in nostris voluptatibus vagamur. Sed servi facti, et ad semen frumenta percipimus, quia dum plene Deo subdimur, etiam verbo praedicationis replemur. Et quoniam magna proles fidelium sequitur, cum sancta praedicatio praerogatur, post multiplicitatem seminis recte subjungitur: Et progenies tua sicut herba terrae. Justi progenies herbae terrae comparatur, quia qui de ejus imitatione nascitur, dum arentem vitae praesentis gloriam deserit, spe in aeterna viridescit. Vel certe justi progenies sicut herba oritur, quia dum vivendo monstrat quod praedicando asserit, multitudo sequentium innumerabilis exsurgit. Sed quisquis jam terrena desideria despicit, quisquis se per activae vitae opera extendit, nequaquam ei sufficit magna exterius agere, nisi etiam per contemplationem valeat interna penetrare. Unde et apte protinus subinfertur:

CAPUT XXXVII.

VERS. 26. — Ingredieris in abundantia sepulcrum, sicut infertur acervus tritici in tempore suo. 56. Qui carnem domuit, contemplationi vacare debet. Et qui praedicationi operam dat. — Quid enim sepulcri nomine, nisi contemplativa vita signatur, quae nos quasi ab hoc mundo mortuos sepelit, dum a terrenis desideriis susceptos in intimis abscondit? Ab exteriori quippe vita mortui etiam sepulti per contemplationem fuerant, quibus Paulus dicebat: Mortui enim estis, et vita vestra abscondita est cum Christo in Deo (Colos. III, 3). Activa quoque vita sepulcrum est, quia a pravis nos operibus mortuos tegit; sed contemplativa perfectius sepelit, quia cunctis mundi actionibus funditus dividit. Quisquis ergo jam in se contumelias 207 carnis edomuit, superest ut mentem per studia sanctae operationis exerceat; et quisquis jam mentem per sancta opera dilatat, superest ut hanc usque ad secreta intimae contemplationis studia extendat. Neque enim perfectus praedicator est, qui vel propter contemplationis studium operanda negligit, vel propter operationis instantiam contemplanda postponit. Hinc est enim quod Abraham conjugem mortuam in sepulcro duplici sepelit (Genes. XXIII, 19); quia nimirum perfectus quisque praedicator exstinctam a praesentis vitae desideriis animam suam, sub bonae operationis tegmine et contemplationis abscondit, ut a carnali concupiscentia sub activa contemplativaque vita quasi insensibilis lateat, quae prius mundi desideria sentiens, mortaliter vivebat. Hinc est quod humani generis Redemptor per diem miracula in urbibus exhibet, et ad orationis studium in monte pernoctat, ut perfectis videlicet praedicatoribus innuat quatenus nec activam vitam amore speculationis funditus deserant, nec contemplationis gaudia penitus operationis nimietate contemnant; sed quieti contemplantes sorbeant, quod occupati erga proximos loquentes refundant. Speculando quippe in Dei amorem surgitur, sed praedicando ad proximi utilitatem reditur. Unde apud Moysen, dum in sacrificio vacca mactatur (Num. XIX, 3), offerri cum hyssopo lignoque cedrino bis tinctus coccus praecipitur. Vaccam quippe mactamus, cum carnem a lascivia suae voluptatis exstinguimus. Quam cum hyssopo lignoque cedrino ac cocco offerimus; quia cum maceratione carnis, sacrificium fidei, spei et charitatis adolemus.

Hyssopus quippe interna nostra mundare consuevit. Et per Petrum dicitur: Fide mundans corda eorum (Act. XV, 9). Lignum cedrinum nulla putredine deficit, quia spem coelestium terminus non consumit. Unde et per Petrum dicitur: Regeneravit nos in spem vivam per resurrectionem Jesu Christi ex mortuis, in haereditatem incorruptibilem, et incontaminatam, et immarcescibilem (I Pet. I, 3). Coccus rubeo colore flammescit, quia quem implet charitas incendit. Unde et in Evangelio Veritas dicit: Ignem veni mittere in terram (Luc. XII, 49). Sed bis tinctus coccus offerri praecipitur, ut videlicet ante interni judicis oculos charitas nostra Dei et proximi dilectione coloretur; quatenus conversa mens nec sic pro amore Dei quietem diligat, ut curam proximi utilitatemque postponat; nec sic pro amore proximi occupata inserviat, ut quietem funditus deserens, ignem in se superni amoris exstinguat. Quisquis ergo semetipsum Deo jam sacrificium obtulit, si perfecta desiderat, curet necesse est, ut non solum ad operationis se latitudinem, verum etiam ad culmina contemplationis extendat. 57. Vita activa aliis, aliis contemplativa magis congruit. Alterutra cuique pro ingenio colenda. — Sed inter haec magnopere sciendum est, quia valde inter se diversae sunt conspersiones animorum. Nonnulli namque hominum ita otiosae mentis sunt, ut si eos labor occupationis excipiat, in ipsa operis inchoatione succumbant; et nonnulli ita inquieti sunt, ut si vacationem laboris habuerint, gravius laborent, quia tanto deteriores cordis tumultus tolerant, quanto eis licentius ad cogitationes vacat. Unde necesse est ut nec quieta mens ad exercitationem se immoderati operis 208 dilatet, nec inquieta ad studium contemplationis angustet. Saepe enim qui contemplari Deum quieti poterant, occupationibus pressi ceciderunt; et saepe qui occupati bene humanis usibus viverent, gladio suae quietis exstincti sunt. Hinc namque est quod nonnulli inquieti spiritus, dum plus exquirunt contemplando quam capiunt, usque ad perversa dogmata erumpunt; et dum veritatis discipuli esse humiliter negligunt, magistri errorum fiunt. Hinc per semetipsam Veritas dicit: Si oculus tuus dexter scandalizat te, erue eum, et projice abs te. Bonum est tibi cum uno oculo in vitam intrare, quam duos oculos habentem mitti in gehennam ignis (Matth. V, 29). Duae quippe vitae, activa videlicet et contemplativa, cum conservantur in mente, quasi duo oculi habentur in facie. Dexter namque oculus vita contemplativa est, sinister activa. Sed sunt nonnulli, ut diximus, qui discrete intueri summa et spiritalia nequaquam possunt, et tamen alta contemplationis assumunt, atque idcirco in perfidiae foveam, intellectus pravi errore dilabuntur. Hos itaque contemplativa vita ultra vires assumpta, cogit a veritate cadere, quos in statu suae rectitudinis humiliter poterat sola activa custodire. Quibus recte hoc quod praefati sumus, Veritas dicit: Si oculus tuus dexter scandalizat te, erue eum, et projice abs te. Bonum tibi est cum uno oculo in vitam intrare, quam duos oculos habentem mitti in gehennam ignis. Ac si aperte diceret: Cum ad contemplativam vitam idonea discretione non sufficis, solam securius activam tene. Cumque in hoc, quod pro magno eligis, deficis, eo contentus esto, quod pro minimo attendis; ut si per contemplativam vitam a veritatis cognitione compelleris cadere, regnum coelorum per solam activam valeas saltem luscus intrare. Hinc rursum dicit: Qui scandalizaverit unum de pusillis istis qui in me credunt, expedit eti ut suspendatur mola asinaria in collo ejus, et demergatur in profundum maris (Matth. XVIII, 6). Quid per mare, nisi praesens saeculum; quid per molam asinariam, nisi actio terrena signatur? Quae dum colla mentis per stulta desideria stringit, hanc in laboris circuitum mittit. Sunt itaque nonnulli qui dum terrenas actiones deserunt, et ad contemplationis studia, humilitate postposita, ultra intelligentiae vires surgunt, non solum se in errorem dejiciunt, sed infirmos quosque a gremio unitatis dividunt. Qui ergo unum de minimis scandalizat, melius illi fuerat, alligata collo mola asinaria, in mare projici, quia nimirum perversae menti expeditius esse potuisset, ut occupata mundo terrena negotia ageret, quam per contemplationis studia ad multorum perniciem vacaret. Rursum, nisi quibusdam mentibus contemplativa vita potius quam activa congrueret, nequaquam per Psalmistam Dominus diceret: Vacate et videte, quoniam ego sum Deus (Psal. XLV, 11). 58. Quid valeant timor et amor ad contemplationem. — Sed inter haec sciendum est quia saepe et pigras mentes amor ad opus excitat, et inquietas in contemplatione timor refrenat. Anchora enim cordis est pondus timoris; et plerumque fluctu cogitationum quatitur, sed per disciplinae suae vincula retinetur; neque hoc tempestas suae inquietudinis ad naufragium pertrahit, quia in divini amoris littore perfecta charitas astringit. Unde necesse est 209 ut quisquis ad contemplationis studia properat, semetipsum prius subtiliter interroget, quantum amat. Machina quippe mentis est vis amoris, quae hanc dum a mundo extrahit, in alta sustollit. Prius ergo discutiat, si summa inquirens diligit, si diligens timet, si novit incognita aut amando comprehendere, aut non comprehensa timendo venerari. In contemplatione etenim mentem si amor non excitat, teporis sui torpor obscurat; si timor non aggravat, sensus hanc per inania ad nebulam erroris levat; et cum clausa ei secretorum janua tardius aperitur, ab ea longius ipsa sua praesumptione repellitur; quia irrumpere appetit hoc, quod non inveniens quaerit; cumque superba mens errorem pro veritate percipit, quo quasi intus gressum porrigit, foras tendit. Hinc est enim quod legem daturus Dominus, in igne fumoque descendit (Exod. XIX, 18); quia et humiles per claritatem suae ostensionis illuminat, et superborum oculos per caliginem erroris obscurat. Prius igitur mens ab appetitu gloriae temporalis, atque ab omni carnalis concupiscentiae delectatione tergenda est, et tunc ad aciem contemplationis erigenda. Unde et cum lex accipitur, populus a monte prohibetur, ut videlicet qui infirmis adhuc mentibus terrena desiderant, considerare sublimia non praesumant. Unde et recte dicitur: Si bestia tetigerit montem, lapidabitur (Ibid., 12, 13). Bestia enim montem tangit, cum mens irrationabilibus desideriis subdita ad contemplationis alta se erigit. Sed lapidibus percutitur, quia summa non sustinens, ipsis superni ponderis ictibus necatur. 59. Quae ad eam assequendam perfectio necessaria. — Qui igitur culmen apprehendere perfectionis nituntur, cum contemplationis arcem tenere desiderant, prius se in campo operis per exercitium probent, ut sollicite sciant si nulla jam mala proximis irrogant, si irrogata a proximis aequanimiter portant, si objectis bonis temporalibus nequaquam mens laetitia solvitur, si subtractis non nimio moerore sauciatur; ac deinde perpendant si cum ad semetipsos introrsus redeunt, in eo quod spiritalia rimantur, nequaquam secum rerum corporalium umbras trahunt, vel fortasse tractas manu discretionis abigunt; si incircumscriptum lumen videre cupientes, cunctas circumscriptionis suae imagines deprimunt; et in eo quod super se contingere appetunt, vincunt quod sunt. Unde recte nunc dicitur: Ingredieris in abundantia sepulcrum. Vir quippe perfectus sepulcrum in abundantia ingreditur, quia prius activae vitae opera congregat, et postmodum carnis sensum per contemplationem mortuum, huic mundo funditus occultat. Unde et apte subditur: Sicut infertur acervus tritici in tempore suo (Ibid.). 60. Actio contemplationem debet antecedere. — Actionis namque tempus primum est, contemplationis extremum. Unde necesse est ut perfectus quisque prius virtutibus mentem exerceat, atque hanc postmodum in horreum quietis condat (Luc. VIII, 35). Hinc est enim quod is quem legio daemonum Domino jubente dereliquit, ad Salvatoris sui pedes residet, verba doctrinae percipit, et de regione sua simul discedere cum salutis auctore concupiscit; sed tamen ei ipsa quae salutem contulit Veritas dicit: Revertere primum in domum 210 tuam, et narra quanta tibi fecerit Dominus. Cum enim quamlibet parum de divina cognitione percipimus, redire ad humana jam nolumus, et proximorum necessitatibus onerari recusamus; quietem contemplationis quaerimus, nihilque aliud, nisi hoc quod sine labore reficit, amamus. Sed sanatos nos Veritas ad domum mittit, narrare quae nobiscum acta sunt praecipit, ut videlicet prius mens exsudet in opere, et postmodum refici debeat per contemplationem. 61. Contemplationis et actionis figurae Rachel et Lia, Maria et Martha. Vitae activae magna merita, contemplativae potiora. — Hinc est quod Jacob pro Rachel servit, et Liam accipit, eique dicitur Non est consuetudinis in terra nostra ut minores ante tradamus ad nuptias quam majores (Genes. XXIX, 27). Rachel namque, visum principium; Lia autem laboriosa dicitur. Et quid per Rachelem, nisi contemplativa; quid per Liam, nisi activa vita designatur? In contemplatione quippe principium, quod Deus est, quaeritur; in operatione autem sub gravi necessitatum fasce laboratur. Unde et Rachel pulchra, sed sterilis; Lia autem lippa est, sed fecunda, quia nimirum mens cum contemplandi otia appetit, plus videt, sed minus Deo filios generat; cum vero ad laborem se praedicationis dirigit, minus videt, sed amplius parit. Post Liae ergo complexus ad Rachelem Jacob pervenit, quia perfectus quisque ante activae vitae ad fecunditatem jungitur, et post contemplativae ad requiem copulatur. Quia enim contemplativa vita minor quidem tempore, sed merito major est quam activa, sacri Evangelii verbis ostenditur, in quo duae mulieres diversa egisse referuntur. Maria quippe Redemptoris nostri verba audiens, ad pedes illius residebat; Martha autem corporalibus ministeriis insistebat. Cumque contra Mariae otium Martha quereretur, audivit: Martha, Martha, sollicita es, et turbaris erga plurima. Porro unum est necessarium. Maria optimam partem elegit, quae non auferetur ab ea (Luc. X, 41, 42). Quid enim per Mariam, quae verba Domini residens audiebat, nisi contemplativa vita exprimitur? Quid per Martham exterioribus obsequiis occupatam, nisi activa vita signatur? Sed Marthae cura non reprehenditur, Mariae vero etiam laudatur, quia magna sunt activae vitae merita, sed contemplativae potiora. Unde nec auferri unquam Mariae pars dicitur, quia activae vitae opera cum corpore transeunt, contemplativae autem gaudia melius ex fine convalescunt. Quod bene ac breviter Ezechiel propheta exprimit, cum volantia animalia contemplatus ait: Et similitudo manus hominis subtus pennas eorum erat (Ezech. X, 21). Quid enim per pennas animalium, nisi contemplationes possumus sentire sanctorum, quibus ad summa transvolant, et terrena deserentes, sese in coelestibus librant? Quid per manus, nisi operationes accipimus? Quia cum in proximi amore se dilatant, bona quae praevalent etiam corporaliter administrant. Sed manus eorum sub pennis sunt, quia actionis suae opera virtute contemplationis vincunt. 62. Sepulcri nomine requies aeterna potest intelligi. — Potest etiam per sepulcrum non solum in hac vita nostra contemplatio, sed requies aeternae et intimae retributionis intelligi; in qua tanto verius quiescitur, quanto in nobis corruptionis vita perfectius necatur. In abundantia ergo sepulcrum 211 ingreditur, qui post congesta vitae praesentis opera, mutabilitati suae plene mortuus, in secreto veri luminis occultatur. Unde et per Psalmistam dicitur: Abscondes eos in abdito vultus tui, a conturbatione hominum (Psal. XXX, 21). Quod bene etiam comparatio adjuncta commendat, cum subditur: Sicut infertur acervus tritici in tempore suo. Frumentum quippe in segete sole tangitur, quia in hac vita, humana anima respectu superni luminis illustratur; pluvias accipit, quia veritatis eloquio pinguescit; ventis concutitur, quia tentationibus exercetur; et secum crescentes paleas portat, quia nequiorem contra se quotidie vitam peccantium tolerat; atque ad aream deductum triturationis pondere premitur, ut a palearum connexione solvatur; quia mens nostra coelesti disciplinae supposita, dum correctionis flagella percipit, a societate carnalium mundior recedit; et relictis paleis ad horreum ducitur, quia foris remanentibus reprobis, electa anima ad supernae mansionis aeterna gaudia sublevatur. Bene ergo dicitur: Ingredieris in abundantia sepulcrum, sicut infertur acervus tritici in tempore suo; quia dum post afflictionem justi praemia patriae coelestis inveniunt, quasi post pressuras ad horreum grana deferuntur; et in alieno quidem tempore percussiones sentiunt, sed in suo a percussione requiescunt. Electis quippe tempus alienum est vita praesens, unde et quibusdam adhuc infidelibus Veritas dicit: Tempus meum nondum venit, tempus autem vestrum semper est paratum (Joan. VII, 6). Et rursum: Haec est hora vestra, et potestas tenebrarum (Luc. XXII, 53). Sepulcrum ergo in tempore suo sicut frumenti acervus ingreditur, quia ille aeternam requiem 212 percipit, qui prius hic, ut ab exurendis paleis liber sit, disciplinae pressuras sentit. Eliphaz vero, quia et in locutionis suae serie tabernaculum, lapides, bestias, semen, herbas, sepulcrumque nominavit, quod non haec juxta litteram dixerit, ipse innuit, qui post cuncta illico subjungit.

CAPUT XXXVIII.

VERS. 27. — Ecce hoc, ut investigavimus, ita est. 63. Verba Eliphaz spiritaliter intelligenda sunt. — Liquet profecto quod in his verbis nihil ab eo juxta superficiem dicitur, quia nimirum ante faciem non jacet quod investigatur. Qui ergo haec investigasse se indicat, quia in verbis exterioribus interiora quaesierit demonstrat. Sed post cuncta ad stultitiam jactantiae pervenit, quia protinus subdit:

CAPUT XXXIX.

IBID. — Quod auditum, mente pertracta. 64. Gravis ejus imperitia est velle docere meliorem. — Quantalibet doctrina mens polleat, gravis ejus imperitia est velle docere meliorem. Unde et ea quae ab amicis recte prolata sunt, ab interno arbitro non recta judicantur. In eo namque vim suae rectitudinis amittunt, quod auditori non congruunt; quia et medicamina vires perdunt, cum sanis membris apponuntur. In omni ergo quod dicitur, necesse est ut causa, tempus et persona pensetur; si verba sententiae veritas roborat, si hanc tempus congruum postulat, si et veritatem sententiae, et congruentiam temporis personae qualitas non impugnat. Ille enim laudabiliter spicula emittit, qui prius hostem quem feriat conspicit. Male namque arcus validi cornua subigit, qui sagittam fortiter dirigens civem ferit.

LIBER SEPTIMUS.

Totum caput sextum, tribus postremis versibus exceptis, partim allegorice, partim moraliter explicat.

CAPUT PRIMUM.

211 1. Job flagellis et conviciis probatus. Si qua loquitur quae impatientiam sonant, haec non humano pensanda judicio, sed divino. — Quorumdam mentes plus flagella, quam convicia cruciant; quorumdam vero plus convicia quam flagella castigant. Nam saepe contra nos quibuslibet poenis durius tormenta verborum saeviunt; cumque nos ad defensionem erigunt, in impatientiam sternunt. Unde beato Job ne deesse tentatio ulla potuisset, non solum hunc flagella desuper feriunt sed graviora plagis amicorum colloquia affligunt; ut sancti viri anima hinc inde pulsata, ad motum iracundiae et elationis erumperet, et quidquid mundum vixerat, per contumaciam superbae locutionis inquinaret. Sed tactus plagis gratias retulit; lacessitus verbis recta respondit; et percussus innotescit, quam pro minimo salutem carnis habuerit. Loquens quoque indicat, quam sapiens tacebat. Sed quaedam ejus verbis admista sunt, quae apud humana judicia patientiae limitem transire videantur: quae nos vere intelligimus, si superni sententiam judicis in eorum examinatione pensamus. Ipse quippe beatum Job et prius contra adversarium praetulit, dicens: Vidisti servum meum Job, quod non ei similis est super terram; vir simplex et rectus, ac timens Deum, et recedens a malo (Job. I, 8)? Ipse post probationem amicos ejus redarguit, dicens: 212 Non estis locuti coram me rectum, sicut servus meus Job (Job. XLII, 7). Restat ergo ut cum mens in beati Job sermonibus fluctuat, eorum pondus ex ejusdem historiae initio ac fine perpendat. Ab aeterno enim judice nec casurus laudari potuit, nec lapsus praeferri. Si igitur in ambiguitatis tempestate deprehensi, prima hujus historiae et postrema conspicimus, navis cordis considerationis suae funibus, quasi a prora et puppi, restringitur, ne in erroris saxa perducatur. Nullis ergo ignorantiae nostrae procellis obruimur, si tranquillum supernae sententiae littus tenemus. Ecce enim dicit quod quaestione non modica lectoris animum moveat. Sed quis hoc non rectum dicere audeat, quod in Dei auribus rectum sonat?

CAPUT II.

CAP. VI. VERS. 2, 3. — Utinam appenderentur peccata mea, quibus iram merui, et calamitas quam patior, in statera: quasi arena maris haec gravior appareret. SENSUS TYPICUS. 2. Christus libra est in qua et quod meremur, et quod pro nobis passus est, pensantur. Poenae nostrae gravitatem nobis notam fecit. — Quis alius staterae nomine, nisi Dei et hominum mediator exprimitur? qui ad pensandum vitae nostrae meritum venit, ac secum justitiam simul et misericordiam detulit; sed misericordiae lance praeponderans, culpas nostras parcendo levigavit. In manu etenim Patris, quasi statera miri libraminis factus, hinc in se calamitatem nostram, 213 et illinc peccata suspendit. Sed gravis ponderis calamitatem moriendo innotuit, et apud misericordiam leve esse peccatum relaxando monstravit. Qui hoc primum gratiae contulit, quia poenam nostram nobis cognoscibilem fecit. Homo namque ad contemplandum auctorem conditus, sed exigentibus meritis ab internis gaudiis dejectus, in aerumnam corruptionis ruens, caecitatem exsilii sustinens, culpae suae supplicia et tolerabat, et nesciebat; ita ut exsilium patriam crederet, et sic sub corruptionis pondere quasi in salutis libertate gauderet. Sed is, quem intus homo reliquerat, assumpta carne, foris apparuit Deus; cumque se exterius praebuit, expulsum foras hominem ad interiora revocavit, ut jam damna sua videat, jam poenam suae caecitatis ingemiscat. Calamitas ergo hominis in statera gravis apparuit, quia malum quod pertulit nonnisi in praesentia Redemptoris agnovit; lucem quippe nesciens, damnationis suae tenebras voluptuose tolerabat. Sed postquam vidit quod diligeret, intellexit etiam quod doleret; et grave sensit quod pertulit, quia dulce innotuit quod amisit. Vir igitur sanctus colloquentis amici sententiis a claustris silentii excussus, et prophetici spiritus affluentia repletus, dicat sua, dicat humani generis voce: Utinam appenderentur peccata mea, quibus iram merui, et calamitas quam patior, in statera, quasi arena maris haec gravior appareret. Ac si aperte diceret: Damnationis nostrae malum leve creditur, quia necdum cognita Redemptoris aequitate pensatur. Sed utinam veniat, et aerumnam tanti exsilii misericordiae suae lance suspendat, et quid post exsilium requiramus edoceat. Si enim innotescit quid amisimus, grave esse insinuat quod toleramus. Bene autem haec eadem peregrinationis nostrae calamitas maris arenae comparatur. Arena etenim maris, undarum aestu exterius pellitur, quia et delinquens homo, quoniam tentationum fluctus mobiliter pertulit, extra se ab intimis exivit. Magni autem arena maris est ponderis; sed calamitas hominis arena maris gravior dicitur, quia dura fuisse poena ostenditur, dum per misericordem judicem culpa levigatur. Et quia quisquis gratiam Redemptoris agnoscit, quisquis reditum ad patriam diligit, eruditus sub pondere peregrinationis gemit, post staterae desiderium recte subjungitur:

CAPUT III.

VERS. 2. — Unde et verba mea dolore sunt plena. 3. Gemere hic non cessat qui se exsulem novit. — Qui peregrinationem pro patria diligit, dolere etiam inter dolores nescit. Justi autem verba dolore plena sunt, quia quo usque praesentia tolerat, ad aliud loquendo suspirat; omne quod peccans pertulit, conspicit; atque ut ad statum beatitudinis redeat, sollicite judicia quibus affligitur pensat. Unde subditur:

CAPUT IV.

VERS. 4. — Quia sagittae Domini in me sunt. 4. Sagittis praedicatio vel poena signatur. — Sagittarum quippe nomine aliquando praedicationis verba, aliquando animadversionis sententiae designantur. Praedicationis namque eloquia sagittis exprimuntur, quia in eo quod vitia feriunt, 214 male viventium corda transfigunt. De his sagittis venienti Redemptori dicitur: Sagittae tuae acutae, potentissime; populi sub te cadent in corde (Psal. XLIV, 6). De quo Isaias dicit: Mittam ex eis qui salvati fuerint ad gentes in mare, in Africam, et in Lydiam, tenentes sagittam, in Italiam, in Graeciam (Isai. LXVI, 19). Rursum sagittis, animadversionis percussio designatur, sicut Joas regi per Elisaeum dicitur: Jace sagittam. Quo jaciente ait: Percuties Syriam, donec consumas eam (IV Reg. XIII, 17). Vir igitur sanctus quia peregrinationis suae aerumnam respicit, quia sub percussionibus Dominicae animadversionis ingemiscit, dicat: Unde et verba mea dolore sunt plena, quia sagittae Domini in me sunt [Rec. III.] Ac si aperte diceret: Ego in exsilii damnatione non gaudeo, sed sub judicio positus doleo, quia vim percussionis agnosco. Plerique autem sunt quos tormenta cruciant, sed non emendant. Quo contra apte subjungitur:

CAPUT V.

IBID. — Quarum indignatio ebibit spiritum meum. 5. Justi poenis quas sustinent emendantur. — Quid enim est spiritus hominis, nisi spiritus elationis? Sagittae autem Domini spiritum hominis ebibunt, cum supernae animadversionis sententiae afflictam mentem ab elatione compescunt. Sagittae Domini spiritum hominis ebibunt, quia intentum exterioribus introrsus trahunt. Epotatus namque David spiritus fuerat, cum dicebat: In deficiendo in me spiritum meum, et tu cognovisti semitas meas (Psal. CXLI, 4). Et rursum: Negavi consolari animam meam, memor fui Dei, et delectatus sum, exercitatus sum, et defecit paulisper spiritus meus (Psal. LXXVI, 4). Sagittarum ergo indignatio justi spiritum ebibit, quia supernae sententiae electos, quos in peccatis inveniunt, dum vulnerant, immutant; ut duritiam suam transfixa mens deserat, atque ex salutifero vulnere sanguis confessionis currat. Pensant namque unde, quo lapsi sunt, pensant a quanta beatitudine ad quae corruptionis suae tormenta ceciderunt; et non solum gemunt in his quae sustinent, sed insuper metuunt hoc quod districtus judex delinquentibus de gehennae ignibus minatur. Unde recte subjungitur:

CAPUT VI.

IBID. — Et terrores Domini militant contra me. 6. Deum praesentes poenas dolent, pavent futuras. — Justorum mens non solum perpendit quod tolerat, sed etiam pavet quod restat; videt qualia in hac vita patitur; metuit ne post hanc graviora patiatur. Luget quia in hujus caecitatis exsilio a paradisi gaudiis cecidit; timet ne et cum exsilium relinquetur, mors aeterna subsequatur. Jam ergo sententiam tolerat in poena; sed minas adhuc venturi judicis formidat ex culpa. Hinc Psalmista ait: In me pertransierunt irae tuae, et terrores tui conturbaverunt me (Psal. LXXXVII, 17). Interni quippe judicis postquam irae pertranseunt, etiam terrores conturbant, quia jam aliud damnatione patimur, et adhuc aliud de aeterna ultione formidamus. Vir igitur sanctus, perpendens mala quae tolerat, dicat: Sagittae Domini in me sunt, quarum indignatio ebibit spiritum meum. Sed, graviora in perpetuum metuens, adjungat: Et terrores militani contra me. Ac si aperte diceret: Percussus quidem de praesentibus doleo; 215 sed hoc in dolore fit gravius, quia et in poena positus, adhuc supplicia aeterna pertimesco. Sed quia jam staterae interventum desiderat, jam mala in quibus humanum genus cecidit pensat, quamvis in gentili natione positus, munere tamen prophetici spiritus plenus; quo ardore Redemptoris adventum vel gentilitas, vel Judaea sitiat, verbis sequentibus demonstrat, dicens:

CAPUT VII.

VERS. 5. — Nunquid rugiet onager cum habuerit herbam? aut mugiet bos cum ante praesepe plenum steterit? 7. Gentilitatis et Judaeae in Redemptoris adventum desideria. — Quid namque per onagrum, id est, agrestem asinum, nisi gentilis populus designatur? quem sicut natura extra stabula disciplinae edidit, ita vagus in voluptatum suarum campo permansit. Quid per bovem nisi plebs Judaica figuratur, quae, jugo dominationis supernae supposita, ad spem proselytos colligens, per corda quae valuit vomerem legis traxit. Sed beati Job vita attestante cognoscimus, ut exspectasse Redemptoris adventum multos etiam ex gentibus credamus. Et nascente Domino, Simeone in spiritu in templum veniente, didicimus quanto desiderio ex plebe Israelitica sancti viri incarnationis ejus mysterium videre cupierunt. Unde et per eumdem Redemptorem discipulis dicitur: Multi, dico vobis, justi et prophetae desideraverunt videre quae videtis, et non viderunt (Luc. X, 24). Herba ergo onagri, et fenum bovis est haec ipsa Mediatoris incarnatio, per quam simul gentilitas et Judaea satiatur. Quia enim per prophetam dicitur: Omnis caro fenum (Isa. XL, 6), universitatis conditor, ex nostra substantia carnem sumens, fenum fieri voluit, ne nostra in perpetuum caro fenum remaneret. Tunc ergo herbam onager invenit, cum gentilis populus gratiam divinae incarnationis accepit. Tunc bos vacuum praesepe non habuit, cum plebi Judaicae ejus carnem exspectanti lex exhibuit, quem diu exspectanti prophetavit. Unde et natus Dominus in praesepe ponitur, ut videlicet signaretur quia sancta animalia, quae jejuna diu apud legem inventa sunt, incarnationis ejus feno satiantur. Praesepe enim natus implevit, qui cibum semetipsum mentibus mortalium praebuit, dicens: Qui comedit carnem meam, et bibit sanguinem meum, in me manet, et ego in eo (Joan. VI, 57). Sed quia diu et electorum gentilium vota dilata sunt, et ex Hebraico populo sancti quique longo tempore redemptionem suam exspectando gemuerunt, beatus Job, bene prophetiae mysteria enarrans, ex utraque natione causas afflictionis insinuat, dicens: Nunquid rugiet onager cum habuerit herbam? aut mugiet bos cum ante praesepe plenum steterit? Ac si aperte dicat: Idcirco gentilitas gemit, quia eam necdum Redemptoris sui gratia reficit; atque ideo Judaea mugitus dilatat, quia, legem tenens, sed legis auctorem non videns, stans ante praesepe jejunat. Quae nimirum lex, quia ante Mediatoris adventum nequaquam spiritaliter, sed carnaliter tenebatur, recte subjungitur:

CAPUT VIII.

VERS. 6. — Aut poterit comedi insulsum, quod non est sale conditum? 8. Lex carnaliter intellecta insulsa, a Christo sale condita. — In lege sal litterae est virtus intelligentiae occultae. Quisquis ergo, obsequiis carnalibus intentus, hanc intelligere spiritaliter noluit, quid aliud quam insulsum cibum comedit? Sed hoc in 216 cibo sal cognita Veritas misit, cum latere in lege saporem occultae intelligentiae docuit dicens: Si crederetis Moysi, crederetis forsitan et mihi, de me enim ille scripsit (Joan. V, 46). Et rursum: Habete sal in vobis, et pacem habete inter vos (Marc. V, 49). Sed quia ante Mediatoris adventum Judaea legem carnaliter tenuit, praeceptis ejus dura jubentibus gentilitas subdi recusavit. Insulsum ergo cibum comedere noluit, quia prius quam Spiritus condimentum perciperet servare vim litterae expavit. Quis namque gentilium hoc quod illic praecipitur ferret, filiorum carnem pro obsequio religionis incidere, verborum culpas morte resecare? Unde et bene adhuc subditur:

CAPUT IX.

IBID. — Aut gustare aliquis potest quod gustatum affert mortem? 9. Lex carnaliter degustata, prius erat mortifera. — Lex namque carnaliter degustata mortem detulit, quia commissa delinquentium dura animadversione distrinxit; mortem detulit, quia et per praeceptum culpam innotuit, et hanc per gratiam non delevit, Paulo attestante, qui ait: Nihil ad perfectum perduxit lex (Heb. VII, 19). Et rursum: Lex quidem sancta, et mandatum sanctum et justum et bonum. Et paulo post: Peccatum, ut appareat peccatum, per bonum mihi operatum est mortem (Rom. VII, 12, 13). Ad Christum vero conversa gentilitas, quia hunc sonare per verba legis intelligit, angustata desideriis suis, eum quem vehementer diligit inter praecepta carnalia spiritaliter requirit. Unde et ex voce mox Ecclesiae per prophetiae spiritum subditur:

CAPUT X.

VERS. 7. — Quae prius tangere nolebat anima mea, nunc, prae angustia, cibi mei sunt. 10. Verba Job spiritali intellectu esse gravida. Gentes legis cibum quaesiturae, et Judaei gentium societatem non dedignaturae praedicuntur. — Valde namque in errorem labitur qui beati Job verba ad solam prolata historiam suspicatur. Vir enim sanctus, et tot conditoris sui praeconiis fultus, quid magnum, vel potius quid verum diceret, si insulsum cibum comedi non posse dixisset? Aut quis ejus esui mortifera alimenta obtulerat, ut subjungat: Aut potest aliquis gustare quod gustatum affert mortem? Quae si de amicorum colloquiis dicta sentimus, ab intellectu hoc sententia subjuncta compescimur, qua ait: Quae prius tangere nolebat anima mea, nunc, prae angustia, cibi mei sunt. Absit enim ne vir sanctus, in status sui incolumitate constitutus, amicorum suorum aliquando dicta despexerit, qui, sicut ipso attestante post didicimus, et servis humilis fuit. Verba ergo ejus a mysteriis non vacant, quae, sicut ex fine historiae discimus, et internus arbiter laudat. Quae nequaquam etiam cum tanta veneratione usque ad mundi extrema decurrerent, si intellectu mystico gravida non fuissent. 11. Beatus igitur Job, quia membrum sanctae est Ecclesiae, ejus etiam loquatur ex voce, dicens: Quae prius tangere nolebat anima mea, nunc prae angustia, cibi mei sunt, quia nimirum amoris sui aestibus anxia cibum Scripturae veteris conversa gentilitas esurit, quem dudum superba despexit.

Quae tamen et Judaeae vocibus congruunt, si paulo consideratius disserantur. Ipsa quippe ex eruditione legis, ex unius Dei cognitione sal habuit, et cunctas gentes tanquam animalia bruta despexit. Sed quia societatem gentilium ad semetipsam recipere praeceptis legis erudita contempserat, 217 quid aliud quam insulsum cibum sumere fastidiebat? Divina quippe sententia, proposita morte, vetuerat ne plebs Israelitica foedus cum alienigenis jungeret, et vitam sanctae religionis inquinaret (Exod. XXIII, 32). Unde et subditur: Aut gustare aliquis potest quod gustatum affert mortem? Sed quia ad Redemptoris fidem haec eadem Judaea ex electorum parte conversa est, lucem quam cognoverat praedicare per sanctos apostolos suae prolis infidelibus satagebat. Ejus autem praedicationis obsequium Hebraeorum superbia repulit. Unde mox ad collectionem gentium exhortationis suae verba declinavit, sicut et per eosdem apostolos dicitur: Vobis oportebat primum loqui verbum Dei; sed quoniam repulistis illud, et indignos vos judicastis aeternae vitae, ecce convertimur ad gentes (Act. XIII, 46). Unde hoc quoque loco apte subjungitur: Quae prius tangere nolebat anima mea, nunc prae angustia, cibi mei sunt. Judaea quippe, vitam gentilium dedignata, eam dudum quasi tangere noluit, cujus societatem recipere sprevit; sed ad Redemptoris gratiam veniens, ab Israelitis infidelibus repulsa, dum per sanctos apostolos ad collectionem se gentium dilatat, quasi hoc in cibum esuriens accipit, quod indignum prius fastidiosa despexit. Praedicationis enim suae angustias pertulit, quae apud Hebraeos despici quod loquebatur vidit. Sed prae angustia cibos quos dudum contempserat comedit, quae, repulsa Judaeorum duritia, gentiles suscipere populos quos despexerat concupiscit. Quia igitur haec figuraliter diximus, restat nunc ut moraliter inquiramus. SENSUS MORALIS. — 12. Vir sanctus, Redemptoris adventum sub staterae appellatione desiderans, dum se per eloquium aperit, nos ad vivendi studium erudit; dum sua narrat, quaedam nostra indicat; dum de se quae recognoscamus insinuat, nos ad spem trepidos infirmosque confirmat. Jam quippe per fidem Mediatoris vivimus, et tamen adhuc pro expurgatione vitiorum dura animadversionis intimae flagella sustinemus. Unde et post staterae desiderium subdit:

CAPUT XI.

VERS. 4. — Quia sagittae Domini in me sunt, quarum indignatio ebibit spiritum meum. 13. Boni flagellis ac judicii terrore configuntur. Praestat tamen agi amore. — Sed ecce, ut superius dictum est, et divinae correptionis percussione configimur, et tamen adhuc illud gravius est quod de terrore venturi judicis ex aeterna animadversione formidamus. Unde protinus subinfertur: Et terrores Domini militant contra me. Debet tamen a metu et dolore animus excuti, et ad sola aeternae patriae desideria extendi. Tunc enim nobilitatem nostrae regenerationis ostendimus, si eum ut patrem diligimus, quem nunc servili mente ut dominum formidamus. Unde et per Paulum dicitur: Non accepistis spiritum servitutis iterum in timore, sed accepistis spiritum adoptionis filiorum, in quo clamamus, Abba pater (Rom. VIII, 15). Pondus itaque formidinis mens electi postponat, in virtute se amoris exerceat, renovationis suae dignitatem desideret, ad conditoris sui speciem anhelet; quem quo usque conspicere non valet, aeternitatem ejus necesse est, id est, intimum cibum suum esuriens, exspectet. Unde et apte subditur:

CAPUT XII.

VERS. 5. — Nunquid rugiet onager cum habuerit herbam? aut mugiet bos cum ante praesepe plenum steterit? 14. Onager fidelem plebem, bos ordinem ecclesiasticum designat. Utrisque hic gemendi causa de dilata Dei visione. — Qui alii onagri appellatione signati sunt, nisi hi qui, in campo fidei constituti, nullius officii loris 218 ligantur? Vel quos bovis significatio exprimit, nisi hos quos intra sanctam Ecclesiam ad praedicationis officium suscepti ordinis jugum premit? Herba vero onagri et pabulum bovis est interna refectio populi fidelis. Alii namque more bovis intra Ecclesiam suscepti officii loris tenentur; alii more onagri sacri ordinis stabula nesciunt, et in campo propriae voluntatis degunt. Sed cum quis ex vita saeculari internae visionis desiderio aestuat, cum refectionis intimae pabulum concupiscit, cum jejunum se in peregrinationis hujus caecitate considerans, quibus valet fletibus reficit, quasi herbam non inveniens onager rugit. Alius quoque necessitatem suscepti ordinis tolerat, in labore praedicationis exsudat, et per aeternam jam contemplationem refici appetit; sed quia Redemptoris sui speciem necdum conspicit, quasi bos ad praesepe vacuum ligatus gemit. Quia enim, longe ab interna sapientia positi, aeternae haereditatis viriditatem non cernimus, velut bruta animalia, a desiderata herba jejunamus. De qua nimirum herba Redemptoris voce dicitur: Per me si quis introierit, salvabitur, et ingredietur, et egredietur, et pascua inveniet (Joan. X, 9). Sed plerumque, quod esse amantibus gravius solet, sanctis bonorum studiis malorum vita contradicit; et cum mens ad coeleste desiderium rapitur, bene coepta intentio, interrumpentibus stultorum verbis ac moribus, reverberatur; ita ut quae jam per contemplationis adnisum ad summa evolaverat, ad expugnandam pravorum stultitiam sese in infimis contra certamina accingat. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT XIII.

VERS. 6. — Aut poterit comedi insulsum quod non est sale conditum? Aut potest aliquis gustare quod gustatum affert mortem? 15. Electis quam gravia sint verba moresque carnalium. — Verba quippe moresque carnalium quasi cibum se nostris mentibus ingerunt, ut in delectationis ventre rapiantur. Sed electus quisque insulsum non comedit, quia pravorum dicta factaque dijudicans, ab ore cordis repellit. Paulus ad esum mentium inferri insulsa prohibuit, cum discipulis dixit: Sermo vester semper in gratia sale sit conditus (Coloss. IV, 6). Et Psalmistae quoque verba reproborum in cordis ore insulsa sapuerant, cum dicebat: Narraverunt mihi iniqui fabulationes, sed non ita ut lex tua, Domine (Psal. CXVIII, 84). Saepe autem verba carnalium dum se importune nostris auribus ingerunt, in corde bellum tentationis gignunt; et quamvis haec et ratio respuat, et lingua reprehendat, cum labore tamen intus vincitur quod foris cum auctoritate judicatur. Unde necesse est ut nec ad aures veniat quod mens a cogitationis aditu vigilans repellat. Sancti igitur viri, cum aeternitatis desideriis anhelant, in tantam altitudinem vitae se sublevant, ut audire jam quae mundi sunt grave sibi ac deprimens pondus credant. Valde namque insolens atque intolerabile aestimant quidquid illud non sonat quod intus amant. 26. Non omnium est ad cruciatus corporis pro Deo subeundos accingi. — Sed saepe mens jam per desiderium ad sublimia rapitur, jam funditus a stulta terrenorum hominum locutione separatur, nec tamen adhuc pro amore veritatis ad perferendos praesentis vitae cruciatus accingitur; jam superna appetit, jam in infimis stulta contemnit, sed necdum se ad perferendae adversitatis tolerantiam dirigit. Unde et subditur: Aut potest aliquis gustare quod gustatum affert mortem?

CAPUT XIV.

17. Proximorum infirma tolerando, ad cruciatus subeundos roboramur. — Durum quippe est appetere quod cruciat, 219 sequi quod vitam fugat. Sed plerumque mens justi ad tantum se virtutis culmen extendit, ut et apud se in internae rationis arce praesideat, et quorumdam foris stultitiam tolerando convertat. Quos enim ad fortia trahere nitimur, eorum necesse est ut infirma toleremus, quia nec jacentem erigit, nisi qui status sui rectitudinem per compassionem flectit. Cum vero alienae infirmitati compatimur, valentius a nostra roboramur; ut amore futurorum mens ad praesentia adversa se praeparet, et cruciatus corporis quos timebat exspectet. Auctis namque desideriis coelestibus angustatur; cumque aeternae patriae quanta sit dulcedo considerat, pro ea praesentis vitae amaritudines ardenter amat. Unde post insulsi cibi fastidium, post impossibilem mortis gustum, recte subjungitur:

CAPUT XV.

VERS. 7. — Quae prius tangere nolebat anima mea, nunc, prae angustia, cibi mei sunt. 18. Prae amore coelestis patriae exsilii poenas amamus. — Mens enim justi proficiens, quae prius, dum sola propria curaret, ferre aliena fastidiebat, quae minus alienis compatiens, convalescere contra adversa non poterat, cum ad toleranda proximi infirma se attrahit, ad adversa superanda convalescit; ita ut pro amore veritatis praesentis vitae cruciatus tanto post fortius appetat, quanto prius infirma fugiebat. Inclinatione namque sua erigitur, attractione tenditur, compassione roboratur; cumque in amorem proximi se dilatat, quasi ex meditatione colligit quanta fortitudine in auctorem surgat. Charitas namque, quae nos ad vim compassionis humiliat, altius in culmine contemplationis levat; et multiplicata jam majoribus desideriis aestuat, jam pervenire ad vitam spiritus, etiam per cruciatus corporis, anhelat. Quod ergo prius tangere nolebat, hoc post prae angustia comedit, qui desideria sua vix capiens, et ipsas quas dudum timuerat, jam prae amore coelestis patriae poenas amat. Si enim mens in Deum forti intentione dirigitur, quidquid sibi in hac vita amarum fit, dulce aestimat, omne quod affligit requiem putat; transire et per mortem appetit, ut obtinere vitam plenius possit; funditus in infimis exstingui desiderat, quo verius summa conscendat. Sed haec de cujuslibet justi animo, haec de beati Job mente mentior, nisi ipse subjungat:

CAPUT XVI.

VERS. 8-10. — Quis det ut veniat petitio mea, et quod exspecto tribuat mihi Dominus; et qui coepit, ipse me conterat; solvat manum suam, et succidat me, et haec mihi sit consolatio, ut affligens me dolore, non parcat? 19. Exemplum Job suum percussorem benedicentis. Conterit nos Deus, conterit et diabolus, diversis exitibus. — Sed fortasse haec per contumaciam expetit, fortasse in eo quod se perfecte exstingui desiderat, injustitiam ferientis accusat. Absit hoc. Nam qua mente id expetat, verbis sequentibus demonstrat, dicens: Nec contradicam sermonibus sancti. Nequaquam ergo de injustitia percutientis murmurat, qui percussorem suum et inter verbera sanctum vocat. Sciendum vero est quia aliquando nos adversarius, aliquando autem conterit Deus. Ex contritione autem adversarii a virtute deficimus; per contritionem vero Domini fracti, a vitiis in virtute roboramur. Hanc contritionem Propheta prospexerat, cum dicebat: Reges eos in virga ferrea, et tanquam vas figuli conteres eos (Psal. II, 9). In virga nos ferrea Dominus regit et conterit, quia 220 dispensationis suae forti rectitudine cum nos interius reficit, exterius affligit. Nam quo virtutem carnis humiliat, intentionem spiritus exaltat. Unde et haec eadem contritio figuli vasi comparatur, sicut et per Paulum dicitur: Habemus thesaurum istum in vasis fictilibus (II Cor. IV, 7). Qui simul contritionem et regimen exprimens, ait: Licet is qui foris est noster homo corrumpitur, tamen is qui intus est renovatur de die in diem (Ibid., 16). Sanctus igitur vir, qui appropinquare Deo etiam per flagella desiderat, per spiritum humilitatis dicat:

CAPUT XVII.

VERS. 9. — Qui coepit, ipse me conterat. 20. Efferentem se de virtutibus Deus misericorditer corripit. — Plerumque enim vitiorum contritionem in nobis agere Dominus inchoat; sed cum mens ex ipso exordio provectus extollitur, cumque se jam quasi de virtutibus erigit, saevienti contra se adversario aditum pandit, qui cordis intima penetrans, omne quod in ea de studio bonae inchoationis invenerit, confringit; tantoque se vehementius in ejus confractione exhibet, quanto et gravius, quia vel ad modicum fuerat provectus, dolet. Unde et teste Evangelio, voce Veritatis, ad neglectam domum conscientiae spiritus immundus qui solus exiit cum spiritibus septem redit (Matth. XII, 45). Ne ergo post divinae correptionis exordia antiquus hostis subripiat, atque ad virtutum confractionem trahat, sanctus vir congrue exorat, dicens: Qui coepit, ipse me conterat. Ac si aperte didicat: Hoc, quod in me exorsus est perficere feriendo non desinat, ne desertum me adversario ad contritionem tradat. Unde et apte subditur:

CAPUT XVIII.

IBID. — Solvat manum suam, et succidat me. 21. Quam timendum ne ad ferienda nostra vitia ligatam manum teneat. — Saepe namque fiducia longae prosperitatis inflati, in quodam statu elationis erigimur. Cumque nos extolli conditor conspicit, sed amorem suum erga nos per verbera non exercet, quasi ad ferienda nostra vitia manum ligatam tenet. An non affectus sui manum ligaverat cum peccanti populo dicebat: Jam non irascar tibi (Isai. LIV, 9); et: Zelus meus recessit a te (Ezech. XVI, 42)? Solvat ergo manum dicitur, exerceat affectum. Recte autem subjungitur: Et succidat me. Cum enim securos nos ac de virtutum affluentia elatos, repentinus vel flagelli dolor, vel infirmitatis tentatio percutit, protinus a status sui vertice mentis nostrae elatio succisa cadit, ut de semetipsa nihil audeat, sed, infirmitatis suae ictu prostrata, manum levantis quaerat. Hinc est quod sancti viri cum de occulta erga se dispositione suspecti sunt, plus prospera ipsa pertimescunt, tentari appetunt, flagellari concupiscunt, quatenus incautam mentem metus et dolor erudiat, ne in hac peregrinationis via, hoste ex insidiis erumpente, sua eamdem deterius securitas sternat. Hinc Psalmista ait: Proba me, Domine, et tenta me (Psal. XXV, 2). Hinc iterum dicit: Ego ad flagella paratus sum (Psal. XXXVII, 18). Quia enim sancti mentis suae correptionis vulnus sine putredine non esse considerant, libenter se sub manu medici ad sectiones parant, ut, aperto vulnere, virus peccati exeat, quod sana cute intus occidebat. Unde et adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XIX.

VERS. 10. — Et haec mihi sit consolatio, ut affligens me dolore, non parcat. 22. Sancti timent prospera, cupiunt flagella. — Electi qui cum perpetrasse se illicita noverunt, sed perscrutantes inveniunt quia nulla pro illicitis adversa perpessi sunt, vi immensae formidinis 221 tabescunt, pavore aestuant, sinistris agitati suspicionibus laborant, ne in aeternum se gratia deseruerit, quos in praesenti vita mali sui retributio nulla custodit; timent ne ultio quae suspenditur gravior in fine servetur; feriri paterna correptione desiderant, et dolorem vulneris medicamina salutis putant. Recte ergo nunc dicitur: Haec mihi sit consolatio, ut affligens me dolore non parcat. Ac si aperte diceretur: Qui ideo hic quibusdam parcit, ut eos in perpetuum feriat; ideo hic me feriat, ut non parcendo, in perpetuum parcat. Ex afflictione enim me consolor, quia corruptionis humanae putredinem sciens, ad spem salutis ex vulnere certus reddor. Quod quia non tumenti sed humili mente edidit, subjungendo, ut praediximus, patefacit, dicens:

CAPUT XX.

IBID. — Nec contradicam sermonibus sancti. 23. Deus saepe tacitus loquitur operibus. — Plerumque ad nos verba Dei non sunt dictorum sonitus, sed effectus operationum. In eo enim nobis loquitur quod erga nos tacitus operatur. Beatus igitur Job sermonibus Dei contradiceret, si de ejus percussionibus murmuraret. Sed quid de percussore suo sentiat, indicat, qui (sicut jam diximus) quem ferientem tolerat, sanctum vocat. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXI.

VERS. 11. — Quae est enim fortitudo mea, ut sustineam; aut quis finis meus, ut patienter agam? 24. Quae justorum fortitudo, quae reproborum. — Sciendum quod alia justorum, atque alia est fortitudo reproborum. Justorum quippe fortitudo est carnem vincere, propriis voluntatibus contraire, delectationem vitae praesentis exstinguere, hujus mundi aspera pro aeternis praemiis amare, prosperitatis blandimenta contemnere, adversitatis metum in corde superare. Reproborum vero fortitudo est transitoria sine cessatione diligere, contra flagella conditoris insensibiliter perdurare, ab amore rerum temporalium nec ex adversitate quiescere, ad inanem gloriam etiam cum vitae detrimento pervenire, malitiae augmenta exquirere, bonorum vitam non solum verbis ac moribus, sed etiam gladiis impugnare, in semetipsis spem ponere, iniquitatem quotidie sine ullo desiderii defectu perpetrare. Hinc est quod per Psalmistam dicitur ad electos: Viriliter agite, et confortetur cor vestrum, omnes qui speratis in Domino (Psal. XXX, 25). Hinc per prophetam reprobis dicitur: Vae qui potentes estis ad potandum vinum, et viri fortes ad miscendam ebrietatem (Isai. V, 22). Hinc per Salomonem dicitur quod sancti quique sine ulla debilitate desiderii internam requiem contemplantur: En lectulum Salomonis, sexaginta fortes ambiunt, ex fortissimis Israel (Cant. III, 7). Hinc Psalmista contra reprobos in passione positi voce Redemptoris insinuans, ait: Ecce occupaverunt animam meam, irruerunt in me fortes (Psal. LVIII, 4). Quam bene utramque fortitudinem Isaias complexus est, dicens: Qui confidunt in Domino, mutabunt fortitudinem (Isai. XL, 31). Quia enim nequaquam sument, sed mutabunt dixit, profecto patenter innotuit aliam esse quae ponitur, et aliam quae inchoatur. 25. In quibus fortis est reprobus, segnis est justus. — An non etiam reprobi fortes sunt, qui ad praesentis vitae concupiscentiam tot laboribus currunt, periculis se audenter objiciunt, pro lucris contumelias libenter ferunt, ab appetitus sui libidine 222 nulla victi contrarietate resiliunt, percussionibus durescunt, et mala mundi tolerant pro mundo, ejusque, ut ita dixerim, gaudia quaerentes perdunt, nec tamen haec perdendo fatigantur? Unde bene ex humani generis voce per Jeremiam dicitur: Inebriavit me absinthio (Thren. III, 15). Ebrius quippe quod patitur nescit. Absinthio ergo est ebrius, qui, prae amore praesentis saeculi a sensu rationis alienus, dum quidquid pro mundo sustinet, leve deputat, laboris amaritudinem quam tolerat ignorat, quia nimirum delectabiliter ad cuncta ducitur, in quibus poenaliter fatigatur. At contra vir justus ad mundi pericula pro mundo toleranda esse debilis studet, finem suum conspicit, vita praesens quam sit transitoria attendit, et pro ea exterius labores perpeti renuit, cujus intrinsecus delectationem vicit. Beatus igitur Job, praesentis vitae adversitatibus pressus, dicat ex sua, dicat ex omnium voce justorum: Quae est enim fortitudo mea, ut sustineam? aut quis finis meus, ut patienter agam? Ac si aperte insinuet, dicens: Mala mundi pro mundo tolerare nequeo, quia jam in ejus desiderio fortis non sum. Dum enim praesentis vitae finem conspicio, cur pondus ejus patior, cujus appetitum calco? Et quia injusti quique, ut diximus, tanto fortius labores illius perferunt, quanto avidius ejus delectatione pascuntur, recte mox eamdem reproborum fortitudinem subdit, dicens:

CAPUT XXII.

VERS. 12. — Nec fortitudo lapidum fortitudo mea, nec caro mea aenea est.

26. Ad percussionem Dei alii sunt lapides sine sono, alii aes sonans sine sensu. Job non per insaniam, sed per salutis statum fortis. — Quid hoc loco aere ac lapidibus, nisi insensibilium hominum corda signantur, qui saepe et supernos ictus accipiunt, et tamen nulla disciplinae percussione mollescunt? Quo contra electis per prophetam, pollicente Domino, dicitur: Tollam a vobis cor lapideum, et dabo vobis cor carneum (Ezech. XI, 19). Paulus quoque ait: Si linguis hominum loquar et angelorum, charitatem autem non habeam, factus sum velut aes sonans, aut cymbalum tinniens (I Cor. XIII,

1). Scimus autem quoniam percussi lapides clarum sonum reddere nequeunt; aes vero cum percutitur, canorus valde sonitus ex ejus percussione formatur. Quod quia, ut lapides, vita caret, sensum in sonitu non habet. Et sunt nonnulli qui, lapidibus similes, ita ad pietatis praecepta duruerunt, ut cum eos percussio supernae animadversionis examinat, nequaquam sonitum humilis confessionis reddant. Quidam vero a metallo aeris in nullo discrepantes, cum flagella supernae percussionis accipiunt, piae confessionis sonitum emittunt; sed quia humilitatis voces ex corde non proferunt, ad statum salutis reducti, nesciunt quod promiserunt. Illi ergo, more lapidum percussi, nec voces habent; isti autem in nullo aeris imitationem fugiunt, qui, in percussione positi, bona quae non sentiunt loquuntur. Illi venerationi ferientis et verba denegant; isti, pollicentes quod non impleant, sine vita clamant. Vir igitur sanctus, reproborum duritiam inter verbera fugiens, dicat: Nec fortitudo lapidum fortitudo mea, nec caro mea aenea est. Ac si aperte fateatur, dicens: Reproborum similitudinem sub disciplinae verbere fugio, quia nec more 223 lapidum ita obdurui, ut sub percussionis stimulo a ministerio confessionis obmutescam; nec rursus quasi aes vocem confessionis resono, et sensum vocis ignoro. Sed quia ad percussionem reprobi debiliter fortes sunt, electi autem valenter infirmi, beatus Job dum fortem se per insaniam non esse asserit, fortem se per statum salutis innotescit.. VERS. 14. — Qui tollit ab amico suo misericordiam, timorem Domini derelinquit. 28. Amor Dei et amor proximi quid sibi invicem praestent. — Quis hoc loco amici nomine nisi quilibet proximus designatur, qui eo nobis fideliter jungitur, quo, percepto nunc a nobis bono opere, ad obtinendam post aeternam patriam veraciter auxiliatur? Quia autem duo sunt praecepta charitatis, Dei videlicet amor et proximi, per amorem Dei amor proximi gignitur, et per amorem proximi amor Dei nutritur. Nam qui amare Deum negligit, profecto diligere proximum nescit; et tunc plenius in Dei dilectione proficimus, si in ejusdem dilectionis gremio prius proximi charitate lactamur. Quia enim amor Dei amorem proximi generat, dicturus per legem Dominus, Diliges proximum tuum (Deut. VI, 5; X, 12), praemisit, dicens: Diliges Dominum Deum tuum (Matth. XXII, 37, 39): ut scilicet in terra pectoris nostri prius amoris sui radicem figeret, quatenus per ramos postmodum dilectio fraterna germinaret. Et rursum quia amor Dei ex proximi amore coalescit, testatur Joannes, dicens: Qui non diligit fratrem suum quem videt, Deum quem non videt, quomodo potest diligere (I Joan. IV, 20)? Quae tamen divina dilectio per timorem nascitur, sed in affectum crescendo permutatur. 29. Proximi dilectio in ejus aerumnis probatur. Amicum in adversis despicientis quanta iniquitas. — Saepe vero omnipotens Deus ut quantum quisque a charitate ejus ac proximi longe sit, vel in ea quantum profecerit innotescat, miro ordine cuncta dispensans, alios flagellis deprimit, alios successibus fulcit. Et cum quosdam temporaliter deserit, in quorumdam cordibus quod malum latet ostendit. Nam plerumque ipsi nos miseros insequuntur, qui felices sine comparatione coluerunt. Cum enim quis positus in prosperitate diligitur, incertum valde est utrum prosperitas an persona diligatur. Amissio autem felicitatis interrogat vim dilectionis. Unde bene quidam sapiens dicit: Non agnoscitur in bonis amicus, et non 224 absconditur in malis inimicus (Eccli. XII, 8). Nec prosperitas quippe amicum indicat, nec adversitas inimicum celat, quia et ille saepe prosperitatis nostrae reverentia tegitur, et iste ex confidentia adversitatis aperitur. Vir igitur justus in flagellis positus dicat: Qui tollit ab amico suo misericordiam, timorem Domini derelinquit, quia nimirum qui ex adversitate proximum despicit, aperte convincitur quod hunc in prosperis non amavit. Et cum omnipotens Deus ideo quosdam percutiat, ut et percussos erudiat, et non percussis occasionem boni operis praebeat, quisquis percussum despicit, occasionem a se virtutis repellit; et tanto se nequius contra auctorem erigit, quanto hunc nec pium in salute propria, nec justum in alieno vulnere agnoscit. Intuendum vero est quod beatus Job sic sua loquitur, ut totius quoque electi populi per eum vita signetur. Quia enim ejusdem populi membrum est, cum quae ipse patitur narrat, ea etiam quae sustinet ille denuntiat, dicens:

CAPUT XXV.

VERS. 15. — Fratres mei praeterierunt me sicut torrens, qui raptim transit in convallibus. 30. Reprobi cur a justis dicantur et fratres, et praetereuntes. Torrenti recte comparantur. Vita brevi et fugitiva transeunt ad aeterna tormenta. — Reproborum mens quia sola praesentia diligit plerumque nunc tanto aliena existit a verbere, quanto post extranea remanet ab haereditate; et superba justos despicit, quos paterna misericorditer severitas affligit. Saepe vero reprobi eamdem fidem qua vivimus retinent, eadem fidei sacramenta percipiunt, ejusdem religionis unitate continentur; sed tamen compassionis viscera nesciunt, charitatis vim, qua in Deum flagramus et proximum, non agnoscunt. Recte ergo et fratres et praetereuntes vocantur, quia ex uno matris nobiscum gremio per fidem prodeunt, sed in uno charitatis studio erga Deum et proximum non figuntur. Unde apte etiam torrenti qui raptim transit in convallibus comparantur. Torrens namque ex montanis ad ima defluit, et collectus hiemalibus pluviis, aestivis solibus arescit. Qui enim terrena diligentes spem supernae patriae deserunt, quasi ex montibus valles petunt; quos tamen hiems praesentis vitae multiplicat, sed aestas venturi judicii exsiccat, quia cum sol supernae districtionis incanduerit, reproborum laetitiam in ariditatem vertit. Bene ergo dicitur: Raptim transit in convallibus. Torrentem quippe ad convalles raptim transire est pravorum mentes ad ima desideria sine ullo obstaculo ac difficultate descendere. Omnis enim ascensus in labore est, descensus in voluptate, quia per adnisum gressus ad superiora tenditur, per remissionem vero ad inferiora declinatur. Ad montis enim verticem saxum subvehere magni laboris est, idemque a summis ad ima dimittere labor non est. Sine mora videlicet proruit, qui magnis conatibus ad summa pervenit. Longo studio seges seritur, sole atque imbre diutino nutritur, sed tamen una et subita scintilla consumitur. Paulisper aedificia ad alta proficiunt, sed repentinis casibus terram petunt. Robusta arbor in aera per tarda incrementa se erigit; sed quidquid diu ad alta protulit, semel et simul cadit. Quia igitur ascensus in labore est, descensus in voluptate, recte nunc dicitur: Fratres mei praeterierunt me sicut torrens, qui raptim transit in convallibus. Quod tamen sentiri et aliter potest. 225 31. Si enim convalles ima poenarum loca intelligimus, injusti quique sicut torrens raptim ad convalles transeunt, quia in hac vita, quam totis desideriis appetunt, diu stare nequaquam possunt. Nam quot dies aetatis accipiunt, quasi tot quotidie gressibus ad finem tendunt. Augeri sibi optant tempora, sed quia concessa subsistere nequeunt, quot augmenta vivendi percipiunt, de vivendi spatio totidem perdunt. Momenta ergo temporum quo sequuntur fugiunt, quo accipiunt amittunt. Raptim itaque ad convalles transeunt, qui in longum quidem voluptatum desideria pertrahunt, sed ad inferni claustra repente deducuntur. Quia enim hoc etiam tempus, quod qualibet longaevitate extensum est, si fine clauditur, longum non est; ex fine miseri colligunt breve fuisse quod amittendo tenuerunt. Unde bene et per Salomonem dicitur: Si multis annis vixerit homo, et in his omnibus laetatus fuerit, meminisse debet tenebrosi temporis, et dierum multorum, qui cum venerint, vanitatis arguentur praeterita (Eccle. XI, 8). Stulta etenim mens cum malum repente invenerit, quod nequaquam praeterit, aeternitatem ejus tolerando intelligit, quia quod praeterire potuit vanum fuit. Sciendum vero est quod plerique agere recta desiderant, sed sunt nonnulla quae infirmis eorum mentibus ex praesenti vita contradicant; cumque adversa in infimis perpeti metuunt, in superni judicii rectitudinem offendunt. Unde recte subjungitur:

CAPUT XXVI.

VERS. 16. — Qui timent pruinam, irruit super eos nix. 32. Qui temporalium damnorum metu justitiam deserunt, incident in aeterna mala. — Pruina quippe inferius gelascit, nix autem de superioribus ruit. Et saepe nonnulli dum temporalia adversa pertimescunt districtioni se aeternae animadversionis objiciunt. De quibus bene per Psalmistam dicitur: Illic trepidaverunt timore, ubi non erat timor (Psal. XIII, 5). Iste namque veritatem jam libere defendere appetit, sed tamen in ipso suo appetitu trepidus indignationem potestatis humanae pertimescit; cumque in terra hominem contra veritatem pavet, ejusdem veritatis iram coelitus sustinet. Ille, peccatorum suorum conscius, ea quae possidet indigentibus jam largiri desiderat, sed tamen ne datis rebus egeat ipse formidat. Cumque carnis subsidia reservando trepidus praeparat, ab alimentis misericordiae animam necat; et cum pati in terra inopiam metuit, aeternam sibi abundantiam supernae refectionis abscindit. Recte ergo dicitur: Qui timent pruinam, irruit super eos nix, quia qui conculcanda ab infimis metuunt, a summis metuenda patiuntur; et cum transire nolunt quod calcare poterant, judicium de supernis excipiunt, quod tolerare nequaquam possunt. Sed haec agentes, mundi gloriam temporaliter obtinent. Quid autem tempore vocationis suae facturi sunt cum cuncta simul pavidi deserunt quae hic cum gravi timore servaverunt? Unde et apte subditur:

CAPUT XXVII.

VERS. 17. — Tempore quo fuerint dissipati peribunt. 33. Quantus eorum pavor, judicio appropinquante. — Quos enim praesentis vitae sollicitudo ordinat, amissio dissipat; et tunc etiam exterius pereunt, qui intus dudum aeterna negligendo perierunt. 226 De quibus recte additur: Et ut incaluerint, solventur de loco suo. Iniquus enim quisque cum incaluerit, de loco suo solvitur, quia judicio intimae districtionis appropinquans, cum jam per cognitionem poenae fervere coeperit, ab ea, cui dudum inhaeserat, carnis suae delectatione separatur. Hinc est enim quod per prophetam contra reprobos dicitur: Et tantummodo sola vexatio intellectum dabit auditui (Isai. XXVIII, 19), quia videlicet aeterna non intelligunt, nisi cum pro temporalibus jam sine emendatione puniuntur. Tunc mens aestuat, et infructuosae poenitentiae se ignibus inflammat, duci ad supplicium timet, praesentem vitam ex desiderio retinet; sed de loco suo solvitur, quia oblectamenta carnis deserens, ejus duritia per supplicium liquatur. Sed quia iniqui omnes quid abstractionis suae tempore patientur audivimus, adhuc aliqua quibus in libertatis suae spatio implicantur audiamus. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXVIII.

VERS. 18. — Involutae sunt semitae gressuum eorum. 34. Nihil prodest recta proponere, nisi propositi simus tenaces. — Omne quod involvitur in semetipsum replicatur. Et sunt nonnulli qui seducentibus vitiis obviare quasi tota intentione deliberant, sed irruente tentationis articulo, in deliberationis proposito non perdurant. Alius namque, pravo ausu superbiae inflatus, cum magna esse praemia humilitatis considerat, adversum semetipsum se erigit, et quasi tumorem turgidi fastus deponit, exhibere se quibuslibet contumeliis humilem promittit; sed cum repente hunc unius injuria verbi pulsaverit, ad consuetam protinus elationem redit, sicque ad tumorem ducitur, ut nequaquam quia humilitatis bonum concupierat recordetur. Alius avaritia aestuans, augendis facultatibus anhelat. Is cum praeterire omnia velociter conspicit, vagantem per concupiscentias mentem figit, decernit jam nihil appetere, et adepta tantummodo sub magni moderaminis freno possidere; sed cum repente fuerint oculis oblata quae placeant, in ambitione protinus mens anhelat, semetipsam non capit, adipiscendi haec occasionem quaerit, et oblita continentiae quam secum pepigerat, cogitationum se stimulis per desideria acquisitionis inquietat. Alius luxuriae tabe polluitur, et longa jam consuetudine captus tenetur; quanta autem castitatis sit munditia conspicit, et a carne vinci turpe deprehendit. Restringere ergo voluptatum fluxa deliberat, et resultare consuetudini quasi totis se viribus parat. Sed vel objecta oculis specie, vel ad memoriam reducta, cum subita tentatione concutitur, protinus a pristina praeparatione dissipatur; et qui contra hanc clypeum deliberationis erexerat, delectationis iaculo confossus jacet; sicque eum luxuria enervem superat, ac si nulla contra eam intentionis arma praeparasset. Alius irae flammis accenditur, et usque ad inferendas proximis contumelias effrenatur. Cum vero nulla furoris animum occasio pulsat, quanta sit mansuetudinis virtus, quanta patientiae altitudo considerat, seque etiam contra contumelias patientem parat; sed cum parva quamlibet commotionis occasio nascitur, 227 repente ad voces et contumelias medullitus inflammatur; ita ut non solum ad memoriam patientia promissa non redeat, sed et semetipsam mens et ea quae loquitur convicia non agnoscat. Cumque furori plene satisfecerit, quasi post exercitium in tranquillitatem redit; et tunc se ad silentii claustra recolligit, cum linguae non patientia, sed procacitatis suae satisfactio frenum posuit. Vix igitur sero post convicia illata se cohibet, quia et a cursu saepe spumantes equos non praesidentis dextera, sed campi terminus coercet. Bene ergo de reprobis dicitur: Involutae sunt semitae gressuum eorum, quia recta quidem deliberando appetunt, sed ad consueta semper mala replicantur; et quasi extra se tensi, ad semetipsos per circuitum redeunt, qui bona quidem cupiunt, sed a malis nunquam recedunt. Esse quippe humiles, sed tamen sine despectu; esse contenti propriis, sed sine necessitate; esse casti, sed sine maceratione corporis; esse patientes, sed sine contumeliis volunt; cumque adipisci virtutes quaerunt, sed labores virtutum fugiunt, quid aliud quam et belli certamina in campo nesciunt, et triumphare in urbibus de bello concupiscunt. Quomodo autem culpa prodeat, vel quibuslibet ex occasionibus erumpat, reproborum tamen semitae semper involutae sunt, ut pravis concupiscentiis dediti, aut bona nulla appetant, aut appetentes infirmo desiderio, ad haec nequaquam mentis liberos gressus tendant. Recta enim aut non incipiunt, aut, in ipso fracti itinere, ad haec minime pertingunt. Unde fit plerumque ut ad morem suum lassati redeant, seseque ab intentione animi in carnis voluptatibus sternant, sola quae transeunt cogitent, nulla quae 230 secum permaneant curent. Unde apte subditur:

CAPUT XXIX.

IBID. — Ambulabunt in vacuum, et peribunt. 38. Transitoriis bonis inhiantium vacuus labor. — In vacuum quippe ambulant qui nil secum de fructu sui laboris portant. Alius namque adipiscendis honoribus exsudat, alius multiplicandis facultatibus aestuat, alius promerendis laudibus anhelat; sed quia cuncta haec hic quisque moriens deserit, labores in vacuum perdidit, qui secum ante judicem nihil tulit. Quo contra bene per legem dicitur: Non apparebis in conspectu Domini vacuus (Exod. XXIII, 15). Qui enim promerendae vitae mercedem bene agendo non providit, in conspectu Domini vacuus apparet. Hinc de justis per Psalmistam dicitur: Venientes autem venient in exsultatione, portantes manipulos suos (Psal. CXXV, 6). Ad examen quippe judicii portantes manipulos veniunt qui in semetipsis recta opera quibus vitam mereantur ostendunt. Hinc de unoquoque electo Psalmista iterum dicit: Qui non accepit in vanum animam suam (Psal. XXIII, 4). In vanum namque animam suam accipit, qui, sola praesentia cogitans, quae se sequantur in perpetuum non attendit. In vanum animam suam accipit qui, ejus vitam negligens, ei curam carnis anteponit. Sed animam suam justi in vanum non accipiunt, quia intentione continua ad ejus utilitatem referunt quidquid corporaliter operantur, quatenus et transeunte opere, operis causa non transeat, quae vitae praemia post vitam parat. Sed haec curare reprobi negligunt, quia profecto, ambulantes in vacuum, vitam sequentes fugiunt, invenientes perdunt. Melius vero a pravorum imitatione compescimur, si eorum damna ex fine pensamus. Unde bene etiam cum exhortatione subjungitur:

CAPUT XXX.

VERS. 19. Considerate semitas Themam, itinera Saba, et exspectate paulisper. 39. Aliqui honestatis nomine in saeculi retibus illaqueantur. In his sunt qui curam rei familiaris gerunt, aut qui propinquos inordinate diligunt. — Theman quippe Auster, Saba autem rete interpretatur. Quid hic per Austrum, qui afflata teporibus membra dissolvit, nisi fluxa vivendi remissio, quid per rete nisi actionis obligatio demonstratur? Qui enim dissoluta mente ea quae aeterna sunt appetunt, ne gressu libero ad Deum prodeant, ipsi se suis inordinatis conatibus ligant; cumque se fluxis conversationis suae actibus implicant, quasi remansuros in retis maculis pedes ponunt. Ut enim paulo superius quosdam ad devictas jam culpas retrahi per aperta quaedam et non devicta vitia diximus, ita nonnulli ad ea quae reliquerant redeunt per quaedam quae vel honestatis nomine, vel laudis honore, pallientur. Nam sunt plerique qui jam aliena non appetunt, atque ab hujus mundi jurgiis inchoato quietis amore dividuntur, erudiri sacris eloquiis sitiunt, vacare supernis contemplationibus concupiscunt; nec tamen perfecta animi libertate curam rerum familiarium deserunt, cui saepe dum licite serviunt, etiam illicitis hujus mundi jurgiis implicantur; cumque terrenas res studiose tueri desiderant, cordis requiem deserunt, quam quaerebant; et cum substantia fugiens continua provisione protegitur, conceptus in animo divinae 231 scientiae sermo dissipatur, quia, juxta Veritatis sententiam (Matth. XXIII, Marc. IV, Luc. VIII), obortum semen spinae opprimunt, cum verbum Dei a memoria importunae terrenarum rerum sollicitudines expellunt. Dissolutis itaque gressibus in rete ambulant, qui dum mundum perfecte non deserunt, semetipsos gradiendo obligant, ne gradiantur. 40. Et sunt plerique qui non solum aliena non appetunt, verum etiam cuncta quae possederant in mundo derelinquunt, semetipsos despiciunt, nullam praesentis vitae gloriam requirunt, ab hujus mundi se actionibus separant, et pene quidquid prosperitatis arriserit calcant. Sed tamen adhuc vinculo carnalis cognationis obligati, dum amori propinquitatis indiscrete deserviunt, ad ea saepe per effectum cognationum redeunt, quae jam et cum proprio despectu subegerunt. Cumque plus quam necesse est carnis propinquos diligunt, retracti exterius, a cordis parente dividuntur. Nam saepe quosdam videmus, quantum ad proprium studium spectat, jam praesentis vitae desideria non habere, mundum et opere et professione reliquisse; sed tamen pro inordinatis affectibus propinquorum praetoria irrumpere, terrenarum rerum jurgiis vacare, libertatem intimae quietis relinquere, et mundi studia in se jam dudum destructa reparare. Quo itaque isti nisi in rete ambulant, quos a praesenti saeculo inchoata jam vitae perfectio solverat, sed inordinatus amor terrenae cognationis ligat? 41. Propinquos Dei causa aebemus despicere, odisse, nescire. — Qui enim districto studio, et non dissolutis gressibus aeternae sponsionis praemium sequuntur, sicut semetipsos pro divino amore despiciunt, sic cuncta, quibus se sentiunt praepediri, postponunt; et cum pro Deo necesse est ut quibus valent cunctis inserviant, pro Deo privata obsequia etiam propinquis negant. Hinc est enim quod quidam cum diceret: Permitte mihi prius ire et sepelire patrem meum (Matth. VIII, 21), Veritatis ore protinus audivit: Sine ut mortui sepeliant mortuos suos, tu autem vade, annuntia regnum Dei (Ibid., 22). Qua in re notandum est quia electus discipulus dum a parentis sepultura compescitur, hoc devotum quemque exhibere patri mortuo ex affectu carnali propter Dominum non licet, quod propter Dominum et exteris debet. Hinc rursum Veritas dicit: Si quis venit ad me, et non odit patrem suum, et matrem, et uxorem, et filios, et fratres, et sorores, adhuc autem et animam suam, non potest meus esse discipulus (Luc. XIV, 26). Quo in loco videlicet, dum propinquorum odio animae quoque nostrae odium subinfertur, patenter ostenditur quia sic propinquos, sicut nosmetipsos odio habere praecipimur, ut hos ad aeterna rapientes, eorumque carnalem gratiam cum praepedit postponentes, discamus temperata eos discretionis arte et convenienter diligere, et salubriter odio habere, quatenus sic sciat per amorem odium surgere, ut valeamus eos verius per odium amare. Hinc rursum per Moysen dicitur: Qui dixerit patri suo et matri suae, Nescio vos, et fratribus suis, Ignoro illos, et nescierunt filios suos, hi custodierunt eloquium tuum et pactum tuum, et servaverunt judicia tua (Deut. XXXIII, 9). Ille enim scire Deum familiarius appetit, qui prae amore pietatis nescire desiderat quos carnaliter scivit. 232 Gravi etenim damno scientia divina minuitur, si cum carnis notitia partitur. Extra cognatos ergo quisque ac proximos debet fieri, si vult parenti omnium verius jungi, quatenus eosdem quos propter Deum utiliter negligit tanto solidius diligat, quanto in eis affectum solubilem copulae carnalis ignorat. 42. Propinquis plus caeteris prodesse debemus, modo hinc noster ad Deum progressus nil retardetur. Qui debemus erga eos benigne affici, nec tamen ab itinere quod ad Deum ducit declinare. — Debemus quidem et temporaliter his quibus vicinius jungimur plus caeteris prodesse, quia et flamma admotis rebus incendium porrigit, sed hoc ipsum prius ubi nascitur incendit. Debemus copulam terrenae cognationis agnoscere; sed tamen hanc, cum cursum mentis praepedit, ignorare, quatenus fidelis animus in divino studio accensus, nec ea quae sibi sunt in infimis conjuncta despiciat, et, haec apud semetipsum recte ordinans, summorum amore transcendat. Solerti ergo cura providendum est ne carnis gratia subrepat, atque a recto itinere cordis gressum deflectat, ne vim superni amoris impediat, et surgentem mentem superimposito pondere deorsum premat. Sic etenim quisque propinquorum debet necessitatibus compati, ut tamen per compassionem non sinat vim suae intentionis impediri, ut affectus quidem mentis viscera repleat, sed tamen a spiritali proposito non avertat. Neque enim sancti viri ad impendenda necessaria propinquos carnis non diligunt, sed amore spiritalium ipsam in se dilectionem vincunt, quatenus sic eam discretionis moderamine temperent, ut per hanc in parvo saltem ac minimo a recto itinere non declinent. Quos bene nobis per significationem vaccae innuunt, quae, sub arca Domini ad montana tendentes, affectu simul et rigido sensu gradiuntur, sicut scriptum est: Tollentes duas vaccas quae lactabant vitulos, junxerunt ad plaustrum, vitulosque earum clauserunt domi, et posuerunt arcam Dei super plaustrum (I Reg. VI, 10). Et paulo post: Ibant in directum vaccae per viam quae ducit Bethsames, et itinere uno gradiebantur, pergentes et mugientes, et non declinantes neque ad dexteram, neque ad sinistram (Ibid., 12). Ecce enim, reclusis domi vitulis, vaccae quae sub arca Domini ad plaustrum religantur, gemunt et pergunt, dant ab intimis mugitus, et tamen ab itinere non demutant gressus. Amorem quidem per compassionem sentiunt, sed colla posterius non deflectunt. Sic sic necesse est ut incedere debeant qui, sacrae legis jugo suppositi, jam per internam scientiam Domini arcam portant, quatenus per hoc quod propinquorum necessitatibus condolent a coepto rectitudinis itinere non declinent. Bethsames quippe domus solis dicitur. Arca ergo Domini superposita Bethsames pergere est cum superna scientia ad aeternae lucis habitaculum propinquare. Sed tunc vere Bethsames tendimus, cum viam rectitudinis gradientes, ad vicina erroris latera nec pro affectu pignorum declinamus. Quorum nimirum gratia mentem nostram tenere debet, sed reflectere non debet, ne haec eadem mens aut si affectu non tangitur, dura sit; aut plus tacta, si inflectitur, remissa. — SENSUS MORALIS. 52. Pauperis, oppressi, ac stulti propter Deum qualis sit animus. — Beatus Job rerum damna pertulerat, malignorum spirituum percussionibus traditus dolores vulnerum sentiebat; sed, sapientem Dei stultitiam diligens, stultam mundi sapientiam mentis despectu calcaverat. Igitur contra mundi divites 236 pauper, contra potentes oppressus, contra sapientes stultus dicitur. Tria respondit, quia nec pauper eorum substantiam, nec oppressus adjutorium contra robustos, nec stultus doctrinam sapientiae carnalis quaerit. Sanctus etenim vir, quia mente super semetipsum rapitur, et pauper inopia non angustatur, et oppressus nihil patitur, et voluntarie stultus carnalem sapientiam non miratur. Hinc est enim quod oppressus alius pauper dicit: Aporiamur, sed non destituimur; persecutionem patimur, sed non derelinquimur; dejicimur, sed non perimus (II Cor. IV, 8). Hinc est quod sapientiam sanctae stultitiae insinuans, ait: Quae stulta sunt mundi, elegit Deus, ut confundat sapientes (I Cor. I, 27). Et: Si quis videtur inter vos sapiens in hoc saeculo, stultus fiat, ut sit sapiens (I Cor, III, 18). Hinc et gloriam oppressionis, et divitias desideratae paupertatis aperiens, dicit: Quasi morientes, et ecce vivimus; ut castigati, et non mortificati; quasi tristes, semper autem gaudentes; sicut egentes, multos autem locupletantes; tanquam nihil habentes, et omnia possidentes (II Cor. I, 19). 53. Sanctorum exterius oppressorum sublimitas. Et in arguendis potestatibus libertas. — Libet inter haec oculos mentis attollere, et electos Dei exterius oppressos quantae intrinsecus arci praesideant videre. Cuncta quippe quae foris eminent, occultis eorum obtutibus per despectum jacent. Nam, super se interius rapti, in alto animum figunt; et quaeque in hac vita patiuntur, quasi longe infra labentia atque a se aliena conspiciunt; atque, ut ita dixerim, dum mente extra carnem fieri decertant, pene ipsa quae tolerant ignorant. In horum profecto oculis quidquid temporaliter eminet altum non est. Nam, velut in magni vertice montis siti, praesentis vitae plana despiciunt, seque ipsos per spiritalem celsitudinem transcendentes, subjecta sibimet intus vident, quaeque per carnalem gloriam foris tument. Unde et nullis contra veritatem potestatibus parcunt; sed quos attolli per elationem conspiciunt, per spiritus auctoritatem premunt. Hinc est enim quod, a deserto Moyses veniens, Aegypti regem ex auctoritate aggreditur, dicens: Haec dicit Dominus Deus Hebraeorum: Usquequo non vis subjici mihi? Dimitte populum meum, ut sacrificet mihi (Exod. X, 3). Cui dum plagis pressus

Pharao diceret: Ite, sacrificate Deo vestro in terra ista (Exod. VIII, 25), aucta protinus auctoritate respondit: Non potest ita fieri; abominationes Aegyptiorum immolabimus Domino Deo nostro (Ibid., 26)? Hinc est quod peccantem regem Nathan aggreditur, cui prius similitudinem perpetratae praevar cationis objiciens, eumque reum per proprii judicii vocem tenens, protinus adjunxit, dicens: Tu es ille vir, qui fecisti hanc rem (II Reg. XII, 7). Hinc est quod vir Dei, ad destruendam idololatriam Samariam missus, Jeroboam rege super altare thura jaciente, non regem veritus, non formidine mortis pressus, contra altare intrepidus auctoritatem liberae vocis exercuit, dicens: Altare, altare, haec dicit Dominus Deus: Ecce filius nascetur domui David, Josias nomine, et immolabit super te sacerdotes excelsorum (III Reg. XIII). Hinc est quod Achab superbus, idolorum servitio subactus, cum increpare Eliam praesumeret, dicens: Tune es ille vir, qui conturbas Israel (III Reg. XVIII, 17)? Elias protinus superbi regis stultitiam, objurgationis liberae auctoritate percussit, dicens: Non ego turbavi Israel, sed tu et domus patris tui, qui dereliquistis 237 mandata Domini, et secuti estis Baalim. Hinc est quod Elisaeus, veram magistri celsitudinem sequens, Joram filium Achab ad se cum Josaphat rege venientem ex reatu perfidiae confudit, dicens: Quid mihi et tibi est? Vade ad prophetas patris tui et matris tuae (IV Reg. IV, 13). Et: Vivit Dominus exercituum, in cujus conspectu sto, quod si non vultum Josaphat regis Judae erubescerem, nec attendissem quidem te, nec respexissem (Ibid., 14). Hinc est quod isdem vir Naaman ad se cum equis et curribus venientem ante ostium domus fixit, et talentorum copia ac vestium fulto non occurrit; non januam domus aperuit, sed ut lavari septies in Jordane debuisset per nuntium jussit (IV Reg. V, 9, 10). Unde et isdem Naaman iratus recedebat dicens: Putabam quod egrederetur ad me (Ibid., 11). Hinc est quod Petrus, cum eum sacerdotes ac principes etiam per flagella saevientes in nomine Jesu loqui prohiberent, cum magna protinus auctoritate respondit, dicens: Si justum est in conspectu Dei vos potius audire quam Deum, judicate. Non enim possumus quae vidimus et audivimus non loqui (Act. IV, 19). Hinc est quod Paulus cum residentem contra veritatem sacerdotum principem cerneret, eumque minister illius alapa percussisset, non maledictum perturbatus intulit, sed repletus Spiritu libera voce prophetavit, dicens: Percutiet te Deus, paries dealbate. Et tu sedens judicans me secundum legem, et contra legem jubes me percuti (Ibid., 5)? Hinc est quod Stephanus contra vim persequentium auctoritatem vocis exerere nec moriturus expavit, dicens: Dura cervice et incircumcisi cordibus et auribus, vos Spiritui sancto resistitis, sicut patres vestri et vos (Act. VII, 51).. VERS. 25. — Quare detraxistis sermonibus veritatis, cum e vobis nullus sit qui possit arguere? 56. Mundus esse debet qui alios vult corrigere. — Mundus ipse esse a vitiis debet qui curat aliena corrigere, ut terrena non cogitet, ut desideriis 239 infimis non succumbat; quatenus tanto perspicacius aliis fugienda videat, quanto haec ipse per scientiam et vitam verius declinat, quia nequaquam pure maculam in membro considerat oculus quem pulvis gravat, et superjectas sordes tergere non valent manus quae lutum tenent. Quod, juxta antiquae translationis seriem, bene ad David erga exteriora bella laborantem per significationem divina vox innuit, cum dicit: Non tu aedificabis mihi templum, quia vir sanguinum es (II Reg. VII; XVI, 8; I Par. XXII, 8). Dei autem templum aedificat, qui corrigendis atque instituendis proximorum mentibus vacat. Templum quippe Dei nos sumus, qui ad veram vitam ex ejus inhabitatione construimur, Paulo attestante, qui ait: Templum Dei sanctum est, quod estis vos (I Cor. III, 17). Sed vir sanguinum templum Deo aedificare prohibetur, quia qui adhuc actis carnalibus incumbat necesse est ut instruere spiritaliter proximorum mentes erubescat. Bene ergo dicitur: Quare detraxistis sermonibus veritatis, cum e vobis nullus sit qui possit arguere? Ac si aperte diceretur: Qua temeritate audita reprehenditis, qui, percussionis meae causas ignorantes, adhuc reprehensibilia profertis. Sequitur:

CAPUT XVII.

VERS. 26. — Ad increpandum tantum eloquia concinnatis, et in ventum verba profertis. 57. Locutionum duo genera hominibus noxia. — Duo sunt genera locutionum importuna valde et noxia generi humano, unum quod curat etiam perversa laudare, aliud quod studet semper etiam recta corripere. Illud deorsum cum fluvio ducitur, hoc vero contra fluenta veritatis obserare et alveum conatur. Illud metus premit, hoc elatio erigit. Illud gratiam ex favoribus captat, hoc ira ut ex certamine ostendatur exagitat. Illud in promptu subjacet, hoc semper e diverso tumet. Ex hujus ergo qualitate beatus Job amicos suos fuisse redarguit, cum dicit: Ad increpandum tantum eloquia concinnatis. Sed unde usque ad injustae increpationis audaciam pervenitur, protinus innotuit, cum subjunxit: Et in ventum verba profertis. In ventum enim verba proferre est otiosa dicere. Nam saepe dum ab otiosis verbis nequaquam lingua compescitur, ad temeritatem quoque stultae increpationis effrenatur. Quibusdam enim ruinae suae gradibus desidiosa mens in foveam lapsus impellitur. Nam dum otiosa verba cavere negligimus, ad noxia pervenimus, ut prius loqui aliena libeat, et postmodum detractionibus eorum vitam, de quibus loquitur, lingua mordeat, quandoque autem usque ad apertas contumelias erumpat. Hinc irarum seminantur stimuli, oriuntur rixae, accenduntur faces odiorum, pax tota exstinguitur cordium. Unde bene per Salomonem dicitur: Qui dimittit aquam caput est jurgiorum (Prov. XVII, 14). Aquam quippe dimittere est linguam in fluxum eloquii relaxare. Quo contra et in bonam partem asserit, dicens: Aqua profunda, verba ex ore viri (Prov. XVIII, 4). Qui ergo dimittit aquam, caput est jurgiorum, quia qui linguam non refrenat, concordiam dissipat. Unde e diverso scriptum est: Qui imponit stulto silentium, iras mitigat (Prov. XXVI, 10). Plerumque autem nimis taciti cum nonnulla injusta patiuntur, eo in acriorem dolorem prodeunt, quo ea quae sustinent non loquuntur. Nam si illatas molestias lingua tranquille diceret, a conscientia dolor emanaret. Vulnera enim clausa plus cruciant, quia cum putredo, quae intrinsecus fervet, ejicitur, ad salutem dolor aperitur. Plerumque nimis taciti dum quorumdam mala respiciunt, et tamen in silentio 241 linguam premunt, quasi conspectis vulneribus usum medicaminis subtrahunt. Eo enim mortis auctores fiunt, quo virus quod poterant ejicere loquendo noluerunt. Unde et immoderatum silentium si in culpa non esset, propheta non diceret: Vae mihi quia tacui (Isai. VI, 5). 61. Lingua per disciplinam retineatur, et ex necessitate laxetur. — Quid ergo inter haec, nisi studiose lingua sub magni moderaminis libratione frenanda est, non insolubiliter obliganda, ne aut laxata in vitium defluat, aut restricta etiam ab utilitate torpescat? Hinc namque per quemdam dicitur: Sapiens tacebit usque ad tempus (Eccli. XX, 7), ut nimirum cum opportunum considerat, postposita censura silentii, loquendo quae congruunt, in usum se utilitatis impendat. Hinc Salomon ait: Tempus tacendi, et tempus loquendi (Eccle. III, 7). Discrete quippe vicissitudinum pensanda sunt tempora, ne aut cum restringi 242 lingua debet, per verba se inutiliter solvat; aut cum loqui utiliter potest, semetipsam pigre restringat. Quod bene Psalmista considerans brevi postulatione complexus est dicens: Pone, Domine, custodiam ori meo, et ostium circumstantiae labiis meis (Psal. CXLIX, 3). Ostium namque aperitur et clauditur. Qui ergo ori suo nequaquam poni obstaculum, sed ostium petiit, aperte docuit quod et per disciplinam retineri lingua debeat, et ex necessitate laxari, quatenus os discretum et congruo tempore vox aperiat, et rursum congruo taciturnitas claudat. Quod quia vel amici beati Job, vel omnes haeretici, quorum hi speciem tenent, servare nesciunt, in ventum verba proferre perhibentur, quia nimirum dicta quae discretionis pondus non solidat aura levitatis portat.

LIBER OCTAVUS.

Postremam capitis sexti partem, a 27 versu, et cum septimo totum octavum, enarrat. In hac porro enarratione a versu 11 capitis octavi ad finem usque, de hypocrisis vitio copiose edisserit.

CAPUT PRIMUM.

241 1. Job humilitas et amor in persecutores. Quo Ecclesiae charitas erga haereticos adumbratur. — Praecedenti jam libello tractavimus, quod beatus Job vim nobis humilitatis suae innotescit, dicens: CAP. VI, VERS. 27. — Super pupillum irruitis, et subvertere nitimini amicum vestrum. Quantae namque infirmitatis se perpendat insinuat, quem pupillum vocat; quia vero ab amore recedere etiam laesa charitas nescit, et subverti velle se queritur, et tamen amicum se esse testatur. Cujus verba, ut saepe jam diximus, sic eidem specialiter congruunt, ut tamen per haec ex prophetico spiritu etiam sententia fidelis populi, ex voce Ecclesiae universalis, exprimatur, qui haereticorum contrarietatem tolerans, et infirmum se per humilitatem conspicit, et tamen a servandae dilectionis magnitudine non recedit. Sanctae quippe Ecclesiae populus, quia mortui patris est filius, pupillus non incongrue dicitur; cujus resurgentis vitam jam quidem per fidem sequitur, sed necdum per speciem contemplatur. Super pupillum vero haeretici irruunt, cum humilitatem fidelis populi importunis falsisque allegationibus affligunt. Et tamen amicus est quem nituntur evertere, quia fidelis Dei populus ipsos quoque quos persequentes tolerat amando non desinit ad veritatem vocare. Sed inter haec sciendum est quia sancti viri nec sustinere falsa per infirmitatem metuunt, nec laesi unquam a veritate conticescunt. Unde subditur:

CAPUT II.

VERS. 28. — Verumtamen quod coepistis explete; praebete aurem et videte an mentiar. 2. Charitati verae contra adversarios adesse debent patientia et benignitas. — Quia enim adversa perpeti non timet, dicat: Verumtamen quod coepistis, explete. Quia vero ipsis suis persecutoribus veritatis praedicamenta non subtrahit, adjungat: Praebete aurem, et videte an mentiar. Ac si aperte diceret: Nec ante illatas molestias trepido, nec ingratis auditoribus correptionis adjutoria abscondo, quia et malis pressus exerceor, et ipsis meis persecutoribus 242 benigne impensus cresco. Mens quippe sanctorum in hoc tentationum praelio et munita patientiae clypeo, et gladiis amoris accincta, ad perferenda mala sumit fortitudinem, et ad rependenda bona exerit benignitatem, quatenus et odiorum tela potenter excipiat, et amoris jacula valenter reddat. Nequaquam quippe ad bella armatus pergit qui aut clypeum sumens, gladiis non utitur, aut utens gladiis clypeo non munitur. Unde et miles Dei, adversitatis bello deprehensus, et scutum patientiae debet anteferre, ne pereat; et ad praedicandum promptus amoris inferre jacula, ut vincat. Cujus armaturae summam Paulus breviter insinuat, dicens: Charitas patiens est, benigna est (I Cor. XIII, 4). Cum vero unum ex utroque defuerit, charitas non est, si, videlicet, malos aut absque benignitate tolerans, non amat, aut rursum, sese sine patientia exhibens, negligit tolerare quos amat. Ut ergo a nobis charitas vera teneatur, necesse est quatenus et benignitati patientia, et rursum patientiae benignitas suffragetur, ut magnum quoddam in corde nostro aedificium construens, et benignitatis arcem patientia solidet, et patientiae fundata aedificia benignitas exornet. Beatus igitur Job promptus ad patientiam dicat: Verumtamen quod coepistis, explete; benignitate praeditus adjungat: Praebete aurem, et videte an mentiar. 3. Ecclesia errantes studet rationibus revocare. — Quia vero sancta Ecclesia ex magisterio humilitatis instituta, recta quae errantibus dicit, non quasi ex auctoritate praecipit, sed ex ratione persuadet, bene nunc dicitur: Videte, an mentiar. Ac si aperte dicat: Ea quae assero nequaquam mihi ex auctoritate credite, sed an vera sint ex ratione pensate. Quae et si quando dicit quod ratione comprehendi non valet, ne de occultis humana ratio quaeri debeat, rationabiliter suadet. Sed saepe haeretici, dum occasionem ratiocinationis accipiunt, ad jurgia contentionis effrenantur. Unde et apte mox subditur:

CAPUT III.

VERS. 29. — 243 Respondete, quaeso, absque contentione. 4. Haeretici rixas, non rationes exquirunt. — Neque enim haeretici inquisitionibus suis veritatem conantur assequi, sed victores videri. Cumque foris ostendi sapientes appetunt, intus per stultitiam elationis suae vinculis ligantur. Unde fit ut contentionum certamina exquirant, et de Deo, qui pax nostra est, loqui pacfice nesciant, atque ex pacis negotio rixae inventores fiant. Quibus bene per Paulum dicitur: Si quis autem videtur esse contentiosus, nos talem consuetudinem non habemus, neque Ecclesia Dei (I Cor. XI, 16). Recte autem subditur:

CAPUT IV.

IBID. — Et loquentes id quod justum est, judicate. 5. Nil inconsulte loquendum. — Is namque qui loquitur, dum de verbis suis auditoris sententiam exspectat, quasi ejus judicio supponitur a quo auditur. Qui igitur in dictis suis reprobari metuit, ipse prius debet examinare quod dicit, quatenus inter cor et linguam aequus quidam discretusque arbiter sedeat, subtiliter pensans, si recta verba cor offerat, quae, utiliter suscipiens, ad auditorum judicium lingua perducat. Beatus igitur Job sua contra amicos agens, sed contra haereticos nostra denuntians, praecipitationem loquentium reprehendat, atque ad eorum mentem verba colligat, dicens: Loquentes id quod justum est, judicate. Ac si aperte diceret: Si in eo quod ad nos egressum locutionis exitis, reprehendi non vultis, intus justitiae libram tenete, ut tanto foris quod dicitur ex veritatis pondere placeat, quanto hoc interius trutina discretionis pensat. Et quia hi erga aliena dicta rectum judicium exerunt, qui judicare prius propria sciunt, postquam dixit, Loquentes id quod justum est, judicate, apte mox subdit:

CAPUT V.

VERS. 30. — Et non invenietis in lingua mea iniquitatem, nec in faucibus meis stultitia personabit. 6. Dictorum suorum censor rectius judicat de alienis. Prius falsa refellenda, quam vera doceantur. — Ac si aperte diceret: Si subtilius vestra perpenditis, verius aliena pensatis, et cum rectum coeperit esse quod dicitis, justum cognoscetis quod auditis. Nequaquam quippe mea vobis lingua stultitiam resonat, si a vestra conscientia non procedat. Sic sancta Ecclesia studet prius assertiones hostium falsas ostendere, et tunc praedicamenta veritatis aperire, quia cum recta se tenere aestimant, recta quae audiunt contumaciter impugnant. Ante ergo necesse est ut errorem suum haeretici sentiant, ne auditae veritati contradicant, quia et camporum sentes si arator vomeris scissione non eruit, terra accepta semina in segetem non producit; et cum putredinem medicus vulneris apertione non ejicit, nequaquam in loco putredinis sana caro coalescit. Prius ergo perversa destruens, dicat: Loquentes id quod justum est judicate; post autem recta insinuans, adjungat: Et non invenietis in lingua mea iniquitatem, nec in faucibus meis stultitia personabit. [Vet. III.] Solent autem haeretici alia aperte dicere, alia in occultis tenere. Per linguam quippe aperta locutio, per fauces vero occulta tractatio designatur. 7. Ecclesia non alia aperte profert, alia celat, haereticorum more. — Sanctae ergo Ecclesiae nec in lingua iniquitas, nec stultitia in faucibus resonat, quia ea quae per publicam locutionem praedicat, etiam per intimam fidem servat; nec in aperto aliud docet, atque in occultis aliud retinet, sed et quod sentit 244 loquendo ejicit, et quod loquitur vivendo custodit; ac de sapientiae supernae convivio quidquid per linguam praedicationis emanat, hoc per fauces tacitae exspectationis degustat. Sed beatus Job unum scilicet membrum universalis Ecclesiae, sua insinuans, atque electorum omnium corda manifestans, omne quod sentit aperiat, ut mentis ejus rectitudinem attestatio locutionis innotescat. Sequitur:

CAPUT VI.

CAP. VII, VERS. 1. — Militia est vita hominis super terram. 8. Vita nostra, et militia et tentatio eodem sensu. Ipsa sibi tentatio est. — Hoc in loco translatione veteri nequaquam militia vita hominis, sed tentatio vocatur. Sed si utriusque verbi sensus aspicitur, diversum quidem est quod exterius resonat, sed unum eumdemque concorditer intellectum format. Quid enim nisi pugna contra malignos spiritus, nomine tentationis exprimitur? Et quid appellatione militiae, nisi contra hostes exercitium designatur? Tentatio itaque ipsa militia est, quia dum contra malignorum spirituum insidias vigilat, in bellorum procinctu procul dubio exsudat. Notandum vero, quod haec eadem vita hominis non tentationem habere dicitur, sed ipsa tentatio esse perhibetur. Sponte quippe a statu conditionis lapsa, et corruptionis suae putredini subdita, dum sibi ex semetipsa molestias gignit, hoc est jam facta quod tolerat. Quia enim statum mentis inclinata deseruit, quid in se nisi motum varietatis invenit? Unde nunc etsi ad summa appetenda se erigit, mutabilitatis lubricae impulsu protinus ad semetipsam cadit. Vult in contemplatione stare, sed non valet. Cogitationis gressum figere nititur, sed infirmitatis suae lapsibus enervatur. Quae nimirum mutabilitatis suae onera quia volens expetiit, nolens portat. Quietus homo possidere carnem potuit, si bene ab auctore conditus, possideri voluisset. Cumque se erigere contra conditorem studuit, in semetipso protinus carnis contumeliam invenit. Sed quia cum culpa simul ab origine etiam poena propagatur, inserto infirmitatis vitio nascimur, et quasi nobiscum hostem deducimus, quem cum labore superamus. Ipsa ergo hominis vita tentatio est, cui ex semetipsa nascitur unde perimatur. Quae etsi semper ex virtute succidit, quod ex infirmitate generat, semper tamen ex infirmitate generat, quod ex virtute succidat. 9. Quot modis tentemur; qui tentationi uni succedat altera. — Sic itaque humana vita tentatio est, ut etsi jam ab iniquitatis perpetratione compescitur, in ipsis tamen bonis operibus, modo malorum memoria, modo seductionis caligine, modo intentionis suae interruptione fuscetur. Alius namque a luxuria carnem jam refrenat, sed tamen adhuc luxuriae phantasmata tolerat, quia quae volens fecit, horum invitus meminit, et poenam sustinet, quod voluptatem putavit. Quia vero ad devictam culpam retrahi metuit, ventrem mirae abstinentiae vigore restringit, vultusque ex abstinentia pallescit; cumque in facie pallor aspicitur, reverenda ab hominibus vita laudatur; moxque inanis gloria ad abstinentis animum cum verbis favoris venit, quam concussa mens dum subjicere non valet, eum per quem venerat tergere a facie pallorem quaerit; sicque fit ut, infirmitatis nexibus ligata, aut pallorem abstinentiae fugiens, iterum per alimenta subdi luxuriae 245 metuat, aut, impulsum luxuriae per abstinentiam superans, pallorem suum inani gloriae militare pertimescat. Alius, lapsum superbiae superans, toto jam desiderio statum humilitatis apprehendit; cumque superbientes quosdam usque ad oppressionem innocentium erumpere conspicit, zeli excitatione succensus, postponere aliquatenus cogitur quod decrevit, vim rectitudinis exerit, pravisque non mansuetudine, sed auctoritate contradicit. Unde plerumque fit ut aut humilitatis studio zelum rectitudinis deserat, aut rursum zelo rectitudinis turbet humilitatis studium quod tenebat. Cumque servari simul et zeli auctoritas, et propositionis humilitas vix possit, sibimetipsi homo ex perturbatione incognitus redditur, ita ut vehementer ambigat, ne apud seductum animum aut superbia se auctoritatem zeli insinuet, aut torpor pavidus humilitatem fingat. Alius, quanta sit fallaciae culpa considerans, munire se arce veritatis decernit, ut ex ore jam falsus sermo non prodeat, seseque funditus a mendacii transgressione disjungat. Sed fit plerumque ut cum verum dicitur, vita proximi gravetur; cumque ingerere alteri laesionem metuit, ad hoc quod dudum presserat fallaciae vitium, quasi ex studio pietatis redit; sicque fit ut etsi malitia mentem non teneat, in ea tamen veritatis radium umbra mendacii obscuret. Unde et saepe quia percontatus quisque conticescere non valet, aut, falsum dicens, suam mentem trucidat, aut, vera loquens, proximi vitam gravat. Alius, amore conditoris sui excitatus, a terrenis cogitationibus mentem curat assidua oratione suspendere, atque hanc in secreta quietis intimae securitate collocare; sed in ipso suae orationis ascensu, dum clevari ab infimis nititur, infimorum phantasmate reverberatur; atque ad intuendam lucem mentis oculus tenditur, sed ex corporeo usu, surgentibus rerum terrenarum imaginibus, obscuratur. Unde fit plerumque ut intendentis animus, ipsa sua infirmitate fatigatus, aut, orationem deserens, desidia torpeat, aut, si diu in oratione permanserit, ante oculos ejus obortarum imaginum caligo densescat. Sciendum quoque est quod mercenarius sollicite curat inspicere ne unquam dies vacuus labatur ab opere, et exspectatus finis temporis ne inanis veniat ad remunerationem. In laboris namque studio conspicit quid percipere in tempore remunerationis possit. Nam cum opus crescit, praemii fiducia proficit; cum vero opus torpuerit, spes a remuneratione 247 lassescit. Unde et electus quisque vitam suam quasi mercenarii dies pensans, tanto fidentius spe tendit ad praemium, quanto nunc robustius perdurat ad laboris incrementum; qui sit decursus praesentis temporis pensat, dies cum operibus numerat, ne a labore vacua transeant vitae momenta formidat; adversis gaudet, passione reficitur, moerore refovetur, quia subsequentis vitae praemiis tanto se remunerari largius conspicit, quanto pro amore illius quotidianis se mortibus verius impendit. Hinc namque est quod cives supernae patriae conditori ejus Psalmistae vocibus dicunt: Propter te morte afficimur tota die (Psal. XLIII, 22). Hinc Paulus ait: Quotidie morior propter vestram gloriam, fratres (I Cor. XVI, 31). Hinc iterum dicit: Ob quam causam haec patior, sed non confundor; scio enim cui credidi, et certus sum quia potens est depositum meum servare in illum diem (II Tim. I, 12). Sancti igitur viri quot labores nunc veritati commendantes exhibent, tot jam remunerationis suae pignora intra spei cubiculum clausa tenent. Sed gravis nunc sentitur aestus in opere, ut quandoque refrigerium percipiatur ex quiete. Unde et apte mox subditur:

CAPUT VIII.

VERS. 2, 3. — Sicut servus desiderat umbram, et sicut mercenarius praestolatur finem operis sui, sic et ego habui menses vacuos, et noctes laboriosas enumeravi mihi. 13. Requiem aeternam desiderat. Servus est, non liber, quoad corruptioni subjacet. — Umbram quippe servo desiderare est post tentationis aestum, sudoremque operis, aeterni refrigerii requiem quaerere. Hanc namque umbram servus ille desideraverat qui dicebat: Sitivit anima mea ad Deum vivum; quando veniam, et parebo ante faciem Dei (Psal. XLI, 3)? Et rursum: Heu me! quod incolatus meus prolongatus est (Psal. CXIX, 5). Qui quasi a labore acri aestum fugiens, atque ad obtinendam requiem refrigerii tegmen quaerens, iterum dicit: Ingrediar in locum tabernaculi admirabilis, usque ad domum Dei (Psal. XLI, 5). Hanc umbram comprehendere Paulus anhelabat, desiderium habens dissolvi, et cum Christo esse (Philip. I, 23). Ad hanc umbram ex desiderii jam perfectione pervenerant qui dicebant: Nos qui portavimus pondus diei et aestus (Matth. XX, 12). Bene autem qui desiderare umbram dicitur, servus vocatur, quia electus quisque quousque infirmitatis conditione constringitur, sub dominantis corruptionis jugo, quasi sub aestus anxietate retinetur. Qui nimirum cum corruptione exutus fuerit, tunc sibimetipsi liber et tranquillus innotescit. Unde et recte etiam per Paulum dicitur: Ipsa creatura liberabitur a servitute corruptionis, in libertatem gloriae filiorum Dei (Rom. VIII, 21). Electos enim nunc poena corruptionis aggravat, sed tunc incorruptionis gloria exaltat; et quantum ad praesentis necessitatis pondera nunc in Dei filiis de libertate nihil ostenditur, tantum vero ad subsequentis libertatis gloriam, tunc in Dei famulis de servitute nihil apparebit. Creatura ergo, servitute corruptionis exuta, et dignitate libertatis accepta, in filiorum Dei gloriam vertitur, quia, unita Deo per spiritum, quasi hoc ipsum quod creatura est transisse ac subegisse declaratur. Sed qui adhuc umbram desiderat servus est, quia quousque aestum tentationum tolerat, jugum miserae conditionis portat. Ubi apte subditur: Et sicut mercenarius praestolatur finem operis sui. 248 Potest etiam non inconvenienter intelligi quod sanctus quisque menses vacuos sicut mercenarius ducit, quia laborem jam sustinet, sed praemium necdum tenet; hoc tolerat, illud exspectat. Noctes vero laboriosas enumerat, quia adversitates sibi praesentis temporis sese in virtutibus exercendo coacervat. Nam si proficere in mente non appetit, minus fortasse aspera quae mundi sunt sentit. 16. Ecclesia in membris infirmis menses vacuos, in fortibus noctes laboriosas habet. Labor pro saeculo inanis ex fine dignoscitur. — Quae tamen sententia si ad vocem sanctae 249 Ecclesiae ducitur, intellectus ejus paulo subtilius indagatur. Ipsa quippe vacuos menses habet, quae in infirmis suis membris terrenas actiones absque vitae praemio defluentes sustinet. Ipsa noctes laboriosas enumerat, quae in membris fortibus multiplices tribulationes portat. In hac etenim vita quaedam laboriosa sunt, quaedam vacua, quaedam vero vacua simul et laboriosa. Amore quippe conditoris praesentis vitae tribulationibus exerceri laboriosum quidem est, sed vacuum non est. Amore autem saeculi voluptatibus solvi vacuum quidem est, sed non laboriosum. Amore vero ejusdem saeculi adversa aliqua perpeti et vacuum simul est et laboriosum, quia et ex adversitate mens afficitur, et remunerationis praemio non repletur. In his itaque sancta Ecclesia qui in ea jam positi adhuc voluptatibus defluunt, et proinde fructu boni operis non ditantur, menses vacuos ducit, quia vitae tempora sine retributionis munere expendit. In his vero qui, aeternis desideriis dediti mundi hujus adversa patiuntur, laboriosas noctes enumerat, quia tribulationum tenebras quasi in caligine vitae praesentis portat. In his autem qui et transeuntem mundum diligunt, et tamen ejus contrarietate fatigantur, simul menses vacuos et noctes laboriosas tolerat, quia eorum vitam et retributio subsequens nulla remunerat, et praesens tribulatio angustat. Recte autem nequaquam dies, sed in eis menses vacuos habere se perhibet. Mensium quippe nomine dierum collectio et summa signatur. Per diem ergo unaquaeque actio exprimitur, per menses autem actionum finis innuitur. Et saepe cum in hoc mundo aliquid agimus, intenta spei alacritate suspensi, hoc ipsum quod agimus vacuum non putamus; sed postquam ad actionum terminum pervenimus, non obtinentes quae appetimus, laborasse nos in vacuum dolemus. Non solum igitur dies, sed et menses vacuos ducimus, cum nos in terrenis actionibus sine fructu laborasse, non ex actionum principio, sed fine pensamus. Cum enim labores nostros adversitas sequitur, quasi vitae nostrae vacui menses arguuntur, quia ex completione actionum agnoscitur quam frustra in actionibus sudabatur. 17. De inani hoc labore Ecclesia ingemiscit. — Sed quia in sacro eloquio nonnunquam nox pro ignorantia ponitur, Paulo attestante, qui venturam vitam scientibus discipulis dicit: Omnes vos filii lucis estis, et filii diei; non sumus noctis neque tenebrarum (I Thess. V, 5); quibus praemisit: Vos autem, fratres, non estis in tenebris, ut vos dies illa tanquam fur comprehendat (Ibid., 4); potest hoc in loco ex eorum persona vox sanctae Ecclesiae accipi, qui post ignorantiae suae caliginem ad amorem rectitudinis redeunt, et, veritatis radiis illustrati, fletibus diluunt quod erraverunt. Illuminatus etenim quisque respicit quam turpe fuerit quod praesentis vitae amore laboravit.. In eis ergo sancta Ecclesia, in quibus ad vitam revertitur laborem suum aestuanti servo et desideranti finem mercenario comparat, dicens: Sicut servus desiderat umbram et sicut mercenarius praestolatur finem operis sui: sic et ego habui menses vacuos, et noctes laboriosas enumeravi mihi. In comparatione etenim duo sunt quae praemisit; in expressione etiam fatigationis duo protinus subdidit. Ad aestuantem quippe menses vacuos reddidit, quia quo magis aeternum 250 refrigerium quaeritur, eo magis conspicitur quam vacue pro vita ista laboratur. Ad praestolantem vero laboriosas noctes subintulit, quia quo magis ex termino operis praemium quod assequamur inspicimus, eo magis ingemiscimus diu nos nescisse quod quaerimus. Unde et ipsa poenitentis cura vigilanter exprimitur, ut laboriosas noctes enumerasse diceretur, quia quanto verius ad Deum revertimur, tanto subtilius labores, quos per ignorantiam in hoc mundo pertulimus, dolendo pensamus. Nam quo unicuique plus dulce fit quod de aeternis desiderat, eo ei magis grave ostenditur quod pro praesentium amore tolerabat. Si vero ad solam historiam sequentia verba pensantur, per haec procul dubio animus dolentis exprimitur qualiter per diversos motus desiderii, moestitia impellente, variatur. Nam subditur.

CAPUT IX.

VERS. 4. — Si dormiero, dicam: Quando surgam? et rursum exspectabo vesperam. 18. Dolens praesentia despicit, exspectat futura. — In nocte quippe dies quaeritur, in die vespera desideratur, quia nimirum dolor non permittit placere quae adsunt; cumque mentem per experimentum praesentium afficit, semper hanc quasi consolante desiderio ad alia per exspectationem tendit. Sed quia et afflicta mens per appetitum ducitur, et tamen dolor ejus etiam seductus desideriis non finitur, recte subjungitur, — IBID.: — Replebor doloribus usque ad tenebras. Causa autem ejusdem doloris exprimitur, cum protinus subinfertur:

CAPUT X.

VERS. 5. — Induta est caro mea putredine, et sordibus pulveris, cutis mea aruit, et contracta est. 19. Hominis lapsi instabilitas. — Sed haec subtilius congruentiusque disserimus, si ad praemissae expositionis ordinem redeamus. Somno namque torpor otii, surrectione autem exercitatio actionis exprimitur. Vesperae quoque nomine, quia somno congruit, rursus otii desiderium figuratur. Sancta vero Ecclesia quousque vitam corruptionis ducit, flere mutabilitatis suae damna non desinit. Ad hoc namque homo conditus fuerat, ut, stante mente, in arcem se contemplationis erigeret, et nulla hunc corruptio a conditoris sui amore declinaret. Sed in eo quod ab ingenita standi soliditate voluntatis pedem ad culpam movit, a dilectione conditoris in semetipsum protinus cecidit. Amorem vero Dei, veram scilicet stationis arcem deserens, nec in se consistere potuit, quia, lubricae mutabilitatis impulsu, infra se per corruptionem proruens, etiam a semetipso dissensit. Qui nunc, quia conditionis suae soliditate non figitur, alternantis semper desiderii motu variatur, ut et quietus actionem desideret, et occupatus ad otium anhelet. Quia enim fixa mens stare cum potuit noluit, stare jam non valet etiam cum volet. Conditoris quippe sui contemplationem deserens, salutis suae fortitudinem perdidit, et quolibet posita, semper aegra alium locum quaerit. Varietatem ergo humanae mentis exprimens, dicat: Si dormiero, dicam: Quando surgam? et rursum exspectabo vesperam. Ac si aperte diceret: Nihil perceptum menti sufficit, quia ipsum qui vere sufficere potuit amisit. In somno namque surrectionem desidero, in surrectione vesperam exspecto, quia et quietus exercitium actionis appeto, et exercitatus otium quietis quaero. 251 Ut enim paulo superius diximus, soliditatem ingenitam voluntarie homo deseruit, et sese in corruptionis voraginem mersit; unde nunc vel per immunda opera labitur, vel per cogitationes illicitas foedatur. Ut enim ita dixerim, culpae suae poenaliter subdita, ipsa jam natura nostra facta est extra naturam; et remissa usque ad perversa opera ducitur, restricta autem perversorum operum importuna cogitatione fuscatur. Per expletionem ergo actionis illicitae carnem putredo afficit, per levitatem vero cogitationis improbae quasi ante oculos pulvis surgit. Consentiendo vitiis putredine atterimur, vitiorum vero imagines in corde tolerando sordibus pulveris foedamur. Ait ergo: Induta est caro mea putredine et sordibus pulveris. Ac si aperte diceret: Carnalem vitam, quam patior, aut tabes lubricae operationis polluit, aut ex vitiorum memoria caligo miserae cogitationis premit. 23. Ecclesiae caro in lubricis membris putrescit, in quaerentibus terram sordescit. — Quod tamen si ex voce Ecclesiae universalis accipimus, aliquando hanc procul dubio carnis putredine, aliquando autem gravari sordibus pulveris invenimus. Multi quippe in ea sunt qui, dum amori carnis inserviunt, fetore luxuriae computrescunt. Et sunt nonnulli qui a voluptate quidem carnis abstinent, sed tamen tota mente in terrenis actibus jacent. Dicat ergo sancta Ecclesia unius membri sui vocibus, dicat quid de utroque genere hominum tolerat: Induta est caro mea putredine et sordibus pulveris. Ac si aperte insinuet, dicens: Sunt plerique qui mihi per fidem membra sunt, sed tamen sana vel munda per actionem non sunt, quia aut, victi desideriis turpibus, ad corruptionis putredinem defluunt, aut, terrenis actibus dediti, pulvere consperguntur. In illis enim quos lubricos tolero carnem videlicet putrescentem gemo, in istis autem quos terram quaerentes patior quid aliud quam foedatam pulvere porto? 24. Ecclesiae cutis qui solis exterioribus curis inserviunt: unde arescat. — Unde et apte simul de utrisque subjungitur: Cutis mea aruit, et contracta est. In sanctae quippe Ecclesiae corpore hi qui solis exterioribus curis inserviunt, congrue cutis vocantur. Quae nimirum cutis arescendo attrahitur, quia mentes carnalium, dum praesentia diligunt, et quasi juxta posita concupiscunt, ad futura tendi per longanimitatem nolunt. Qui dum internae spei pinguedinem negligunt, ut attrahantur arefiunt, quia si eorum corda desperatio non siccaret, nequaquam 253 aestus haec pusillanimitatis attraheret. Hanc namque attractionem Psalmista formidaverat cum, siccitatem mentis metuens, dicebat: Sicut adipe et pinguedine repleatur anima mea (Psal. LXII, 6). Adeps quippe pinguedinis animam replet, cum hanc contra praesentium desideriorum aestum supernae spei infusio refovet. Cutis ergo arescens attrahitur cum cor rebus exterioribus deditum, atque ex desperatione siccatum, in auctoris sui amorem non tenditur, sed in semetipso, ut ita dixerim, rugosa cogitatione replicatur. 25. Amore praesentium non tenetur, qui vitae hujus brevitatem recogitat. — Pensandum vero est quod carnales mentes idcirco praesentia diligunt, quia vita carnis quam fugitiva sit minime perpendunt. Nam si velocitatem transitus ejus aspicerent, hanc etiam prosperantem minime amarent. Sancta autem Ecclesia in electis suis quotidie quantus sit rebus exterioribus cursus conspicit, et idcirco in intimis pedem sollicitae intentionis figit. Unde et apte subditur:

CAPUT XI.

VERS. 6. — Dies mei velocius transierunt quam a texente tela succiditur. 26. Tempus carnis telae apte comparatur. — Congrua valde similitudine tempus carnis telae comparatur, quia sicut tela filis, sic vita mortalis diebus singulis proficit; sed quo ad augmentum proficit, eo ad incisionem tendit, quia, sicut et superius diximus (Lib. VII, n. 30), cum tempora percepta praetereunt, ventura breviantur, et de universo vitae spatio eo fiunt pauciora quae veniunt, quo multa sunt quae transierunt. Tela quippe infra supraque ligata, duobus lignis innectitur, ut texatur; sed quo inferius texta involvitur, eo superius texenda deplicatur; et unde se ad augmentum multiplicat, inde fit minus quod restat. Sic nimirum vitae nostrae tempora et transacta quasi inferius involvimus, et ventura a superiori deplicamus, quia quo plus fiunt praeterita, minus esse incipiunt futura. Sed quia nec tela ad expressionem nostri temporis sufficit, nam ejus quoque festinationem vitae nostrae velocitas transit, recte nunc dicitur: Dies mei velocius transierunt, quam a texente tela succiditur. Tela quippe tarditatem provectus habet, vita autem praesens moram defectus non habet. In illa namque cum laborantis manus figitur, adventus terminus elongatur; in ista vero, quia tempus semper desinens indesinenter consumimus, ad finem nostri itineris etiam quiescendo pervenimus, et per cursum nostri transitus etiam dormientes imus. Electi igitur, quia praesentis vitae momenta decurrere sub festinatione conspiciunt, nequaquam in hoc tantae mobilitatis itinere cordis intentionem figunt. Unde et apte protinus subditur: IBID. — Et consumpti sunt absque ulla spe. 27. Electi mortem cogitant etiam sani, reprobi nequidem cum imminet. — Reproborum mens erga dies vitae praesentis tanto amore constringitur, ut sic semper hic appetant vivere, quatenus, si valeant, vivendi cursum desiderent nunquam finire. Cogitare quippe ventura despiciunt, spem totam in rebus transeuntibus ponunt, habere nulla nisi quae praetereunt concupiscunt. Cumque nimis transeuntia cogitant, et mansura nullatenus sperant, sic caecitate 254 insensibili cordis oculus clauditur, ut aeternae luci nullatenus intendatur. Unde fit ut saepe jam corpus molestia quatiat, et vicina mors virtutem vitalis spiritus incidat, nec tamen curare quae mundi sunt desinant. Jamque eos ultor ad judicium pertrahit; et tamen ipsi, ordinatione sollicita rebus transeuntibus occupati, nihil aliud cogitant nisi in hoc mundo adhuc qualiter vivant. Relinquendo omnia quasi possidendo disponunt, quia spes vivendi non frangitur, etiam cum vita terminatur. Jam ad judicium trahuntur per sententiam, et tamen adhuc habendis rebus inhaerent per curam. Dura etenim mente abesse mors longe creditur, etiam cum sentitur. Sicque a carne anima solvitur, ut erga praesentia immoderato amore se retinens, dum ad aeternum supplicium ducitur, hoc ipsum quoque nesciat quo ducitur; et deserens quae amare cum termino noluit, repente sine termino invenit quae nunquam praevidit. At contra rectorum mens ad aeternitatis intentionem tenditur, etiam cum praesens eam feliciter vita comitatur. Magna carnis salute utitur, nec tamen ejus fiducia animus retardatur. Nullum adhuc mortis articulum erumpit, et quasi praesentem hanc quotidie conspicit. Quia enim vita indesinenter labitur, spes ei vivendi funditus amputatur. Bene ergo de diebus praetereuntibus dicitur: Consumpti sunt absque ulla spe. Ac si aperte diceretur: Mentis fiduciam in praesenti vita non posui, quia omne quod praeterit calcando desperavi. Unde et mox apte subditur:

CAPUT XIII.

VERS. 7. — Memento quia ventus est vita mea. 28. Vita praesens, aeterna non attendentibus cara, attendentibus vilis. Vitae brevis consideratio, grata Deo est oblatio. — Hi etenim vitam carnis quasi permanentem diligunt, qui quanta sit vitae sequentis aeternitas non attendunt; cumque soliditatem perennitatis non considerant, exsilium patriam, tenebras lumen, cursum stationem putant, quia qui majora nesciunt, judicare de minimis nequaquam possunt. Ordo quippe judicii exigit ut quod examinare nitimur transcendamus. Si enim praeesse rebus omnibus animus non valet, nequaquam de his corta a quibus vincitur videt. Idcirco itaque mens reproba praesentis vitae curcum aestimare non sufficit, quia admirationi illius ex amore succumbit. Sancti autem viri, quo ad aeterna cor elevant, quam breve sit quod fine clauditur pensant; et eo eorum sensibus vilescit quod praeterit, quo intellectu radiante interlucet quod acceptum nunquam recedit; cumque infinitatem perennitatis aspiciunt, nequaquam jam pro magno desiderant quidquid finis angustat. Sed sublevata mens extra temporum terminos ducitur, etiam cum carne in tempore tenetur; et tanto altius finienda despicit, quanto verius infinita cognoscit. Sed haec ipsa humanae brevitatis consideratio auctori nostro magnae virtutis oblatio est. Unde recte nunc cum deprecatione immolatio ejusdem virtutis offertur, cum dicitur: Memento quia ventus est vita mea. Ac si aperte diceretur: Transeuntem velociter benignus respice, quia et tanto a te videri misericordius debeo, quanto ipse a consideratione brevitatis meae oculos non averto. Sed quia dum tempus 255 vitae praesentis absciditur, ad operationem promerendae veniae ulterius non reditur, recte subjungitur:

CAPUT XIV.

IBID. — Nec revertetur oculus meus ut videat bona. 29. Post mortem non est locus promerendae veniae. — Ad videnda bona exstincti oculus non redit, quia ad exhibenda recta opera exuta carne anima non recurrit. Hinc est quod dives quem inferni flamma cruciabat, quia semetipsum reparare operando non posset agnoverat; nam nequaquam sibi, sed relictis fratribus prodesse satagebat, dicens: Rogo te, pater Abraham, ut mittas eum in domum patris mei, habeo enim quinque fratres, ut testetur illis, ne et ipsi veniant in locum hunc tormentorum (Luc. XVI, 27). Solet namque moestum animum spes vel falsa refovere. Sed ut poenam suam reprobi gravius sentiant, et spem de venia amittunt. Unde, flammis ultricibus traditus, non sibi, ut diximus, sed opitulari fratribus concupivit, quia nunquam se ignium carere tormentis, adjuncto desperationis supplicio, agnovit. Hinc Salomon ait: Quodcunque potest manus tua facere, instanter operare, quia nec opus, nec ratio, nec scientia, nec sapientia erunt apud inferos, quo tu properas (Eccle. IX, 10). Nequaquam ergo ad videnda bona oculus revertetur, quia retributionem suam mens inveniens, ad operationis usum nullatenus revocatur. Quia igitur fugit omne quod cernitur, et mansura sunt quae sequuntur, bene beatus Job uno versu utraque complexus est, dicens: Memento quia ventus est vita mea, nec revertetur oculus meus ut videat bona. Cursum quippe praesentium contemplatus ait: Memento quia ventus est vita mea. Aeternitatem vero sequentium considerans adjunxit: Nec revertetur oculus meus ut videat bona. Ubi apte quoque universi humani generis a redemptionis munere destituti vocem protinus sumit, dicens:

CAPUT XV.

VERS. 8. — Nec aspiciet me visus hominis. 30. Tunc Christi gratia non liberat, quem nunc non reformat. — Visus quippe hominis est misericordia Redemptoris, quae insensibilitatis nostrae duritiam, cum respicit, emollit. Unde, teste quoque Evangelio, dicitur: Respexit Dominus Petrum, et recordatus est Petrus verbi quod dixerat Jesus; egressus foras, flevit amare (Luc. XXII, 61). Exutam vero carne animam nequaquam jam visus hominis aspicit, quia post mortem non liberat, quem ante mortem gratia ad veniam non reformat. Hinc etenim Paulus dicit: Ecce nunc tempus acceptabile, ecce nunc dies salutis (II Cor. VI, 2). Hinc Psalmista ait: Quoniam in saeculum misericordia ejus (Psal. CXVII, 1). Quia nimirum quem nequaquam modo misericordia eripit, sola post praesens saeculum justitia addicit. Hinc Salomon ait: Quia lignum in quocunque loco ceciderit, sive ad Austrum, sive ad Aquilonem, ibi erit (Eccle. XI, 3), quia cum humani casus tempore, sive sanctus, sive malignus spiritus egredientem animam claustra carnis acceperit, in aeternum secum sine ulla permutatione retinebit, ut nec exaltata ad supplicium proruat, nec mersa aeternis suppliciis, ultra ad remedium ereptionis ascendat. Vir igitur sanctus, humani generis damna considerans, quod a praesenti saeculo sine Redemptoris cognitione subtrahitur, atque in aeternis ignibus irreparabiliter sepelitur, et ejus vocem in se suscipiens, dicat: Nec aspiciet me visus hominis, quia 256 nimirum Redemptoris gratia, quem nunc non intuetur ut corrigat, tunc non respicit ut ab interitu abscondat. In judicium quippe Dominus veniens, peccatorem videt ut feriat, sed non videt ut ad largiendam salutis gratiam recognoscat; culpas examinat, et vitam pereuntium ignorat. Unde sanctus vir, cum se post praesentem vitam, respectu hominis videri non posse fateretur, apte mox subdidit:

CAPUT XVI.

IBID. — Oculi tui in me, et non subsistam. 31. Christus in judicio reprobos ad feriendum videbit, quos hic ad misericordiam impendendam non vidit. — Ac si aperte diceret: Districtus ad judicium veniens, et ad salvandum non vides, et ad feriendum vides, quia quem in praesenti vita dispensationis tuae miseratione non respicis, respiciendo, postmodum per justitiam exstinguis. Nunc enim peccator quisque Deum non metuit et vivit, blasphemat et proficit, quia scilicet misericors creator, quem exspectando vult corrigere, aspiciendo non vult punire, sicut scriptum est: Dissimulans peccata hominum propter poenitentiam (Sap. XI, 24). Sed tunc peccator cum respicitur non subsistit, quia cum districtus judex merita subtiliter inquirit, reus ad tormenta non sufficit. 32. Justi se perituros sciunt, si remota pietate a Deo judicentur. — Quamvis hoc etiam justorum voci congruit, quorum mens semper sollicita venturo examini intendit. Omne enim quod agunt metuunt, dum caute considerant qui ante quantum judicem stabunt. Intuentur potentiam illius magnitudinis, et pensant quanto reatu constricti sunt propriae infirmitatis. Enumerant mala proprii operis, et contra haec exaggerant bona conditoris. Considerant prava quam districte judicet, bona opera quam subtiliter penset, et perituros se absque ambiguitate praesciunt, si remota pietate judicentur, quia hoc ipsum quoque quod juste videmur vivere culpa est, si vitam nostram cum judicat, hanc apud se divina misericordia non excusat. Hinc enim in hoc eodem libro scriptum est: Astra non sunt munda in conspectu ejus (Job. XXV, 5), quia apud eum districte judicati, ipsi quoque maculas inquinationis habent, qui per munditiam sanctitatis lucent. Bene ergo dicitur: Oculi tui in me, et non subsistam. Ac si aperte justi voce diceretur: Si subtili examinatione discutior, perferendo judicio non assurgo, quia ad poenam vita non sufficit, si hanc immanitas justae retributionis premit. Bene autem ejusdem humani generis et culpa breviter, et poena subrogatur, cum protinus dicitur:

CAPUT XVII.

VERS. 9. — Sicut consumitur nubes, et pertransit, sic qui descendit ad inferos non ascendet. 33. Damnatis non est reditus ad veniam, aut ad ea quae amabant. — Nubes quippe ad altiora suspenditur; sed densata vento impellitur ut currat, calore autem solis dissipatur ut evanescat. Sic sic nimirum corda sunt hominum, quae per acceptae rationis ingenium ad alta emicant, impulsa autem maligni spiritus flatu, pravis desideriorum suorum motibus huc illucque pertrahuntur; sed, districto respectu superni judicis, quasi solis calore liquefiunt, et, semel locis poenalibus tradita, ad operationis usum ultra non redeunt. Vir igitur sanctus elationem, cursum defectumque humani generis exprimens dicat: Sicut consumitur nubes, et pertransit, sic qui descendit ad inferos non ascendet. Ac si aperte loqueretur, dicens: In altum currendo 257 deficit, qui superbiendo ad interitum tendit; quem si semel culpa ad poenam pertrahit, misericordia ulterius ad veniam non reducit. Unde et adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XVIII.

VERS. 10. — Nec revertetur ultra in domum suam. 34. Domus mentis est id quod amando habitat. Desperantium corda nubibus similia. Extra se funduntur. — Sicut domus est corporis habitaculum corporale, ita unicuique menti hoc domus fit quod ex desiderio inhabitare consuevit. Ad domum igitur suam ultra non revertitur, quia semel quisque, aeternis suppliciis traditus, ad hoc jam ubi amore inhaeserat nullatenus revocatur. Potest etiam inferni nomine peccatoris desperatio designari, de qua per Psalmistam dicitur: In inferno autem quis confitebitur tibi (Psalm. VI, 6)? Unde rursum scriptum est: Impius cum in profundum venerit peccatorum, contemnit (Prov. XVIII, 3). Quisquis autem impietati succumbit, vitam profecto justitiae moriendo derelinquit. Qui vero etiam post peccatum mole desperationis obruitur, quid aliud quam post mortem in inferni suppliciis sepelitur? Bene ergo dicitur: Sicut consumitur nubes, et pertransit, sic qui descendit ad inferos non ascendet, quia plerumque cum perpetratione nequitiae etiam desperatio sociatur, et via jam reversionis absciditur. Recte autem corda desperantium nubibus comparantur, quia et caligine erroris obscura sunt, et peccatorum multiplicitate condensa; sed consumpta pertranseunt, quia claritate extremi judicii irradiata dissipantur. Solet etiam domus inhabitatio cordis intelligi. Unde sanato cuidam dicitur: Vade in domum tuam (Marc. V, 19), quia nimirum dignum est ut peccator post veniam ad mentem suam redeat, ne iterum quo juste feriatur admittat. Sed qui ad infernum descenderit, ad domum suam ulterius non ascendet, quia eum quem desperatio obruit, a cordis sui habitaculo foras mittit, et redire introrsus non valet, quia, fusus exterius, ad deteriora quotidie compulsus cadit. Ad contemplandum quippe Creatorem homo conditus fuerat, ut ejus semper speciem quaereret, atque in solemnitate illius amoris habitaret. Sed extra se per inobedientiam missus, mentis suae locum perdidit, quia, tenebrosis itineribus sparsus, ab inhabitatione veri luminis elongavit. Unde apte adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XIX.

IBID. — Neque cognoscet eum amplius locus ejus. 35. Locus hominis Deus, per inobedientiam desertus. Non cogniturus est in judicio, qui eum hic spreverint. — Locus quippe hominis, sed non localis, ipse scilicet conditor exstitit, qui hunc ut in semetipso consisteret creavit. Quem nimirum locum tunc homo deseruit, cum, seductoris verba audiens, a conditoris amore discessit. Sed cum omnipotens Deus redimendo se homini etiam corporaliter ostendit, ipse, ut ita dixerim, fugitivi sui vestigia subsequens, ad retinendum quem amiserat hominem locus venit. Si enim appellari locus nequaquam conditor posset, Deum laudans Psalmista non diceret: Filii servorum tuorum habitabunt ibi (Psal. CI, 29). Ibi enim non dicimus, nisi cum locum specialiter designamus. Sed sunt plerique qui etiam post perceptum Redemptoris auxilium ad desperationis tenebras devolvuntur; et tanto nequius pereunt, quanto et oblata remedia misericordiae contemnunt. Recte ergo de damnato homine dicitur: Neque cognoscet eum amplius 258 locus ejus, quia a conditore suo tanto tunc districtius in judicio non cognoscitur, quanto nunc ad reparationis gratiam nec per dona revocatur. Unde et notandum summopere est quod non ait: Neque cognoscet amplius locum suum, sed ait: Neque cognoscet eum amplius locus ejus. Dum enim cognitio non homini, sed loco tribuitur, patenter ipse conditor loci nomine designatur, qui, districtus ad examen ultimum veniens, in iniquitate durantibus dicet: Nescio vos unde sitis (Luc. XIII, 25). Sed electi quique quo districte reprobos repelli considerant, eo semetipsos quotidie a perpetratae nequitiae sordibus sollicitius purgant. Cumque perituros alios frigescere a vitae amore conspiciunt, studiose se ad poenitentiae lamenta succendunt. Unde et apte subditur:

CAPUT XX.

VERS. 11. — Quapropter et ego non parcam ori meo. 36. Iram judicis in confessione praeveniunt electi. — Ori etenim suo parcit, qui confiteri malum quod fecit erubescit. In laborem quippe os mittere est hoc ad confessionem perpetratae iniquitatis occupare. Sed justus ori suo non parcit, quia iram judicis districti praeveniens, verbis contra se propriae confessionis saevit. Hinc Psalmista ait: Praeveniamus faciem ejus in confessione (Psal. XCIV, 2). Hinc per Salomonem dicitur: Qui abscondit scelera sua, non dirigetur; qui autem confessus fuerit et dereliquerit ea, misericordiam consequetur (Prov. XXVIII, 13). Hinc rursum scriptum est: Justus in principio accusator est sui (Prov. XVIII, 17). Sed nequaquam ad confessionem os panditur, nisi cum consideratione districti judicii per pavorem spiritus angustatur. Unde et apte mox subditur:

CAPUT XXI.

IBID. — Loquar in tribulatione spiritus mei. 37. Peccatorum confessionem comitari debet poenitentiae luctus. — Tribulatio quippe spiritus linguam commovet, ut reatum pravi operis vox confessionis impugnet. Sciendum quoque est quia saepe et reprobi peccata confitentur, sed deflere contemnunt. Electi autem culpas suas, quas vocibus confessionis aperiunt, districtae animadversionis fletibus insequuntur. Unde bene beatus Job postquam se ori suo non parcere spopondit, tribulationem mox spiritus subdidit. Ac si aperte fateretur, dicens: Sic reatum lingua loquitur, ut nequaquam expers a moeroris stimulo per alia spiritus vagetur: sed culpas loquens, vulnus aperio; culpas vero ad correctionem cogitans, salutem vulneris ex medicamine moeroris quaero. Qui enim mala quidem quae perpetravit insinuat, sed flere quae insinuaverit recusat, quasi subducta veste vulnus detegit, sed torpenti mente medicamentum vulneri non apponit. Confessionis igitur vocem solus necesse est ut moeror excutiat, ne vulnus proditum, sed neglectum, quo licentius jam per humanam notitiam tangitur, deterius putrescat. Quo contra Psalmista plagam cordis non solum detexerat, sed detectae etiam medicamentum moeroris adhibebat, dicens: Iniquitatem meam ego pronuntio, et cogitabo pro peccato meo (Psal. XXXVII, 19). Pronuntiando enim occultum vulnus detegit, cogitando autem quid aliud quam medicamentum vulneri apponit? Sed afflictae menti, et sua sollicite damna cogitanti, rixa pro semetipsa oritur contra semetipsam. Nam cum se ad lamenta poenitentiae instigat, occulta se increpatione dilaniat. 259 Unde et apte mox subditur:

CAPUT XXII.

IBID. — Confabulabor cum amaritudine animae meae. 38. Compuncta mens multa in se detegit deflenda. Recolit quot Dei donis quam fuerit ingrata. — Pavore namque divini judicii afflicti, dum quaedam male gesta plangimus, ipsa vi nostrae amaritudinis ad discutiendos nos vigilantius excitati, alia in nobis etiam quae amplius defleamus, invenimus. Nam saepe quod torpentes latuit, flentibus subtilius innotescit; et afflicta mens certius invenit malum quod fecerat et nesciebat, eique rixa sua verius aperit, quantum a veritatis pace deviavit, quia reatum suum, cujus secura non meminit, hunc in se commota deprehendit. Succrescens quippe amaritudo poenitentiae, verecundanti cordi importune ingerit illicita quae commisit, districtum contra haec judicem ostendit, suppliciorum minas incutit, pavore animum ferit, pudore confundit, motus illicitos increpat, quietem noxiae securitatis turbat; quae ei conditor bona contulit, quae ipse bonis illius mala respondit enumerat, quod mire ab eo conditus, quod gratuito nutritus, quod rationis substantia in conditione ditatus est, quod conditoris gratia vocatus, quod sequi ipse et vocatus noluit, quod vocantis misericordia nec surdum hunc renitentemque despexit, quod illuminatus donis, quod sua sponte pravis actibus etiam post dona caecatus est, quod a caecitatis suae erroribus paternae sollicitudinis flagellis expiatus, quod a flagellorum doloribus ad salutis gaudia misericordiae medicamento reductus est; quod quibusdam culpis, etsi non gravibus subditus, peccare tamen et inter flagella non desinit; quod peccatorem suum superna gratia nec contempta dereliquit. Cum igitur afflictam mentem modo per replicationem donorum Dei, modo per improperia actionis suae tanta severitate increpat, habet in corde justorum amaritudo animae linguam suam, quae tanto eis subtilius loquitur, quanto et interius auditur. Unde et nequaquam dicitur: Fabulabor in amaritudine animae meae, sed, Confabulabor cum amaritudine animae meae, quia vis doloris, quae peccata singula reputans, torpentem animum ad lamenta excitat, quasi ad eum verba confabulationis format, in quibus semetipsum correctus inveniat, et ad sui jam custodiam sollicitior exsurgat. Dicat itaque vir justus ex voce sua, et sanctae Ecclesiae typum tenens, dicat ex nostra: Confabulabor cum amaritudine animae meae. Ac si apertius insinuet, dicens: Intus contra me cum cordis mei dolore colloquor, et foris me a verbere judicis abscondo. Sed mens poenitentiae doloribus pressa in semetipsa constringitur, atque a cunctis delectationibus carnis forti cogitatione separatur, ad summa proficere appetit, et tamen adhuc de corruptione corporis contradictionem sentit. Unde et apte mox subditur:

CAPUT XXIII.

VERS. 12. — Nunquid mare sum ego, aut cetus, quia circumdedisti me carcere? 39. Carcere constringuntur homo, diabolus, carnales; cum quod volunt implere non valent. — Carcere homo circumdatur, quia plerumque et virtutum provectibus ad alta exsurgere nititur, et tamen carnis suae corruptione praepeditur. Qua bene exui Psalmista deprecatur, dicens: Educ de carcere animam meam, ad confitendum nomini tuo (Psal. CXLI, 8). Quid vero appellatione maris, nisi corda carnalium tumidis cogitationibus fluctuosa; 260 quid autem ceti nomine, nisi antiquus hostis exprimitur? Qui dum mentes saecularium possidendo penetrat, quasi in eorum lubrica cogitatione natat. Sed cetus carcere stringitur, quia malignus spiritus, in inferioribus dejectus, ne ad coelestia evolare praevaleat, poenae suae pondere coarctatur, Petro attestante, qui ait: Deus angelis peccantibus non pepercit, sed rudentibus inferni detractos in tartarum tradidit in judicium cruciandos reservari (II Petr. II, 4). Cetus carcere astringitur, quia tentare bonos quantum desiderat prohibetur. Carcere quoque mare circumdatur, quia carnalium mentium tumida insanaque desideria ad peragenda mala quae appetunt impossibilitatis suae angustia gravantur. Saepe enim dominari melioribus concupiscunt; sed tamen eis, divino judicio cuncta mirabiliter disponente, substrati sunt. Nocere bonis elati desiderant, et tamen subjecti ab eis solatia sperant. Pro explendis voluptatibus carnis longaevitatem vitae praesentis cupiunt, sed tamen ab ea sub celeritate rapiuntur. De quibus bene per Psalmistam dicitur: Statuit aquas quasi in utre (Psal. LXXVII, 13). Aquae quippe in utre sunt cum lubrica eorum desideria, quia operis effectum non inveniunt, sub carnali corde deprimuntur. Cetus ergo ac mare circumdatione premitur carceris, quia vel malignus spiritus, vel sequaces illius, in quorum se mentibus colligit, atque in eis undas tumentium cogitationum volvit, ut implere mala quae appetunt nequeant, superna eos districtio angustat.. VERS. 13, 14. — Si dixero, consolabitur me lectulus meus, et relevabor loquens mecum in stratu meo; terrebis me per somnia, et per visiones horrore concuties. 41. Justus ab exterioribus ad cor redit, nec ibi requiem invenit. Judiciorum Dei terrore turbatur. — In sacro namque eloquio lectulus, cubile, vel stratum, secretum solet cordis intelligi. Hinc est enim quod sub uniuscujusque animae specie sponsa, occultis stimulis sancti amoris excitata, in Canticis canticorum dicit: In lectulo meo per noctes quaesivi quem diligit anima mea (Cant. III, 1). In lectulo quippe et per noctem dilectus quaeritur, quia nimirum invisibilis conditoris species, repressa omni corporeae visionis imagine, in cubili cordis invenitur. Unde et eisdem suis dilectoribus Veritas dicit: Regnum Dei intra vos est (Luc. XVII, 21). Et rursum: Si ego non abiero, Paraclitus non veniet (Joan. XVI, 7). Ac si aperte diceret: Si ab intentionis vestrae oculis corpus non subtraho, ad intellectum vos invisibilem per consolatorem Spiritum non perduco. Hinc de justis per Psalmistam dicitur: Exsultabunt sancti in gloria, laetabuntur in cubilibus suis (Psal. CXLIX, 5), quia scilicet cum mala ab exterioribus fugiunt, securi intra mentium secreta gloriantur. Sed tunc laetitia cordium erit perfecta cum carnis exterius pugna non fuerit. Nam quousque caro illicit, quia quasi domus nostrae paries quatitur, etiam cubile turbatur. Unde et recte per eumdem Psalmistam dicitur: Universum stratum ejus versasti in infirmitate ejus (Psal. XL, 4), quia dum nos tentatio carnis concutit, tremefacta nostra infirmitas etiam mentis cubile confundit. Quid vero hoc loco somnia vel visiones accipimus, nisi imaginationes ultimi districtique examinis? quod jam utcunque per timorem cernimus, sed tamen ut est veraciter non videmus. Sancti itaque viri, ut diximus, ad cordis semper secreta redeunt, cum ab hoc mundo vel ultra votum prospera, vel ultra vires adversa patiuntur; atque, externis laboribus fessi, quasi stratum vel lectulum, cubilia mentis petunt. Sed dum quibusdam imaginationibus cogitationum quam sint subtilia divina judicia conspiciunt, quasi in ipsa strati sui requie somnii visione turbantur. Contemplantur enim quam districtus judex veniat, qui, dum vi immensae magnitudinis cordium secreta illuminat, omnes ante oculos culpas reducat. Pensant quanta illa sit verecundia, in conspectu tunc totius humani generis, angelorum omnium, archangelorumque confundi. Perpendunt qui post confusionem cruciatus maneat, cum et reatus animum immortaliter morientem et indeficienter deficientem carnem gehenna consumat. Cum itaque tam pavida imaginatione mens quatitur, quid aliud quam in stratu triste somnium videtur? Dicat ergo: Si dixero Consolabitur me lectulus meus, et relevabor loquens mecum in stratu meo, terrebis me per somnia, et per visiones horrore concuties. Ac si aperte fateatur, dicens: Si, exteriora fugiens, introrsus redeo, et utcunque requiescere in cordis cubili concupisco, ibi me, dum districtionis tuae contemplationi objicis, vehementer per ipsas meae providentiae imaginationes terres. Bene autem dicitur: Et relevabor, loquens mecum in stratu meo, 262 quia nimir um cum ad mentis nostrae silentium fessi revertimur, quasi in stratu colloquentes, occulta intra nos cogitationum verba versamus. Sed haec ipsa nostra collocutio in pavorem vertitur, quia ex illa vehementius intellectus nobis, qui terrorem judicis intentet in mente aperitur.. VERS. 15. — Quamobrem elegit suspendium anima mea, et mortem ossa mea. 44. Remedium est contra mentis anxietatem, ad alta eam ferre. — Quid per animam nisi mentis intentio, quid per ossa nisi carnis fortitudo designatur? Omne autem quod suspenditur procul dubio ab imis elevatur. Anima ergo suspendium eligit, ut ossa moriantur, quia dum mentis intentio ad alta se sublevat, omnem in se fortitudinem vitae exterioris necat. Sancti etenim viri certissime sciunt quia habere in hac vita requiem nequaquam possunt; et idcirco suspendium eligunt, quia nimirum, desideria terrena deserentes, ad alta animum tollunt. Suspensi autem mortem suis ossibus inferunt, quia amore supernae patriae, in virtutum studiis accincti, hoc quod fortes prius in mundo fuerant, vinculo humilitatis insequuntur. Intueri libet quomodo animam Paulus suspenderat, qui dicebat: Vivo autem jam non ego, vivit vero in me Christus (Gal II, 20). Et rursum: Desiderium habens dissolvi, et cum Christo esse (Philip. I, 23). Et: Mihi vivere Christus est, et mori lucrum (Ibid., 21). Qui, gesta terrenae fortitudinis ad memoriam revocans, quasi quaedam in se ossa numerabat, dicens: Hebraeus ex Hebraeis, secundum legem Pharisaeus, secundum aemulationem persequens Ecclesiam Dei (Philip. III, 5, 6). Sed suspendio animae, quia haec in se ossa interficit, protinus asserit, qui subjungit: Sed quae mihi fuerunt lucra, haec arbitratus sum propter Christum detrimenta (Ibid., 7). Quae adhuc ossa in semetipso insinuat vehementius exstincta, cum subdit: Propter quem omnia detrimentum feci, et arbitror ut stercora (Ibid., 8). Mortuis vero ossibus quam exanimis pendeat ostendit, qui illico subjungit, dicens: Ut Christum lucrifaciam, et inveniar in illo non habens meam justitiam, quae ex lege est, sed eam quae ex fide est Jesu Christi (Ibid. 9). Sed quia collatis ejus testimoniis Paulum ad alta suspensum, mundo mortuum, testati sumus, nunc beatum Job si, plenus eodem spiritu, exterioris vitae concupiscentiam fugiat ostendamus. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXVI.

VERS. 16. — Desperavi, nequaquam ultra jam vivam. 45. Justi alii terrena possident, alii abdicant. — Sunt nonnulli justorum qui sic coelestia appetunt, ut tamen a terrenorum spe minime frangantur. Largita divinitus patrimonia ad necessitatis subsidium possident, honores sibi temporaliter impensos tenent, aliena non ambiunt, suis licite utuntur. Qui tamen ab eisdem rebus quas habent alieni sunt, quia ad haec ipsa quae possident ex desiderio non tenentur. Et sunt nonnulli justorum qui, ad comprehendendum culmen perfectionis accincti, dum altiora interius appetunt, exterius cuncta derelinquunt; qui rebus se habitis nudant, 264 gloria honoris exspoliant; qui internorum desiderio per assiduitatem se amici moeroris afficiunt, habere de exterioribus consolationem nolunt; qui internis gaudiis dum mente appropiant, vitam in se funditus corporeae delectationis necant. Talibus namque per Paulum dicitur: Mortui enim estis, et vita vestra abscondita est cum Christo in Deo (Col. III, 3). Horum vocem Psalmista expresserat, cum dicebat: Concupiscit et deficit anima mea in atria Domini (Psal. LXXXIII, 3). Concupiscunt enim, sed non deficiunt, qui jam quidem coelestia appetunt, sed adhuc tamen a terrenorum delectationibus minime lassantur. Concupiscit vero et in Dei atria deficit, qui, cum aeterna desiderat, in amore temporalium non perdurat. Hinc Psalmista iterum dicit: Defecit in salutari tuo anima mea (Psal. CXVIII, 81). Hinc per semetipsam Veritas admonet, dicens: Si quis vult post me venire abneget semetipsum (Luc. IX, 23). Et rursum: Nisi quis renuntiaverit omnibus quae possidet, non potest meus esse discipulus (Luc. XIV, 33). Horum igitur numero sanctus vir, divisa a terrenis desideriis mente, se inserit, qui ait: Desperavi, nequaquam ultra jam vivam. Justi quippe desperare est praesentis vitae bona aeternitatis electione deserere, mansura quaerere, et in rebus temporalibus fiduciam non habere. Qui haec agens nequaquam se ultra vivere asserit, quia videlicet vivificatrice morte quotidie a vita se passionis occidit. Absit enim ne vir sanctus de divinae misericordiae largitate desperet, ne gressum cordis a profectu intimi itineris subtrahat, ne, amorem conditoris deserens, quasi a duce destitutus in via remaneat, et confossus gladio latrocinantis desperationis ruat. Sed ne ejus dicta ad nostri intellectus arbitrium videamur violenter inflectere, debemus ex posterioribus praemissa pensare. Quo enim sensu haec dixerit, ipse protinus indicat, qui subjungit:

CAPUT XXVII.

IBID. — Parce mihi, Domine, nihil enim sunt dies mei. 46. Job bona peritura pia desperatione deseruit, in aeternum mansura expetiit. — Neque enim duo sibi haec verba conveniunt, desperavi et parce. Nam qui desperat nequaquam jam sibi parci postulat, et qui adhuc sibi parci desiderat profecto minime desperat. Aliunde ergo est quod desperat, aliunde vero quod parci sibi sanctus vir postulat, quia nimirum dum bona vitae transeuntis per desperationem deserit, ad obtinenda quae permanent in spe robustior exsurgit. Desperando itaque melius ad spem veniae ducitur, qui eo certius ventura appetit, quo praesentia verius ex desperatione derelinquit. Et notandum quod, vim nobis sui cordis insinuans, unam quidem de se sententiam protulit, sed hanc tertio insinuando replicavit. Quod enim superius dixerat: Elegit suspendium anima mea, hoc replicans addidit, Desperavi; atque aeterna concupiscendo, et temporalia postponendo, hoc postremo intulit, Parce mihi; et quod superius dixit, Mortem ossa mea, hoc nimirum subdidit, Nequaquam ultra jam vivam; hoc ultimum protulit, Nihil enim sunt dies mei. [Vet. XX.] Bene autem dies suos nihil esse considerat, quia, ut paulo superius saepe jam diximus, sancti viri quo verius summa cognoscunt, eo sublimius terrena despiciunt; et idcirco praesentis vitae dies nihil esse conspiciunt, quia illuminatae mentis oculos in consideratione 265 aeternitatis figunt. De qua dum ad se redeunt, quid se esse nisi pulverem agnoscunt, et infirmitatis suae conscii, districte judicari metuunt? Cumque vim tanti vigoris aspiciunt, trepidant examinari quod sunt. Unde et adhuc apte subjungitur:

CAPUT XXVIII.

VERS. 17. — Quid est homo quia magnificas eum? aut quid apponis erga eum cor tuum? 47. Sancti suam vilitatem, ac Dei munera et judicia semper considerant. — Hominem Deus magnificat, quia largitate rationis ditat, infusione gratiae visitat, honore collatae virtutis exaltat. Cumque per semetipsum nihil sit, esse tamen eum cognitionis suae participem, benignitatis munere concedit. Sed erga eumdem magnificatum hominem cor suum Dominus apponit, quia post dona judicium exerit, merita subtiliter pensat, vitae pondera vehementer examinat, et tanto ab eo post districtius poenas exigit, quanto hunc impenso munere largius praevenit. Vir igitur sanctus immensitatem supernae majestatis aspiciat, atque ad infirmitatem propriam considerationis oculum reducat. Videat quia caro capere non valet hoc quod de semetipsa Veritas per spiritum docet. Videat quia etiam sublevatus hominis spiritus judicium tolerare non sufficit quod Deus sub examine districtae retributionis intendit, et dicat: Quid est homo, quia magnificas eum? aut quid apponis erga eum cor tuum? Ac si aperte exclamet, dicens: Magnificatur homo spiritali munere, sed tamen caro est; et vias ejus post munera districte consideras, sed tamen si remota pietate judicetur, pondus quod de tua subtilitate imminet, ferre nec sublevatus ad justitiam spiritus valet, quia etsi hunc ultra se tua dona dilatant, ad inquisitionem tamen tui districti examinis sua infirmitas angustat. Unde et adhuc apte subjungitur:

CAPUT XXIX.

VERS. 18. — Visitas eum diluculo, et subito probas illum. 48. Quos donis ditavit Deus, tentationibus probat. Ut quid ex Deo, quid ex se sint, discant. Ideo tunc lubricis cogitationibus turbantur. — Quis nostrum nesciat quia diluculum dicitur cum jam nocturna tempora in claritatem lucis mutantur? Nos itaque noctis tenebris premimur cum perpetratione iniquitatis obscuramur. Sed nox in lucem vertitur cum erroris nostri obscuritas veritatis cognitione irradiatui Nox in lucem vertitur cum corda nostra justitiae fulgor illuminat, quae caecitas culpae deprimebat. Hoc diluculum discipulorum mentibus oriri Paulus aspexerat cum dicebat: Nox praecessit, dies autem appropinquavit (Rom. XIII, 12). Diluculo ergo nos Dominus visitat, quia erroris nostri tenebras luce suae cognitionis illustrat, contemplationis munere sublevat, in arcem virtutis exaltat. Sed notandum quod Deus postquam diluculo visitat, subito hominem probat, quia et accedendo corda nostra ad virtutes provehit, et recedendo concuti tentatione permittit. Si enim post virtutum munera nulla tentatione concutitur, has se habere animus ex semetipso gloriatur. Ut ergo et firmitatis dona habeat, et infirmitatem suam humiliter agnoscat, per accessum gratiae ad alta sustollitur, et per recessum quid ex semetipso sit probatur. Quod bene nobis ex historia sacrae lectionis innuitur (III Reg. III, 16), qua Salomon et divinitus accepisse sapientiam, et tamen post acceptam eamdem sapientiam meretricum statim pulsatus quaestione memoratur. Mox enim ut tantae revelationis gratiam accepit, certamen turpium mulierum pertulit, quia nimirum saepe cum mentem nostram concessis 266 virtutibus respectus intimae largitatis illuminat, hanc protinus etiam lubricae cogitationes turbant, ut quae sublevata immmenso munere exsultat, etiam tentatione pulsata quid sit inveniat. Sic Elias et visitatus diluculo, sermone coelos aperuit; et tamen probatus subito, infirmus per deserta fugiens, unam mulierem expavit (III Reg. XIX, 3). Sic Paulus ad tertium coelum ducitur, paradisi penetrans secreta considerat (II Cor. XII, 2); et tamen, ad semetipsum rediens, contra carnis bellum laborat, legem aliam in membris sustinet, cujus in se rebellione fatigari spiritus legem dolet (Rom. VII, 21). Diluculo ergo Deus visitat, sed subito post visitationem probat, quia et collato munere sublevat, et abstracto ad paululum, ipsum sibi hominem demonstrat. Quod eo usque procul dubio patimur, quo, detersa funditus labe peccati, ad promissae incorruptionis substantiam reformemur. Unde adhuc apte subditur:

CAPUT XXX.

VERS. 19. — Usquequo non parcis mihi, nec dimittis me, ut glutiam salivam meam? 49. Contemplationis sapor, non satietas hic datur. — Saliva in os ex capite labitur, ab ore vero ad ventrem ducitur cum glutitur. Quid itaque est caput nostrum nisi divinitas? per quam existendi principium sumimus, ut creatura simus, Paulo attestante, qui ait: Caput viri Christus, caput autem Christi Deus (I Cor. XI, 3). Quid autem venter noster est, nisi mens? quae dum cibum suum, supernum videlicet intellectum suscipit, refecta procul dubio omnium membra actionum regit. Nisi enim sacra eloquia aliquando mentem nomine ventris exprimerent, Salomon utique non dixisset: Lucerna Domini spiraculum hominis, quae investigat omnia secreta ventris (Prov. XX, 27), quia nimirum dum nos gratia superni respectus illuminat, cuncta etiam mentis nostrae nobis absconsa manifestat. Quid ergo salivae nomine nisi sapor intimae contemplationis accipitur? quae ad os a capite defluit, quia de claritate conditoris adhuc in hac vita nos positos vix gustu revelationis tangit. Unde et Redemptor veniens salivam luto miscuit, et caeci nati oculos reparavit (Joan. IX, 6), quia superna gratia carnalem cogitationem nostram per admistionem suae contemplationis irradiat, et ab originali caecitate hominem ad intellectum reformat. Nam quia a paradisi gaudiis expulsum in hoc jam exsilio natura edidit, quasi a nativitate homo sine oculis processit. Sed sicut sanctus vir insinuat, haec saliva ad os quidem labitur, ut vero ad ventrem usque perveniat non glutitur, quia divinitatis contemplatio sensum, tangit, sed plene mentem non reficit, quoniam perfecte animus conspicere non valet quod adhuc, quia caligo corruptionis praepedit, raptim videt. 50. Mens mole corporis pressa, supernae luci diu inhaerere non valet. — Ecce enim electorum mens jam terrena desideria subjicit, jam cuncta quae considerat praeterire transcendit, jam ab exteriorum delectatione suspenditur, et quae sint bona invisibilia rimatur, atque haec agens plerumque in dulcedinem supernae contemplationis rapitur, jamque de intimis aliquid quasi per caliginem conspicit, et ardenti desiderio interesse spiritalibus angelorum ministeriis conatur; gustu incircumscripti luminis pascitur, et ultra se evecta ad semetipsam relabi dedignatur; sed quia adhuc corpus quod corrumpitur aggravat animam (Sap. IX, 15), inhaerere diu luci 267 non valet, quam raptim videt. Ipsa quippe carnis infirmitas transcendentem se animam retrahit, atque ad cogitanda ima ac necessaria suspirantem reducit. Saliva ergo ex capite defluens os tangit, sed ad ventrem minime pervenit, quia liquore supernae contemplationis jam quidem intellectus noster infunditur, sed nequaquam mens plene satiatur. In ore etenim gustus est, in ventre satietas. Salivam itaque glutire non possumus, quia supernae claritatis bono satiari non permittimur, quod adhuc ex tenuitate gustamus. Sed quia hoc ipsum, quod utcunque jam superne cognoscimus, ex pietate parcentis est, quod vero hoc percipere perfecte non possumus adhuc ex poena vetustae damnationis, recte nunc dicitur: Usquequo non parcis mihi, nec dimittis me, ut glutiam salivam meam? Ac si aperte diceretur: Tunc homini plene parcis, cum hunc ad perfectionem tuae contemplationis admiseris, ut claritatem tuam raptus interius videat, et eum carnis suae corruptio exterius non repellat. Tunc permittis ut salivam glutiam, cum me sapore tuae claritatis usque ad abundantiam satietatis infuderis, ut nequaquam jam per indigentiam gustu oris esuriam, sed in te solidus irrigato mentis ventre subsistam. Sed qui promereri vult bonum quod expetit, debet malum confiteri quod fecit. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXI.

VERS 20. — Peccavi; quid faciam tibi, o custos hominum? 51. Homo per se lapsus, per se non valet surgere. — Ecce fatetur malum quod egit, sed bonum quod Deo in recompensationem debeat offerre non invenit, quia ad abluendam culpam quaelibet humanae actionis virtus infirma est, nisi hanc misericordia parcentis foveat, et non justitia recte judicantis premat. Unde recte per Psalmistam dicitur: Melior est misericordia tua super vitam (Psal. LXII, 40), quia quamlibet videatur innocens, apud districtum tamen judicem nostra nos vita non liberat, si ei reatus sui debitum misericordiae benignitas non relaxat. Vel certe cum dicitur: Quid faciam tibi? patenter ostenditur quia haec ipsa bona quae agere praecipimur, non praeceptori, sed nobis prosunt. Unde rursum per Psalmistam dicitur: Quoniam bonorum meorum non indiges (Psal. XV, 2). Humilitas autem nostrae destitutionis exprimitur cum Deus hominum custos vocatur, quia si ejus nos custodia minime protegit, ante occulti hostis insidias, nostrae sollicitudinis oculus vigilans dormit, Psalmista rursus attestante, qui ait: Nisi Dominus custodierit civitatem, in vanum vigilant qui custodiunt eam (Psal. CXXVI, 1, 2). Per nos namque cecidimus, sed nostris resurgere viribus non valemus. Culpa nos voluntatis propriae semel stravit, sed poena culpae deterius quotidie deprimit. Ad amissam rectitudinem surgere studiorum conatibus nitimur, sed meritorum pondere gravamur. Unde et apte subditur.

CAPUT XXXII.

IBID. — Quare posuisti me contrarium tibi, et factus sum mihimetipsi gravis? 52. Peccando contrarius factus est Deo. — Tunc sibi contrarium Deus hominem posuit, cum homo Deum peccando dereliquit. Serpentis quippe persuasionibus captus hostis ejus exstitit, cujus praecepta contempsit. Justus vero conditor hunc sibi contrarium posuit, quia inimicum ex elatione deputavit. Sed haec ipsa contrarietas culpae 268 facta est homini pondus poenae, ut corruptioni suae male liber serviat, qui bene servus de incorruptionis libertate gaudebat. Salubrem quippe humilitatis arcem deserens, ad infirmitatis jugum superbiendo pervenit, et cervicem cordis erigendo supposuit, quia qui subesse divinis jussionibus noluit, sub suis se necessitatibus stravit. Quod melius ostendimus, si ea quae dejectus sustinet, et prius carnis, et post pondera mentis exprimamus. 53. Quot modis homo sibi gravis sit, propter corpus. Et propter mentem. Mens nostra ampla et angusta. — Ut enim taceamus hoc, quod dolores tolerat, quod febribus anhelat, sua quadam aegritudine constringitur ipsa haec nostri corporis quae salus vocatur. Nam otio tabescit, opere deficit; inedia deficiens, cibo reficitur ut subsistat; refectione lassescens, abstinentia relevatur ut vigeat; aqua perfunditur, ne arescat; linteis tergitur, ne ipsa nimis perfusione liquefiat; labore vegetatur, ne quiete torpeat; quiete refovetur, ne laboris exercitatione succumbat; fatigata vigiliis, somno reparatur; oppressa somno, vigiliis excutitur, ne sua pejus quiete lassetur; vestibus tegitur, ne frigoris adversitate penetretur; quaesito calore deficiens, aurarum flatu refovetur. Cumque inde molestias invenit, unde vitare molestias quaesivit, male sauciata, ut ita dixerim, de ipso suo medicamine languescit. Remotis ergo febribus, cessantibusque doloribus, ipsa nostra salus aegritudo est, cui curandi necessitas nunquam deest. Quot enim solatia ad vivendi usum quaerimus, quasi tot nostrae aegritudini medicamentis obviamus. Sed ipsum quoque medicamen in vulnus vertitur, quia exquisito remedio paulo diutius inhaerentes, ex eo gravius deficimus, quod provide ad refectionem paramus. Sic nimirum debuit praesumptio corripi, sic superbia sterni. Quia enim elatum semel sumpsimus spiritum, ecce defluens quotidie portamus lutum. 54. Ipsa quoque mens nostra a secreti interioris securo gaudio exclusa, modo spe decipitur, modo pavore vexatur, modo dolore dejicitur, modo falsa hilaritate relevatur; transitoria pertinaciter diligit, eorumque amissione incessanter atteritur, quia et incessanter cursu rapiente permutatur. Rebus autem mutabilibus subdita, et a semetipsa variatur. Nam quaerens quod non habet, anxia percipit; cumque hoc habere coeperit, taedet hanc percepisse quod quaesivit. Amat saepe quod despexerat, despicit quod amabat. Cum labore quae aeterna sunt discit, sed horum repente obliviscitur, si laborare desierit. Diu quaerit, ut parum quid de summis inveniat, sed ad consueta citius relabens, nec parum in his quae invenit perseverat. Erudiri appetens, vix suam ignorantiam superat, sed erudita, gravius contra scientiae gloriam pugnat. Vix carnis suae sibi tyrannidem subjicit, sed tamen adhuc intus culpae imagines tolerat, cujus jam foris opera vincendo restrinxit. In auctoris sui inquisitione se erigit, sed reverberatam hanc, corporearum rerum amica caligo confundit. Semetipsam qualiter incorporea corpus regat intueri vult, et non valet. Requirit mire quod sibi respondere non sufficit, et sub eo ignara deficit, quod prudenter requirit. 269 Amplam se simul et angustam considerans, qualem se veraciter aestimet, ignorat, quia si ampla non esset, nequaquam tam investiganda requireret, et rursum si angusta non esset, hoc ipsum saltem quod ipsa requirit inveniret. 55. Homo dum relicto Deo, se sibi sufficere credidit, nihil in se nisi tumultum perturbationis invenit. Hoc pressus Job misericordiam Dei postulat. — Bene ergo dicitur: Posuisti me contrarium tibi, et factus sum mihimetipsi gravis, quia dum repulsus homo, et a carne molestias, et a mente quaestiones tolerat, grave nimirum pondus semetipsum portat. Undique languoribus premitur, undique infirmitatibus urgetur, ut qui, relicto Deo, se sibi ad requiem sufficere credidit, nihil in se nisi tumultum perturbationis inveniret, inventumque se fugere quaereret, sed, auctore contempto, quo se fugeret non haberet. Cujus infirmitatis pondera bene quidam sapiens contemplatus, ait: Grave jugum super filios Adam, a die exitus de ventre matris eorum usque ad diem sepulturae in matrem omnium (Eccli. XL, 1). Beatus autem Job ista considerans, et quare ita ordinata sint ingemiscens, non justitiam redarguit, sed misericordiam inquirit, ut percunctando ipse humiliter pulset quod parcendo divina pietas immutet. Ac si aperte dicat: Cur quasi contrarium tibi hominem despicis, qui certus scio quia perire vel ipsum quem despicere crederis non vis? Unde bene adhuc et humilitatem confessionis exprimit, et vocem liberae inquisitionis adjungit, dicens:

CAPUT XXXIII.

VERS. 21. — Cur non tollis peccatum meum, et quare non aufers iniquitatem meam? 56. Mediatorem desiderat et resurrectionem. — Quibus profecto verbis quid aliud quam desiderium praestolati Mediatoris innuitur? de quo Joannes ait: Ecce Agnus Dei, qui tollit peccatum mundi (Joan. I, 29). Vel certe ab humano genere tunc peccatum plene tollitur, cum per incorruptionis gloriam nostra corruptio permutatur. Esse namque a culpa liberi nequaquam possumus, quousque in corpore mortis tenemur. Redemptoris ergo gratiam, vel resurrectionis soliditatem desiderat, qui iniquitatem suam auferri funditus sperat. Unde mox et poenam quam ex origine meruit, et judicium quod ex propria actione pertimescit adjungens subdit:

CAPUT XXXIV.

IBID. — Ecce nunc in pulvere dormiam; et si mane me quaesieris, non subsistam. 57. Dum praesenti poena premitur, de futuris gravius urgetur. Humilitas tegmen a gladio judicis. — Peccanti primo homini dictum est: Pulvis es, et in pulverem reverteris (Genes. III, 19). Mane autem dicitur illa tunc manifestatio mentium, quae in adventu judicis apertis cogitationibus quasi post noctis tenebras demonstratur. De quo nimirum mane per Psalmistam dicitur: Mane astabo tibi et videbo (Psal. V, 5). Quaerere autem Dei est hominem subtili interrogatione discutere, et districte discutiendo judicare. Beatus igitur Job humanae dejectionis damna considerans, videat quia et praesenti jam poena premitur, et adhuc de futuris gravius urgetur: Et dicat: Ecce nunc in pulvere dormiam; et si mane me quaesieris, non subsistam. Ac si apertius deploret, dicens: in praesenti quidem mortem jam carnis patior, et tamen adhuc de venturo judicio graviorem mortem, districtionis tuae sententiam, pertimesco: interitum pro culpa sustineo, sed adhuc ad judicium veniens culpas restitui et post interitum formido. 270 Exteriorem ergo mortem considerans, dicat, Ecce nunc in pulvere dormiam; interiorem metuens adjungat: Et si mane me quaesieris, non subsistam. Quantalibet enim justitia polleant, nequaquam sibi ad innocentiam vel electi sufficiunt, si in judicio districte requirantur. Sed hoc nunc ad solatium suae ereptionis inveniunt, quod nequaquam se posse sufficere humiliter sciunt. Sub humilitatis ergo tegmine a gladio se tantae animadversionis abscondunt, et quo terrorem venturi judicis praestolantes continuo timore trepidant, eo indesinenter agitur, ut paratiores fiant. Sequitur.

CAPUT XXXV.

CAP. VIII, VERS. 1, 2. — Respondens autem Baldad Suhites dixit. Usquequo loqueris talia, et spiritus multiplex sermonis oris tui? 58. Justorum verba injustis gravia. Loquendi quadruplex vis. Unica crimini subjacet. Injustis semper gravia sunt verba justorum; et quae ad aedificationem prolata audiunt, haec quasi superimpositum pondus ferunt. Quod de se aperte Baldad Suhites indicat, dicens: Usquequo loqueris talia? Qui enim usquequo dicit, quia aedificationis verba jam portare non possit ostendit. Sed cum corrigi iniqui despiciunt, bene prolata criminantur. Unde et protinus adjungit: Et spiritus multiplex sermonis oris tui. Cum multiplicitas in sermone reprehenditur, esse procul dubio intelligentiae gravitas in sensu denegatur. Vis quippe summa loquentium, quadrifaria qualitate distinguitur. Nam sunt nonnulli quos sentiendi simul ac dicendi amplitudo dilatat, et sunt nonnulli quos sentiendi simul et dicendi inopia angustat. Sunt nonnulli qui efficaciam dicendi habent, sed acumen sentiendi non habent; et sunt nonnulli qui acumine sentiendi subnixi sunt, sed ex inopia locutionis obmutescunt. Hoc namque in hominibus cernimus, quod in rebus saepe insensibilibus videmus. Nam plerumque et abundans aqua ab intimis ducitur et largis in superficiem meatibus derivatur. Plerumque angusta in intimis latet, et progrediendi rimas difficulter inveniens, foras angustior exsudat. Plerumque minima in absconditis oritur; cumque patenter qua exeat invenit, ex largo foramine tenuis procedit, magnique se meatus dilatant, sed non est quod fundant. Plerumque vero ampla in absconditis surgit, sed angustis pressa meatibus tenuissime profluit. Sic itaque in aliis os patens emanat, quod largus ingenii fons ministrat. In aliis intellectum nec sensus porrigit, nec lingua fundit. In aliis os quidem ad loquendum patet, sed ad reddendum parata a sensu lingua nihil accipit. In aliis vero largus sentiendi fons a corde exuberat, sed hunc quasi meatus tenuis impar lingua coangustat. In quibus nimirum quatuor dicendi qualitatibus, sola crimini tertia subjacet, quae hoc sibi per locutionem arripit, ad quod per ingenium non assurgit. Nam prima laudanda est, quae utroque valenter pollet. Secunda miseranda, quae utroque humiliter caret. Quarta adjuvanda, quae explere quod sentit non valet. Tertia vero despicienda atque reprimenda, quae, dum sermone se erigit, sensu jacet, quae membris inflatione tumentibus similis, ad aures audientium vasta, sed vacua, procedit. Quod nunc Baldad ad beati Job crimen intorquet, dicens: Spiritus multiplex sermonis oris tui. 271 Qui enim multiplicitatem sermonis ori tribuit, profecto cordis inopiam reprehendit. Ac si aperte dicat: Abundantia spiritus in sermone oris attolleris, sed sensus indigentia coangustaris. Pravi autem, cum recta reprehendunt, ne ipsi quae justa sunt nescire videantur, nota omnibus bona, quae audiendo didicerunt, quasi incognita proferunt. Unde et Baldad protinus adjungit:

CAPUT XXXVI.

VERS. 3. — Nunquid Deus supplantat judicium et Omnipotens subvertit quod justum est? 59. Pravi doctrinae laudem aucupantur. Justitiam Dei laudant ubi eis bene est, ubi male damnant. Haec beatus Job nec loquens negaverat, nec reticens ignorabat. Sed procaces quique, ut diximus, etiam nota jactanter proferunt, ut loquendo docti videantur: contemnunt moderate conticescere, ne credantur ex imperitia tacuisse. Sciendum vero est quia tunc divinae justitiae rectitudinem laudant, cum se ad gaudium incolumitas sublevat, et alios flagella castigant; cum se conspiciunt rerum prosperitate perfrui, alios adversitate fatigari. Nam dum perverse agunt, sed tamen se rectos arbitrantur, hoc quod sibi prospera suppetunt, deberi suis meritis credunt; eoque colligunt quod Deus injuste non judicat, quo quasi justos se adversitas nulla contristat. Sed si eorum vitam quamlibet breviter vis supernae correptionis attigerit, pulsati protinus consilium divini examinis increpant, quod paulo ante incolumes admirando praeferebant, justumque esse judicium, quod suis moribus adversatur, negant, de divina aequitate disputant, ad resultationis verba prosiliunt, et correpti quia deliquerint, gravius delinquunt. Unde bene etiam per Psalmistam contra peccatoris confessionem dicitur: Confitebitur tibi, cum bene feceris ei (Psal. XLVIII, 19). Despecta quippe vox confessionis est, quam format jucunditas prosperitatis. Sola autem confessio habet magni meritum ponderis, quam a veritate rectitudinis nequaquam separat vis doloris, quam usque ad judicium vocis exacuit adversitas testis cordis. Non ergo mirum quod Baldad divinam justitiam laudat, qui nihil adversi ab eadem justitia tolerat. 60. Haereticorum in Ecclesiam adversis pressam insania. — Sed quia amicos beati Job haereticorum tenere speciem diximus, libet ut paucis quomodo Baldad verba haereticorum subreptionibus congruant demonstremus. Hi quippe dum sanctam Ecclesiam temporali corripi animadversione conspiciunt in semetipsis, audacius in jactantiam perversae praedicationis intumescunt; et superni examinis rectitudinem praetendentes, prosperari se ex meritis asserunt, illam vero affligi dignis retributionibus attestantur, et verbis blandientibus subreptionis aditum protinus inter dolores quaerunt, atque aliorum vitam, exprobratis aliorum mortibus, feriunt, ac si illi jam juste defuncti sint qui de Deo credere digna noluerunt. Unde Baldad Suhites, postquam divinam justitiam protulit, illico adjungit:

CAPUT XXXVII.

VERS. 4, 5, 6. — Etiamsi filii tui peccaverunt ei, et dimisit eos in manu iniquitatis suae, tu tamen si diluculo surrexeris ad Deum, et Omnipotentem fueris deprecatus, si mundus et rectus incesseris, statim evigilabit ad te, et pacatum reddet habitaculum justitiae. 61. Populorum ab Ecclesia discissionem tanquam erroris argumentum exprobrarant. — Ac si afflictis catholicis errorum praedicatores dicant: Vitae vestrae providete, et quam perversa 272 teneatis, ex eorum qui inter vos defuncti sunt damnatione cognoscite, quia conditori omnium nisi perfidia vestra displiceret, nequaquam a vobis tam numerosos populos interitu saeviente subtraheret. Ait enim: Etiam si filii tui peccaverunt ei, et dimisit eos in manu iniquitatis suae. Quasi aperte dicens: In iniquitatis suae manu dimissi sunt, qui vitam nostrae rectitudinis imitari noluerint. Tu tamen si diluculo surrexeris ad Deum, et Omnipotentem fueris deprecatus. [Vet. XXVI.] Quia enim se haeretici tenere lucem veritatis aestimant, sanctam Ecclesiam quasi in erroris nocte positam, ad diluculum veritatis vocant, quatenus et per cognitionem Dei, quasi per diluculum surgat, et per precem poenitentiae praeterita diluat. Si mundus et rectus incesseris. Mundus videlicet in cogitatione, rectus in opere. Statim evigilabit ad te. Ac si aperte dicat: Quia is qui nunc tribulationibus tuis virtutem suae protectionis non exerit, quasi ab adjutorio errantis dormit. Et pacatum reddet habitaculum justitiae tuae. Id est, praesentis vitae contrarietates amovet, et tranquillitatis protinus securitatem praebet. Quia enim perversi quique temporale gaudium singulare aestimant divinae remunerationis bonum, quae ipsi anxie ambiunt, haec aliis pro magno pollicentur. Unde plerumque fit, ut aut ami sa recuperari spondeant, aut ad majora adhuc praesentis vitae praemia auditorum suorum animos extendant. Quod patenter Baldad exprimit, cum protinus adjungit:

CAPUT XXXVIII.

VERS 7. — In tantum, ut si priora tua fuerint parva, et novissima tua multiplicentur nimis. 62. Quid suis sequacibus promittant — Si vero habitaculum justitiae, consilium mentis vocat, afflictis catholicis errorum magistri pacatum habitaculum justitiae promittunt, quia si eos ad sua pertrahunt, profecto a contentione conticescunt. Namque hi qui trahi ad perversa potuerunt, tanto jam tranquillius temporali pace quieti sunt, quanto longius ab aeterna separantur. Opes quoque intelligentiae se sequentibus crescere spondent. Unde et subditur: In tantum, ut si priora tua fuerunt parva, et novissima tua multiplicentur nimis. Sed quia eorum verbis non facile creditur, quoniam saepe vita contemptibilis demonstratur, antiquorum patrum sententias proferunt, earumque rectitudinem in argumentum sui erroris inflectunt. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT XXXIX VERS.

8. Interroga enim generationem pristinam, et diligenter investiga patrum memoriam. 63. Antiquorum patrum auctoritate abutuntur. — Generationem pristinam, ac patrum memoriam nequaquam videri, sed investigari admonent: quia hoc in ea nolunt conspici, quod liquido cunctis patet. Nonnunquam vero, more bonorum, quaedam moraliter docent, et qualiter ex praeteritis praesentia colligantur insinuant, atque ex his quae jam a nostris oculis pertranseundo subtracta sunt quam nulla sint quae videntur demonstrant. Unde et adhuc subditur: VERS. 9. — Hesterni quippe sumus, et ignoramus quoniam sicut umbrae dies nostri sunt super terram. 64. Quae jam transacta sunt nos docent quam celeriter caetera sint transitura. — Generatio itaque pristina interroganda proponitur, ut transire tempus vitae praesentis sicut umbra monstretur; quia videlicet si ea quae erant, et jam transacta sunt, ad memoriam reducimus, patenter agnoscimus quam celeriter hoc quoque fugiat quod tenemus. Saepe vero haeretici eosdem 273 nobiscum patres, quos veneramur laudant, sed intellectu depravato, ipsis nos eorum laudibus impugnant. Unde et adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XLI.

VERS. 10. — Ipsi docebunt te; loquentur, tibi, et de corde suo proferent eloquia. 65. Pravi bona interdum proferunt, sed non bene. Suo tum se mucrone feriunt. — Notandum quod superius dixerat: Spiritus multiplex sermonis oris tui; nunc vero, reductis ad memoriam patribus, dicit: De corde suo proferent eloquia. Ac si vitam sanctae Ecclesiae haeretici detestantes, dicant: Multiplicitatem spiritus in ore habes, in corde non habes. Sed illi contra te audiendi sunt, qui verba ex corde proferentes, recta vivendo docuerunt. Saepe autem pravi, dum suae vitium fortitudinis ignorant, audenter aliorum rectitudinem lacerant; cumque contra bonos sibi auctoritatem increpationis arripiunt, aut ea bona proferunt, quae non videndo, sed audiendo didicerunt; aut ea aliis mala mentientes ingerunt, quae ipsi committunt. Sed cum ea bona proferunt quae servare contemnunt, sciendum est quia plerumque veritas sic per ora adversariorum sonat, ut eorum linguam movens vitam feriat, quatenus culmen rectitudinis loquentes et ignorantes, ipsi et verbis judices, et factis accusatores fiant. Unde Baldad mira quidem contra hypocritas subdit, sed mucrone verbi se impetit, quia simulator justitiae, nisi ex aliquantulo ipse esset, docere justum nequaquam tanta temeritate praesumeret. Et quidem fortia sunt valde quae dicit; sed haec stultis, non autem sapienti, pravis, non recto, dicere debuit, quia et vecordem se asserit qui, hortis sitientibus, in flumen aquam fundit. Sed interim postponentes cui dicitur, pensemus subtiliter quid dicatur, ut nos prolata instruant, quamvis meritum sui auctoris impugnent. Sequitur: VERS. 11. — Nunquid virescere potest seirpus absque humore, aut crescere carectum sine aqua? Cui Baldad scirpum, vel carectum comparet, ipse protinus aperit cum subjungit:

CAPUT XLII.

VERS. 12, 13. — Cum adhuc sit in flore, nec carpatur manu, ante omnes herbas arescit; sic viae omnium qui obliviscuntur Deum, et spes hypocritae peribit. 66. Hypocrita bonorum operum speciem, non fructum habet. Dona Dei ad incrementum damnationis habet. — Scirpi ergo vel carecti nomine hypocritae vitam signat, quae speciem quidem viriditatis habet, sed ad humanos usus fructum utilitatis non habet; quae, sterilitate operis arida permanens, solo sanctitatis colore viridescit. Sed neque sine humore scirpus, neque sine aqua carectum proficit, quia hypocritarum vita ad bona opera infusionem quidem superni muneris percipit, sed, in cunctis quae agit exteriores laudes appetens, a fructu perceptae infusionis inanescit. Saepe namque mira signorum opera faciunt, ab obsessis corporibus spiritus pellunt, et per prophetiae donum ventura quaeque sciendo praeveniunt, sed tamen a largitore tot munerum cogitationis intentione divisi sunt, quia per ejus dona non ejus gloriam, sed proprios favores quaerunt; cumque per accepta bona in sua laude se elevant, ipsis muneribus contra largitorem pugnant. Inde quippe contra dantem superbiunt, unde ei amplius humiles esse debuerunt. Sed eo eos postmodum districtior sententia percutit, quo nunc superna bonitas et ingratos largius infundit. Fitque eis amplitudo muneris 274 incrementum damnationis, quia irrigati fructum non ferunt, sed sub viriditatis colore vacui in altum crescunt. Quos bene per Evangelium Veritas exprimit, dicens: Multi dicent mihi in illa die: Domine, Domine, nonne in nomine tuo prophetavimus, et in nomine tuo daemonia ejecimus, et in nomine tuo virtutes multas fecimus? Et tunc confitebor illis, quia nunquam novi vos, discedite a me qui operamini iniquitatem (Matth. VII, 2). Scirpus igitur vel carectum sine aqua non vivit, quia nimirum hypocritae non nisi ex superno munere viriditatem bonae operationis accipiunt; sed quia hanc in usum propriae laudis arripiunt, in aqua quidem virides, sed tamen inanes crescunt. 67. Hypocrita correptionis est impatiens. — Bene autem subditur: Cum adhuc sit in flore, nec carpatur manu, ante omnes herbas arescit. Scirpus in flore est hypocrita in laude. Acutis vero angulis surgens carectum manu non carpitur, quia, exasperatis per arrogantiam sensibus, de pravitate sua hypocrita corripi dedignatur. In flore suo manum carpentis incidit, quia in laude hypocrita positus, ne hunc quisquam corripere audeat, asperitate sua protinus vitam corripientis secat. Sanctus namque non esse appetit, sed vocari; et cum fortasse corripitur, quasi in opinionis gloria detruncatur. Deprehensum se in pravitate irascitur, loqui sibi redarguentem prohibet, quia velut in occulto vulnere tactus dolet. Qualis imperitis innotuit, talis vult ab omnibus aestimari; et, paratior mori quam corripi, redargutione deterior redditur, quia quasi dirae percussionis aestimat jaculum puritatis verbum. Unde exasperatus protinus in contumelias surgit, et quae mala exaggeret contra vitam correptoris inquirit. Demonstrare longe incomparabiliter reum reprehensorem suum desiderat, ut innocentem se non suis actibus, sed alienis criminibus ostendat; ita ut saepe homo redargutionis aliquid se dixisse poeniteat, et quasi a carpentis manu, sic a corripientis animo quidam, ut ita dixerim, sanguis moeroris currat. Unde bene per Salomonem dicitur: Noli arguere derisorem, ne oderit te (Prov. IX, 8). Neque enim justo timendum est ne derisor cum corripitur contumelias inferat, sed ne tractus ad odium pejor fiat. 68. Hypocrita in bonis operibus non perseverat. — Inter haec sciendum est quod justorum bona, quia ex corde incipiunt, usque ad praesentis vitae terminum crescunt; hypocritarum vero opera, quia nequaquam sunt in occulto radicata, saepe ante deficiunt quam praesens vita finiatur. Nam plerumque studio sacrae eruditionis insistunt; et quia hanc non praeparandis meritis, sed promerendis favoribus inquirunt, statim ut judicium humanae laudis arripiunt, et per hoc gratiam transitorii profectus assequuntur, tota mente saecularibus curis inserviunt, atque a sacra funditus eruditione vacuantur; et agendo post indicant quantum temporalia diligant, qui sola prius aeterna praedicabant.

Plerumque autem assumptae speciem maturitatis ostendunt; quiete silentii, longanimitate patientiae, continentiae virtute decorantur; sed cum per haec quaesiti culmen honoris attigerint, cumque sibi jam reverentia a cunctis impenditur, protinus se in lasciviam voluptatis fundunt, et bona se non 275 ex corde tenuisse ipsi sibi testes sunt qui haec cito dimiserunt. Nonnunquam vero aliqui quae possident tribuunt, atque indigentibus cuncta largiuntur; sed tamen ante vitae terminum, avaritiae prurigine accensi, aliena appetunt, qui sua largiri videbantur, et pertinaci post crudelitate ambiunt quod ficta prius pietate reliquerunt. Unde et recte nunc dicitur: Cum adhuc sit in flore, ne carpatur manu, ante omnes herbas arescit. Juxta carnem quippe et justi herba sunt, propheta attestante, qui ait: Omnis caro fenum (Isai. XL, 6). Sed ante omnes herbas arescere scirpus dicitur, quia, justis in bono suo permanentibus, a viriditate assumptae rectitudinis hypocritarum vita siccatur. Arescunt herbae etiam reliquae, quia justorum opera cum carnis vita deficiunt. Sed herbarum ariditatem scirpus praevenit, quia priusquam de carne hypocrita transeat, ea quae in se ostenderat virtutum facta derelinquit. De quibus bene etiam per Psalmistam dicitur: Fiant sicut fenum aedificiorum, quod prius quam evellatur arescit (Psal. CXXVIII, 6). Fenum quippe aedificii in alto nascitur, sed nequaquam pingui radice solidatur, quia et hypocrita summa quidem agere cernitur, sed non in eis ex cordis puritate roboratur. Quod nimirum fenum et non evulsum citius arescit, quia videlicet hypocrita et in praesenti adhuc vita subsistit, et jam sanctitatis opera quasi viriditatis speciem amittit. Quia enim sine intentione rectae cogitationis bona studuit agere, haec amittens, indicat se sine radice floruisse. 69. Hypocrita spe sua diu frui non valet. — Sed Baldad, sicut praediximus, cui scirpum vel carectum comparet, illico aperit, cum subjungit: Sic viae omnium qui obliviscuntur Deum, et spes hypocritae peribit. Quid enim cunctis suis operibus hypocrita sperat, nisi honoris reverentiam, gloriam laudis, a melioribus metui, sanctus ab omnibus vocari? Sed permanere spes hypocritae non valet, quia, aeternitatem non quaerens, fugit quod tenet. Nequaquam quippe mentis ejus intentio in illa gloria figitur quae sine fine possidetur, sed cum transitoriis favoribus inhiat, perdit percipiendo quod laborat, Veritate attestante, quae ait: Amen dico vobis quia receperunt mercedem suam (Matth. VI, 2, 5). Sed haec spes recipiendae mercedis teneri diu non potest, quia pro ostensis operibus honor tribuitur, sed vita ad terminum urgetur; laudes resonant, sed ad finem cum laudibus tempora festinant; et quia nequaquam animus in aeternitatis amore radicatur, cum ipsis profecto rebus quas diligit labitur. Nemo namque valet mobilia diligere et ipse immobilis stare. Qui enim transeuntia amplectitur, eo ipso ad cursum ducitur, quo decurrentibus implicatur. Dicat ergo: Et spes hypocritae peribit, quia humana laus quam magnis laboribus appetit impulsa temporum momentis decurrit. Bene autem subditur:

CAPUT XLIII.

VERS. 14. — Non ei placebit vecordia sua. 70. Rem magni pretii vili vendit hypocrita. Fecundae et neglectae viti similis est. — Magna quippe vecordia est laboriosa agere, et aurae laudis inhiare; forti opere praeceptis coelestibus inservire, sed terrenae retributionis praemium quaerere. Ut enim ita dixerim, qui pro virtute quam agit humanos favores desiderat rem magni meriti vili pretio venalem portat; unde coeli regnum mereri potuit, inde nummum transitorii sermonis quaerit. Vili ergo pretio opus vendit, 276 quia magna impendit, sed minima recipit. Quibus itaque hypocritae similes, nisi fecundis et neglectis vitibus existunt, quae per ubertatem fructum proferunt, sed nequaquam per studium a terra sublevantur? Quod pingues palmites germinant, errantes bestiae conculcant; et quo hoc uberius aspiciunt, projectum in infimis avidius consumunt, quia nimirum hypocritarum opera, dum clara monstrantur, quasi pinguia prodeunt, sed dum humanas laudes appetunt quasi in terra deseruntur. Quae hujus mundi bestiae, maligni scilicet spiritus comedunt, quia haec ad usum perditionis inflectunt; tantoque ardentius rapiunt, quanto et magna clarius innotescunt. Unde bene per prophetam dicitur: Culmus stans, non est in eis germen, et non facient farinam; quod etsi fecerint, alieni comedent eam (Osee. VIII, 7). Culmus quippe germen non habet cum vita meritis virtutum caret. Farinam culmus non facit cum is qui in praesenti saeculo proficit nil subtilitatis intelligit, nullum boni operis fructum reddit. 71. Fructibus suis malignos spiritus satiat hypocrita. Pascitur et ipse modo, secus post mortem. — Sed saepe et cum fecerit, hanc alieni comedunt, quia et cum bona opera hypocritae ostendunt, de his malignorum spirituum vota satiantur. Qui enim per haec Deo placere non appetunt, nequaquam agri dominum, sed alienos pascunt. Fecundo itaque hypocrita et neglecto palmiti similis, servare fructum non valet, quia botrus boni operis in terra jacet. Sed tamen hac ipsa sua vecordia pascitur, quia pro bono opere a cunctis honoratur; caeteris praeeminet, subjectas hominum mentes tenet, majoribus locis attollitur, favoribus nutritur. Haec vero ei sua vecordia placet interim, sed non placebit, quia cum retributionis tempus advenerit, in poena displicet quod vecors fuit. Tunc se stulte egisse intelliget, cum pro delectatione laudis sententiam divinae increpationis acceperit. Tunc se vecordem fuisse considerat, cum se pro temporali quam percepit gloria perpetua tormenta castigant. Tunc veram scientiam supplicia aperiunt, quia per haec profecto colligitur nihil fuisse omnia quae transire potuerunt. Unde et recte subditur:

CAPUT XLIV.

IBID. — Et sicut tela aranearum fiducia ejus. 72. Hypocritae fiducia vana, bona coram Deo nulla, praedicatio infructuosa, abstinentia inanis. — Bene hypocritarum fiducia aranearum telis similis dicitur, quia omne quod ad obtinendam gloriam exsudant ventus vitae mortalis dissipat. Nam quoniam aeterna non quaerunt, bona temporalia cum tempore amittunt. Pensandum quoque est quod fila araneae per ordinem ducunt, quia sua hypocritae quasi sub discretione opera disponunt. Aranearum tela studiose texitur, sed subito flatu dissipatur, quia quidquid hypocrita cum labore peragit aura humani favoris tollit; et dum in appetitu laudis opus deficit, quasi in ventum labor evanescit. Saepe namque et usque ad praesentis vitae terminum hypocritarum facta perdurant, sed quia per haec auctoris laudem non quaerunt, bona ante Dei oculos nunquam fuerunt. Plerumque enim, ut praediximus, sacrae legis eruditione fulciuntur, doctrinae verba proferunt, omne quod sentiunt testimoniis accingunt, nec tamen per haec vitam audientium, sed proprios favores quaerunt, quia nec proferre alia noverunt, nisi quae auditorum corda ad rependendas laudes excutiant, non autem ad lacrymas accendant. 277 Mens quippe concupiscentiis exterioribus occupata igne divini amoris non calet; et idcirco ad supernum desiderium inflammare auditores suos nequeunt verba quae frigido corde proferuntur. Neque enim res quae in se ipsa non arserit aliud accendit. Unde fit plerumque ut hypocritarum dicta et audientes non erudiant, et eosdem ipsos qui se proferunt elatos laudibus deteriores reddant. Attestante etenim Paulo, Scientia inflat, charitas aedificat (I Cor. VIII, 1). Cum ergo charitas aedificando non erigit, scientia inflando pervertit. Plerumque se hypocritae mira abstinentia affligunt, omne robur corporis atterunt, et quasi carnis vitam funditus in carne viventes exstinguunt, sicque per abstinentiam morti appropiant, ut pene quotidie morientes vivant. Sed ad haec humanos oculos quaerunt, admirationis gloriam expetunt, Veritate attestante, quae ait: Exterminant facies suas, ut appareant hominibus jejunantes (Matth. VI, 16). Nam ora pallescunt, corpus debilitate quatitur, pectus interrumpentibus suspiriis urgetur. Sed inter haec, ab ore proximorum sermo admirationis quaeritur, nihilque tanto labore aliud, nisi aestimatio humana cogitatur. Quos nimirum bene Simon ille significat, qui dominicae passionis tempore in angariam crucem portabat, de quo scriptum est: Invenerunt hominem

Cyrenaeum, venientem obviam sibi, nomine Simonem; hunc angariaverunt, ut tolleret crucem Jesu (Matth. XXVII, 32; Marc. XV, 21). Quod enim per angariam agimus, non hoc ex studio amoris operamur. Crucem ergo Jesu in angaria portare est afflictionem abstinentiae pro alia quam necesse est intentione tolerare. An non Jesu crucem in angaria portat, qui quasi ad praeceptum Domini, carnem domat, sed tamen spiritalem patriam non amat? Unde et Simon isdem crucem portat, sed nequaquam moritur, quia omnis hypocrita corpus quidem per abstinentiam afficit, sed tamen per amorem gloriae mundo vivit.. VERS. 15. — Innititur super domum suam, et non stabit; fulciet eam, et non surget. 74. Hypocritae domus super quam innititur, favor humanus. Stare non valet. — Sicut domus exterioris conversationis est aedificium quod inhabitat corpus, ita domus nostrae cogitationis est res quaelibet quam per dilectionem inhabitat animus. Omne quippe quod diligimus, quasi in hoc quiescentes habitamus. Unde Paulus, quia in supernis cor fixerat, in terra quidem 278 positus, sed tamen a terra extraneus, dicebat: Nostra conversatio in coelis est (Philip. III, 20). Mens itaque hypocritae nihil aliud in omne quod agit nisi opinionis suae gloriam cogitat, nec curat quo post per meritum ducitur, sed quid interim dicatur. Domus ergo ejus est delectatio favoris, quam quasi quietus inhabitat, quia per cuncta sua opera ad hanc se intra animum reclinat. Sed stare domus haec non valet, quia laus cum vita praeterit, et humanus favor in judicio non subsistit. Unde et fatuae virgines, quae oleum in vasis non sumpserant, quia in alienis scilicet vocibus gloriam et non in suis conscientiis habebant, turbatae per sponsi praesentiam, dicunt: Date nobis de oleo vestro, quia lampades nostrae exstinguuntur (Matth. XXI, 8). Oleum quippe a proximis petere est gloriam boni operis a testimonio alieni oris implorare. Mens etenim vacua, cum cunctis suis laboribus nihil se intus tenuisse invenerit, testimonium foras quaerit. Ac si aperte fatuae virgines dicant: Cum nos repelli sine retributione conspicitis, dicite in nostro opere quid vidistis. Sed quia vita hypocritae, scirpi appellatione signata, qualiter in judicio reprobetur audivimus, prius quam districtus judex appareat, qualis ab hominibus habeatur audiamus. Sequitur:

CAPUT XLVI.

VERS. 16. — 279 Humectus videtur antequam veniat sol. 76. Nunc sanctus creditur hypocrita, sed Christo veniente iniquus apparebit. — Saepe in sacro eloquio Dominus solis appellatione figuratur, sicut per prophetam dicitur: Vobis autem qui timetis nomen Domini, orietur sol justitiae (Mal. IV, 2). Et sicut repulsi in judicio impii dicere Sapientiae libro describuntur: Erravimus a via veritatis, et lumen justitiae non luxit nobis, et sol non est ortus nobis (Sap. V, 6). Ante solem igitur scirpus humidus cernitur, quia prius quam divina districtio in judicio candeat, omnis hypocrita infusum se sanctitatis gratia ostentat; quasi virens aspicitur, quia justus aestimatur, honoris locum obtinet, de gloria sanctitatis pollet, a cunctis ei veneratio defertur, opinio laudis extenditur. Scirpus itaque iste in nocte humidus est; sole autem veniente siccatur, quia nimirum hypocrita in tenebris vitae praesentis sanctus ab omnibus creditur, sed cum districtus judex venerit, quam sit iniquus apparebit. Dicat ergo: Humectus videtur antequam veniat sol, quia virentem se nunc humanis oculis exhibet, sed in calore tunc divini judicii arescet. Sequitur:

CAPUT XLVII.

IBID. — Et in ortu suo germen ejus egreditur. 77. Statim ut recte agit, vult laudari hypocrita. Assumpto sanctitatis habitu, interdum pejor fit. — Herba quaelibet nascendo prius a terra producitur, aura et aestibus tangitur, sole ac pluviis nutritur, et tunc demum ad proferendum sui seminis germen aperitur. Scirpus vero cum flore suo nascitur, moxque a terra surgit, sui secum seminis germen producit. Bene ergo per herbas reliquas sancti quilibet, per scirpum vero hypocrita designatur, quia justi viri, prius quam in opere sanctae conversationis oriantur, hujus vitae hiemem tolerant, eosque gravium persecutionum aestus fatigant; sed cum recta faciunt, nequaquam hic suae rectitudinis remunerationem quaerunt; cum vero a praesentis mundi laboribus exeunt, ad aeternam patriam venientes, exspectata retributione perfruuntur. At contra hypocrita, quia mox in bono opere nascitur, praesentis mundi recipere gloriam conatur. Quasi scirpi more cum germine oritur, qui pro eo quod bene vivere incipit, quaerit statim ut a cunctis honoretur. Germen itaque in ortu est remuneratio in inchoatione. Saepe namque nonnulli apertae pravitatis vias deserunt, sanctitatis habitum sumunt; moxque ut prima limina bene vivendi contigerint, obliti qui fuerint, affligi jam per poenitentiam de consummatis nequitiis nolunt; laudari autem de inchoata justitia appetunt, praeesse caeteris etiam melioribus concupiscunt. Quos plerumque dum juxta votum praesens prosperitas sequitur, multo quam prius fuerant de sanctitatis habitu pejores fiunt. Nam rebus multiplicibus occupati, atque ipsa occupatione confusi, non solum perpetrata minime deplorant, sed adhuc quae deplorentur exaggerant. Scirpus itaque iste qui inter lapides commoratur, super acervum petrarum radices densat, quia omnis hypocrita cogitationes suas in exquirenda hominum admiratione multiplicat. Per omne enim quod hypocritae faciunt, quia occultis cogitationibus laudes hominum requirunt, quasi radices scirpi in acervum petrarum mittunt. Operaturi quippe laudes suas cogitant, laudati autem has secum taciti in cogitationibus versant. 282 Gaudent se praecipuos in humana aestimatione claruisse. Cumque inflati favoribus apud semetipsos intumescunt, saepe mirantur taciti etiam ipsi quod sunt. Videri quotidie semetipsis altiores cupiunt, ac miris inventionibus in opere excrescunt, quia sicut virtutes omne vitium enervant, sic arrogantia roborat. Cogit namque mentem juvenescere, et contra vires valere, quia et quod negat vigor valetudinis, imperat amor laudis. Unde et factis suis, ut diximus, arbitros inquirunt. Si vero eorum operi testes deesse contingat, narrant ipsi quae gesserint. Cumque efferri favoribus coeperint, saepe eisdem suis operibus quae egisse se referunt mentiendo aliquid adjungunt. Cum vero et vera dicunt, haec dicendo aliena faciunt, quia quaesitis remunerati favoribus, ab eorum intima retributione vacuantur. 82. Hypocrita bona sua dum ostentat, malignis spiritibus prodit. Hostes ad rapinam provocat, dum suas eis divitias detegit. — In eo enim quod bona sua patefaciunt, ostendunt malignis spiritibus, quasi insidiantibus hostibus, quae praedentur. Quorum profecto vitam illa cunctis notissima Ezechiae culpa figuravit, qui postquam una prece, et sub unius noctis spatio, centum octoginta quinque millia hostium angelo feriente prostravit, postquam occasui proximum ad altiora coeli spatia solem reduxit, postquam vitam propinquante jam termino coarctatam in tempora longiora protelavit, susceptis Babylonici regis nuntiis, bona omnia quae possidebat ostendit; sed prophetae voce protinus audivit: Ecce dies venient, et auferentur omnia quae in domo tua sunt, in Babylonem; non relinquetur quidquam, dicit Dominus (IV Reg. XX, 17). Sic sic nimirum hypocritae, postquam magnis virtutibus excrescunt, quia cavere malignorum spirituum insidias negligunt, et celari in eisdem virtutibus nolunt, bona sua ostendendo, hostium faciunt, et prodentes subito amittunt quidquid diutius studentes operantur. Hinc per Psalmistam dicitur: Tradidit in captivitatem virtutes eorum, et pulchritudines eorum in manus inimici (Psal. LXXVII, 61). Virtus quippe et pulchritudo arrogantium inimici manibus traditur, quia omne bonum quod per concupiscentiam laudis ostenditur occulti adversarii juri mancipatur. Hostes namque ad rapinam provocat, qui suas eorum notitiae divitias denudat. Quousque enim ab aeternae patriae securitate disjungimur, per latronum insidiantium iter ambulamus. Qui ergo in itinere depraedari formidat, abscondat necesse est bona quae portat. O miseri, qui affectantes laudes hominum, in semetipsis dissipant fructus laborum; cumque se ostendere alienis oculis appetunt, damnant quod agunt! Quos nimirum maligni spiritus cum ad jactantiam provocant, eorum, sicut diximus, opera captivantes denudant. Unde sub cujusdam gentis specie antiquorum hostium malitiam signans per prophetam Veritas dicit. Posuit vineam meam in desertum, decorticavit ficum meam, nudans exspoliavit eam, albi facti sunt rami ejus (Joel. I, 7). Insidiantibus quippe spiritibus, Dei vinea in desertum ponitur, cum plena fructibus anima humanae laudis cupiditate dissipatur. Ficum Dei gens ista decorticat, quia seductam mentem in favoris appetitum rapiens, quo hanc ad ostentationem pertrahit, tegmen ei humilitatis tollit; eamque nudans exspoliat, quia 283 quousque in bonis suis absconditur, quasi proprii tegminis cortice vestitur. Cum vero mens hoc quod egerit videri ab aliis concupiscit, quasi spoliata ficus eum qui se texerat corticem amisit. Ubi apte subditur: Albi facti sunt rami ejus, quia ostensa humanis oculis ejus opera candescunt, de sanctitate nomen sumitur, cum recta actio divulgatur. Sed quoniam, subducto cortice, rami fici hujus arefiunt, solerter intuendum est quia facta arrogantium humanis oculis ostensa unde placere appetunt inde siccantur. Mens itaque quae per jactantiam proditur, decorticata recte ficus vocatur, quia et candida est per hoc quod cernitur, et siccitati proxima per hoc quod tegmine corticis nudatur. Intus ergo sunt servanda quae agimus, si ab interno arbitro vicem recipere nostri operis exspectamus. Hinc est enim quod per Evangelium Veritas dicit: Nesciat sinistra tua quid faciat dextera tua; ut sit eleemosyna tua in abscondito, et Pater tuus, qui videt in abscondito, reddet tibi (Matth. VI, 3). Hinc est quod de electorum Ecclesia per Psalmistam dicitur: Omnis gloria ejus filiae regum ab intus (Psal. XLIV, 14). Hinc Paulus ait: Gloria nostra haec est, testimonium conscientiae nostrae (II Cor. I, 12). Filia quippe regum Ecclesia quae in bono est opere spiritalium principum praedicatione generata. Gloriam intus habet, quia hoc quod agit, in ostentationis jactantiam non habet. Gloriam suam Paulus testimonium conscientiae memorat, quia, favores oris alieni non appetens, vitae suae gaudia extra semetipsum ponere ignorat. Quia vero non solum ex sua perversitate hypocrita, sed adjuncta etiam sequacium perditione reprobatur, postquam non cognosci a judice dicitur, recte protinus subinfertur:

CAPUT L.

VERS. 18, 19. — Haec est enim laetitia viae ejus ut rursum de terra alii germinentur. 86. Multiplex hypocritae supplicium. — Ac si aperte diceretur: Veniente judice, nequaquam cognoscitur, sed multipliciter supplicia recipit, quia eo latius in sua iniquitate laetatus est, quo et in aliis mala propagavit. Cui enim hic non sufficit iniquitas propria, torqueatur illic necesse est et merito reatus alieni. Nunc itaque simulatores gaudeant, et humana judicia se obtinuisse glorientur; despiciatur justorum simplicitas, atque a calliditate duplicium fatuitas vocetur; citius despectus simplicium transit, citius duplicium gloria percurrit. Unde et apte subjungitur:

CAPUT LI.

VERS. 20. — Deus non projiciet simplicem, nec porriget manum malignis: 285 87. Propter bona non bona intentione facta, et propter dolos. — Quia nimirum districtus in judicio apparens, et despectum simplicium glorificando eriget, et malignorum gloriam reprobando confringet. Maligni enim vocantur hypocritae, qui bona non bene faciunt, et recta quaeque sub studio laudis operantur. Manum vero cui porrigimus, hunc videlicet ab imis elevamus. Malignis ergo Deus manum non porrigit, quia quaerentes terrenam gloriam in imo derelinquit, et quamlibet recta videantur esse quae agunt, hos ad gaudia superna non provehit. Vel certe ideo maligni appellantur hypocritae, quia benignitatem erga proximos ostendunt, et dolos suae iniquitatis operiunt. Per omne namque quod vel faciunt, vel loquuntur, simplicitatem exterius exhibent, sed subtilitate interius duplicitatis callent; puritatem superficie simulant, sed semper malitiam sub specie puritatis occultant. Quos contra bene per Moysen dicitur: Non indues vestem ex lana linoque contextam (Deut. XXII, 11, 12). Per lanam quippe simplicitas, per linum vero subtilitas designatur. Et nimirum vestis, quae ex lana linoque conficitur, linum interius celat, lanam in superficie demonstrat. Vestem ergo ex lana linoque contextam induit, qui in locutione vel actione qua utitur intus subtilitatem malitiae operit, et simplicitatem foras innocentiae ostendit. Quia enim sub puritatis imagine deprehendi calliditas non valet, quasi sub lanae grossitudine linum latet. Bene autem post reprobationem duplicium justorum remuneratio demonstratur, cum protinus subditur:

CAPUT LII.

VERS. 20, 21. — Donec impleatur risu os tuum, et labia tua jubilo. 88. Sanctorum risus post luctum. Jubilum. — Os quippe justorum tunc risu replebitur, cum eorum corda, finitis peregrinationis fletibus, aeternae laetitiae exsultatione satiabuntur. De hoc risu discipulis Veritas dicit: Mundus gaudebit, vos autem contristabimini; sed tristitia vestra vertetur in gaudium (Joan. XVI, 20). Et rursum: Videbo vos, et gaudebit cor vestrum, et gaudium vestrum nemo auferet a vobis (Ibid., 22). De hoc risu sanctae Ecclesiae Salomon ait: Ridebit in die novissimo (Prov. XXXI, 25). De hoc iterum dicitur: Timenti Dominum, bene erit in extremis (Eccli. I, 13). Non autem tunc risus erit corporis, sed risus cordis. Risus enim nunc corporis de lascivia dissolutionis, nam risus cordis tunc de laetitia nascetur securitatis. Cum ergo electi omnes implentur gaudio manifestae contemplationis, quasi ad hilaritatem risus exsiliunt in ore mentis. Jubilum vero dicimus, cum tantam laetitiam corde concipimus, quantam sermonis efficacia non explemus; et tamen mentis exsultatio hoc quod sermone non explicat voce sonat. Bene autem os risu impleri dicitur, labia jubilo, quia in illa aeterna patria, cum justorum mens in exsultationem rapitur, lingua in cantum laudis elevatur. Qui quoniam tantum vident, quantum dicere non valent, in risu jubilant, quia non explendo resonant quod amant.. VERS. 22. — Qui oderunt te induenter confusione. 90. Reprobi unde erubescent in die judicii. — Justorum hostes in extremo examine confusio induit, quia cum transacta mala redundare sibi ante oculos mentis aspexerint, suus eos undique deprimens reatus vestit. Ad poenam quippe tunc factorum suorum memoriam tolerant, qui nunc quasi a sensu rationis extranei gaudentes peccant. Ibi vident quantum debuerint fugere quod amaverunt, ibi conspiciunt quam lugubre fuerit quod nunc in culpa gratulantur. Tunc animum reatus obnubilat, et recordationis suae jaculis ipsa se conscientia impugnat. Quis igitur digne penset iniquorum confusio quanta tunc erit, quando et foris aeternus judex cernitur, et intus ante oculos culpa versatur? Qui ad haec idcirco perveniunt, quia sola hic transeuntia dilexerunt. Unde et apte mox subditur:

CAPUT LIV.

IBID. — Et tabernaculum impiorum non subsistet. 91. Quae circa terrena bona reproborum affectio. Quae justorum. — Tabernaculum quippe construitur ut ab aestu corpus et frigore defendatur. Quid itaque hoc loco tabernaculi nomine nisi aedificatio terrenae felicitatis exprimitur, per quam super se reprobi casura multiplicant, ut se a praesentis vitae necessitatibus quasi ab aestu et imbribus defendant? Honoribus namque excrescere ambiunt, ne despecti videantur. Terrena aggregando exaggerant, ne inopiae frigore tabescant. Contemnunt curare quod sequitur, et tota intentione satagunt ne quid in praesentibus desit. Student nomen dilatare, ne lateant; et si cuncta ad desiderium suppetant, munitos se in omnibus et felices putant. Ubi ergo 287 mentis habitationem construunt, ibi procul dubio tabernacula fixerunt. Adversa impatienter perferunt, remisse in prosperis laetantur. Sola quae adsunt cogitant, nec ad affectum coelestis patriae ulla recordatione respirant. Gaudent sibi suppetere bona quae cupiunt; atque ubi carne requiescunt, ibi et mentem exstinguendo sepeliunt, quia, saecularis curae telo trucidati, terrenarum rerum aggerem, quem foras exquirendo multiplicant, hunc semper interius per cogitationem portant. 92. At contra justi nec oblata bona hic pro magno suscipiunt, nec illata mala valde pertimescunt. Sed et cum bonis praesentibus utuntur, ventura mala metuunt; et cum de malis praesentibus gemunt, bonorum sequentium amore consolantur. Sicque temporali refoventur subsidio, sicut viator in stabulo utitur lecto: pausat, et recedere festinat; quiescit corpore, sed ad aliud tendit mente. Nonnunquam vero et adversa perpeti appetunt, in transitoriis prosperari refugiunt, ne delectatione itineris a patriae perventione tardentur, ne gressum cordis in via peregrinationis figant, et quandoque ad conspectum coelestis patriae sine remuneratione perveniant. Gaudent despici, nec dolent se necessitatibus affligi. Qui ergo contra praesentia se adversa non muniunt, quasi contra aestus et pluvias habere tabernaculum nolunt. Unde et Petrus jure reprehenditur, quia necdum mentis perfectione roboratus, veritatis claritate cognita, in terra figere tabernaculum conatur (Matth. XVII, 4; Marc. IX, 2). Justi itaque hic se construere negligunt, ubi peregrinos se et hospites noverunt. Quia enim in propriis gaudere desiderant, esse in alieno felices recusant. Injusti autem quanto longius ab aeternae patriae haereditate divisi sunt, tanto in terra altius fundamenta cogitationis figunt. 288 Hinc est quod ab ipso humanae conditionis exordio, in electa prole Enoch septimus nascitur. Hinc est quod Cain primum filium Enoch vocat, atque ex ejus nomine civitatem quam condidit appellat (Genes. IV, 17). Enoch quippe dedicatio dicitur. Iniqui ergo se in primordiis dedicant, quia in hac vita, quae ante est, cordis radicem plantant, ut hic ad votum floreant, et a sequenti patria funditus arescant. Justis vero Enoch septimus oritur, quia eorum vitae festa dedicatio in fine servatur. Hinc est quod, attestante Paulo, Abraham in casulis habitat (Hebr. XI, 9), quia habentem fundamenta civitatem, quam supernus artifex construxit, exspectat. Hinc est quod Jacob greges ovium sequens humiliter, graditur (Genes. XXXIII, 14), atque huic Esau obviam veniens tumultu multiplicis comitatus elevatur, quia nimirum et electi hic elationem non habent, et in bonis carnis reprobi laeti tument. Hinc ad Israel Dominus dicit: Si elegeris unum de populo terrae, et constitueris principem super te, non faciet sibi equos et equites (Deut. XVII, 16). Et tamen primus rex ab eodem populo electus, repente ut culmen potestatis attigit, tria millia sibimet equites elegit, in elationem protinus prodiit, ad aedificationem percepti culminis erupit (I Reg. XIII, 2), quia foras restringere sub aequalitate non poterat quod intus animus super caeteros tumebat. Quasi munitum sibi dives ille tabernaculum construxerat, qui dicebat: Anima, habes multa bona reposita in annos multos: requiesce, comede et bibe, et epulare (Luc. XII, 19). Sed quia ejus tabernaculum in veritatis fundamento non subsistit, illico audivit: Stulte, hac nocte repetunt animam tuam abs te; quae praeparasti, cujus erunt (Ibid., 20)? Bene ergo dicitur: Tabernaculum impiorum non subsistet, quia vitae fugientis amatores, dum studiose se in praesentibus construunt, repente ad aeterna rapiuntur.

LIBER NONUS.

CAPUT NONUM CUM TOTO DECIMO EXPLANAT.

CAPUT PRIMUM.

287 1. Perversi recta ut prava adversantium dicta rejiciunt, secus boni. — Perversae mentes si semel ad studium contrarietatis eruperint, sive pravum, seu rectum quid a contradicentibus audiant, adversis hoc responsionibus impugnant, quia cum persona per contrarietatem displicet, nec recta quae protulerit placent. At contra bonorum corda, quibus in odium non venit persona, sed culpa, sic perversa dijudicant, ut recta quae dicuntur assumant. Discernendis quippe contradicentium sensibus aequissimi arbitri resident, et sic male prolata respuunt, ut tamen approbent quae ex veritate cognoscunt. Solet namque inter spinarum multitudinem, etiam de frugis semine spica succrescere. Cauta ergo manu operantis agendum est, ut dum spina tollitur, spica nutriatur, quatenus qui studet eradicare quod pungit, noverit servare quod reficit. Unde et beatus Job, quia Baldad Suhites recte per inquisitionem dixerat: Nunquid Deus supplantat judicium, aut Omnipotens 288 subvertit quod justum est (Job. VIII, 3)? quia vera in hypocritas robustaque protulerat, bene haec et contra pravos generaliter prolata conspiciens, studium propriae defensionis calcat, atque audita protinus approbat, dicens:

CAPUT II.

CAP. IX, VERS. 2. — Vere scio quod ita sit, et quod non justificatur homo compositus Deo. 2. Deo supponi debemus, non componi. — Homo quippe Deo suppositus justitiam percipit, compositus amittit, quia quisquis se auctori bonorum comparat, bono se quod acceperat privat. Qui enim accepta bona sibi arrogat, suis contra Deum donis pugnat. Unde ergo despectus erigitur, dignum est ut erectus inde destruatur. Sanctus autem vir, quia omne virtutis nostrae meritum esse vitium conspicit, si ab interno arbitro districte judicetur, recte subjungit:

CAPUT III.

Si voluerit contendere cum eo, non poterit respondere ei unum pro mille. 289 3. Dona Dei amittit qui de eis extollitur. — In Scriptura sacra millenarius numerus pro universitate solet intelligi. Hinc etenim Psalmista ait: Verbi quod mandavit in mille generationes (Psal. CIV, 8); cum profecto constet, quod ab ipso mundi exordio usque ad Redemptoris adventum, per evangelistam non amplius quam septuaginta et septem propagines numerentur (Luc. III, 38). Quid ergo in millenario numero, nisi ad proferendam novam sobolem perfecta universitas praescitae generationis exprimitur? Hinc et per Joannem dicitur: Et regnabunt cum eo mille annis (Apoc. XX, 6), quia videlicet regnum sanctae Ecclesiae universitatis perfectione solidatur. Quia vero monas multiplicata in denarium ducitur, denarius per semetipsum ductus in centenarium dilatatur, qui rursus per denarium ductus in millenarium tenditur, cum ab uno incipimus, ut ad millenarium veniamus, quid hoc loco unius appellatione, nisi bene vivendi initium, quid millenarii numeri amplitudine nisi ejusdem bonae vitae perfectio designatur? Cum Deo autem contendere est non ei tribuere, sed sibi gloriam suae virtutis arrogare. Sed sanctus vir conspiciat quia et qui summa jam dona percepit, si de acceptis extollitur, cuncta quae acceperat amittit, et dicat: Si voluerit contendere cum eo, non poterit respondere ei unum pro mille. Qui enim cum auctore contendit, unum pro mille respondere non sufficit, quia qui de perfectione se erigit, habere se bene vivendi nec initium ostendit. Unum namque pro mille respondere non possumus, quia cum de bonae vitae perfectione extollimur, hanc nos nec inchoasse monstramus. Sed tunc de nostra infirmitate verius concutimur, si quam sit immensa potentia judicis, considerando pensamus. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT IV.

VERS. 4. — Sapiens corde est, et fortis robore. 4. Deus ut sapiens falli, ut fortis vitari non potest. — Quid mirum si conditorem sapientium, sapientem dicimus, quem ipsam esse sapientiam scimus? Et quid mirum quod fortem esse memorat, quem hanc ipsam esse fortitudinem nullus ignorat? Sed sanctus vir duobus verbis in laudem auctoris prolatis, aliquid nobis intimat, unde nos ad cognitionem nostram trepidos reducat. Sapiens quippe Deus dicitur, quia occulta nostra subtiliter agnoscit; et esse fortis adjungitur, quia valenter cognita percutit. Nec falli ergo a nobis, quia sapiens; nec vitari, quia fortis est, valet. Nunc ut sapiens omnia invisibilis aspicit, tunc ut fortis sine ullo obstaculo quos reprobat punit. Qui hoc quoque hic forti sapientia ordinat, ut humana mens cum contra auctorem se elevat, ipsa se sua elatione confundat. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT V.

IBID. — Quis restitit ei, et pacem habuit? 5. Qui Deo resistit, pace cadit. Resistere Deo quid sit. — Qui enim cuncta mirabiliter creat, ipse, ut creata sibimet conveniant ordinat. In quo ergo conditori resistitur, pacis conventio dissipatur, quia ordinata esse nequeunt, quae superni moderaminis dispositionem perdunt. Quae enim subjecta Deo in tranquillitate persisterent, ipsa se sibimet dimissa confundunt, quia in se pacem 290 non inveniunt, cui venienti desuper in auctore contradicunt. Sic summus ille angelicus spiritus, qui subjectus Deo in culmine stare potuisset, semetipsum repulsus patitur, quia per naturae suae inquietudinem foras vagatur. Sic primus humani generis parens, quia auctoris praecepto restitit, carnis protinus contumeliam sensit; et quia subesse conditori per obedientiam noluit, sub semetipso prostratus, et pacem corporis protinus amisit. Bene ergo dicitur: Quis restitit ei, et pacem habuit? quia perversa mens unde se contra auctorem erigit, inde se in semetipsa confundit. Resistere autem Deo dicimur, cum repugnare ejus dispositionibus conamur. Neque enim nostra infirmitas incommutabili ejus sententiae obviat, sed tamen quod explere non valet tentat. Nam saepe humana infirmitas occulte vim dispositionis agnoscit, et tamen hanc si mutare valeat appetit. Contraire satagit, sed ipso se gladio contradictionis frangit. Ordini interno renititur, sed suis victa conatibus ligatur. Habere ergo pacem resistens non potest, quia dum superbiam confusio sequitur, quod stulte per culpam geritur, hoc in agentis poenam mirabiliter ordinatur. Sed vir sanctus, virtute prophetici spiritus plenus, cum confusionem generaliter humanae superbiae conspicit, ad speciale malum protinus plebis Israeliticae oculos mentis tendit, et quae poena elatos omnes maneat, ex unius gentis interitu ostendit. Nam repente subjungit, dicens:

CAPUT VI.

VERS. 5. — Qui transtulit montes, et nescierunt hi, quos subvertit in furore suo. 6. Praedicitur verbi Dei praedicatio a Judaeis ad gentes transferenda. — In Scriptura sacra saepe montium nomine praedicantium altitudo signatur de quibus per Psalmistam dicitur: Suscipiant montes pacem populo tuo (Psal. LXXI, 3). Electi quippe praedicatores aeternae patriae non immerito montes vocantur, quia per vitae suae celsitudinem ima terrarum deserunt, et coelo propinqui fiunt. Sed montes Veritas transtulit, cum praedicatores sanctos a Judaeae obduratione subtraxit. Unde recte etiam per Psalmistam dicitur: Transferentur montes in cor maris (Psal. XLV, 3). In cor enim maris montes translati sunt cum praedicantes apostoli a Judaeae perfidia repulsi, ad intellectum gentilium venerunt. Unde ipsi quoque in suis Actibus dicunt:

Vobis oportebat primum loqui verbum Dei; sed quia repellitis illud, et indignos vos judicastis aeternae vitae, ecce convertimur ad gentes (Act. XIII, 46). Sed hanc eamdem translationem montium hi ipsi nescierunt, qui in Domini furore subversi sunt, quia cum de suis finibus Hebraei apostolos pellerent, lucrum se fecisse arbitrati sunt, quod praedicationis lumen amiserunt. Exigentibus quippe meritis, justa animadversione percussi, tanto intelligentiae errore caecati sunt, ut quod lucem perderent, hoc esse gaudium putarent. Sed repulsis apostolis, per Romanum protinus principem Titum Judaea destruitur, atque in cunctis gentibus sparsa dissipatur. Unde et translatis montibus recte subjungitur:

CAPUT VII.

VERS. 6. — Qui commovet terram de loco suo, et columnae ejus concutientur. 291 7. Judaeorum dispersio praedicitur. — De loco quippe suo terra commota est cum plebs Israelitica, de Judaeae finibus evulsa, nimirum colla gentibus subdidit, quia subdi auctori recusavit. Quae scilicet terra columnas habuit, quia in sacerdotes et principes, legis doctores atque Pharisaeos, ruitura ejus pertinaciae structura surrexit. In ipsis namque litterae aedificium tenuit, et tranquillitatis suae tempore, sacrificiorum carnalium quasi superimpositae fabricae onera portavit. Sed translatis montibus, columnae concussae sunt, quia subductis a Judaea apostolis, nec ipsi vivere in illa permissi sunt, qui ab illa vitae praedicatores expulerunt. Dignum quippe erat ut terrenam patriam subacti perderent, cujus amore nequaquam veriti sunt coelestis patriae milites impugnare. Sed expulsis sanctis doctoribus, Judaea funditus torpuit, et justo judicantis examine in erroris sui tenebris mentis oculos clausit. Unde et adhuc subditur:

CAPUT VIII.

VERS. 7. — Qui praecipit soli, et non oritur; et stellas claudit quasi sub signaculo. 8. Praedicatoribus expulsis Judaeae lux defuit. — Aliquando namque in sacro eloquio solis nomine, praedicatorum claritas designatur; sicut per Joannem dicitur: Factus est sol ut saccus cilicinus (Apoc. VI, 12). In extremo quippe tempore sol quasi cilicinus saccus ostenditur, quia fulgens vita praedicantium, ante reproborum oculos aspera et despecta monstratur. Qui stellarum quoque claritate figurantur, quia dum recta peccatoribus praedicant, tenebras nostrae noctis illustrant. Unde et subtractis praedicatoribus, per prophetam dicitur: Prohibitae sunt stellae pluviarum (Jerem. III, 3). Quia vero sol per diem fulget, stellae obscuritatem noctis irradiant; et plerumque in sacro eloquio diei appellatione aeterna patria, noctis autem nomine praesens vita signatur: praedicatores sancti ut sol nostris oculis fiunt cum contemplationem nobis verae lucis aperiunt, et velut stellae in tenebris lucent cum per activam vitam profuturi nostris necessitatibus terrena disponunt. Quasi in die ut sol coruscant cum ad contemplandam internae claritatis patriam mentis nostrae aciem sublevant; et quasi stellae in nocte resplendent, quia et cum terrena agunt offensurum jamjamque nostri operis pedem exemplo suae rectitudinis dirigunt. Sed quia expulsis praedicatoribus non fuit qui plebi Judaicae in perfidiae suae nocte remanenti vel claritatem contemplationis ostenderet, vel activae vitae lumen aperiret (veritas quippe, quae hanc repulsa deseruit, subtracto praedicationis lumine, merito suae pravitatis excaecavit), recte dicitur: Qui praecipit soli, et non oritur; et stellas claudit quasi sub signaculo. Oriri quippe ei solem noluit, a qua praedicantium animum divertit. Et quasi sub signaculo stellas clausit, qui dum praedicatores suos per silentium intra semetipsos retinuit, caecis iniquorum sensibus coeleste lumen abscondit. VERS. 8. — Qui extendit coelos solus. 10. Evangelium a Judaeis repelli permisit Deus, ut in omnes gentes diffunderetur. — Quid namque coelorum nomine nisi haec eadem coelestis praedicantium vita designatur? De quibus per Psalmistam dicitur: Coeli enarrant gloriam Dei (Psal. XVIII, 1). Ipsi igitur coeli, ipsi sol esse memorantur; coeli scilicet, quia intercedendo protegunt; sol autem, quia praedicando vim luminis ostendunt. Commota igitur terra, coeli extensi sunt, quia cum Judaea ad vim persecutionis infremuit, apostolorum vitam Dominus in cunctarum gentium cognitionem dilatavit; et dum illa per judicium in mundum captiva dispergitur, isti ubique per gratiam in honorem tenduntur. Angusti quippe coeli fuerant, cum una plebs tot egregios praedicatores tenebat. Quis enim gentilium Petrum nosset, si in solius Israelitici populi praedicatione remaneret? Quis Pauli virtutes agnosceret, nisi hunc Judaea ad nostram notitiam persequendo transmisisset? Ecce jam qui flagris et contumeliis ab Israelitica plebe repulsi sunt per mundi fines honorantur. Solus ergo Dominus coelos tetendit, qui secreti mira dispensatione consilii praedicatores suos unde permisit in una gente opprimi, fecit in mundi cardines inde dilatari. Sed neque ipsa haec praesenti dedita mundo gentilitas, cum culpas ejus apostolorum lingua corripuit, verba vitae libenter accepit. Nam protinus in elationem contradictionis intumuit, atque ad crudelitatem se persecutionis excitavit. Sed quae praedicationis verbis contraire nititur, signorum citius admiratione temperatur. Unde apte quoque in auctoris laudem subjungitur:

CAPUT X.

IBID. — Et graditur super fluctus maris. 293 11. Gentilium persecutiones miraculorum virtute frangendae. — Quid enim maris nomine nisi in bonorum nece saeviens mundi hujus amaritudo signatur? De quo et per Psalmistam dicitur: Congregans quasi in utre aquas maris (Psal. XXXII, 7). Aquas etenim maris quasi in utre Dom nus congregat cum, miro moderamine cuncta disponens, in suis clausas cordibus carnalium minas frenat. Super fluctus ergo maris Dominus graditur, quia cum se procellae persecutionis erigunt, miraculorum ejus obstupefactione franguntur. Qui enim tumores humanae vesaniae mitigat, quasi erectas in cumulo undas calcat. Nam cum morem suum gentilitas destrui novae conversationis praedicatione conspiceret, cum mundi hujus divites elationi suae contraire viderent facta pauperum, cum sapientes saeculi adversari sibi imperitorum verba pensarent, in persecutionis protinus tempestatem tumuerunt. Sed qui, verborum adversitate commoti, ad persecutionis procellas insiliunt, signorum, ut diximus, admiratione temperantur. Tot ergo in his fluctibus Dominus gressus posuit, quot superbis persecutoribus miracula ostendit. Unde bene rursum per Psalmistam dicitur: Mirabiles elationes maris, mirabilis in excelsis Dominus (Psal. XCII, 4), quia contra electorum vitam ad persecutionis undas mundus se mirabiliter extulit, sed has supernorum conditor sublevata virtute praedicantium mirabilius stravit; ministros etenim suos plus ostendit posse per miracula, quam potestates terrenae tumuerant per iram. Quod bene etiam per Jeremiam Dominus exteriora narrans, interiora denuntians, dicit: Posui arenam terminum mari, praeceptum sempiternum quod non praeteribit; et commovebuntur, et non poterunt, et intumescent fluctus ejus, et non transibunt illum (Jerem. V, 22). Arenam quippe Dominus mari terminum posuit, quia ad frangendam mundi gloriam abjectos et pauperes elegit. Cujus nimirum maris fluctus intumescunt, cum potestates saeculi ad commotionem persecutionis exsiliunt. Sed transire arenam nequeunt, quia despectorum miraculis et humilitate franguntur. Sed dum mare saevit, dum per insaniae suae fluctus erigitur, quia tamen virtutis intimae ostensione calcatur, sancta Ecclesia proficit, atque ad statum sui ordinis per temporum incrementa consurgit. Unde et apte mox subditur:

CAPUT XI.

VERS. 9. — Qui facit Arcturum, et Orionas, et Hyadas, et interiora Austri.

12. Verbis sapientum mundi cur utatur Scriptura. — Nequaquam sermo veritatis vanas Hesiodi, Arati, et Callimachi fabulas sequitur, ut Arcturum nominans, extremam stellarum septem caudam Ursae suspicetur, et quasi Orion gladium teneat amator insanus. Haec quippe astrorum nomina a cultoribus sapientiae carnalis inventa sunt; sed Scriptura sacra idcirco eisdem vocabulis utitur, ut res quas insinuare appetit notitia usitatae appellationis exprimantur. Nam si astra quae vellet per ignota nobis nomina diceret, homo, pro quo haec eadem Scriptura facta est, nesciret procul dubio quid audiret. Sic igitur in sacro eloquio sapientes Dei sermonem trahunt a sapientibus saeculi, sicut in eo pro utilitate hominis vocem in se humanae passionis ipse conditor hominum sumit Deus, ut videlicet dicat: Poenitet me 294 fecisse hominem super terram (Genes. VI, 6, 7); cum profecto constet quia is qui cuncta prius quam veniant conspicit, nequaquam postquam aliquid fecerit poenitendo resipiscat. Quid ergo mirum si spiritales viri utuntur verbis carnalium, quando ipse ineffabilis et creator omnium Spiritus, ut ad intellectum suum carnem pertrahat, in se ipso carnis sermonem format? In Scriptura igitur sacra dum nota astrorum nomina audimus, de quibus astris sermo moveator agnoscimus. Cum vero quae narrentur astra perpendimus, restat ut ex eorum motibus ad spiritualis intelligentiae arcana surgamus. Neque enim juxta litteram mirum aliquid dicitur, quod Deus Arcturum, Orionas, et Hyadas fecit, de quo nimirum constat quia omnino in mundo nihil sit quod ipse non fecerit. Sed sanctus vir haec fecisse Dominum dicit: per quae signari proprie ea quae spiritaliter geruntur intelligit. 13. Arcturus significat Ecclesiam. — Quid namque Arcturi nomine, qui, in coeli axe constitutus, septem stellarum radiis fulget, nisi Ecclesia universalis exprimitur, quae in Joannis Apocalypsi per septem Ecclesias septemque candelabra figuratur (Apoc. I, 12, 20)? Quae dum dona in se septiformis gratiae Spiritus continet, claritate summae virtutis irradians, quasi ab axe veritatis lucet. Pensandum quoque est quod Arcturus semper versatur, et nunquam mergitur, quia et sancta Ecclesia persecutiones iniquorum sine cessatione tolerat, sed tamen usque ad mundi terminum sine defectu perdurat. Saepe namque eam reprobi, quia usque ad internecionem persecuti sunt, quasi hanc se funditus exstinxisse crediderunt; sed eo multiplicius ad statum sui provectus rediit, quo inter manus persequentium moriendo laboravit. Arcturus ergo dum versatur erigitur, quia tunc sancta Ecclesia valentius in veritate reficitur, cum ardentius pro veritate fatigatur. 14. Oriones martyres. — Unde apte quoque post Arcturum protinus Orionas subdit. Oriones quippe in ipso pondere temporis hiemalis oriuntur, suoque ortu tempestates excitant, et maria terrasque perturbant. Quid igitur post Arcturum per Orionas nisi martyres designantur? Quid, dum sancta Ecclesia ad statum praedicationis erigitur, pondus persequentium molestiasque passuri, ad coeli faciem quasi in hieme venerunt. His etenim natis, mare terraque turbata est, quia dum gentilitas mores suos destrui, apparente illorum fortitudine, doluit, in eorum necem non solum iracundos ac turbidos, sed etiam placidos erexit. Ex Orionibus itaque hiems inhorruit, quia, clarescente sanctorum constantia, frigida mens infidelium ad tempestatem se persecutionis excitavit. Orionas ergo coelum edidit, cum sancta Ecclesia martyres misit. Qui dum loqui recta rudibus ausi sunt, omne pondus ex frigoris adversitate pertulerunt. 15. Hyades doctores. — Bene autem protinus Hyadas subdit, quae juvenescente verno ad coeli faciem prodeunt, et cum jam sol caloris sui vires exerit ostenduntur. Illius quippe signi initiis inhaerent quod sapientes saeculi Taurum vocant, ex quo augeri sol incipit, 295 atque ad extendenda diei spatia ferventior exsurgit. Qui itaque post Orionas Hyadum nomine nisi doctores sanctae Ecclesiae designantur? Qui, subductis martyribus, eo jam tempore ad mundi notitiam venerunt quo fides clarius elucet, et, repressa infidelitatis hieme, altius per corda fidelium sol veritatis calet. Qui, remota tempestate persecutionis, expletis noctibus longae infidelitatis, tunc sanctae Ecclesiae exorti sunt, cum ei jam per credulitatis vernum lucidior annus aperitur. Nec immerito doctores sancti Hyadum nuncupatione signantur. Graeco quippe eloquio ὑετὸς pluvia vocatur, et Hyades nomen a pluviis acceperunt, quia ortae procul dubio imbres ferunt. Bene ergo Hyadum appellatione expressi sunt qui, ad statum universalis Ecclesiae quasi in coeli faciem deducti, super arentem terram humani pectoris sanctae praedicationis imbres fuderunt. Si enim praedicationis sermo pluvia non esset, Moyses minime dixisset: Exspectetur sicut pluvia eloquium meum (Deut. XXXII, 2); nequaquam per Isaiam Veritas diceret: Mandabo nubibus, ne pluant super eam imbrem (Isai. V, 6); atque hoc, quod paulo ante protulimus: Quamobrem prohibitae sunt stellae pluviarum (Jerem. III, 3). Dum ergo Hyades cum pluviis veniunt, ad coeli spatia altiora sol ducitur, quia, apparente doctorum scientia, dum mens nostra imbre praedicationis infunditur, fidei calor augetur. Et perfusa terra ad fructum proficit, cum lumen aetheris ignescit, quia uberius frugem boni operis reddimus, dum per sacrae eruditionis flammam in corde clarius ardemus. Dumque per eos diebus singulis magis magisque scientia coelestis ostenditur, quasi interni nobis luminis vernum tempus aperitur, ut novus sol nostris mentibus rutilet, et eorum verbis nobis cognitus, se ipso quotidie clarior micet. Urgente etenim mundi fine, superna scientia proficit, et largius cum tempore excrescit. Hinc namque per Danielem dicitur: Pertransibunt plurimi, et multiplex erit scientia (Dan. XII, 4). Hinc Joanni in priori parte revelationis angelus dicit: Signa quae locuta sunt septem tonitrua (Apoc. X, 4). Cui tamen in ejusdem revelationis termino praecipit, dicens: Ne signaveris verba prophetiae libri hujus (Ibid., XXII, 10). Pars quippe revelationis anterior signari praecipitur, terminus prohibetur, quia quidquid in sanctae Ecclesiae initiis latuit, finis quotidie ostendit. Nonnulli vero a Graeca littera quae y dicitur Hyadas nuncupatas arbitrantur. Quod si ita est, significationi quam diximus contrarium non est. Doctores enim his stellis non inconvenienter expressi sunt quae a litteris nomen trahunt. Sed quamvis Hyades ab ejusdem litterae visione non discrepent, certum tamen est quia ὑετὸς imber dicitur, et ortae pluvias apportant. 16. In Ecclesia fulserunt apostoli, tum martyres, post doctores. — Vir igitur sanctus redemptionis nostrae ordinem contemplatus admiretur, atque admirans exclamet, dicens: Qui extendit coelos solus, et graditur super fluctus maris; qui facit Arcturum, et Orionas, et Hyadas. Extensis etenim coelis, Dominus formavit Arcturum, quia, in honorem deductis apostolis, in coelesti conversatione fundavit Ecclesiam. Formato quoque Arcturo, fecit 296 Orionas, quia, roborata fide universalis Ecclesiae, contra procellas mundi edidit martyres. Editis quoque Orionibus, protulit Hyadas, quia, convalescentibus contra adversa martyribus, ad infundendam ariditatem humanorum cordium doctrinam contulit magistrorum. Isti itaque sunt astrorum spiritalium ordines, qui, dum summis virtutibus eminent, semper ex supernis lucent. 17. Quae sanctis hinc migrantibus gloria praeparata. — Sed post ista quid restat, nisi ut sancta Ecclesia, laboris sui fructum recipiens, ad videnda supernae patriae intima perveniat? Unde apte, quia dixit, Qui facit Arcturum, et Orionas, et Hyadas, protinus addidit: Et interiora Austri. [Vet. IX.] Quid namque in hoc loco Austri nomine nisi fervor sancti Spiritus designatur? quo dum repletus quisque fuerit, ad amorem patriae spiritalis ignescit. Unde et sponsi voce in Canticorum canticis dicitur: Surge, Aquilo, et veni, Auster, perfla hortum meum, et fluent aromata illius (Cant. IV, 16). Austro quippe veniente, Aquilo surgens recedit, cum adventu sancti Spiritus expulsus antiquus hostis, qui in torpore mentem constrinxerat, deserit. Atque hortum sponsi Auster perflat, ut aromata defluant, quia nimirum dum sanctam Ecclesiam donorum suorum virtutibus Spiritus veritatis impleverit, ab ea longe lateque odores boni operis spargit. Interiora ergo Austri sunt occulti illi angelorum ordines, et secretissimi patriae coelestis sinus, quos implet calor Spiritus sancti. Illuc quippe sanctorum animae et nunc corporibus exutae et post corporibus restitutae perveniunt, et quasi astra in abditis occultantur. Ibi per diem, quasi in meridiano tempore, ardentius solis ignis accenditur, quia conditoris claritas, mortalitatis nostrae jam pressa caligine, manifestius videtur; et velut sphaerae radius ad spatia altiora se elevat, quia de semetipsa nos veritas subtilius illustrat. Ibi lumen intimae contemplationis sine interveniente cernitur umbra mutabilitatis; ibi calor summi luminis sine ulla obscuritate corporis; ibi invisibiles angelorum chori quasi astra in abditis emicant, quae eo nunc ab hominibus videri nequeunt, quo flamma veri luminis altius perfunduntur. Valde itaque mirum est quod, missis apostolis, Dominus coelos tetendit; quod, temperatis persecutionum tumoribus, maris fluctus gradiens repressit; quod solidata Ecclesia, Arcturum statuit; quod, roboratis contra adversa martyribus, Orionas misit; quod, repletis in tranquillitate doctoribus, Hyadas praebuit; sed post haec valde est admirabile quod sinum nobis coelestis patriae quasi interiora Austri praeparavit. 18. Sanctorum pulchritudo alia morum, alia praemiorum. — Pulchrum est hoc omne quod quasi in coeli facie de divina dispensatione cernitur, sed longe illud et incomparabiliter pulchrius ad quod invisibiliter pervenitur. Unde bene iterum sponsus in sponsae suae laudibus dicit: Quam pulchra es, amica mea, quam pulchra! oculi tui columbarum, absque eo quod intrinsecus latet (Cant. IV, 1). Pulchram narrat, et pulchram replicat, quia alia ei est pulchritudo morum in qua nunc cernitur, atque alia pulchritudo praemiorum in qua tunc per conditoris sui speciem sublevabitur. Cujus videlicet membra omnes electi, quia ad cuncta simpliciter incedunt, ejus oculi 297 columbarum vocantur, qui magna luce irradiant, quia et signorum miraculis coruscant. Sed quantum est omne hoc miraculum quod videri potest? Illud de internis miraculum est mirabilius quod videri nunc non potest. De quo illic apte subditur: Absque eo quod intrinsecus latet. Magna quippe gloria aperti operis, sed longe incomparabilis occultae remunerationis. Quod ergo per beatum Job astrorum nomine, hoc Salomonis vocibus oculorum appellatione signatur; et quod per Salomonem dicitur:

Absque eo quod intrinsecus latet, hoc nobis beatus Job intimat, cum Austri interiora commendat. Sed ecce vir sanctus exteriora mirans, interiora considerans, aperta narrans, occulta penetrans, omne quod interius exteriusque agitur dicere conatur; sed opera summae magnitudinis quando explicet lingua carnis? Unde et apte mox haec eadem opera melius deficiendo comprehendit dicens:

CAPUT XII.

VERS. 10. — Qui facit magna, et inscrutabilia, et mirabilia, quorum non est numerus. 19. Dei opera facundius obstupescendo quam loquendo laudamus. — Divinae fortitudinis facta tunc verius explemus, cum haec nos explere non posse cognoscimus; tunc facundius loquimur, cum ab his obstupescendo reticemus. Ad narranda quippe Dei opera habet defectus noster, quam sufficienter exerat linguam suam, ut quae comprehendere idonee non valet, haec idonee mutus laudet. Unde bene per Psalmistam dicitur: Laudate eum in potentatibus ejus, laudate eum secundum multitudinem magnitudinis ejus (Psal. CL, 2). Ille quippe Dominum secundum multitudinem magnitudinis ejus laudat, qui se succumbere in ejus laudis expletione considerat. Dicat ergo: Qui facit magna, et inscrutabilia, et mirabilia, quorum non est numerus, videlicet magna virtute, inscrutabilia ratione, innumerabilia multiplicitate. Divina ergo opera, quae explere dicendo non potuit, facundius deficiendo definivit. Sed in consideratione rerum cur longe extra nos ducimur, qui hoc ipsum quoque quod erga nos agitur ignoramus? Unde et apte subjungitur:

CAPUT XIII VERS.

11. — Si venerit ad me, non videbo eum; et si abierit, non intelligam. 20. Homo ita caecus, ut gratiae donum saepe iram putet, ac vice versa. — Seclusum quippe ab internis gaudiis genus humanum, exigente culpa, mentis oculos perdidit, et quo meritorum suorum passibus graditur nescit. Saepe enim donum gratiae est, quod iram deputat, et saepe divinae districtionis ira est, quod gratiam putat. Nam plerumque gratiam aestimat dona virtutum, et tamen eisdem donis elatus corruit. Plerumque velut iram metuit adversa tentationum; et tamen, eisdem tentationibus pressus, ad virtutum custodiam cautior exsurgit. Quis enim Deo se propinquare non aestimet cum supernis excrescere se muneribus agnoscit, cum vel prophetiae donum; vel doctrinae magisterium percipit, vel ad exercendam curationis gratiam convalescit? Et tamen saepe mens, dum de virtutis suae securitate resolvitur, insidiante adversario, inopinatae culpae telo perforatur; et inde a Deo in aeternum longe fit, unde ei ad tempus sine cautelae custodia propinquavit. Et quis se derelictum jam gratia divina non deputet cum post experimentum munditiae lacessiri se carnis tentationibus videt, inhonesta ad animum congeri, et ante cogitationis oculos nonnulla improba et immunda 298 versari? Et tamen cum fatigant ista, nec superant, nequaquam per pollutionem trucidant, sed per humilitatem servant, ut infirmum se animus in tentatione deprehendens, totum se ad Divinitatis adjutorium conferat, et sui fiduciam funditus amittat; sicque fit ut inde altius Deo inhaereat, unde se a Deo profundius cecidisse suspirabat. Accessus igitur recessusque Dei a mente nostra minime cognoscitur, quousque rerum alternantium finis ignoratur, quia et de tentatione incertum est utrum probet an trucidet, et de donis nequaquam deprehenditur utrum hic desertos remunerent, an in via nutriant, ut ad patriam perducant. Homo ergo ab internis gaudiis semel expulsus clausas contra se januas secreti spiritalis aspiciat, atque ad semetipsum foras projectus in carne gemat, et, caecitatis suae damna considerans, dicat: Si venerit ad me, non videbo eum; et si abierit, non intelligam. Ac si aperte deploret, dicens: Postquam semel sponte oculos perdidi, quoniam quaesitae noctis caecitatem patior, nec ortum jam, nec occasum solis agnosco. Et tamen homo qui infirmitatis poena premitur, et caecitatis suae caligine gravatur, ad supernae lucis judicium properat, ut suorum actuum rationem reddat. Unde et mox subditur:

CAPUT XIV.

VERS. 12. — Si repente interroget, quis respondebit ei? 21. Deo judicanti aut percutienti respondere homo non sufficit. — Repente Deus interrogat cum nos ad districtionem sui examinis inopinatos vocat. Sed interrogationi illius respondere homo non sufficit, quia si remota tunc pietate discutitur, in illo examine etiam justorum vita succumbit. Vel certe interrogat cum duris nos percussionibus pulsat, ut cum mens nostra magna de se in tranquillitate aestimat, semetipsam veraciter qualis sit in perturbatione deprehendat. Et plerumque quoniam percutitur gemit, sed respondere non sufficit, quia et ipsa ei percussionis suae adversitas displicet; sed tamen semetipsum homo considerans, tacet, et divina judicia discutere metuit, quia esse se pulverem agnoscit. Unde et per Paulum dicitur: O homo, tu quis es qui respondeas Deo (Rom. IX, 20)? Respondere Deo non posse convincitur qui homo nominatur, quia per hoc quod de humo sumptus est, judicia superna discutere dignus non est. Unde hic quoque apte subjungitur:

CAPUT XV.

IBID. — Vel quis ei dicere potest, cur ita facis? 22. Dei facta non discutienda, sed veneranda. — Auctoris facta semper indiscussa veneranda sunt, quia injusta esse nequaquam possunt. Rationem quippe de occulto ejus consilio quaerere nihil est aliud quam contra ejus consilium superbire. Cum ergo factorum causa non deprehenditur, restat ut sub factis illius cum humilitate taceatur, quia nequaquam sufficit sensus carnis, ut secreta penetret majestatis. Qui ergo in factis Dei rationem non videt, infirmitatem suam considerans, cur non videat rationem videt. Unde et per Paulum quoque subsequenter adjungitur: Nunquid dicet figmentum ei qui se finxit: Quare me fecisti sic (Ibid.)? Quo enim se cernit figmentum divini operis, eo semetipsum redarguit, ne contra manum resultet operantis, quia qui benigne quod non erat fecit, quod est, injuste non deserit. Ad semetipsam ergo in percussione mens redeat, et quod apprehendere non valet, non requirat, ne si divinae irae causa discutitur, amplius discussa 299 provocetur; et quam placare humilitas poterat, inexstinguibiliter superbia accendat. Unde apte quoque de hac eadem ira protinus subditur:

CAPUT XVI.

VERS. 13. — Deus, cujus resistere irae nemo potest, et sub quo curvantur qui portant orbem. 23. Qua ratione irae Dei nemo resistat. Quaestionis solutio. — Mirum valde est quod irae Dei nullum posse resistere dicitur, cum multos indignationi supernae animadversionis obviasse eloquia divina testentur. An non irae Dei Moyses restitit, qui, pro cadente populo erectus, ipsum supernae percussionis impetum mortis suae oblatione restrinxit, dicens: Dimitte illis hanc noxam; alioqui dele me de libro tuo, quem scripsisti (Exod. XXXII, 31)? An non irae Dei Aaron restitit, cum inter viventes ac mortuos thuribulum sumpsit, atque animadversionis ignem incensi fumo temperavit (Num. XVI, 47, 48)? An non Phinees irae Dei restitit, qui, luxuriantes cum alienigenis in ipso coitu trucidans, zelum suum divinae indignationi obtulit, et furorem gladio placavit (Num. XXV, 11)? An non irae Dei David restitit, qui, angelo ferienti se offerens, placationis gratiam et ante tempus propositum exegit (II Reg. XXIV, 25)? An non Elias irae Dei restitit, qui longo jam tempore terra arente, subductas de coelo pluvias verbo revocavit (III Reg. XVIII, 44)? Quomodo ergo divinae irae nullum posse resistere dicitur, cum multos saepe restitisse exemplis existentibus demonstratur? Sed si subtiliter et haec beati Job eloquia, et illorum facta pensamus, et verum cognoscimus quia divinae irae non resistitur, et verum quia multi saepe restiterunt. Omnes enim sancti qui irae Dei obviant ab ipso accipiunt ut contra impetum percussionis ejus opponantur, atque, ut ita dixerim, cum ipso se erigunt contra ipsum, eosque divina vis sibi opponit secum, quia in eo quod adversum saevientis iram foris obtinent, intus eos gratia irascentis fovet; et famulantes interius levat, quos quasi adversantes exterius tolerat. Portat ergo contradictionem deprecantium quam aspirat; et velut nolenti imponitur, quod ab ipso ut fiat imperatur. Moysi etenim dicit: Dimitte me, ut irascatur furor meus contra eos, et deleam eos; faciamque te in gentem magnam (Exod. XXXII, 10). Quid est servo dicere, Dimitte me, nisi deprecandi ausum praebere? Ac si aperte diceretur: Pensa, quantum apud me valeas, et cognosce quia obtinere poteris quidquid pro populo exoras. Quod quia hac mente agitur, statim venia subjuncta testatur. Cum vero superna indignatio sese, ut ita dixerim, medullitus movet, hanc oppositio humana non retinet (23, q. 4, c. Vasis, § unde Grogorius); nec se utiliter cujuslibet deprecatio objicit, cum semel Deus aliquid ab intimis irascendo disponit. Hinc est enim quod Moyses, qui reatum totius plebis apud Deum suis precibus tersit, dumque se obicem obtulit, divinae iracundiae vim placavit, ad petram Horeb veniens, et pro aquae exhibitione diffidens, repromissionis terram ingredi, Domino irascente, non potuit (Num. XX, 12). Et saepe hac de re affligitur, saepe desiderio se excitante turbatur, et dispositae ultionis iracundiam repellere a semetipso non valuit, qui hanc, volente Domino, et a populo amovit. Hinc David, qui a prostrata plebe postmodum angeli gladium prece compescuit (II Reg. XXIV, 10), prius plorans et ejulans, nudis pedibus filium fugit; et quousque 300 perpetrati facinoris ultionem ad plenum reciperet, iram Dei pro semetipso temperare nequaquam valuit. Hinc Elias, ut sicut homo parum aliquid quasi de divina animadversione sentiret, qui verbo coelos aperuit (III Reg. XVII, 1), ante indignationem mulieris territus per desertum fugit; et pro semetipso infirmatur in formidine, qui furorem Dei placat aliis per interventionem (Ibid., XIX, 3). Irae igitur Dei et resisti valet, quando ipse qui irascitur opitulatur; et resisti omnino non valet, quando se et ad ulciscendum excitat, et ipse precem quae ei funditur non aspirat. Hinc ad Jeremiam dicitur: Tu ergo noli orare pro populo hoc, et ne assumas pro eis laudem et orationem, quia non exaudiam in tempore clamoris eorum ad me (Jerem. VII, 16). Et rursum: Si steterint Moyses et Samuel coram, me, non est anima mea ad populum istum (Jerem. XV, 1). 24. Orationis pro inimicis virtus. — Qua in re quaeri utiliter potest cur, relictis tot antiquioribus patribus, ad effundendam precem Moyses et Samuel tantummodo praestantius elegantiusque nominantur? Quod tamen facile agnoscimus, si ejus quae diligere et inimicos praecipitur charitatis merita pensamus. Conditoris namque auribus illa maxime oratio commendatur, quae pro inimicis quoque intercedere nititur. Unde et per semetipsam Veritas dicit: Orate pro persequentibus et calumniantibus vos (Matth. V, 44). Et rursum: Cum stabitis ad orandum, dimittite si quid habetis adversus alterum (Marc. XI, 25). Cum vero patrum priorum facta sacro eloquio describente revolvimus, Moysen et Samuelem exorasse pro adversantibus invenimus. Unus quippe eorum saevientis populi persecutionem fugit, et tamen pro vita sui persecutoris intervenit; alter, ex principatu populi dejectus, ipsis suis adversariis dicit: Absit a me hoc peccatum in Domino, quo minus cessem orare pro vobis (I Reg. XII, 23). Quid est ergo in difficultate deprecandi Moysen et Samuelem deducere, nisi apertius indicare quia ejus irae neque illi si astarent obsisterent, qui idcirco pro amicis intervenire citius possent, quia apud hunc intercedere et pro inimicis solerent? Hinc ad eamdem Judaeam dicitur: Plaga inimici percussi te, castigatione crudeli (Jerem. XXX, 14). Et rursum: Quid clamas ad me super contritione tua? Insanabilis est dolor tuus (Ibid., 15). Vir igitur sanctus aspiciat quia nullius interventu divina ira restringitur cum implacabiliter excitatur, et dicat: Deus, cujus resistere irae nemo potest. Quod bene et ad specialem intellectum ducimus, si ejusdem plebis Israeliticae damna pensamus, quam Redemptor per dispensationis suae mysterium ostensus superbientem deseruit, atque ad cognitionis suae gratiam gentes vocavit. Unde et apte mox subditur: Sub quo curvantur qui portant orbem.. VERS. 15. — Qui si habuero quidpiam justum, non respondebo, sed meum judicem deprecabor. 28. Justitia nostra eget veniae deprecatione. — Ut enim saepe diximus, omnis humana justitia injustitia esse convincitur, si districte judicetur. Prece ergo post justitiam indiget, ut quae succumbere discussa poterat, ex sola judicis pietate convalescat. Quae cum plene a perfectioribus habetur, haberi de illa quidpiam dicitur, quia mens humana et comprehensa vix peragit, et valde extrema sunt quae comprehendit. Dicat ergo: Qui si habuero quidpiam justum, non respondebo, sed meum judicem deprecabor. Velut si apertius fateatur, dicens: Et si ad opus virtutis excrevero, ad vitam non meritis, sed ex venia convalesco. Preci itaque innitendum est, cum recta agimus, ut omne quod juste vivimus, ex humilitate condiamus. 302 Sed plerumque ipsa nostra deprecatio tam multis tentationibus quatitur, ut pene a conspectu judicis repulsa videatur. Et saepe hanc creator misericors percipit; sed quia illibatam se ut vult exerere non valet, super se judicium reprobationis pavet. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT XIX.

VERS. 16. — Et cum invocantem me exaudierit, non credo quod exaudierit vocem meam. 29. Animi inter orandum alternantes motus. — Plerumque etenim mens divini amoris igne accenditur, atque ad intuenda coelestia et arcana sublevatur; ad summa jam rapitur, et, perfecto desiderio compuncta, ab infimis alienatur; sed repentina tentatione percussa, quae intentione forti erecta in Deum fuerat, obortis cogitationibus transfixa curvatur; ita ut seipsam discernere nequeat, atque inter vitia virtutesque deprehensa, ex qua parte sit valentior non agnoscat. Nam saepe ad hoc usque perducitur, ut miretur quomodo tam summa comprehendit, quam cogitatio illicita polluit; et rursum quomodo illicitas cogitationes recipit, quam super se valide fervor spiritus Quos alternantes cogitationum motus in animo bene Psalmista intuens, ait: Ascendunt usque ad coelos, et descendunt usque ad abyssos (Psal. CVI, 26). Usque ad coelos quippe ascendimus cum summa penetramus; sed ad abyssos usque descendimus, cum repente a contemplationis culmine per turpia tentamenta dejicimur. Motus itaque animi dum inter vota et vitia alternant, nimirum sibi certitudinem exauditionis obnubilant. Recte ergo dicitur: Et cum invocantem me exaudierit, non credo quod exaudierit vocem meam, quia mens ex ipsa sua mutabilitate fit trepida; et per hoc quod nolens patitur, repulsam se abjectamque suspicatur. 30. Judicii extremi severitas. Maxime in eos quos diu Dei patientia toleravit. — Libet intueri vir sanctus quanta se subtilitate dijudicat, ne quid in illo divina judicia reprehendant. Infirmitatem namque suam intuens, ait: Quantus ergo sum ego qui respondeam ei, et loquar verbis meis cum eo? [Rec. XII.] De justitiae suae meritis non confidens, sed ad solam se spem postulationis conferens subdit: Qui etiam si habuero quidpiam justum, non respondebo, sed meum judicem deprecabor. Sed de ipsa quoque postulatione pavidus adjungit: Et cum invocantem me exaudierit, non credo quod exaudierit vocem meam. Cur tanta circumspectione trepidat, cur tanta sollicitudine formidat, nisi quia terrorem judicis in extrema districtione considerat, et, vim discussionis illius non ferens, omne quod gerit esse sibi insufficiens pensat? Unde et protinus subdit:

CAPUT XX.

VERS. 17. — In turbine enim conteret me. 31. Peccator quisque in turbine atteritur, qui erectus in tranquillitate videbatur, quia quem diu superna longanimitas tolerat, extrema judicii severitas necat; quae recte turbo dicitur, quia in elementorum commotione revelatur, Psalmista attestante, qui ait: Deus manifestus veniet, Deus noster, et non silebit. Ignis in conspectu ejus ardebit, et in circuitu ejus tempestas valida (Psal. XLIX, 3.) Unde et propheta quoque alius dicit: Dominus in tempestate et turbine viae ejus. (Nah. I, 3). In quo nimirum turbine 303 idcirco justus nequaquam conteritur, quia semper hic sollicite metuit ne conteratur. Perpendit namque, adhuc in praesentis vitae itinere constitutus, humanis actibus exactor operum quam districtus appareat, qui quosdam tunc reatu culpae originalis astrictos etiam sine operibus damnat. Unde recte vir sanctus ex humani generis voce protinus adjungit:

CAPUT XXI.

IBID. — Et multiplicabit vulnera mea etiam sine causa. 32. Damnantur parvuli ex sola culpa originali. — Nonnulli etenim prius a praesenti luce subtrahuntur quam ad proferenda bona malave merita activae vitae perveniant. Quos quia a culpa originis sacramenta salutis non liberant, et hic ex proprio nihil egerunt, et illuc ad tormenta perveniunt. Quibus unum vulnus est corruptibiliter nasci, aliud carnaliter emori. Sed quia post mortem quoque aeterna mors sequitur, occulto eis justoque judicio etiam sine causa vulnera multiplicantur. Perpetua quippe tormenta percipiunt et qui nihil ex propria voluntate peccaverunt. Hinc namque scriptum est: Non est mundus in conspectu ejus nec unius diei infans super terram (Job. XV, 14). Hinc per semetipsam Veritas dicit: Nisi quis renatus fuerit ex aqua et Spiritu sancto, non potest introire in regnum Dei (Joan. III, 5). Hinc Paulus ait: Eramus natura filii irae, sicut et caeteri (Ephes. II, 3). Qui itaque, nullum proprium adjungens, ex solo originis reatu perimitur, quid iste in illo extremo examine, quantum ad humani sensus aestimationem, nisi sine causa vulneratur? Sed tamen sub divina districtione justum est ut propago mortalis, velut infructuosa arbor, et in ramis servet amaritudinem quam traxit ex radice. Ait ergo: In turbine enim conteret me, et multiplicabit vulnera mea etiam sine causa. Ac si, aperte humani generis damna considerans, dicat: Districtus judex qua eos animadversione trucidat quos culpa propriae actionis damnat, si et illos in aeternum percutit quos reatus arbitrii non addicit? 33. Job Dei judicium timet. Percussus est ut meritum augeretur, non ut vitium tergeretur. — Quae nimirum dicta nec a beato Job specialiter discrepare cognoscimus, si haec quam vere prolata sunt indagamus. Semetipsum namque subtiliter pensans, atque in omni actione dijudicans, supernae districtionis vim quanta sollicitudine pertimescat insinuat, subdens: In turbine enim conteret me. Ac si aperte dicat: Idcirco hunc semper et in tranquillitate timeo, quia per flagella qualis in turbine veniat non ignoro. Quae flagella scilicet et metuens praevidit, et praevidens pertulit. Unde subjungit: Et multiplicabit vulnera mea etiam sine causa. Ut enim saepe jam diximus, nequaquam beatus Job percussus est ut in eo percussio vitium tergeret, sed ut meritum augeret. Vulneratum se itaque sine causa asserens, hoc de se foris loquitur, quod de illo Veritas in occulto testatur, dicens: Commovisti me adversus eum, ut affligerem eum frustra (Job. II, 3). Vir ergo sanctus superbe non dicit quod veraciter dicit, nec per haec verba a rectitudine discrepat, per quae a judice non discordat. Qui eorumdem protinus vulnerum continuationem exprimit, cum subjungit:

CAPUT XXII.

VERS. 18. — Non concedit quiescere spiritum meum, et implet me amaritudinibus. 34. Job intus et foris affligitur. — Saepe justis exercitium virtutis est sola exterius 304 adversa tolerare. Sed ut eorum vires certamen plenae probationis erudiat, hos nonnunquam et foris tormenta lacerant, et intus tentamenta castigant. Unde vir sanctus impletum se amaritudinibus asserit, quia cum flagella exterius tolerat, illud est gravius quod de tentatione adversarii in intimis portat. Sed inter haec mitigat vim doloris considerata aequitas et potentia ferientis. Unde subjungit:

CAPUT XXIII.

VERS. 19. — Si fortitudo quaeritur, robustissimus est; si aequitas judicii, nemo pro me audet testimonium dicere. 35. Aequitas judicii Dei. — Ille quippe vitae causas examinat, qui has per alienum testimonium non explorat, quia qui districtus quandoque ostenditur illator poenae, ipse diu tacitus exstitit testis culpae. Hinc etenim per prophetam dicitur: Ego sum judex et testis (Jerem. XXIX, 23). Hinc rursum ait: Tacui, semper silui, patiens fui, sicut parturiens loquar (Isai. XLII, 14). Parturiens namque cum dolore ejicit quod diu in abditis cum pondere portavit. Post longum ergo silentium, sicut parturiens, Dominus loquitur, quia quod apud se nunc tacitus tolerat, in ultione quandoque judicii quasi cum dolore manifestat. Sed requirendum nobis est, iste vir justus, si pro eo testimonium dicere quisquam praesumeret, nunquid hunc a reatu liberaret? Et si huic alius testimonium non impendit, nunquid ad proferendum pro se testimonium saltem ipse convalescit? Sequitur. VERS. 20. — Si justificare me voluero, os meum condemnabit me; si innocentem ostendero, pravum me comprobabit. 36. Nemo se innocentem certo scit. — Ac si aperte dicat: Quid de aliis loquar, qui ipse de me testimonium ferre non valeo? Sed quia innocentiae tuae testificari non sufficis, nunquid hoc ipsum, quia innocentiam habeas, scis? Subdit:

CAPUT XXV.

VERS. 21. — Etiam si simplex fuero, hoc ipsum ignoravit anima mea. 37. Utilitas et incommodum ignorantiae nostrae. [Vet. XVIII]. Saepe vitium peragit quod virtus inchoavit. — Plerumque si scimus bona quae agimus, ad elationem ducimur; si nescimus, minime servamus. Quis enim aut de virtutis suae conscientia non quantulumcunque superbiat? Aut quis rursum bonum in se custodiat quod ignorat; sed contra utraque quid superest, nisi ut recta quae agimus sciendo nesciamus, ut haec et recta aestimemus, et minima, quatenus et ad custodiam sensificet animum scientia rectitudinis, et in tumorem non elevet aestimatio minorationis? Sed sunt nonnulla quae sciri a nobis facile nequeunt, etiam cum geruntur. Nam saepe recto studio contra delinquentium culpas accendimur; et cum ultra aequitatis metas per iram rapimur, hoc zelum justae districtionis aestimamus. Saepe officium praedicationis assumimus, ut per hoc fraternae utilitati serviamus; sed nisi placeamus cui loquimur, nequaquam libenter accipitur quod praedicamus. Cumque placere mens utiliter studet, ad amorem laudis propriae turpiter defluit; et quae a captivitate vitiorum alias curabat eruere, ipsa suis favoribus incipit capta servire. Quasi latrunculus quippe est appetitus laudis humanae, qui recto itinere gradientibus ex latere jungitur, ut ex occultis educto gladio gradientium vita trucidetur. Cumque propositae utilitatis intentio ad studia privata 305 deducitur, horrendo modo unum idemque opus culpa peragit, quod virtus inchoavit. Saepe et ab ipsis exordiis aliud cogitatio expetit, aliud actio ostendit.. VERS. 22. — Unum est quod locutus sum, et innocentem et impium ipse consumit. 40. Humana puritas divinae comparata evanescit. Impius Dei ultionem non effugit. Mors omnes invadit. — Innocens a Creatore consumitur, quia quantalibet ejus simplicitas fuerit, divinae magnitudinis simplicitate devoratur. Quamvis enim simplicitatem studiose servemus, ex consideratione tamen intimae puritatis ostenditur quod haec ipsa quam agimus simplicitas non sit. Impius quoque a conditore consumitur, quia, Deo cuncta mirabiliter ordinante, ipsis suis versutiis ejus impietas ligatur. Nam inde se suppliciis et nesciens implicat, unde se aliquid facere scienter exsultat. Quia igitur omnipotens Deus et bonorum innocentiam simplicitate superat, et malorum astutiam penetrans damnat, recte nunc dicitur: Unum est quod locutus sum, et innocentem et impium ipse consumit. Ac si aperte diceretur: Hoc apud me verbum cogitationis protuli, quia nec innocens, si districte discutior, innocens apparebo; nec impius, si apud me latere voluero, a superni examinis acumine abscondor, quoniam districtus judex, cuncta comprehendens, occulta malitiae mirabiliter penetrat, et suis hanc inventionibus bene ordinans damnat. Vel certe et innocentem et impium ipse consumere dicitur, quia quamvis in mentis vita divisi sint, primae tamen culpae merito aeque ad carnis interitum pertrahuntur. Unde et per Salomonem dicitur: Moritur doctus similiter ut indoctus (Eccle. II, 16). Et rursum: Cuncta subjacent vanitati, et omnia pergunt ad unum locum; de terra facta sunt, et in terram pariter revertuntur (Eccle. III, 19). Sequitur:

CAPUT XXVII.

VERS. 23. — Si flagellat, occidat semel et non de poenis innocentum rideat. 41. Job mediatorem desiderat qui sua nos morte liberet. — Quis haec non per superbiam prolata crederet, nisi sententiam judicis audiret, qui ait: Non estis locuti coram me rectum, sicut servus meus Job (Job. XLII, 7)? Restat ergo ut nullus auctoris verba reprehendere audeat, quae constat quia judex laudat. Sed tanto in intimis suis cautius subtiliusque rimanda sunt, quanto durius foras sonant. Vir etenim sanctus humani generis damna considerans, unde quo venerint pensans; quod homo, pollicente adversario, boni malique scientiam appetens scire, perdidit etiam semetipsum, ita ut veraciter dicat: Etiam si simplex fuero, hoc ipsum ignorabit anima mea; quod post expulsionis poenam flagella quoque corruptionis sustinet, et adhuc ad carnis, vel certe ad mentis interitum etiam post tormentum tendit, ut recte dicat: Et innocentem et impium ipse consumit; Mediatoris contra haec gratiam requirit, dicens: Si flagellat, occidat semel. Nos enim quia et a Deo mente recessimus, et carne ad pulverem redimus, poena duplae mortis astringimur. Sed venit ad nos qui pro nobis sola carne moreretur, qui simplam suam duplae nostrae conjungeret, et nos ab utraque morte liberaret. De qua per Paulum dicitur: 307 Quod autem mortuus est peccato, mortuus est semel (Rom. VI, 10). Damna ergo vir sanctus nostrae corruptionis aspiciat, et unam, quae duas nostras destruat, mortem Mediatoris quaerat, atque hanc desiderans dicat: Si flagellat, occidat semel. 42. Desiderium suum non differri appetit. — Sed ecce quasi humilitati renititur, quod protinus subinfertur: Et non de poenis innocentum rideat. Quod tamen valde humillimum sine difficultate cognoscimus, si humili hoc mente pensamus. Cunctis etenim liquet quod omne desiderium poena est cum differtur, Salomone quoque attestante, qui ait: Spes quae differtur affligit animam (Prov. XIII, 12). Ridere autem Dei est humanae nolle afflictioni misereri. Unde per Salomonem rursum Dominus reprobis in culpa durantibus dicit: Ego quoque in interitu vestro ridebo (Prov. I, 26); id est, afflictioni vestrae nulla pietate compatiar. Ante Redemptoris igitur adventum poenam suam electi omnes habuerunt, quia, aestuante desiderio, incarnationis ejus mysterium videre cupierunt, ipso attestante, qui ait: Multi, dico vobis, justi et prophetae voluerunt videre quae videtis, et non viderunt (Luc. X, 24). Poenae itaque innocentum sunt desideria justorum. Quousque ergo electorum suorum vota Dominus non compatiens distulit, quid aliud quam poenas innocentum risit? Itaque vir sanctus, venturi Redemptoris dona considerans, et votorum suorum dilationem graviter tolerans, dicat: Si flagellat, occidat semel, et non de poenis innocentum rideat. Ac si aperte exoret, dicens: Quia vita nostra quotidie flagello vindictae pro culpa atteritur, ille jam veniat qui pro nobis semel sine culpa moriatur, ut de innocentum poenis Deus ultra non rideat, si ipse carne passibilis apparet in cujus se desideriis mens nostra castigat. Potest ergo nomine impii infidelis ac persecutor populus designari, cui et hoc congruit omnino quod subditur:

CAPUT XXIX.

IBID. — Quod si non ille est, quis ergo est? 45. Ac si aperte diceretur: Quis unquam impius esse putandus est, si ille populus, qui ipsam pietatem persecutus est, impius non est? Sed considerata vir sanctus Judaicae plebis perfidia, ad semetipsum mentis oculos revocat; dolet quod videre nequeat quem amat; moerore afficitur, quia ex praesenti mundo ante subtrahitur quam salus mundi reveletur. Unde et subdit:

CAPUT XXX.

VERS. 25. — Dies mei velociores fuerunt cursore; fugerunt, et non viderunt bonum. 46. Antiqui justi dolent se ad Christi tempora non pervenisse. — Cursoris quippe officium est secutura nuntiare. Omnes igitur electi, qui ante adventum Redemptoris orti sunt, quia hunc aut vivendo tantummodo, aut etiam loquendo nuntiarunt, quasi in mundo quidam cursores fuerunt. Sed quia ante praestolatum redemptionis tempus se subtrahi praevident, transire se cursore velocius dolent; diesque suos esse breves ingemiscunt, quia usque ad videndam Redemptoris lucem minime tenduntur. Unde apte dicitur: Fugerunt, et non viderunt bonum. Omnia quae creata sunt bona sunt, Moyse attestante, qui ait: Vidit Deus cuncta quae fecerat, et ecce bona valde (Genes. I, 31). Sed hoc solum bonum principaliter bonum est, per quod haec omnia bona sunt, quae bona non principaliter existunt. De quo bono Veritas per Evangelium dicit: Nemo bonus nisi solus Deus (Luc. XVIII, 19). Quia igitur antiquorum patrum prius dies finiti sunt quam mundo Deus in carne monstraretur, recte de eisdem diebus dicitur: Fugerunt, et non viderunt bonum. Ac si aperte diceretur: Ante exspectatum tempus elapsi sunt, quia ad Redemptoris praesentiam pervenire nequiverunt. Unde adhuc subditur: 309

CAPUT XXXI.

VERS. 26. — Pertransierunt quasi naves poma portantes. 47. Quem exspectando odorati sunt, ejus nos visu et fructu satiamur. Opertum nobis detulerunt Spiritus fructum. — Hi qui poma deferentes maria transmeant, ipsi quidem fructuum odore perfruuntur, sed eorumdem fructuum aliis cibos ferunt. Quid igitur antiqui patres nisi naves poma portantes exstiterunt? Qui divinae incarnationis mysterium prophetantes, ipsi quidem spei odore potiti sunt, sed nobis fructum de ejusdem spei perfectione detulerunt. Quod enim illi exspectando odorati sunt, hoc nos cernendo et percipiendo satiamur. Unde et Redemptor isdem discipulis dicit: Alii laboraverunt, et vos in labores eorum introistis (Joan. IV, 38). Quorum videlicet dies comparantur navibus, quia decurrunt; et recte poma portantibus, quia electos omnes quos ante Redemptoris praesentiam gestaverunt, per prophetiae valuerunt spiritum exspectatione refovere, non autem manifesta exhibitione reficere. Vel certe quia naves cum poma portant, haec paleis admiscent, ut ad terras illaesa perducant, recte patrum praecedentium dies describuntur navibus poma portantibus similes, quia antiquorum dicta in eo quod mysteria spiritalis vitae denuntiant, per interfusam haec historiae stipulam servant, et opertum nobis fructum Spiritus deferunt cum carnalia loquuntur. Saepe namque dum quaedam narrant propria, ad Divinitatis elevantur arcana. Qui crebro etiam cum altitudinem Divinitatis aspiciunt, ad incarnationis ejus mysterium repente funduntur. Unde adhuc apte subjungitur:

CAPUT XXXII.

IBID. — Sicut aquila volans ad escam. 48. Velut aquilae a summis ad ima descendunt, Christi carne pascendi. — Moris quippe est aquilae ut irreverberata acie radios solis aspiciat; sed cum refectionis indigentia urgetur, eamdem oculorum aciem, quam radiis solis infixerat, ad respectum cadaveris inclinat; et quamvis ad alta evolet, pro sumendis tamen carnibus terram petit. Sic videlicet, sic antiqui patres fuerunt, qui in quantum humanitatis infirmitas admittebat, Creatoris lucem erecta mente contemplati sunt; sed incarnandum hunc in mundi fine praescientes, quasi a solis radiis ad terram oculos deflexerunt. Et quasi de summis ad ima veniunt, dum hunc Deum supra omnia et hominem intra omnia agnoscunt. Quem pro humano genere dum passurum moriturumque conspiciunt, qua scilicet morte semetipsos refici atque reformari ad vitam noverunt, quasi more aquilae post contemplatos solis radios in cadavere escam quaerunt. Libet spectare aquilam solis radios intuentem, quae ait: Deus fortis, pater futuri saeculi, princeps pacis (Isai. IX, 6). Sed ab alto volatu celsitudinis ad terras veniat, escam cadaveris inferius inquirat. Paulo post etenim subdit, dicens: Disciplina pacis nostrae super eum, et livore ejus sanati sumus (Isai. LIII, 5). Et rursum: Et homo est, et quis cognoscet eum (Jer. XVII, 10, sec. LXX)? Sublevata ergo in divinitatem mens justi, cum dispensationis gratiam ex ejus carne considerat, quasi a summis repente, ut aquila ad escam volat. Sed ecce ille Israeliticus populus immenso dudum prophetiae spiritu infusus ejusdem prophetiae dona perdidit, atque in ea fide quam praevidendo nuntiaverat non permansit; 310 et a se Redemptoris praesentiam negando repulit, quam cunctis se sequentibus praenuntiando declaravit. Unde et apte protinus per compassionem ad eorum quoque duritiam sermo convertitur, atque ab eis quomodo prophetiae gratia subtrahitur, indicatur. Nam subditur:

CAPUT XXXIII.

VERS. 27. — Cum dixero: Nequaquam ita loquar, commuto faciem meam, et dolore torqueor. 49. Judaeorum perfidia et reprobatio. — Plebs quippe Judaica loqui ut prius noluit, quae eum quem praedixerat negavit. Sed commutata facie dolore torquetur, quia dum interni sui hominis aspectum, quo agnosci a conditore potuerat, foeditate perfidiae polluit, a praesentibus malis incipiens, sub aeterna se ultione damnavit. Quasi enim commutata facie, ab auctore non cognoscitur, quae perdita bonae conscientiae fide reprobatur. Sed nimirum restat ut suppliciorum dolor torqueat, quam suus non cognoscens conditor ignorat. Quia igitur haec sub Redemptoris nostri significatione transcurrimus, nunc moraliter discutiendo replicemus. SENSUS MORALIS. — 50. CAP. IX, VERS. 25. — Dies mei velociores fuerunt cursore; fugerunt, et non viderunt bonum. — Quibus bonis homo peccando spoliatus, quibus malis obnoxius. — Sicut saepe jam diximus, sic primus homo conditus fuit, ut per augmenta temporum tendi posset ejus vita tantummodo, non evolvi. Sed quia sponte ad culpam decidit, quo attigit vetitum, pertulit decursum, quem nunc homo praesentis vitae desiderio oppressus indesinenter et tolerat et optat. Ne enim finiatur, vivere appetit, sed per augmenta vitae quotidie ad finem tendit. Nec deprehendit valde temporum incrementa quam nulla sint, nisi cum repente transacta fiunt quae venientia longa videbantur. Vir igitur sanctus statum suae conditionis aspiciat, et ex humani generis voce damna decursus ingemiscat, dicens: Dies mei velociores fuerunt cursore; fugerunt, et non viderunt bonum. Ac si aperte dicat: Ad hoc homo conditus fuit, ut bonum, quod Deus est, videre potuisset; sed qui stare ad lucem noluit, fugiendo oculos amisit, quia quo per culpam coepit ad ima decurrere, eo caecitatem pertulit, ne intimum lumen videret. De quibus adhuc diebus apte subjungitur: Pertransierunt quasi naves poma portantes. Naves cum poma portant, fructus terrae videlicet per fluctus ferunt. Terra vero hominis paradisus exstitit, quae hunc inconcussum tenere potuit, si per innocentiam stare voluisset. Sed quia ad mutabilitatis undas per culpam cecidit, ad praesentis vitae maria post terram venit. Poma etiam terrae hujus fuerunt mandati sermo, concessa possibilitas operis, naturae indita intelligentia conditoris. Sed haec poma quae edere in terra renuimus, per maria portamus, quia concessa bona tot munerum inconcussi custodire in paradiso noluimus, et servare nunc in tentationibus conamur. Tendentes ad terminum, aura vitae praesentis impellimur, mutabilitatis nostrae fluctu fatigamur. Sed quia per crucis mysterium ad ingenita naturae bona restringimur, quasi per lignum poma portamus. Quod tamen intelligi et aliter potest. Naves etenim cum poma portant, suavitatem odoris habent, sed gravitatem ponderis 311 non habent. Et humanum genus paradisi gaudiis expulsum vim contemplationis perdidit, robur conditae fortitudinis amisit; cumque ad superna repetenda se erigit, fragrat quidem odore memoriae, sed digne non exerit pondus vitae. Pomorum ergo odoribus repletur, et tamen huc illucque leviter mentis nostrae navis impellitur, quia et paradisi celsitudinem cum odoris recordatione meminimus, et importunos tentationum fluctus ex carne toleramus. Unde et apte subjungitur: Sicut aquila volans ad escam. [Vet. XXV.] Aquila etenim alto valde volatu suspenditur, et adnisu praepeti ad aethera libratur; sed per appetitum ventris terras expetit, seseque a sublimibus repente deorsum fundit. Sic sic humanum genus in parente primo ad ima de sublimibus corruit, quod nimirum conditionis suae dignitas in rationis celsitudine quasi in aeris libertate suspenderat; sed quia, contra praeceptum, cibum vetitum contigit, per ventris concupiscentiam ad terras venit; et quasi post volatum carnibus pascitur, quia illa libera contemplationis inspiracula perdidit, et deorsum corporeis voluptatibus laetatur. Sicut ergo aquila volans ad escam, dies nostri velociter transeunt, quia quo ima petimus, eo subsistere in vita prohibemur. 51. Quaestiones durae circa hominis lapsum qui refrenandae. Menti etsi justa, tamen dura caecitas. — Sed cum haec ante mentis oculos continua cogitatione revolvimus, duris taciti quaestionibus urgemur, cur omnipotens Deus condidit quem periturum esse praescivit? cur is qui summe potens et summe bonus est nequaquam voluit hominem talem facere qui perire non posset? Cum vero haec tacita mens interrogat, pavet ne ipso interrogationis ausu in superbiam erumpat, seque humiliter comprimit, et cogitationes restringit. Sed eo gravius affligitur, quo inter mala quae sustinet etiam de conditionis suae abscondito intellectu cruciatur. Unde hic quoque apte subjungitur: Cum dixero, Nequaquam ita loquar, commuto faciem meam, et dolore torqueor. Nequaquam quippe ita nos debere loqui dicimus cum, nostrae infirmitatis modum ex inquisitione transeuntes, nosmetipsos pavore reprehendimus, et supernae reverentiae consideratione refrenamus. In qua refrenatione scilicet mentis nostrae facies commutatur, quia quae prius non capiens audenter summa requirebat, infirmitatem suam postmodum agnoscens, venerari inchoat quod ignorat. Sed in ipsa commutatione dolor est, quia valde affligitur, quoniam primae culpae merito ad intelligenda ea quae de ipsa sunt caecatur. Quae patitur, justa esse considerat; pavet, ne in dolore per licentiam locutionis excedat; ori silentium indicit, sed excitatus dolor eo ipso quo restringitur augetur. Dicat ergo: Cum dixero, Nequaquam ita loquar, commuto faciem meam, et dolore torqueor, quia tunc gravius plerumque affligimur, cum quasi per consolationis studium afflictionis nostrae nobis conamur mala levigare. Sed quisquis, jam subtiliter parentis primi damnatione propagata, humani generis damna considerat, superest ut his adjungere propria metuat. Unde vir sanctus postquam communia intulit, repente specialia subjungit, dicens:

CAPUT XXXIV.

VERS. 28. — Verebar omnia opera mea, sciens quod non parceres delinquenti. 52. Operibus etiam bonis timendum Job docet. — Quae beatus Job opera exercuit, sacrae hujus historiae textus ostendit. Holocaustis quippe multiplicibus auctorem placare studuit, quia juxta filiorum numerum, ut scriptum est, consurgens diluculo, offerebat holocausta per singulos; eosque non solum ab immundis actibus, sed a prava quoque cogitatione mundabat. De quo, Scriptura teste, perhibetur: Dicebat enim: Ne forte peccaverint filii mei, et benedixerint Deo in cordibus suis (Job. I, 5). Affectum ergo compassionis exercuit, quia ipse de se amicorum quaestionibus exactus dicit: Flebam quondam super eum qui afflictus erat (Job. XXX, 25). Ministerium pietatis impendit, qui ait: Oculus fui caeco, et pes claudo (Job. XXIX, 15). Castitatis munditiam in corde custodivit, qui obtestando se aperit, dicens: Si deceptum est cor meum super mulierem (Job. XXXI, 9). Humilitatis culmen medullitus tenuit, qui dicit: Si contempsi judicium subire cum servo meo et ancilla mea, cum disceptarent adversum me (Ibid., 13). Beneficia largitatis impendit, qui ait: Si comedi buccellam meam solus, et non comedit pupillus ex ea (Ibid., 17). Et rursum: Si non benedixerunt mihi latera ejus, et de velleribus ovium mearum calefactus est (Ibid., 20). Gratiam hospitalitatis exhibuit, qui dicit: Foris non mansit peregrinus, ostium meum viatori patuit (Ibid., 32). Et inter haec ad virtutum cumulum per excellentiorem viam charitatis, et inimicos dilexit, qui ait: Si gavisus sum ad ruinam ejus qui me oderat (Ibid., 29). Et rursum: Non enim dedi ad peccandum guttur meum, ut expeterem maledicens animam ejus (Ibid., 30). Quid ergo vir sanctus sua opera verebatur, qui illa semper exhibuit, ex quibus placari Deus erga iniquitates solet? Quid ergo est quod, mira opera faciens, haec ipsa etiam veretur pavens, cum dicit: Verebar omnia opera mea, nisi quod in sancti viri actibus verbisque colligimus, ut si placere Deo veraciter cupimus, postquam perversa subigimus, ipsa in nobis etiam bene gesta timeamus?. Saepe enim bona nostra latrocinanti fraude depereunt, quia rectis se nostris actibus concupiscentiae terrenae subjungunt. Saepe desidia interveniente deficiunt, quia a fervore quo coepta sunt frigescente amore tabefiunt. Quia ergo culpae subreptio vel in ipso virtutis actu vix vincitur, quid ad securitatem superest, nisi ut studiose semper et in virtute timeatur? 54. Delictum nullum est inultum. — Sed post haec valde scrupulosum cordi se objicit quod subjungit: Sciens quod non parceres delinquenti. Si enim delinquenti non parcitur, quis ab aeterna morte eripitur, cum a delicto mundus nemo reperitur? An poenitenti parcit et delinquenti non parcit? Quia cum delicta plangimus, nequaquam jam delinquentes sumus. Sed quid quod Petrus cum negat respicitur, et Redemptoris negati respectu ad lacrymas vocatur? Quid quod Paulus cum Redemptoris nomen in terra conaretur exstinguere, ejus verba de coelo meruit audire? Sed tamen culpa in utroque punita est, quia et de Petro, teste Evangelio, scriptum est: Recordatus Petrus verbi Jesu, egressus foras, flevit amare (Luc. XXII, 61). Et de Paulo haec eadem, quae hunc vocavit, Veritas dicit: Ego ostendam ei quanta eum oporteat pro nomine meo pati (Act. IX, 16). Delinquenti ergo Dominus nequaquam parcit, quia delictum sine ultione non deserit. Aut enim ipse hoc homo in se poenitens punit, aut hoc Deus cum homine vindicans percutit. Nequaquam igitur peccato parcitur, quia nullatenus sine vindicta laxatur Sic David (De poenit. dist. 1, cap. Si peccatum) audire post confessionem meruit: Dominus transtulit peccatum tuum (II Reg. XII, 13). Et tamen multis post cruciatibus afflictus ac fugiens, reatum culpae quam perpetraverat exsolvit. Sic nos salutis unda a culpa primi parentis absolvimur; sed tamen, reatum ejusdem culpae diluentes, absoluti quoque adhuc carnaliter obimus. Bene ergo dicitur: Sciens quod non parceres delinquenti, quia delicta nostra sive per nos, sive per semetipsum resecat, etiam cum relaxat. Ab electis enim suis iniquitatum maculas studet temporali afflictione tergere, quas in eis in perpetuum non vult videre. Sed saepe mens dum plus justo trepidat, dum pavore quatitur, dum sinistris suspicionibus urgetur, taedet hanc vivere, quae se ad vitam vel per labores ambigit pervenire. Unde et subsequenter adjungitur: VERS. 29. — Si autem et sic impius sum, quare frustra laboravi?

CAPUT XXXV.

314 55. Sancti ita incerti sunt ut confidant, ita confidunt ut non torpeant. — Si enim remota pietate discutimur, opus nostrum poena dignum est, quod remunerari praemiis praestolamur. Vir igitur sanctus, sub occulta judicia trepidans, dicit: Si autem et sic impius sum, quare frustra laboravi? non quo hunc laborasse poenitet, sed quo incertus esse de praemiis et inter labores dolet. Sciendum vero est quod viri sancti ita incerti sunt ut confidant, atque ita confidunt ut tamen ex securitate non torpeant. Quia ergo plerumque mens et impensa rectis actibus trepidat, restat ut postquam bonum opus agitur lacrymae deprecationis exquirantur, quatenus ad aeterna praemia meritum recti operis subvehat humilitas postulationis. Sed tamen sciendum est quia mundos nos ad perfectum reddere, vel vita, vel lacrymae non valent quousque nos mortalitas nostrae corruptionis tenet. Unde et apte subjungitur:

CAPUT XXXVI.

VERS. 30, 31. — Si lotus fuero quasi aquis nivis, et fulserint velut mundissimae manus meae; tamen sordibus intinges me, et abominabuntur me vestimenta mea. 56. Lacrymae mundant, si profluant cum humilitate. Si non propter terrena, sed superna bona. — Aquae enim nivis sunt lamenta humilitatis. Quae profecto humilitas, quia ante districti judicis oculos caeteris virtutibus praeeminet, quasi per magni meriti colorem candet. Sunt namque nonnulli qui lamenta habent, sed humilitatem non habent, quia afflicti plangunt, sed tamen in ipsis fletibus vel contra proximorum vitam superbiunt, vel contra ordinationem conditoris eriguntur. Hi nimirum aquas habent, sed nivis aquas non habent, et mundi esse nequeunt, quia humilitatis fletibus minime lavantur. Aquis autem nivis a culpa se laverat qui confidenter dicebat: Cor contritum et humiliatum Deus non spernit (Psal. L, 19). Qui enim lamentis affliguntur, sed murmurando rebelles sunt, mentem quidem conterunt, sed humiliari contemnunt. Quamvis aquae nivis intelligi et aliter possunt. Aqua enim fontis et fluminis ex terra oritur, aqua vero nivis ex aere proruit. Et sunt plerique qui per orationum lamenta se cruciant, sed tamen totis lamentorum laboribus ad sola terrena desideria exsudant;

compunguntur in precibus, sed felicitatis transitoriae gaudia exquirunt. Hos itaque nivis aqua non abluit, quia eorum fletus ab imis venit. Quasi enim ex terrae aqua perfusi sunt, qui pro terrenis bonis in precibus compunguntur. Qui vero idcirco plorant, quoniam praemia superna desiderant, aqua nivis hos diluit, quia coelestis compunctio infundit. Nam cum perennem patriam per lamenta appetunt, ejusque accensi desideriis plangunt, a summis accipiunt unde mundentur. Per manus autem quid aliud quam opera designantur? Unde quibusdam per prophetam dicitur: Manus vestrae sanguine plenae sunt (Isa. I, 15); id est, opera crudelitate. 57. Perfectam munditiam hic non assequimur. — Notandum vero quod vir sanctus non ait: Fulserunt mundissimae manus meae; sed, velut mundissimae manus meae, quia quousque poena corruptionis astringimur, quamlibet rectis operibus, veram munditiam nequaquam apprehendimus, sed imitamur. Unde et apte subjungitur: Tamen sordibus 315 intinges me. Deus nos sordibus intingere dicitur, intinctos sordibus demonstrare, quia quanto ad illum verius per bona opera surgimus, tanto subtilius vitae nostrae sordes agnoscimus, quibus ab ejus munditia discordamus. Ait ergo: Si lotus fuero quasi aquis nivis, et fulserint velut mundissimae manus meae, tamen sordibus intinges me. Ac si apertius dicat: Quamvis lamentis supernae compunctionis infundar, quamvis per studia rectae operationis exercear, in tua tamen munditia video quia mundus non sum. Intentam quippe Deo animam ipsa adhuc corruptibilis caro diverberat, ejusque amoris pulchritudinem obscenis et illicitis cogitationum motibus foedat. Cui hoc quoque fit gravius, quod saepe neque hoc intelligit unde delinquit. Flagella suscipit, sed districto judici quid 316 in se majus, quidve minus displiceat, non agnoscit. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT XXXVII.

VERS. 32. — Neque enim viro, qui similis mei est, respondebo, nec qui mecum in judicio ex aequo possit audiri. 59. Justo quam grave sit ignorare unde delinquit. — Dum cum quolibet in judicio ex aequo contendimus, et quid contra nos dicatur agnoscimus, et in his quae dicimus audimur, et quo objecta patenter apprehendimus, eo audenter ad proposita respondemus. Quia ergo invisibilis judex quae facimus videt, quasi audit quae dicimus; sed quia id quod ei displicet nequaquam plene cognoscimus, quasi quid ipse dicit ignoramus. Vir igitur sanctus vestimentorum suorum abominationem considerans, eo amplius timet, quo audiri ex aequo in judicio non valet, quia quousque corruptionis suae pondere premitur, hoc in poena sua gravius tolerat, quod et sensum sui reprehensoris ignorat. Ac si aperte dicat: In hoc ex aequo non audior, quia et patent cuncta quae facio, et tamen ipse nescio per quanta reprehendor. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXVIII.

VERS. 33. — Non est qui utrumque valeat arguere, et ponere manum suam in ambobus. 60. Arguere Deum quid sit. — Durum sonat ut quaeratur qui Deum arguat; sed durum non erit, si recurrat ad memoriam quod ipse per alium prophetam dicit. Per Isaiam quippe admonet, dicens: Quiescite agere perverse, discite benefacere, quaerite judicium, subvenite oppresso, judicate pupillo, defendite viduam; et venite, et arguite me, dicit Dominus (Isai. I, 16). Ei namque quem arguimus rationis auctoritate contraimus. Et quid est quod Dominus, agere sancta nos admonens, adjungit: Venite, et arguite me, nisi quod aperte insinuat quantam bonis actibus fiduciam praestat? Ac si patenter dicat: Recta agite, et animadversionis meae motibus non jam per deprecationis gemitum, sed per fiduciam auctoritatis obviate. Hinc etenim Joannes dicit: Si cor nostrum non reprehenderit nos, fiduciam habemus ad Deum (I Joan. III, 21). Hinc est quod Moyses, quia placet serviens, auditur tacens, cum silenti dicitur: Quid clamas ad me (Exod. XIV, 15)? Hinc est quod irascentem retinet, cum audit: Dimitte me, ut irascatur furor meus contra populum istum (Exod. XXXII, 10). Hinc est quod arguentem Dominus non habuisse se queritur, cum per prophetam dicitur: Quaesivi virum qui interponeret sepem, et staret oppositus contra me, ne dissiparem eam, et non inveni (Ezech. XXII, 30). Hinc est quod graviter Isaias deplorat, dicens: Omnes nos cecidimus quasi folium, et iniquitates nostrae quasi ventus abstulerunt nos; non est qui invocet nomen tuum, qui consurgat et teneat te (Isai. LXIV, 6, 7). 61. Christus solus potuit nos a morte liberare. Patiendo hominis culpam corripuit, et placavit Dei iram. — Sed possunt recti quilibet per acceptae innocentiae meritum aliquando praesentis motibus animadversionis obviare, non autem valent virtute propria ab humano genere supplicia secuturae mortis expellere. Vir igitur sanctus humanum genus consideret quo defluxit; aeternae mortis damna conspiciat; cui nimirum constat quia nequaquam justitia humana contradicat, videat quam perverse homo deliquerit; videat quam districte conditor contra hominem irascatur, et mediatorem Dei et hominis, Deum et hominem, requirat. Quem quia longe post venturum considerat, deplorans 317 dicat: Non est qui utrumque valeat arguere, et ponere manum suam in ambobus. Redemptor quippe humani generis, mediator Dei et hominis per carnem factus, quia justus in hominibus solus apparuit, et tamen ad poenam culpae etiam sine culpa pervenit, et hominem arguit ne delinqueret, et Deo obstitit ne feriret, exempla innocentiae praebuit, poenam malitiae suscepit. Patiendo ergo utrumque arguit, qui et culpam hominis, justitiam aspirando, corripuit, et iram judicis moriendo temperavit; atque in utrisque manum posuit, quia et exempla hominibus quae imitarentur praebuit, et Deo in se opera, quibus erga homines placaretur, ostendit. Nullus quippe ante hunc exstitit, qui sic pro alienis reatibus intercederet, ut proprios non haberet. Aeternae igitur morti tanto quis in aliis obviare non poterat, quanto hunc reatus de propriis astringebat. Venit itaque novus homo ad homines, contradictor ad culpam, amicus ad poenam; mira monstravit, crudelia pertulit. Manum ergo suam in ambobus posuit, quia unde reum recta docuit, inde iratum judicem placavit. Qui hoc quoque ipsis suis miraculis mirabilius praebuit, quia corda delinquentium mansuetudine potius quam terrore correxit. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT XXXIX.

VERS. 34. — Auferat a me virgam suam, et pavor ejus non me terreat. 62. Mansuetudine potius quam terrore nos correxit. — Per legem quippe virgam Deus tenuerat, cum dicebat: Si quis haec vel illa fecerit, morte moriatur. Sed incarnatus virgam abstulit, quia vias vitae per mansuetudinem ostendit. Unde ei per Psalmistam dicitur: Intende, prospere procede, et regna, propter veritatem et mansuetudinem et justitiam (Psal. XLIV, 5). Timeri quippe quasi Deus noluit, sed quasi pater ut amaretur inspiravit. Quod liquido Paulus dicit: Non enim accepistis spiritum servitutis iterum in timore, sed accepistis spiritum adoptionis filiorum, in quo clamamus, Abba pater (Rom. VIII, 15). Unde hic quoque apte subjungitur:

CAPUT XL.

VERS. 35. — Loquar, et non timebo eum. 63. Timor a peccato nos suscitare non valuit. — Vir enim sanctus, quia humani generis Redemptorem venire mitem conspicit, non metum ad Dominum, sed affectum ad patrem sumit; et timorem despicit, quia per adoptionis gratiam ad amorem surgit. Hinc Joannes ait: Timor non est in charitate, sed perfecta charitas foras mittit timorem (I Joan. IV, 18). Hinc Zacharias dicit: Ut sine timore de manu inimicorum nostrorum liberati serviamus illi (Luc. I, 74). A peccati igitur morte timor nos suscitare non valuit, sed ad statum vitae aspirata mansuetudinis gratia erexit. Quod bene Elisaeo Sunamitis filium suscitante signatur (IV Reg. IV, 30, 34), qui cum baculo puerum mittens, exstincto filio vitam minime reddidit; per semetipsum vero veniens, seque super mortuum sternens, atque ad ejus membra se colligens, huc illucque deambulans, et in ore mortui septies aspirans, hunc ad redivivam lucem protinus per ministerium compassionis animavit. Auctor quippe humani generis Deus, quasi mortuum puerum doluit, cum exstinctos nos iniquitatis aculeo miseratus aspexit. Et quia per Moysen terrorem legis protulit, quasi 318 per puerum virgam misit. Sed puer cum baculo mortuum suscitare non valuit, quia, Paulo attestante: Nihil ad perfectum adduxit lex (Hebr. VII, 19). Ipse autem per semetipsum veniens, et super cadaver se humiliter sternens, ad exaequanda sibi mortui membra se collegit: Quia cum in forma Dei esset, non rapinam arbitratus est esse se aequalem Deo; sed semetipsum exinanivit, formam servi accipiens, in similitudinem hominum factus, et habitu inventus ut homo (Philip. II, 6). Huc illucque deambulat, quia et Judaeam juxta, et longe positas gentes vocat. Super mortuum septies inspirat, quia per apertionem divini muneris gratiae septiformis spiritum in peccati morte jacentibus tribuit. Moxque vivens erigitur, quia is, quem terroris virga suscitare non potuit, per amoris spiritum puer ad vitam rediit. Dicat itaque ex sua, dicat ex voce humani generis: Auferat a me virgam suam, et pavor ejus non me terreat; loquar, et non timebo eum. Ubi et apte subjungitur:

CAPUT XLI.

IBID. — Neque enim possum metuens respondere 64. Timor digna Deo pro ejus donis obsequia non reddit. — Respondere quippe cuilibet dicimur cum factis illius digna opera repensamus. Deo ergo respondere est donis ejus praecedentibus nostra obsequia reddere. Unde et psalmi quidam, in quibus sancta operatio imitanda proponitur, ad respondendum scripti praenotantur. Rectum itaque Deus hominem condidit, eumque ad perversa defluentem cum longanimitate toleravit. Quotidie culpam aspicit, et tamen vivendi spatia non citius abscidit; dona largitur benignitate sua, et erga malos utitur patientia sua. Respondere homo tot beneficiis debet; sed tamen respondere metuens non valet, quia humani generis conditorem qui adhuc serviliter formidat, procul dubio non amat. Nam tunc solum Deo vera obsequia reddimus, cum eum propter amoris fiduciam non timemus; cum nos ad bona opera affectus, non metus dirigit; cum malum nostrae menti jam non placet, etiam si licet. Nam qui a perversitatis opere ex timore restringitur, perversa libenter ageret, si liceret. Nequaquam ergo veraciter rectus est, qui adhuc a pravitatis desiderio liber non est. Bene itaque dicitur: Neque enim possum metuens respondere, quia vera obsequia Deo non reddimus, si ex timore mandatis illius, et non potius ex amore servimus. Sed cum menti nostrae ejus dulcedinis amor accenditur, omne desiderium praesentis vitae levigatur, in taedium dilectio vertitur, atque hanc cum moerore mens tolerat, cui victa prius reprobo amore serviebat. Unde et apte subditur:

CAPUT XLII.

CAP. X, VERS. 1. — Taedet animam meam vitae meae. 65. Amor Dei vitae hujus taedium parit, et ad erratorum confessionem adducit. — Sed cum praesens vita vilescere, cum conditoris amor dulcescere coeperit, sese contra se animus accendit, ut accusare se de culpis debeat, in quibus se ante supernorum nescius defendebat. Unde adhuc recte adjungit:

CAPUT XLIII.

IBID. — Dimittam adversum me eloquium meum. 66. Quasi pro se eloquio suo utitur, qui prava quae gessit defendere excusationibus conatur. Sed adversum se eloquium dimittit, qui accusare in se hoc incipit quod erravit. Saepe vero et cum delinquimus 319 ea quoque quae agimus dijudicamus. Accusat mens ipsa quod perpetrat; sed quia hoc ex desiderio minime deserit, erubescit confiteri quod fecit. Cum vero toto jam judicio carnis delectationem premit, audaci voce in accusationis suae confessionem se erigit. Unde recte nunc dicitur: Dimittam adversum me eloquium meum, quia fortis mens relaxare contra se verba detestationis inchoat, quae apud semetipsam prius infirme verecundata retinebat. Sed sunt nonnulli qui apertis vocibus culpas fatentur, sed tamen in confessione gemere nesciunt, et lugenda gaudentes dicunt. Unde adhuc apte subjungitur:

CAPUT XLIV.

IBID. — Loquar in amaritudine animae meae. 67. Confessio fiat in amaritudine animae. — Qui culpas suas detestans loquitur, restat necesse est ut has in amaritudine animae loquatur, ut haec ipsa amaritudo puniat quidquid lingua per mentis judicium accusat. Sciendum vero est quia ex poena poenitentiae, quam sibi mens irrogat, aliquatenus securitatem percipit, atque ad interrogationem superni judicis fidentior exsurgit, ut semetipsam subtilius inveniat, et erga se quaeque quomodo disponantur agnoscat. Unde et protinus additur:

CAPUT XLV.

VERS. 2. — Dicam Deo: Noli me condemnare; indica mihi cur me ita judices. 68. Judicat nos hic et punit Deus duobus modis. — Quia peccatorem se in amaritudine animae asserit, quid Deo aliud quam ne condemnetur dicit? quia amaritudo praesentis poenitentiae exstinguit supplicia sequentis irae. Duobus autem modis in hac vita hominem Deus judicat, quia aut per mala praesentia irrogare jam tormenta sequentia incipit, aut tormenta sequentia flagellis praesentibus exstinguit. Nisi enim delictis exigentibus justus judex et nunc et postmodum quosdam percuteret, Judas minime dixisset, Secundo eos qui non crediderunt perdidit (Judae 5); et de iniquis Psalmista non diceret: Induantur sicut diploide confusione sua (Psal. CVIII, 29). Diploidem quippe duplum vestimentum dicimus. Confusione ergo sicut diploide induti sunt qui juxta reatus sui meritum et temporali et perpetua animadversione feriuntur. Solos quippe poena a supplicio liberat quos immutat. Nam quos praesentia mala non corrigunt, ad sequentia perducunt. Si autem nequaquam quosdam poena praesens a supplicio aeterno defenderet, Paulus minime dixisset: Cum judicamur, a Domino corripimur, ut non cum hoc mundo damnemur (I Cor. XI, 32). Hinc voce angelica ad Joannem dicitur: Ego quos amo redarguo et castigo (Apoc. III, 19). Hinc etiam scriptum est: Quem diligit Dominus castigat, flagellat omnem filium quem recipit (Hebr. XII, 6):. VERS. 3. — Nunquid bonum tibi videtur, si calumnieris et opprimas pauperem, opus manuum tuarum, et consilium impiorum adjuves? 70. Justi propter quid flagelletur ignorantis anxietas. — Hoc nimirum sic per interrogationem dicitur, ut negetur. Ac si aperte diceretur. Tu qui summe bonus es, novi quia bonum non aestimas, ut pauperem per calumniam premas. Et scio ergo quia non est injustum quod patior, et eo magis doleo quo causas justitiae ignoro. Notandum vero quod non ait Ut opprimas innocentem, sed pauperem. Qui enim districtioni judicis nequaquam innocentiam, sed paupertatem suam objicit, non jam de vita audaciam arripit, sed quam se infirmum conspiciat ostendit. Ubi et congrue subjungit: Opus manuum tuarum. Ac si aperte dicat: Impie opprimere non potes, quem te fecisse gratuito recordaris. 71. Deus non sinit nos supra vires tentari. — Bene autem subditur: Et consilium impiorum adjuves? Quos namque hoc loco impios, nisi malignos spiritus vocat? Qui cum redire ipsi ad vitam nequeant, crudeliter socios ad mortem quaerunt. Quorum nimirum consilium fuit ut beatum Job divina correptio tangeret, et qui in tranquillitate justus exstiterat, saltem per flagella peccaret. Sed impiorum consilium Dominus non adjuvit, quia eorum tentationibus carnem justi prodidit, animam negavit. Hoc indesinenter contra bonos consilium maligni spiritus ineunt, ut hi quos servire Deo innocue in tranquillitate conspiciunt vexati adversitatibus ad voraginem culpae rapiantur. Sed eorum consilii acumen destruitur, quia pius conditor cum viribus flagella moderatur, ne virtutem poena transeat, et per astutiam fortium humana infirmitas excidat. Unde et bene per Paulum dicitur: Fidelis autem Deus, qui non patietur vos tentari supra quam potestis, sed faciet cum tentatione etiam proventum, ut possitis sustinere (I Cor. X, 13). Nisi enim misericors Deus cum viribus tentamenta modificet, nullus profecto est qui malignorum spirituum insidias non corruens portet, quia si mensuram judex tentationibus non praebet, eo ipso protinus stantem dejicit, quo ultra vires onera imponit. Sic autem beatus Job negando 321 requisivit ista quae protulit, sicut et requirendo negat ea quae illico subjungit, dicens:

CAPUT XLVII.

VERS. 4-7. — Nunquid oculi carnei tibi sunt, aut sicut videt homo et tu videbis? Nunquid sicut dies hominis dies tui, aut anni tui sicut humana sunt tempora, ut quaeras iniquitatem meam, et peccatum meum scruteris? et scias quia nihil impium fecerim. 72. Discrimen visus humani et divini, dierum nostrorum et aeternitatis. — Oculi carnei facta temporum non nisi in tempore agnoscunt, quia et ipsi ad videndum cum tempore prodeunt, cum tempore clauduntur; et humanus visus quodlibet opus sequitur, non praecurrit, quia vix existentia aspicit, et ventura nullo modo agnoscit. Dies quoque et anni hominis a diebus et annis discrepant aeternitatis, quia vitam nostram, quae tempore incipitur, tempore finitur; dum intra sinus sui latitudinem format, aeternitas devorat. Cujus nimirum immensitas, quia ultra citraque super nos tenditur, sine inchoatione et termino ejus aeternum esse dilatatur; eique nec transacta praetereunt, nec adhuc ventura, quasi quae non appareant, desunt, quia is qui semper esse habet, cuncta sibi praesentia conspicit; cumque aspiciendo post et ante non tenditur, nulla intuitus mutatione variatur. Dicat ergo: Nunquid oculi carnei tibi sunt; aut sicut videt homo, et tu videbis? Nunquid sicut dies hominis dies tui, et anni tui sicut humana sunt tempora, ut quaeras iniquitatem meam, et peccatum meum scruteris? et scias quia nihil impium fecerim. Ac si humiliter requirens, diceret: Cur me in tempore per flagella examinas, quem apud te perfecte et ante tempora scisti? Cur culpas meas verberibus interrogas, quem per aeternitatis tuae potentiam nec prius quam conderes ignoras? Cujus nimirum potentiae mox pondus exprimit, cum subjungit:

CAPUT XLVIII.

IBID. — Cum sit nemo qui de manu. tua possit eruere. 73. Humilis deprecatio flagellati. — Ac si aperte dicat: Quid tibi restat, nisi parcere, cujus virtuti nullus valet obviare? Quo enim nemo est qui animadversionem tuam ex merito suae virtutis retineat, eo a se facilius tua pietas exigat ut parcat. Quia autem nos in delicto concepti, in iniquitatibus editi, aut noxie prava perpetramus, aut incaute etiam recta agendo delinquimus, districtus judex unde nobis fiat placabilis, non habemus. Sed cum nostrum opus ejus obtutibus dignum exhibere non possumus, restat ut ad placationem illius suum ei opus offeramus. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT XLIX.

VERS. 8. — Manus tuae plasmaverunt me, et fecerunt me totum in circuitu, et sic repente praecipitas me? 74. Manichaei dogma destruitur. — Ac si ei humiliter dicat: Quia sub justo examine dignum non est tua placatione quod feci, pensa misericorditer, ne pereat quod fecisti. Quibus etiam verbis perversum Manichaei dogma destruitur, qui duo esse principia mentiens, a Deo spiritum, a Satana vero carnem conditam asserere conatur. Sanctus etenim vir prophetici gratia spiritus plenus, longe post ventura considerat, et errorum genimina praevidens calcat, dicens: Manus tuae plasmaverunt me, et fecerunt me totum in circuitu. Qui enim et plasmatum se, et factum totum in circuitu a Deo asserit, tenebrarum genti 322 nec in spiritu suo aliquid nec in carne derelinquit. Nam plasmatum se propter internam imaginem retulit; factum vero totum in circuitu, in eo quod ex carnis constat indumento, memoravit.. VERS. 9. — Memento, quaeso, quod sicut lutum feceris me. 76. Quare angelus irremissibiliter peccavit, non homo. — Angelorum spiritus idcirco irremissibiliter peccaverunt, quia tanto robustius stare poterant, quanto eos carnis admistio non tenebat. Homo vero idcirco post culpam veniam meruit, quia per carnale corpus aliquid quo semetipso minor esset accepit. Unde et apud respectum judicis argumentum pietatis est haec eadem infirmitas carnis; sicut per Psalmistam dicitur: Ipse autem est misericors, et propitius fiet peccatis eorum, et non disperdet eos. Et multiplicavit ut averteret iram suam ab eis, et non accendit omnem iram suam, et rememoratus est quia caro sunt (Psal. LXXVII, 38). Ut lutum ergo homo factus est, quia de limo est ad conditionem sumptus. Lutum quippe fit, cum se aqua terrae conspergit. Sicut lutum itaque homo est conditus, quia quasi aqua infundit pulverem, cum anima rigat carnem. Quod sanctus vir bene pietati judicis objicit, cum postulans dicit: Memento, quaeso, quod sicut lutum feceris me. Ac si aperte dicat: Infirmitatem carnis considera, et reatum iniquitatis laxa. Ubi aperte quoque mors ejusdem carnis adjungitur, cum protinus subinfertur:

CAPUT LI.

IBID. — 323 Et in pulverem reduces me. 77. Hominem excusat carnis infirmitas. — Ac si patenter postulet, dicens: Memento, quaeso, quod per carnem a terra venio, et per ejus interitum ad terram tendo. Materiam itaque originis, et poenam finis aspice, et culpae citius transeuntis parce. Sed quia qualitatem protulit hominis conditi, nunc subjungit ordinem propagati, dicens:

CAPUT LII.

VERS. 10, 11. — Nonne sicut lac mulsisti me, et sicut caseum me coagulasti? Pelle et carnibus vestisti me, ossibus et nervis compegisti me. 78. Hominis ortus descriptio. — Plasmatus quippe homo sicut lutum factus est, propagatus autem et sicut lac mulgetur semine, et sicut caseus coagulatur in carne. Carnibus et pelle induitur, ossibus nervisque solidatur. Per lutum ergo primae conditionis qualitas, per lac vero sequentis ordo conceptionis exprimitur, quia per coagulationis incrementa ducitur, ut paulisper in ossa roboretur. Sed angusta Dei laus est descriptio creati corporis, nisi etiam subsequenter exprimatur mira aspiratio vivificationis. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT LIII.

VERS. 12. — Vitam et misericordiam tribuisti mihi. 79. Vitae inspiratio et conservatio. — Sed incassum nobis bona conditor tribuit, si non omne quod tribuit ipse custodit. Sequitur, — IBID: — Et visitatio tua custodivit spiritum meum. Haec autem quae de exteriori homine diximus, etiam interiori quemadmodum possit congruere libet ut breviter replicando monstremus. 80. Homo lutum, fit pulvis subtracta gratia. Bella carnis patitur, sed gratia roboratur. — Memento, quaeso, quod sicut lutum feceris me. Sicut lutum quippe homo noster interior existit, quia sancti Spiritus gratia terrenae menti infunditur, ut ad intellectum sui conditoris erigatur. Humana namque cogitatio, quae peccati sui sterilitate aruit, per vim sancti Spiritus, quasi irrigata terra viridescit. Sed saepe dum perceptis superni doni virtutibus sine interruptione utimur, ad privatam fiduciam usu continuae prosperitatis elevamur. Unde fit plerumque ut isdem qui sublevaverat parumper Spiritus deserat, quatenus ipsum sibi hominem ostendat. Quod sanctus vir protinus exprimit, cum subjungit: Et in pulverem reduces me. Quia enim per subtractionem Spiritus mens aliquantulum in tentatione deseritur, quasi ab humore pristino terra siccatur, ut infirmitatem suam derelictus sentiat, et sine infusione supernae gratiae quantum homo aruit cognoscat. Qui apte quoque reduci ad pulverem dicitur, quia dimissus sibi cujuslibet tentationis aura raptatur. Sed dum relicti concutimur, ea quae afflati cognovimus subtilius jam dona cogitamus. Unde subjungit: Nonne sicut lac mulsisti me, et sicut caseum me coagulasti? Mens etenim nostra cum per sancti Spiritus gratiam ab usu vetustae conversationis abstrahitur, sicut lac mulgetur, quia in quadam novae inchoationis teneritudine et subtilitate formatur; et sicut caseus coagulatur, quia in constipatione pinguescentis cogitationis astringitur, ut nequaquam jam per desideria diffluat, sed in uno amore se colligens, ad solidam reformationem surgat. Plerumque vero contra haec eadem rudimenta spiritalia ex usu veteri caro submurmurat, et mens bella tolerat ex homine quem foris portat. Unde subjungit: Pelle et carnibus vestisti me. Pelle quippe 324 et carnibus interior homo vestitur, quia in eo quod ad superna erigitur, carnalium motuum obsidione vallatur. Sed tendentem ad justitiam nequaquam in tentatione conditor deserit, qui per infusionem gratiae etiam peccantem praevenit; sed sublevatam mentem et ad bella exterius laxat, et interius roborat. Unde adhuc apte subjungitur; Ossibus et nervis compegisti me. Carnibus et pelle vestimur, sed ossibus nervisque compingimur, quia etsi tentatione foras irruente concutimur, intus tamen nos conditoris manus roborat, ne frangamur. Carnis itaque nos motibus humiliat ad dona, sed per ossa virtutum roborat contra tentamenta. Ait ergo: Carne et pelle vestisti me, ossibus et nervis compegisti me. Ac si aperte dicat: Foras me ad probationem deseris, sed tamen intus ne peream virtutibus astringendo custodis. Qui idcirco nobis bene vivendi rectitudinem tribuit, quia benigne praeterita quae deliquimus parcit. Unde et adhuc apte subjungitur: Vitam et misericordiam tribuisti mihi. 81. Vitam ex misericordia Dei praeveniente et subsequente accipit et servat. — Vita quippe tribuitur cum malignis mentibus benignitas aspiratur. Sed vita sine misericordia accipi nequaquam valet, quia ad obtinenda Dominus justitiae bona non adjuvat, si prius misericorditer anteactas nequitias non relaxat. Vel certe vitam nobis et misericordiam tribuit, quia ea qua nos misericordia ad bene vivendum praevenit, etiam subsequente custodit. Nisi enim misericordiam subroget, servari non valet vita quam praebet. Ipso quippe quotidie humanae vitae usu veterascimus, et exterioris hominis impulsu cogitatione lubrica ab interioribus eximus. Et nisi nos superna visitatio vel ad amorem compungendo vivificet, vel ad timorem flagellando restauret, repentino lapsu mens funditus tota destruitur, quae longo virtutis studio innovata videbatur. Unde subjungit: Et visitatio tua custodivit spiritum meum. Humanum quippe spiritum visitatio superna custodit, cum hunc virtutibus ditatum, vel flagello percutere, vel compungere amore non desinit. Nam si dona praestat, sed hunc continue restaurando non sublevat, citius bonum perditur, quod non a largiente custoditur. Sed ecce vir sanctus dum se humiliter agnoscit, conferenda generaliter divinae misericordiae secreta deprehendit; cumque infirmitatem suam veraciter fatetur, repente ad cognoscendam vocationem gentium sublimiter rapitur. Nam protinus subdit:

CAPUT LIV.

VERS. 13. — Licet haec celes in corde tuo, tamen scio quia universorum memineris. 82. Vocatio gentium in consilio Dei abscondita. — Ac si aperte dicat: Cur de me trepido, qui et universas gentes quia colligas scio? Quod tamen in corde celas, quia hoc adhuc aperto sermone non indicas. Sed qui et universorum reminisceris, me procul dubio de venia certum facis. Sciendum vero est quia in quibusdam factis et certi de venia reddimur, et post perpetratas culpas ad absolutionis nostrae fiduciam correctione et poenitentia subsequente roboramur; perpetratae tamen nostrae nequitiae adhuc memoria tangimur, et cogitatione illicita aversi nolentesque pulsamur. Unde et apte subjungitur:

CAPUT LV.

VERS. 14. — Si peccavi, et ad horam pepercisti mihi, cur ab 325 iniquitate mea mundum me esse non pateris? 83. Peccata deleta qui memoriam inficiant, et bellum reparent. Quid tum agendum. — Ad horam Dominus peccatum parcit, cum reatum culpae concessis protinus fletibus diluit. Sed ab iniquitate nostra mundos nos esse non patitur, quia volentes quidem culpam fecimus, sed nonnunquam nolentes ejus memoriam cum delectatione toleramus. Saepe namque hoc quod a conspectu jam judicis fletu interveniente deletum est ad animum redit, et devicta culpa ad delectationem rursus inserpere nititur, atque in antiquo certamine rediviva pulsatione reparatur; ita ut quod prius egit in corpore, hoc importuna cogitatione postmodum verset in mente. Quod caute ille conspicere athleta spiritalis noverat, qui dicebat: Computruerunt et deterioraverunt cicatrices meae, a facie insipientiae meae (Psal. XXXVII, 6). Quid namque cicatrices, nisi sanationes sunt vulnerum? Laxatas ergo nequitias ad delectationem memoriae redire conspexerat, qui cicatrices deflebat. Cicatrices quippe computrescere est sanata jam peccatorum vulnera rursus in tentationem serpere, atque ex eorum suggestionibus, post superductam cutem poenitentiae, fetorem culpae iterum doloremque sentire. Qua videlicet in re et nihil foras opere agitur, et sola intus cogitatione peccatur; districtoque se reatu mens obligat, nisi hoc sollicitis lamentis tergat. 84. Unde bene per Moysen dicitur: Si fuerit inter vos homo qui nocturno pollutus sit somnio, egredietur extra castra; et non revertetur prius quam ad vesperam lavetur aqua, et post solis occasum regredietur in castra (Deut. XXIII, 10). Nocturnum quippe est somnium tentatio occulta, per quam tenebrosa cogitatione turpe aliquid corde concipitur, quod tamen corporis opere non expletur. Sed somnio nocturno pollutus egredi extra castra praecipitur, quia videlicet dignum est ut qui immunda cogitatione polluitur, indignum se cunctorum fidelium societatibus arbitretur, culpae suae meritum ante oculos ponat, et ex bonorum se aestimatione despiciat. Polluto ergo extra castra exire est turpi impugnatione laboranti, sese ex continentium comparatione despicere. Qui ad vesperam lavatur aqua, cum defectum suum conspiciens ad poenitentiae lamenta convertitur, ut fletibus diluat omne quod animum occulta inquinatio accusat. Sed post occasum solis ad castra redeat, quia, defervescente tentationis ardore, necesse est ut iterum fiduciam erga societatem bonorum sumat. Post aquae quippe lavationem, occumbente sole ad castra revertitur, qui post lamenta poenitentiae, frigescente flamma cogitationis illicitae, ad fidelium merita praesumenda reparatur; ut jam se a caeteris longe esse non aestimet, qui mundum se per obitum intimi ardoris gaudet. Sed inter haec sciendum est quod idcirco nonnunquam impulsu illicitae cogitationis affligimur, quia in quibusdam terrenae conversationis actibus, quamvis licitis, libenter occupamur. Cumque vel in minimis terrena actio per desiderium tangitur, crescente contra nos antiqui hostis fortitudine, mens nostra non minima importunitate tentationis inquinatur. Unde 326 et sacerdos legis, membra hostiae per frusta concisa, caput atque ea quae erga jecur sunt, jubetur ignibus cremare, pedes vero atque intestina hostiae prius aqua diluere (Levit. I, 7, 12). Nos quippe ipsos sacrificium Deo offerimus cum vitam nostram cultui divino dedicamus. Qui membra hostiae per frusta concisa super ignem ponimus, cum vitae nostrae opera in virtutibus distinguentes immolamus. Caput atque ea quae juxta jecur continentur incendimus, cum in sensu nostro, quo omne corpus regitur, atque in occultis desideriis flamma divini amoris ardemus. Et tamen praecipitur ut pedes atque intestina hostiae laventur. Pedibus enim terra tangitur, intestinis vero stercora gestantur, quia plerumque jam ex desiderio in aeternitatem succendimur, jam toto devotionis sensu ad appetitum nostrae mortificationis inhiamus; sed quia adhuc terrenum prae infirmitate aliquid agimus, nonnulla etiam quae jam subegimus illicita in corde toleramus. Cumque cogitationes nostras immunda tentatio inquinat, quid aliud quam intestina hostiae stercus portant? Sed ut comburi debeant, laventur, quia nimirum necesse est, ut immundas cogitationes timoris fletus diluat, quas in acceptione sacrificii supernus amor incendat. Et quidquid mens vel de inexperto certamine, vel de conversationis pristinae memoria patitur, lavetur, ut tanto suavius in conspectu sui spectatoris ardeat, quanto cum ei assistere coeperit nil terrenum secum, nil lubricum in ara suae orationis imponit. Vir igitur sanctus humanae mentis damna conspiciat, quod plerumque se cogitatione illicita inquinat; et postquam reatum operis judex relaxat, et, sua plorans, nostra quae ploremus aperiat, dicens: Si peccavi, et ad horam pepercisti mihi, cur ab iniquitate mea mundum me esse non pateris? Ac si aperte dicat: Si culpam venia abstulit, cur hanc et a memoria non detergit?. VERS. 16. — Et propter superbiam quasi, leaenam capies me. 86. Leaena qua arte capiatur. Eodem modo et lapsi et reparati sumus. — Leaena cum escam catulis exquirit, inhianter in foveam captionis ruit. Sicut enim ex quibusdam regionibus fertur, fit in ejus itinere fovea, in qua pecus deponitur, ut illuc se ejus appetitu projicere leaena provocetur: quae angusta simul et alta praeparatur, ut in eam ruere ambiendo valeat, sed hanc saliendo nullo modo evadat. Alia quoque fovea, quae priori cohaereat, effoditur, quae tamen ei, in qua pecus est, extremae partis apertione conjungitur. In qua nimirum cavea ponitur, ut leaena corruens, quia desuper terroribus urgetur, cum quasi in secretiori parte foveae occultare, se appetit, caveam volens intret; cujus jam saevitia nequaquam pertimescitur, quia clausa in cavea levatur. Quae enim sua sponte in foveam corruit, ad superiores partes circumsepta vectibus redit. Sic sic nimirum humana mens capta est, quae in libertate arbitrii condita, dum nutrire desideria carnis appetivit, quasi leaena catulis escam quaesivit, atque in deceptionis suae foveam cecidit, quae, suadente hoste, ad cibum prohibitum manum tetendit. Sed in fovea protinus caveam invenit, quia sponte ad mortem veniens corruptionis suae mox carcerem pertulit; atque ad auras liberas, gratia interveniente, reducitur. Sed cum multa agere conatur, et non valet, ejusdem corruptionis suae obstaculis quasi caveae vectibus ligatur. Jam quidem eam in quam ceciderat damnationis foveam evasit, quia secuturae mortis supplicium, manu redemptionis adjuta, ad veniam redeundo superavit. Sed tamen coarctata caveam tolerat, quia supernae quoque disciplinae nexibus cingitur, ne per carnis desideria vagetur. Quae ergo sponte sua in foveam cecidit, ad auras liberas clausa redit, quia et per libertatem arbitrii in culpam corruit, et tamen hanc a suis motibus, conditoris gratia coactam nolentemque constringit. Post foveam itaque caveam patitur, quae, erepta ex aeterno supplicio, a pravae libertatis motibus, et sub coelestis artificis dispensatione religatur. Recte igitur dicit: Et propter superbiam, quasi leaenam capies me, quia et liber homo per cibum sibi mortem intulit, et reductus ad veniam sub disciplina melius clausus vivit. Quasi leaena ergo propter superbiam captus est, quia inde nunc eum disciplina suae corruptionis deprimit, unde transgressionem praecepti non timens, audacter in foveam saltum dedit.. IBID. — Reversusque mirabiliter me crucias. 88. Mentis a Deo desertae obduratio, visitatae compunctio. — Cum ab auctore relinquimur, nec ipsa ullatenus destitutionis nostrae damna sentimus. Quo enim longe nos conditor deserit, eo mens nostra insensibilius obdurescit, nulla quae Dei sunt diligit, nequaquam superna concupiscit; et quia amoris intimi calorem non habet, frigida deorsum jacet, ac miserando modo fit quotidie tanto securior, quanto pejor; cumque unde sit lapsa non meminit, et supplicia secutura non metuit, quantum lugenda sit nescit. At si afflatu sancti Spiritus tangitur, ad considerationem protinus suae perditionis evigilat, in coelestium inquisitione se excutit, amoris summi aestibus inardescit, quae se circumprimunt damna considerat, et plorat proficiens quae prius laeta peribat. Bene ergo conditori dicitur: Reversusque mirabiliter me crucias, quia omnipotens Deus unde mentem nostram visitans ad amorem suum erigit, inde hanc per lacrymas gravius affligit. Ac si aperte dicat:

Relinquendo me nequaquam afficis, quia insensibilem reddis; sed cum reverteris crucias, quia dum te insinuas mihi me quam sim lugendus demonstras. Unde et nequaquam se poenaliter, sed mirabiliter asserit cruciari, quia dum per fletum mens ad summa rapitur, compunctionis suae poenam gaudens miratur; et libet affici, quia afflictione sua se conspicit ad alta sublevari. Saepe autem cum nos a sancti desiderii exercitatione torpescere superna pietas cernit, exempla se sequentium nostris obtutibus objicit, ut mens per otium remissa, quo in aliis vigilantium provectus considerat, eo in se pigritudinem torporis erubescat. Unde et recte subjungitur:

CAPUT LIX.

VERS. 17. — Instauras testes tuos contra me, et multiplicas iram tuam, et poenae militant in me. 89. Exemplis bonorum Deus ad se nos revocat. — Testes enim Dei sunt, qui per exercitium sancti operis testantur quae electos secutura sint 329 praemia veritatis. Unde hos quoque quos pro veritate passos agnoscimus Graeco eloquio martyres, id est testes, vocamus. Et per Joannem voce angelica Dominus dicet: In diebus Antipas testis meus fidelis, qui occisus est apud vos (Apoc. II, 13). Sed testes suos contra nos Dominus instaurat, cum electorum vitam pravitati nostrae contrariam ad arguendos nos instruendosque multiplicat. Contra nos ergo testes illius instaurantur, quia cuncta quae agunt studiis nostrae pravitatis adversa sunt. Unde et sermo veritatis adversarius vocatur, cum Mediatoris voce per Evangelium dicitur: Esto consentiens adversario tuo cito, dum es cum illo in via (Matth. V, 25). Atque de hoc eodem Redemptore reprobi persequentes dicunt: Contrarius est operibus nostris (Sap. II, 12); et paulo post: Et dissimilis est aliis vita illius (Ibid., 15). Testes itaque suos contra nos Dominus instaurat, quia bona quae facere ipsi negligimus, haec ad correptionem nostram fieri ab aliis demonstrat; ut qui praeceptis non accendimur, saltem exemplis excitemur, atque in appetitu rectitudinis nil sibi mens nostra difficile aestimet quod perfecte peragi ab aliis videt. Et fit plerumque ut cum alienae vitae bona conspicimus, nostrae sollicitius damna timeamus; et eo patescat quantae post pondere animadversionis impatimur, quo nunc a bonorum moribus longe discrepamus. 90. Eorum labor indicat quae reprobos poena maneat. Bona in aliis visa quos animi motus excitare debeant. — Unde et testium instauratione memorata, protinus apte subjungitur: Et multiplicas iram tuam. Eo nobis multiplicari ira Dei dicitur, quo esse multiplex indicatur, quia ex ipsa nunc bonorum vita et labore cognoscimus, si emendari, dum tempus est, nolumus, quanta post animadversione feriamur. Electos quippe Dei cernimus et pia agere, et crudelia multa tolerare. Hinc ergo colligitur districtus judex quanta illic feriat districtione quos reprobat, si hic sic cruciat quos amat; Petro attestante qui ait. Tempus est ut judicium incipiat de domo Dei; si autem primum a nobis, quis finis eorum qui non credunt Dei Evangelio (I Pet. IV, 17)? Omnipotens igitur Deus cum contra nos testes instaurat, iram multiplicat, quia quo bonorum vitam nostris oculis objicit, eo pravitatis perpetratae duritiam qua districtione in judicio percutiat ostendit. Nam cum solis se sequentibus dona exaggerat, torpentes jam quia reliquerit demonstrat. Cum bona ergo in aliis cernimus, valde necesse est ut et exsultationem nostrae formidini, et formidinem nostrae exsultationi misceamus, quatenus et de alienis provectibus charitas gaudeat, et de suis infirmitatibus conscientia contremiscat. Sed cum fraterno proveatu reficimur, cum districtionem super nos interni judicis ex ipso nostro torpore pensamus, quid restat nisi ut ad discutiendum se animus redeat, et quidquid in se reprobum, quidquid pravum deprehendit, affligat? Unde et apte subjungitur: Et poenae militant in me. Consideratis quippe Dei testibus, poenae in nobis militant, quia dum miranda illorum facta conspicimus, vitam nostram, quae ex eorum nobis comparatione displicet, studiosa afflictione cruciamus; ut quidquid in nobis polluerunt opera, diluant lamenta; et si quid adhuc culpa delectationis inquinat, poena moeroris tergat. Beatus igitur Job, 330 quia vitam patrum praecedentium conspicit, quid in se gemere debeat subtilius agnoscit. Sed magni doloris magisterio, dum sua plangit, ad lamenta nos instruit: ut quo virtutes in aliis cernimus, eo apud districtum judicem nostra sollicite delicta timeamus. Sequitur:

CAPUT LX.

VERS. 18. — Quare de vulva eduxisti me? Qui utinam consumptus essem, ne oculus me videret. 91. Quod nimirum prima oratione jam protulit, dicens: Quare non in vulva mortuus sum? Qui hoc quoque quod hic adjicit, subdens, — VERS. 19. — Fuissem quasi non essem, de utero translatus ad tumulum, illic verbis aliis non aliter adjungit, dicens: Sicut abortivum absconditum non subsisterem, vel qui concepti non viderunt lucem (Job. III, 16). Quia vero haec superius late digessimus (Lib. IV, n. 48 et seq.), pro vitando lectoris fastidio, exposita replicare declinamus. Sequitur:

CAPUT LXI.

VERS. 20. — Nunquid non paucitas dierum meorum finietur brevi? 92. Vitae terminus, potissimum attendendus. — Cautum se ac sollicitum vivere ostendit, qui brevitatem praesentis vitae considerans, non ejus usum, sed terminum conspicit, ut ex fine colligat nihil esse quod transiens delectat. Hinc namque per Salomonem dicitur: Si annis multis vixerit homo, et in his omnibus laetatus fuerit, meminisse debet tenebrosi temporis et dierum multorum; qui cum venerint, vanitatis arguentur praeterita (Eccle. XI, 8). Hinc rursum scriptum est: In omnibus operibus tuis memorare novissima tua, et in aeternum non peccabis (Eccli. VII, 40). Igitur cum culpa animum tentat, mens necesse est ut brevitatem suae delectationis aspiciat, ne ad vivacem mortem iniquitas rapiat, cum constet quod ad terminum citius mortalis vita percurrat. Sed saepe oculus contemplationis nostrae confunditur dum dolor noster flagellis crebrescentibus aggravatur. Libet praesentis vitae exsilium gemere, sed prae ipsa afflictione mens non valet damna suae caecitatis aestimare. Unde protinus subdit:

CAPUT LXII.

. IBID. — Dimitte ergo me, ut plangam paululum dolorem meum. 93. Lacrymas et doloris sensum tollit nimius moeror. Flere mala nostra nos non sinit vis consuetudinis. — Sicut enim moderata afflictio lacrymas exprimit, ita immoderata subducit, quia moeror ipse quasi sine moerore fit, qui, afflicti mentem devorans, sensum doloris tollit. Vir igitur sanctus feriri plus quam sufficit pertimescit, dicens: Dimitte ergo me, ut plangam paululum dolorem meum. Ac si aperte dicat: Flagella tuae percussionis tempera, ut, moderatis doloribus, aestimare mala quae patior flendo convalescam. Quod tamen intelligi et aliter potest. Saepe namque peccator iniquitatis suae vinculis ita constringitur, ut pondus quidem peccatorum toleret, sed tamen quia tolerat ignoret. Saepe etiamsi cognoscat quanto reatu premitur, erumpere conatur, et non potest, ut hunc in se mente libera, conversione integra, persequatur. Flere ergo dolorem suum non valet, quia et iniquitatis suae reatum considerat, et tamen prae terrenae occupationis pondere hanc ei gemere nequaquam vacat. Flere dolorem suum non valet, qui pravae quidem consuetudini contraire nititur, sed tamen adhuc succrescentibus desideriis carnis gravatur. Hujus doloris praesentia Prophetae mentem 331 cruciaverat, cum dicebat: Dolor meus ante me est semper, quoniam iniquitatem meam ego pronuntio, et cogitabo pro peccato meo (Psal. XXXVII, 18, 19). Sed solutis iniquitatis vinculis dimissum se noverat qui exsultabat dicens: Dirupisti vincula mea, tibi sacrificabo hostiam laudis (Psal. CXV, 16). 94. Nisi Deus ad id nos adjuvet. — Tunc igitur ad plangendum dolorem nos Dominus dimittit, cum et mala nobis quae fecimus demonstrat, atque ad haec eadem flenda quae cognoscimus adjuvat. Culpas oculis objicit, et pia manu gratiae vincula cordis solvit, ut ad vacationem poenitentiae mens nostra se erigat, et, carnis soluta compedibus, in auctorem suum libera gressum amoris tendat. Plerumque etenim vitam nostram ipsi reprehendimus, sed tamen libenter agimus hoc quod in nobis recte reprobamus. Ad justitiam nos spiritus erigit, ad consuetudinem caro restringit. Amori suo mens renititur, sed protinus delectata captivatur. Bene itaque dicitur: Dimitte ergo me, ut plangam paululum dolorem meum, quia nisi a reatu culpae, quo nos ligavimus, misericorditer dimittamur, perfecte flere non possumus hoc quod in nobis ipsis contra nosmetipsos dolemus. Sed tunc veraciter reatus nostri dolor plangitur, cum tenebrosa illa inferni retributio intento timore praevidetur. Unde apte subjungitur:

CAPUT LXIII.

VERS. 21. — Antequam vadam, et non revertar, ad terram tenebrosam et opertam mortis caligine. 95. Inferni poenae nec transitoriae nec phantasticae. Infernus cur terra, cur lacus. — Quid enim terrae tenebrosae nomine, nisi tetra tartari claustra signantur? Quae aeternae mortis caligo operit, quia damnatos quosque in perpetuum a vitae luce disjungit. Nec immerito infernus terra dicitur, quia quicunque ab eo capti fuerint, stabiliter tenentur. Scriptum quippe est: Generatio praeterit, et generatio advenit, terra vero in aeternum stat (Eccle. I, 4). Recte igitur inferni claustra tenebrosa terra nominantur, quia quos puniendos accipiunt, nequaquam poena transitoria, vel phantastica imaginatione cruciant, sed ultione solida perpetuae damnationis servant. Quae aliquando tamen laci appellatione signantur, propheta attestante, qui ait: Portaverunt ignominiam suam cum his qui descendunt in lacum (Ezech. XXXII, 24, 25). Infernus ergo et terra nominatur, quia susceptos stabiliter tenet; et lacus dicitur, quia hos quos semel ceperit semper fluctuantes et trepidos tormentis circumfluentibus absorbet. Sanctus autem vir sive sua, seu humani generis voce dimitti se postulat, antequam vadat, non quia ad terram tenebrosam qui culpam deflet iturus est, sed quia ad hanc procul dubio qui plangere negligit vadit; sicut debitori suo creditor dicit: Solve debitum prius quam pro debito constringaris; qui tamen non constringitur, si quod debet solvere non moratur. Ubi et recte subditur: Non revertar, quia nequaquam ultra misericordia parcentis liberat quos semel in locis poenalibus justitia judicantis damnat. Quae adhuc subtilius loca describuntur, cum dicitur:

CAPUT LXIV.

VERS. 22. — Terram miseriae et tenebrarum. 96. Quos tenet, foris cruciantur, intus caecantur. — Miseria ad dolorem pertinet, tenebrae ad caecitatem. Ea ergo quae a conspectu districti judicis expulsus tenet, miseriae et tenebrarum terra perhibetur, quia foris dolor cruciat quos divisos a vero lumine intus caecitas obscurat. Quamvis miseriae et tenebrarum terra intelligi et aliter potest. 332 Nam haec quoque terra in qua nascimur est quidem miseriae, sed tenebrarum non est, quia multa hic corruptionis nostrae mala patimur, sed tamen adhuc in ea per conversionis gratiam ad lucem redimus, Veritate suadente, quae ait: Ambulate dum lucem habetis, ne vos tenebrae comprehendant (Joan. XII, 35). Illa vero simul miseriae et tenebrarum terra est, quia quisquis ad toleranda ejus mala descenderit, nequaquam ulterius ad lucem redit. In cujus adhuc descriptione subjungitur:

CAPUT LXV.

IBID. — Ubi umbra mortis, et nullus ordo. 97. Ultionem habet, non lucem. Quam justae hae poenae. — Sicut mors exterior ab anima dividit carnem, ita mors interior a Deo separat animam. Umbra ergo mortis est obscuritas divisionis, quia damnatus quisque cum aeterno igne succenditur, ab interno lumine tenebratur. Natura vero ignis est, ut ex se ipso et lucem exhibeat, et concremationem; sed transactorum illa ultrix flamma vitiorum concremationem habet, et lumen non habet. Hinc est enim quod reprobis Veritas dicit: Discedite a me, maledicti, in ignem aeternum, qui paratus est diabolo et angelis ejus (Matth. XXV, 41). Quorum rursus omnium corpus in unius persona significans, dicit: Ligate ei manus et pedes, et mittite eum in tenebras exteriores (Matth. XXII, 13). Si itaque ignis qui reprobos cruciat lumen habere potuisset, is qui repellitur nequaquam mitti in tenebras diceretur. Hinc etiam Psalmista ait: Super eos cecidit ignis et non viderunt solem (Psal. LVII, 9). Ignis enim super impios cadit, sed sol igne cadente non cernitur, quia quo illos gehennae flamma devorat, a visione veri luminis caecat; ut et foris eos dolor combustionis cruciet, et intus poena caecitatis obscuret; quatenus qui auctori suo et corpore et corde deliquerunt, simul et corpore et corde puniantur; et utrobique poenas sentiant, qui dum hic viverent pravis suis delectationibus ex utroque serviebant. Unde bene per prophetam dicitur: Descenderunt in infernum cum armis suis (Ezech. XXXII, 27). Arma quippe peccantium sunt membra corporis, quibus perversa desideria quae concipiunt exsequuntur. Unde recte per Paulum dicitur: Neque exhibeatis membra vestra arma iniquitatis peccato (Rom. VI, 13). Cum armis ergo ad infernum descendere est cum ipsis quoque membris quibus desideria voluptatis expleverunt aeterni judicii tormenta tolerare, ut tunc eos undique dolor absorbeat, qui nunc, suis delectationibus subditi, undique contra justitiam juste judicantis pugnant.? Quia autem pravi audire bona patienter nequeunt, et cum vitae emendationem negligunt, ad verba se responsionis accingunt, aperte Sophar insinuat, qui subjungit:

CAPUT III.

VERS. 3. — Tibi soli tacebunt homines, et cum caeteros irriseris, a nullo confutaberis? 3. Ad correptionem quam diverse affecti pravi et recti. — Imperita mens, ut diximus, veritatis sententias graviter tolerat, et silentium poenam putat atque omne quod rectum dicitur dedecus suae irrisionis arbitratur, quia cum vera vox pravorum se auribus admovet, memoriam culpa mordet, et in redargutione vitiorum quo intus cognitione mens tangitur, foras ad studium contradictionis excitatur. Ferre vocem non valet, quia tacta in vulnere sui reatus dolet, et per hoc quod generaliter contra perversos dicitur, se impeti specialiter suspicatur. Quod enim intus egisse se meminit, audire foris erubescit. Unde mox se ad defensionem praeparat, ut reatus sui verecundiam per verba pravae refutationis tegat. Sicut enim recti de quibusdam quae ab eis non recte gesta sunt correptionis vocem, ministerium charitatis aestimant, sic perversi contumeliam derisionis putant. Illi se protinus ad obedientiam sternunt, isti ad insaniam suae defensionis eriguntur. Illi correptionis adjutorium vitae suae patrocinium deputant, per quod dum praesentis vitae culpa corripitur, venturi judicis ira temperatur; isti cum se impeti redargutione conspiciunt, gladium percussionis credunt, quia dum per correptionis vocem culpa detegitur, praesentis gloriae opinio foedatur. Hinc quippe in laude justi per Salomonem dicit Veritas: Doce justum, et festinabit accipere (Prov. IX, 10). Hinc pravorum contumaciam despicit, dicens: Qui erudit derisorem, ipse sibi facit injuriam (Ibid., 7). Nam fit plerumque ut cum correpta in se mala defendere nequeunt, ex verecundia pejores fiant; ac sic in sua defensione superbiant, ut quaedam vitia contra vitam corripientis exquirant; et eo se criminosos non aestimant, si crimina et aliis imponant. Quae cum vera invenire nequeunt, fingunt, ut ipsi quoque habeant quod non impari justitia increpare videantur. Unde et Sophar, quia quasi irrideri se per increpationem doluit, protinus mentiendo subjungit:

CAPUT IV.

VERS. 4. — Dixisti enim, Purus est sermo meus, et mundus sum in conspectu tuo. 4. Pravi vera in se mala flere renuunt, et aliis falsa impingunt. — Qui beati Job dictorum meminit, quam falso hoc voci illius impingatur agnoscit. Quomodo enim mundum se dicere potuit, qui ait: Si justificare me voluero, os meum condemnabit me (Job. IX, 20)? Sed habet hoc pravorum malitia, ut cum vera in se 339 flere mala renuit, fingat aliena. Nam quasi solatio facinoris utitur, si falsis vocibus et vita corripientis inquinetur. Sciendum vero est quod plerumque perversi verbotenus bona optant, ut mala esse quae in praesentibus habentur ostendant; et quasi faventes prospera expetunt, ut benigni videantur. Unde et Sophar protinus subjicit, dicens:

CAPUT V.

VERS. 5. — Atque utinam Deus loqueretur tecum, et aperiret labia sua tibi!
5. Homini quando Deus loquatur, quando ipse sibi. — Ipse quippe sibi homo loquitur, cum per hoc quod sentit nequaquam Divinitatis spiritu a carnalis prudentiae intellectu separatur; cum caro sensum exerit, et mentem, quasi ad intelligentiam provocans, foras mittit. Unde et adhuc Petro terrena sapienti Veritas dicit: Non enim sapis quae Dei sunt, sed quae hominum (Marc. VIII, 33). Cui tamen recta confitenti dicitur: Caro et sanguis non revelavit tibi, sed Pater meus qui in coelis est (Matth. XVI, 17). Quid autem Dei labia nisi judicia ejus accipimus? Clausis namque labiis vox premitur, et sensus tacentis ignoratur; apertis autem sermo dum promitur, animus loquentis invenitur. Labia itaque sua Deus aperit cum voluntatem suam hominibus per aperta judicia ostendit. Quasi enim reserato ore loquitur, cum remota obscuritate dispositionis intimae renuit occultare quod vult. Nam velut clausis labiis sensum nobis suum non indicat, cum per occulta judicia cur quid faciat celat. Sophar itaque beatum Job ut de carnali intellectu redarguat, seque ipsum quantae sit benignitatis ostendat, ei bona optat, quae et cum habentur ignorat, dicens: Atque utinam Deus loqueretur tecum et aperiret labia sua tibi! Ac si patenter dicat: Imperitiae tuae potius quam poenae compatior, quia, sola carnis prudentia praeditum, a veritatis te spiritu vacuum agnosco. Si enim Dei judicia occulta cognosceres, tam procaces contra illum sententias non sonares. Et quia omnipotens Deus cum ad consideranda nos sua judicia sublevat, ignorantiae nostrae protinus caecitatem fugat, quae apertis ejus labiis, ad nos eruditio prodeat, protinus adjungendo manifestat, dicens:

CAPUT VI.

VERS. 6. — Ut ostenderet tibi secreta sapientiae, et quod multiplex sit lex ejus. 6. Sapientiae opera quae publica. Quae secreta. — Publica sapientiae supernae sunt opera, cum omnipotens Deus regit quos creat, perficit bona quae inchoat, et aspirando adjuvat quos visitationis suae lumine illustrat. Cunctis etenim liquet quia quos gratis condidit benigne disponit. Et cum spiritalia dona largitur, ipse perficit quod ipse ex munere suae benignitatis inchoavit. Secreta vero sapientiae supernae sunt opera cum Deus quos creavit deserit; cum bona quae praeveniendo coeperat; nequaquam prosequendo consummat; cum claritate nos suae illustrationis illuminat, et tamen, permissis carnis tentationibus, tenebris caecitatis pulsat; cum dona quae contulit minime custodit; cum et mentis nostrae ad se desideria excitat, et tamen occulto judicio difficultate nos nostrae imbecillitatis angustat. Sed Dei dilectio per tria distinguitur, quia ex toto corde, et ex tota anima, et ex tota fortitudine diligi conditor jubetur. Qua in re notandum est quod divinus sermo cum Deum diligi praecipit, non solum narrat ex quo, sed etiam informat ex quanto, cum subjungit ex toto, ut videlicet qui perfecte Deo placere desiderat sibi de se nihil relinquat. Proximi autem dilectio ad duo praecepta derivatur, cum et per quemdam justum dicitur: Quod ab alio tibi odis fieri, vide ne tu alteri facias (Tob. IV, 16). Et per semetipsam Veritas dicit: Quae vultis ut faciant vobis homines, et vos facite illis (Matth. VII, 12). Quibus duobus scilicet utriusque Testamenti mandatis, per unum malitia compescitur, per aliud benignitas praerogatur, ut malum quod pati non vult quisque non faciens; cesset a nocendi opere; et rursum bonum quod sibi fieri appetit, 341 impendens, erga utilitatem se proximi exerceat ex benignitate. Sed haec nimirum duo dum sollicita intentione cogitantur, cor ad innumera virtutum ministeria tenditur, ne vel ad inferenda quae non debet desideriis inquieta mens ferveat, vel erga exhibenda quae debet otio resoluta torpescat. Nam cum cavet alteri facere quod nequaquam vult ab altero ipsa tolerare, sollicita se intentione circumspicit, ne superbia elevet, et usque ad despectum proximi animum dejiciens exaltet; ne ambitio cogitationem laniet, cumque hanc ad appetenda aliena dilatat, angustet; ne cor luxuria polluat, et subjectum desideriis per illicita corrumpat; ne ira exasperet, et usque ad proferendam contumeliam inflammet; ne invidia mordeat, et alienis felicitatibus aemula, sua se face consumat; ne immoderate linguam loquacitas pertrahat, eamque usque ad lasciviam obtrectationis extendat; ne odium malitia excitet, et os usque ad jaculum maledictionis irritet. Rursum cum cogitat ut ea alteri faciat quae ipsa sibi fieri ab altero exspectat, pensat nimirum ut malis bona, et bonis meliora respondeat; ut erga procaces mansuetudinem longanimitatis exhibeat; ut malitiae peste languentibus gratiam benignitatis impendat; ut discordes pace uniat, et concordes ad concupiscentiam verae pacis accingat; ut indigentibus necessaria tribuat; ut errantibus viam rectitudinis ostendat; ut afflictos verbo et compassione mulceat; ut accensos in hujus mundi desideriis increpatione restinguat; ut minas potentum ratiocinatione mitiget; ut oppressorum angustias quanta praevalet ope levet; ut foris resistentibus opponat patientiam; ut intus superbientibus exhibeat cum patientia disciplinam; ut erga errata subditorum sic mansuetudo zelum temperet, quatenus a justitiae studio non enervet; sic ad ultionem zelus ferveat, ne tamen pietatis limitem fervendo transcendat; ut ingratos beneficiis ad amorem provocet; ut gratos quosque ministeriis in amore servet; ut proximorum mala cum corrigere non valet, taceat, utque cum corrigi loquendo possunt, silentium consensum esse pertimescat; ut sic ea quae tacet toleret, ne tamen in anima virus doloris occultet; ut sic malevolis munus benignitatis exhibeat, ne tamen per gratiam a jure rectitudinis excedat; ut cuncta proximis quae praevalet impendat, sed haec impendendo non tumeat; ut sic in bonis quae exhibet tumoris praecipitium paveat, ne tamen a boni exercitio torpescat; ut sic quae possidet tribuat, quatenus quanta sit largitas remunerantis attendat; ne cum terrena largitur, suam plus quam necesse est inopiam cogitet, et in oblatione muneris hilaritatis lumen tristitia obscuret. 9. Charitas multiformis exemplis sanctorum ostenditur. — Bene ergo lex Dei multiplex dicitur, quia nimirum cum una eademque sit charitas, si mentem plene coeperit, hanc ad innumera opera multiformiter accendit. Cujus diversitatem breviter exprimimus, si in electis singulis bona illius perstringendo numeremus. Haec namque per Abel et electa Deo munera, obtulit, et fratris gladium non reluctando toleravit (Genes. IV, 4, 8). Haec Enoch et inter homines vivere spiritaliter docuit, et ad sublimem vitam ab hominibus etiam corporaliter abstraxit (Genes. V, 24). 342 Haec Noe, despectis omnibus solum Deo placabilem ostendit, atque in arcae fabricam studio longi laboris exercuit, et mundo superstitem pio opere exercendo servavit (Genes. VII, 6). Haec per Sem et Japhet humiliter verenda patris erubuit, et superjecto dorsis pallio, quae non videbat abscondit (Genes. IX, 23). Haec Abrahae dextram quia ad mortem filii obediendo extulit, hunc prolis innumerae, gentium patrem fecit (Genes. XXII, 10). Haec Isaac mentem, quia semper ad munditiam tenuit, caligantibus aetate oculis, ad videnda longe post ventura dilatavit (Genes. XXVII, 1). Haec Jacob compulit et amissum bonum filium medullitus gemere, et pravorum filiorum praesentiam sub aequanimitate tolerare (Genes. XXXVII, 34). Haec Joseph docuit a fratribus venundatum, et libertate animi infracta servitium perpeti, et eisdem post fratribus mente non elata principari (Genes. XLII, 33). Haec Moysen, delinquente populo, et usque ad petitionem mortis in precibus stravit, et usque ad interfectionem populi per zeli studium erexit, ut et pro pereunte plebe sese morti objiceret, et contra peccantem protinus vice Domini irascentis saeviret (Exod. XXXII, 33). Haec Phinees brachium in ultionem peccantium erexit, ut arrepto gladio, coeuntes transfigeret, et iram Domini iratus placaret (Num. XXV, 8, 9). Haec Jesum exploratorem docuit, ut et prius contra falsiloquos cives veritatem verbo defenderet, et hanc postmodum gladio contra hostes allegaret (Josue I, 2, seq.; Num. XIV, 6, 7, seq.). Haec Samuel et in principatu humilem praebuit, et integrum in dejectione servavit, qui cum persequentem se plebem diligeret, ipse sibi testimonio exstitit, quia culmen ex quo dejectus est non amavit (I Reg. III, 4, seq.). Haec David ante iniquum regem et humilitate commovit ad fugam, et pietate replevit ad veniam; qui persecutorem suum et timendo fugit ut dominum, et tamen cum potestatem feriendi reperit, non agnovit inimicum (I Reg. XXIV, 6, 18). Haec Nathan et contra peccantem regem in auctoritatem liberae increpationis sustulit, et cum regis culpa deesset, in petitione humiliter stravit (II Reg. XII, 1, seq.). Haec per Isaiam nuditatem carnis in praedicatione non erubuit, et subducto carnali velamine, superna mysteria penetravit (Isai. XX, 2). Haec Eliam, quia fervoris zelo vivere spiritaliter docuit, ad vitam quoque et corporaliter abstraxit (IV Reg. II, 11). Haec Elisaeum, quia magistrum diligere simpliciter instituit, magistri spiritu dupliciter implevit (Ibid., 10). Per hanc Jeremias ne in Aegyptum populus descenderet restitit; sed tamen et inobedientes diligens, quo descendi prohibuit, et ipse descendit (Jerem. XLII, 18). Haec Ezechielem, quia prius a terrenis desideriis sustulit, post per cincinnum capitis in aere libravit (Ezech. VIII, 3). Haec in Daniele, quia a regiis dapibus gulam compescuit, ei et esurientium ora leonum clausit (Dan. XIV, 40), Haec tribus pueris, quia in tranquillitate positis incendia vitiorum subdidit, tribulationis tempore et flammas in fornace temperavit (Dan. III, 50). Haec in Petro et minis terrentium principum fortiter restitit, et in circumcisione submovenda minorum verba humiliter audivit. Haec in Paulo et manus persequentium humiliter pertulit, et tamen in circumcisionis negotio longe se imparis prioris sensum audenter increpavit (Act. XV). Multiplex ergo ista lex Dei est, quae singulis rerum articulis non permutata congruit, et causis se variantibus non variata conjungit. 10. Charitatis officia ex Paulo. — Cujus nimirum legis multiplicitatem bene 343 Paulus enumerat, dicens: Charitas patiens est, benigna est; non aemulatur, non inflatur, non agit perperam, non est ambitiosa, non quaerit quae sua sunt, non irritatur, non cogitat malum, non gaudet super iniquitate, congaudet autem veritati (I Cor. XIII, 4). Patiens quippe est charitas, quia illata mala aequanimiter tolerat. Benigna vero est, quia pro malis bona largiter ministrat. Non aemulatur, quia per hoc quod in praesenti mundo nil appetit, invidere terrenis successibus nescit. Non inflatur, quia cum praemium internae retributionis anxia desiderat, de bonis se exterioribus non exaltat. Non agit perperam, quia quo se in solum Dei ac proximi amorem dilatat, quidquid a rectitudine discrepat ignorat. Non est ambitiosa, quia quo ardenter intus ad sua satagit, foras nullatenus aliena concupiscit. Non quaerit quae sua sunt, quia cuncta quae hic transitorie possidet velut aliena negligit, cum nihil sibi esse proprium nisi quod secum permaneat agnoscit. Non irritatur, quia et injuriis lacessita ad nullos se ultionis suae motus excitat, dum pro magnis laboribus majora post praemia exspectat. Non cogitat malum, quia in amore munditiae mentem solidans, dum omne odium radicitus eruit, versare in animo quod inquinat nescit. Non gaudet super iniquitate, quia quo sola dilectione erga omnes inhiat, nec de perditione adversantium exsultat. Congaudet autem veritati, quia ut se caeteros diligens, per hoc quod rectum in aliis conspicit, quasi de augmento proprii provectus hilarescit. Multiplex ergo ista lex Dei est, quae contra uniuscujusque culpae jaculum, quod perimendam mentem impetit, instructionis suae munimine occurrit, ut quia antiquus hostis varia circumfusione nos obsidet, ipsa hunc de nobis multipliciter expugnet. Quam nimirum legem si sollicita consideratione pensamus, auctori nostro quantum quotidie delinquamus agnoscimus. Si autem culpas perpendimus, profecto aequanimiter flagella toleramus; nec ex dolore ad impatientiam proruit, cum suo se judicio conscientia addicit. Unde Sophar, quid diceret sciens, sed cui diceret nesciens, postquam praemisit dicens, Ut ostenderet tibi secreta sapientiae, et quod multiplex sit lex ejus, protinus adjungit:

CAPUT VII IBID.

— Et intelligeres quod multo minora exigaris a Deo quam meretur iniquitas tua. 11. Culparum nostrarum cognitio temperat dolorem flagellorum. — Dolor quippe, ut diximus, flagelli temperatur cum culpa cognoscitur, quia et tanto quisque patientius ferramentum medici tolerat, quanto putridum conspicit esse quod secat. Qui igitur multiplicitatem legis intelligit, cuncta quae patitur quam sint minora perpendit, quia per hoc quod culpae pondus agnoscitur, afflictionis poena levigatur. 12. Venialiter peccant, qui zeli fervore modum correptionis excedunt. — Sed inter haec sciendum est quia sine magna iniquitate non fuerit quod Sophar virum justum usque ad objectionem iniquitatis increpavit. Unde et eorum audaciam Veritas juste redarguit, sed benigne ad gratiam reducit; quia apud misericordem judicem nequaquam sine venia culpa relinquitur, cum per fervorem zeli ex ejus amore peccatur. Saepe namque magnis hoc doctoribus mirandisque contingit, ut quo alta charitate fervent, 344 modum correptionis exaggerent, et lingua aliquid quod non debet dicat, quia mentem dilectio quantum debet inflammat. Sed verbum prolatae contumeliae tanto citius parcitur, quanto et ex qua radice prodeat pensatur. Unde bene per Moysen Dominus praecepit dicens: Si quis abierit cum amico suo simpliciter in silvam ad ligna caedenda, et lignum securis fugerit manu, ferrumque lapsum de manubrio amicum ejus percusserit, et occiderit, hic ad unam supradictarum urbium fugiet, et vivet, ne forte proximus ejus, cujus effusus est sanguis, doloris stimulo persequatur, et apprehendat eum, et percutiat animam ejus (Deut. XIX, 5). Ad silvam quippe cum amico imus quoties cum quolibet proximo ad intuenda delicta nostra convertimur, et simpliciter ligna succidimus cum delinquentium vitia pia intentione resecamus. Sed securis manu fugit cum sese increpatio plus quam necesse est in asperitatem pertrahit. Ferrumque de manubrio prosilit cum de correptione sermo durior excedit; et amicum percutiens occidit, quia auditorem suum prolata contumelia ab spiritu dilectionis interficit. Correpti namque mens repente ad odium proruit, si hanc immoderata increpatio plus quam debuit addicit. Sed is qui incaute ligna percutit, et proximum exstinguit, ad tres necesse est urbes fugiat, ut in una earum defensus vivat, quia si, ad poenitentiae lamenta conversus, in unitate sacramenti sub spe, fide et charitate absconditur, reus perpetrati homicidii non tenetur; eumque exstincti proximus et cum invenerit non occidit, quia cum districtus judex venerit, qui sese nobis per naturae nostrae consortium junxit, ab eo procul dubio vindictam de culpae reatu non expetit quem sub ejus venia spes, fides et charitas abscondit. Citius ergo culpa dimittitur quae nequaquam malitiae studio perpetratur. Unde et Sophar iniquum vocat quem superna sententia laudaverat; nec tamen a venia reprobatus excluditur, quia ad verba contumeliae divini amoris zelo promovetur. Qui pro eo quod beati Job merita non agnoscit, ex imperita adhuc irrisione subjungit, dicens:

CAPUT VIII.

VERS. 7. — Forsitan vestigia Dei comprehendes, et usque ad perfectum, Omnipotentem reperies. 13. Dei vestigia sunt ejus dona quibus ad superna provocamur. Deus hic non videtur manifeste. Contemplationis vis. Dei essentiam angelica vel humana mens non plene contuetur. — Quid Dei vestigia nisi benignitatem illius visitationis vocat? Quibus nimirum progredi ad superna provocamur cum ejus Spiritus afflatu tangimur, et, extra carnis angustias sublevati, per amorem agnoscimus auctoris nostri contemplandam speciem, quam sequamur. Nam cum mentem nostram spiritalis patriae amor inflammat, quasi sequentibus iter insinuat, et substrato cordi velut quoddam vestigium Dei gradientis imprimitur, ut ab eo rectis cogitationum gressibus via vitae teneatur. Quem enim necdum cernimus, restat necesse est ut per vestigia sui amoris indagemus, quatenus usque ad contemplationis speciem quandoque mens inveniat quem nunc, quasi a tergo subsequens, per sancta desideria explorat. Haec Psalmista auctoris nostri vestigia bene sequi noverat cum dicebat: Adhaesit anima mea post te (Psal. LXII, 9). Quem reperire quoque usque ad visionem suae celsitudinis satagebat, dicens: Sitivit anima mea 345 ad Deum vivum; quando veniam, et parebo ante faciem Dei (Psal. XLI, 3) Tunc quippe cogitatione manifesta omnipotens Deus reperitur, cum, mortalitatis nostrae funditus corruptione calcata, ab assumptis nobis in divinitatis suae claritate conspicitur. Nunc autem a carnali cogitatione animum infusi Spiritus gratia sublevat, et in contemptum rerum transeuntium exaltat; totumque mens quod appetebat in infimis despicit, atque ad superna desideria ignescit, et contemplationis suae vi extra carnem tollitur, quae corruptionis suae pondere adhuc in carne retinetur. Incircumscripti luminis jubar intueri conatur, et non valet; quod infirmitate pressus animus et nequaquam penetrat, et tamen repulsus amat. Jam namque de se conditor per quod ametur ostendit, sed visionis suae speciem amantibus subtrahit. Sola ergo ejus vestigia conspicientes gradimur, qui hunc per donorum suorum signa sequimur, quem necdum videmus. Quae nimirum vestigia comprehendi nequeunt, quia unde, ubi, quibusve modis veniant ejus Spiritus dona, nesciuntur, Veritate attestante, quae ait: Spiritus ubi vult spirat, et vocem ejus audis, et nescis unde veniat, et quo vadat (Joann. III, 8). In retributionis autem culmine reperiri Omnipotens per contemplationis speciem potest, sed tamen ad perfectum non potest, quia etsi hunc in claritate sua quandoque conspicimus, non tamen ejus essentiam plene contuemur. Angelica etenim, vel humana mens cum ad incircumscriptum lumen inhiat, eo ipso se, quo est creatura, coangustat; et super se quidem per provectum tenditur, sed tamen ejus fulgorem comprehendere nec dilatata sufficit, qui et transcendendo et portando omnia et implendo concludit. Unde et adhuc subditur:

CAPUT IX.

VERS. 8, 9. — Excelsior coelo est, et quid facies? profundior inferno, et unde cognosces? Longior terra mensura ejus, et latior mari. 14. Qui Deus omnia transcendat. — Quod Deus coelo excelsior, inferno profundior, terra longior, marique latior esse describitur, tanto spiritaliter debet intelligi, quanto de eo quidquam nefas est juxta corporea lineamenta sentire. Sed coelo est excelsior, quia incircumscriptione sui spiritus cuncta transcendit; inferno profundior, quia transcendendo subvehit; terra longior, quia creaturae modum perennitate suae aeternitatis excedit; mari latior, quia rerum temporalium fluctus sic regens possidet, ut hos sub omnimoda potentiae suae praesentia coangustando circumdet. Quamvis possunt et coeli appellatione angeli, et inferni vocabulo daemonia designari; per terram vero justi homines, per mare autem peccatores intelligi. Excelsior itaque coelo est, quia ipsi quoque electi spiritus visionem tantae celsitudinis perfecte non penetrant. Profundior inferno est, quia malignorum spirituum astutias longe subtilius quam ipsi putaverant judicans damnat. Terra longior, quia longanimitatem nostram patientia divinae longanimitatis exsuperat, quae nos et peccantes tolerat, et conversos ad praemia remunerationis exspectat. Mari latior, quia ubique facta peccantium 346 retributionis suae praesentia occupat, ut et cum non praesens per speciem cernitur, praesens per judicium sentiatur. 15. Qui homo coelum, infernus, terra, mare. Dei latitudo, longitudo, sublimitas et profundum. — Cuncta tamen ad solum referri hominem possunt, ut ipse sit coelum cum jam per desiderium summis inhaereat; ipse infernus, cum, tentationum suarum caligine perturbatus, in infimis jacet; ipse terra, quia in bono opere fixae spei ubertate fructificat; ipse mare, quia in quibusdam trepidus quatitur, et aura suae mutabilitatis agitatur. Sed coelo est excelsior Deus, quia potentiae ejus magnitudine vincimur, etiam cum super nosmetipsos elevamur; inferno profundior, quia nimirum plus judicat quam ipse se humanus animus in tentationibus investigat; terra longior, quia fructus vitae, quos in fine retribuit, nequaquam nunc vel spes nostra comprehendit; mari latior, quia humana mens fluctuans multa de his quae ventura sunt conjicit, sed cum jam cernere quae aestimaverat coeperit, angustam se fuisse in sua aestimatione cognoscit. Excelsior igitur coelo fit cum ipsa in eum nostra contemplatio deficit. Unde et cor Psalmista in altum posuerat, sed necdum se eum contigisse sentiebat, dicens: Mirabilis facta est scientia tua ex me, confortata est, nec potero ad eam (Psal. CXXXVIII, 6). Inferno profundiorem noverat, qui semetipsum discutiens, sed ejus subtiliora judicia pertimescens, dicebat: Nihil mihi conscius sum, sed non in hoc justificatus sum; qui autem judicat me, Dominus est (I Cor. IV, 4). Longiorem terra viderat, cum minora ei esse humanae mentis vota pensabat, dicens: Qui potens est omnia facere superabundanter quam petimus aut intelligimus (Ephes. III, 20). Latiorem mari conspexerat, qui timendo pensabat quia nequaquam mens humana immensitatem districtionis ejus agnosceret, quantumlibet inquirendo fluctuaret, dicens: Quis novit potestatem irae tuae, aut prae timore iram tuam dinumerare (Psal. LXXXIX, 11)? Cujus bene potentiam egregius nobis doctor insinuat, cum breviter narrat: Ut possitis comprehendere cum omnibus sanctis, quae sit latitudo, longitudo, sublimitas et profundum (Ephes. III, 18). Habet quippe Deus latitudinem, quia dilectionem suam usque ad collectionem persequentium tendit. Habet longitudinem, quia ad vitae patriam nos longanimiter tolerando perducit.

Habet sublimitatem, quia ipsorum quoque intelligentiam qui recepti in supernam fuerint congregationem transcendit. Habet profundum, quia damnatis inferius districtionis suae judicium incomprehensibiliter exerit. Quae scilicet quatuor nobis in hac vita positis singulis exercet, quia et latitudinem amando, et longitudinem tolerando, et celsitudinem, non solum nostram intelligentiam, sed etiam vota superando, et profunditatem suam exhibet, occultos et illicitos cogitationum motus districte judicando. Sed ejus celsitudo et profunditas quam sit investigabilis nullus agnoscit, nisi qui vel contemplatione ad summa provehi, vel, occultis motibus resistens, tentationum coeperit importunitate turbari. Unde et beato Job dicitur: Excelsior coelo est, et quid facies? profundior inferno, et unde cognosces? Ac si ei aperto despectu diceretur: Profunditatem ejus 347 atque excellentiam quando tu cognoscere sufficis, qui vel virtute ad summa evehi, vel temetipsum reprehendere in tentationibus nescis. Sequitur:

CAPUT X.

. VERS. 10. — Si subverterit omnia, vel in unum coarctaverit, quis contradicet ei? vel quis dicere ei potest, Cur ita facis? 16. Quomodo Deus in nobis coelum, infernum, terram, mare subvertat. — Subvertit Dominus coelum cum terribili et occulta dispensatione humanae contemplationis celsitudinem destruit. Subvertit infernum cum cujuslibet mentem in suis tentationibus pavidam cadere etiam ad deteriora permittit. Subvertit terram cum fructificationem boni operis adversis irruentibus intercidit. Subvertit mare cum fluctuationem nostrae titubationis emergente subito pavore confundit. Dubietate quippe sua cor anxium hoc ipsum quia titubat valde formidat, et quasi mare subvertitur cum ipsa in Deum nostra trepidatio, considerato ejus judicii terrore, turbatur. Quia igitur quomodo coelum vel infernus, terra vel mare, subvertitur breviter diximus, nunc aliquantulum laboriosius restat ut haec qualiter in unum coarctari valeant, demonstremus.

17. Coelum et infernus simul, in una mente contemplatio et carnis tentatio. — Saepe namque contingit ut ad summa jam mentem spiritus elevet, sed tamen hanc importunis caro tentationibus impugnet. Cumque ad contemplanda coelestia animus ducitur, objectis actionis illicitae imaginibus reverberatur. Nam carnis repente hunc stimulus sauciat quem extra carnem contemplatio sancta rapiebat. Coelum ergo simul infernusque coarctatur cum unam eamdemque mentem et sublevatio contemplationis illuminat, et importunitas tentationis obscurat; ut et videat intendendo quod appetat, et succumbendo in cogitatione toleret quod erubescat. De coelo quippe lux oritur, infernus autem tenebris possidetur. In unum ergo coelum infernusque redigitur cum mens, quae jam lucem patriae supernae considerat, etiam de carnis bello tenebras occultae tentationis portat. Certe jam Paulus tertii coeli culmen ascenderat, jam paradisi secreta cognoverat, et tamen adhuc carnis bella tolerans gemebat, dicens: Video aliam legem in membris meis repugnantem legi mentis meae, et captivum me ducentem in lege peccati, quae est in membris meis (Rom. VII, 23). Quid ergo in hujus tanti praedicatoris pectore nisi coelum Deus infernumque coarctaverat, qui et visionis intimae jam lumen acceperat, et tamen adhuc tenebras de carne tolerabat? Super se viderat quod laetus appeteret, in se cernebat quod metuens doleret. Jam coelestis patriae lux irradiaverat, sed adhuc tentationis obscuritas animum confundebat. Cum coelo ergo infernum pertulit, quia et illuminatum securitas erexit, et tentatum gemitus stravit. 18. Terra et mare simul, fidei certitudo cum aliquantula dubietate. — Et saepe contingit ut fides in mente jam vigeat, sed tamen ex parte aliquantula in dubietate contabescat; quatenus et certa se a visibilibus elevet, et ex quibusdam sese incerta perturbet. Nam plerumque ad aeterna appetenda se erigit, et subortis cogitationum stimulis agitata, sibimet ipsa contradicit. In unum ergo terra mareque coarctatur cum unam eamdemque mentem, et certitudo solidae fidei roborat, et tamen ex aliquantula 348 mutabilitate perfidiae aura dubietatis versat. An non in suo pectore coarctari terram mareque cognoverat, qui et per fidem sperans, et per infidelitatem fluctuans, dicebat: Credo, Domine, adjuva incredulitatem meam (Marc. IX, 23)? Quid itaque est, quod et se credere asserit, et adjuvari in se incredulitatem quaerit, nisi quod coarctari in suis cogitationibus terram cum mari deprehenderat, qui et exorare certus jam per fidem coeperat, et adhuc incertus undas perfidiae ex incredulitate tolerabat? 19. Cur mentem ad recta surgentem Deus impugnari sinat. — Quod tamen occulta fieri dispensatione permittitur, ut cum mens jam surgere ad rectitudinem coeperit, pravitatis suae reliquiis impugnetur; quatenus haec ipsa impugnatio, aut resistentem exerceat, aut delectationibus seductam frangat. Recte itaque nunc dicitur: Si subverterit omnia, vel in unum coarctaverit, quis contradicet ei? vel quis dicere ei potest: Cur ita facis? quia nimirum divinum judicium nec adversitate valet imminui, nec inquisitione cognosci, cum vel virtutes quas tribuerat subtrahit, vel has omnino non adimens, vitiorum concuti impugnatione permittit. Saepe namque in elationem cor tollitur cum laetis successibus in virtute roboratur, sed dum latentes motus audaciae in cogitatione conditor conspicit, se sibi hominem ostendendo derelinquit, ut ejus mens derelicta quid sit inveniat, quae male in se secura gaudebat. Unde cum subverti omnia, vel in unum coarctari, dicerentur, protinus additur:

CAPUT XI.

VERS. 11. — Ipse enim novit hominum vanitatem, et videns iniquitatem, nonne considerat? 20. Vanitatis ab iniquitate discrimen. — Ac si praemissa patefaciendo subjungeret, dicens: Quia tolerando succrescere vitia conspicit, judicando dona confundit. Rectus vero in descriptione ordo servatur, cum prius nosci vanitas, et post considerari iniquitas perhibetur. Omnis quippe iniquitas, vanitas, non tamen omnis vanitas esse iniquitas solet. Vana namque agimus quoties transitoria cogitamus. Unde et evanescere dicitur quod repente ab intuentium oculis aufertur. Hinc Psalmista ait: Universa vanitas omnis homo vivens (Psal. XXXVIII, 6); quoniam per hoc quod vivendo ad interitum tendit, recte quidem vanitas dicitur, sed nequaquam recte etiam iniquitas appellatur, quia etsi de poena est culpae quod deficit, non tamen hoc ipsum culpa est, quod a vita percurrit. Vana sunt itaque, quae transeunt. Unde et per Salomonem dicitur: Omnia vanitas (Eccle. I, 2). 21. Vanitas ducit ad iniquitatem. Vanitas mentem obnubilat, iniquitas caecat. — Apte autem post vanitatem protinus iniquitas subinfertur, quia dum per quaedam transitoria ducimur, in quibusdam noxie ligamur; cumque mens incommutabilitatis statum non tenet, a semetipsa defluens, ad vitia prorumpit. Vanitate ergo ad iniquitatem labitur, quae assueta rebus mutabilibus, dum ex aliis ad alia semper impellitur, suborientibus culpis inquinatur. Potest tamen et vanitas culpa intelligi, et iniquia is nomine reatus gravior demonstrari. Si enim aliquando vanitas culpa non esset, Psalmista non diceret: Quanquam in imagine Dei ambulet homo, tamen vane conturbatur; thesaurizat, et ignorat cui congreget ea (Psal. XXXVIII, 8); quia quamvis Trinitatis imaginem in natura servemus, vanis tamen delectationis motibus 349 perturbati, in conversatione nostra delinquimus; ut modis nos semper alternantibus cupido concutiat, metus frangat, laetitia mulceat, dolor affligat. Ex vanitate ergo, ut et superius dictum est, ad iniquitatem ducimur cum prius per levia delicta defluimus, ut, usu cuncta levigante, nequaquam post committere etiam graviora timeamus. Nam dum moderari lingua otiosa verba negligit, more inolitae remissionis capta, audax ad noxia prorumpit; dum gulae incumbitur, ad levitatis protinus insaniam proditur; cumque mens subigere delectationem carnis renuit, plerumque et ad perfidiae voraginem ruit. Unde bene Paulus plebis Israeliticae damna conspiciens, ut imminentia ab auditoribus mala compesceret, curavit ex ordine transacta narrare, dicens: Neque idololatrae efficiamini, sicut quidam eorum, quemadmodum scriptum est (I Cor. X, 7): Sedit populus manducare et bibere, et surrexerunt ludere (Exod. XXXII, 6). Esus quippe potusque ad lusum impulit, lusus ad idololatriam traxit, quia si vanitatis culpa nequaquam caute compescitur, ab iniquitate protinus mens incauta devoratur, Salomone attestante, qui ait: Qui modica spernit, paulatim decidit (Eccle. XIX, 1). Si enim curare parva negligimus, insensibiliter seducti, audenter etiam majora perpetramus. Et notandum quod non videri, sed considerari iniquitas dicitur. Studiosius quippe conspicimus quae consideramus. Deus itaque hominum vanitatem novit, iniquitatem considerat, quia nec minora delicta inulta deserit, et ad majora ferienda sese intentius accingit. Quia igitur a levioribus malis incipitur, et ad graviora pervenitur; vanitas mentem obnubilat, iniquitas caecat. Quae nimirum mens, amisso mox lumine, tanto se altius per tumorem erigit, quanto et iniquitatis capta laqueis a veritate longius recedit. Unde et apte quoque quo vanitas cum iniquitate pertrahat, exprimit, cum repente subjungit:

CAPUT XII.

VERS. 12. — Vir vanus in superbiam erigitur. 22. Vanitas audacem ex culpa reddit, et in naturae motibus effrenum. — Vanitatis quippe finis est, ut cum peccato mentem sauciat, hanc ex culpa audacem reddat; quatenus, sui reatus oblita, quae amisisse se innocentiam non dolet, justo excaecata judicio, simul et humilitatem perdat. Et fit plerumque ut, pravis desideriis serviens, a jugo se divini timoris excutiat, et, quasi in malorum perpetrationem jam libera, omne quod voluptas suggerit implere contendat. Unde cum vir vanus se erigere in superbiam dicitur, illico subinfertur:

CAPUT XIII.

IBID. — Et quasi pullum onagri se liberum natum putat. 23. Per pullum quippe onagri omne agrestium genus exprimitur, quod, naturae dimissum motibus, loris dominantium non tenetur. Agri namque animalia in libertate habent et ire quo appetunt, et quiescere cum lassantur. Et quamvis insensatis animalibus homo longe sit melior; hoc tamen plerumque homini non licet quod brutis animalibus licet. Quae enim ad aliud minime servantur, eorum motus procul dubio nequaquam sub disciplina restringitur. Homo autem qui ad sequentem vitam ducitur, necesse profecto est ut in cunctis suis motibus 350 sub disciplinae dispositione religetur, et quasi domesticum animal loris vinctum serviat, atque aeternis dispositionibus restrictum vivat. Qui ergo implere cuncta quae desiderat per effrenatam libertatem quaerit, quid aliud quam pullo onagri esse similis concupiscit, ut disciplinae hunc lora non teneant, sed audenter vagus per silvam desideriorum currat? 24. Lora quibus nos Deus coercet ac regit. — Saepe autem divina miseratio, quos prodire in effrenationem illicitae libertatis conspicit, objectione properae adversitatis frangit, quatenus elisi discant quam reproba erectione tumuerant; ut jam flagelli experimentis edomiti, quasi jumenta domestica praeceptorum loris mentis colla subjiciant, et vitae praesentis itinera ad nutum praesidentis pergant. Quibus bene loris ligatum se noverat, qui dicebat: Ut jumentum factus sum apud te, et ego semper tecum (Psal. LXXII, 23). Unde et saevus ille persecutor ab agro perfidae voluptatis ad domum fidei deductus, rectoris sui calcaribus punctus, audiebat: Durum est tibi contra stimulum calcitrare (Act. IX, 5). Restat ergo ut si esse jam similes pullo onagri nolumus, in cunctis quae appetimus nutum prius intimae dispensationis exquiramus, ut mens nostra in omne quod nititur, superni regiminis loro teneatur; et inde magis vota sua ad vitam impleat, unde vitae suae studia et contra propriam voluntatem calcat. Multa Sophar fortia protulit, sed quod meliori se haec loquitur nescit. Unde adhuc increpando subjungit:

CAPUT XIV.

VERS. 13. — Tu autem firmasti cor tuum, et expandisti ad eum manus tuas. 25. Sophar arguit Job animi obdurati et superbi. Illum imitantur mali et haeretici adversus bonos et catholicos. — Firmati cor non hoc loco per virtutem dicitur, sed per insensibilitatem. Omnis namque a intus qui districtionis intimae considerationi se subjicit, ex ejus protinus timore mollescit; eumque sagitta divinae formidinis penetrat, quia infirma viscera per humilitatem gestat. Quisquis autem pertinacia insensibilitatis obdurescit, quasi cor firmat, ne hoc jacula timoris superni confodiant. Unde quibusdam per prophetam Dominus misericorditer dicit: Tollam vobis cor lapideum, et dabo vobis cor carneum (Ezech. XXXVI, 26). Cor quippe lapideum tollit cum a nobis superbiae duritiam subtrahit, et cor carneum tribuit cum eamdem protinus nostram duritiam ad sensibilitatem vertit. Per manus vero, ut jam crebro docuimus, opera designantur. Cum culpa igitur manus ad Deum expandere est contra largitoris gratiam de virtute operum superbire. Qui enim in conspectu aeterni judicis loquens sibi bona quae facit tribuit, ad Deum manus superbiens tendit. Sic profecto contra electos reprobi, sic contra catholicos haeretici semper effrenantur, ut cum objurgare facta nequeunt, bonos reprehendere de factorum elatione moliantur, quatenus eos quos redarguere ex infirmitate actionis non valent, ex crimine tumoris accusent. Unde et ea bona quae exterius fiunt, nequaquam bona esse jam censent, quae quasi per studium turgidae cogitationis exhibentur. Qui saepe humilia tumentes increpant, et quod dictis suis semetipsos feriunt ignorant. 351 Sed quia justum virum Sophar hactenus reprehendendo corripuit, nunc velut docendo subjungit:

CAPUT XV.

VERS. 14, 15. — Si iniquitatem quae est in manu tua abstuleris a te, et non manserit in tabernaculo tuo injustitia, tunc levare poteris faciem tuam absque macula, et eris stabilis, et non timebis. 26. Ut mens sit munda, prius

operis, tum cordis iniquitas resecanda. — Omne peccatum aut sola cogitatione committitur, aut cogitatione simul et opere perpetratur. Iniquitas ergo in manu est culpa in opere, injustitia vero in tabernaculo iniquitas in mente. Mens quippe nostra tabernaculum non incongrue vocatur, in qua apud nosmetipsos abscondimur, cum foris in opere non videmur. Sophar itaque, quia justi viri amicus est, novit quod dicat; sed quia justum increpat, haereticorum tenens speciem, proferre recte etiam quae novit ignorat. Sed nos calcantes hoc, quod ab eo tumide dicitur, pensemus ejus verba quam vera sint, si recte dicerentur. Prius enim a manu iniquitatem subtrahi, et post a tabernaculo admonet injustitiam abscidi, quia quisquis jam prava a se opera exterius resecat, necesse profecto est ut, ad semetipsum rediens, solerter sese in mentis intentione discernat; ne culpa, quam jam in actione non habet, adhuc in cogitatione perduret. Unde bene etiam per Salomonem dicitur: Praepara foris opus tuum, et diligenter exerce agrum tuum, ut postea aedifices domum tuam (Prov. XXIV, 27). Quid namque est praeparato opere agrum diligenter exterius exercere, nisi evulsis iniquitatis sentibus, actionem nostram ad frugem retributionis excolere? Et quid est post agri exercitium ad aedificium domus redire, nisi quod plerumque ex bonis operibus discimus quantam vitae munditiam in cogitatione construamus? Pene cuncta namque bona opera ex cogitatione prodeunt, sed sunt nonnulla cogitationis acumina, quae ex operatione nascuntur; nam sicut ab animo opus sumitur, ita rursus ab opere animus eruditur. Mens quippe divini amoris exordia capiens imperat bona quae fiant; sed postquam fieri imperata coeperint, ipsis suis exercitata actionibus discit, cum imperare bona inchoaverat, quantum minus videbat. Foris ergo ager excolitur, ut domus postmodum construatur, quia plerumque ab exteriori opere sumimus, quantam subtilitatem rectitudinis in corde teneamus. Quem bene Sophar servare ordinem studuit, cum prius auferri iniquitatem a manibus, et post a tabernaculo injustitiam dixit, quia nequaquam plene animus in cogitatione erigitur, quando adhuc ab eo extrinsecus in opere erratur. 27. Haec munditia fiduciam praestat in oratione; secus, si desit. — Quae si perfecte duo haec tergimus, ad Deum statim sine macula faciem levamus. Interna quippe facies hominis mens est, in qua nimirum recognoscimur, ut ab auctore nostro dirigamur. Quam scilicet faciem levare est in Deo animum per studia orationis attollere. Sed elevatam faciem macula inquinat, si intendentem mentem reatus sui conscientia accusat, quia a spei fiducia protinus frangitur, si intenta precibus necdum devictae culpae memoria mordetur. Diffidit namque accipere se posse quod appetit, quae profecto reminiscitur nolle se adhuc facere quod divinitus audivit. 352 Hinc per Joannem dicitur: Si cor nostrum non reprehenderit nos, fiduciam habemus apud Deum, et quidquid petierimus ab eo accipiemus (I Joan. III, 21). Hinc Salomon ait: Qui avertit aurem suam, ne audiat legem, oratio ejus erit exsecrabilis (Prov. XXVIII, 9). Cor quippe nos in petitione reprehendit cum resistere se praeceptis ejus quem postulat meminit, et oratio fit exsecrabilis cum a censura avertitur legis, quia dignum profecto est ut ab ejus beneficiis sit quisque extraneus cujus nimirum jussionibus non vult esse subjectus. 28. Cum non adest, quid agendum. — Qua in re hoc est salubre remedium, ut cum se mens ex memoria culpae reprehendit, hoc prius in oratione defleat, quod erravit; quatenus erroris macula cum fletibus tergitur, in petitione sua cordis facies ab auctore munda videatur. Sed curandum nimis est ne ad hoc rursus proruat quod se mundasse fletibus exsultat, ne dum deplorata iterum culpa committitur, in conspectu justi judicis ipsa etiam lamenta levigentur. Solerter quippe debemus meminisse quod dicitur: Ne iteres verbum in oratione tua (Eccli. VII, 15). Quo videlicet dicto vir sapiens nequaquam nos prohibet saepe veniam petere, sed culpas iterare. Ac si aperte dicat: Cum male gesta defleveris, nequaquam rursus facias, quod in precibus iterum plangas. 29. Ante orationem immundae ac terrenae cogitationes ablegandae. — Ut ergo ad precem facies sine macula levetur, ante orationis semper tempora debet sollicite conspici quidquid potest in oratione reprobari; talemque se mens et cum ab oratione cessat exhibere festinet, qualis apparere judici in ipso orationis tempore exoptat. Saepe namque immunda quaedam vel illicita in animo versamus, quoties a precibus vacamus. Sed cum se mens ad studia orationis erexerit, earum rerum imagines reverberata patitur, quibus libenter prius otiosa premebatur; et quasi jam faciem anima ad Deum levare non sufficit, quia in se nimirum inquinata mente maculas pollutae cogitationis erubescit. Saepe curis mundi libenter occupamur. Cumque post haec studio orationis intendimus, nequaquam se mens ad coelestia erigit, quia pondus hanc terrenae sollicitudinis in profundum mersit; et in prece facies munda non ostenditur, quia cogitationis infimae luto maculatur. 30. Aliena in nos delicta relaxanda. Quis a timore liber. — Nonnunquam vero cor a cunctis excutimus, et illicitis motibus, etiam cum a prece vacat, obviamus; sed tamen quia nos culpas rarius committimus, aliena pigrius delicta relaxamus; et quo peccare noster animus sollicitius metuit, eo districtius hoc quod in se ab alio delinquitur abhorrescit. Unde fit ut eo inveniatur quisque tardus ad veniam, quo proficiendo factus est cautus ad culpam; et quo ipse excedere in alterum metuit, hoc quod in se exceditur punire durius exquirit. Sed quid hac doloris macula reperiri deterius potest, quae in conspectu judicis charitatem non inquinat, sed necat? Vitam quippe animae quaelibet culpa polluit, servatus vero contra proximum dolor occidit. Menti namque ut gladius figitur, et mucrone illius ipsa viscerum occulta perforantur. Qui scilicet a transfixo corde, si prius non educitur, nihil in precibus divinae opis obtinetur, quia et vulneratis membris imponi salutis medicamina 353 nequeunt, nisi ferrum a vulnere ante subtrahatur. Hinc est enim quod per semetipsam Veritas dicit: Nisi remiseritis hominibus peccata eorum, nec Pater vester qui in coelis est remittet vobis peccata vestra (Matth. VI, 15). Hinc admonet, dicens: Cum stabitis ad orandum, dimittite si quid habetis adversus alterum (Marc. XI, 25). Hinc rursum ait:

Date, et dabitur vobis; dimittite, et dimittetur vobis (Luc. VI, 38). Hinc constitutioni postulationis conditionem posuit pietatis, dicens: Dimitte nobis debita nostra, sicut et nos dimittimus debitoribus nostris (Matth. VI, 12); ut profecto bonum quod a Deo compuncti petimus, hoc primum cum proximo conversi faciamus. Tunc igitur vere sine macula faciem levamus, cum nec nos prohibita mala committimus, nec ea quae in nos commissa sunt ex proprio zelo retinemus. Gravi namque mens nostra orationis suae tempore confusione deprimitur, si hanc aut sua adhuc operatio inquinat, aut alienae malitiae servatus dolor accusat. Quae duo quisque dum terserit, ad ea quae subnexa sunt protinus liber exsurgit. Et eris stabilis, et non timebis; quia nimirum tanto minus judicem trepidat, quanto in bonis actibus solidius stat. Timorem quippe superat, qui stabilitatem servat, quia dum sollicitus studet peragere quod mansuete conditor imperat, securus etiam cogitat quod terribiliter intentat. 31. In activa vita facilius perseveratur quam in contemplativa. Quis in contemplatione persistere censeatur. — Sciendum praeterea est quod nonnulla bona sunt ad quae indefessi persistimus, et rursum nonnulla sunt a quibus continue deficientes labimur, atque ad haec magnis conatibus per intervalla temporum reformamur. In activa etenim vita sine defectu mens figitur, a contemplativa autem infirmitatis suae pondere victa lassatur. Illa quippe tanto firmius durat, quanto ad vicina se erga utilitatem proximi dilatat; haec tanto celerius labitur, quanto et carnis claustra transgrediens, super semetipsam ire conatur. Illa per plana se dirigit, et idcirco pedem operis robustius figit; haec autem quo super se alta appetit, ad se citius fessa descendit. Quod bene ac breviter Ezechiel insinuat, cum eorum quae viderat motus animalium narrat, dicens: Non revertebantur cum incederent. Et paulo post subjicit, adjungens: Et animalia ibant, et revertebantur (Ezech. I, 9, 14). Sancta quippe animalia aliquando vadunt, et minime redeunt; aliquando vadunt, et protinus revertuntur, quia electorum mentes cum per collatam sibi activae vitae gratiam erroris vias deserunt, redire ad mala mundi nesciunt quae reliquerunt; cum vero per contemplationis aciem ab hac se eadem activa vita suspendunt, eunt et redeunt, quia per hoc quod diu persistere minime in contemplatione sufficiunt, sese iterum ad operationem fundunt; ut in his quae sibi juxta sunt se exercendo refoveant, et super se rursum surgere contemplando convalescant. Sed dum haec eadem contemplatio more debito per temporum intervalla repetitur, indeficienter procul dubio et in ejus soliditate persistitur, quia etsi infirmitatis suae pondere superata mens deficit, hanc tamen iterum continuis conatibus reparata comprehendit. Nec stabilitatem suam in ea perdidisse dicenda est, a qua etsi semper deficit, hanc et cum perdiderit semper inquirit. Sequitur:

CAPUT XVI.

VERS. 16. — 354 Miseriae quoque oblivisceris, et quasi aquarum quae praeterierint, non recordaberis. 32. Mala vitae hujus gravia non sunt aeterna bona cogitanti. — Mala vitae praesentis tanto durius animus sentit, quanto pensare bonum quod sequitur, negligit; et quo non vult praemia considerare quae restant, gravia aestimat esse quae tolerat. Unde et contra flagelli ictum cogitatio caeca conqueritur, et quasi infinita calamitas creditur, quae diebus cursu labentibus quotidie finitur. At si semel quisque ad aeterna se erigat, atque in his quae incommutabiliter permanent oculum cordis figat, prope nihil esse hic conspicit quidquid ad finem currit. Praesentis vitae adversa tolerat, sed quasi nihil esse omne quod labitur pensat. Quo enim se internis gaudiis robustius inserit, eo minus exterius dolores sentit. Unde Sophar nequaquam veritus ausu temerario docere meliorem, exhortatur ad justitiam, et demonstrat quam nulla justi oculis videatur poena. Ac si aperte dicat: Si degustas gaudium quod intus permanet, leve fit protinus omne quod foris dolet. Bene autem praesentis vitae miserias aquis praetereuntibus comparat, quia calamitas transiens, electi mentem nequaquam vi concussionis obruit, sed tamen tactu moeroris infundit. Nam madet quidem per cruorem vulneris, etsi a suae certitudine non frangitur salutis. Saepe autem non solum flagella atterunt, sed in uniuscujusque justi animo malignorum quoque spirituum tentamenta grassantur, ut exterius ex percussione doleat, et intus aliquatenus ex tentatione frigescat. Sed nequaquam gratia deserit, quae quo nos durius ex dispensatione percutit, eo amplius ex pietate custodit. Nam cum tenebrescere per tentationem coeperit, sese iterum lux interna succendit. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT XVII.

VERS. 17. — Et quasi meridianus fulgor consurget tibi ad vesperum. 33. Virtus renovatur in tentatione. — Fulgor quippe meridianus in vespere est virtutis renovatio in tentatione, ut repentino charitatis fervore mens vigeat, quae jamjamque lumen sibi gratiae occubuisse formidabat. Quod adhuc Sophar subtilius aperit, cum subjungit:

CAPUT XVIII.

IBID. — Et cum te consumptum putaveris, orieris ut lucifer. 34. Tristitia ex tentatione, Dei misericordiam pro nobis exorat. Justus, lucifer. — Saepe namque tot tentamenta nos obsident, ut ipsa nos eorum numerositas pene ad lapsum desperationis inclinet. Unde plerumque cum mens in taedium vertitur, vix ipsa virtutis suae damna considerat; et tota dolens, sed quasi jam et a sensu doloris aliena, frangitur, et enumerare non valet quanto cogitationum tumultu vastatur. Ruituram se per momenta conspicit, eique ne arma repugnationis arripiat gravius moeror ipse contradicit. Circumductos quolibet oculos obscuritas obsidet, et cum visum tenebrae semper impediant, moesta mens nihil aliud quam tenebras videt. Sed apud misericordem judicem saepe haec ipsa, quae adnisum quoque orationis aggravat, pro nobis subtilius tristitia exorat. Nam tunc moeroris nostri caliginem conditor conspicit, et subtracti luminis radios refundit, ita ut erecta protinus per dona mens vigeat, quam paulo ante decertantia vitia superbiae calce deprimebant. Mox torporis pondus discutit, atque ad contemplationis lumen post turbationis suae tenebras erumpit. Mox in gaudium profectus 355 attollitur, quae inter tentamenta pejus cadere ex desperatione cogebatur. Sine cogitationis certamine praesentia despicit, sine dubitationis obstaculo de ventura retributione confidit. Justus ergo cum se consumptum putaverit, ut lucifer oritur, quia mox ut tenebrescere tentationum caligine coeperit, ad lucem gratiae reformatur, et in se ipso monstrat diem justitiae, qui casurus paulo ante timuit noctem culpae. Recte autem lucifero justi vita comparatur. Solem quippe praecurrens lucifer, diem nuntiat. Et quid nobis sanctorum innocentia nisi sequentis judicis claritatem clamat? In eorum namque admiratione conspicimus quid de majestate veri luminis aestimemus. Necdum Redemptoris nostri potentiam videmus, sed tamen virtutem illius in electorum suorum moribus admiramur. Quia igitur bonorum vita in consideratione sua oculis nostris vim veritatis objicit, clarus ad nos lucifer ante solem venit. 35. Justus dura hic patitur, sed bene ei erit in extremis. Jam ab hinc foris cadens, intus innovatur. — Sciendum vero est quod haec quae ex tentationum spiritalium adversitate discussimus, juxta exteriora quoque mala nil obstat intelligi. Sancti etenim viri quia summa medullitus diligunt, in infimis dura patiuntur; sed in fine gaudii lumen inveniunt, quod habere in hoc spatio percurrentis vitae contemnunt. Unde nunc per Sophar dicitur: Et quasi meridianus fulgor consurget tibi ad vesperum. Peccatoris enim lumen in die est obscuritas in vespere, quia in praesenti vita felicitate attollitur, sed adversitatis tenebris in fine devoratur. Justo autem meridianus fulgor ad vesperum surgit, quia quanta sibi claritas maneat cum jam occumbere coeperit agnoscit. Hinc namque scriptum est: Timenti Deum bene erit in extremis (Eccli. I, 13). Hinc per Psalmistam dicitur: Cum dederit dilectis suis somnum, haec est haereditas Domini (Psal.

CXXVI, 2). Qui in hujus quoque vitae adhuc certamine positus, cum se consumptum putaverit, ut lucifer oritur, quia foris cadens, intus innovatur; et quo magis exterius adversa tolerat, eo uberius virtutum lumine interius coruscat, Paulo attestante, qui ait: Sed licet is qui foris est noster homo corrumpitur, tamen is qui intus est renovatur de die in diem. Id enim quod in praesenti est momentaneum et leve tribulationis nostrae supra modum in sublimitate aeternum gloriae pondus operatur in nobis (II Cor. IV, 16). Et notandum quod nequaquam cum consumptus fueris, sed cum te consumptum putaveris dicit, quia et quod videmus in dubietate est, et quod speramus in certitudine. Unde et isdem Paulus non se consumptum noverat, sed putabat, qui et in adversa tribulationum corruens ut lucifer resplendebat, dicens: Quasi morientes, et ecce vivimus; quasi tristes, semper autem gaudentes; sicut egentes, multos autem locupletantes (II Cor. VI, 9). Sciendum quoque est quod bonorum mens quo duriora pro veritate tolerat, eo aeternitatis praemia certius sperat. Unde et apte subditur:

CAPUT XIX.

VERS. 18. — Et habebis fiduciam, proposita tibi spe. 36. Eo certius in Deum sperat, quo duriora pro illo patitur. — Tanto namque spes in Deum solidior surgit, quanto pro illo quisque graviora pertulerit, quia nequaquam retributionis gaudium de aeternitate colligitur, quod non hic prius pia tribulatione seminatur. 356 Hinc enim per Psalmistam dicitur: Euntes, ibant et flebant, mittentes semina sua; venientes autem venient in exsultatione, portantes manipulos suos (Psal. CXXV, 6). Hinc Paulus ait: Si commorimur, et convivemus; si sustinemus, et conregnabimus (II Tim. II, 11). Hinc discipulos admonet, dicens: Per multas tribulationes oportet nos introire in regnum Dei (Act. XIV, 21). Hinc sanctorum gloriam Joanni angelus indicans, ait: Hi sunt qui venerunt de tribulatione magna, et laverunt stolas suas, et candidas eas fecerunt in sanguine Agni (Apoc. VII, 14). Quia igitur nunc per tribulationem seritur, ut post gaudii fructus metatur, tanto major fiducia mentem roborat, quanto hanc fortior pro veritate afflictio angustat. Unde apte protinus adjungitur:

CAPUT XX.

IBID. — Et defossus securus dormies. 37. Malis praesens securitas laborem, bonis praesens labor securitatem parit. — Sicut enim malis praesens securitas laborem, ita bonis praesens labor perpetuam securitatem parit. Unde et defossum se securum dormire jam noverat, qui dicebat: Ego enim jam delibor, et tempus meae resolutionis instat; bonum certamen certavi, cursum consummavi, fidem servavi; de reliquo reposita mihi est corona justitiae, quam reddet mihi Dominus in die illa justus judex (II Tim. IV, 6). Quia enim contra mala transeuntia sine defectu certaverat, de mansuris nimirum gaudiis sine dubietate praesumebat. 38. A terrenis curis liberi quies et opus. — Quamvis defossus intelligi et aliter potest. Saepe namque, rebus transitoriis occupati, pensare negligimus per quanta peccamus; sed si, reducto considerationis oculo, a sinu cordis terrenae cogitationis agger excutitur, quidquid in mente latebat invenitur. Unde sancti viri animorum latebras perscrutari non desinunt, sese subtiliter indagantes, terrenarum rerum curas abjiciunt, et, effossis plene cogitationibus, cum nullo se reatu criminis morderi deprehendunt, velut in strato cordis apud se securi requiescunt. Latere quoque ab hujus mundi actibus appetunt, semper sua considerant, et cum loro regiminis minime constringuntur, judicare quae aliena sunt recusant. Effossi ergo securi dormiunt, quia dum sua intima vigilanter penetrant, a laboriosis se hujus mundi oneribus sub quietis otio occultant. Unde et adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XXI.

VERS. 19. — Requiesces, et non erit qui te exterreat. 39. Aeternis inhians nihil timet a mundo. — Quisquis praesentem gloriam quaerit, profecto despectum metuit. Qui semper ad lucra inhiat, semper videlicet damna formidat. Cujus enim perceptione reficitur, ejus rei procul dubio et amissione sauciatur; et quo obligatus mutabilibus ac perituris inhaeret, eo longe in infimis ab arce securitatis jacet. At contra quisquis in solo aeternitatis desiderio figitur, nec prosperitate attollitur, nec adversitate quassatur; dum nil habet in mundo quod appetat, nihil est quod de mundo pertimescat. Hinc etenim Salomon ait: Non contristabit justum quidquid ei acciderit (Prov. XII, 21). Hinc iterum dicit: Justus quasi leo confidens absque terrore erit (Prov. XXVIII, 1). Bene itaque nunc dicitur: Requiesces, et non erit qui te exterreat (Job. XI, 19), quia tanto quisque a se plenius pavorem qui ex mundo est abjicit, quanto in semetipso verius mundi concupiscentiam vincit. An non 357 absque terrore Paulus in corde requieverat, qui dicebat: Certus sum enim quia neque mors, neque vita, neque angeli, neque principatus, neque instantia, neque futura, neque fortitudo, neque altitudo, neque profundum, neque creatura alia poterit nos separare a charitate Dei, quae est in Christo Jesu Domino nostro (Rom. VIII, 38)? Cujus videlicet fortitudo charitatis, vera sanctae Ecclesiae voce laudatur, cum per canticorum Canticum dicitur (Cant. VIII, 6): Valida est ut mors dilectio (De poenit., dist. 2, ca). Virtuti etenim mortis dilectio comparatur, quia nimirum mentem, quam semel ceperit, a delectatione mundi funditus occidit; et tanto hanc valentius in auctoritatem erigit, quanto et insensibilem contra terrores reddit. Sed inter haec sciendum est quod pravi cum recta praedicant, valde difficile est ut ad hoc quod taciti ambiunt non erumpant. Unde et Sophar protinus adjungit:

CAPUT XXII.

IBID. — Et deprecabuntur faciem tuam plurimi. 40. Recti non ambiunt intercessores pro aliis videri. — Neque enim justi viri idcirco se per innocentiae itinera arcta custodiunt, ut ab aliis exorentur. Sed sive haeretici, seu perversi quilibet, per hoc quod inter homines quasi innocenter vivunt, videri intercessores pro hominibus volunt; et cum sancta loquentes insinuant, quod ipsi appetunt, hoc aliis pro magno pollicentur; dumque coelestia praedicant, in suis repente sponsionibus ostendunt quod amant. Sed ne diu terrena pollicendo patescant quod sunt, ad verba rectitudinis citius recurrunt. Unde mox subditur.

CAPUT XXIII.

VERS. 20. — Oculi autem impiorum deficient, et effugium peribit ab eis. 41. Impiis a miseria hic aliquod effugium; post mortem nullum. — Quod oculorum nomine vis intentionis exprimitur, per Evangelium Veritas attestatur, dicens: Si oculus tuus simplex fuerit, totum corpus tuum lucidum erit (Matth. VI, 22); quia videlicet si operationem nostram intentio munda praevenerit, quamlibet aliter hominibus videatur, interni tamen judicis oculis mundum subsequentis actionis corpus ostenditur. Oculi ergo impiorum sunt intentiones in eis carnalium desideriorum. Qui idcirco deficiunt, quia aeterna negligunt, et sola semper transitoria praestolantur. Adipisci quippe terrenam gloriam cogitant, multiplicari rebus temporalibus exoptant, ad mortem quotidie cursu rerum labentium tendunt; sed cogitare mortalia mortaliter nesciunt. Carnis vita per momenta deficit, et tamen carnale desiderium crescit. Res habita instanti fine corripitur, et habendi anxietas non finitur. Sed cum mors impios subtrahit, eorum profecto desideria cum vita terminantur. Quorum scilicet oculi tunc superna ultione deficiunt, quia suo hic judicio a terrena deficere delectatione noluerunt. Hos illorum oculos a jucunditate pristina claudi Psalmista conspexerat, cum dicebat: In illa die peribunt omnes cogitationes eorum (Psal. CXLV, 4); quia et aeterna mala nunquam cogitata reperiunt, et subito amittunt bona temporalia quae diu tractata tenuerunt. A quibus et omne effugium perit, quia eorum malitia ab animadversione districti judicis quo se valeat occultare non invenit. Nam nunc iniqui cum tristitia aliqua, vel adversa patiuntur, effugii latebras inveniunt, quia ad voluptatem protinus desideriorum carnalium recurrunt. Ne enim 358 paupertas cruciet, divitiis animum demulcent. Ne despectus proximorum deprimat, sese dignitatibus exaltant. Si fastidio corpus atteritur, antepositis epularum diversitatibus nutritur. Si quo animus moestitiae impulsu dejicitur, mox per interposita jocorum blandimenta relevatur. Tot ergo hic habent effugia, quot sibi praeparant delectamenta. Sed quandoque eis effugium perit, quia eorum mens, amissis omnibus, se solummodo et judicem conspicit. Tunc voluptas subtrahitur, sed voluptatis culpa servatur, et repente miseri pereundo discunt quia peritura tenuerunt. Qui tamen quousque corporaliter vivunt quaerere nocitura non desinunt. Unde adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XXIV.

IBID. — Et spes illorum abominatio animae. 42. Quod iniquo voluptas, hoc poena est justo. Unde reficitur caro, inde deficit spiritus. — Quid hic peccator totis cogitationibus sperat, nisi ut potestate caeteros transeat, cunctos rerum multiplicitate transcendat, adversantes dominando subjiciat, obsequentibus mirandus innotescat, irae ad votum satisfaciat, benignum se, cum laudatur, ostendat; quidquid gula appetit, offerat; ad hoc quod voluptas imperat, operis expletione concurrat? Bene ergo spes illorum abominatio animae dicitur, quia et ea quae carnales ambiunt spiritales quique judicio rectitudinis aversantur. Nam quod peccatores voluptatem aestimant, hoc justi procul dubio poenam putant. Abominatio igitur est animae, spes pravorum, quia nimirum spiritus deficit, ubi caro requiescit. Ut enim caro mollibus, sic anima duris nutritur: illam blanda refovent, hanc aspera exercent; illa delectationibus pascitur, haec amaritudinibus vegetatur. Et sicut carnem dura sauciant, sic spiritum mollia necant; sicut illam laboriosa interimunt, ita hunc delectabilia exstinguunt. Spes itaque carnalium, abominatio animae dicitur, quia inde in perpetuum spiritus interit, unde ad tempus caro suaviter vivit. 43. Recte dicta saepe corrumpit loquentis indiscretio. — Sed haec Sophar recte diceret, nisi beatus Job cuncta largius etiam vivendo praedicasset. At postquam sanctiorem monere de vita nititur, doctioremque se erudire sapientiae magisterio conatur, ipse dictorum suorum pondus levigat, qui, indiscretione interposita, omne quod loquitur destruit, quia liquorem scientiae pleno vasculo superfundit. Sic namque ab indiscretis opes scientiae, sicut a stultis saepe opes corporalis substantiae possidentur. Nonnulli enim, qui rerum terrenarum multiplicitate subnixi sunt, aliquando multa et habentibus tribuunt, ut ipsi haec cunctis largius habere videantur. Ita perversi, cum vera sapiunt, recta quaedam etiam rectioribus loquuntur; non ut alios audientes doceant, sed ut ipsi quanta doctrina polleant, innotescant. Praeire se quippe sapientia cunctos existimant, et idcirco nihil se cuilibet dicere ultra mensuras suae magnitudinis putant. Sic pravi quilibet, sic omnes haeretici superba voce meliores docere non metuunt, quia omnes se inferiores arbitrantur. Sed sancta Ecclesia elatos quosque ab aestimationis suae culmine revocat, et discretionis manu ad aequalitatis compagem reformat. Unde beatus Job, qui ejusdem sanctae Ecclesiae membrum est, videns quod amicorum mens per verba prolatae eruditionis intumuit, illico respondit, dicens:

CAPUT XXV.

CAP. XII, VERS. 2. — 359 Ergo vos estis soli homines, et vobiscum morietur sapientia. 44. Superbe sapientis fatuitas. — Quisquis se praeire omnes ratione existimat, quid iste aliud quam solum se esse hominem exsultat? Et saepe contingit ut cum per tumorem mens in altum ducitur, in despectum omnium et sui admirationem sublevetur. In cogitatione etenim proprii favores oriuntur, sibique de singularitate sapientiae blanditur ipsa fatuitas. Pensat ea quae audierit, ac verba quae profert; et miratur sua, ridet aliena. Qui ergo solum se sapere aestimat, quid aliud quam hanc eamdem secum mori sapientiam putat? Nam quam adesse aliis abnuit, soli sibi hanc tribuens, profecto intra tempora suae brevitatis claudit. Pensandum vero est vir sanctus quanta discretione utitur, ut amicorum superbientium arrogantia comprimatur, cum protinus adjungit:

CAPUT XXVI.

VERS. 3. — Et mihi est cor, sicut et vobis, nec inferior vestri sum. 45. Hujus arrogantia modeste comprimenda. — Quis etenim nesciat quantum beati Job vita atque scientia amicorum ejus scientiam excedat? Sed ut eorum superbiam corrigat, esse se inferiorem negat; et ne suae humilitatis limitem transeat, esse se superiorem tacet: nec preferendo se, sed conferendo, indicat quod de se hi qui sibi longe sunt impares discant, ut dum sponte inflectitur sapientia quae eminet, nequaquam se contra vires erigat scientia quae jacet. Quos bene mox ad aequalitatis sensum revocat, quia tumere valde quasi de singularitate magnitudinis pensat, cum subsequenter adjungit:

CAPUT XXVII.

IBID. — Quis enim haec quae nostis ignorat? 46. Ostendendo ea quae scire se gloriatur, a nemine ignorari. — Ac si aperte dicat: Cum cunctis sint nota quae dicitis, de dictorum scientia singulariter cur tumetis? Quia igitur elationem arrogantium ad aequalitatis communionem revocans, perfecta correptione redarguit, ad doctrinae nunc sententias erumpit, ut amici ejus humiliati, prius discerent veritatis pondera, quam reverenter audirent. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXVIII.

VERS. 4. — Qui deridetur ab amico suo sicut ego, invocabit Deum, et exaudiet eum. 74. Recte agenti quid noceat laus, quid prosit irrisio hominum. Irrisio prodest ubi non est culpae meritum. — Saepe infirma mens, cum de bonis actibus aura humani favoris excipitur, ad gaudia exteriora derivatur, ut postponat quod intus appetit, et in hoc libenter resoluta jaceat, quod foris audit; ita ut beatam non tam fieri quam dici se gaudeat. Cumque laudis suae vocibus inhiat, quod esse coeperat relinquit. Inde ergo a Deo disjungitur, unde in Deo laudanda videbatur. Nonnunquam vero recto operi animus constanter innititur, et tamen humanis irrisionibus urgetur: miranda agit, et opprobria recipit; et qui exire foras per laudes potuit, repulsus contumeliis, ad semetipsum redit; et eo se intus robustius in Deo solidat, quo foris non invenit quo requiescat. Tota etenim spes in auctore figitur, et inter irrisionum convicia solus interior testis imploratur; atque afflicti animus fit Deo tanto proximus, quanto 360 et a gratia humani favoris alienus: in precem protinus funditur, et pressus exterius, ad penetranda quae intus sunt mundius liquatur. Bene itaque nunc dicitur: Qui deridetur ab amico suo sicut ego, invocabit Deum, et exaudiet eum, quia bonorum menti dum pravi exprobrant, ostendunt quem suorum actuum testem quaerant. Quae dum compuncta sese in precibus accingit, inde intra se supernae exauditioni jungitur, unde extra se ab humana laude separatur. Notandum vero quam provide interponitur Sicut ego, quia sunt nonnulli quos et humanae irrisiones deprimunt, et tamen divinis auribus exaudibiles non sunt. Nam cum derisio contra culpam nascitur, profecto nullum virtutis meritum in derisione generatur. Baal etenim sacerdotes clamosis hunc vocibus implorantes, derisi ab Elia fuerant, cum dicebat: Clamate voce majori, Deus enim est, et forsitan loquitur, aut in diversorio est (III Reg. XVIII, 27). Sed haec eis irrisio ad virtutis usum non fuit, quia per culpae meritum venit. Provide ergo nunc dicitur: Qui deridetur ab amico suo, sicut ego, invocabit Deum, et exaudiet eum, quia illum facit humana derisio Deo proximum, quem ab humanis pravitatibus vitae innocentia servat alienum. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXIX.

IBID. — Deridetur enim justi simplicitas. 48. Quid sapientia hujus mundi. Quid sapientia justorum. Cur a mundo rideatur. — Hujus mundi sapientia est, cor machinationibus tegere, sensum verbis velare, quae falsa sunt vera ostendere, quae vera sunt fallacia demonstrare. Haec nimirum prudentia usu a juvenibus scitur, haec a pueris pretio discitur, hanc qui sciunt caeteros despiciendo superbiunt; hanc qui nesciunt, subjecti et timidi in aliis mirantur, quia ab eis haec eadem duplicitas iniquitatis, nomine palliata, diligitur, dum mentis perversitas urbanitas vocatur. Haec sibi obsequentibus praecipit honorum culmina quaerere, adepta temporalis gloriae vanitate gaudere, irrogata ab aliis mala multiplicius reddere, cum vires suppetunt nullis resistentibus cedere, cum virtutis possibilitas deest, quidquid explere per malitiam non valet, hoc in pacifica bonitate simulare. At contra sapientia justorum est nil per ostensionem fingere, sensum verbis aperire, vera ut sunt diligere, falsa devitare, bona gratis exhibere, mala libentius tolerare quam facere; nullam injuriae ultionem quaerere, pro veritate contumeliam lucrum putare. Sed haec justorum simplicitas deridetur, quia ab hujus mundi sapientibus puritatis virtus, fatuitas creditur. Omne enim quod innocenter agitur, ab eis procul dubio stultum putatur; et quidquid in opere veritas approbat, carnali sapientiae fatuum sonat. Quid namque stultius videtur mundo quam mentem verbis ostendere, nil callida machinatione simulare, nullas injuriis contumelias reddere, pro maledicentibus orare, paupertatem quaerere, possessa relinquere, rapienti non resistere, percutienti alteram maxillam praebere? Unde bene hujus mundi dilectoribus ille egregius Dei sapiens dicit: Abominationes Aegyptiorum immolabimus Domino Deo nostro (Exod. VIII, 26). 361 Oves quippe Aegyptii edere dedignantur; sed quod abominantur Aegyptii, hoc Israelitae Deo offerunt, quia simplicitatem conscientiae, quam injusti quique velut infimam abjectamque despiciunt, hanc justi in virtutis sacrificium vertunt; et excolentes recti puritatem ac mansuetudinem Deo immolant, quam abominantes reprobi fatuitatem putant. Quae nimirum justi simplicitas breviter, sed sufficienter exprimitur, cum protinus subinfertur.

CAPUT XXX.

VERS. 5. — Lampas contempta apud cogitationes divitum. 49. Divitiarum possessionem non esse in crimine, sed cupiditatem. — Quid hoc loco signatur nomine divitum, nisi elatio superborum, qui venturi judicis respectum non habent, dum superbis apud se cogitationibus tument? Nam sunt nonnulli quos census per tumorem non elevat, sed per misericordiae opera exaltat. Et sunt nonnulli qui, dum se terrenis opibus abundare conspiciunt, veras Dei divitias non requirunt, atque aeternam patriam non amant, quia hoc sibi sufficere, quod rebus temporalibus fulciuntur, putant. Non est ergo census in crimine, sed affectus. Cuncta enim quae Deus condidit bona sunt; sed qui bonis male utitur profecto agit ut, quasi per edacitatis ingluviem, eo per quem vivere debuit pane moriatur. Pauper ad requiem Lazarus venerat, superbum vero divitem tormenta cruciabant (Luc. XVI, 26). Sed tamen dives Abraham fuerat, qui in sinu Lazarum tenebat; qui tamen auctori suo colloquens, dicit: Loquar ad Dominum meum, cum sim pulvis et cinis (Genes. XVIII, 27). Quid itaque iste divitias suas aestimare noverat, qui semetipsum pulverem cineremque pensabat? Aut quando hunc res possessae extollerent, qui de se quoque, earum videlicet possessore, tam abjecta sentiret? 50. Divites censeri qui egent, et fastu tument. His despectui sunt mundi contemptores. — Atque iterum sunt nonnulli quibus et res terrenae non suppetunt, et tamen apud se per fastum tumoris eriguntur. Hos et census ad ostensionem potentiae minime subvehit, et tamen morum protervia inter reprobos divites addicit. Quoscunque ergo sequentis vitae amor non humiliat, hoc in loco sacer sermo divites appellat, quia in judicii quoque ultione non discrepant utrum rebus an solis moribus intumescant. Qui cum vitam simplicium in hoc mundo humilem abjectamque conspiciunt; elatis protinus despectibus irrident. Nequaquam quippe eis hoc exterius adesse considerant, ad quod ipsi totis conatibus anhelant. Quasi stultos ergo despiciunt qui scilicet ea non habent quae ipsi utique vel habendo, vel solummodo amando, moriuntur; et quasi mortuos deputant, quos nequaquam secum vivere carnaliter pensant. Qui enim ab hujus mundi appetitu moritur, a terrenis mentibus profecto omni modo exstinctus aestimatur. Quod bene nostri miraculum Redemptoris signat, cum ab immundo spiritu hominem liberat, de quo nimirum scriptum est: Clamans, et multum discerpens eum, exiit ab eo; et factus est sicut mortuus, ita ut multi dicerent quia mortuus est. Jesus autem tenens manum ejus, elevavit eum, et surrexit (Marc. IX, 25). Velut mortuus quippe ostenditur qui a maligni spiritus potestate liberatur, 362 quia quisquis jam terrena desideria subigit, vitam in se carnalis conversationis exstinguit; et mundo mortuus apparet, quia possessore pravo, qui per immunda desideria se agitabat, caret. Quem multi mortuum dicunt, quia qui spiritaliter vivere nesciunt eum qui carnalia bona non sequitur exstinctum funditus arbitrantur.

51. Justi, carnalium oculis sine luce, coram Deo ardent et lucent. — Sed quia ipsi quoque derisores simplicium Christianitatis nomine censentur, reverentia religionis pressi, exhibere malum publicae irrisionis erubescunt. Unde fit ut apud se tumidi tacentesque derideant, quos abjectos valde atque infimos per simplicitatem putant. Bene ergo dicitur: Lampas contempta apud cogitationes divitum, quia superbi quique, dum pensare bona sequentia, ut superius diximus, nesciunt, pene nihil aestimant, quem non vident habere quod amant. Saepe namque contingit ut electus quisque, qui ad aeternam felicitatem ducitur, continua hic adversitate deprimatur, non hunc rerum abundantia fulciat, non dignitatum gloria honorabilem ostendat, nulla ei obsequentum frequentia suppetat, nulla hunc humanis oculis vestium pompa componat; a cunctis vero despicabilis cernitur, et hujus mundi gratia indignus aestimatur. Sed tamen ante occulti judicis oculos virtutibus emicat, vitae meritis coruscat, honorari metuit, despici non refugit; corpus continentia afficit, sola in animo dilectione pinguescit, mentem semper ad patientiam praeparat, et erectus pro justitia, de perceptis contumeliis exsultat, afflictis ex corde compatitur, de bonorum prosperitatibus quasi de propriis laetatur, sacri verbi pabula in mente sollicitus ruminat, et inquisitus quodlibet eloqui dupliciter ignorat. Bene itaque justi simplicitas et lampas esse dicitur, et contempta. Lampas, quia interius lucet; contempta, quia exterius non lucet. Intus ardet flamma charitatis, foris nulla gloria resplendet decoris. Lucet ergo et despicitur qui flagrans virtutibus abjectus aestimatur. Mentes quippe carnalium pensare bona non valent, nisi quae carnaliter vident. Hinc est quod David sanctum pater ipse despexerat, quem prophetae Samuelis oculis praesentare recusabat. Qui ad unctionis gratiam dum septem filios deduxisset, a propheta requisitus an numerum sobolis explesset, cum magna desperatione respondit: Est puer parvulus qui pascit oves (I Reg. XVI, 10, 11). Quo deducto et electo, protinus audivit: Homo videt in facie, Deus autem perscrutatur cor (Ibid., 7). Lampas ergo David per innocentiam fuerat; sed tamen valde contempta, quia exteriora cernentibus non lucebat. Sciendum vero est quod justus quisque aut temporalem gloriam non habet, aut hanc sub semetipso frangit, si habet, ut honori suo liber emineat, ne ei victus delectatione succumbat. Hinc enim est quod ille praedicator egregius ante humanos oculos apostolatus sui gloriam humiliaverat, qui dicebat: Non usi sumus hac potestate, cum possimus oneri esse ut Christi apostoli, sed facti sumus parvuli in medio vestrum (I Thess. II, 7). Ejus vero auditoribus nimirum tumor divitum adhuc in corde remanserat, cum dicebant: Epistolae graves sunt et fortes, 363 praesentia autem corporis infirma, et sermo contemptibilis (II Cor. X, 10). Quem enim talia dicere posse cognoverant, secum communiter vivere non posse judicabant. Cumque eum et humilem vivendo cernerent, et altum sermone pensarent, sua eos elatio compulit ut quem per scripta timuerant per praesentiae verba despicerent. Quid igitur Paulus, nisi contempta lampas apud cogitationes divitum fuit, qui unde magisterium humilitatis exhibuit, inde a rudibus discipulis superbiae contumelias recepit? Horrendo etenim modo languor superbientium unde detumescere debuit excrevit, dum mens elata carnalium hoc quasi dedignabile repulit, quod magister imitabile ostendit. An contempta lampas non erat, qui, tot virtutibus emicans, tanta a persecutoribus adversa tolerabat (Ephes. VI, 20)? Legatione in catena fungitur, ejusque vincula in omni praetorio manifestantur, virgis caeditur, multisque ex genere, ex gentibus, periculis urgetur (Philip. I, 13), lapidibus Lystris tunditur, pedibus extra urbem trahitur, quia exstinctus aestimatur (II Cor. XI, 26). Sed usquequo lampas ista contemnitur? Usquequo despicabilis habetur? Nunquidnam fulgorem suum nullatenus exerit, et nunquam quanta claritate candeat ostendit? Ostendit plane. Nam cum lampas contempta apud cogitationes divitum diceretur, protinus additur:

CAPUT XXXI.

IBID. — Parata ad tempus statutum. 52. Justi hic spreti fulgebunt in die judicii. — Statutum quippe contemptae lampadis tempus est extremi judicii praedestinatus dies, quo justus quisque, qui nunc despicitur, quanta potestate fulgeat demonstratur. Tunc enim cum Deo judices veniunt, qui nunc pro Deo injuste judicantur. Tunc eorum lux tanto latius emicat, quanto eos nunc manus persequentium durius angustat. Tunc reproborum oculis patescet quod coelesti potestate subnixi sunt qui terrena omnia sponte reliquerunt. Unde electis suis Veritas dicit: Vos qui secuti estis me, in regeneratione, cum sederit Filius hominis in sede majestatis suae, sedebitis et vos super duodecim sedes, judicantes duodecim tribus Israel (Matth. XIX, 28). Neque enim plus quam duodecim judices illa interni consessus curia non habebit; sed nimirum duodenario numero quantitas universitatis exprimitur, quia quisquis, stimulo divini amoris excitatus, hic possessa reliquerit, illic procul dubio culmen judiciariae potestatis obtinebit, ut simul tunc judex cum judice veniat, qui nunc consideratione judicii sese spontanea paupertate castigat. Hinc est enim quod de sanctae Ecclesiae sponso per Salomonem dicitur: Nobilis in portis vir ejus, quando sederit cum senatoribus terrae (Prov. XXXI, 23). Hinc Isaias ait: Dominus ad judicium veniet cum senioribus populi sui (Isai. III, 14). Hinc eosdem seniores Veritas non jam famulos, sed amicos denuntiat, dicens: Non jam dicam vos servos, sed amicos meos (Joan. XV, 15). Quos nimirum Psalmista intuens, ait: Mihi autem nimis honorificati sunt amici tui, Deus (Psal. CXXXVIII, 17). Quorum dum celsitudinem cordis aspiceret, mundi gloriam qua calce calcarent protinus addidit: Nimis confortatus est principatus eorum. Ac ne paucos esse crederemus, quos proficere usque ad summam tantae perfectionis agnoscimus, illico adjunxit: 364 Dinumerabo eos, et super arenam multiplicabuntur. Quot itaque nunc pro amore veritatis sese libenter humiliant, tot tunc in judicio lampades coruscant. Dicatur igitur recte: Lampas contempta apud cogitationes divitum, parata ad tempus statutum, quia uniuscujusque justi anima velut abjecta contemnitur cum degens inferius gloriam non habet, sed admirabilis cernitur dum desuper fulget. 53. Christus lampas hic contempta. — Libet inter haec ad Redemptoris vias mentis oculos attollere, sensimque a membris ad caput venire. Ipse enim nobis lampas veraciter exstitit, qui, pro redemptione nostra in cruce moriens, tenebrosis nostris mentibus lucem per lignum fudit. Hac nos lampade Joannes illuminari conspexerat, cum dicebat: Erat lux vera quae illuminat omnem hominem venientem in hunc mundum (Joan. I, 9). Quam tamen apud cogitationes divitum contemptam vidit, cum paulo post subdidit: In propria venit et sui eum non receperunt (Ibid., 11). Hujus lampadis flammas Herodes explorare voluit, cum ejus miracula videre concupivit, sicut scriptum est: Erat enim ex multo tempore cupiens videre eum, eo quod audisset multa de illo, et sperabat signum aliquod videre ab eo fieri (Luc. XXIII, 8). Sed lampas haec ante ejus oculos nullo radio lucis emicuit, quia ei qui se non pie sed curiose quaesierat nil de se mirabile ostendit. Inquisitus quippe Redemptor tacuit, exspectatus miracula exhibere contempsit, seseque apud se in occultis retinens, eos quos exteriora quaerere comperit, ingratos foris reliquit: magis eligens aperte a superbientibus despici, quam a non credentibus vacua voce laudari. Unde et protinus lampas ista contempta est, sicut illic subditur: Sprevit autem illum Herodes cum exercitu suo, et illusit indutum veste alba (Ibid. 11). 54. In die novissimo coruscabit. — Sed contempta lampas, quae in terra irrisiones tolerat, de coelo judicium coruscat. Unde hic apte subjungitur: Parata ad tempus statutum. De quo videlicet tempore per Psalmistam dicit: Cum accepero tempus, ego justitias judicabo (Psal. LXXIV, 3). Hinc in Evangelio per semetipsam Veritas denuntiat, dicens: Tempus meum nondum advenit (Joan. VII, 6). Hinc Petrus ait: Quem oportet coelum suscipere, usque ad tempora restitutionis (Act. III, 21). Lampas ergo quae nunc contemnitur ad statutum tempus ventura praeparatur, quia ipse peccata in die ultimo judicat, qui nunc peccantium derisiones portat. Et tanto tunc durius districtionem exerit, quanto nunc vocandis peccatoribus suam lenius patientiam sternit. Qui enim diu convertendos exspectat, non conversos sine retractatione cruciat. Quod per prophetam scilicet breviter insinuat, dicens: Tacui, semper silui, patiens fui, sicut parturiens loquar (Isai. XLII, 14). Ut enim jam praediximus, parturiens cum dolore ejicit hoc quod in intimis tempore longo gestavit. Qui ergo semper siluit sicut parturiens loquitur, quia venturus judex, qui sine ultione diu facta hominum pertulit, quandoque cum fervore examinis, quasi cum dolore mentis, quantae animadversionis sententiam intus servaverit ostendit. Nemo igitur hanc lampadem, cum latet, despiciat, ne contemptores, suos, cum de coelo fulserit, 365 exurat. Cui enim nunc non ardet ad veniam, tunc procul dubio ardebit ad poenam. Quia ergo per supernam gratiam vocationis tempus accipimus, dum adhuc licentia superest, ejus iram, qui ubique est, mores in melius commutando, fugiamus. Solum quippe animadversio illa non invenit quem correctio abscondit.

55. Haec nos, largiente Domino, in duobus jam corporibus 366 transcurrisse sufficiat. Quia enim sacri libri sequentia mysteriorum virtutibus extensa complecti breviter exponendo non possumus, ea necesse est ut aliis voluminibus reservemus, quatenus lector tanto ferventior ad legendi studium redeat, quanto ex lectionis quoque intercisione respirat.

LIBER DECIMUS.

CAPUT I.

Quoties in arenae spectaculum fortis athleta descenderit, ii qui impares viribus existunt vicissim se eius expugnationi subiiciunt: et uno victo, contra hunc protinus alter erigitur; atque hoc subacto, alius subrogatur; ut luctantis vires quandoque molliores inveniant quas ipsa sua crebrescens victoria fatigat; quatenus cum novus quisque congreditur, is qui vinci virium qualitate non valet, personarum saltem mutatione superetur. Sic sic in hoc hominum angelorumque spectaculo beatus Iob fortis athleta prodiit, quantumque contra mutationes adversantium valeat continuatione indefessi roboris ostendit. Cui primus se Eliphaz, secundus autem Baldad obiicit, atque ad extremum se Sophar in eius expugnatione supponit: qui ad inferendos ictus totis se conatibus erigunt, sed tamen ad feriendam altitudinem robusti pectoris non pertingunt. Ipsa quippe eorum verba patenter insinuant quod ictus in auras iactant, quia cum sanctum virum non recte redarguunt, expressa in vacuum verba percussionis perdunt. Quod liquido ostenditur, cum Sophar Naamathitis responsio a contumeliis inchoatur, qui ait:

CAPUT II.

CAP. XI, Nunquid qui multa loquitur non et ipse audiet? aut vir verbosus iustificabitur?

Mos esse procacium solet ut recte dictis semper e diverso respondeant, ne si ad prolata consentiant, inferiores esse videantur. Quibus iustorum verba quamlibet pauca sonuerint multa sunt, quia quo eorum vitia resecant, auditum gravant. Unde et ad crimen trahitur hoc quod recta praedicatione contra crimina profertur. Ipsum quippe qui ex veritate fortes sententias dixerat Sophar redarguens, verbosum vocat, quia cum ab ore iustorum sapientia culpas increpat, stultorum auribus superfluitas loquacitatis sonat. Pravi namque nil rectum, nisi quod ipsi senserint, putant; et iustorum verba eo otiosa aestimant, quo suis haec sensibus inveniunt diversa. Nec fallacem quidem Sophar sententiam protulit, quod vir verbosus iustificari nequaquam possit, quia dum quisque per verba diffluit, perdita gravitate silentii, mentis custodiam amittit. Hinc quippe scriptum est: Cultus iustitiae, silentium. Hinc Salomon ait: Sicut urbs patens et absque murorum ambitu, ita vir qui non potest in loquendo cohibere spiritum suum. Hinc rursum dicit: In multiloquio peccatum non deerit. Hinc Psalmista testatur, dicens: Vir verbosus non dirigetur super terram. Sed virtus verae sententiae perditur, quae sub discretionis custodia non profertur. Certum itaque est quod verbosus iustificari vir nequeat. Sed bonum bene non dicitur, quia non intenditur cui dicatur. Vera quippe contra malos sententia, si bonorum rectitudinem impetit, suam perdit, et eo retusa resilit, quo illud est forte quod ferit.? Quia autem pravi audire bona patienter nequeunt, et cum vitae emendationem negligunt, ad verba se responsionis accingunt, aperte Sophar insinuat, qui subiungit:

CAPUT III.

Tibi soli tacebunt homines, et cum caeteros irriseris, a nullo confutaberis?

Imperita mens, ut diximus, veritatis sententias graviter tolerat, et silentium poenam putat atque omne quod rectum dicitur dedecus suae irrisionis arbitratur, quia cum vera vox pravorum se auribus admovet, memoriam culpa mordet, et in redargutione vitiorum quo intus cognitione mens tangitur, foras ad studium contradictionis excitatur. Ferre vocem non valet, quia tacta in vulnere sui reatus dolet, et per hoc quod generaliter contra perversos dicitur, se impeti specialiter suspicatur. Quod enim intus egisse se meminit, audire foris erubescit. Unde mox se ad defensionem praeparat, ut reatus sui verecundiam per verba pravae refutationis tegat. Sicut enim recti de quibusdam quae ab eis non recte gesta sunt correptionis vocem, ministerium charitatis aestimant, sic perversi contumeliam derisionis putant. Illi se protinus ad obedientiam sternunt, isti ad insaniam suae defensionis eriguntur. Illi correptionis adiutorium vitae suae patrocinium deputant, per quod dum praesentis vitae culpa corripitur, venturi iudicis ira temperatur; isti cum se impeti redargutione conspiciunt, gladium percussionis credunt, quia dum per correptionis vocem culpa detegitur, praesentis gloriae opinio foedatur. Hinc quippe in laude iusti per Salomonem dicit Veritas: Doce iustum, et festinabit accipere. Hinc pravorum contumaciam despicit, dicens: Qui erudit derisorem, ipse sibi facit iniuriam. Nam fit plerumque ut cum correpta in se mala defendere nequeunt, ex verecundia peiores fiant; ac sic in sua defensione superbiant, ut quaedam vitia contra vitam corripientis exquirant; et eo se criminosos non aestimant, si crimina et aliis imponant. Quae cum vera invenire nequeunt, fingunt, ut ipsi quoque habeant quod non impari iustitia increpare videantur. Unde et Sophar, quia quasi irrideri se per increpationem doluit, protinus mentiendo subiungit:

CAPUT IV.

Dixisti enim, Purus est sermo meus, et mundus sum in conspectu tuo.

Qui beati Iob dictorum meminit, quam falso hoc voci illius impingatur agnoscit. Quomodo enim mundum se dicere potuit, qui ait: Si iustificare me voluero, os meum condemnabit me? Sed habet hoc pravorum malitia, ut cum vera in se flere mala renuit, fingat aliena. Nam quasi solatio facinoris utitur, si falsis vocibus et vita corripientis inquinetur. Sciendum vero est quod plerumque perversi verbotenus bona optant, ut mala esse quae in praesentibus habentur ostendant; et quasi faventes prospera expetunt, ut benigni videantur. Unde et Sophar protinus subiicit, dicens:

CAPUT V.

Atque utinam Deus loqueretur tecum, et aperiret labia sua tibi!

Ipse quippe sibi homo loquitur, cum per hoc quod sentit nequaquam Divinitatis spiritu a carnalis prudentiae intellectu separatur; cum caro sensum exerit, et mentem, quasi ad intelligentiam provocans, foras mittit. Unde et adhuc Petro terrena sapienti Veritas dicit: Non enim sapis quae Dei sunt, sed quae hominum. Cui tamen recta confitenti dicitur: Caro et sanguis non revelavit tibi, sed Pater meus qui in coelis est. Quid autem Dei labia nisi iudicia eius accipimus? Clausis namque labiis vox premitur, et sensus tacentis ignoratur; apertis autem sermo dum promitur, animus loquentis invenitur. Labia itaque sua Deus aperit cum voluntatem suam hominibus per aperta iudicia ostendit. Quasi enim reserato ore loquitur, cum remota obscuritate dispositionis intimae renuit occultare quod vult. Nam velut clausis labiis sensum nobis suum non indicat, cum per occulta iudicia cur quid faciat celat. Sophar itaque beatum Iob ut de carnali intellectu redarguat, seque ipsum quantae sit benignitatis ostendat, ei bona optat, quae et cum habentur ignorat, dicens: Atque utinam Deus loqueretur tecum et aperiret labia sua tibi! Ac si patenter dicat: Imperitiae tuae potius quam poenae compatior, quia, sola carnis prudentia praeditum, a veritatis te spiritu vacuum agnosco. Si enim Dei iudicia occulta cognosceres, tam procaces contra illum sententias non sonares. Et quia omnipotens Deus cum ad consideranda nos sua iudicia sublevat, ignorantiae nostrae protinus caecitatem fugat, quae apertis eius labiis, ad nos eruditio prodeat, protinus adiungendo manifestat, dicens:

CAPUT VI.

Ut ostenderet tibi secreta sapientiae, et quod multiplex sit lex eius.

Publica sapientiae supernae sunt opera, cum omnipotens Deus regit quos creat, perficit bona quae inchoat, et aspirando adiuvat quos visitationis suae lumine illustrat. Cunctis etenim liquet quia quos gratis condidit benigne disponit. Et cum spiritalia dona largitur, ipse perficit quod ipse ex munere suae benignitatis inchoavit. Secreta vero sapientiae supernae sunt opera cum Deus quos creavit deserit; cum bona quae praeveniendo coeperat; nequaquam prosequendo consummat; cum claritate nos suae illustrationis illuminat, et tamen, permissis carnis tentationibus, tenebris caecitatis pulsat; cum dona quae contulit minime custodit; cum et mentis nostrae ad se desideria excitat, et tamen occulto iudicio difficultate nos nostrae imbecillitatis angustat.

Quae nimirum secreta eius sapientiae pauci valent inquirere, sed nullus invenire, quia quod super nos de nobis ad immortali sapientia non iniuste disponitur, iustum profecto est ut a nobis adhuc mortalibus ignoretur. Sed haec ipsa sapientiae illius secreta conspicere utcunque iam incomprehensibilitatis eius est potentiam videre, quia etsi in ipsa consiliorum eius inquisitione deficimus, deficiendo tamen verius discimus quem timeamus. Ad haec se Paulus sapientiae illius secreta tetenderat, cum dicebat: O altitudo divitiarum sapientiae et scientiae Dei, quam incomprehensibilia sunt iudicia eius, et investigabiles viae eius. Quis enim cognovit sensus Domini? vel quis consiliarius eius fuit? Qui superius etiam ex ipsa inquisitione lassescens, sed tamen ad cognitionem infirmitatis propriae lassescendo proficiens, praemittit dicens: O homo, tu quis es qui respondeas Deo? Nunquid dicit figmentum ei qui se finxit: Quare me fecisti sic? Qui igitur ad occulta Dei pertingere non valens ad infirmitatis suae cognitionem rediit, atque ad eruditionem se propriam deficiendo revocavit, ut ita dicam, secreta sapientiae non inveniens invenit, quia cum ad superna consilia requirenda lassesceret, didicit ut humilius timeret; et quem sua infirmitas a cognitione intima repulit, hunc ei verius humilitas iunxit.

Sophar itaque et per scientiae studium peritus, et per audaciam tumidae locutionis ignarus, quia ipse gravitatem non habet, meliori optat quod habet, dicens: Atque utinam Deus loqueretur tecum, et aperiret labia sua tibi, ut ostenderet tibi secreta sapientiae! Qui eam quoque, qua se super amicum pollere aestimat, optando sapientiam ostentat, cum protinus subdit: Et quod multiplex sit lex eius. Quid hoc loco Dei lex accipi nisi charitas debet, per quam semper in mente legitur praecepta vitae qualiter in actione teneantur? De hac etenim lege Veritatis voce dicitur: Hoc est praeceptum meum ut diligatis invicem. De hac Paulus ait: Plenitudo legis, dilectio. De hac iterum dicit: Invicem onera vestra portate, et sic adimplebitis legem Christi. Lex etenim Christi quid congruentius intelligi quam charitas potest, quam tunc vere perficimus cum fraterna onera ex amore toleramus.

Sed haec eadem lex multiplex dicitur, quia studiosa sollicitudine charitas ad cuncta virtutum facta dilatatur. Quae a duobus quidem praeceptis incipit, sed se ad innumera extendit. Huius namque legis initium dilectio Dei est ac dilectio proximi. Sed Dei dilectio per tria distinguitur, quia ex toto corde, et ex tota anima, et ex tota fortitudine diligi conditor iubetur. Qua in re notandum est quod divinus sermo cum Deum diligi praecipit, non solum narrat ex quo, sed etiam informat ex quanto, cum subiungit ex toto, ut videlicet qui perfecte Deo placere desiderat sibi de se nihil relinquat. Proximi autem dilectio ad duo praecepta derivatur, cum et per quemdam iustum dicitur: Quod ab alio tibi odis fieri, vide ne tu alteri facias. Et per semetipsam Veritas dicit: Quae vultis ut faciant vobis homines, et vos facite illis. Quibus duobus scilicet utriusque Testamenti mandatis, per unum malitia compescitur, per aliud benignitas praerogatur, ut malum quod pati non vult quisque non faciens; cesset a nocendi opere; et rursum bonum quod sibi fieri appetit, impendens, erga utilitatem se proximi exerceat ex benignitate. Sed haec nimirum duo dum sollicita intentione cogitantur, cor ad innumera virtutum ministeria tenditur, ne vel ad inferenda quae non debet desideriis inquieta mens ferveat, vel erga exhibenda quae debet otio resoluta torpescat. Nam cum cavet alteri facere quod nequaquam vult ab altero ipsa tolerare, sollicita se intentione circumspicit, ne superbia elevet, et usque ad despectum proximi animum deiiciens exaltet; ne ambitio cogitationem laniet, cumque hanc ad appetenda aliena dilatat, angustet; ne cor luxuria polluat, et subiectum desideriis per illicita corrumpat; ne ira exasperet, et usque ad proferendam contumeliam inflammet; ne invidia mordeat, et alienis felicitatibus aemula, sua se face consumat; ne immoderate linguam loquacitas pertrahat, eamque usque ad lasciviam obtrectationis extendat; ne odium malitia excitet, et os usque ad iaculum maledictionis irritet. Rursum cum cogitat ut ea alteri faciat quae ipsa sibi fieri ab altero exspectat, pensat nimirum ut malis bona, et bonis meliora respondeat; ut erga procaces mansuetudinem longanimitatis exhibeat; ut malitiae peste languentibus gratiam benignitatis impendat; ut discordes pace uniat, et concordes ad concupiscentiam verae pacis accingat; ut indigentibus necessaria tribuat; ut errantibus viam rectitudinis ostendat; ut afflictos verbo et compassione mulceat; ut accensos in huius mundi desideriis increpatione restinguat; ut minas potentum ratiocinatione mitiget; ut oppressorum angustias quanta praevalet ope levet; ut foris resistentibus opponat patientiam; ut intus superbientibus exhibeat cum patientia disciplinam; ut erga errata subditorum sic mansuetudo zelum temperet, quatenus a iustitiae studio non enervet; sic ad ultionem zelus ferveat, ne tamen pietatis limitem fervendo transcendat; ut ingratos beneficiis ad amorem provocet; ut gratos quosque ministeriis in amore servet; ut proximorum mala cum corrigere non valet, taceat, utque cum corrigi loquendo possunt, silentium consensum esse pertimescat; ut sic ea quae tacet toleret, ne tamen in anima virus doloris occultet; ut sic malevolis munus benignitatis exhibeat, ne tamen per gratiam a iure rectitudinis excedat; ut cuncta proximis quae praevalet impendat, sed haec impendendo non tumeat; ut sic in bonis quae exhibet tumoris praecipitium paveat, ne tamen a boni exercitio torpescat; ut sic quae possidet tribuat, quatenus quanta sit largitas remunerantis attendat; ne cum terrena largitur, suam plus quam necesse est inopiam cogitet, et in oblatione muneris hilaritatis lumen tristitia obscuret.

Bene ergo lex Dei multiplex dicitur, quia nimirum cum una eademque sit charitas, si mentem plene coeperit, hanc ad innumera opera multiformiter accendit. Cuius diversitatem breviter exprimimus, si in electis singulis bona illius perstringendo numeremus. Haec namque per Abel et electa Deo munera, obtulit, et fratris gladium non reluctando toleravit. Haec Enoch et inter homines vivere spiritaliter docuit, et ad sublimem vitam ab hominibus etiam corporaliter abstraxit. Haec Noe, despectis omnibus solum Deo placabilem ostendit, atque in arcae fabricam studio longi laboris exercuit, et mundo superstitem pio opere exercendo servavit. Haec per Sem et Iaphet humiliter verenda patris erubuit, et superiecto dorsis pallio, quae non videbat abscondit. Haec Abrahae dextram quia ad mortem filii obediendo extulit, hunc prolis innumerae, gentium patrem fecit. Haec Isaac mentem, quia semper ad munditiam tenuit, caligantibus aetate oculis, ad videnda longe post ventura dilatavit. Haec Iacob compulit et amissum bonum filium medullitus gemere, et pravorum filiorum praesentiam sub aequanimitate tolerare. Haec Ioseph docuit a fratribus venundatum, et libertate animi infracta servitium perpeti, et eisdem post fratribus mente non elata principari. Haec Moysen, delinquente populo, et usque ad petitionem mortis in precibus stravit, et usque ad interfectionem populi per zeli studium erexit, ut et pro pereunte plebe sese morti obiiceret, et contra peccantem protinus vice Domini irascentis saeviret. Haec Phinees brachium in ultionem peccantium erexit, ut arrepto gladio, coeuntes transfigeret, et iram Domini iratus placaret. Haec Iesum exploratorem docuit, ut et prius contra falsiloquos cives veritatem verbo defenderet, et hanc postmodum gladio contra hostes allegaret . Haec Samuel et in principatu humilem praebuit, et integrum in deiectione servavit, qui cum persequentem se plebem diligeret, ipse sibi testimonio exstitit, quia culmen ex quo deiectus est non amavit. Haec David ante iniquum regem et humilitate commovit ad fugam, et pietate replevit ad veniam; qui persecutorem suum et timendo fugit ut dominum, et tamen cum potestatem feriendi reperit, non agnovit inimicum. Haec Nathan et contra peccantem regem in auctoritatem liberae increpationis sustulit, et cum regis culpa deesset, in petitione humiliter stravit. Haec per Isaiam nuditatem carnis in praedicatione non erubuit, et subducto carnali velamine, superna mysteria penetravit. Haec Eliam, quia fervoris zelo vivere spiritaliter docuit, ad vitam quoque et corporaliter abstraxit. Haec Elisaeum, quia magistrum diligere simpliciter instituit, magistri spiritu dupliciter implevit. Per hanc Ieremias ne in Aegyptum populus descenderet restitit; sed tamen et inobedientes diligens, quo descendi prohibuit, et ipse descendit. Haec Ezechielem, quia prius a terrenis desideriis sustulit, post per cincinnum capitis in aere libravit. Haec in Daniele, quia a regiis dapibus gulam compescuit, ei et esurientium ora leonum clausit, Haec tribus pueris, quia in tranquillitate positis incendia vitiorum subdidit, tribulationis tempore et flammas in fornace temperavit. Haec in Petro et minis terrentium principum fortiter restitit, et in circumcisione submovenda minorum verba humiliter audivit. Haec in Paulo et manus persequentium humiliter pertulit, et tamen in circumcisionis negotio longe se imparis prioris sensum audenter increpavit. Multiplex ergo ista lex Dei est, quae singulis rerum articulis non permutata congruit, et causis se variantibus non variata coniungit.

Cuius nimirum legis multiplicitatem bene Paulus enumerat, dicens: Charitas patiens est, benigna est; non aemulatur, non inflatur, non agit perperam, non est ambitiosa, non quaerit quae sua sunt, non irritatur, non cogitat malum, non gaudet super iniquitate, congaudet autem veritati. Patiens quippe est charitas, quia illata mala aequanimiter tolerat. Benigna vero est, quia pro malis bona largiter ministrat. Non aemulatur, quia per hoc quod in praesenti mundo nil appetit, invidere terrenis successibus nescit. Non inflatur, quia cum praemium internae retributionis anxia desiderat, de bonis se exterioribus non exaltat. Non agit perperam, quia quo se in solum Dei ac proximi amorem dilatat, quidquid a rectitudine discrepat ignorat. Non est ambitiosa, quia quo ardenter intus ad sua satagit, foras nullatenus aliena concupiscit. Non quaerit quae sua sunt, quia cuncta quae hic transitorie possidet velut aliena negligit, cum nihil sibi esse proprium nisi quod secum permaneat agnoscit. Non irritatur, quia et iniuriis lacessita ad nullos se ultionis suae motus excitat, dum pro magnis laboribus maiora post praemia exspectat. Non cogitat malum, quia in amore munditiae mentem solidans, dum omne odium radicitus eruit, versare in animo quod inquinat nescit. Non gaudet super iniquitate, quia quo sola dilectione erga omnes inhiat, nec de perditione adversantium exsultat. Congaudet autem veritati, quia ut se caeteros diligens, per hoc quod rectum in aliis conspicit, quasi de augmento proprii provectus hilarescit. Multiplex ergo ista lex Dei est, quae contra uniuscuiusque culpae iaculum, quod perimendam mentem impetit, instructionis suae munimine occurrit, ut quia antiquus hostis varia circumfusione nos obsidet, ipsa hunc de nobis multipliciter expugnet. Quam nimirum legem si sollicita consideratione pensamus, auctori nostro quantum quotidie delinquamus agnoscimus. Si autem culpas perpendimus, profecto aequanimiter flagella toleramus; nec ex dolore ad impatientiam proruit, cum suo se iudicio conscientia addicit. Unde Sophar, quid diceret sciens, sed cui diceret nesciens, postquam praemisit dicens, Ut ostenderet tibi secreta sapientiae, et quod multiplex sit lex eius, protinus adiungit:

CAPUT VII

Et intelligeres quod multo minora exigaris a Deo quam meretur iniquitas tua.

Dolor quippe, ut diximus, flagelli temperatur cum culpa cognoscitur, quia et tanto quisque patientius ferramentum medici tolerat, quanto putridum conspicit esse quod secat. Qui igitur multiplicitatem legis intelligit, cuncta quae patitur quam sint minora perpendit, quia per hoc quod culpae pondus agnoscitur, afflictionis poena levigatur.

Sed inter haec sciendum est quia sine magna iniquitate non fuerit quod Sophar virum iustum usque ad obiectionem iniquitatis increpavit. Unde et eorum audaciam Veritas iuste redarguit, sed benigne ad gratiam reducit; quia apud misericordem iudicem nequaquam sine venia culpa relinquitur, cum per fervorem zeli ex eius amore peccatur. Saepe namque magnis hoc doctoribus mirandisque contingit, ut quo alta charitate fervent, modum correptionis exaggerent, et lingua aliquid quod non debet dicat, quia mentem dilectio quantum debet inflammat. Sed verbum prolatae contumeliae tanto citius parcitur, quanto et ex qua radice prodeat pensatur. Unde bene per Moysen Dominus praecepit dicens: Si quis abierit cum amico suo simpliciter in silvam ad ligna caedenda, et lignum securis fugerit manu, ferrumque lapsum de manubrio amicum eius percusserit, et occiderit, hic ad unam supradictarum urbium fugiet, et vivet, ne forte proximus eius, cuius effusus est sanguis, doloris stimulo persequatur, et apprehendat eum, et percutiat animam eius. Ad silvam quippe cum amico imus quoties cum quolibet proximo ad intuenda delicta nostra convertimur, et simpliciter ligna succidimus cum delinquentium vitia pia intentione resecamus. Sed securis manu fugit cum sese increpatio plus quam necesse est in asperitatem pertrahit. Ferrumque de manubrio prosilit cum de correptione sermo durior excedit; et amicum percutiens occidit, quia auditorem suum prolata contumelia ab spiritu dilectionis interficit. Correpti namque mens repente ad odium proruit, si hanc immoderata increpatio plus quam debuit addicit. Sed is qui incaute ligna percutit, et proximum exstinguit, ad tres necesse est urbes fugiat, ut in una earum defensus vivat, quia si, ad poenitentiae lamenta conversus, in unitate sacramenti sub spe, fide et charitate absconditur, reus perpetrati homicidii non tenetur; eumque exstincti proximus et cum invenerit non occidit, quia cum districtus iudex venerit, qui sese nobis per naturae nostrae consortium iunxit, ab eo procul dubio vindictam de culpae reatu non expetit quem sub eius venia spes, fides et charitas abscondit. Citius ergo culpa dimittitur quae nequaquam malitiae studio perpetratur. Unde et Sophar iniquum vocat quem superna sententia laudaverat; nec tamen a venia reprobatus excluditur, quia ad verba contumeliae divini amoris zelo promovetur. Qui pro eo quod beati Iob merita non agnoscit, ex imperita adhuc irrisione subiungit, dicens:

CAPUT VIII.

Forsitan vestigia Dei comprehendes, et usque ad perfectum, Omnipotentem reperies.

Quid Dei vestigia nisi benignitatem illius visitationis vocat? Quibus nimirum progredi ad superna provocamur cum eius Spiritus afflatu tangimur, et, extra carnis angustias sublevati, per amorem agnoscimus auctoris nostri contemplandam speciem, quam sequamur. Nam cum mentem nostram spiritalis patriae amor inflammat, quasi sequentibus iter insinuat, et substrato cordi velut quoddam vestigium Dei gradientis imprimitur, ut ab eo rectis cogitationum gressibus via vitae teneatur. Quem enim necdum cernimus, restat necesse est ut per vestigia sui amoris indagemus, quatenus usque ad contemplationis speciem quandoque mens inveniat quem nunc, quasi a tergo subsequens, per sancta desideria explorat. Haec Psalmista auctoris nostri vestigia bene sequi noverat cum dicebat: Adhaesit anima mea post te. Quem reperire quoque usque ad visionem suae celsitudinis satagebat, dicens: Sitivit anima mea ad Deum vivum; quando veniam, et parebo ante faciem Dei Tunc quippe cogitatione manifesta omnipotens Deus reperitur, cum, mortalitatis nostrae funditus corruptione calcata, ab assumptis nobis in divinitatis suae claritate conspicitur. Nunc autem a carnali cogitatione animum infusi Spiritus gratia sublevat, et in contemptum rerum transeuntium exaltat; totumque mens quod appetebat in infimis despicit, atque ad superna desideria ignescit, et contemplationis suae vi extra carnem tollitur, quae corruptionis suae pondere adhuc in carne retinetur. Incircumscripti luminis iubar intueri conatur, et non valet; quod infirmitate pressus animus et nequaquam penetrat, et tamen repulsus amat. Iam namque de se conditor per quod ametur ostendit, sed visionis suae speciem amantibus subtrahit. Sola ergo eius vestigia conspicientes gradimur, qui hunc per donorum suorum signa sequimur, quem necdum videmus. Quae nimirum vestigia comprehendi nequeunt, quia unde, ubi, quibusve modis veniant eius Spiritus dona, nesciuntur, Veritate attestante, quae ait: Spiritus ubi vult spirat, et vocem eius audis, et nescis unde veniat, et quo vadat. In retributionis autem culmine reperiri Omnipotens per contemplationis speciem potest, sed tamen ad perfectum non potest, quia etsi hunc in claritate sua quandoque conspicimus, non tamen eius essentiam plene contuemur. Angelica etenim, vel humana mens cum ad incircumscriptum lumen inhiat, eo ipso se, quo est creatura, coangustat; et super se quidem per provectum tenditur, sed tamen eius fulgorem comprehendere nec dilatata sufficit, qui et transcendendo et portando omnia et implendo concludit. Unde et adhuc subditur:

CAPUT IX.

Excelsior coelo est, et quid facies? profundior inferno, et unde cognosces? Longior terra mensura eius, et latior mari.

Quod Deus coelo excelsior, inferno profundior, terra longior, marique latior esse describitur, tanto spiritaliter debet intelligi, quanto de eo quidquam nefas est iuxta corporea lineamenta sentire. Sed coelo est excelsior, quia incircumscriptione sui spiritus cuncta transcendit; inferno profundior, quia transcendendo subvehit; terra longior, quia creaturae modum perennitate suae aeternitatis excedit; mari latior, quia rerum temporalium fluctus sic regens possidet, ut hos sub omnimoda potentiae suae praesentia coangustando circumdet. Quamvis possunt et coeli appellatione angeli, et inferni vocabulo daemonia designari; per terram vero iusti homines, per mare autem peccatores intelligi. Excelsior itaque coelo est, quia ipsi quoque electi spiritus visionem tantae celsitudinis perfecte non penetrant. Profundior inferno est, quia malignorum spirituum astutias longe subtilius quam ipsi putaverant iudicans damnat. Terra longior, quia longanimitatem nostram patientia divinae longanimitatis exsuperat, quae nos et peccantes tolerat, et conversos ad praemia remunerationis exspectat. Mari latior, quia ubique facta peccantium retributionis suae praesentia occupat, ut et cum non praesens per speciem cernitur, praesens per iudicium sentiatur.

Cuncta tamen ad solum referri hominem possunt, ut ipse sit coelum cum iam per desiderium summis inhaereat; ipse infernus, cum, tentationum suarum caligine perturbatus, in infimis iacet; ipse terra, quia in bono opere fixae spei ubertate fructificat; ipse mare, quia in quibusdam trepidus quatitur, et aura suae mutabilitatis agitatur. Sed coelo est excelsior Deus, quia potentiae eius magnitudine vincimur, etiam cum super nosmetipsos elevamur; inferno profundior, quia nimirum plus iudicat quam ipse se humanus animus in tentationibus investigat; terra longior, quia fructus vitae, quos in fine retribuit, nequaquam nunc vel spes nostra comprehendit; mari latior, quia humana mens fluctuans multa de his quae ventura sunt coniicit, sed cum iam cernere quae aestimaverat coeperit, angustam se fuisse in sua aestimatione cognoscit. Excelsior igitur coelo fit cum ipsa in eum nostra contemplatio deficit. Unde et cor Psalmista in altum posuerat, sed necdum se eum contigisse sentiebat, dicens: Mirabilis facta est scientia tua ex me, confortata est, nec potero ad eam. Inferno profundiorem noverat, qui semetipsum discutiens, sed eius subtiliora iudicia pertimescens, dicebat: Nihil mihi conscius sum, sed non in hoc iustificatus sum; qui autem iudicat me, Dominus est. Longiorem terra viderat, cum minora ei esse humanae mentis vota pensabat, dicens: Qui potens est omnia facere superabundanter quam petimus aut intelligimus. Latiorem mari conspexerat, qui timendo pensabat quia nequaquam mens humana immensitatem districtionis eius agnosceret, quantumlibet inquirendo fluctuaret, dicens: Quis novit potestatem irae tuae, aut prae timore iram tuam dinumerare? Cuius bene potentiam egregius nobis doctor insinuat, cum breviter narrat: Ut possitis comprehendere cum omnibus sanctis, quae sit latitudo, longitudo, sublimitas et profundum. Habet quippe Deus latitudinem, quia dilectionem suam usque ad collectionem persequentium tendit. Habet longitudinem, quia ad vitae patriam nos longanimiter tolerando perducit. Habet sublimitatem, quia ipsorum quoque intelligentiam qui recepti in supernam fuerint congregationem transcendit. Habet profundum, quia damnatis inferius districtionis suae iudicium incomprehensibiliter exerit. Quae scilicet quatuor nobis in hac vita positis singulis exercet, quia et latitudinem amando, et longitudinem tolerando, et celsitudinem, non solum nostram intelligentiam, sed etiam vota superando, et profunditatem suam exhibet, occultos et illicitos cogitationum motus districte iudicando. Sed eius celsitudo et profunditas quam sit investigabilis nullus agnoscit, nisi qui vel contemplatione ad summa provehi, vel, occultis motibus resistens, tentationum coeperit importunitate turbari. Unde et beato Iob dicitur: Excelsior coelo est, et quid facies? profundior inferno, et unde cognosces? Ac si ei aperto despectu diceretur: Profunditatem eius atque excellentiam quando tu cognoscere sufficis, qui vel virtute ad summa evehi, vel temetipsum reprehendere in tentationibus nescis. Sequitur:

Si subverterit omnia, vel in unum coarctaverit, quis contradicet ei? vel quis dicere ei potest, Cur ita facis?

Subvertit Dominus coelum cum terribili et occulta dispensatione humanae contemplationis celsitudinem destruit. Subvertit infernum cum cuiuslibet mentem in suis tentationibus pavidam cadere etiam ad deteriora permittit. Subvertit terram cum fructificationem boni operis adversis irruentibus intercidit. Subvertit mare cum fluctuationem nostrae titubationis emergente subito pavore confundit. Dubietate quippe sua cor anxium hoc ipsum quia titubat valde formidat, et quasi mare subvertitur cum ipsa in Deum nostra trepidatio, considerato eius iudicii terrore, turbatur. Quia igitur quomodo coelum vel infernus, terra vel mare, subvertitur breviter diximus, nunc aliquantulum laboriosius restat ut haec qualiter in unum coarctari valeant, demonstremus.

Saepe namque contingit ut ad summa iam mentem spiritus elevet, sed tamen hanc importunis caro tentationibus impugnet. Cumque ad contemplanda coelestia animus ducitur, obiectis actionis illicitae imaginibus reverberatur. Nam carnis repente hunc stimulus sauciat quem extra carnem contemplatio sancta rapiebat. Coelum ergo simul infernusque coarctatur cum unam eamdemque mentem et sublevatio contemplationis illuminat, et importunitas tentationis obscurat; ut et videat intendendo quod appetat, et succumbendo in cogitatione toleret quod erubescat. De coelo quippe lux oritur, infernus autem tenebris possidetur. In unum ergo coelum infernusque redigitur cum mens, quae iam lucem patriae supernae considerat, etiam de carnis bello tenebras occultae tentationis portat. Certe iam Paulus tertii coeli culmen ascenderat, iam paradisi secreta cognoverat, et tamen adhuc carnis bella tolerans gemebat, dicens: Video aliam legem in membris meis repugnantem legi mentis meae, et captivum me ducentem in lege peccati, quae est in membris meis. Quid ergo in huius tanti praedicatoris pectore nisi coelum Deus infernumque coarctaverat, qui et visionis intimae iam lumen acceperat, et tamen adhuc tenebras de carne tolerabat? Super se viderat quod laetus appeteret, in se cernebat quod metuens doleret. Iam coelestis patriae lux irradiaverat, sed adhuc tentationis obscuritas animum confundebat. Cum coelo ergo infernum pertulit, quia et illuminatum securitas erexit, et tentatum gemitus stravit.

Et saepe contingit ut fides in mente iam vigeat, sed tamen ex parte aliquantula in dubietate contabescat; quatenus et certa se a visibilibus elevet, et ex quibusdam sese incerta perturbet. Nam plerumque ad aeterna appetenda se erigit, et subortis cogitationum stimulis agitata, sibimet ipsa contradicit. In unum ergo terra mareque coarctatur cum unam eamdemque mentem, et certitudo solidae fidei roborat, et tamen ex aliquantula mutabilitate perfidiae aura dubietatis versat. An non in suo pectore coarctari terram mareque cognoverat, qui et per fidem sperans, et per infidelitatem fluctuans, dicebat: Credo, Domine, adiuva incredulitatem meam? Quid itaque est, quod et se credere asserit, et adiuvari in se incredulitatem quaerit, nisi quod coarctari in suis cogitationibus terram cum mari deprehenderat, qui et exorare certus iam per fidem coeperat, et adhuc incertus undas perfidiae ex incredulitate tolerabat?

Quod tamen occulta fieri dispensatione permittitur, ut cum mens iam surgere ad rectitudinem coeperit, pravitatis suae reliquiis impugnetur; quatenus haec ipsa impugnatio, aut resistentem exerceat, aut delectationibus seductam frangat. Recte itaque nunc dicitur: Si subverterit omnia, vel in unum coarctaverit, quis contradicet ei? vel quis dicere ei potest: Cur ita facis? quia nimirum divinum iudicium nec adversitate valet imminui, nec inquisitione cognosci, cum vel virtutes quas tribuerat subtrahit, vel has omnino non adimens, vitiorum concuti impugnatione permittit. Saepe namque in elationem cor tollitur cum laetis successibus in virtute roboratur, sed dum latentes motus audaciae in cogitatione conditor conspicit, se sibi hominem ostendendo derelinquit, ut eius mens derelicta quid sit inveniat, quae male in se secura gaudebat. Unde cum subverti omnia, vel in unum coarctari, dicerentur, protinus additur:

CAPUT XI.

Ipse enim novit hominum vanitatem, et videns iniquitatem, nonne considerat?

Ac si praemissa patefaciendo subiungeret, dicens: Quia tolerando succrescere vitia conspicit, iudicando dona confundit. Rectus vero in descriptione ordo servatur, cum prius nosci vanitas, et post considerari iniquitas perhibetur. Omnis quippe iniquitas, vanitas, non tamen omnis vanitas esse iniquitas solet. Vana namque agimus quoties transitoria cogitamus. Unde et evanescere dicitur quod repente ab intuentium oculis aufertur. Hinc Psalmista ait: Universa vanitas omnis homo vivens; quoniam per hoc quod vivendo ad interitum tendit, recte quidem vanitas dicitur, sed nequaquam recte etiam iniquitas appellatur, quia etsi de poena est culpae quod deficit, non tamen hoc ipsum culpa est, quod a vita percurrit. Vana sunt itaque, quae transeunt. Unde et per Salomonem dicitur: Omnia vanitas.

Apte autem post vanitatem protinus iniquitas subinfertur, quia dum per quaedam transitoria ducimur, in quibusdam noxie ligamur; cumque mens incommutabilitatis statum non tenet, a semetipsa defluens, ad vitia prorumpit. Vanitate ergo ad iniquitatem labitur, quae assueta rebus mutabilibus, dum ex aliis ad alia semper impellitur, suborientibus culpis inquinatur. Potest tamen et vanitas culpa intelligi, et iniquia is nomine reatus gravior demonstrari. Si enim aliquando vanitas culpa non esset, Psalmista non diceret: Quanquam in imagine Dei ambulet homo, tamen vane conturbatur; thesaurizat, et ignorat cui congreget ea; quia quamvis Trinitatis imaginem in natura servemus, vanis tamen delectationis motibus perturbati, in conversatione nostra delinquimus; ut modis nos semper alternantibus cupido concutiat, metus frangat, laetitia mulceat, dolor affligat. Ex vanitate ergo, ut et superius dictum est, ad iniquitatem ducimur cum prius per levia delicta defluimus, ut, usu cuncta levigante, nequaquam post committere etiam graviora timeamus. Nam dum moderari lingua otiosa verba negligit, more inolitae remissionis capta, audax ad noxia prorumpit; dum gulae incumbitur, ad levitatis protinus insaniam proditur; cumque mens subigere delectationem carnis renuit, plerumque et ad perfidiae voraginem ruit. Unde bene Paulus plebis Israeliticae damna conspiciens, ut imminentia ab auditoribus mala compesceret, curavit ex ordine transacta narrare, dicens: Neque idololatrae efficiamini, sicut quidam eorum, quemadmodum scriptum est : Sedit populus manducare et bibere, et surrexerunt ludere. Esus quippe potusque ad lusum impulit, lusus ad idololatriam traxit, quia si vanitatis culpa nequaquam caute compescitur, ab iniquitate protinus mens incauta devoratur, Salomone attestante, qui ait: Qui modica spernit, paulatim decidit. Si enim curare parva negligimus, insensibiliter seducti, audenter etiam maiora perpetramus. Et notandum quod non videri, sed considerari iniquitas dicitur. Studiosius quippe conspicimus quae consideramus. Deus itaque hominum vanitatem novit, iniquitatem considerat, quia nec minora delicta inulta deserit, et ad maiora ferienda sese intentius accingit. Quia igitur a levioribus malis incipitur, et ad graviora pervenitur; vanitas mentem obnubilat, iniquitas caecat. Quae nimirum mens, amisso mox lumine, tanto se altius per tumorem erigit, quanto et iniquitatis capta laqueis a veritate longius recedit. Unde et apte quoque quo vanitas cum iniquitate pertrahat, exprimit, cum repente subiungit:

CAPUT XII.

Vir vanus in superbiam erigitur.

Vanitatis quippe finis est, ut cum peccato mentem sauciat, hanc ex culpa audacem reddat; quatenus, sui reatus oblita, quae amisisse se innocentiam non dolet, iusto excaecata iudicio, simul et humilitatem perdat. Et fit plerumque ut, pravis desideriis serviens, a iugo se divini timoris excutiat, et, quasi in malorum perpetrationem iam libera, omne quod voluptas suggerit implere contendat. Unde cum vir vanus se erigere in superbiam dicitur, illico subinfertur:

CAPUT XIII.

Et quasi pullum onagri se liberum natum putat.

Per pullum quippe onagri omne agrestium genus exprimitur, quod, naturae dimissum motibus, loris dominantium non tenetur. Agri namque animalia in libertate habent et ire quo appetunt, et quiescere cum lassantur. Et quamvis insensatis animalibus homo longe sit melior; hoc tamen plerumque homini non licet quod brutis animalibus licet. Quae enim ad aliud minime servantur, eorum motus procul dubio nequaquam sub disciplina restringitur. Homo autem qui ad sequentem vitam ducitur, necesse profecto est ut in cunctis suis motibus sub disciplinae dispositione religetur, et quasi domesticum animal loris vinctum serviat, atque aeternis dispositionibus restrictum vivat. Qui ergo implere cuncta quae desiderat per effrenatam libertatem quaerit, quid aliud quam pullo onagri esse similis concupiscit, ut disciplinae hunc lora non teneant, sed audenter vagus per silvam desideriorum currat?

Saepe autem divina miseratio, quos prodire in effrenationem illicitae libertatis conspicit, obiectione properae adversitatis frangit, quatenus elisi discant quam reproba erectione tumuerant; ut iam flagelli experimentis edomiti, quasi iumenta domestica praeceptorum loris mentis colla subiiciant, et vitae praesentis itinera ad nutum praesidentis pergant. Quibus bene loris ligatum se noverat, qui dicebat: Ut iumentum factus sum apud te, et ego semper tecum. Unde et saevus ille persecutor ab agro perfidae voluptatis ad domum fidei deductus, rectoris sui calcaribus punctus, audiebat: Durum est tibi contra stimulum calcitrare. Restat ergo ut si esse iam similes pullo onagri nolumus, in cunctis quae appetimus nutum prius intimae dispensationis exquiramus, ut mens nostra in omne quod nititur, superni regiminis loro teneatur; et inde magis vota sua ad vitam impleat, unde vitae suae studia et contra propriam voluntatem calcat. Multa Sophar fortia protulit, sed quod meliori se haec loquitur nescit. Unde adhuc increpando subiungit:

CAPUT XIV.

Tu autem firmasti cor tuum, et expandisti ad eum manus tuas.

Firmati cor non hoc loco per virtutem dicitur, sed per insensibilitatem. Omnis namque a intus qui districtionis intimae considerationi se subiicit, ex eius protinus timore mollescit; eumque sagitta divinae formidinis penetrat, quia infirma viscera per humilitatem gestat. Quisquis autem pertinacia insensibilitatis obdurescit, quasi cor firmat, ne hoc iacula timoris superni confodiant. Unde quibusdam per prophetam Dominus misericorditer dicit: Tollam vobis cor lapideum, et dabo vobis cor carneum. Cor quippe lapideum tollit cum a nobis superbiae duritiam subtrahit, et cor carneum tribuit cum eamdem protinus nostram duritiam ad sensibilitatem vertit. Per manus vero, ut iam crebro docuimus, opera designantur. Cum culpa igitur manus ad Deum expandere est contra largitoris gratiam de virtute operum superbire. Qui enim in conspectu aeterni iudicis loquens sibi bona quae facit tribuit, ad Deum manus superbiens tendit. Sic profecto contra electos reprobi, sic contra catholicos haeretici semper effrenantur, ut cum obiurgare facta nequeunt, bonos reprehendere de factorum elatione moliantur, quatenus eos quos redarguere ex infirmitate actionis non valent, ex crimine tumoris accusent. Unde et ea bona quae exterius fiunt, nequaquam bona esse iam censent, quae quasi per studium turgidae cogitationis exhibentur. Qui saepe humilia tumentes increpant, et quod dictis suis semetipsos feriunt ignorant. Sed quia iustum virum Sophar hactenus reprehendendo corripuit, nunc velut docendo subiungit:

CAPUT XV.

Si iniquitatem quae est in manu tua abstuleris a te, et non manserit in tabernaculo tuo iniustitia, tunc levare poteris faciem tuam absque macula, et eris stabilis, et non timebis.

Omne peccatum aut sola cogitatione committitur, aut cogitatione simul et opere perpetratur. Iniquitas ergo in manu est culpa in opere, iniustitia vero in tabernaculo iniquitas in mente. Mens quippe nostra tabernaculum non incongrue vocatur, in qua apud nosmetipsos abscondimur, cum foris in opere non videmur. Sophar itaque, quia iusti viri amicus est, novit quod dicat; sed quia iustum increpat, haereticorum tenens speciem, proferre recte etiam quae novit ignorat. Sed nos calcantes hoc, quod ab eo tumide dicitur, pensemus eius verba quam vera sint, si recte dicerentur. Prius enim a manu iniquitatem subtrahi, et post a tabernaculo admonet iniustitiam abscidi, quia quisquis iam prava a se opera exterius resecat, necesse profecto est ut, ad semetipsum rediens, solerter sese in mentis intentione discernat; ne culpa, quam iam in actione non habet, adhuc in cogitatione perduret. Unde bene etiam per Salomonem dicitur: Praepara foris opus tuum, et diligenter exerce agrum tuum, ut postea aedifices domum tuam. Quid namque est praeparato opere agrum diligenter exterius exercere, nisi evulsis iniquitatis sentibus, actionem nostram ad frugem retributionis excolere? Et quid est post agri exercitium ad aedificium domus redire, nisi quod plerumque ex bonis operibus discimus quantam vitae munditiam in cogitatione construamus? Pene cuncta namque bona opera ex cogitatione prodeunt, sed sunt nonnulla cogitationis acumina, quae ex operatione nascuntur; nam sicut ab animo opus sumitur, ita rursus ab opere animus eruditur. Mens quippe divini amoris exordia capiens imperat bona quae fiant; sed postquam fieri imperata coeperint, ipsis suis exercitata actionibus discit, cum imperare bona inchoaverat, quantum minus videbat. Foris ergo ager excolitur, ut domus postmodum construatur, quia plerumque ab exteriori opere sumimus, quantam subtilitatem rectitudinis in corde teneamus. Quem bene Sophar servare ordinem studuit, cum prius auferri iniquitatem a manibus, et post a tabernaculo iniustitiam dixit, quia nequaquam plene animus in cogitatione erigitur, quando adhuc ab eo extrinsecus in opere erratur.

Quae si perfecte duo haec tergimus, ad Deum statim sine macula faciem levamus. Interna quippe facies hominis mens est, in qua nimirum recognoscimur, ut ab auctore nostro dirigamur. Quam scilicet faciem levare est in Deo animum per studia orationis attollere. Sed elevatam faciem macula inquinat, si intendentem mentem reatus sui conscientia accusat, quia a spei fiducia protinus frangitur, si intenta precibus necdum devictae culpae memoria mordetur. Diffidit namque accipere se posse quod appetit, quae profecto reminiscitur nolle se adhuc facere quod divinitus audivit. Hinc per Ioannem dicitur: Si cor nostrum non reprehenderit nos, fiduciam habemus apud Deum, et quidquid petierimus ab eo accipiemus. Hinc Salomon ait: Qui avertit aurem suam, ne audiat legem, oratio eius erit exsecrabilis. Cor quippe nos in petitione reprehendit cum resistere se praeceptis eius quem postulat meminit, et oratio fit exsecrabilis cum a censura avertitur legis, quia dignum profecto est ut ab eius beneficiis sit quisque extraneus cuius nimirum iussionibus non vult esse subiectus.

Qua in re hoc est salubre remedium, ut cum se mens ex memoria culpae reprehendit, hoc prius in oratione defleat, quod erravit; quatenus erroris macula cum fletibus tergitur, in petitione sua cordis facies ab auctore munda videatur. Sed curandum nimis est ne ad hoc rursus proruat quod se mundasse fletibus exsultat, ne dum deplorata iterum culpa committitur, in conspectu iusti iudicis ipsa etiam lamenta levigentur. Solerter quippe debemus meminisse quod dicitur: Ne iteres verbum in oratione tua. Quo videlicet dicto vir sapiens nequaquam nos prohibet saepe veniam petere, sed culpas iterare. Ac si aperte dicat: Cum male gesta defleveris, nequaquam rursus facias, quod in precibus iterum plangas.

Ut ergo ad precem facies sine macula levetur, ante orationis semper tempora debet sollicite conspici quidquid potest in oratione reprobari; talemque se mens et cum ab oratione cessat exhibere festinet, qualis apparere iudici in ipso orationis tempore exoptat. Saepe namque immunda quaedam vel illicita in animo versamus, quoties a precibus vacamus. Sed cum se mens ad studia orationis erexerit, earum rerum imagines reverberata patitur, quibus libenter prius otiosa premebatur; et quasi iam faciem anima ad Deum levare non sufficit, quia in se nimirum inquinata mente maculas pollutae cogitationis erubescit. Saepe curis mundi libenter occupamur. Cumque post haec studio orationis intendimus, nequaquam se mens ad coelestia erigit, quia pondus hanc terrenae sollicitudinis in profundum mersit; et in prece facies munda non ostenditur, quia cogitationis infimae luto maculatur.

Nonnunquam vero cor a cunctis excutimus, et illicitis motibus, etiam cum a prece vacat, obviamus; sed tamen quia nos culpas rarius committimus, aliena pigrius delicta relaxamus; et quo peccare noster animus sollicitius metuit, eo districtius hoc quod in se ab alio delinquitur abhorrescit. Unde fit ut eo inveniatur quisque tardus ad veniam, quo proficiendo factus est cautus ad culpam; et quo ipse excedere in alterum metuit, hoc quod in se exceditur punire durius exquirit. Sed quid hac doloris macula reperiri deterius potest, quae in conspectu iudicis charitatem non inquinat, sed necat? Vitam quippe animae quaelibet culpa polluit, servatus vero contra proximum dolor occidit. Menti namque ut gladius figitur, et mucrone illius ipsa viscerum occulta perforantur. Qui scilicet a transfixo corde, si prius non educitur, nihil in precibus divinae opis obtinetur, quia et vulneratis membris imponi salutis medicamina nequeunt, nisi ferrum a vulnere ante subtrahatur. Hinc est enim quod per semetipsam Veritas dicit: Nisi remiseritis hominibus peccata eorum, nec Pater vester qui in coelis est remittet vobis peccata vestra. Hinc admonet, dicens: Cum stabitis ad orandum, dimittite si quid habetis adversus alterum. Hinc rursum ait: Date, et dabitur vobis; dimittite, et dimittetur vobis. Hinc constitutioni postulationis conditionem posuit pietatis, dicens: Dimitte nobis debita nostra, sicut et nos dimittimus debitoribus nostris; ut profecto bonum quod a Deo compuncti petimus, hoc primum cum proximo conversi faciamus. Tunc igitur vere sine macula faciem levamus, cum nec nos prohibita mala committimus, nec ea quae in nos commissa sunt ex proprio zelo retinemus. Gravi namque mens nostra orationis suae tempore confusione deprimitur, si hanc aut sua adhuc operatio inquinat, aut alienae malitiae servatus dolor accusat. Quae duo quisque dum terserit, ad ea quae subnexa sunt protinus liber exsurgit. Et eris stabilis, et non timebis; quia nimirum tanto minus iudicem trepidat, quanto in bonis actibus solidius stat. Timorem quippe superat, qui stabilitatem servat, quia dum sollicitus studet peragere quod mansuete conditor imperat, securus etiam cogitat quod terribiliter intentat.

Sciendum praeterea est quod nonnulla bona sunt ad quae indefessi persistimus, et rursum nonnulla sunt a quibus continue deficientes labimur, atque ad haec magnis conatibus per intervalla temporum reformamur. In activa etenim vita sine defectu mens figitur, a contemplativa autem infirmitatis suae pondere victa lassatur. Illa quippe tanto firmius durat, quanto ad vicina se erga utilitatem proximi dilatat; haec tanto celerius labitur, quanto et carnis claustra transgrediens, super semetipsam ire conatur. Illa per plana se dirigit, et idcirco pedem operis robustius figit; haec autem quo super se alta appetit, ad se citius fessa descendit. Quod bene ac breviter Ezechiel insinuat, cum eorum quae viderat motus animalium narrat, dicens: Non revertebantur cum incederent. Et paulo post subiicit, adiungens: Et animalia ibant, et revertebantur. Sancta quippe animalia aliquando vadunt, et minime redeunt; aliquando vadunt, et protinus revertuntur, quia electorum mentes cum per collatam sibi activae vitae gratiam erroris vias deserunt, redire ad mala mundi nesciunt quae reliquerunt; cum vero per contemplationis aciem ab hac se eadem activa vita suspendunt, eunt et redeunt, quia per hoc quod diu persistere minime in contemplatione sufficiunt, sese iterum ad operationem fundunt; ut in his quae sibi iuxta sunt se exercendo refoveant, et super se rursum surgere contemplando convalescant. Sed dum haec eadem contemplatio more debito per temporum intervalla repetitur, indeficienter procul dubio et in eius soliditate persistitur, quia etsi infirmitatis suae pondere superata mens deficit, hanc tamen iterum continuis conatibus reparata comprehendit. Nec stabilitatem suam in ea perdidisse dicenda est, a qua etsi semper deficit, hanc et cum perdiderit semper inquirit. Sequitur:

CAPUT XVI.

Miseriae quoque oblivisceris, et quasi aquarum quae praeterierint, non recordaberis.

Mala vitae praesentis tanto durius animus sentit, quanto pensare bonum quod sequitur, negligit; et quo non vult praemia considerare quae restant, gravia aestimat esse quae tolerat. Unde et contra flagelli ictum cogitatio caeca conqueritur, et quasi infinita calamitas creditur, quae diebus cursu labentibus quotidie finitur. At si semel quisque ad aeterna se erigat, atque in his quae incommutabiliter permanent oculum cordis figat, prope nihil esse hic conspicit quidquid ad finem currit. Praesentis vitae adversa tolerat, sed quasi nihil esse omne quod labitur pensat. Quo enim se internis gaudiis robustius inserit, eo minus exterius dolores sentit. Unde Sophar nequaquam veritus ausu temerario docere meliorem, exhortatur ad iustitiam, et demonstrat quam nulla iusti oculis videatur poena. Ac si aperte dicat: Si degustas gaudium quod intus permanet, leve fit protinus omne quod foris dolet. Bene autem praesentis vitae miserias aquis praetereuntibus comparat, quia calamitas transiens, electi mentem nequaquam vi concussionis obruit, sed tamen tactu moeroris infundit. Nam madet quidem per cruorem vulneris, etsi a suae certitudine non frangitur salutis. Saepe autem non solum flagella atterunt, sed in uniuscuiusque iusti animo malignorum quoque spirituum tentamenta grassantur, ut exterius ex percussione doleat, et intus aliquatenus ex tentatione frigescat. Sed nequaquam gratia deserit, quae quo nos durius ex dispensatione percutit, eo amplius ex pietate custodit. Nam cum tenebrescere per tentationem coeperit, sese iterum lux interna succendit. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT XVII.

Et quasi meridianus fulgor consurget tibi ad vesperum.

Fulgor quippe meridianus in vespere est virtutis renovatio in tentatione, ut repentino charitatis fervore mens vigeat, quae iamiamque lumen sibi gratiae occubuisse formidabat. Quod adhuc Sophar subtilius aperit, cum subiungit:

CAPUT XVIII.

Et cum te consumptum putaveris, orieris ut lucifer.

Saepe namque tot tentamenta nos obsident, ut ipsa nos eorum numerositas pene ad lapsum desperationis inclinet. Unde plerumque cum mens in taedium vertitur, vix ipsa virtutis suae damna considerat; et tota dolens, sed quasi iam et a sensu doloris aliena, frangitur, et enumerare non valet quanto cogitationum tumultu vastatur. Ruituram se per momenta conspicit, eique ne arma repugnationis arripiat gravius moeror ipse contradicit. Circumductos quolibet oculos obscuritas obsidet, et cum visum tenebrae semper impediant, moesta mens nihil aliud quam tenebras videt. Sed apud misericordem iudicem saepe haec ipsa, quae adnisum quoque orationis aggravat, pro nobis subtilius tristitia exorat. Nam tunc moeroris nostri caliginem conditor conspicit, et subtracti luminis radios refundit, ita ut erecta protinus per dona mens vigeat, quam paulo ante decertantia vitia superbiae calce deprimebant. Mox torporis pondus discutit, atque ad contemplationis lumen post turbationis suae tenebras erumpit. Mox in gaudium profectus attollitur, quae inter tentamenta peius cadere ex desperatione cogebatur. Sine cogitationis certamine praesentia despicit, sine dubitationis obstaculo de ventura retributione confidit. Iustus ergo cum se consumptum putaverit, ut lucifer oritur, quia mox ut tenebrescere tentationum caligine coeperit, ad lucem gratiae reformatur, et in se ipso monstrat diem iustitiae, qui casurus paulo ante timuit noctem culpae. Recte autem lucifero iusti vita comparatur. Solem quippe praecurrens lucifer, diem nuntiat. Et quid nobis sanctorum innocentia nisi sequentis iudicis claritatem clamat? In eorum namque admiratione conspicimus quid de maiestate veri luminis aestimemus. Necdum Redemptoris nostri potentiam videmus, sed tamen virtutem illius in electorum suorum moribus admiramur. Quia igitur bonorum vita in consideratione sua oculis nostris vim veritatis obiicit, clarus ad nos lucifer ante solem venit.

Sciendum vero est quod haec quae ex tentationum spiritalium adversitate discussimus, iuxta exteriora quoque mala nil obstat intelligi. Sancti etenim viri quia summa medullitus diligunt, in infimis dura patiuntur; sed in fine gaudii lumen inveniunt, quod habere in hoc spatio percurrentis vitae contemnunt. Unde nunc per Sophar dicitur: Et quasi meridianus fulgor consurget tibi ad vesperum. Peccatoris enim lumen in die est obscuritas in vespere, quia in praesenti vita felicitate attollitur, sed adversitatis tenebris in fine devoratur. Iusto autem meridianus fulgor ad vesperum surgit, quia quanta sibi claritas maneat cum iam occumbere coeperit agnoscit. Hinc namque scriptum est: Timenti Deum bene erit in extremis. Hinc per Psalmistam dicitur: Cum dederit dilectis suis somnum, haec est haereditas Domini. Qui in huius quoque vitae adhuc certamine positus, cum se consumptum putaverit, ut lucifer oritur, quia foris cadens, intus innovatur; et quo magis exterius adversa tolerat, eo uberius virtutum lumine interius coruscat, Paulo attestante, qui ait: Sed licet is qui foris est noster homo corrumpitur, tamen is qui intus est renovatur de die in diem. Id enim quod in praesenti est momentaneum et leve tribulationis nostrae supra modum in sublimitate aeternum gloriae pondus operatur in nobis. Et notandum quod nequaquam cum consumptus fueris, sed cum te consumptum putaveris dicit, quia et quod videmus in dubietate est, et quod speramus in certitudine. Unde et isdem Paulus non se consumptum noverat, sed putabat, qui et in adversa tribulationum corruens ut lucifer resplendebat, dicens: Quasi morientes, et ecce vivimus; quasi tristes, semper autem gaudentes; sicut egentes, multos autem locupletantes. Sciendum quoque est quod bonorum mens quo duriora pro veritate tolerat, eo aeternitatis praemia certius sperat. Unde et apte subditur:

CAPUT XIX.

Et habebis fiduciam, proposita tibi spe.

Tanto namque spes in Deum solidior surgit, quanto pro illo quisque graviora pertulerit, quia nequaquam retributionis gaudium de aeternitate colligitur, quod non hic prius pia tribulatione seminatur. Hinc enim per Psalmistam dicitur: Euntes, ibant et flebant, mittentes semina sua; venientes autem venient in exsultatione, portantes manipulos suos. Hinc Paulus ait: Si commorimur, et convivemus; si sustinemus, et conregnabimus. Hinc discipulos admonet, dicens: Per multas tribulationes oportet nos introire in regnum Dei. Hinc sanctorum gloriam Ioanni angelus indicans, ait: Hi sunt qui venerunt de tribulatione magna, et laverunt stolas suas, et candidas eas fecerunt in sanguine Agni. Quia igitur nunc per tribulationem seritur, ut post gaudii fructus metatur, tanto maior fiducia mentem roborat, quanto hanc fortior pro veritate afflictio angustat. Unde apte protinus adiungitur:

CAPUT XX.

Et defossus securus dormies.

Sicut enim malis praesens securitas laborem, ita bonis praesens labor perpetuam securitatem parit. Unde et defossum se securum dormire iam noverat, qui dicebat: Ego enim iam delibor, et tempus meae resolutionis instat; bonum certamen certavi, cursum consummavi, fidem servavi; de reliquo reposita mihi est corona iustitiae, quam reddet mihi Dominus in die illa iustus iudex. Quia enim contra mala transeuntia sine defectu certaverat, de mansuris nimirum gaudiis sine dubietate praesumebat.

Quamvis defossus intelligi et aliter potest. Saepe namque, rebus transitoriis occupati, pensare negligimus per quanta peccamus; sed si, reducto considerationis oculo, a sinu cordis terrenae cogitationis agger excutitur, quidquid in mente latebat invenitur. Unde sancti viri animorum latebras perscrutari non desinunt, sese subtiliter indagantes, terrenarum rerum curas abiiciunt, et, effossis plene cogitationibus, cum nullo se reatu criminis morderi deprehendunt, velut in strato cordis apud se securi requiescunt. Latere quoque ab huius mundi actibus appetunt, semper sua considerant, et cum loro regiminis minime constringuntur, iudicare quae aliena sunt recusant. Effossi ergo securi dormiunt, quia dum sua intima vigilanter penetrant, a laboriosis se huius mundi oneribus sub quietis otio occultant. Unde et adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XXI.

Requiesces, et non erit qui te exterreat.

Quisquis praesentem gloriam quaerit, profecto despectum metuit. Qui semper ad lucra inhiat, semper videlicet damna formidat. Cuius enim perceptione reficitur, eius rei procul dubio et amissione sauciatur; et quo obligatus mutabilibus ac perituris inhaeret, eo longe in infimis ab arce securitatis iacet. At contra quisquis in solo aeternitatis desiderio figitur, nec prosperitate attollitur, nec adversitate quassatur; dum nil habet in mundo quod appetat, nihil est quod de mundo pertimescat. Hinc etenim Salomon ait: Non contristabit iustum quidquid ei acciderit. Hinc iterum dicit: Iustus quasi leo confidens absque terrore erit. Bene itaque nunc dicitur: Requiesces, et non erit qui te exterreat, quia tanto quisque a se plenius pavorem qui ex mundo est abiicit, quanto in semetipso verius mundi concupiscentiam vincit. An non absque terrore Paulus in corde requieverat, qui dicebat: Certus sum enim quia neque mors, neque vita, neque angeli, neque principatus, neque instantia, neque futura, neque fortitudo, neque altitudo, neque profundum, neque creatura alia poterit nos separare a charitate Dei, quae est in Christo Iesu Domino nostro? Cuius videlicet fortitudo charitatis, vera sanctae Ecclesiae voce laudatur, cum per canticorum Canticum dicitur : Valida est ut mors dilectio. Virtuti etenim mortis dilectio comparatur, quia nimirum mentem, quam semel ceperit, a delectatione mundi funditus occidit; et tanto hanc valentius in auctoritatem erigit, quanto et insensibilem contra terrores reddit. Sed inter haec sciendum est quod pravi cum recta praedicant, valde difficile est ut ad hoc quod taciti ambiunt non erumpant. Unde et Sophar protinus adiungit:

CAPUT XXII.

Et deprecabuntur faciem tuam plurimi.

Neque enim iusti viri idcirco se per innocentiae itinera arcta custodiunt, ut ab aliis exorentur. Sed sive haeretici, seu perversi quilibet, per hoc quod inter homines quasi innocenter vivunt, videri intercessores pro hominibus volunt; et cum sancta loquentes insinuant, quod ipsi appetunt, hoc aliis pro magno pollicentur; dumque coelestia praedicant, in suis repente sponsionibus ostendunt quod amant. Sed ne diu terrena pollicendo patescant quod sunt, ad verba rectitudinis citius recurrunt. Unde mox subditur.

CAPUT XXIII.

Oculi autem impiorum deficient, et effugium peribit ab eis.

Quod oculorum nomine vis intentionis exprimitur, per Evangelium Veritas attestatur, dicens: Si oculus tuus simplex fuerit, totum corpus tuum lucidum erit; quia videlicet si operationem nostram intentio munda praevenerit, quamlibet aliter hominibus videatur, interni tamen iudicis oculis mundum subsequentis actionis corpus ostenditur. Oculi ergo impiorum sunt intentiones in eis carnalium desideriorum. Qui idcirco deficiunt, quia aeterna negligunt, et sola semper transitoria praestolantur. Adipisci quippe terrenam gloriam cogitant, multiplicari rebus temporalibus exoptant, ad mortem quotidie cursu rerum labentium tendunt; sed cogitare mortalia mortaliter nesciunt. Carnis vita per momenta deficit, et tamen carnale desiderium crescit. Res habita instanti fine corripitur, et habendi anxietas non finitur. Sed cum mors impios subtrahit, eorum profecto desideria cum vita terminantur. Quorum scilicet oculi tunc superna ultione deficiunt, quia suo hic iudicio a terrena deficere delectatione noluerunt. Hos illorum oculos a iucunditate pristina claudi Psalmista conspexerat, cum dicebat: In illa die peribunt omnes cogitationes eorum; quia et aeterna mala nunquam cogitata reperiunt, et subito amittunt bona temporalia quae diu tractata tenuerunt. A quibus et omne effugium perit, quia eorum malitia ab animadversione districti iudicis quo se valeat occultare non invenit. Nam nunc iniqui cum tristitia aliqua, vel adversa patiuntur, effugii latebras inveniunt, quia ad voluptatem protinus desideriorum carnalium recurrunt. Ne enim paupertas cruciet, divitiis animum demulcent. Ne despectus proximorum deprimat, sese dignitatibus exaltant. Si fastidio corpus atteritur, antepositis epularum diversitatibus nutritur. Si quo animus moestitiae impulsu deiicitur, mox per interposita iocorum blandimenta relevatur. Tot ergo hic habent effugia, quot sibi praeparant delectamenta. Sed quandoque eis effugium perit, quia eorum mens, amissis omnibus, se solummodo et iudicem conspicit. Tunc voluptas subtrahitur, sed voluptatis culpa servatur, et repente miseri pereundo discunt quia peritura tenuerunt. Qui tamen quousque corporaliter vivunt quaerere nocitura non desinunt. Unde adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XXIV.

Et spes illorum abominatio animae.

Quid hic peccator totis cogitationibus sperat, nisi ut potestate caeteros transeat, cunctos rerum multiplicitate transcendat, adversantes dominando subiiciat, obsequentibus mirandus innotescat, irae ad votum satisfaciat, benignum se, cum laudatur, ostendat; quidquid gula appetit, offerat; ad hoc quod voluptas imperat, operis expletione concurrat? Bene ergo spes illorum abominatio animae dicitur, quia et ea quae carnales ambiunt spiritales quique iudicio rectitudinis aversantur. Nam quod peccatores voluptatem aestimant, hoc iusti procul dubio poenam putant. Abominatio igitur est animae, spes pravorum, quia nimirum spiritus deficit, ubi caro requiescit. Ut enim caro mollibus, sic anima duris nutritur: illam blanda refovent, hanc aspera exercent; illa delectationibus pascitur, haec amaritudinibus vegetatur. Et sicut carnem dura sauciant, sic spiritum mollia necant; sicut illam laboriosa interimunt, ita hunc delectabilia exstinguunt. Spes itaque carnalium, abominatio animae dicitur, quia inde in perpetuum spiritus interit, unde ad tempus caro suaviter vivit.

Sed haec Sophar recte diceret, nisi beatus Iob cuncta largius etiam vivendo praedicasset. At postquam sanctiorem monere de vita nititur, doctioremque se erudire sapientiae magisterio conatur, ipse dictorum suorum pondus levigat, qui, indiscretione interposita, omne quod loquitur destruit, quia liquorem scientiae pleno vasculo superfundit. Sic namque ab indiscretis opes scientiae, sicut a stultis saepe opes corporalis substantiae possidentur. Nonnulli enim, qui rerum terrenarum multiplicitate subnixi sunt, aliquando multa et habentibus tribuunt, ut ipsi haec cunctis largius habere videantur. Ita perversi, cum vera sapiunt, recta quaedam etiam rectioribus loquuntur; non ut alios audientes doceant, sed ut ipsi quanta doctrina polleant, innotescant. Praeire se quippe sapientia cunctos existimant, et idcirco nihil se cuilibet dicere ultra mensuras suae magnitudinis putant. Sic pravi quilibet, sic omnes haeretici superba voce meliores docere non metuunt, quia omnes se inferiores arbitrantur. Sed sancta Ecclesia elatos quosque ab aestimationis suae culmine revocat, et discretionis manu ad aequalitatis compagem reformat. Unde beatus Iob, qui eiusdem sanctae Ecclesiae membrum est, videns quod amicorum mens per verba prolatae eruditionis intumuit, illico respondit, dicens:

CAPUT XXV.

CAP. XII, Ergo vos estis soli homines, et vobiscum morietur sapientia.

Quisquis se praeire omnes ratione existimat, quid iste aliud quam solum se esse hominem exsultat? Et saepe contingit ut cum per tumorem mens in altum ducitur, in despectum omnium et sui admirationem sublevetur. In cogitatione etenim proprii favores oriuntur, sibique de singularitate sapientiae blanditur ipsa fatuitas. Pensat ea quae audierit, ac verba quae profert; et miratur sua, ridet aliena. Qui ergo solum se sapere aestimat, quid aliud quam hanc eamdem secum mori sapientiam putat? Nam quam adesse aliis abnuit, soli sibi hanc tribuens, profecto intra tempora suae brevitatis claudit. Pensandum vero est vir sanctus quanta discretione utitur, ut amicorum superbientium arrogantia comprimatur, cum protinus adiungit:

CAPUT XXVI.

Et mihi est cor, sicut et vobis, nec inferior vestri sum.

Quis etenim nesciat quantum beati Iob vita atque scientia amicorum eius scientiam excedat? Sed ut eorum superbiam corrigat, esse se inferiorem negat; et ne suae humilitatis limitem transeat, esse se superiorem tacet: nec preferendo se, sed conferendo, indicat quod de se hi qui sibi longe sunt impares discant, ut dum sponte inflectitur sapientia quae eminet, nequaquam se contra vires erigat scientia quae iacet. Quos bene mox ad aequalitatis sensum revocat, quia tumere valde quasi de singularitate magnitudinis pensat, cum subsequenter adiungit:

CAPUT XXVII.

Quis enim haec quae nostis ignorat?

Ac si aperte dicat: Cum cunctis sint nota quae dicitis, de dictorum scientia singulariter cur tumetis? Quia igitur elationem arrogantium ad aequalitatis communionem revocans, perfecta correptione redarguit, ad doctrinae nunc sententias erumpit, ut amici eius humiliati, prius discerent veritatis pondera, quam reverenter audirent. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXVIII.

Qui deridetur ab amico suo sicut ego, invocabit Deum, et exaudiet eum.

Saepe infirma mens, cum de bonis actibus aura humani favoris excipitur, ad gaudia exteriora derivatur, ut postponat quod intus appetit, et in hoc libenter resoluta iaceat, quod foris audit; ita ut beatam non tam fieri quam dici se gaudeat. Cumque laudis suae vocibus inhiat, quod esse coeperat relinquit. Inde ergo a Deo disiungitur, unde in Deo laudanda videbatur. Nonnunquam vero recto operi animus constanter innititur, et tamen humanis irrisionibus urgetur: miranda agit, et opprobria recipit; et qui exire foras per laudes potuit, repulsus contumeliis, ad semetipsum redit; et eo se intus robustius in Deo solidat, quo foris non invenit quo requiescat. Tota etenim spes in auctore figitur, et inter irrisionum convicia solus interior testis imploratur; atque afflicti animus fit Deo tanto proximus, quanto et a gratia humani favoris alienus: in precem protinus funditur, et pressus exterius, ad penetranda quae intus sunt mundius liquatur. Bene itaque nunc dicitur: Qui deridetur ab amico suo sicut ego, invocabit Deum, et exaudiet eum, quia bonorum menti dum pravi exprobrant, ostendunt quem suorum actuum testem quaerant. Quae dum compuncta sese in precibus accingit, inde intra se supernae exauditioni iungitur, unde extra se ab humana laude separatur. Notandum vero quam provide interponitur Sicut ego, quia sunt nonnulli quos et humanae irrisiones deprimunt, et tamen divinis auribus exaudibiles non sunt. Nam cum derisio contra culpam nascitur, profecto nullum virtutis meritum in derisione generatur. Baal etenim sacerdotes clamosis hunc vocibus implorantes, derisi ab Elia fuerant, cum dicebat: Clamate voce maiori, Deus enim est, et forsitan loquitur, aut in diversorio est. Sed haec eis irrisio ad virtutis usum non fuit, quia per culpae meritum venit. Provide ergo nunc dicitur: Qui deridetur ab amico suo, sicut ego, invocabit Deum, et exaudiet eum, quia illum facit humana derisio Deo proximum, quem ab humanis pravitatibus vitae innocentia servat alienum. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXIX.

Deridetur enim iusti simplicitas.

Huius mundi sapientia est, cor machinationibus tegere, sensum verbis velare, quae falsa sunt vera ostendere, quae vera sunt prudentia usu a iuvenibus scitur, haec a pueris pretio discitur, hanc qui sciunt caeteros despiciendo superbiunt; hanc qui nesciunt, subiecti et timidi in aliis mirantur, quia ab eis haec eadem duplicitas iniquitatis, nomine palliata, diligitur, dum mentis perversitas urbanitas vocatur. Haec sibi obsequentibus praecipit honorum culmina quaerere, adepta temporalis gloriae vanitate gaudere, irrogata ab aliis mala multiplicius reddere, cum vires suppetunt nullis resistentibus cedere, cum virtutis possibilitas deest, quidquid explere per malitiam non valet, hoc in pacifica bonitate simulare. At contra sapientia iustorum est nil per ostensionem fingere, sensum verbis aperire, vera ut sunt diligere, falsa devitare, bona gratis exhibere, mala libentius tolerare quam facere; nullam iniuriae ultionem quaerere, pro veritate contumeliam lucrum putare. Sed haec iustorum simplicitas deridetur, quia ab huius mundi sapientibus puritatis virtus, fatuitas creditur. Omne enim quod innocenter agitur, ab eis procul dubio stultum putatur; et quidquid in opere veritas approbat, carnali sapientiae fatuum sonat. Quid namque stultius videtur mundo quam mentem verbis ostendere, nil callida machinatione simulare, nullas iniuriis contumelias reddere, pro maledicentibus orare, paupertatem quaerere, possessa relinquere, rapienti non resistere, percutienti alteram maxillam praebere? Unde bene huius mundi dilectoribus ille egregius Dei sapiens dicit: Abominationes Aegyptiorum immolabimus Domino Deo nostro. Oves quippe Aegyptii edere dedignantur; sed quod abominantur Aegyptii, hoc Israelitae Deo offerunt, quia simplicitatem conscientiae, quam iniusti quique velut infimam abiectamque despiciunt, hanc iusti in virtutis sacrificium vertunt; et excolentes recti puritatem ac mansuetudinem Deo immolant, quam abominantes reprobi fatuitatem putant. Quae nimirum iusti simplicitas breviter, sed sufficienter exprimitur, cum protinus subinfertur.

CAPUT XXX.

Lampas contempta apud cogitationes divitum.

Quid hoc loco signatur nomine divitum, nisi elatio superborum, qui venturi iudicis respectum non habent, dum superbis apud se cogitationibus tument? Nam sunt nonnulli quos census per tumorem non elevat, sed per misericordiae opera exaltat. Et sunt nonnulli qui, dum se terrenis opibus abundare conspiciunt, veras Dei divitias non requirunt, atque aeternam patriam non amant, quia hoc sibi sufficere, quod rebus temporalibus fulciuntur, putant. Non est ergo census in crimine, sed affectus. Cuncta enim quae Deus condidit bona sunt; sed qui bonis male utitur profecto agit ut, quasi per edacitatis ingluviem, eo per quem vivere debuit pane moriatur.

Pauper ad requiem Lazarus venerat, superbum vero divitem tormenta cruciabant. Sed tamen dives Abraham fuerat, qui in sinu Lazarum tenebat; qui tamen auctori suo colloquens, dicit: Loquar ad Dominum meum, cum sim pulvis et cinis. Quid itaque iste divitias suas aestimare noverat, qui semetipsum pulverem cineremque pensabat? Aut quando hunc res possessae extollerent, qui de se quoque, earum videlicet possessore, tam abiecta sentiret?

Atque iterum sunt nonnulli quibus et res terrenae non suppetunt, et tamen apud se per fastum tumoris eriguntur. Hos et census ad ostensionem potentiae minime subvehit, et tamen morum protervia inter reprobos divites addicit. Quoscunque ergo sequentis vitae amor non humiliat, hoc in loco sacer sermo divites appellat, quia in iudicii quoque ultione non discrepant utrum rebus an solis moribus intumescant. Qui cum vitam simplicium in hoc mundo humilem abiectamque conspiciunt; elatis protinus despectibus irrident. Nequaquam quippe eis hoc exterius adesse considerant, ad quod ipsi totis conatibus anhelant. Quasi stultos ergo despiciunt qui scilicet ea non habent quae ipsi utique vel habendo, vel solummodo amando, moriuntur; et quasi mortuos deputant, quos nequaquam secum vivere carnaliter pensant. Qui enim ab huius mundi appetitu moritur, a terrenis mentibus profecto omni modo exstinctus aestimatur. Quod bene nostri miraculum Redemptoris signat, cum ab immundo spiritu hominem liberat, de quo nimirum scriptum est: Clamans, et multum discerpens eum, exiit ab eo; et factus est sicut mortuus, ita ut multi dicerent quia mortuus est. Iesus autem tenens manum eius, elevavit eum, et surrexit. Velut mortuus quippe ostenditur qui a maligni spiritus potestate liberatur, quia quisquis iam terrena desideria subigit, vitam in se carnalis conversationis exstinguit; et mundo mortuus apparet, quia possessore pravo, qui per immunda desideria se agitabat, caret. Quem multi mortuum dicunt, quia qui spiritaliter vivere nesciunt eum qui carnalia bona non sequitur exstinctum funditus arbitrantur.

Sed quia ipsi quoque derisores simplicium Christianitatis nomine censentur, reverentia religionis pressi, exhibere malum publicae irrisionis erubescunt. Unde fit ut apud se tumidi tacentesque derideant, quos abiectos valde atque infimos per simplicitatem putant. Bene ergo dicitur: Lampas contempta apud cogitationes divitum, quia superbi quique, dum pensare bona sequentia, ut superius diximus, nesciunt, pene nihil aestimant, quem non vident habere quod amant. Saepe namque contingit ut electus quisque, qui ad aeternam felicitatem ducitur, continua hic adversitate deprimatur, non hunc rerum abundantia fulciat, non dignitatum gloria honorabilem ostendat, nulla ei obsequentum frequentia suppetat, nulla hunc humanis oculis vestium pompa componat; a cunctis vero despicabilis cernitur, et huius mundi gratia indignus aestimatur. Sed tamen ante occulti iudicis oculos virtutibus emicat, vitae meritis coruscat, honorari metuit, despici non refugit; corpus continentia afficit, sola in animo dilectione pinguescit, mentem semper ad patientiam praeparat, et erectus pro iustitia, de perceptis contumeliis exsultat, afflictis ex corde compatitur, de bonorum prosperitatibus quasi de propriis laetatur, sacri verbi pabula in mente sollicitus ruminat, et inquisitus quodlibet eloqui dupliciter ignorat. Bene itaque iusti simplicitas et lampas esse dicitur, et contempta. Lampas, quia interius lucet; contempta, quia exterius non lucet. Intus ardet flamma charitatis, foris nulla gloria resplendet decoris. Lucet ergo et despicitur qui flagrans virtutibus abiectus aestimatur. Mentes quippe carnalium pensare bona non valent, nisi quae carnaliter vident. Hinc est quod David sanctum pater ipse despexerat, quem prophetae Samuelis oculis praesentare recusabat. Qui ad unctionis gratiam dum septem filios deduxisset, a propheta requisitus an numerum sobolis explesset, cum magna desperatione respondit: Est puer parvulus qui pascit oves. Quo deducto et electo, protinus audivit: Homo videt in facie, Deus autem perscrutatur cor. Lampas ergo David per innocentiam fuerat; sed tamen valde contempta, quia exteriora cernentibus non lucebat. Sciendum vero est quod iustus quisque aut temporalem gloriam non habet, aut hanc sub semetipso frangit, si habet, ut honori suo liber emineat, ne ei victus delectatione succumbat. Hinc enim est quod ille praedicator egregius ante humanos oculos apostolatus sui gloriam humiliaverat, qui dicebat: Non usi sumus hac potestate, cum possimus oneri esse ut Christi apostoli, sed facti sumus parvuli in medio vestrum. Eius vero auditoribus nimirum tumor divitum adhuc in corde remanserat, cum dicebant: Epistolae graves sunt et fortes, praesentia autem corporis infirma, et sermo contemptibilis. Quem enim talia dicere posse cognoverant, secum communiter vivere non posse iudicabant. Cumque eum et humilem vivendo cernerent, et altum sermone pensarent, sua eos elatio compulit ut quem per scripta timuerant per praesentiae verba despicerent. Quid igitur Paulus, nisi contempta lampas apud cogitationes divitum fuit, qui unde magisterium humilitatis exhibuit, inde a rudibus discipulis superbiae contumelias recepit? Horrendo etenim modo languor superbientium unde detumescere debuit excrevit, dum mens elata carnalium hoc quasi dedignabile repulit, quod magister imitabile ostendit. An contempta lampas non erat, qui, tot virtutibus emicans, tanta a persecutoribus adversa tolerabat? Legatione in catena fungitur, eiusque vincula in omni praetorio manifestantur, virgis caeditur, multisque ex genere, ex gentibus, periculis urgetur, lapidibus Lystris tunditur, pedibus extra urbem trahitur, quia exstinctus aestimatur. Sed usquequo lampas ista contemnitur? Usquequo despicabilis habetur? Nunquidnam fulgorem suum nullatenus exerit, et nunquam quanta claritate candeat ostendit? Ostendit plane. Nam cum lampas contempta apud cogitationes divitum diceretur, protinus additur:

CAPUT XXXI.

Parata ad tempus statutum.

Statutum quippe contemptae lampadis tempus est extremi iudicii praedestinatus dies, quo iustus quisque, qui nunc despicitur, quanta potestate fulgeat demonstratur. Tunc enim cum Deo iudices veniunt, qui nunc pro Deo iniuste iudicantur. Tunc eorum lux tanto latius emicat, quanto eos nunc manus persequentium durius angustat. Tunc reproborum oculis patescet quod coelesti potestate subnixi sunt qui terrena omnia sponte reliquerunt. Unde electis suis Veritas dicit: Vos qui secuti estis me, in regeneratione, cum sederit Filius hominis in sede maiestatis suae, sedebitis et vos super duodecim sedes, iudicantes duodecim tribus Israel. Neque enim plus quam duodecim iudices illa interni consessus curia non habebit; sed nimirum duodenario numero quantitas universitatis exprimitur, quia quisquis, stimulo divini amoris excitatus, hic possessa reliquerit, illic procul dubio culmen iudiciariae potestatis obtinebit, ut simul tunc iudex cum iudice veniat, qui nunc consideratione iudicii sese spontanea paupertate castigat. Hinc est enim quod de sanctae Ecclesiae sponso per Salomonem dicitur: Nobilis in portis vir eius, quando sederit cum senatoribus terrae. Hinc Isaias ait: Dominus ad iudicium veniet cum senioribus populi sui. Hinc eosdem seniores Veritas non iam famulos, sed amicos denuntiat, dicens: Non iam dicam vos servos, sed amicos meos. Quos nimirum Psalmista intuens, ait: Mihi autem nimis honorificati sunt amici tui, Deus. Quorum dum celsitudinem cordis aspiceret, mundi gloriam qua calce calcarent protinus addidit: Nimis confortatus est principatus eorum. Ac ne paucos esse crederemus, quos proficere usque ad summam tantae perfectionis agnoscimus, illico adiunxit: Dinumerabo eos, et super arenam multiplicabuntur. Quot itaque nunc pro amore veritatis sese libenter humiliant, tot tunc in iudicio lampades coruscant. Dicatur igitur recte: Lampas contempta apud cogitationes divitum, parata ad tempus statutum, quia uniuscuiusque iusti anima velut abiecta contemnitur cum degens inferius gloriam non habet, sed admirabilis cernitur dum desuper fulget.

Libet inter haec ad Redemptoris vias mentis oculos attollere, sensimque a membris ad caput venire. Ipse enim nobis lampas veraciter exstitit, qui, pro redemptione nostra in cruce moriens, tenebrosis nostris mentibus lucem per lignum fudit. Hac nos lampade Ioannes illuminari conspexerat, cum dicebat: Erat lux vera quae illuminat omnem hominem venientem in hunc mundum. Quam tamen apud cogitationes divitum contemptam vidit, cum paulo post subdidit: In propria venit et sui eum non receperunt. Huius lampadis flammas Herodes explorare voluit, cum eius miracula videre concupivit, sicut scriptum est: Erat enim ex multo tempore cupiens videre eum, eo quod audisset multa de illo, et sperabat signum aliquod videre ab eo fieri. Sed lampas haec ante eius oculos nullo radio lucis emicuit, quia ei qui se non pie sed curiose quaesierat nil de se mirabile ostendit. Inquisitus quippe Redemptor tacuit, exspectatus miracula exhibere contempsit, seseque apud se in occultis retinens, eos quos exteriora quaerere comperit, ingratos foris reliquit: magis eligens aperte a superbientibus despici, quam a non credentibus vacua voce laudari. Unde et protinus lampas ista contempta est, sicut illic subditur: Sprevit autem illum Herodes cum exercitu suo, et illusit indutum veste alba.

Sed contempta lampas, quae in terra irrisiones tolerat, de coelo iudicium coruscat. Unde hic apte subiungitur: Parata ad tempus statutum. De quo videlicet tempore per Psalmistam dicit: Cum accepero tempus, ego iustitias iudicabo. Hinc in Evangelio per semetipsam Veritas denuntiat, dicens: Tempus meum nondum advenit. Hinc Petrus ait: Quem oportet coelum suscipere, usque ad tempora restitutionis. Lampas ergo quae nunc contemnitur ad statutum tempus ventura praeparatur, quia ipse peccata in die ultimo iudicat, qui nunc peccantium derisiones portat. Et tanto tunc durius districtionem exerit, quanto nunc vocandis peccatoribus suam lenius patientiam sternit. Qui enim diu convertendos exspectat, non conversos sine retractatione cruciat. Quod per prophetam scilicet breviter insinuat, dicens:

Tacui, semper silui, patiens fui, sicut parturiens loquar. Ut enim iam praediximus, parturiens cum dolore eiicit hoc quod in intimis tempore longo gestavit. Qui ergo semper siluit sicut parturiens loquitur, quia venturus iudex, qui sine ultione diu facta hominum pertulit, quandoque cum fervore examinis, quasi cum dolore mentis, quantae animadversionis sententiam intus servaverit ostendit. Nemo igitur hanc lampadem, cum latet, despiciat, ne contemptores, suos, cum de coelo fulserit, exurat. Cui enim nunc non ardet ad veniam, tunc procul dubio ardebit ad poenam. Quia ergo per supernam gratiam vocationis tempus accipimus, dum adhuc licentia superest, eius iram, qui ubique est, mores in melius commutando, fugiamus. Solum quippe animadversio illa non invenit quem correctio abscondit.

Haec nos, largiente Domino, in duobus iam corporibus transcurrisse sufficiat. Quia enim sacri libri sequentia mysteriorum virtutibus extensa complecti breviter exponendo non possumus, ea necesse est ut aliis voluminibus reservemus, quatenus lector tanto ferventior ad legendi studium redeat, quanto ex lectionis quoque intercisione respirat.

LIBER UNDECIMUS.

In quo caput duodecimum, a versu sexto, decimum tertium, et decimi quarti quatuor priores versus, mutato tantisper stylo, exponuntur.

CAPUT PRIMUM.

1. Quae sint tota hac tertia parte exponenda et quo stylo. — Quamvis in prolixo opere esse culpabilis styli mutabilitas non debeat, ne quis tamen me ex locutionis meae immutatione reprehendat, in epistola libris praemissa causam reddidi cur tertiam hujus operis partem ad aliarum usque similitudinem minime emendando perduxi. Quibus scilicet exclusis, hoc quoque additur, quod ab eo versu, quo dicitur: Abundant tabernacula praedonum, ejusdem partis expositio incipit, et usque ad hoc, quod scriptum est: Dulcedo eorum vermis; disserendo pertingit. Quae nimirum tam multa sunt, ut in uno corpore comprehendi non possent, nisi sub magna brevitate dicerentur. Qui ergo ab aliis actibus vacat, legat caetera multipliciter dicta. Cui vero ad studiose legendum non vacat, hujus partis ei brevitas placeat, in qua non tam quae sentimus dicimus quam ea quae sunt dicenda signamus. Igitur quoniam in ea multa, sicut me loquente excepta sunt, ita dereliqui, immutationem styli lector meus aequanimiter accipe, quia et saepe eosdem cibos edentibus, diversitas placet coctionis. Sed quoties partes singulas ad legendum sumis, reducere semper ad memoriam eam, quam proposui causae originem, stude, quia et per beatum Job, qui dolens dicitur, passiones Domini ejusque corporis, id est sanctae Ecclesiae designantur, et amici ejus haereticorum tenent speciem, qui, ut saepe jam diximus (Maxime praefat., c. 6, n. 15), Deum dum defendere nituntur, offendunt. Qui dum ficte consulunt, sanctorum mentem fortiter affligunt; nec tamen per cuncta quae loquuntur a veritatis cognitione desipiunt, sed plerumque et stultis prudentia, et fictis vera permiscent, ut dum ex veritate aliquid praerogant, facile ad falsitatem trahant. Unde amici quoque beati Job modo despicabilia, modo autem mira sunt quae loquuntur; quae tamen sanctus vir aliquando reprobando convincit, aliquando vero approbando suscipit, atque ad usum rectitudinis pertrahit etiam quae ab eis recta, sed non recte proferuntur. Itaque inopiam suam despicientes despicit, atque in sterquilinio corpore positus, in quanto virtutum culmine apud se sedeat ostendit, cum nil esse praesentis vitae divitias memorat, quos abundare et reprobis narrat, dicens:

CAPUT II.

CAP. 12, VERS. 6. — Abundant tabernacula praedonum, et audacter provocant Deum, cum ipse dederit omnia in manibus eorum. 2. Quantus in Job divitiarum contemptus eluceat. — Facile est hominem tunc divitias despicere, cum habet; difficile vero est eas, cum non habet, viles aestimare. Unde patenter ostenditur quantus contemptus terrenarum rerum in beati Job cogitatione fuerit, qui tunc dicit nulla esse quae abundant reprobis, 367 quando omnia amisit. Ait ergo: Abundant tabernacula praedonum, et audacter provocant Deum, quia plerumque mali eo magis contra Deum superbiunt, quo ab ejus largitate et contra meritum ditantur; et qui provocari bonis ad meliora debuerant, donis pejores fiunt. 3. Quae injuste faciunt mali, Deus fieri juste permittit — Sed intelligendum nobis est quomodo praedones appellentur, dum protinus additur: Cum ipse dederit omnia in manibus eorum. Si enim praedones sunt, violenter abstulerunt, et dubium non est quia violentorum non sit adjutor Deus. Quomodo igitur ipse dat quod hi qui praedones sunt nequiter tollunt? Sed sciendum est quia aliud est quod omnipotens Deus misericorditer tribuit, aliud quod omnipotens Deus misericorditer tribuit, aliud quod iratus haberi sinit. Nam quod praedones perverse faciunt, hoc dispensator aequissimus fieri non nisi juste permittit; ut et is qui rapere sinitur caecatus mente culpam augeat, et is qui rapinam patitur jam in ejusdem rapinae damno pro alia quam ante perpetravit culpa feriatur. Ecce enim quidam in montis fauce constitutus insidiatur itinerantibus; sed is qui iter agit iniqua fortasse quaedam aliquando perpetravit, eique omnipotens Deus malum suum in praesenti vita retribuens, atque hunc insidiatoris manibus tradens, vel spoliari rebus, vel etiam interimi permittit. Quod ergo praedo injuste appetiit, hoc aequissimus judex juste fieri permisit; ut et ille reciperet quod injuste fecerat, et iste gravius quandoque feriatur, per cujus nequissimam voluntatem culpam omnipotens Deus in alterum juste vindicavit. Ille purgatur qui opprimitur; in isto reatus augetur, qui opprimit, ut vel de profundo nequitiae quandoque ad poenitentiam redeat, vel non revertens tanto gravius aeterna damnatione feriatur, quanto diu est in sua iniquitate toleratus. Cum illo ergo misericorditer agitur ut peccatum finiat, cum isto districte ut multiplicet, nisi ad poenitentiam recurrat. In illo mala purgantur dum vim sustinet, in isto cumulantur dum facit. Omnipotens itaque Deus quod fieri prohibet justum est ut fieri sinat, ut unde nunc exspectat, et non conversos diu tolerat, quandoque inde plus feriat. Bene ergo dicitur: Abundant tabernacula praedonum, et audacter provocant Deum, cum ipse dederit omnia in manibus eorum, quia quod iniqui tollunt, eis hoc ipse dat, qui illis ad rapinam posset obsistere, si misereri voluisset. 4. Praedones sunt qui de donis a Deo sibi collatis superbiunt. — Quod tamen intelligi de rebus quoque spiritalibus potest. Nam plerumque nonnulli doctrinae dona percipiunt, sed ex eisdem donis intumescunt, et magni prae caeteris videri volunt. Atque omnipotentem Deum provocare est de ejus donis inter proximos superbire. Qui etiam praedones non immerito vocantur, quia dum loquuntur quae non faciunt, in usum locutionis suae verba justorum tollunt. Sed quia haec ipsa verba superna eis gratia tribuit, quorum tamen vitam in pravis moribus relinquit, per semetipsos quidem praedones sunt, sed tamen bona quae habent divinitus acceperunt. Sequitur: VERS. 7 et 8. — Nimirum interroga jumenta, et docebunt te; volatilia coeli et indicabunt tibi. Loquere terrae, et respondebit tibi, et narrabunt pisces maris.

CAPUT III.

368 5. Quid per jumenta et coeli volatilia, quid per terram et pisces maris significetur. — Quid per jumenta, nisi sensu pigriores, quid per coeli volatilia nisi summa atque sublimia sapientes intelligere debemus? De jumentis quippe, id est sensu pigrioribus, scriptum est: Animalia tua habitabunt in ea (Psal. LXVII, 11). Et quia sublimia sapientes, in verbis nostri Redemptoris evolant, scriptum est: Ita ut volucres coeli veniant, et habitent in ramis ejus (Matth. XIII, 32). Quid vero per terram, nisi terrena sapientes? Unde et primo homini coelestia deserenti dictum est, Terra es, et in terram ibis (Genes. III, 19). Quid per pisces maris nisi curiosos hujus saeculi debemus accipere? De quibus Psalmista ait: Pisces maris, qui perambulant semitas maris (Psal. VIII, 9). Qui in magnis rerum inquisitionibus quasi in abditis fluctibus latent. Quid autem cuncta haec inquisita doceant, adjungit, dicens:

CAPUT IV.

VERS. 9. — Quis ignorat quod omnia haec manus Domini fecerit? 6. Deum omnium creatorem cuncta praedicant. — Ac si aperte dicat: Sive sensu tardiores, seu sublimia sapientes, sive terrenis actibus deditos, seu hujus mundi occupatos inquisitionibus requiras, cuncta haec creatorem omnium Deum fatentur, et de potestate ejus concorditer sentiunt, quamvis sub ea non concorditer vivant. Quod enim justus quisque etiam vivendo loquitur, hoc injustus plerumque de Deo vel sola voce compellitur fateri; fitque ut mali, auctori omnium, cui operibus resistunt, attestatione famulentur, quia quem impugnare moribus ausi sunt, creatorem omnium negare non possunt. Quod tamen intelligi etiam juxta solam speciem litterae utiliter potest, quia omnis respecta creatura quasi dat vocem attestationis propriae, ipsam quam habet speciem suam. Jumenta, vel volatilia, terram, vel pisces requirimus, dum consideramus quae nobis concorditer respondent, quod cuncta Dominus fecerit; quia dum nostris oculis suas species ingerunt, se a semetipsis non esse testantur. Eo ipso enim quod creata sunt, per ostensam speciem creatori suo quasi vocem confessionis reddunt, qui quia omnia condidit, qualiter etiam debeant administrari disposuit. Unde subditur:

CAPUT V.

VERS. 10. — In cujus manu anima omnis viventis, et spiritus universae carnis hominis. 7. Qui praestitit esse quod non erat, providit qualiter sit quod jam existit. Spiritus hominis duobus modis intelligitur. — Per manum quippe potestas exprimitur. Anima igitur omnis viventis, et spiritus universae carnis hominis, in ejus potestate est a quo est; ut ipse provideat qualiter sit, qui praestitit esse quod non fuit. Potest vero per animam omnis viventis jumentorum vita signari. Omnipotens autem Deus jumentorum animam usque ad corporeos sensus vivificat, hominum vero spiritum usque ad spiritalem intellectum tendit. In ejus ergo manu est anima omnis viventis, et spiritus universae carnis hominis, dum et in illo hoc praestat animae ut vivificet carnem, et in isto ad hoc vivificat animam, ut ad intelligendam perveniat aeternitatem. Sciendum vero est quia in sacro eloquio spiritus hominis duobus modis poni consuevit. Aliquando namque spiritus pro anima, aliquando pro effectu spiritali ponitur. Pro anima namque spiritus dicitur, sicut de nostro ipso capite scriptum est: Inclinato capite tradidit spiritum (Joan. XIX, 30). Si enim aliud spiritum quam animam evangelista diceret, exeunte utique spiritu, 369 anima remansisset. Pro effectu quoque spiritali spiritus dicitur, sicut scriptum est: Qui facit angelos suos spiritus, et ministros suos ignem urentem (Psal. CIII, 4). Angeli quippe, id est nuntii, in sacro eloquio nonnunquam praedicatores vocantur, sicut per prophetam dicitur: Labia sacerdotis custodiunt scientiam, et legem requirunt ex ore ejus, quia angelus Domini exercituum est (Mal. II, 7). Omnipotens ergo Deus angelos suos spiritus facit, quia praedicatores suos spiritales efficit. Hoc autem loco si anima omnis viventis ipsa corporis vita signatur, spiritu universae carnis hominis effectus intelligentiae spiritalis exprimitur. Sequitur:

CAPUT VI.

VERS. 11. — Nonne auris verba dijudicat, et fauces comedentis saporem? 8. Unius ejusdemque sapientiae quam diversa dona diversique inhabitationis modi. — Pene nullum latet quod quinque sensus corporis nostri, videlicet visus, auditus, gustus, odoratus et tactus, in omne quod sentiunt atque discernunt, virtutem discretionis et sensus a cerebro trahunt. Et cum unus sit judex sensus cerebri qui intrinsecus praesidet, per meatus tamen proprios sensus quinque discernit, Deo mira operante, ut neque oculus audiat, neque auris videat, neque os olfaciat, neque nares gustent, neque manus odorentur. Et cum per unum sensum cerebri omnia disponantur, quilibet tamen horum sensus aliud facere non potest, praeter id quod ex dispositione conditoris accepit. Ex istis ergo corporalibus et exterioribus, interiora et spiritalia colligenda sunt, ut per id quod in nobis publicum est transire debeamus ad secretum quod in nobis est et nosmetipsos latet. Intuendum quippe est quia cum una sit sapientia, alium minus, alium magis inhabitat; alii hoc, alii illud praestat, et, quasi cerebri more, nobismetipsis velut quibusdam sensibus utitur, ut quamvis ipsa sibimet nunquam sit dissimilis, per nos tamen diversa et dissimilia semper operetur, quatenus iste sapientiae, ille scientiae donum percipiat; iste genera linguarum, ille gratiam curationum habeat. 9. Verba sapientiae reprobi solum audiunt, electi etiam gustant. — Sed in his verbis beatus Job, quibus ait: Auris verba dijudicat, et fauces comedentis, saporem, etiam de electis ac reprobis aliquid videtur innuere, quia verba sapientiae, quae reprobi audiunt, electi non solum audiunt, sed etiam gustant, ut eis in corde sapiat quod reproborum non mentibus, sed solummodo auribus sonat. Aliud namque est nominatum cibum audire solummodo, aliud vero etiam gustare. Electi itaque cibum sapientiae sic audiunt, ut degustent, quia hoc quod audiunt eis per amorem medullitus sapit. Reproborum vero scientia usque ad cognitionem sonitus tenditur, ut quidem virtutes audiant, sed tamen corde frigido qualiter sapiant ignorent. Quibus videlicet verbis beatus Job amicorum suorum imperitiam, et eorum qui de doctrina sapientiae inflantur arrogantiam reprobat, quia aliud est de Deo aliquid scire, aliud vero hoc quod cognoscitur fauce intelligentiae gustare. Recte ergo dicitur: Nonne auris verba dijudicat, et fauces comedentis, saporem? Ac si aperte arrogantibus diceretur: Doctrinae verba, quae vobis usque ad aurem veniunt, mihi etiam per saporem intimum intelligentiae fauces tangunt. Quia vero infirma aetas, etiam cum recte sapit, ad praedicandum non debet incaute prosilire, recte subditur:

CAPUT VII.

VERS. 12. — 370 In antiquis est sapientia, et in multo tempore prudentia. 10. Sapientia per vivendi usum et experientiam confirmatur. — Illa enim dicta in sapientiae radice solidata sunt, quae per vivendi usum etiam actuum experimento convalescunt. Sed quia multis et longior vita tribuitur, et sapientiae gratia non confertur, recte adhuc in cujus judicio ipsa dona pendeant demonstratur, dum subditur:

CAPUT VIII.

VERS. 13. — Apud ipsum est sapientia et fortitudo; ipse habet consilium et intelligentiam. 11. Christus Dei sapientia et fortitudo. — Haec non incongrue de Unigenito summi Patris accipimus, ut ipsum esse Dei sapientiam et fortitudinem sentiamus. Nam Paulus quoque nostro intellectui attestatur, dicens: Christum Dei virtutem et Dei sapientiam (I Cor. I, 24); qui apud ipsum semper est, quia in principio erat Verbum, et Verbum erat apud Deum, et Deus erat Verbum (Joan. I, 1). Habet autem Deus consilium et intelligentiam: consilium videlicet, quia disponit sua; intelligentiam, quia cognoscit nostra. Potest quoque consilii nomine ipsa occulti judicii mora signari, ut quod aliquando tardius delinquentes percutit, non quia iniquorum culpa non conspicitur, sed ut damnationis eorum sententia, quae pro agenda poenitentia differtur, quasi tarda ex consilio prodire videatur. Quod ergo foris quandoque aperta sententia indicat, hoc apud omnipotentem Dominum ante saecula in consilio latebat. Sequitur:

CAPUT IX.

VERS. 14. — Si destruxerit, nemo est qui aedificet; si incluserit hominem, nullus est qui aperiat. 12. Deus humanam mentem destruit ab ea recedendo. Qui male agit conscientiam sibi carcerem facit. — Omnipotens Deus humanum cor destruit cum relinquit, aedificat dum replet. Neque enim humanam mentem debellando destruit, sed recedendo, quia ad perditionem suam sufficit sibi dimissa. Unde plerumque fit ut cum audientis cor exigentibus culpis omnipotentis Dei gratia non repletur, incassum exterius a praedicatore moneatur, quia mutum est os omne quod loquitur, si ille interius in corde non clamet, qui aspirat verba quae audiuntur. Hinc Propheta ait: Nisi Dominus aedificaverit domum, in vanum laborant qui aedificant eam (Psal. CXXVI, 1). Hinc Salomon dicit: Considera opera Dei quod nemo possit corrigere quem ille despexerit (Eccle. VII, 14). Nec mirum si a corde reprobo praedicator minime auditur, dum nonnunquam ipse quoque Dominus in his quae loquitur resistentium moribus impugnatur. Hinc est enim quod Cain et divina voce admoneri potuit, et mutari non potuit, quia exigente culpa malitiae, jam intus Deus cor reliquerat, cui foris ad testimonium verba faciebat. Bene autem subditur: Si incluserit hominem, nullus est qui aperiat. Quia omnis homo per id quod male agit, quid sibi aliud quam conscientiae suae carcerem facit, ut hunc animi reatus premat, etiamsi nemo exterius accuset? Qui cum, judicante Deo, in malitiae suae caecitate relinquitur, quasi intra semetipsum clauditur, ne evadendi locum inveniat, quem invenire minime meretur. Nam saepe nonnulli a pravis actibus exire cupiunt; sed quia eorumdem actuum pondere premuntur, in malae consuetudinis carcere inclusi, a semetipsis exire non possunt. Et quidam culpas proprias punire cupientes, hoc quod recte se agere aestimant, in graviores culpas vertunt; fitque modo miserabili ut quod exitum putant, hoc inclusionem inveniant. Sic videlicet reprobus Judas (Matth. XXVII, 5), cum mortem sibi contra peccatum intulit. 371 ad aeternae mortis supplicia pervenit, et pejus de peccato poenituit quam peccavit. 13. Vocanti Deo nemo resistit, relinquenti obviat nemo. — Dicatur ergo: Si incluserit hominem, nullus est qui aperiat, quia sicut nemo obsistit largitati vocantis, ita nullus obviat justitiae relinquentis. Includere itaque Dei est clausis non aperire. Unde et ad Moysen dicitur de Pharaone: Ego obdurabo cor ejus (Exod. IV, 21; VII, 3). Obdurare quippe per justitiam dicitur Deus, quando cor reprobum per gratiam non emollit. Recludit itaque hominem quem in suorum operum tenebris relinquit. Quasi enim aperire hanc inclusionem Isaac primogenito filio voluit, cum hunc fratri praeponere benedicendo conatus est (Genes. XXVII, 5). Sed filium quem pater voluit Dominus reprobavit, et quem Dominus voluit pater etiam nolendo benedixit (Ibid., XXV, 34), ut qui jam primogenita fratri pro esca vendiderat primogenitorum benedictionem non acciperet, quam ex cupidine gulae reliquisset: qui terrena ambiens, fugitiva sequens, haereditare cupiens benedictionem, reprobatus est. Non enim invenit poenitentiae locum, quanquam cum lacrymis inquisisset eam, quia videlicet fructum non habent lamenta, quae student cum gemitu desiderare peritura. Aperire itaque Isaac nec filio potuit, quem Deus omnipotens justo judicio in suae carcere malitiae inclusit. Sequitur:

CAPUT X.

VERS. 15. — Si continuerit aquas, omnia siccabuntur; si emiserit eas, subvertent terram. 14. Subtracta praedicatione aut gratia, cor arescit. — Si aqua scientia praedicationis accipitur, sicut scriptum est: Aqua profunda, verba ex ore viri et torrens redundans fons sapientiae (Prov. XVIII, 4), cum aqua continetur, cuncta siccantur; quia si scientia praedicatorum subtrahitur, eorum qui viridescere in spe aeterna poterant, corda protinus arefiunt; ut in desperata siccitate remaneant, dum, fugitiva diligentes, nesciunt sperare mansura. Sin vero aquae nomine sancti Spiritus gratia designatur, sicut Veritatis voce in Evangelio dicitur: Qui credit in me, sicut dicit Scriptura, flumina de ventre ejus fluent aquae vivae (Joan. VII, 38, 39); ubi statim evangelista subjunxit: Hoc autem dixit de Spiritu, quem accepturi erant credentes in eum; congruus in his sermonibus intellectus patet, quibus ait: Si continuerit aquas, omnia siccabuntur, quia si sancti Spiritus gratia ab audientis mente subtrahitur, arescit protinus intellectus, qui jam per spem viridescere in audiente videbatur. Quod autem non aquam, sed aquas memorat, pluralitatis appellatione, ad septiformem donorum spiritalium gratiam recurrit, quia quasi tot aquis unusquisque infunditur, quot donis repletur. De quibus apte subjungitur: Si emiserit eas, subvertent terram. 15. Afflante gratia, cor terrena sapiens subvertitur et mutatur. — Quid enim terra, nisi peccator accipitur, cui per sententiam dictum est: Terra es, et in terram ibis (Genes. III, 19)? Manet itaque terra immobilis, cum praeceptis dominicis peccator obedire contemnit; cum cervicem superbiae erigit, atque a veritatis lumine oculos mentis claudit. Sed quia scriptum est: Pedes ejus steterunt, et mota est terra (Habac. III, 6, sec. LXX), quia cum veritas in corde figitur, mentis immobilitas agitatur, si sancti Spiritus gratia superno munere juxta vocem praedicantis infunditur, statim terra subvertitur, quia peccatricis mentis duritia ab immobilitatis suae obstinatione 372 permutatur, ut tantum se postmodum praeceptis dominicis flendo subjiciat, quantum superbiendo prius contra Dominum cervicem cordis erigebat. Videas namque quod terra cordis humani, aqua divini muneris infusa, post libenter injurias toleret, quas prius vehementer irrogabat; post etiam sua tribuat, quae prius et aliena rapiebat; post carnem abstinendo cruciet, quae prius satietate carnis per mortifera turpitudinum oblectamenta defluebat; post etiam persecutores diligat, quae prius diligere etiam se amantes nolebat. Cum igitur mens humana, divino munere infusa, contra hoc quod consueverat agere coeperit, terra subversa est, quia deorsum missa est, quae prius eminebat, et sursum elevata est facies, quae prius in profunda premebatur. 16. Quod in Paulo converso mire elucet. — Libet in hujus rei exemplo unum e multis ad medium Paulum vocare; qui cum, acceptis contra Christum epistolis, Damascum pergeret, sancti Spiritus gratia in itinere infusus, ab illa sua protinus crudelitate mutatus est; et postmodum plagas pro Christo accepit, quas veniebat inferre Christianis; et qui prius carnaliter vivens, in mortem conabatur sanctos Domini tradere, gaudet postmodum pro vita sanctorum suae carnis sacrificium immolare (I Tim. I, 13). Illae crudelitatis ejus frigidae cogitationes versae sunt in ardorem pietatis; et qui prius fuit blasphemus et persecutor, humilis post factus est piusque praedicator (Act. IX, 1). Qui lucrum maximum putavit, se in discipulis Christum occidere, jam vitam suam Christum aestimat, et mori lucrum (Philip. I, 21). Emissa ergo aqua terra subversa est, quia Pauli mens, mox ut sancti Spiritus gratiam accepit, statum suae immobilitatis atque crudelitatis immutavit. Quod contra per prophetam Dominus contra Ephraim queritur, dicens: Ephraim factus est subcinericius panis, qui non reversatur (Osee VII, 8). Panis namque subcinericius super se cinerem portans, partem mundiorem deorsum premit, partemque superiorem tanto sordidiorem habet, quanto in ea cinerem tolerat. Mens itaque quae terrena cogitat quid super se aliud quam cineris molem portat? Sed si reversari voluerit, mundam faciem quam deorsum presserat superius reducit, cum cinerem quem portabat excusserit. Si igitur terrenarum cogitationum cinerem a mente excutimus, quasi panem subcinericium reversamus, ut illa nostra intentio jam postponi debeat, quam prius cogitationis infimae cinis premebat; et munda facies ad superiora veniat, ut recta nostra intentio mole jam terreni desiderii non prematur. Quod nequaquam agere possumus, nisi sancti Spiritus gratia perfundamur, quia videlicet omnipotens Deus si aquas emiserit, subvertent terram. Sequitur:

CAPUT XI.

VERS. 16. — Apud ipsum est fortitudo et sapientia. 17. In judicio reprobi prius condemnabuntur, quam electi gloria donentur. — Paulo superius dictum fuerat: Apud ipsum est sapientia et fortitudo; nunc autem dicitur: Apud ipsum est fortitudo et sapientia. Quia enim omnipotens Deus, cum pietatis suae mysterio homo factus est, prius mansuetudinis doctrinam protulit, et postmodum in judicio quantae sit fortitudinis ostendit, recte superius sapientia ante fortitudinem memoratur, cum de Patris Unigenito 373 dicitur: Apud ipsum est sapientia et fortitudo. Quia vero ad judicandum veniens in terrore suae virtutis apparebit, et repulsis reprobis, electis suis in regno perpetuo, qualiter sit sapientia Patris indicabit, recte in subsequenti sententia apud ipsum esse prius fortitudo, et post sapientia dicitur. In verbis itaque prioribus, quibus ait: Apud ipsum est sapientia et fortitudo, aperte indicat, quia hoc quod mansuetus edocuit qualiter credendum fuerit, in judicii virtute terribilis ostendet. In verbis vero subsequentibus, quibus ait: Apud ipsum est fortitudo et sapientia, luce clarius demonstrat, quod prius in judicio per virtutem reprobos destruit, et postmodum electorum mentibus aeterni regni perfecto lumine infulget. Sed quia ante extremi diem judicii judicare quotidie occultis dispositionibus facta mortalium non desistit, ad hoc quod nunc agitur reditur, cum subditur:

CAPUT XII.

VERS. 16, 17. — Ipse novit et decipientem, et eum qui decipitur. Adducit consiliarios in stultum finem et judices in stuporem. 18. Deus iniquorum dolos et scit in examine, et nescit in amore. — Cum omnis qui proximum suum decipere conatur iniquus sit, et iniquis Veritas dicat: Non novi vos, discedite a me omnes qui operamini iniquitatem (Matth. VII, 23), qualiter hoc in loco dicitur, quia Dominus decipientem novit? Sed quia scire Dei aliquando cognoscere dicitur, aliquando approbare, et scit iniquum, quia cognoscendo judicat (neque enim iniquum quempiam judicasset si nequaquam cognosceret), et tamen iniquum nescit, quia ejus facta non approbat. Et novit ergo quia deprehendit; et non novit, quia hunc in suae sapientiae specie non recognoscit: sicut de veraci quolibet viro dicitur quia falsitatem nesciat, non quia cum vel ab aliis falsum dicitur, hoc reprehendere ignorat, sed eamdem ipsam fallaciam et scit in examine, et nescit in amore, ut videlicet ipse hanc non agat, quam actam ab aliis damnat. Et fit plerumque ut nonnulli insidiis vacantes alienae vitae perversitatis suae laqueos tendant; et cum quis nesciens eisdem laqueis capi conspicitur, utrum haec divinitus videantur fortasse dubitatur; miranturque homines si haec Deus videat, cur fieri permittat; sed ipse novit decipientem et eum qui decipitur. Novit enim decipientem, quia plerumque anteriora ejus conspicit, et hunc justo judicio cadere etiam in alia peccata permittit. Novit decipientem, quia in manu suorum operum dimissum hunc ut ad pejora proruat deserit, sicut scriptum est: Qui nocet, noceat adhuc; et qui in sordibus est, sordescat adhuc (Apoc. XXII, 11). Novit quoque et eum qui decipitur, quia saepe committunt homines mala quae sciunt, et idcirco permittuntur decipi, ut cadant in mala etiam quae nesciunt. Quod tamen deceptis aliquando ad purgationem, aliquando vero ad ultionis initium fieri solet. 19. Stultus finis eorum qui bonum non bona intentione faciunt. — Adducit autem consiliarios in stultum finem, cum etiam bonum quodlibet non bona intentione faciunt, sed ad temporalis muneris retributionem tendunt. Si enim ipse summi Patris Unigenitus, quia per hoc quod factus est homo aeterna nuntiavit, magni consilii angelus est vocatus, recte consiliarios praedicatores accipimus, qui suis auditoribus consilium vitae praebent. Sed cum praedicator quisque ideo aeterna praedicat, ut temporalia lucra consequatur, profecto in stultum finem 374 deducitur, quia illo per laborem tendit, unde per mentis rectitudinem fugere debuit. 20. Eorum qui aliis praesunt nec invigilant, stupor. — Bene autem subditur: Et judices in stuporem. Omnes enim qui examinandis aliorum moribus praesunt recte judices vocantur. Sed cum is qui praeest, subjectorum vitam nequaquam sollicite discutit, nec quem qualiter corrigat agnoscit, in stuporem judex deductus est, quia qui judicare male acta debuit, nequaquam ea quae judicanda sunt deprehendit. Sequitur:

CAPUT XIII.

VERS. 18. — Balteum regum dissolvit, et praecingit fune renes eorum. 21. Deus mentis elationem peccatis carnalibus punit. — Qui membrorum suorum motus bene regere sciunt, non immerito reges vocantur. Sed cum de ipsa continentia elatione mens tangitur, plerumque omnipotens Deus ejus superbiam deserens, hanc in immunditiam operis cadere permittit. Regum itaque balteum dissolvit, quando in his qui bene regere sua membra videbantur, propter elationis culpam, castitatis in eis cingulum destruit. Quid vero in fune accipitur, nisi peccatum? Sicut per Salomonem dicitur: Iniquitates suae capiunt impium, et funibus peccatorum suorum constringitur (Prov. V, 22). Et quia in renibus carnis delectatio principatur, districtus conscientiarum judex, qui regum balteum dissolvit, fune praecingit renes eorum, quatenus dissoluto castitatis cingulo, scilicet eorum membris delectatio peccati dominetur, ut quos in occulto superbia inquinat, quam sint detestabiles etiam in publico ostendat. Sequitur:

CAPUT XIV.

VERS. 19. — Ducit sacerdotes inglorios, et optimates supplantat. 22. Qui aut curam sibi subditorum negligunt, aut aliud quam aeterna praemia requirunt, inglorii. — Magna sacerdotis gloria est rectitudo subditorum. Unde bene egregius praedicator discipulis dicit: Quae enim est nostra spes, aut gaudium, aut corona gloriae? nonne vos ante Dominum (I Thess. II, 19)? Sed cum sacerdotes vitam discipulorum negligunt, et nullum de eorum provectibus ante Dominum fructum ferunt, quid aliud quam inglorii dicuntur? quia ante districtum judicem nimirum gloriam tunc non inveniunt, quam modo in subditorum suorum moribus praedicationis studio non exquirunt. Bene autem dicitur: Et optimates supplantat, quia cum mentem regentium justo judicio deserit, haec internum retributionis praemium non requirit; et in eo supplantatur quo fallitur, ut pro aeterna gloria de principatu temporali gratuletur. Supplantantur igitur optimates, quia dum vera coelestis patriae praemia negligunt, in suis hic voluptatibus cadunt. Sequitur:

CAPUT XV.

VERS. 20. — Commutans labium veracium, et doctrinam senum auferens. 23. Deus veritatis verbum facientibus tribuit, non facientibus tollit. — Cum sacerdos non agit bona quae loquitur, ei etiam sermo subtrahitur, ne loqui audeat quod non operatur, sicut per Prophetam dicitur: Peccatori autem dixit Deus: Quare tu enarras justitias meas, et assumis testamentum meum per os tuum (Psal. XLIX, 16)? Unde etiam deprecatur, dicens: Et ne auferas de ore meo verbum veritatis usquequaque (Psal. CXVIII, 43). Perpendit namque quod omnipotens Deus veritatis verbum facientibus tribuit, et non facientibus tollit. Qui ergo hoc de ore suo non auferri petiit, quid aliud quam gratiam bonae operationis quaesivit? Ac si aperte diceret: A bono opere errare me non sinas, ne dum amitto ordinem bene vivendi, rectitudinem perdam loquendi. Et plerumque doctor qui docere audet 375 quod negligit agere, cum desierit bona loqui quae operari contempsit, docere subjectos incipit prava quae agit, ut justo omnipotentis Dei judicio, in bono jam nec linguam habeat, qui habere bonam vitam recusat, quatenus cum mens ejus terrenarum rerum amore incenditur, de terrenis rebus semper loquatur. Unde in Evangelio Veritas dicit: Ex abundantia cordis os loquitur: Bonus homo de bono thesauro profert bona, et malus homo de malo thesauro profert mala (Matth. XII, 34; Luc. VI, 45). Hinc etiam Joannes ait: Ipsi de mundo sunt, ideo de mundo loquuntur. Bene ergo dicitur: Commutans labium veracium, et doctrinam senum auferens (I Joan. IV, 5), quia hi qui prius coelestia praedicando veraces erant, dum temporalia diligentes, ad terrena corruunt, labium veracium commutatur, et senum doctrina tollitur, quia diligentes temporalia priorum suorum praecepta minime sequuntur, ut locum regiminis quasi ad fructum voluptatis teneant, non ad usum laboris. 24. Judaei Christum quem venturum dixerant, negarunt praesentem. — Quod tamen apertius de Judaeis valet intelligi, qui ante incarnationem Domini veraces fuerunt, quia hunc venturum esse crediderunt, atque nuntiaverunt; sed postquam in carne apparuit, hunc esse negaverunt. Labium itaque veracium mutatum est, quia quem venturum dixerant negaverunt praesentem. Et doctrina senum ablata est, quia nequaquam ea credendo secuti sunt quae patres suos praedixisse meminerunt. Unde etiam Elia veniente promittitur quod reducat corda filiorum ad patres eorum (Malac. IV, 6), ut doctrina senum quae nunc a Judaeorum corde ablata est tunc miserante Domino redeat, quando hoc intelligere de Domino coeperint filii quod praedicaverunt patres. Sin vero senes eosdem quoque Judaeos accipimus, qui, suadente perfidia, Veritatis verbo contraire conati sunt, doctrina senum ablata est postquam hanc Ecclesia ex gentibus videlicet juvencula accepit, quae per Psalmistam dicit: Super seniores intellexi (Psal. CXVIII, 100). Quam quia operando tenuit, qualiter super seniores intellexerit ostendit, dum protinus subdit, dicens: Quia mandata tua exquisivi. Quia enim studuit operando implere quod didicit, accepit intelligere quod doceret. Unde adhuc apte subditur:

CAPUT XVI.

VERS. 21. — Effundit despectionem super principes, et eos qui oppressi fuerant relevans. 25. Judaei propter infidelitatem despecti. Gentiles ob fidem a casu erecti. — Cum enim Judaeorum populus in legis mandato permaneret, et cuncta gentilitas nulla Dei praecepta cognosceret, et illi per fidem principari videbantur, et isti in profundo pressi jacuerunt per infidelitatem. Sed cum incarnationis Dominicae mysterium Judaea negavit, gentilitas credidit, et principes in despectionem ceciderunt, et hi qui oppressi in culpa perfidiae fuerant in verae fidei libertatem levati sunt. Hunc vero Israelitarum casum longe ante Jeremias intuens ait: Factus est Dominus velut inimicus, praecipitavit Israel, praecipitavit omnia moenia ejus, dissipavit munitiones ejus (Thren. II, 5). Moenia autem in urbibus pro ornamento sunt, munitiones vero in defensionem. Et alia sunt dona quae nos muniunt, alia quae ornant. Prophetica quippe doctrina, genera linguarum, curationum virtus, quasi quaedam moenia mentis sunt. Quae etsi quisque non habeat, stare munitus per fidem et justitiam 376 potest, quamvis ornatus virtutum altitudine minime esse videatur. Spes vero, fides, et charitas, non nostra moenia, sed munitiones sunt; quae si habere negligimus, hostilibus insidiis patemus. De Judaea ergo, quia prophetiam atque doctrinam, vel miraculorum signa abstulit, moenia praecipitavit. Quia vero spem, fidem atque charitatem propter ejus duritiam auferri permisit, munitiones ejus dissipare studuit. Rectus vero ordo servatus est, ut prius moenia, et post munitiones dissipatae dicerentur, quia cum peccatrix anima relinquitur, prius ab ea virtutum dona, quae ad manifestationem spiritus data sunt, et postmodum spei, fidei atque charitatis fundamenta destruuntur. Quae cuncta Dominus a perfidis ablata, gentilitati tribuit, atque ex his quae infidelibus abstulit mentes fidelium ornavit. Unde scriptum est: Et speciei domus dividere spolia (Psal. LXVII, 13). Cum enim virtutum spolia a Judaeis abstulit, domui cordis gentilium, quam per fidem inhabitare dignatus est, speciem donorum dedit. Quod videlicet gestum est, cum verba Dei, et Judaeorum populus ad solam litteram quae occidit acciperet, et conversa gentilitas per spiritum qui vivificat penetraret. Unde mox subditur:

CAPUT XVII.

VERS. 22. — Qui revelat profunda de tenebris, et producit in lucem umbram mortis. 26. Christus occulta revelavit, et in lucem umbram mortis mutavit. — Cum enim quaeque mystica de occultis prophetarum verbis a credentibus agnoscuntur, quid aliud quam profunda de tenebris revelantur? Unde ipsa quoque Veritas discipulis in parabolis loquens, ait: Quod dico vobis in tenebris, dicite in lumine (Matth. X, 27). Cum enim mysticos allegoriarum nodos per explanationem solvimus, in lumine dicimus quod in tenebris audivimus. Umbra autem mortis erat legis duritia, quae unumquemque peccantem morte corporis puniri sanciebat. Sed postquam Redemptor noster asperitatem legalis sanctionis per mansuetudinem temperavit, nec jam pro culpa mortem carnis inferri constituit, sed mors spiritus quantum timenda esset indicavit, in lucem procul dubio umbram mortis produxit. Ista enim mors in qua caro separatur ab anima umbra illius mortis est in qua anima separatur a Deo. In lucem ergo umbra mortis producitur, cum, intellecta morte spiritus, mors carnis minime timetur. Quod tamen et aliter intelligi potest. Principes etenim non immerito vocantur qui magno consilii judicio suis cogitationibus semper principantur, omnesque stultos motus potestate sapientiae comprimunt. Sed saepe contingit ut in occulto animus de ipsa sua sapientia in elationis fastum sublevetur, et sub eis vitiis corruat, de quibus se victorem fuisse gaudebat. Recte ergo dicitur: Effundit despectionem super principes. Sed quia nonnunquam hi qui in vitiis jacere videntur ad poenitentiae lamenta currunt, seque contra culpas quibus subjacebant erigunt, apte subjungitur: Et eos qui oppressi fuerant, relevans. Nonnulli enim superno illustrati munere, aspiciunt in quanta peccatorum suorum turpitudine jacent, factorum maculas lacrymis lavant, et sub se postmodum carnis suae motus deprimunt, a quibus ante premebantur. 377 27. Magna Dei dispensatione omnia hic habentur incerta. — Quod nimirum magna omnipotentis Dei dispensatione agitur, ut videlicet in hac vita omnia habeantur incerta, et nullus ex habita castitate superbiat, quia effundit despectionem super principes. Nullus ex vitiorum suorum depressione desperet, quia eos qui oppressi fuerant relevat. Et quoniam cum haec aguntur ex occultis Dei consiliis super unumquemque sententia aperta producitur, recte subjungitur: Et revelat profunda de tenebris. 28. Deus in occultis suis judiciis omnia videt nec videtur. — Profunda enim de tenebris Dominus revelat quando apertam sententiam ex occultis suis consiliis indicat, ut de unoquoque quae sentiat ostendat. Quia enim videt nunc Creator omnia, et ipse in consiliis non videtur, recte de illo per Psalmistam dicitur: Posuit tenebras latibulum suum (Psal. XVII, 12). Sed quasi de istis tenebris ad lumen exit, quando quid de uniuscujusque actibus sentiat ostendit. Et quia cum is qui peccatorum suorum pondere premebatur ad rectitudinis statum ducitur, prius ipsam mortem conspicit, in qua et deficere consueverat, et hanc considerare nesciebat, recte additur: Et producit in lucem umbram mortis. Umbra enim mortis est prava operatio, quae de imitatione antiqui hostis, quasi de corporis lineamentis exprimitur. De quo etiam sub cujusdam significatione dicitur: Et nomen illi mors (Apoc. VI, 8). Et plerumque ejus maligna cogitatio mentes hominum latet, atque per hoc quod nescitur amplius praevalet. Umbra ergo mortis in lucem producitur dum sanctorum mentibus maligna operatio antiqui hostis, ut destrui possit, aperitur. Sequitur: VERS. 23. — Qui multiplicat gentes, et perdit eas, et subversas in integrum restituit. 29. Occultis Dei judiciis alii cadunt, alii resurgunt. — Intelligi fortasse valet quoniam gentes Dominus multiplicat et perdit, quia nascuntur quotidie morituri; et subversas in integrum restituit, quia resurgent qui fuerint mortui. Quod tamen melius accipimus si hoc qualiter in earum mente agitur sentiamus. Multiplicat enim gentes et perdit, quia eas et per fecunditatem sobolis extendit, et tamen in propria infidelitate derelinquit. Sed subversas in integrum restituit, quia quas in infidelitatis casu reliquerat quandoque ad fidei statum reducit. Quibus videlicet in mentis integritate restitutis, antiquus ille populus, qui fidelis Deo esse videbatur, reprobatus, corde repulsus est, ut sua perfidia deceptus contra ipsum post insurgeret quem ante praedicavit. Sequitur:

CAPUT XIX.

VERS. 24, 25. — Qui immutat cor principum populi terrae, et decipit eos, ut frustra incedant per invium. Palpabunt quasi in tenebris, et non in luce, et errare eos faciet quasi ebrios. 30. Judaeorum obcaecatio erga Christum humana quidem patientem, sed divina ostendentem. — Cor enim principum terrae immutatum est cum in Judaea summi sacerdotes et seniores populi illi conabantur suo consilio obsistere quem prius venturum esse praedicabant. Cumque ejus nomen persequendo molirentur exstinguere, decepti sua malitia, incedere per invium frustra conabantur, quia crudelitati eorum patere via non poterat contra auctorem omnium, miracula cernebant, virtute terrebantur; sed, credere renuentes, adhuc signa quaerebant, cum dicerent: Quod ergo 378 tu facis signum, ut videamus et credamus tibi? quid operaris (Joan. VI, 30)? Bene itaque dicitur: Palpabunt quasi in tenebris, et non in luce. Qui enim inter tot aperta miracula trepidat, quasi in tenebris palpat, quia quod tangit non videt. Omnis vero qui errat, nunc huc, nunc illuc ducitur. Et quia aliquando ostendebantur credere, cum dicerent: Nisi esset hic a Deo, non poterat facere quidquam (Joan. IX, 33); aliquando vero hunc a Deo esse negabant, cum despicientes dicerent: Nonne hic est fabri filius? nonne mater ejus dicitur Maria, et fratres ejus Jacobus, et Joseph, et Simon, et Judas, et sorores ejus nonne omnes apud nos sunt (Matth. XIII, 55)? recte subjungitur: Et errare eos faciet quasi ebrios. Videbant quippe eum et suscitare mortuos, et tamen esse mortalem. Quis non crederet Deum, quem conspiciebant suscitare mortuum? Sed rursum cum hunc mortalem conspicerent, despiciebant credere hunc esse immortalem Deum. Per hoc ergo quod omnipotens Deus talem se eorum oculis exhibuit, qui posset et divina ostendere, et humana pati, errare eos quasi ebrios fecit, ut eorum superbia, quae incarnationis ejus mysterium despicere maluit quam sequi, et contra humanitatem ejus se extolleret, et intus lucentem Deitatis ejus potentiam miraretur. Quae cuncta quia beati Job oculis praesentia per prophetiae spiritum facta sunt, recte subjungitur:

CAPUT XX.

CAP. XIII. VERS. 1. — Ecce omnia. 31. Job prophetiae spiritu pollebat. — In illo enim quae secutura erant videbat assistentia, cui nec futura veniunt, nec praeterita discedunt, sed cuncta simul ante ejus oculos assistunt. Et quia ea ipsa quae ventura erant, alia esse vidit in operibus, alia in dictis, recte subjungitur, — IBID.: — Et vidit oculus meus, et audivit auris mea. Sed utilitatem dicta non habent, si intellectu carent. Unde apte subditur, — IBID.: — Et intellexi singula. Cum enim aliquid ostenditur, vel auditur, si intellectus non tribuitur, prophetia minime est. Vidit namque Pharao per somnium quae erant Aegypto ventura (Genes. XLI, 2, seq.); sed quia nequivit intelligere quod vidit, propheta non fuit. Aspexit Balthasar rex articulos manus scribentis in pariete (Dan. V, 5); sed propheta non fuit, quia intellectum rei quam viderat non accepit. Ut igitur beatus Job prophetiae spiritum se habere testetur, non solum vidisse se et audisse sed etiam intellexisse omnia asserit. De quo intellectu quia non extollitur, subjuncta ejus verba testantur cum ait:

CAPUT XXI.

VERS. 2. — Secundum scientiam vestram et ego novi, nec inferior vestri sum. 32. Hoc accepto dono non intumuit. — Quibus videlicet dictis innotuit quantae humilitatis fuit qui se eis inferiorem negat, quorum longe vitam sancte vivendo transcenderat. Nam et secundum eorum scientiam se nosse confirmat, qui, sciendo coelestia, eorum terrenas cogitationes per prophetiae quoque spiritum transibat. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXII.

VERS. 3. — Sed tamen ad Omnipotentem loquar, et disputare cum Deo cupio. 33. Qui Deo in prece nunc familiaris est, cum ipso postmodum judicabit. — Cum Omnipotente loquimur dum ejus misericordiam deprecamur; cum eo vero disputamus dum, nos illius justitiae conjungentes, facta nostra subtili indagatione discutimus. Vel certe 379 cum Deo disputare est eum qui hic ejus praeceptis paruit cum illo postmodum ad judicandos populos judicem venire, sicut cuncta relinquentibus praedicatoribus dicitur: Vos qui secuti estis me, in regeneratione cum sederit Filius hominis in sede majestatis suae, sedebitis et vos super duodecim thronos, judicantes duodecim tribus Israel (Matth. XIX, 28). Unde et per Isaiam Dominus dicit: Eripite injuriam accipientem, judicate pupillo, et justificate viduam, et venite, disputemus (Isai. I, 17). Rectum quippe est ut cum Deo de pupillis in judicio disputent qui ad verba Dei praesens saeculum perfecte derelinquunt. Loqui ergo ad orationem, disputare ad judicium pertinet. Vir igitur sanctus, modo ad Omnipotentem loquitur, ut cum Omnipotente postmodum disputet, quia ille cum Deo postmodum judex venit, qui hic ei modo in prece familiaris exstiterit. Sed sancta Ecclesia, cujus saepe jam beatum Job speciem tenere praediximus (Maxime in praefat., c. 6 et seq.), non solum tunc de iniquis judicat, cum ultimi judicii dies advenerit, sed nunc etiam de cunctis prave agentibus, vel stulte sentientibus judicare non cessat. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT XXIII.

VERS. 4. — Prius vos ostendens fabricatores mendacii, et cultores perversorum dogmatum. 34. Haeretici fabricatores mendacii. — Quibus videlicet verbis aperte ostenditur quod amici ejus quasi ex haereticorum specie sancti viri judiciis adversantur. Liquet enim quia catholicorum figuram non teneant qui cultores perversorum dogmatum vocantur. Qua in re hoc quoque oportet intendi quod mendacii fabricatores dicuntur. Sicut enim aedificium lapidibus, ita mendacium sermonibus fabricatur. Ubi enim non dolosa locutio, sed sensus veritatis est, quasi munita moles non ex fabrica, sed ex natura consurgit. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXIV.

VERS. 5. — Atque utinam taceretis, ut putaremini esse sapientes. 35. Occultandae stultitiae utile silentium. — Sicut clausa janua in domo quae intus membra lateant ignoratur, sic plerumque stultus, si tacuerit, utrum sapiens sit, an stultus, absconditur, si tamen nulla alia opera prodeant quae sensum etiam tacentis loquantur. Sanctus igitur vir amicos suos aspiciens velle apparere quod non erant, eos ad tacendum admonuit, ne possent apparere quod erant. Unde et per Salomonem dicitur: Stultus, si tacuerit, sapiens putabitur (Prov. XVII, 28). Sed quia stultus, cum loquitur, per hoc quod sua infert sapientium verba pensare non sufficit, recte adhuc, postquam silentium indixit, adjungit:

CAPUT XXV.

VERS. 6. — Audite ergo correptiones meas, et judicium labiorum meorum attendite. 36. Stultis correptio necessaria. — Bene autem prius correptionem, et postmodum judicium intulit, quia nisi per correptionem prius tumor stulti deprimatur, nequaquam per intelligentiam judicium justi cognoscitur. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXVI.

VERS. 7. — Nunquid Deus indiget vestro mendacio, ut pro illo loquamini dolos? 37. Veritas fulciri non quaerit auxilio falsitatis. — Deus mendacio non eget, quia veritas fulciri non quaerit auxilio falsitatis. Haeretici autem, quia ea quae prave de Deo intelligunt ex veritate tueri non possunt, quasi ad probandum radium luminis umbram falsitatis requirunt. Et pro eo 380 dolos loquuntur, dum infirmas mentes in intellectu illius stulta seductione decipiunt. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXVII.

VERS. 8. — Nunquid faciem ejus accipitis, et pro Deo judicare nitimini? 38. Stulti tanto severius de alienis judicant, quanto sua profundius ignorant. — Stulti cum prudentium facta conspiciunt, haec eis omnia reprehensibilia esse videntur; qui, suae imperitiae atque infirmitatis obliti, tanto intentius de alienis judicant, quanto sua profundius ignorant. At contra justi cum pravorum facta redarguunt, semper suae infirmitatis conscii, eos etsi exterius saeviendo, tamen interius compatiendo reprehendunt, quia illius solius est peccata hominum sine compassione discutere, qui ex naturae suae omnipotentia ignorat peccare. Quia igitur amici beati Job ita ejus facta reprehenderant ac si in se ipsi reprehensibile nihil haberent, recte nunc dicitur: Nunquid faciem ejus accipitis, et pro Deo judicare nitimini? Faciem quippe ejus accipere est auctoritatem illius in judicio sumere; et quasi pro Deo judicare nititur, qui, cum infirma quaeque in altero reprehendit, apud se introrsus per compassionem non infirmatur. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXVIII.

VERS. 9. — Aut placebit ei quem celare nihil potest; aut decipietur, ut homo, vestris fraudulentiis? 39. Haeretici Deum, dum defendere fingunt, offendunt. — Fraudem Deo haeretici exhibent, quia ea astruunt quae nequaquam ipsi pro quo loquuntur placent; eumque dum quasi defendere nituntur offendunt, dum in adversitate ejus corruunt cui videntur ex praedicatione famulari. Unde et per Psalmistam dicitur: Ut destruas inimicum et defensorem (Psal. VIII, 3). Omnis quippe haereticus omnipotenti Deo inimicus et defensor est, quia unde hunc quasi defendere nititur, inde veritati illius adversatur. Quia autem latere Deum nihil potest, hoc in eis judicat quod intus sentiunt, non quod famulari foris videntur. Quia igitur eorum fraudulentiis Deus ut homo non fallitur, recte subjungitur:

CAPUT XXIX.

VERS. 10, 11. — Ipse vos arguet, quoniam in abscondito faciem ejus accipitis. Statim ut se commoverit, turbabit vos, et terror ejus irruet super vos. 40. Qua poena digni qui veritatem agnitam impugnant. — Hoc, quod in abscondito accipi asserit faciem Dei, duobus modis valet intelligi. Sunt namque nonnulli qui et veritatem in corde sentiunt, et tamen quae falsa sunt de Deo foris loquuntur. Ne enim vinci videantur, et cognoscunt veritatem interius, et tamen hanc exterius impugnant. Unde et nunc bene dicitur: Ipse vos arguet, quoniam in abscondito faciem ejus accipitis. Ac si aperte diceretur: Tanto magis de falsitate apud eum estis reprehensibiles, quanto et apud vosmetipsos quod verum est videtis. Et sunt nonnulli qui quando ad mentem redeunt, Dei justitiam et rectitudinem contemplantur, et orando ac flendo contremiscunt; sed postquam contemplationis hora transierit, sic audaces ad iniquitates redeunt ac si, post dorsum ejus positi, a justitiae ejus lumine minime videantur. Hi itaque apud se in abscondito quasi corporaliter videntem accipiunt faciem Dei, quia ei et cum praesentes fiunt blandiuntur fletibus, et cum quasi a conspectu illius recedunt moribus detrahunt. Qui tanto amplius de malis suis 381 feriendi sunt, quanto et in occulto cogitationis recta Dei judicia cognoscunt. Unde et subditur: Statim ut se commoverit, turbabit vos; et terror ejus irruet super vos. 41. Justi Deum metuunt antequam iratum experiantur. — Cum sit naturae incommutabilis omnipotens Deus, in ira judicii perturbabilis non est. Sed humano verbo motus Dei dicitur ipsa rectitudinis ejus districtio, qua humana pravitas feritur. Justi autem viri ante Deum metuunt quam ejus contra eos ira moveatur; et ne commotum sentiant, tranquillum timent. At contra perversi, tunc jam feriri pertimescunt, cum feriuntur; eosque tunc terror ejus a somno sui torporis exsuscitat, cum vindicta perturbat. Unde et per prophetam dicitur: Et tantum sola vexatio intellectum dabit auditui (Isai. XXVIII, 19). Cum enim de praeceptis Dei contemptis atque despectis verberari per vindictam coeperint, tunc intelligunt quod audierunt. Et Psalmista ait: Cum occideret eos, tunc inquirebant eum (Psal. LXXVII, 34). Bene itaque dicitur: Statim ut se commoverit, turbabit vos; et terror ejus irruet super vos, quia reproborum cordibus non timor requiem, sed poena timorem parit. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXX.

VERS. 12. — Memoria vestra comparabitur cineri. 42. Superborum memoria cineri a vento rapto comparatur, et luto. — Omnes qui cogitatione terrena huic saeculo conformantur per omne quod agunt huic mundo relinquere sui memoriam conantur. Alii bellorum titulis, alii altis aedificiorum moenibus, alii disertis doctrinarum saecularium libris instanter elaborant, sibique memoriae nomen aedificant. Sed cum ipsa ad finem celerius vita percurrat, quid in ea fixum stabit, quando et ipsa celeriter mobilis pertransit? Aura etenim cinerem rapit, sicut scriptum est: Non sic impii, non sic, sed tanquam pulvis, quem projicit ventus a facie terrae (Psal. I, 4). Recte ergo stultorum memoria cineri comparatur, quia illic ponitur, ubi ab aura rapiatur. Quantumlibet etenim quisque pro perficienda gloria sui nominis elaboret, memoriam suam quasi cinerem posuit, quia hanc citius ventus mortalitatis rapit. Quo contra de justo scriptum est: In memoria aeterna erit justus (Psal. CXI, 4). Eo ipso enim, quo facta sua solius Dei oculis imprimit, nomen suae memoriae in aeternitate figit. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXI.

IBID. — Et redigentur in lutum cervices vestrae. 43. Sicut per oculum visus, sic per cervicem solet superbia designari. Cervix itaque in lutum redigitur, cum superbus quisque humiliatur in morte, et elata caro tabescit in putredine. Intueamur enim qualia in sepulcris jaceant divitum cadavera, quae illa in exstincta carne sit imago mortis, quae tabes corruptionis. Et certe ipsi erant qui extollebantur honoribus, habitis rebus tumebant, despiciebant caeteros, et quasi solos se esse gaudebant; et dum non perpenderent quo tendebant, nesciebant quid erant. Sed in lutum cervix redacta est, quia despecti jacent in putredine, qui tumebant in vanitate. In lutum cervix redigitur, quia quantum carnis potentia valeat, tabes corruptionis probat. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXII.

VERS. 13. — Tacete paulisper, ut loquar quodcunque mihi mens suggesserit. 44. Qui carnaliter loquuntur, ad silentium sunt revocandi. — Sensu carnis locutos indicat, quos idcirco ad silentium restringit, ut ea quae illi mens suggesserit dicat. Ac si aperte dicat: Non ego carnaliter, sed spiritaliter loquor, quia per sensum spiritus 382 audio quae per ministerium corporis profero. Unde mox ad alta conscendit, seque in mysteriis elevat, et increpationem quam protulerat ad mystica verba permutat, dicens:

CAPUT XXXIII.

VERS. 14. — Quare lacero carnes meas dentibus meis, et animam meam porto in manibus meis? 45. Justi leviora delicta magnis cruciatibus in se puniunt. — In Scriptura sacra dentes aliquando sancti praedicatores, aliquando vero interni accipi sensus solent. De sanctis enim praedicatoribus, sponsae dictum est: Dentes tui sicut greges tonsarum, quae ascenderunt de lavacro (Cant. IV, 2). Unde et uni eorum ostensis in figura gentibus dicitur: Macta et manduca (Act. X, 13); id est, vetustatem earum contere, et in corpus Ecclesiae, videlicet in tua membra, converte. Rursum quia dentes interiores sensus accipi solent Jeremias propheta testatur, dicens: Fregit ad numerum dentes meos (Thren. III, 10). Per dentes etenim cibus frangitur, ut glutiatur. Unde non immerito in dentibus internos sensus accipimus, qui singula quae cogitant quasi mandunt et comminuunt, atque ad ventrem memoriae transmittunt. Quos propheta ad numerum fractos dicit, quia juxta mensuram uniuscujusque peccati intelligentiae caecitas generatur in sensibus, et secundum quod quisque egit exterius, in eo obstupescit quod de internis atque invisibilibus intelligere potuit. Unde recte etiam scriptum est: Omnis homo qui comederit uvam acerbam, obstupescent dentes ejus (Ezech. XVIII, 2; Jerem. XXX, 30). Quid namque uva acerba nisi peccatum est? Uva quippe acerba est fructus ante tempus. Quisquis enim praesentis vitae delectationibus satiari desiderat quasi fructus ante tempus comedere festinat. Qui igitur uvam acerbam comedit, dentes ejus obstupescunt, quia qui praesentis mundi delectatione pascitur, interni ejus sensus ligantur, ut jam spiritalia mandere, id est intelligere nequeant, quia unde in exterioribus delectati sunt, inde in intimis obstupescunt. Et dum peccato anima pascitur, panem justitiae edere non valet, quoniam ligati dentes, ex peccati consuetudine, justum quod intus sapit edere nequaquam possunt. Hoc igitur loco, quia dentes, ut diximus, internos sensus accipimus, considerare magnopere quid agere justi soleant debemus. Qui plerumque, si qua in se quamlibet leviter carnalia esse deprehendunt, haec, in internis sensibus retractantes, vehementer in semetipsis insequuntur, afflictione se conterunt, magnisque cruciatibus vel minima in se prava dijudicant, atque haec per poenitentiam damnant. Quod idcirco agunt, ut in conspectu aeterni judicis et ipsi inveniri, in quantum est possibile, irreprehensibiles debeant, et hi qui eos sic se judicare conspiciunt emendare semetipsos a culpis culpis gravioribus inardescant. Quod videlicet beatus Job coram amicis suis temporalem gloriam tenentibus, et transeuntia bona laudantibus, fecerat; sed tamen eorum sensum ad cognoscendam utilitatem flagelli sui perducere non valebat, ut scilicet pensare possent quod non solum prospera omnipotens Deus tribueret, sed nonnunquam etiam adversa propitius irrogaret. Unde bene nunc dicit: Quare lacero carnes meas dentibus meis? Ac si aperte dicat: Cur internis sensibus carnalia, si qua fuerint in me facta, discutio, si meis spectatoribus prodesse non possum? Ubi et apte subditur: Et animam meam porto in manibus meis. 383 46. Non solum profectum suum, sed aedificationem proximi in omnibus quaerunt. — Animam in manibus portare est intentionem cordis in operatione ostendere. Habent namque hoc justi proprium ut in omne quod dicunt atque omne quod agunt, non solum provectum suum, sed etiam proximorum aedificationem quaerant. Et aliquando in quibusdam semetipsos dijudicant, ut pigros auditores ad considerandos semetipsos revocent. Aliquando bona opera ostendunt, ut spectatores eorum erubescant non imitari quod vident. Nam scriptum est: Videant vestra bona opera, et glorificent Patrem vestrum, qui est in coelis (Matth. V, 16). Qui igitur intentionem suam per opera insinuat, animam suam in manibus portat. Sed cum justus quisque nec se dijudicando, nec bona opera ostendendo, utilitati proximorum proficit, per hoc quod egerit, ad verba doloris redit. Unde recte nunc dicitur: Quare lacero carnes meas dentibus meis, et animam meam porto in manibus meis? Id est, cur me vel districte coram hominibus dijudico, vel quid appetam in opere ostendo, si utilitati proximorum nec mala dijudicando, nec bona ostendendo proficio? Sed tamen justi etiam, cum haec dicunt, nunquam a praebendo proximis bono exemplo deficiunt. Unde adhuc coram amicis suis beatus Job virtutem patientiae exhibens et ostendens ait:

CAPUT XXXIV VERS.

15. — Etiamsi occiderit me, in ipso sperabo. 47. Justus Deum etiam in adversis laudat. — Nunquam est patientiae virtus in prosperis. Ille autem vere est patiens, qui et adversis atteritur, et tamen a spei suae rectitudine non curvatur. De reprobi namque sensu scriptum est: Et confitebitur tibi cum benefeceris ei (Psal. XLVIII, 19). In hoc itaque mens justa ab injusta discernitur, quod omnipotentis Dei laudem et inter adversa confitetur, quod non cum rebus frangitur, non cum casu gloriae exterioris cadit, sed in hoc magis qualis cum rebus fuerit demonstrat, quae et sine rebus robustior stat. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXV.

VERS. 15, 16. — Verumtamen vias meas in conspectu ejus arguam, et ipse erit salvator meus. 48. Culpis suis nescit parcere, ut Deus parcat. — Cum Paulus apostolus dicat: Si nosmetipsos dijudicaremus, non utique judicaremur (I Cor. XI, 31), eo tunc Dominus salvator invenitur, quo nunc pro timore Dei peccatum nostrum a nobismetipsis redarguitur. Unde electi quique culpis suis nunquam sciunt parcere, ut possint culparum judicem placatum invenire. Et vere eum postmodum invenire salvatorem credunt, quem districte modo judicem metuunt. Nam qui sibi nunc in culpa parcit, ei postmodum in poena non parcitur. Dicat ergo: Verumtamen vias meas in conspectu ejus arguam. Quae vero utilitas de hac argutione sequatur adjungat: Et ipse erit salvator meus. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXVI.

IBID. — Non enim veniet in conspectu ejus omnis hypocrita. 49. Hypocrita Dei conspectum fugit, dum humanis oculis placere cupit. — Cum constet quod judex veniens agnos ad dexteram, haedos vero ad sinistram ponat (Matth. XXV, 33), qua nunc ratione dicitur in conspectu ejus hypocritam non esse venturum, qui scilicet si inter haedos erit, ad sinistram judicis apparebit? Sed sciendum est quod duobus modis in conspectu Domini venimus. Uno quidem, quo hic, peccata nostra subtiliter perpendentes, in ejus non conspectu punimus, et flendo dijudicamus. Nam quoties conditoris nostri 384 potentiam ad sensum reducimus, toties in conspectu illius stamus. Unde recte quoque per virum Dei Eliam dicitur: Vivit Dominus Deus Israel, in cujus conspectu sto (III Reg. XVII, 1). Alio quoque modo in conspectu Domini venimus, cum in extremo judicio ante tribunal ejus assistimus. Hypocrita igitur per examen ultimum ante conspectum judicis venit; sed quia modo culpas suas considerare ac deflere dissimulat, in conspectu Domini venire recusat. Sicut enim justi viri, cum districtionem venturi judicis contemplantur, peccata sua ad memoriam reducunt, deflent quae commiserunt, et districte se judicant, ne judicentur; ita hypocritae quo exterius hominibus placent, eo se interius aspicere negligunt; totosque se in verbis proximorum fundunt, et sanctos se esse aestimant, quia sic se haberi ab hominibus pensant. Cumque mentem per verba suae laudis sparserint, nunquam hanc ad cognitionem reducunt culpae, nunquam considerant ubi internum judicem offendant, nihil de ejus districtione metuunt, quia sic se placuisse ei sicut hominibus credunt. Qui si terrorem ejus ad mentem reducerent, hoc ipsum quod in mala intentione positi placent hominibus plus timerent. Bene itaque dicitur: Non enim veniet in conspectu ejus omnis hypocrita, quia districtionem Dei ante oculos non ponit, dum placere humanis oculis concupiscit. Qui si, mentem suam discutiens, semetipsum in conspectu Dei poneret, profecto jam hypocrita non esset. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXVII.

VERS. 17. — Audite sermonem meum, et aenigmata percipite auribus vestris. 50. Job figurata locutio. — Per hoc quod aenigmata nominat, figuratas se habere locutiones demonstrat. Unde apte quoque voce fidelis populi subditur:

CAPUT XXXVIII.

VERS. 18. — Si fuero judicatus, scio quia justus inveniar. 51. Job etiam se laudantis humilitas. Sibi iniquitatem, Deo vero purgationem suam tribuit. — Quod ab ejusdem etiam beati Job persona non discrepat, quando hoc ipse foris de se ipso loquitur, quod de illo Veritas hosti ejus interius dixerat: Vidisti servum meum Job, quod non sit ei similis super terram (Job. I, 8). Et quidem idem vir valde inferius est quod de se memorat quam quod de illo Dominus dixit. Aliud est enim justum esse, aliud est ei similem non esse. Humiliter igitur de semetipso sensit, qui dum justus sine comparatione exstitit, non se prae caeteris, sed justum tantummodo inveniri posse memoravit. Hoc tamen in ejus verbis videtur habere quaestionis, quod qui superius dixit: Vias meas in conspectu ejus arguam (Vers. 15); et inferius dicit: Consumere me vis peccatis adolescentiae meae; et peccata sua subtiliter agnoscens, adhuc longe inferius adjungit: Signasti quasi in sacculo delicta mea; nunc ait: Si fuero judicatus, scio quia justus inveniar. Neque enim simul convenire queunt peccatum et justitia. Sed sanctus vir sibi iniquitatem tribuens, et omnipotenti Domino purgationem suam, et peccatorem se cognoscit ex se, et justum se factum non ignorat ex munere.

Qui in recto quoque opere positus ex abundanti gratia meruit flagella sustinere. Jamque se in judicio justum inveniri gaudet, qui se ante judicium percussum vidit. Unde et cum longe post dicat: Signasti quasi in sacculo delicta mea, statim subdit: IBID. — 385 Sed curasti iniquitatem meam. Qui ergo justum inveniri se in judicio memorat, nequaquam se juste flagellatum negat; quamvis flagello ejus Dominus non peccata studuit tergere, sed merita augere. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXIX.

VERS. 19. — Quis est qui judicetur mecum? veniat. 52. Nullus peccati cogitationis expers esse potest. — Sancti viri ita se in operibus suis, Deo auctore, custodiunt, ut omnino unde accusentur exterius non inveniatur; interius vero in cogitationibus suis tanta se cautela circumspiciunt, ut, si fieri valeat, semper irreprehensibiles interni judicis oculis assistant. Sed quantum agere possunt, ne exterius labantur in opere, tantum interius agere nequaquam possunt, ut nunquam labantur in cogitatione. Humana enim conscientia eo ipso quo ab intimis recedit, semper in lubrico est. Unde fit ut etiam sancti viri frequenter labantur in corde. Beatus ergo Job, tam ex voce sua quam ex voce electorum loquens, dicat: Quis est qui judicetur mecum? veniat. Quia enim in exterioribus actibus unde reprehendatur non habet, libere accusatorem quaerit. Quia vero etiam justorum corda semetipsa nonnunquam de stulta cogitatione reprehendunt. propter hoc fortasse subditur:

CAPUT XL.

IBID. — Quare tacens consumor? 53. Cujus in occulto agenda est poenitentia. — Tacens enim consumitur qui, de stulta se cogitatione reprehendens, apud semetipsum dente conscientiae mordetur. Ac si aperte dicat: Sicut vixi ut accusatorem exterius nullum timerem, utinam sic vixissem ut intra memetipsum accusatricem conscientiam non haberem! Tacens enim consumitur, qui intus in se invenit unde uratur. Sequitur: VERS. 20. — Duo tantum ne facias mihi, et tunc a facie tua non abscondar. 54. A Dei animadversione nemo tutus. — Hoc loco quid Dei faciem nisi animadversionem debemus accipere, in qua dum peccata respicit punit? A qua videlicet nullus etiam justus absconditur, si duo quae postulat non amoveantur; de quibus subdit:

CAPUT XLI.

VERS. 24. — Manum tuam longe fac a me, et formido tua non me terreat. 55. Sancti ante Christum illam legem cupiebant, in qua non timore servirent, sed amore. — In quibus videlicet duobus, quid aliud per prophetiae vocem quam tempus gratiae et redemptionis inquirit? Lex namque sub percussione ultionis populum tenuit, ut quisquis sub illa peccaret protinus morte puniretur. Nec plebs Israelitica ex amore Domino, sed ex timore, serviebat. Nunquam vero impleri justitia per timorem potest, quia, juxta Joannis vocem: Perfecta charitas foras mittit timorem (I Joan. IV, 18). Et Paulus quoque adoptionis filios consolatur, dicens: Non accepistis spiritum servitutis iterum in timore, sed accepistis spiritum adoptionis filiorum, in quo clamamus, Abba, pater (Rom. VIII, 15). Ex voce igitur generis humani, legalis percussionis duritiam transire concupiscens, atque a formidine pervenire ad dilectionem appetens, quae duo a se omnipotens Deus longe faciat exorat, dicens: Manum tuam longe fac a me, et formido tua non me terreat; id est, percussionis duritiam remove a me, formidinis pondus tolle, sed irradiante gratia dilectionis, spiritum securitatis infunde, quia si 386 longe a percussione et formidine non fuero, scio quia a districtione tui examinis non abscondar, quoniam in conspectu tuo justus esse non valet qui tibi non per dilectionem, sed per timorem servit. Unde et ipsam conditoris sui praesentiam quasi familiariter ac corporaliter quaerit, ut per hanc et audiat quod ignorat, et in his audiatur quae novit. Nam protinus adjungit: VERS. 22. — Voca me, et respondebo tibi; aut certe loquar, et tu responde mihi. 56. Christus peccata quae latebant manifestavit. — Qui dum humanis oculis per assumptam carnem apparuit, sua hominibus peccata aperuit, quae et perpetrabant, et nesciebant. Unde subditur.

CAPUT XLII.

. VERS. 23. — Quantas habeo iniquitates et peccata, scelera mea et delicta ostende mihi. 57. Vocat Deus cum nos amando eligit. Ei parendo respondemus. Quid distet inter peccatum et iniquitatem, inter scelera et delicta. Quamvis vocare ac respondere intelligi et aliter possit. Vocare enim Dei est nos amando et eligendo respicere. Respondere autem nostrum est amori illius bonis operibus parere. Ubi apte additur: Aut certe loquar, et tu responde mihi. Loquimur namque cum ejus faciem per desiderium postulamus. Respondet vero Deus loquentibus cum nobis se amantibus apparet. Sed quia quisquis aeternitatis desiderio anhelat, semetipsum subtiliter reprehendens, facta sua discutit, et ne quid in illo sit in quo auctoris sui faciem offendat quaerit, recte subjungit: Quantas habeo iniquitates et peccata, scelera mea et delicta ostende mihi. Iste in hac vita justorum labor est ut semetipsos inveniant, et invenientes flendo atque corrigendo ad meliora perducant. Et quamvis inter iniquitatem atque peccatum nihil distare perhibeat Joannes apostolus, qui ait: Iniquitas peccatum est (I Joan. III, 4), ipso tamen usu loquendi plus iniquitas quam peccatum sonat, et omnis se homo libere peccatorem fatetur, iniquum vero dicere nonnunquam erubescit. Inter scelera vero et delicta hoc distat, quod scelus etiam pondus peccati transit, delictum vero pondus peccati non transit, quia et cum offerri sacrificium per legem jubetur, nimirum praecipitur sicut pro peccato, ita etiam pro delicto. Et nunquam scelus nisi in opere est, delictum vero plerumque in sola cogitatione. Unde et per Psalmistam dicitur: Delicta quis intelligit (Psal. XVIII, 13)? Quia videlicet peccata operis tanto citius cognoscuntur, quanto exterius videntur; peccata vero cogitationis eo ad intelligendum difficilia sunt, quo invisibiliter perpetrantur. Quisquis igitur aeternitatis desiderio anxius apparere venturo judici desiderat mundus, tanto se subtilius nunc examinat, quanto nimirum cogitat, ut tunc terrori illius liber assistat, et ostendi sibi exorat ubi displicet, ut hoc in se per poenitentiam puniat, seque hic dijudicans injudicabilis fiat.

58. In eam caecitatem venimus per peccatum, ut nosmetipsos ignoremus. — Sed inter haec intueri necesse est quanta peregrinationis nostrae poena nos perculit, qui in eam caecitatem venimus, ut nos ipsos ignoremus. Perpetramus mala, nec tamen haec celerius deprehendimus vel perpetrata. Exclusa quippe mens a luce veritatis nil in se nisi tenebras invenit, et plerumque in peccati foveam pedem porrigit, et nescit. 387 Quod nimirum de sola exsilii sui caecitate patitur, quia, ab illuminatione Domini repulsa, et semetipsam videre perdidit, quae auctoris sui faciem non amavit. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT XLIII.

VERS. 24. — Cur faciem tuam abscondis, et arbitraris me inimicum tuum?
59. Ex poenali timore ad amorem est redeundum. — Humanum genus contemplationem lucis intimae habuit in paradiso; sed sibimetipsi placens, quo a se recessit, lumen conditoris perdidit, ejusque faciem; ad ligna paradisi fugit, quia post culpam videre metuebat quem amare consueverat. Sed ecce post culpam venit in poenam, ex poena autem ad amorem redit, quia quis fuerit culpae fructus invenit; atque illam faciem quam timuit in culpa excitatus requirit ex poena, ut jam caliginem caecitatis suae fugiat, atque hoc ipsum, quod auctorem suum non videt graviter perhorrescat. Quo videlicet desiderio compunctus sanctus vir clamat: Cur faciem tuam abscondis, et arbitraris me inimicum tuum? quia si ut amicum aspiceres, tuae me visionis lumine non privares. Qui mobilitatem quoque cordis humani subsequens adjungit:

CAPUT XLIV.

VERS. 25. — Contra folium, quod vento rapitur, ostendis potentiam tuam, et stipulam siccam persequeris? 60. Homo quasi folium et stipula, tentationis vento movetur. — Quid est enim homo, nisi folium, qui videlicet in paradiso ab arbore cecidit? Quid est nisi folium, qui tentationis vento rapitur, et desideriorum flatibus levatur? Mens quippe humana quot tentationes patitur, quasi tot flatibus movetur. Hanc enim plerumque ira perturbat; cum recedit ira, succedit inepta laetitia. Luxuriae stimulis urgetur, aestu avaritiae longe lateque ad ambienda quae terrena sunt tenditur. Aliquando hanc superbia elevat; aliquando vero inordinatus timor in infimis deponit. Quia ergo tot tentationum flatibus elevatur et ducitur, recte folio homo comparatur. Unde bene quoque per Isaiam dicitur: Cecidimus quasi folium universi, et iniquitates nostrae quasi ventus abstulerunt nos (Isai. LXIV, 6). Quasi ventus quippe nos iniquitas abstulit, quia nullo fixos virtutis pondere in vanam elationem levavit. Bene autem post folium etiam stipula appellatur homo. Qui enim arbor fuit in conditione, folium a semetipso factus est in tentatione, sed post stipula apparuit in dejectione. Quia enim de alto cecidit, folium; quia vero per carnem terrae proximus fuit, etiam cum stare videbatur, stipula esse memoratur. Sed quia viriditatem intimi amoris perdidit, jam stipula sicca est. Consideret itaque vir sanctus, et homo quantae vilitatis sit, et Deus quantae districtionis, et dicat: Contra folium, quod vento rapitur, ostendis potentiam tuam, et stipulam siccam persequeris? Ac si aperte deploret, dicens: Cur tanta rectitudine impetis eum quem sic infirmum esse in tentatione cognoscis? Sequitur:

CAPUT XLV.

. VERS. 26. — Scribis enim contra me amaritudines. 61. Scripta de morte hominis peccatoris sententia mutari non potest. — Quia omne quod loquimur transit, quod vero scribimus manet, Deus non loqui, sed scribere amaritudines dicitur, cum diu super nos ejus flagella perdurant. Semel quippe peccanti homini dictum est: Terra es, et in terram ibis (Genes. III, 19). Et saepe apparentes angeli hominibus praecepta dederunt. Moyses legislator per districtionem peccata coercuit. 388 Ipse Unigenitus summi Patris ad nos redimendos venit, moriendo mortem absorbuit; vitam perpetuam denuntiavit nobis, quam ostendit in se. Sed tamen illa quae in paradiso data est de morte carnis nostrae sententia ab ipso initio generis humani usque ad finem saeculi non mutatur. Quis est enim homo qui vivit, et non videbit mortem (Psal. LXXXVIII, 49)? Quod bene rursum Psalmista intuens ait: Tu terribilis es, et quis resistet tibi? ex tunc ira tua (Psal. LXXV, 8). Qui videlicet peccanti in paradiso homini iratus semel de mortalitate carnis nostrae sententiam fixit, quae nunc et usque ad ultimum mutari nullo modo valebit. Dicat ergo: Scribis contra me amaritudines. Unde adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XLVI.

. IBID. — Et consumere me vis peccatis adolescentiae meae. 62. Sicut corporis, ita mentis aetates sunt variae. — Ecce vir justus, quia in juventute sua se peccasse non invenit, adolescentiae facta pertimescit. Sed sciendum est quia sicut in corpore, ita sunt etiam incrementa aetatis in mente. Prima quippe hominis aetas infantia est, cum etsi innocenter vivit, nescit tamen fari innocentiam quam habet. Ac deinde pueritia sequitur, in qua jam valet dicere quod vult; cui succedit adolescentia, quae videlicet prima est aetas in operatione; quam juventus sequitur, scilicet apta fortitudini; ac postmodum senectus, etiam per tempus jam congrua maturitati. Quia igitur primam aetatem aptam bonis actibus adolescentiam diximus, et justi viri, cum in magna mentis maturitate proficiunt, nonnunquam ad memoriam actionum suarum initium reducunt, seque tantum de suis primordiis reprehendunt, quantum ex gravitate mentis altius profecerunt, quia eo indiscretos se fuisse inveniunt, quo discretionis arcem postmodum plenius consequuntur, recte nunc per sancti viri vocem adolescentiae peccata formidantur. Quod si ad ipsam litteram est tenendum, hinc considerandum est quantum sint gravia peccata juvenum et senum, si et illud sic justi metuunt quod in infirma aetate deliquerunt. Sequitur:

CAPUT XLVII.

VERS. 27. — Posuisti in nervo pedem meum, et observasti omnes semitas meas, et vestigia pedum meorum considerasti. 63. Divini judicii in puniendis etiam pravis cogitationibus, severitas. — In nervo Deus pedem hominis posuit, quia pravitatem illius forti districtionis suae sententia ligavit. Cujus omnes semitas observat, quia subtiliter singula ejus quaeque dijudicat. Semita etenim angustior solet esse quam via. Quia autem vias actiones, non immerito semitas ipsas actionum cogitationes accipimus. Deus itaque omnes semitas observat, quia in singulis quibusque nostris actibus etiam cogitationes pensat. Et vestigia pedum considerat, quia intentiones nostrorum operum quam recte ponantur examinat, ne et hoc quod bonum agitur non recto desiderio agatur. Possunt quoque per pedum vestigia quaedam male acta signari. Nam pes in corpore est vestigium in via. Et plerumque dum quaedam prava agimus, intuentibus hoc fratribus, exemplum malum praebemus; et, quasi inflexo extra viam pede, sequentibus vestigia distorta relinquimus, dum per nostra opera ad scandalum aliena corda provocamus. Valde autem laboriosum est custodire ne mala homo facere audeat, ne in bonis actibus per intentionem titubet, 389 et inter recta opera sinistra eum cogitatio illudat. Quae tamen cuncta omnipotens Deus subtiliter examinat, atque in judicio singula repensat. Sed quando homo, qui carnis suae infirmitate constringitur, contra cuncta valeat subtiliter assurgere, atque inconcussa cogitatione rectitudinem tenere? Unde apte subditur:

CAPUT XLVIII.

VERS. 28. — Qui quasi putredo consumendus sum, et quasi vestimentum quod comeditur a tinea. 64. Homo putredine sibi innata consumitur. — Sicut enim vestimentum a tinea de se exorta comeditur, ita homo in semetipso habet putredinem, de qua consumatur; atque hoc est quod est unde consumatur ut non sit. Quod intelligi et aliter potest, si ex voce tentati hominis dicitur: Qui quasi putredo consumendus sum, et quasi vestimentum quod comeditur a tinea. Homo enim quasi putredo consumitur, dum carnis suae corruptione conteritur. Cui quia immunda tentatio non aliunde, sed a semetipso nascitur, more tineae carnem tentatio, quasi vestem de qua exit, consumit. In semetipso quippe habet homo unde tentetur. Quasi ergo tinea vestem consumit, quae ex veste eadem processit. Sciendum quoque quod tinea sine sonitu perforat vestimentum; et plerumque cogitatio ita transfigit mentem, ut mens ipsa non sentiat, nisi postquam fuerit ejus aculeo transfixa. Bene ergo dicitur, quod homo tanquam vestimentum a tinea consumitur, quia nonnunquam tentationum nostrarum vulnera non cognoscimus, nisi postquam ab eis confossi in mente fuerimus. Quam videlicet infirmitatem nostram bene adhuc sanctus vir considerans, adjungit:

CAPUT XLIX.

CAP. XIV, VERS. 1. — Homo natus de muliere, brevi vivens tempore, repletur multis miseriis. 65. Homo natus ex infirmitate, quia de muliere ortus. — In sacro eloquio mulier aut pro sexu ponitur, aut pro infirmitate. Pro sexu quippe sicut scriptum est: Misit Deus filium suum, factum ex muliere, factum sub lege (Gal. IV, 4). Pro infirmitate vero, sicut per quemdam sapientem dicitur: Melior est iniquitas viri, quam benefaciens mulier (Eccli. XLII, 14). Vir etenim fortis quilibet et discretus vocatur, mulier vero mens infirma vel indiscreta accipitur. Et saepe contingit ut etiam discretus quisque subito labatur in culpam, atque indiscretus alius et infirmus bonam exhibeat operationem. Sed is qui indiscretus atque infirmus est nonnunquam de eo quod bene egerit amplius elevatur, atque gravius in culpam cadit; discretus vero quisque etiam ex eo quod male se egisse intelligit, ad districtionis regulam arctius se reducit; et inde altius ad justitiam proficit, unde ad tempus a justitia cecidisse videbatur. Qua in re recte dicitur: Melior est iniquitas viri, quam benefaciens mulier, quia nonnunquam etiam culpa fortium occasio virtutis fit, et virtus infirmorum occasio peccati. Hoc igitur loco mulieris nomine quid nisi infirmitas designatur, cum dicitur: Homo natus de muliere? Ac si apertius dicatur: Quid in se habebit fortitudinis, qui natus est ex infirmitate? 66. Angustatur ad vitam, dilatatur ad miseriam. — Brevi vivens tempore, repletur multis miseriis. Ecce viri sancti vocibus poena hominis breviter est expressa, quia et angustatur ad vitam, et 390 dilatatur ad miseriam. Si enim subtiliter consideretur omne quod hic agitur, poena et miseria est. Ipsi etenim corruptioni carnis servire ad necessaria atque concessa miseria est, ut contra frigus vestimenta, contra famem alimenta, contra aestum frigora requirantur. Quod multa cautela custoditur salus corporis; quod etiam custodita amittitur, amissa cum gravi labore reparatur, et tamen reparata in dubio semper est; quid hoc aliud quam mortalis vitae miseria est? Quod amamus amicos, suspecti ne offendi valeant; formidamus inimicos, atque securi de eis non sumus utique quos formidamus; quod plerumque inimicis sic confidenter quasi amicis loquimur, et nonnunquam pura verba proximorum, et multum nos fortasse diligentium, quasi verba suscipimus inimicorum, et qui falli nunquam vel fallere volumus, ex cautela nostra gravius erramus; quid itaque hoc nisi humanae vitae miseria est? Quod, amissa coelesti patria, repulsus homo delectatur exsilio, gravatur curis, et tamen cogitare dissimulat quam grave sit quia multa cogitantur; quod privatus est interno lumine, et tamen in hac vita diu vult perpeti caecitatem suam; quid hoc aliud quam de poena nostra nata miseria est? Sed quamvis diu hic stare desideret, ipso tamen cursu mortalis vitae impellitur ut egrediatur. Unde vir sanctus recte subjungit:

CAPUT L.

VERS. 2. — Qui quasi flos egreditur et conteritur, et fugit velut umbra, et nunquam in eodem statu permanet. 67. Mundus tot floribus brevi siccandis repletur, quot nominibus. — Quasi flos etenim egreditur, quia nitet in carne; sed conteritur, quia redigitur in putredinem. Quid enim sunt nati homines in mundo, nisi quidam flores in campo? Tendamus oculos cordis in hanc latitudinem mundi praesentis, et ecce quasi tot floribus quot hominibus plenus est. Vita itaque in carne, flos in feno est. Unde bene per Psalmistam dicitur: Homo, sicut fenum dies ejus; et sicut flos agri, ita florebit (Psal. CII, 15). Isaias quoque ait: Omnis caro fenum, et omnis gloria ejus sicut flos agri (Isa. XL, 6). Homo etenim more floris procedit ex occulto, et subito apparet in publico, qui statim ex publico per mortem retrahitur ad occultum. Carnis nos viriditas ostendit, sed ariditas pulveris ab aspectibus retrahit. Quasi flos apparuimus, qui non eramus; quasi flos arescimus, qui temporaliter apparebamus. 68. Homo singulis vitae momentis ad mortem pergit. Inde deficit unde proficit. — Et quia per momenta homo quotidie compellitur ad mortem, recte adjungitur: Et fugit velut umbra, et nunquam in eodem statu permanet. Sed cum sol quoque indesinenter cursum suum peragat, et nunquam se in stabilitate figat; cur cursus vitae hominis umbrae potius quam soli comparatur, nisi quia, amisso amore conditoris, calorem cordis perdidit, et in solo iniquitatis suae frigore remansit? Quia juxta Veritatis vocem: Abundabit iniquitas, et refrigescet charitas multorum (Matth. XXIV, 12). Qui igitur in amore Dei cordis calorem non habet, nec tamen vitam quam diligit tenet, scilicet velut umbra fugit. Unde recte quoque de illo scriptum est: Quia secutus est umbram (Eccli. XXXIV). Bene autem dicitur: 391 Et nunquam in eodem statu permanet, quia dum infantia ad pueritiam, pueritia ad adolescentiam, adolescentia ad juventutem, juventus ad senectutem, senectus transit ad mortem, in cursu vitae praesentis ipsis suis augmentis ad detrimenta impellitur; et inde semper deficit, unde se proficere in spatium vitae credit. Fixum etenim statum hic habere non possumus, ubi transituri venimus: atque hoc ipsum nostrum vivere, quotidie a vita transire est. Quem videlicet lapsum primus homo ante culpam habere non potuit, quia tempora, eo stante, transibant. Sed postquam deliquit, in quodam se quasi lubrico temporalitatis posuit; et quia cibum comedit vetitum, status sui protinus invenit defectum. Quam tamen mutabilitatem non solum exterius, sed interius quoque homo patitur, dum ad meliora opera exsurgere conatur. Mens etenim mutabilitatis suae pondere ad aliud semper impellitur quam est, et nisi in statu suo arcta custodiae disciplina teneatur, semper in deteriora dilabitur. Quae enim semper stantem deseruit, statum quem habere potuit amisit. Unde nunc cum ad meliora nititur, quasi contra ictum fluminis conatur. Cum vero ab intentione ascendendi resolvitur, sine labore ad ima reducitur. Quia enim in ascensu labor est, in descensu otium, intraturos per angustam portam Dominus admonet, dicens: Contendite intrare per angustam portam (Luc. XIII, 24). Dicturus quippe angustae portae introitum, praemisit, contendite, quia nisi mentis contentio ferveat, unda mundi non vincitur, per quam anima semper ad ima revocatur. Quia igitur homo velut flos nascitur et conteritur, quia sicut umbra fugit, atque in statu suo nunquam permanet, quid in hac consideratione subjungat audiamus. Sequitur:

CAPUT LI.

VERS. 3. — Et dignum ducis super hujuscemodi aperire oculos tuos, et adducere eum tecum in judicium? 69. Duo extrema nomo et creator, pulvis et Deus. — Consideravit quippe superius et omnipotentis Dei potentiam, et infirmitatem suam; deduxit ante oculos se et Deum, pensavit quis cum quo ad judicium veniat. Vidit hinc hominem, inde conditorem, id est pulverem, et Deum; et recte ait: Et dignum ducis super hujuscemodi aperire oculos tuos? Omnipotenti Deo oculos aperire 392 est judicia exercere, quem feriat videre. Nam quasi clausis oculis non vult aspicere quem non vult ferire. Unde mox de ipso quoque judicio adjungitur: Et adducere eum tecum in judicium? Sed quia contemplatus est ad judicium venientem Deum, rursum considerat infirmitatem suam. Videt quia mundus per semetipsum esse non possit, qui ut esse possit, de immunditia processit, atque subjungit:

CAPUT LII.

VERS. 4. — Quis potest facere mundum de immundo conceptum semine? Nonne tu, qui solus es? 70. Homo propter vitiatam originem immunda patitur etiam nolens. — Is qui per se solus est mundus mundare praevalet immunda. Homo enim in corruptibili carne vivens habet tentationum immunditias impressas in semetipso, quia nimirum eas traxit ab origine. Ipsa quippe propter delectationem carnis ejus conceptio immunditia est. Unde et Psalmista ait: Ecce enim in iniquitatibus conceptus sum, et in delictis peperit me mater mea (Psal. L, 7). Hinc est ergo quod plerumque tentatur et nolens. Hinc est quod immunda quaedam in mente patitur, quamvis ex judicio reluctetur, quia conceptus de immunditia, dum ad munditiam tendit, hoc conatur vincere quod est. Quisquis autem occultae tentationis motus atque immunditiam cogitationis evicerit, nequaquam sibi suam munditiam tribuat, quia de immundo conceptum semine nullus facere mundum potest, nisi is qui mundus per semetipsum solus est. Qui ergo jam ad locum munditiae mente pervenit, conceptionis suae viam respiciat, per quam venit, atque inde colligat quia ex sua virtute non habet munditiam vivendi, cui de immunditia factum est initium subsistendi. Potest vero hoc in loco intelligi, quia beatus Job incarnationem Redemptoris intuitus, solum vidit in mundo hominem de immundo semine non esse conceptum, qui sic in mundum venit ex Virgine, ut nihil haberet de immunda conceptione. Neque enim ex viro et femina, sed ex sancto Spiritu et Maria virgine processit. Solus ergo in carne sua vere mundus exstitit, qui delectatione carnis tangi non potuit, quia nec per carnalem huc delectationem venit.

LIBER DUODECIMUS.

In quo, exposito capite XIV libri Job, a versu quinto, caput XV ex integro plerumque moraliter explicatur. Mos justorum est tanto sollicitius praesentem vitam quam sit fugitiva cogitare, quanto studiosius noverint coelestis patriae bona aeterna perpendere. Ex his enim quae manentia intus aspiciunt, foris fugam rerum labentium subtilius attendunt. Unde beatus Job, cum de lapsu humani temporis sententiam protulisset, dicens: Homo natus de muliere, brevi vivens tempore. Et rursum: Et fugit velut umbra, et nunquam in eodem statu permanet, adhuc de brevitate vitae ejus adjungit:

CAPUT PRIMUM.

CAP. XIV, VERS. 5. — Breves dies hominis sunt, numerus mensium ejus apud te est. 1. Quod tanta velocitate transcurrit velut non est. — Hoc etenim apud nos velut non esse considerat, quod tanta velocitate transcurrit. Quia vero apud omnipotentem Deum etiam labentia stant, apud eum esse numerum nostrorum mensium perhibet. Vel certe in diebus brevitas temporis, in mensibus vero quasi multiplicata dierum spatia designantur. Nobis ergo breves dies sunt. Sed quia vita nostra post tenditur, apud Deum numerus nostrorum mensium esse memoratur. Unde et per Salomonem dicitur: Longitudo dierum in dextera ejus. Sequitur:

CAPUT II.

IBID. — Constituisti terminos ejus, qui praeteriri non poterunt. 393 2. Nulla fiunt hominibus sine Dei consilio, etsi occulto. Nulla quae in hoc mundo hominibus fiunt absque omnipotentis Dei occulto consilio veniunt. Nam cuncta Deus secutura praesciens, ante saecula decrevit qualiter per saecula disponantur. Statutum quippe jam homini est, vel quantum hunc mundi prosperitas sequatur, vel quantum adversitas feriat, ne electos ejus aut immoderata prosperitas elevet, aut nimia adversitas gravet. Statutum quoque est quantum in ipsa vita mortali temporaliter vivat. Nam etsi annos quindecim Ezechiae regi ad vitam addidit omnipotens Deus (IV Reg. XX, 1), cum eum mori permisit, tunc eum praescivit esse moriturum. Qua in re quaestio oritur, quomodo ei per prophetam dicatur: Dispone domui tuae, quia morieris tu, et non vives; cui cum mortis sententia dicta est, protinus ad ejus lacrymas est vita addita. Sed per prophetam Dominus dixit quo tempore mori ipse merebatur; per largitatem vero misericordiae illo eum tempore ad mortem distulit, quod ante saecula ipse praescivit. Nec propheta igitur fallax, quia tempus mortis innotuit, quo vir ille mori merebatur; nec dominica statuta convulsa sunt, quia ut ex largitate Dei anni vitae crescerent, hoc quoque ante saecula praefixum fuit; atque spatium vitae quod inopinate foris est additum, sine augmento praescientiae fuit intus statutum. Bene ergo dicitur: Constituisti terminos ejus, qui praeteriri non poterunt. 3. Deus profectibus spiritualibus modum ponit. — Quod tamen intelligi etiam juxta spiritum valet, quia nonnunquam in virtutibus proficere conamur, et quaedam dona percipimus, a quibusdam vero repulsi in imis jacemus. Nemo enim est qui tantum virtutis apprehendat quantum desiderat, quia omnipotens Deus, interiora discernens, ipsis spiritalibus provectibus modum ponit, ut ex hoc homo quod apprehendere conatur, et non valet, in illis se non elevet quae valet. Unde ille quoque egregius praedicator, qui raptus ad tertium coelum fuerat, paradisi arcana penetraverat, esse post revelationem tranquillus atque intentatus non valebat (II Cor. XII, 3). Sed quia omnipotens Deus terminos constituit homini, qui praeteriri non poterunt, et elevavit hunc ad cognoscenda sublimia, et reduxit iterum ad infirma toleranda, ut modi sui mensuram aspiciens, dum securitatem comprehendere conaretur, et non posset, ne per elationem extra se iret, per humilitatem cogeretur intra suos semper terminos redire. Sequitur:

CAPUT III.

VERS. 6. — Recede paululum ab eo, ut quiescat, donec optata veniat, sicut mercenarii dies ejus. 4. Sancti vitae praesentis taedio ad aeternam requiem semper anhelant. — Hoc loco recede dicitur vim flagelli amove. Quis enim valet Deo recedente quiescere, cum solus ipse sit requies, et a quo quisque quanto longe fuerit, fit tanto et inquietus? Itaque sic recede ab eo, dicitur, ut intelligas feriendo. Apte enim subjungitur: Donec optata veniat, sicut mercenarii dies ejus. Mercenarius quanto longe est a fine operis, tanto et retributione mercedis. Ita vir quisque sanctus in hac vita positus, dum longe se esse ab exitu vitae praesentis conspicit, longe se esse ab aeternis gaudiis gemit. Quid est ergo dicere: Recede paululum ab eo, ut quiescat, nisi: jam flagella vitae praesentis subtrahe, et bona aeternae quietis ostende? Unde etiam de ipsa quiete additur: Donec 394 optata veniat, sicut mercenarii dies ejus. Tunc namque homini optata sicut mercenarii dies venit, quando aeternam requiem pro recompensatione sui laboris acceperit. Quantum vero ad praesentis vitae speciem spectat, adhuc beatus Job humanum genus multis miseriis repletum quam sit despectum insinuat, quantumque ipsa insensibilia ipsum praeire videantur narrat, cum dicit:

CAPUT IV.

VERS. 7-10. — Lignum habet spem; si praecisum fuerit, rursum virescit, et rami ejus pullulant. Si senuerit radix ejus in terra, et in pulvere emortuus fuerit truncus illius, ad odorem aquae germinabit, et faciet comam quasi cum primum plantatum est. Homo vero cum mortuus fuerit, et nudatus atque consumptus, ubi, quaeso, est? 5. Ligni nomine multa significantur: Crux, vir justus, incarnata Dei Sapientia. Ex percussione justi ad amorem coelestis patriae accenduntur. — Sed quia hoc juxta litteram patet, debemus sensum ad interiora reducere, et qualiter haec juxta spiritum intelligi debeant perscrutari. In Scriptura etenim sacra ligni nomine aliquando crux, aliquando vir justus, aut etiam injustus, aliquando vero incarnata Dei sapientia figuratur. Crux etenim ligno signatur, cum dicitur: Mittamus lignum in panem ejus (Jerem. XI, 19). Lignum quippe in panem mittere est Dominico corpori crucem adhibere. Rursum ligni nomine vir justus aut etiam injustus exprimitur, sicut per prophetam Dominus dicit: Ego Dominus humiliavi lignum sublime, et exaltavi lignum humile (Ezech. XVII, 24). Quia juxta ejusdem Veritatis vocem: Omnis qui se exaltat humiliabitur, et qui se humiliat exaltabitur (Luc. XIV, 11). Salomon quoque ait: Si ceciderit lignum ad Austrum, aut ad Aquilonem, in quocunque loco ceciderit, ibi erit (Eccle. XI, 3). In die etenim mortis suae justus ad Austrum cadit, peccator ad Aquilonem, quia et justus per fervorem spiritus ad gaudia ducitur, et peccator cum apostata angelo, qui dixit: Sedebo in monte testamenti, in lateribus Aquilonis (Isai. XIV, 13), in frigido suo corde reprobatur. Rursum per lignum incarnata Dei Sapientia figuratur, sicut de ea scriptum est: Lignum vitae est his qui apprehenderint eam (Prov. III, 18); et sicut ipsa ait: Si in viridi ligno haec faciunt, in arido quid fiet (Luc. XXIII, 31)? Hoc itaque loco cum lignum praefertur homini, quid homo nisi carnalis quisque accipitur? Et quid ligni nomine nisi justi uniuscujusque vita designatur: Lignum etenim habet spem; si praecisum fuerit, rursum virescit, quia cum in morte passionis pro veritate justus afficitur, in aeternae vitae viriditate recuperatur. Et qui hic virebat per fidem, illic virescit per speciem. Et rami ejus pullulant, quia plerumque ex passione justi fideles quique ad amorem coelestis patriae multiplicantur, et viriditatem vitae spiritalis accipiunt, dum hic pro Deo fortiter egisse gratulantur. Sequitur:

CAPUT V.

VERS. 8, 9. — Si senuerit in terra radix ejus, et in pulvere emortuus fuerit truncus illius, ad odorem aquae germinabit, et faciet comam quasi cum primum plantatum est. 6. Sua morte uberes in nobis fructus gignunt justi. — Quid radix justi nisi sancta praedicatio, quia ab ipsa oritur, et in ipsa subsistit? et quid terrae vel pulveris nomine nisi peccator accipitur? cui voce conditoris dicitur: Terra es, et in terram ibis, vel certe, sicut habet nostra translatio: Pulvis es, et in pulverem reverteris (Genes. III, 19). Justi igitur radix in terra senescit, et in pulvere truncus emoritur, 395 quia apud corda pravorum ejus praedicatio despecta cunctisque viribus effeta creditur. Et in pulvere truncus emoritur, quia inter manus persequentium corpus illius exanimatur. Juxta Sapientiae etenim vocem: Visi sunt oculis insipientium mori, et aestimata est afflictio exitus illorum (Sap. III, 2). Sed iste cujus radix in terra senuit, et in pulvere truncus emortuus est, ad odorem aquae germinat, quia per afflatum sancti Spiritus in electorum cordibus exemplo sui operis germen virtutis facit. Aquae etenim appellatione nonnunquam sancti Spiritus irrigatio designari solet, sicut scriptum est: Si quis sitit, veniat ad me, et bibat. Qui autem biberit ex aqua, quam ego dabo ei, non sitiet in aeternum (Joan. VII, 37; IV, 13). Sequitur: Et faciet comam quasi cum primum plantatum est. Succiso trunco comam facere, est exstincto corporaliter justo, ipso suae passionis exemplo multorum corda suscitare, et ex fide recta viriditatem veritatis ostendere. Bene autem dicitur: Quasi cum primum plantatum est. Omne quod hic a justis agitur secunda plantatio est, quia prima videlicet plantatio non in opere justorum, sed in praescientia conditoris est. Et quia cuncta quae agunt electi, sicut prius interius conspiciuntur atque disponuntur, ita postmodum exterius perficiuntur, bene dicitur: Faciet comam quasi cum primum plantatum est; id est, viriditatem suam ostendit in effectu operis, quam prius habuit in praescientia conditoris.. VERS. 10. — Homo vero cum mortuus fuerit, et nudatus atque consumptus, ubi, quaeso, est? 9. Homo peccator moritur in culpa, nudatur a justitia, consumitur in poena. — Nullus homo sine peccato est, nisi ille qui in hunc mundum non venit ex peccato. Et quia omnes in culpa ligamur, ipsa amissione justitiae morimur; concessa prius in paradiso veste innocentiae nudamur, interitu etiam carnis subsequente consumimur. Homo itaque peccator moritur in culpa, nudatur a justitia, consumitur in poena. Hanc nuditatem peccatoris filii tegere dignatus est pater, qui eo redeunte dixit: Cito proferte stolam primam (Luc. XV, 22). Prima quippe stola est vestis innocentiae, quam homo bene conditus accepit, sed male a serpente persuasus perdidit. Contra hanc rursum nuditatem dicitur: Beatus qui vigilat, et custodit vestimenta sua, ne nudus ambulet (Apoc. XVI, 15). Vestimenta quippe custodimus cum praecepta innocentiae servamus in mente, ut cum nos judici culpa nudat, ad amissam redeuntes innocentiam poenitentia operiat. Bene autem dicitur: Ubi, quaeso, est? quia peccator homo illic stare noluit, ubi conditus fuit; hic vero, ubi cecidit, diu esse prohibetur. Patriam volens perdidit, a peregrinatione vero sua quam diligit invitus expellitur. Ubi ergo est, qui in ejus amore non est ubi verum esse est? Sequitur:

CAPUT VII.

VERS. 11, 12. — Quomodo si recedant aquae de mari, et fluvius vacuefactus arescat, sic homo, cum dormierit, non resurget. 10. Mens humana aestuanti mari similis. — Mare mens hominis, et quasi fluctus maris sunt cogitationes mentis, quae aliquando per iram tumescunt, per gratiam tranquillae fiunt, per odium cum amaritudine defluunt. Sed cum homo moritur, aquae maris recedunt, quia, juxta Psamistae vocem: In illa die peribunt omnes cogitationes eorum (Psal. CXLV, 4). Et rursum de moriente scriptum est: Amor quoque et odium simul peribunt (Eccle. IX, 6). Arescit ergo fluvius vacuefactus, quia, subducta anima, vacuum remanet corpus. Quasi enim alveus fluminis vacuus est corpus exanime. Qua in re vigilanter intuendum est quia vita praesens, videlicet quousque anima moratur in corpore, mari comparatur et fluvio. Aqua enim maris amara est, fluminis dulcis. Et quia hic viventes modo quibusdam amaritudinibus afficimur, modo autem dulcedine tranquilli ac mites invenimur, praesentis vitae decursus comparatione exprimitur maris et fluminis. 11. (Vet. VI, Rec. V.] Job resurrectionem non absolute negat, sed tantum futuram ante mundi finem. — Sed in his durum valde videtur esse quod subditur: Sic homo, cum dormierit, non resurget. Cur itaque laboramus, si in resurrectionis retributionem non tendimus? Quomodo autem dicitur: Non resurget, cum scriptum sit: Omnes quidem resurgemus, sed non omnes immutabimur (I Cor. XV, 51). Et rursum: Si in 397 hac vita tantum in Christo sperantes sumus, miserabiliores sumus omnibus hominibus (I Cor. XV, 19). Et per semetipsam Veritas dicat: Omnes qui in monumentis sunt audient vocem ejus, et procedent qui bona fecerunt in resurrectionem vitae (Joan. V, 28). Sed subjuncta sententia indicat quae discretio in praemissa lateat. Nam subditur:

CAPUT VIII.

VERS. 12. — Donec atteratur coelum, non evigilabit, nec consurget de somno suo. 12. Liquet enim quia non resurget, scilicet donec atteratur coelum, quia nisi mundi hujus finis advenerit, humanum genus a somno mortis ad vitam non evigilabit. Non ergo quia omnino non resurgat, sed quia ante contritionem coeli, humanum genus minime resurgat, insinuat. Notandum quoque est cur postquam superius hominem mortuum dixit, inferius non mortuum, sed dormientem nominat, eumque de somno suo minime consurgere, donec coelum atteratur narrat, nisi quod patenter datur intelligi quia in comparatione ligni revirentis hominem mortuum peccatorem nominat, a vita scilicet justitiae exstinctum. Ubi autem de morte carnis loquitur, non hanc mortem, sed somnum maluit vocare, spem procul dubio resurrectionis insinuans, quia sicut citius homo a somno evigilat, ita concite ad conditoris nutum a morte corporis resurgat. Vehementer enim ab infirmis mentibus nomen mortis pertimescitur, somni autem vocabulum non timetur. Unde et Paulus discipulos admonens, dicit: Nolumus autem ignorare vos, fratres, de dormientibus, ut non contristemini sicut et caeteri qui spem non habent. Si enim credimus quod Jesus mortuus est et resurrexit, ita et Deus eos qui dormierunt per Jesum adducet cum eo (I Thess. IV, 12). Quid est quod praedicator egregius mortem Domini mortem vocat, mortem vero servorum Domini, non mortem, sed somnum nominat, nisi quia, infirma corda audientium respiciens, medicamentum praedicationis suae mira arte componit, et illum quem jam resurrexisse noverant, eis mortuum insinuare non dubitat; eos vero qui necdum resurrexerant, ut spem resurrectionis insinuet, non mortuos, sed dormientes vocat? Non enim verebatur dicere mortuum quem auditores jam resurrexisse cognoverant, et verebatur dicere mortuos quos resurgere vix credebant. Beatus igitur Job, quia carne mortuos ad vitam rursus evigilare non dubitat, eos dormientes potius quam mortuos appellat. Sequitur:

CAPUT IX.

VERS. 13. — Quis mihi tribuat ut in inferno protegas me? 13. Duplex infernus, alius inferior malis cruciandis, alius superior justis usque ad adventum Christi recipiendis destinatus. — Quia ante adventum mediatoris Dei et hominis omnis homo, quamvis mundae probataeque vitae fuerit, ad inferni claustra descenderit, dubium non est, quoniam homo, qui per se cecidit, per se ad paradisi requiem redire non potuit, nisi veniret ille qui suae incarnationis mysterio ejusdem nobis paradisi iter aperiret. Unde et post culpam primi hominis ad paradisi aditum romphaea flammea posita esse memoratur (Genes. III, 24), quae et versati lis dicitur, pro eo quod quandoque veniret tempus ut etiam removeri potuisset Nec tamen ita justorum animas ad infernum dicimus descendisse, ut in locis poenalibus tenerentur. Sed esse superiora inferni loca, esse alia inferiora credenda sunt, ut et in superioribus justi requiescerent, et in inferioribus 398 injusti cruciarentur. Unde et Psalmista propter praevenientem se Dei gratiam dicit:

Eripuisti animam meam ex inferno inferiori (Psal. LXXXV, 13). Beatus igitur Job ante Mediatoris adventum ad infernum se descendere sciens, conditoris sui illic protectionem postulat, ut a locis poenalibus alienus existat, ubi, dum ad requiem ducitur, a suppliciis abscondatur. Unde subjungit:

CAPUT X.

IBID. — Et abscondas me donec pertransent furor tuus. 14. Dei furor perturbationis expers, in fine mundi consummatur. — Furor etiam omnipotentis Dei in hoc quotidie vim suae districtionis peragit, quod viventes indigne dignis suppliciis demergit. Qui furor nunc equidem transit, sed in fine pertransit, quia modo agitur, sed in mundi termino consummatur. Qui tamen iste furor, quantum ad electorum animas, in Redemptoris nostri adventu pertransiit, quia eas ab inferni claustris ad paradisi gaudia mediator Dei et hominum, dum ipse illuc pie descenderet, reduxit. Inter haec vero sciendum est quod furoris nomen Divinitati non congruit, quia naturam Dei simplicem perturbatio nulla confundit. Unde ei dicitur: Tu autem dominator virtutis cum tranquillitate judicas, et cum magna reverentia disponis nos (Sap. XII, 18). Sed quia justorum animae per Mediatoris adventum erant quandoque ab inferni locis, quamvis non poenalibus, liberandae, hoc quoque justus vir praevidet, et petendo subjungit:

CAPUT XI.

IBID. — Et constituas mihi tempus, in quo recorderis mei? 15. Christus ab inferno eduxit tantum quos sibi inhaesisse praescivit. — At ubi venit plenitudo temporis, misit Deus Filium suum, factum ex muliere, factum sub lege, ut eos qui sub lege erant redimeret (Gal. IV, 4). Hanc itaque redemptionem vir Domini praesciens, in qua erant multi etiam ex gentilitate liberandi, sicut ipse ait: Licet haec celes in cordo tuo, tamen scio quia universorum memineris (Job. X, 13), apud omnipotentem Deum tempus sibi constitui suae recordationis petit. Hinc est enim quod in Evangelio Dominus dicit: Et ego si exaltatus fuero a terra, omnia traham ad me ipsum (Joan. XII, 32), omnia videlicet electa. Non enim ab inferno rediens Dominus electos simul et reprobos traxit, sed illa exinde omnia sustulit quae sibi inhaesisse praescivit. Unde etiam per Osee prophetam dicit: Ero mors tua, o mors, ero morsus tuus, inferne (Osee XIII, 14). Quod enim occidimus, agimus ut penitus non sit. Ex eo enim quod mordemus, partem abstrahimus, partemque relinquimus. Quia ergo in electis suis funditus Dominus occidit mortem, mors mortis exstitit. Quia vero ex inferno partem abstulit, partemque reliquit, non occidit funditus, sed momordit infernum. Dicit ergo: Ero mors tua, a mors; id est, in electis meis te funditus perimo. Ero morsus tuus, inferne, quia, sublatis eis, te ex parte transfigo. Sciens igitur beatus Job hunc adventum ad inferos Redemptoris nostri, petat quod futurum praevidit, et dicat: Et constituas mihi tempus in quo recorderis mei. Sequitur:

CAPUT XII.

VERS. 14. — Putasne mortuus homo rursum vivet? 16. Nonnunquam a fortibus infirmitatis verba suscipienda. — Solent justi viri in eo quod ipsi certum ac solidum sentiunt quasi ex dubietate aliquid proferre, ut infirmorum in se verba transferant. Sed rursum per fortem sententiam infirmanti dubietate omnimodo contradicunt, quatenus per hoc quod dubie proferre cernuntur infirmis aliquatenus condescendant, et per hoc quod certam sententiam proferunt, 399 infirmorum mentes dubias ad soliditatem trahant. Quod nimirum dum faciunt exemplum nostri capitis sequuntur. Passioni quippe Dominus propinquans infirmantium in se vocem sumpsit, dicens: Pater mi, si possibile est, transeat a me calix iste (Matth. XXVI, 39), eorumque timorem, ut abstraheret, suscepit; et rursus per obedientiam vim fortitudinis ostendens ait: Verumtamen non sicut ego volo, sed sicut tu (Ibid., 39) ut cum hoc imminet quod fieri nolumus, sic per infirmitatem petamus ut non fiat, quatenus per fortitudinem parati simus ut voluntas conditoris nostri etiam contra voluntatem nostram fiat. Hoc igitur exemplo nonnunquam a fortibus infirmitatis verba suscipienda sunt, ut per eorum post praedicamenta fortia infirmorum corda gratius roborentur. Unde beatus Job, cum quasi dubitantis verba protulit, dicens: Putasne mortuus homo rursum vivet? illico sententiam suae certitudinis adjunxit, qua ait:

CAPUT XIII.

IBID. — Cunctis diebus, quibus nunc milito, exspecto donec veniat immutatio mea. 17. Job, hujus vitae cursu despecto, immutabilitatis statum requirit. — Qui itaque immutationem suam tanto desiderio exspectat, quam sit de resurrectione certus insinuat; et cursum vitae praesentis quantum despiciat innotescit, qui hunc militiam appellat. Per militiam quippe semper ad finem tenditur, et quotidie conclusionis terminus exspectatur. Cursum itaque vitae hujus despicit, et statum soliditatis requirit, qui per hoc quod mutabiliter militat, ad immutationem suam pervenire festinat. Justo quippe in hac vita ipsa sarcina suae corruptionis onerosa est. Quod vigiliae defatigant, somnus quaeritur, ut vigiliarum labor atque anxietas temperetur. Sed nonnunquam etiam somnus occidit. Fames corpus atterit, atque, ut ejus necessitas repellatur, cibi requiruntur; sed saepe et cibi gravant, qui ad repellendum debilitatis gravamen quaesiti fuerant. Gravis itaque est sarcina corruptionis, quae nisi ita gravis esset, Paulus nequaquam diceret: Vanitati creatura subjecta est, non volens, sed propter eum qui subjecit eam in spe, quia et ipsa creatura liberabitur a servitute corruptionis, in libertatem gloriae filiorum Dei. Scimus enim quod omnis creatura ingemiscit, et parturit usque adhuc (Rom. VIII, 20). Sanctus ergo vir incorruptionis statum desiderans, dicat: Cunctis diebus, quibus nunc milito, exspecto donec veniat immutatio mea. In qua immutatione quid agatur adjungit:

CAPUT XIV.

VERS. 15. — Vocabis me, et ego respondebo tibi. 18. Vocanti Deo respondebimus, cum ad ejus jussum incorruptibiles resurgemus. — Respondere cuilibet dicimur cum ejus factis congrua ad vicem opera reddimus. In illa igitur commutatione vocat Dominus, et respondet homo, quia ante incorrupti claritatem, incorruptus homo ostenditur post corruptionem. Nunc etenim quousque subditi corruptioni sumus, auctori nostro minime respondemus, quia dum corruptio ab incorruptione longe est, similitudo apta nostrae responsioni non est. De illa vero immutatione scriptum est: Cum apparuerit, similes ei erimus, quoniam videbimus eum sicuti est (Joan. III, 2). Tunc ergo vocanti Deo veraciter respondebimus, quando ad summae incorruptionis jussum incorruptibiles surgemus. Et quia hoc percipere creatura ex semetipsa non valet, sed solius 400 omnipotentis Dei dono agitur ut ad tantam incorruptionis gloriam permutetur, recte subjungitur:

CAPUT XV.

IBID. — Operi manuum tuarum porriges dexteram. 19. Quod ex seipso homo consequi non valet. — Ac si patenter dicat: Idcirco creatura tua corruptibilis persistere ad incorruptionem potest, quia tuae potestatis manu erigitur, et tui respectus gratia, ut persistat, tenetur. Humana namque creatura, eo ipso quod creatura est, in semetipsa habet sub se defluere, sed a conditore suo homo accepit, ut et super se contemplatione rapiatur, et in seipso incorruptione teneatur. Creatura ergo ne sub se defluat, sed in incorruptione persistat, ad incommutabilitatis statum auctoris sui dextera levatur. Potest quoque dexterae nomine Filius designari: Quia omnia per ipsum facta sunt (Joan. I, 3). Operi igitur manuum suarum porrexit omnipotens Deus dexteram suam, quia ut abjectum atque in infimis jacens ad summa erigeret genus humanum, incarnatum ad hoc unigenitum misit. Ex cujus nobis incarnatione datum est ut qui ex voluntate propria in corruptionem cecidimus, vocanti nos Deo quandoque ad incorruptionis gloriam respondere valeamus. Qua in re largitatem divinae misericordiae pensare quis valeat, quod ad tantam perducit gloriam hominem post culpam? Pensat Deus mala quae facimus, et tamen per benignitatis suae gratiam ea misericorditer relaxat. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT XVI.

VERS. 16. — Tu quidem gressus meos dinumerasti, sed parcis peccatis meis. 20. Culpae nostrae, ne Deus eas puniat, poenitentia castigandae. — Gressus Deus dinumerat, cum singula quaeque nostra opera propter retributionem signat. Quid enim in gressibus, nisi unaquaeque nostra actio designatur? Omnipotens itaque Deus et gressus dinumerat, et peccatis parcit, quia et subtiliter acta nostra considerat, et tamen haec poenitentibus misericorditer relaxat. Qui et duritiam in peccantibus conspicit, sed tamen hanc, praeveniente gratia, ad poenitentiam emollit. Culpas ergo dinumerat, cum nos ipsos ad singula quae fecimus, deflenda convertit. Quas misericorditer relaxat, quia eas dum nos ipsi punimus, ipse nequaquam in extremo examine judicat, Paulo attestante, qui ait: Si nosmetipsos dijudicaremus, non utique judicaremur (I Cor. XI, 31). Unde adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XVII.

VERS. 17. — Signasti quasi in sacculo delicta mea, sed curasti iniquitatem meam. 21. Peccata, nisi poenitentia diluantur, de sacculo secreti, exibunt ad publicum judicii. — Signantur quasi in sacculo delicta nostra, quia hoc quod nos exterius agimus, nisi poenitentia interveniente diluamus, in secreto judiciorum Dei sub quadam occultatione servatur, ut quandoque etiam de sacculo secreti exeat ad publicum judicii. Unde etiam per Moysen dicitur: Nonne haec congregata sunt apud me, et signata in thesauris meis? In die ultionis reddam illis (Deut. XXXII, 34, 35). Cum vero pro malis quae fecimus disciplinae flagello atterimur, et haec per poenitentiam deflemus, iniquitatem nostram signat et curat, quia nec inulta hic deserit, nec in judicio punienda reservat. Signat igitur delicta, quia ea hic subtiliter attendit ut feriat; curat vero, quia haec per flagellum funditus relaxat. Unde iniquitatem quoque illius persecutoris sui, quem in terra 401 prostraverat, signando curavit, cum de illo ad Ananiam dixit: Vas electionis mihi est iste, ut portet nomen meum coram gentibus, et regibus, et filiis Israel. Ego enim ostendam illi, quanta eum oporteat pro nomine meo pati (Act. IX, 15). Cui enim adhuc pro transactis excessibus venturas passiones minatur, profecto hoc quod deliquerat in corde signatum tenebat. Sed procul dubio delicta ejus signando curaverat, quem Vas electionis vocabat. Vel certe peccata nostra signantur in sacculo cum mala quae fecimus sollicito semper corde pensamus. Quid namque est cor hominis, nisi sacculus Dei? Ubi dum studiose conspicimus per quanta delinquimus, peccata nostra quasi in Dei sacculo signata portamus. An non peccatum suum David signatum tenebat in sacculo, qui dicebat: Iniquitatem meam ego agnosco, et delictum meum coram me est semper (Psal. L, 5)? Et quia culpas, quas non intuendo et poenitendo cognoscimus, pius nobis conditor relaxat, recte post signata in sacculo delicta subjungitur: Sed curasti iniquitatem meam. Ac si aperte dicat: Quae modo signas ut poenitendo videam, agis procul dubio ne in retributione videantur. Sequitur:

CAPUT XVIII.

VERS. 18, 19. — Mons cadens defluit, et saxum transfertur de loco suo. Lapides excavant aquae, et alluvione paulatim terra consumitur, et homines ergo similiter perdes. 22. Alii subitis, alii lentis ac blandis tentationibus evertuntur. — Hoc crebro agitur ut, cadentibus rupibus, saxum ad loca alia transferatur; ut aquae lapides excavent, et paulatim terra alluvionibus consumatur. Sed magna nobis intentione discutiendum est quod infertur: Et homines ergo similiter perdes. Quid est enim hoc, quod cadenti monti et saxo translato, quod excavato lapidi et per alluvionem terrae consumptae perditio humana comparatur, nisi hoc, quod patenter datur intelligi, quia duo sunt genera tentationum? Unum, quod in mente etiam justi hominis per repentinum eventum agitur, quatenus sic subito tentetur, ut hunc inopinato proventu concutiat et prosternat, casumque suum nonnisi postquam ceciderit videat. Aliud vero, quod paulatim venit in mentem, et resistentem animum lenibus suggestionibus inficit, et omnes in eo vires justitiae non nimietate sua, sed assiduitate consumit. Quia ergo alia est tentatio quae justos plerumque subita invasione prosternit, dicatur: Mons cadens defluit, et saxum transfertur de loco suo; id est, mens sancta, cujus locus justitia fuerat, impulsu subito transfertur ad culpam. Rursum quia alia est tentatio, quae se cordi hominis leniter infundit, omnemque duritiam fortitudinis corrumpit atque consumit, dicatur: Lapides excavant aquae, quia videlicet duritiam mentis absorbent assidua et mollia blandimenta libidinis, et lentum atque subtile vitium corrumpit durum et forte propositum mentis. Unde subditur: Et alluvione paulatim terra consumitur. [Vet. XII.] Sicut enim influente aqua paulatim terra consumitur, sic leniter subrepente vitio mens etiam fortis absorbetur. Unde bene subjungitur Et homines ergo similiter perdes. Id est, quia cum tentationem justo judicio ejus menti qui stare in alto cernitur repente dominari permittis, cadere ac defluere montem facis; et cum voluntas ad vitium commutatur, quasi ad locum alium transfertur saxum; 402 cum vero tentationem lentam atque subtilem, sed tamen assiduam, eorum qui fortes esse creduntur praevalere mentibus sinis, quasi lapides excavant aquae, et alluvione paulatim terra consumitur, quia nimirum suggestione leni subacta mentis duritia mollitur. 23. David mons altus repentino casu cecidit. Salomon subrepente paulisper peccati lenocinio. — Videamus David ille quantum mons altus fuerit, qui tanta Dei mysteria prophetico spiritu valuit contemplari; sed aspiciamus quam subito casu defluxit, qui dum, in solario deambulans, alienam conjugem concupivit et abstulit, ejusque virum cum damno sui exercitus interemit (II Reg. XI, 4, seq.), repentino casu mons cecidit, cum mens illa mysteriis coelestibus assueta, inopinata tentatione devicta est, tamque immanissimae turpitudini subacta. Saxum itaque de loco suo translatum est, cum prophetae animus, a prophetiae mysteriis exclusus, ad cogitandas turpitudines venit. Videamus etiam qualiter lapides excavant aquae, et alluvione paulatim terra consumitur. Salomon quippe (32, q. 4, c. Salomon) immoderato usu atque assiduitate mulierum ad hoc usque perductus est, ut templum idolis fabricaret (III Reg. XI, 7); et qui prius Deo templum construxerat, assiduitate libidinis, etiam perfidiae substratus, idolis construere templa non timuit. Sicque factum est ut ab assidua carnis petulantia usque ad mentis perfidiam perveniret. Quid itaque aliud quam aquae excavarunt lapidem, et alluvione paulatim terra consumpta est, quia subripiente paulisper infusione peccati, terra cordis illius ad consumptionem defluxit? Consideret ergo beatus Job utrasque tentationes, vel subitam et immensam, vel lentam atque longiorem; consideret casus hominum, et ex his quae exterius accidunt rapiat interius contemplationem, dicens: Mons cadens defluit, et saxum transfertur de loco suo. Lapides excavant aquae, et alluvione paulatim terra consumitur; et homines ergo similiter perdes; id est, sicut haec insensibilia modo subito corruunt, modo paulisper infusa aquarum mollitie consumuntur, ita etiam eum quem rationabilem condidisti, vel subita tentatione dejicis, vel longa ac lenta consumi permittis. Atque mox eamdem rationabilem creaturam verbis sequentibus explicat, dicens:

CAPUT XIX.

VERS. 20. — Roborasti eum paululum, ut in perpetuum transiret. 24. Vitae brevi succedit aeternitas. — Paululum roboratus est homo, quia hic vivendi vires ad modicum accepit ut in perpetuum transeat ubi ejus vitam terminus non concludat. Sed in hac brevitate ubi roboratus est colligit unde in perpetuitate inveniat, vel ut semper gaudeat, vel ut suscepta supplicia non evadat. Qui pro eo quod paululum roboratus est ut in perpetuum transeat, apte mox subditur:

CAPUT XX.

IBID. — Immutabis faciem ejus, et emittes eum. 25. Hominis in morte quanta mutatio. — Facies hominis immutatur cum ejus species morte atteritur. Emittitur vero, quia ab his quae volens tenuit transire ad aeterna cogitur nolens; dumque ad illa perducitur, haec quae diu cogitata tenuit qualiter sese habitura sint relicta nescit. Unde et additur.

CAPUT XXI.

VERS. 21. Sive nobiles fuerint filii ejus, sive ignobiles, non intelligit. 26. Animae sanctorum Deum videntes, nihil eorum quae extra se sunt ignorant; secus aliae. — Sicut enim hi qui adhuc viventes sunt 403 mortuorum animae quo loco habeantur ignorant, ita mortui vita in carne viventium post eos qualiter disponatur nesciunt, quia et vita spiritus longe est a vita carnis; et sicut corporea atque incorporea diversa sunt genere, ita etiam distincta cognitione. Quod tamen de animabus sanctis sentiendum non est, quia quae intus omnipotentis Dei claritatem vident nullo modo credendum est quia foris sit aliquid quod ignorent. Sed carnales quique, quia amorem praecipuum filiis impendunt, hoc eos beatus Job nescire postmodum asserit quod hic vehementer amaverunt, ut sive nobiles, sive ignobiles sint filii nesciant, quorum eos semper cura fatigabat. Quod tamen si intelligi spiritaliter debet, non incongrue filiorum nomine opera designantur; sicut de muliere Paulus dicit: Quia salva erit per filiorum generationem (I Tim. II, 15). Neque enim mulier quae, continentiae studens, nequaquam filios generat salva non erit, sed per generationem filiorum salvari dicitur, quia per effectum bonorum operum perpetuae saluti sociatur. Nobiles ergo sunt filii recta opera, ignobiles autem facta perversa. Et saepe homo agere quaelibet bona intentione nititur; sed tamen pro multis, quae subrepunt, ejus acta apud omnipotentem Deum qualiter habeantur, incertum est. Sive itaque nobiles fuerint filii ejus, sive ignobiles, non intelligit, quia, subtili examine discussa, utrum approbentur ejus opera an reprobentur ignorat. Et hic ergo homo in dolore laboris est positus, et illuc ducitur in timore suspicionis. Unde adhuc de ipso praesentis vitae labore subjungitur:

CAPUT XXII.

VERS. 22. — Attamen caro ejus, dum vivit, dolebit, et anima ejus super semetipso lugebit. 27. Qui carnis voluptatibus delectantur, majores ex carne tribulationes experiuntur. — De conjugibus Paulus dicit: Tribulationem tamen carnis habebunt hujusmodi (I Cor. VII, 28). Sed tribulationem carnis hic pati possunt, etiam jam qui spiritaliter vivunt. Cur ergo inesse conjugibus carnis tribulatio quasi specialiter dicitur, quae etiam a vita spiritalium longe non est, nisi quod hi frequenter majores tribulationes ex carne suscipiunt qui carnis voluptatibus delectantur? Bene autem dicitur: Et anima ejus super semetipso lugebit, quia quisquis gaudere in se appetit, eo ipso jam in luctu est quo a vera laetitia recessit. Vera quippe laetitia mentis creator est Dignum itaque est ut in se semper homo moerores inveniat, qui, derelicto creatore, in se gaudium quaerebat. Sequitur.

CAPUT XXIII.

CAP. XV, VERS. 1, 2. — Respondens autem Eliphaz Themanites, dixit: Nunquid sapiens respondebit quasi in ventum loquens, et implebit ardore stomachum suum? 28. Mali bonorum verba non rationis sententias, sed furoris stimulos censent. — Crebro jam diximus beatum Job typum sanctae universalis Ecclesiae, amicos vero illius haereticorum speciem tenere, qui, quasi ex defensione Domini, occasionem stultae locutionis inveniunt, et contumeliosa contra bonos verba jaculantur. Quibus cuncta quae a fidelibus sentiuntur quasi in ventum prolata displicent. Unde nunc dicitur: Nunquid sapiens respondebit quasi in ventum loquens? Nec bonorum verba dicta rationis, sed stimulos furoris existimant. Unde et subditur. Et implebit ardore stomachum suum. Quia ea etiam quae se sciunt contumeliose dicere, student semper, ut dictum est, ex Domini defensione palliare. Unde 404 Eliphaz subdit:

CAPUT XXIV.

VERS. 3. — Arguis verbis eum qui non est aequalis tibi, et loqueris quod tibi non expedit. 29. Dum vera quae exprobrent non inveniunt, falsa fingunt haeretici. — Nullum vero existimant timorem Domini habere, nisi eum quem potuerint ad suae confessionis stultitiam trahere. Unde adjungit: — VERS. 4 — Quantum in te est, evacuasti timorem, et tulisti preces coram Deo. Tulisti dicitur abstulisti, ac si aperte dicat: De tua justitia praesumens, Creatoris tui gratiam despicis deprecari. Cum enim vera mala haeretici contra bonos non inveniunt, fingunt quae redarguant, ut justi esse videantur, et fit plerumque ut ad aperta contumeliarum verba perveniant. Unde adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XXV.

VERS. 5. — Docuit enim iniquitas tua os tuum, et imitaris linguam blasphemantium. 30. Dei honori specie caventes, bonitati detrahunt. — Iniquitas os docet quando ex mala vita concipitur quod pejus dicatur. Quia autem beatus Job tanto in ore liber fuerat quanto justus in opere, ab amicis suis haereticorum typum tenentibus, et de iniqua vita, et de audaci ore reprehenditur, ut dicatur: Docuit enim iniquitas tua os tuum. Ac si aperte ei diceretur: Quod perverse loqueris, ex perversiore didicisti vita. Saepe vero haeretici dum quasi venerantur Deum, ejus mysteriis contradicunt, et humilitatem putant si veritatem denegant. Sunt namque nonnulli qui Deo se injuriam irrogare existimant si eum veram carnem assumpsisse fateantur, aut si hunc veraciter pro nobis carne mori potuisse crediderint. Cumque Deo quasi plus honoris conantur tribuere, coguntur laudes veras bonitatis illius negare. Quid enim est in charitatis suae laude potentius quam ut illa sibi pro nobis digna ad susceptionem faceret, quae ei videntur indigna? Sancta autem Ecclesia veram carnem, veram mortem illius confitetur; sed haec dicens, ab haereticis irrogare Deo contumeliam creditur. Unde nunc dicitur: Et imitaris linguam blasphemantium. Cui si quid in hoc mundo adversitatis evenerit, hoc ei contingere ex ipsa hac injuria suae confessionis dicunt. Unde adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XXVI.

VERS. 6. — Condemnabit te os tuum et non ego, et labia tua respondebunt tibi. 31. Rectae fidei confessionem adversitatis flagellis puniri delirant. — Quia enim ex errore confessionis existimant mala adversitatis erumpere, labia sua ei asserunt respondere, ut culpa eloquii sit causa flagelli. Aliquando vero eam comprimere quasi ratiocinantes volunt. Unde Eliphaz beatum Job reprehendere quasi ex ratione conatur, dicens:

CAPUT XXVII.

VERS. 7, 8. — Nunquid primus homo tu natus es, et ante colles formatus? Nunquid consilium Dei audisti, et inferior te erit ejus sapientia? 32. Dum divinam gloriam defendere videntur, suae prospiciunt. — Ac si verbis apertioribus dicat: Qui de aeterno loqueris pensa quia temporalis es, qui de ejus sapientia disputas, pensa quia ejus consilium ignoras. Sed quia ad hoc haeretici verba dominicae defensionis assumunt, ut docti esse videantur, et dum divinam gloriam defendere videntur, suam scientiam hominibus innotescant, ipsa hoc Eliphaz subjuncta verba testantur, qui loqui quidem de sapientia Dei coepit, sed statim ad suam elationem cecidit, dicens: VERS. 9. — Quid nosti quod ignoremus? quid intelligis quod nesciamus? 405 Quae videlicet dicta patenter ostendunt ex qua mentis elatione prodeat quidquid quasi ad Dominicam defensionem sonat. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXVIII.

VERS. 10. — Et senes et antiqui sunt in nobis multo vetustiores quam patres tui. 33. De antiquorum patrum magisterio et consensu falso sibi blandiuntur. — Quia omnes haeretici a sancta universali Ecclesia sunt egressi, testatur Joannes, qui ait: Ex nobis prodierunt, sed non erant ex nobis (I Joan. II, 19). Sed ut ea quae asserunt commendare stultis mentibus hominum quasi de antiquitate possint, antiquos patres se habere testantur, atque ipsos doctores Ecclesiae suae professionis magistros dicunt. Cumque praesentes praedicatores despiciunt de antiquorum Patrum magisterio falsa praesumptione gloriantur, ut ea quae ipsi dicunt, etiam antiquos patres tenuisse fateantur, quatenus hoc quod rectitudine astruere non valent quasi ex illorum auctoritate confirment. Quia vero scriptum est: Quem diligit Dominus castigat, flagellat autem omnem filium quem recipit (Hebr. XII, 6). Saepe sancta Ecclesia multis in hac vita adversitatibus laborat, et reproborum vita tanto sine flagello dimittitur, quanto ad nulla praemia servatur. Sed afflictiones sanctae Ecclesiae videntes haeretici, eam despiciunt, et tot illam flagellis atteri ex pravae professionis merito suspicantur. Unde adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XXIX.

VERS. 11. — Nunquid grande est ut consoletur te Deus? sed verba tua prava hoc prohibent. 34. Afflictam Ecclesiam despiciunt. — Ac si ei patenter dicat: Si professionem fidei corrigeres, jamdudum consolationem a flagellis habere potuisses. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXX.

VERS. 12. — Quid te elevat cor tuum, et, quasi magna cogitans, attonitos habes oculos? 35. Sanctorum contemplationem irrident nunquam experti. — Saepe justorum mens ita ad altiora contemplanda suspenditur, ut exterius eorum facies obstupuisse videatur. Sed quia hanc contemplationis vim in occulto agere haeretici ignorant, hoc a justis et recta sapientibus fieri magis per hypocrisim quam per veritatem putant, quia hoc quod ipsi habere nequeunt inesse veraciter aliis non suspicantur. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXI.

VERS. 13. — Quid tumet contra Deum spiritus tuus, ut proferas de ore tuo hujuscemodi sermones? 36. Justorum et iniquorum verba saepe similia, sed cor dissimile. Haeretici falsis quaedam vera permiscent, non rejicienda. — Plerumque justi aliquibus necessitatibus afflicti sua opera coguntur fateri, quod beatus Job fecerat, quem post justitiam flagella deprimebant; sed cum eorum dicta injusti audiunt, haec per elationem potius quam per veritatem existimant prolata. Ex suis enim cordibus verba justorum pensant, et dici humiliter posse verba bona non existimant. Sicut enim gravis culpa est sibi hoc hominem arrogare quod non est, sic plerumque culpa nulla est, si humiliter bonum dicat quod est. Unde saepe contingit ut justi et injusti habeant verba similia, sed tamen semper cor longe dissimile, et ex quibus dictis Dominus ab injustis offenditur, in eisdem quoque a justis placatur. Nam Pharisaeus ingressus templum, dicebat: Jejuno bis in Sabbato, decimas do omnium quae possideo (Luc. XVIII, 12); sed justificatus magis publicanus, quam ille exiit. Ezechias quoque rex cum, molestia corporis afflictus, ad extremitatem pervenisset vitae, in oratione compunctus dixit: Obsecro, Domine, memento, quaeso, quomodo ambulaverim coram te in veritate et in corde perfecto (Isai. XXXVIII, 3). Nec tamen Dominus 406 hanc confessionem perfectionis ejus despexit, aut renuit, quem mox in suis precibus exaudivit. Ecce Pharisaeus se justificavit in opere, et Ezechias justum se esse asseruit etiam in cogitatione, atque unde ille offendit, inde iste Dominum placavit. Cur itaque hoc, nisi quia omnipotens Deus singulorum verba a cogitationibus pensat, et in ejus auribus superba non sunt quae humili corde proferuntur? Unde beatus Job, cum sua opera protulit, contra Deum nullo modo tumuit, quia ea quae veraciter fecerat humiliter dixit. Sed solent haeretici errorum suorum dictis vera aliqua permiscere, et amici beati Job quamvis in reprehensione ejus omnimodo fallantur, possunt tamen et quaedam vera dicere, quae ex illius assiduitate didicerunt. Quorum dicta si omnia refutanda essent, Eliphaz sententiam Paulus apostolus minime protulisset, dicens: Apprehendit sapientes in astutia eorum (I Cor. III, 19). Quia igitur et ea quae recta dicunt contra beatum Job recte non dicunt, nos in eorum dictis et calcemus vitium indiscretionis, et discutiamus vires rectitudinis. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXII.

VERS. 14. — Quid est homo, ut immaculatus sit? 37. Homo ex humo et ex muliere ortus, qui possit esse sine macula? — Eo enim ipso quo dicitur homo, terrenus exprimitur et infirmus: homo enim ab humo appellatus est. Et quomodo esse valet sine macula, qui sponte sua ad infirmitatem concidit factus de terra? Ubi et additur, — IBID. — Et ut justus appareat natus de muliere. Primam quippe viro injustitiam mulier propinavit in paradiso. Quomodo ergo justus apparebit, qui de illa natus est quae injustitiae propinatrix exstitit? Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXIII.

VERS. 15. — Ecce inter sanctos ejus nemo immutabilis, et coeli non sunt mundi in conspectu ejus. 38. Solus Deus mutabilitatis expers. — Hoc coelorum nomine repetiit quod sanctorum prius appellatione signavit. Nam de eisdem sanctis scriptum est: Coeli enarrant gloriam Dei (Psal. XVIII, 1). Qui per naturam omnes in semetipsis propriam mutabilitatem habent; sed dum immutabili veritati studiose semper inhaerere desiderant, inhaerendo agunt, ut immutabiles fiant. Cumque ad hanc toto affectu se tenent, quandoque accipiunt ut super semetipsos ducti vincant hoc quod in semetipsis mutabiles exstiterunt. Quid enim mutabilitas nisi mors quaedam est? Quae dum rem quamlibet in aliam immutat, quasi occidit quod fuerat, ut incipiat esse quod non erat. Et de auctore omnium scriptum est: Qui solus habet immutabilitatem (I Tim. VI, 16), quia videlicet in semetipso solus immutabilis est. De quo per Jacobum dicitur: Apud quem non est transmutatio, nec vicissitudinis obumbratio (Jac. I, 17). Ipsa enim mutabilitas umbra est, quae quasi obscuraret lucem, si hanc per aliquas vicissitudines permutaret. Sed quia in Deo mutabilitas non venit, nulla ejus lumen umbra vicissitudinis intercidit. Bene autem dicitur: Coeli non sunt mundi in conspectu ejus, quia per semetipsos ante districtum Dei judicium nec ipsi esse mundi ad perfectum possunt qui munditiae praedicatores fiunt, Joanne attestante, qui ait: Si dixerimus quia peccatum non habemus, ipsi nos seducimus (I Joan. I, 3). Si igitur inter sanctos illius nemo immutabilis est, et coeli in conspectu ejus non sunt mundi, quis apud se de justitiae opere praesumat? Unde et subditur: 407

CAPUT XXXIV.

VERS. 16. — Quanto magis abominabilis et inutilis homo, qui bibit quasi aquas iniquitatem? 39. Mala opera nostra nequissima esse, sed bona imperfecta et inutilia. — Qui immaculatum prius hominem et justum per se posse esse negaverat, hunc abominabilem et inutilem appellat: abominabilem scilicet propter immunditiam maculae, inutilem vero propter injustitiam imperfectae vitae. Qui tamen abominabilis et inutilis intelligi et aliter potest. Aliquando enim homo perversus quaedam recte agere videtur, sed per ea quae iniqua sunt etiam ea quae ejus recta sunt destruuntur. Et quia multum Deo displicent mala, neque illa placent quae videntur bona. Qui ergo in malis suis Deo abominabilis est, in bonis est inutilis, quia dum se per prava opera Deo exsecrabilem exhibet, nec illud de eo quod rectum videtur placet. Bene autem dicitur: Qui bibit quasi aquas iniquitatem. Hoc namque quod comeditur cum mora glutitur, quia manditur ut glutiatur. Quod autem bibitur, tanto ad glutiendum moram non habet, quanto nullam et ad mandendum necessitatem habet. Culpa ergo, quia a stulto homine sine ulla retractatione perpetratur, quasi aqua iniquitas bibitur. Quia enim illicita sine timore facit, quasi potum injustitiae sine obstaculo glutit. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXV.

VERS. 17. — Ostendam tibi, audi me, quod vidi narrabo tibi. 40. Superbi quo altius per intelligentiam assurgunt, per elationem gravius cadunt. — Habent hoc omnes arrogantes proprium, ut cum rectum quid vel parvum senserint, in usum hoc elationis inflectant; atque unde per intellectum sibimetipsis altiores fiant, inde per tumorem in foveam elationis cadant, seque doctis doctiores existiment, reverentiam sibi a melioribus exigant, et docere sanctiores quasi ex auctoritate contendant. Unde nunc dicitur: Ostendam tibi, audi me. Et quia cum minore auctoritate docet is qui audita quam is qui ea quae viderit loquitur, ut fortiorem sibimet auctoritatem Eliphaz arroget, dicit: Quod vidi narrabo tibi. Quia vero nonnunquam haeretici de damnatis suis patribus confunduntur, et tamen eorum sententias quasi cum auctoritate ad medium proferunt, ex quorum stultitia jure reprobantur, recte ipsa haereticorum audacia subinfertur, cum dicitur:

CAPUT XXXVI.

VERS. 18. — Sapientes confitentur, et non abscondunt patres suos. 41. Quos erroris magistros habuerunt haeretici, quam insulse jactitent sapientes. — In quorum et laudem prosiliunt, et eos velut solos Ecclesiae praefuisse gloriantur. Unde adhuc subditur: — VERS. 19: — Quibus solis data est terra, et non transivit alienus per eos. Solis suis patribus datam terram existimant, quia solos errorum suorum magistros rexisse veraciter Ecclesiam putant. Quis vero alienus nisi apostata angelus vocatur? Unde et per Psalmistam de cunctis simul malignis spiritibus dicitur: Quoniam alieni insurrexerunt in me, et fortes quaesierunt animam meam (Psal. LIII, 5). Haeretici igitur, quia doctorum suorum corda apostatae angelo existimant non fuisse subjecta, transisse per eos alienum denegant. Cui videlicet alieno per unumquemque transire est iniquas in corde ejus cogitationes immittere. Unde et per prophetae vocem de malignis spiritibus contra stantem animam dicitur: Et dixerunt animae tuae: Incurvare 408 ut transeamus (Isai. LI, 23). Sed Eliphaz Themanites quia quaedam narraturus audiri vult, quamvis multa quae dicenda sunt sciat, sed quia beato Job dicenda non erant nesciat, audiamus sententias quas contra beatum Job protulit. Nec enim debemus cui, sed solum pensare quid dixit. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXVII.

VERS. 20. — Cunctis diebus suis impius superbit. 42. Electi in humilitate, reprobi in superbia vitam finiunt. — Solent etiam electi in quibusdam suis cogitationibus atque actibus superbire. Sed quia electi sunt, cunctis diebus suis superbire non possunt, quia priusquam vitam finiant, ad humilitatis metum ab elatione corda commutant. Impius vero diebus suis omnibus superbit, quia sic vitam terminat, ut ab elatione minime recedat. Circumspicit quod temporaliter floret, et pensare negligit quo in aeternum ducitur. In vita carnis fiduciam ponit, eaque diu permanere existimat quae ad praesens tenet. Solidatur in elatione animus, in despectum adducitur omnis propinquus; quam repentina mors subrepat nunquam considerat; quam sit ejus incerta felicitas nunquam pensat. Qui si incertitudinem fugacis vitae conspiceret, incerta pro certo nequaquam teneret. Unde et bene subditur:

CAPUT XXXVIII.

IBID. — Et numerus annorum incertus est tyrannidis ejus. 43. Mors timeri debet, quod praevideri nequeat. — Superbire enim minime debuisset, etiam si annorum suorum numerum certum habere potuisset, ut sciens quantum viveret, praesciret quando se ab elatione removeret. At postquam praesens vita semper incerta est, tanto semper mors subrepens timeri debet, quanto nunquam praevideri valet. Bene autem superbiam impii tyrannidem vocat. Proprie enim tyrannus dicitur qui in communi republica non jure principatur. Sed sciendum est quia omnis superbus juxta modum proprium tyrannidem exercet. Nam quod nonnunquam alius in republica, hoc est, per acceptam dignitatis potentiam, alius in provincia, alius in civitate, alius in domo propria, alius per latentem nequitiam hoc exercet apud se in cogitatione sua. Nec intuetur Dominus quantum quisque mali valeat facere, sed quantum velit. Et cum deest potestas foris, apud se tyrannus est, cui iniquitas dominatur intus, quia etsi exterius non affligit proximos, intrinsecus tamen habere potestatem appetit, ut affligat. Et quia omnipotens Deus corda pensat, jam in ejus oculis impius egit quod cogitavit. Ad hoc autem conditor noster latere nos voluit finem nostrum, ut dum incerti sumus quando moriamur, semper ad mortem parati inveniamur. Unde recte postquam dictum est: Cunctis diebus suis impius superbit, adjungit: Et numerus annorum incertus est tyrannidis ejus. Ac si aperte diceretur: Cur quasi de certo extollitur, cujus vita sub poena incertitudinis tenetur? Sed omnipotens Deus prave agentibus non solum ventura supplicia reservat, sed eorum corda hic etiam ubi delinquunt poenis implicat, ut eo ipso quo peccant semetipsos feriant, ut semper trepidi semperque suspecti mala ab aliis pati metuant, quae se aliis fecisse meminerunt. Unde adhuc de hoc impio subditur:

CAPUT XXXIX.

VERS. 21. — Sonitus terroris semper in auribus illius; et cum pax sit, ille insidias suspicatur. 44. Simplicitas cordis arx munitissima. — Nil autem simplici corde felicius, quia quo 409 innocentiam erga alios exhibet, nihil est quod pati ab aliis formidet. Habet enim quasi arcem quamdam fortitudinis simplicitatem suam. Nec suspectus est pati quod se fecisse non meminit. Unde bene per Salomonem dicitur: In timore Domini fiducia fortitudinis (Prov. XIV, 26). Qui et rursum ait: Secura mens, quasi juge convivium (Prov. XV, 15). Quasi enim continuatio refectionis est ipsa tranquillitas securitatis. At contra mens prava semper est in laboribus, quia aut molitur mala quae inferat, aut metuit ne haec sibi ab aliis inferantur. Et quidquid contra proximos excogitat, hoc contra se excogitari a proximis formidat. Fit undique suspecta, undique trepida. Omnis qui ad memoriam venit exquirere contraria creditur. Cui ergo tranquillitas securitatis deest, huic procul dubio terroris sonitus semper in auribus est. Et saepe contingit ut illi quilibet proximus suus simpliciter loquatur, nil adversum cogitet. Sed cum pax sit, ille insidias suspicatur, quia qui semper dolose agit, simpliciter erga se agi non aestimat. Et quia scriptum est: Impius cum in profundum venerit peccatorum, contemnit (Prov. XVIII, 3), involutus iniquitatis suae tenebris jam de luce desperat. Unde et sequitur:

CAPUT XL.

VERS. 22. — Non credit quod reverti possit de tenebris ad lucem, circumspectans undique gladium. 45. Impius desperata salute, ad nequitiam semper excrescit. — Quia dum feriri se undique insidiis credit, salute desperata, semper ad nequitiam excrescit. Aliquando vero iste perversus etiam superna judicia attendit, et super se haec venire metuit. Sed cum stipendium vitae praesentis quaerit, haec eadem judicia quae metuere coeperat avaritiae devictus insania contemnit. Et quidem mori se posse in peccato existimat, sed tamen a peccato non cessat. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT XLI.

VERS. 23. — Cum se moverit ad quaerendum panem, novit quod paratus sit in manu ejus tenebrarum dies. 46. Etsi feriri metuat, semper auget quo feriatur. — Panis etenim, stipendium vitae praesentis; tenebrarum vero dies tempus ultionis accipitur. In actu itaque suo aliquando iste perversus iram superni judicis perpendit praesentem; sed a malo non avertitur, ut etiam ipsa quoque ab ejus interitu valeat averti. Accusante se autem conscientia feriri metuit, sed tamen semper auget quo feriatur. Contemnit reditum suum, desperat veniam, superbit in culpa; sed tamen testem suae nequitiae intus habet timorem. Et quamvis prava videatur foris audacter agere, de his tamen apud semetipsum cogitur trepidare. Unde scriptum est: Cum enim sit timida nequitia, dat testimonium condemnationi (Sap. XVII, 10), quia cum illicita quisquis perpetrat, pavet quod facit; et apertus damnationis testis est ipse timor iniquitatis, quia et timetur quod agitur, et tamen malum non vincitur quod timetur. De quo et adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XLII.

VERS. 24. — Terrebit eum tribulatio, et angustia vallabit eum, sicut regem qui praeparatur ad praelium. 47. Quot angustiis vallatur, qui securitatis sociam, viam veritatis relinquit. Plana est veritatis via; asperum iter mendacii. — In omne quod iniquus agit tribulatione et angustia vallatur, quia cor ejus anxietate et suspicione confunditur. Alius occulte appetit vi aliena diripere, qui laborat in cogitationibus, ne 410 deprehendi valeat. Alius, relicta veritate, mentiri deliberat, ut audientium animum fallat. Sed quantus labor est sollicite custodire ne ipsa ejus fallacia deprehendi queat? Ponit quippe ante oculos quid sibi a veritatem scientibus responderi possit, et cum magno cogitatu pertractat quomodo per argumenta falsitatis documenta veritatis exsuperet. Hinc inde se circumtegit, et contra hoc, ubi deprehendi potuerit, veritati similem responsionem quaerit, qui si vellet verum dicere, utique sine labore potuisset. Plana quippe veritatis via, et grave est iter mendacii. Unde et per prophetam dicitur: Docuerunt enim linguam suam loqui mendacium, ut inique agerent laboraverunt (Jerem. IX, 5). Bene ergo dicitur: Terrebit eum tribulatio, et angustia vallabit eum, quia apud semetipsum in labore timoris deficit, qui securitatis sociam viam veritatis relinquit. Qui bene regi praeparato ad praelium comparatur, quia in eo ipso malo quod agit, et terretur, et festinat, et ex conscientia trepidat, et ex desiderio anhelat, metuit et superbit, pavescit suspicionibus, et mentem per audaciam erigit. Sciendum quoque est quia rex qui praeparatur ad praelium sic de hoste suspectus est, ut eidem quoque quem ducit exercitui metuat, ne labefactetur, ne per destitutionem militum jaculis pateat inimicorum. Iniquus ergo angustia vallatur, sicut rex qui praeparatur ad praelium, quia videlicet falsa agens, falsa loquens, formidat ne suos amittat milites, id est, argumenta falsitatis, et veritatis jaculis pateat, si ei fortasse defuerit quod ex fallacia opponat. Sed quamvis animus trepidet, quamvis conscientia accuset, cupiditate tamen sua iniquus vincitur, et suppresso pavore audaciam de iniquitatibus sumit. Et saepe etiam ultione menti proposita, se contra Deum erigit, quaelibet ab eo adversa perpeti deliberat, dummodo hic, dum valet, omne quod placet agat. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT XLIII.

VERS. 25, 26. — Tetendit enim adversus Deum manum suam, et contra Omnipotentem roboratus est. Cucurrit adversus eum erecto collo, et pingui cervice armatus est. 48. Pravorum voluntati quandoque Deus per misericordiam obsistit, quam iratus aliquando sinit impleri. — Haec de ipso iniquorum capite, scilicet Antichristo, apertius sentiuntur qui contra Deum manum erigens, roborari dicitur, quia parvo tempore permittitur exaltari, ut quo ad modicum gloriari sinitur, eo in perpetuum atrocius puniatur. Sed quia ejus membra sunt omnes iniqui, hoc quod in fine mundi ille tunc singulariter acturus est unus, videamus modo qualiter a malis agatur singulis. Sunt namque nonnulli qui et si qua aliquando agere contra omnipotentis Dei judicium nituntur, ipsa impossibilitate explendae suae voluntatis fracti, ad semetipsos respiciunt, atque ad eum quem contemnere voluerant convertuntur; et qui discedere longe potuerant, si quod vellent implere valuissent, per hoc aliquando salvantur, quia quod nequiter voluerunt, implere nequiverunt. Unde ad se reducti, cujus sint conditionis aspiciunt, et plangunt se contraria veritati voluisse. Et sunt nonnulli 411 qui hoc quod perverse contra Deum appetunt justo Dei judicio implere nequius permittuntur. Et cum eos malitia accendit, potentia roborat, tanto jam semetipsos in errore cognoscere nequeunt, quanto in rebus affluentibus extra se semper per potentiam trahuntur. De quorum nunc intentione dicitur:

Tetendit enim adversus Deum manum suam, et contra Omnipotentem roboratus est. Contra Deum quippe manum tendere est in operatione prava, despectis Dei judiciis, perseverare. Et quia tunc magis irascitur Deus, quando permittit impleri quod saltem concipi in cogitatione non debuit, contra Omnipotentem iniquus iste roboratur, quia prosperari in mala sua actione permittitur, quatenus et perversa faciat, et tamen feliciter vivat. De quo adhuc subditur: Cucurrit adversus eum erecto collo. 49. Opulentorum superborum quanta in pravis operibus audacia. — Erecto collo contra Deum currere est ea quae Creatori displicent cum audacia perpetrare. De quo recte dicitur: Cucurrit, id est, in malo opere obstaculum de adversitate non habuit. De quo adhuc, additur: Et pingui cervice armatus est. Pinguis cervix est opulenta superbia, affluentibus videlicet rebus quasi multis carnibus fulta. Potens igitur iniquus pingui cervice contra Deum armatur, qui, rebus temporalibus tumens contra praecepta veritatis, quasi de magnitudine carnis erigitur. Quid enim paupertas nisi quaedam macies, et quid rerum abundantia nisi pinguedo est vitae praesentis? Pingui ergo cervice se contra Deum erigit qui temporalem abundantiam in superbiam assumit. Habent enim hoc potentes et iniqui proprium, ut, fallacibus divitiis occupati, veras Dei opes negligant; et quanto minus quod verum est inquirunt, tanto amplius falsis divitiis extollantur. Cura etenim multiplex terrenarum rerum, quia occupat, excaecat. Unde adhuc apte subjungitur:

CAPUT XLIV.

VERS. 27. — Operuit faciem ejus crassitudo. 50. Terrenarum rerum abundantia oculos claudente. — Visus quippe in facie est, in qua et prima corporis honorabilior pars est. Non ergo immerito mentis intentio per faciem designatur, quam quolibet vertimus, illuc videmus. Faciem ergo crassitudo operit, quia desiderata terrenarum rerum abundantia oculos mentis premit, et hoc quod in eis esse honorabile debuit, ante Dei oculos foedat, quia curis multiplicibus aggravat. Quibus tamen nec solum sufficit ut ipsi superbiant, nisi et hi qui eis conjuncti sunt de eorum pinguedine etiam ipsi glorientur. Nam sunt nonnulli qui patronis majoribus adjuti superbiunt, et de eorum potentia contra inopes extolluntur. Unde et adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XLV.

IBID. — Et de lateribus ejus arvina dependet. 51. Qui iniquo potenti adhaerent, de ejus potentia tument. — Quia arvina pinguedo carnis est, et latera dicere divitum solemus hos quos eis conjunctos cernimus, arvina de ejus lateribus dependet, quia quisquis potenti et iniquo adhaeret, ipse quoque de ejus potentia, velut ex pinguedine rerum, tumet, ut, patroni perversi iniquitatem sequens, Deum non timeat, quos valet, et quantum valet, 412 pauperes affligat, de gloria temporali cor elevet. Cum ergo talis est qui iniquo potenti adhaeret, de ejus profecto latere arvina dependet. De quibus adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XLVI.

VERS. 28. — Habitabit in civitatibus desolatis, et in domibus desertis, quae in tumulos sunt redactae. 52. Ille vicissim dum sibi conjunctorum laudibus extollitur, ad prava opera vehementius rapitur. — Quia enim a conversatione conviventium civitas appellatur, civitates desolatae sunt ipsi obsequentium cunei perversorum, quorum clamoribus perversus iste laudatur cum ad prava opera per nequitiam rapiatur. Unde scriptum est: Laudatur peccator in desiderio animae suae, et qui iniqua agit benedicitur (Psal. X, 3, sec. Hebr.). Domus vero desertae sunt cogitationes pravae, quas iniquus iste inhabitat, quia per omne quod agit iniquorum hominum placere cogitationibus appetit. Quae civitates desolatae, et domus desertae recte nominantur, quia nisi omnipotens Deus, talium conversationes cogitationesque, praecedentibus eorum culpis, relinqueret, ad graviora perpetranda minime pervenirent. Bene autem dicitur: Quae in tumulos sunt redactae. Ruentia namque domorum atque civitatum aedificia tumulos faciunt, quoniam dum pravi quique confusis actionibus sibimetipsis ad perversa opera junguntur, ostendunt procul dubio quia de aedificio vitae ceciderunt. Sequitur:

CAPUT XLVII.

VERS. 29. — Non habitabitur, nec perseverabit substantia ejus, nec mittet in terram radicem suam. 53. Virtutibus non ditatur nisi cujus mentem Deus inhabitat. Sine radice stat superbus, leni flatu statim prostrandus. — Quod hic Non habitabitur dictum est in quibusdam Codicibus reperi Non ditabitur; sed sensus non discrepat, quamvis a se sermo discordet. Ille enim virtutibus ditatur, cujus mentem inhabitat omnipotens Deus. Sed quia superbi cogitatio ab auctoris sui gratia non inhabitatur, profecto per hoc virtutibus non ditatur. Propter hoc ergo quod interius est vacuus, dicatur: Non inhabitabitur; propter hoc vero quod transitorium foris tumet, recte subjungit: Nec perseverabit substantia ejus. Ac si aperte dicatur: Hoc quod habere videtur exterius transit, et illud quod transire non poterat interius non habet. Unde et apte subjungitur: Nec mittet in terra radicem suam. Quod si de hac terra dictum accipimus, liquet procul dubio quia arbor quae in terra radicem non habet, vel tenuissimis commota flatibus cadit. Et superbus quisque dum contra omnipotentem Dominum roboratur, dum currit erecto collo, et pingui cervice contra auctorem erigitur, stare quasi arbor videtur. Sed status ejus sine radice est, quia velut ad lenem flatum, sic ad motum occultae sententiae vita ejus eruitur. Sin vero hoc loco terram aeternae vitae retributionem accipimus, de qua Propheta ait: Portio mea in terra viventium (Psal. CXLI, 6), iniquus iste in terra radicem suam non mittit, quia nunquam ad aeternae vitae desiderium cordis sui cogitationes plantat. Quod enim radix arbori, hoc unicuique hominum cogitatio sua est, quia in hoc quod exterius videtur, per illud tenetur quod exterius non videtur. Unde et per prophetam dicitur: Mittet radicem deorsum, et faciet fructum sursum (Isai. XXXVII, 31). Cum enim cogitationem nostram ad compatiendum indigenti proximo tendimus, 413 quasi radicem deorsum mittimus, ut retributionis fructum superius faciamus. Sequitur:

CAPUT XLVIII.

VERS. 30. — Non recedet de tenebris. 54. Quia lucem justitiae non quaerit, de tenebris non recedit. — Si superbus iste a culpa ad justitiam redire voluisset, de tenebris recederet. Sed quia lucem justitiae non quaerit, de tenebris non recedit. Cujus etiam exemplo hi qui ei adhaerent in terrenis profectibus anhelant, avaritiae facibus accenduntur, desideriorum carnalium ignibus uruntur. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT XLIX.

IBID — Ramos ejus arefaciet flamma. 55. Desideriorum carnalium facibus cum sibi conjunctis uritur. — Si enim sibi quosdam aeternam patriam quaerentes adjungeret, ramos in se virides haberet. Sed quia ipsi quoque qui ei conjuncti sunt terrenis desideriis aestuant, et dum desideriorum flamma clientium ejus animos accendit, scilicet ramos ejus arefacit, ut fructum boni operis non ferant, quia ad appetenda infima per nequitiam anhelant. Bene autem subditur:

CAPUT L.

IBID. — Et auferetur spiritu oris sui. 56. Propter laxata linguae frena gravissime torquendus. — Superbus etenim quisque quo in hac vita plus valet, eo sibi linguae frena audacius relaxat, ut loquatur perversa quaelibet, nullum de verbis suis metuat, istos contumeliis feriat, illos maledictionibus jaculetur. Nonnunquam vero in blasphemiam contra conditorem rapitur, sicut de talibus per Psalmistam dicitur: Posuerunt in coelum os suum, et lingua eorum transivit super terram (Psal. LXXII, 9): Unde et dives in igne positus, stillari sibi aquam ex digito Lazari in linguam postulat (Luc. XVI, 24). Qua ex re intelligitur quia ubi amplius peccaverat, ibi atrocius ardebat. Recte ergo nunc dicitur: Et auferetur Spiritu oris sui, quia eo percussionis sententiam accepit, quo oris sui spiritum sub divina formidine non restrinxit. Sequitur:

CAPUT LI.

VERS. 31. — Non credat frustra deceptus, quod alio pretio redimendus sit.

57. Tunc solum eleemosynae nobis prosunt cum peccata plangimus et abdicamus. — Quoties post culpam eleemosynas facimus, quasi pro pravis actibus pretium damus. Unde et per Prophetam de eo qui haec non agit dicitur: Non dabit Deo propitiationem suam, nec pretium redemptionis animae suae (Psal. XLVIII, 8, 9). Nonnunquam vero divites elati inferiores opprimunt, aliena rapiunt, et tamen quasi quaedam aliis largiuntur; et cum multos deprimant, aliquando quibusdam opem defensionis ferunt, et pro iniquitatibus quas nunquam deserunt dare pretium videntur. Sed tunc eleemosynae pretium nos a culpis liberat, cum perpetrata plangimus, et abdicamus. Nam qui et semper peccare vult, et quasi semper eleemosynam largiri, frustra pretium tribuit, quia non redimit animam, quam a vitiis non compescit. Unde nunc dicitur: Non credat frustra errore deceptus, quod aliquo pretio redimendus sit. Quia eleemosyna superbi divitis eum redimere non valet, quam perpetrata simul rapina pauperis ante Dei oculos ascendere non permittit. Quod fortasse intelligi aliter potest, quia saepe superbi divites cum eleemosynam tribuunt, non hanc pro aeternae vitae desiderio, sed pro extendenda vita temporali largiuntur, mortem se posse differre donationibus credunt, sed non credat frustra errore deceptus quod aliquo pretio redimendus sit, quia obtinere ex impenso munere non valet ut finem debitum evadat, 414 cujus etiam nequitia intercidit vitam. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT LII.

VERS. 32. — Antequam dies ejus impleantur peribit, et manus ejus arescent. 58. Praefixi dies singulis, nec augeri possunt nec minui. Qui longiores sperat, antequam impleantur, perit. — Praefixi dies singulis ab interna Dei praescientia nec augeri possunt, nec minui, nisi contingat ut ita praesciantur, ut aut cum optimis operibus longiores sint, aut cum pessimis breviores, sicut Ezechias augmentum dierum meruit impensione lacrymarum; et sicut de perversis scriptum est: Indisciplinatis obviat mors. Sed saepe iniquus, quamvis in occulta Dei praescientia longa vitae ejus tempora non sint praedestinata, ipse tamen quia carnaliter vivere appetit, longo animo dies proponit. Et quia ad illud tempus pervenire non valet quod exspectat, quasi antequam dies illius impleantur perit. Quod tamen intelligere et aliter possumus. Plerumque enim quosdam cernimus et perverse agere, et usque ad senectutem ultimam pervenire. Quomodo ergo dicitur: Antequam dies ejus impleantur peribit, cum in quibusdam saepe videamus quia aetate longa jam membra deficiunt, et tamen pravitatem suam eorum desideria exsequi non desistunt? 59. Post conversionem exteriora repetens ab omni boni operis statu eradicatur. — Sunt namque nonnulli qui post vitam perditam ad semetipsos redeunt, et, accusante se conscientia, perversa itinera relinquunt, commutant opera, antiquae suae pravitati contradicunt, terrenas actiones fugiunt, desideria superna sectantur; sed priusquam in eisdem sanctis desideriis solidentur, per torporem mentis ad ea quae dijudicare coeperant redeunt, atque ad mala quae fugere disposuerant recurrunt. Quia enim saepe contingit ut pro utilitate multorum etiam sancti viri exterioribus actibus serviant, et populorum gubernationibus occupentur, hoc infirmi aspicientes, et per vetustam adhuc superbiam quaerentes imitari, exterioribus se actionibus inserunt; sed quanto ad eas non eruditi spiritalibus veniunt, tanto eas carnaliter exsequuntur. Nisi enim prius cor longo studio et diutina conversatione in desideriis coelestibus convalescat, cum ad exteriora agenda refunditur, ab omni statu boni operis eradicatur. Unde recte quoque de hoc iniquo dicitur: Antequam dies ejus impleantur peribit. Quia et si quid boni fortasse coeperit agere, priusquam in eo per longitudinem temporis convalescat, ad exteriora relabitur, et perverse deserit quae recte inchoasse videbatur. Unde et apte subditur: Et manus ejus arescent. Quia dum exterioribus actibus intempestive involvitur, ab omni nimirum bona operatione siccatur. Unde adhuc bene subditur:

CAPUT LIII.

VERS. 33, 34. — Laedetur quasi vinea in primo flore botrus ejus, et quasi oliva projiciens florem suum. Congregatio enim hypocritae sterilis. 60. Hypocritae bona opera cur arefiant. Quam periculose qui in virtute infirmi sunt, praesint. — Notandum quod sic de hoc iniquo generaliter loquitur, ut tamen divinus sermo ad specialem ejus nequitiam derivetur. Qui enim dicens: Laedetur quasi vinea in primo flore botrus ejus, et quasi oliva projiciens florem suum, protinus subdit: Congregatio enim hypocritae sterilis, patenter indicat quia in hoc iniquo reprobationis sententiam contra ejus hypocrisim ferat. Sed 415 nunc pensandum nobis est qualiter hypocrita sicut vinea in primo flore, vel sicut oliva florem projiciens laedatur. Si florentem vineam per inaequalitatem aeris immoderatum frigus attigerit, protinus ab omni humore viriditatis arefacit. Et sunt nonnulli qui post perversa itinera sanctas vias sectari appetunt, sed priusquam in eis, ut diximus, desideria bona roborentur, quaedam illos praesentis saeculi prosperitas accipit, quae eos rebus exterioribus implicat, et eorum mentem dum a calore intimi amoris retrahit, quasi ex frigore exstinguit, et quidquid in eis de virtutum flore apparere videbatur, interficit. In terrenis quippe actibus valde frigescit animus, si necdum fuerit per intima dona solidatus. Unde necesse est ut loca majora vel exteriora opera, quae humanis sunt necessitatibus profutura, illi exercenda suscipiant, qui haec dijudicare, atque sub semetipsis premere ex virtute intima noverunt. Nam cum infirmus quisque vel ad locum regiminis, vel ad exteriora agenda retrahitur, quo quasi extra se ducitur, eradicatur, quia et arbor quae radices in altum prius non mittit, citius ventorum impetu sternitur, si se ad altum vertice extollit; eoque citius ad ima corruit, quo altius in aere sine radicibus excrevit. Nonnunquam vero florentem vineam non frigus, sed aestus arefacit. Cumque immoderato calore tangitur, discusso flore botrus tabescit. Et plerumque contingit ut hi qui ad bona opera recta intentione non veniunt, cum placere se hominibus vident, ad exercenda haec eadem opera vehementius accendantur, humanis placitura oculis agere anxie studeant, et quasi in sancto studio fervescant. Quis itaque istos nisi in flore aestus contigit, quos humanae laudis appetitio a fructu alienos fecit? Unde et bene subditur: Et quasi oliva projiciens florem suum. Oliva quippe cum in flore est, si immoderata nebula tangitur, a plenitudine fructuum vacuatur. Et quoties inchoantes quique bona opera laudari ab aspicientibus coeperint, atque in suis laudibus delectari, fit caligo intelligentiae in cogitatione, ut jam discernere nequeant qua intentione quid faciant, et fructum perdant operis, velut ex nebula favoris. Unde bene per Salomonem dicitur: Mane surgamus ad vineas, videamus si floruit vinea, si flores fructus parturiunt (Cant. II, 12). Florent quippe vineae cum mentes fidelium bona opera proponunt. Sed fructus non pariunt, si ab eo quod proposuerint aliquibus victi erroribus infirmantur.. VERS. 34. — Et ignis devorabit tabernacula eorum, qui munera libenter accipiunt. 62. Parum est munus a manu non recipere nisi munus ab ore respuamus. — Sicut enim corpus in tabernaculo, sic mens habitat in cogitatione. Sed ignis tabernacula devorat cum aestus avaritiae cogitationes devastat. Et fit plerumque ut hypocrita aurum vel quaeque bona corporalia ab hominibus accipere contemnat, sed quia haec non accipit, majores ab eis recipere laudes quaerat; et fortasse munus se accepisse non aestimat, quia bona corporalia recipere recusat. Unde sciendum est quia aliquando munus a manu, aliquando vero ab ore porrigitur. Nam qui nummum tribuit, munus ex manu dedit; qui autem verbum laudis impendit, munus ab ore protulit. Hypocrita itaque etsi exteriora dona, quae terrenae forsitan necessitati congruunt, accipere recusat, plus est quod sibi retribui appetit, cum, ultra meritum laudari desiderans, munus ab ore quaerit. Et quia in ipso laudis appetitu nimio cor ardore succenditur, dicatur recte: Et ignis devorabit tabernacula eorum qui munera libenter accipiunt.. CAP. XVI, VERS. 2. — Audivi frequenter talia. 2. Job typus Ecclesiae a fictis amicis oppressae, consolatores simulantibus. A consolatoriis verbis ad increpatoria amici Job eruperant. — Electi quippe frequenter aliena mala quasi sua audiunt, et ab his eis crimen impingitur a quibus crimina impacta perpetrantur. Hac autem responsione beatus Job illud Ecclesiae tempus significat quo, oppressa ab adversariis, temporali eorum potentia quasi dejecta creditur. Unde sequitur: — IBID. — Consolatores onerosi omnes vos estis. Sive enim haeretici, seu pravi quilibet, cum laborare bonos in adversitate conspiciunt, in eo quod illos consolari appetunt, mala eis persuadere conantur. Unde non immerito bonorum mentibus onerosa fit eorum consolatio, quia inter verba dulcedinis virus propinare cupiunt erroris; et dum dictis lenibus dolores quasi levigant, peccati onus imponere festinant. Sed electi viri etiam cum temporali gloria privantur, interni vigorem judicii non amittunt. Nam sciunt et foris adversa perpeti, et tamen interius infracti recta sine pavore defendere, 418 Unde subjungitur:

CAPUT LIII.

Laedetur quasi vinea in primo flore botrus eius, et quasi oliva proiiciens florem suum. Congregatio enim hypocritae sterilis.

Notandum quod sic de hoc iniquo generaliter loquitur, ut tamen divinus sermo ad specialem eius nequitiam derivetur. Qui enim dicens: Laedetur quasi vinea in primo flore botrus eius, et quasi oliva proiiciens florem suum, protinus subdit: Congregatio enim hypocritae sterilis, patenter indicat quia in hoc iniquo reprobationis sententiam contra eius hypocrisim ferat. Sed nunc pensandum nobis est qualiter hypocrita sicut vinea in primo flore, vel sicut oliva florem proiiciens laedatur. Si florentem vineam per inaequalitatem aeris immoderatum frigus attigerit, protinus ab omni humore viriditatis arefacit. Et sunt nonnulli qui post perversa itinera sanctas vias sectari appetunt, sed priusquam in eis, ut diximus, desideria bona roborentur, quaedam illos praesentis saeculi prosperitas accipit, quae eos rebus exterioribus implicat, et eorum mentem dum a calore intimi amoris retrahit, quasi ex frigore exstinguit, et quidquid in eis de virtutum flore apparere videbatur, interficit. In terrenis quippe actibus valde frigescit animus, si necdum fuerit per intima dona solidatus. Unde necesse est ut loca maiora vel exteriora opera, quae humanis sunt necessitatibus profutura, illi exercenda suscipiant, qui haec diiudicare, atque sub semetipsis premere ex virtute intima noverunt. Nam cum infirmus quisque vel ad locum regiminis, vel ad exteriora agenda retrahitur, quo quasi extra se ducitur, eradicatur, quia et arbor quae radices in altum prius non mittit, citius ventorum impetu sternitur, si se ad altum vertice extollit; eoque citius ad ima corruit, quo altius in aere sine radicibus excrevit. Nonnunquam vero florentem vineam non frigus, sed aestus arefacit. Cumque immoderato calore tangitur, discusso flore botrus tabescit. Et plerumque contingit ut hi qui ad bona opera recta intentione non veniunt, cum placere se hominibus vident, ad exercenda haec eadem opera vehementius accendantur, humanis placitura oculis agere anxie studeant, et quasi in sancto studio fervescant. Quis itaque istos nisi in flore aestus contigit, quos humanae laudis appetitio a fructu alienos fecit? Unde et bene subditur: Et quasi oliva proiiciens florem suum. Oliva quippe cum in flore est, si immoderata nebula tangitur, a plenitudine fructuum vacuatur. Et quoties inchoantes quique bona opera laudari ab aspicientibus coeperint, atque in suis laudibus delectari, fit caligo intelligentiae in cogitatione, ut iam discernere nequeant qua intentione quid faciant, et fructum perdant operis, velut ex nebula favoris. Unde bene per Salomonem dicitur: Mane surgamus ad vineas, videamus si floruit vinea, si flores fructus parturiunt. Florent quippe vineae cum mentes fidelium bona opera proponunt. Sed fructus non pariunt, si ab eo quod proposuerint aliquibus victi erroribus infirmantur.

Non ergo intuendum est si vineae floreant, sed si flores ad partum fructuum convalescant, quia mirum non est si quis bona inchoet, sed valde mirabile est si intentione recta in bono opere perduret. Unde fit plerumque ut si in bono opere recta intentio non tenetur, etiam ipsum hoc opus quod bonum creditur amittatur. Nam quosdam saepe vidimus terrena quae possederant reliquisse, et nil iam transitorium quaerere, nullis pro hac vita iurgiis immisceri. Cum itaque hoc in se fidelis anima ostendit, quasi oliva florem protulit. Sed cum quidam ex talibus rursus coeperint mundi gloriam quam contempserant quaerere, et terrenis rebus quas sprevisse videbantur insatiabiliter inhiare, vacare iurgiis, proximorum laesiones exquirere, nimirum proiecit oliva florem quem proposuit, quia rudimenta boni studii ad perfecta opera non perduxit. Sed sciendum est quia haec semper eis eveniunt qui Deum puro ac simplici studio non sequuntur. Unde recte subditur: Congregatio enim hypocritae sterilis. Coepta enim bona non amitteret, si hypocrita non fuisset. Congregant vero et hypocritae bona opera, sed eorum sterilis est ipsa congregatio, quia per hoc quod agunt fructum recipere in aeterna retributione non appetunt. Fecundi ac virides in suis operibus humanis oculis videntur, sed in conspectu occulti iudicis infecundi et aridi apparent. Saepe vero, aestu avaritiae accensi, eo maiora de se opera humanis oculis ostendunt, quo ampliora sibi ab hominibus offerri munera appetunt. Unde adhuc subditur:

CAPUT LIV.

Et ignis devorabit tabernacula eorum, qui munera libenter accipiunt.

Sicut enim corpus in tabernaculo, sic mens habitat in cogitatione. Sed ignis tabernacula devorat cum aestus avaritiae cogitationes devastat. Et fit plerumque ut hypocrita aurum vel quaeque bona corporalia ab hominibus accipere contemnat, sed quia haec non accipit, maiores ab eis recipere laudes quaerat; et fortasse munus se accepisse non aestimat, quia bona corporalia recipere recusat. Unde sciendum est quia aliquando munus a manu, aliquando vero ab ore porrigitur. Nam qui nummum tribuit, munus ex manu dedit; qui autem verbum laudis impendit, munus ab ore protulit. Hypocrita itaque etsi exteriora dona, quae terrenae forsitan necessitati congruunt, accipere recusat, plus est quod sibi retribui appetit, cum, ultra meritum laudari desiderans, munus ab ore quaerit. Et quia in ipso laudis appetitu nimio cor ardore succenditur, dicatur recte: Et ignis devorabit tabernacula eorum qui munera libenter accipiunt.

Sin vero eorum tabernacula corpora debemus accipere, in quibus illorum animae habitant, ignis eorum tabernacula devorat, quia qui hic in mente ardent igne avaritiae, illic etiam in carne concremantur ignibus gehennae, et quia mens hypocritae nunquam vacat a malitiae cogitatione; nam sive terrena quaeque, seu laudem appetat, haec aliis invidet quae sibi tribui anhelat; et tanto caeteros ostendere perversos molitur, quanto videri sanctior omnibus appetit, ut ex eo quod alii despicabiles fiunt, ipse reverentior semper appareat. Unde fit ut de opinione proximi ante humana iudicia, linguae suae laqueos praetendat, ut eorum quibus placere appetit solus aestimationem capiat. Unde et sequitur:

CAPUT LV.

Concepit dolorem, et peperit iniquitatem, et uterus eius praeparat dolos.

Dolorem quippe concipit cum perversa cogitat. Iniquitatem parit cum explere coeperit quod cogitavit. Invidendo dolorem concipit, derogando iniquitatem parit. Gravis quippe est iniquitas quando is qui perversus est ostendere alios perversos molitur, ut inde ipse quasi sanctus appareat, quod alios sanctos non esse docuerit. Sciendum vero quod in sacro eloquio ventris vel uteri nomine mens solet intelligi. Hinc est enim quod per Salomonem dicitur: Lucerna Domini spiraculum hominis, quae investigat omnia secreta ventris. Lux enim gratiae, quae desuper venit, spiraculum homini praestat ad vitam. Quae videlicet lux omnia secreta ventris investigare dicitur, quia occulta mentis penetrat, ut ea quae de seipsa latebant animam, ante eius oculos flendo reducat. Hinc Ieremias ait: Ventrem meum, ventrem meum doleo. Qui ut ventrem suum quid dixisset ostenderet, adiunxit: Sensus cordis mei turbati sunt. Uteri itaque nomine recte mens accipitur, quia sicut proles in utero concipitur, sic cogitatio in mente generatur; et sicut in ventre cibi, ita continentur in mente cogitationes. Uterus itaque hypocritae praeparat dolos, quia tanto semper maiorem malitiam contra proximos in mente concipit, quanto solus prae omnibus videri innocentior quaerit. Haec idcirco Eliphaz protulit, quia beatum Iob tanto percussum verbere propter hypocrisim putavit. Sed eius verba etsi multis congruunt, ab ipso solo aliena sunt pro quo solo dicebantur, quia sanctus vir nihil in suis actibus duplicitatis habuit, quem testis veritas de cordis simplicitate laudavit.

LIBER DECIMUS TERTIUS.

CAPUT I

Esse hoc perversorum proprium solet, quod sua mala per convicium bonis ingerant, priusquam de eis ipsi veraciter accusentur; et dum metuunt increpari de his quae faciunt, adversantes suis pravitatibus iustos haec facere testantur. Sancti autem viri patienter audiunt etiam quae se nunquam fecisse meminerunt, quamvis ea mala quae sibi ingeri conspiciunt ab ipsis suis criminatoribus noverint perpetrata; et cum eos praedicando corrigere non possunt, patiendo tolerant, quatenus si fructum conversionis eorum non valent, ex ipsis tamen praemium longanimitatis acquirant. Unde et sancta Ecclesia David prophetae vocibus dicit: Supra dorsum meum fabricaverunt peccatores, quia videlicet dum haereticos vel quoslibet reprobos, quos corrigere non valet, tolerat, facta peccantium supra dorsum portat. Beatus itaque Iob videns Eliphaz amicum suum multa contra se de hypocrisi conquerentem, qui ex consolationis verbis ad amaritudinem increpationis eruperat, et simulatus consolator apparebat, per patientiam suam typum servat Ecclesiae, quae novit talia audiendo tolerare, et, cum eius sermo admittitur, ratiocinando destruere, et dicit:

CAPUT II.

CAP. XVI, Audivi frequenter talia.

Electi quippe frequenter aliena mala quasi sua audiunt, et ab his eis crimen impingitur Consolatores onerosi omnes vos estis. Sive enim haeretici, seu pravi quilibet, cum laborare bonos in adversitate conspiciunt, in eo quod illos consolari appetunt, mala eis persuadere conantur. Unde non immerito bonorum mentibus onerosa fit eorum consolatio, quia inter verba dulcedinis virus propinare cupiunt erroris; et dum dictis lenibus dolores quasi levigant, peccati onus imponere festinant. Sed electi viri etiam cum temporali gloria privantur, interni vigorem iudicii non amittunt. Nam sciunt et foris adversa perpeti, et tamen interius infracti recta sine pavore defendere, Unde subiungitur:

CAPUT III VERS.

3. — Nunquid habebunt finem verba ventosa? 3. Verba sana, propter elationem eorum a quibus proferuntur aliquando ventosa. Lugens non increpandus. — Ventosa enim verba sunt quae inflationi temporali potius quam rectitudini serviunt. Saepe autem mali etiam bona dicunt; sed quia bene non dicunt, ventosa verba proferunt. Nam dicta eorum et si quando sana sunt per sententiam, inflata tamen sunt per elationem. In hoc vero quod dictum est: Consolatores onerosi omnes vos estis, quid aliud beati Job magisterio docemur, nisi ut quisque perpendere sollicite sciat ne luctus tempore verba increpationis inferat? Si enim sunt quaedam quae increpari jure debeant, in afflictione postponenda sunt, ne consolator increpando dolorem augeat, quem lenire proposuerat. Sequitur:

CAPUT IV.

IBID. — Aut aliquid tibi molestum est, si loquaris? 4. Justi convicia non reddunt. — Mali viri cum aliis sibi similibus conviciosa verba proferunt, eo citius obmutescunt, quo de se talia mox audiunt qualia suis auditoribus dicunt. Cum autem bonos viros per conviciosa verba jaculantur, nil eis molestiae ex convicio nascitur, quia contra tacentes loquuntur, nec compelluntur audire quod sunt, quia justi convicia non reddunt, etiam dum coguntur audire quod non sunt. Bene ergo dicitur: Aut aliquid tibi molestum est, si loquaris? Ac si ei aperte diceretur: Eo plus loqueris quo a me molestum aliquid de tua actione non audis. Unde et subditur, — VERS. 4. — Poteram et ego similia vestri loqui. [Rec III.] Narrat justus quid facere potuit; sed ne justitiam deserat, quod facere potuit declinat. Sequitur:

CAPUT V.

VERS. 4-6. — Atque utinam esset anima vestra pro anima mea! consolarer et ego vos sermonibus, et moverem caput meum super vos. Roborarem vos ore meo, et moverem labia mea, quasi parcens vobis. 5. Malis divina flagella quandoque debent optari. — Aliquando necesse est ut pravis mentibus quae humana praedicatione corrigi nequeunt divina flagella optari benigne debeant. Quod cum magno fit amoris studio, videlicet non errantis poena, sed correptio quaeritur, et oratio potius quam maledictio esse monstratur. In his autem verbis hoc beatus Job monstratur intendere, ut amici, qui dolori illius per charitatem compati nesciebant, ab experimento 419 discerent alienae afflictioni qualiter misereri debuissent; atque, edomiti doloribus, a sua passione traherent consolationem aliis qualiter inferrent; et tunc salubrius intrinsecus viverent, cum aliquid extrinsecus de infirmitate sentirent. Notandum, quod non ait: Utinam esset anima mea pro anima vestra! sed Utinam esset anima vestra pro anima mea! quia profecto sibi malediceret, si se illis fieri similem optaret. Illis vero meliora voluit quos sibi fieri similes quaesivit. Consolamur vero pravos in flagellis constitutos cum de exteriore percussione interiorem in eis convalescere salutem indicamus. Caput etiam movemus cum mentem, quae principale nostrum est, ad compassionem inflectimus. Eosque inter flagella roboramus cum doloris eorum vim verbis mitibus lenimus. Sunt namque nonnulli qui dum interna nesciunt de malis exterioribus desperabiliter affliguntur, de quibus per Psalmistam dicitur: In miseriis non subsistent (Psal. CXXXIX, 11). Ille etenim bene novit in exterioribus miseriis subsistere, qui scit semper de spe interna gaudere. 6. Aliquando malis quasi parcens non parcit, et quasi non parcens parcit Ecclesia. — Quod vero non ait Parcens, sed Quasi parcens vobis, nequaquam hoc negligenter praetereundum puto, quia sancta Ecclesia disciplinae vigorem cum permistione mansuetudinis servans, aliquando malis et quasi parcens non parcit, aliquando vero et quasi non parcens parcit. Quod melius ostendimus, si ipsa quae plerumque accidunt proferamus. Ponamus itaque ante oculos mentis duos pravos in sancta Ecclesia esse constitutos, quorum sit unus potens et protervus, alter mitis et subditus. Si qua miti et subdito culpa subripuerit, hanc protinus increpando praedicator insequitur et corripit, eumque corripiendo, a culpa liberat, atque ad viam rectitudinis reformat. Quid itaque huic nisi non parcens pepercit, quia dum correptionis verbum non distulit, citius hunc a culpa liberavit? Libere enim arguens non pepercit, sed in eo quod correxit pepercit. At contra potens et protervus, cum aliquid perpetrasse cognoscitur, tempus quaeritur ut de malo quod fecit increpetur. Nisi enim praedicator sustineat quando ferre congrue correptionem possit, auget in eo malum quod insequitur. Saepe enim contingit ut talis sit qui nulla increpationis verba suspiciat. Quid itaque in hujus culpa praedicatori agendum est, nisi ut in sermone admonitionis, quem pro communi salute omnium auditorum facit, tales culpas ad medium deducat quales eum perpetrasse considerat qui et praesto est, et de se solo adhuc argui non potest, ne deterior fiat? Et cum generaliter contra culpam invectio intenditur, correptionis verbum libenter ad mentem ducitur, quia potens pravus ignorat quod sibi hoc specialiter dicatur. Quid itaque isti praedicator suus nisi parcens minime pepercit, cui et specialiter correptionis verba non intulit, et tamen vulnus illius sub communi admonitione percussit? Unde fit plerumque ut eo vehementius perpetratam culpam lugeat, quo reatum suum et cum se percussum sentiat nesciri putat.. VERS. 8. — Nunc autem oppressit me dolor meus, et in nihilum redacti sunt omnes artus mei. 9. Dolor Ecclesiae dum ad malorum exempla infirmos pertrahi conspicit. — Dolore suo sancta Ecclesia premitur quando in malitia sua crescere perversos intuetur. Et quia dum pravi crescunt etiam infirmi qui in ea sunt ad sequenda studia pravitatis irritantur, recte additur: Et in nihilum redacti sunt omnes artus mei. Sicut enim per ossa fortes, sic per artus infirmi quique designari solent. Membra ergo Ecclesiae ad nihilum rediguntur quando ex imitatione pravorum in hoc mundo crescentium infirmi quique deterius infirmantur. Videntes etenim felicitatem malorum, saepe ab ipso fidei statu dilabuntur, bona temporalia appetunt, et veluti in nihilum rediguntur, quia dum manentem Dei essentiam deserunt, diligentes transitoria, quasi ad non esse tendunt. Bene autem dicitur: Nunc autem oppressit me dolor meus, quia videlicet tempus doloris Ecclesiae modo est, et tempus gaudii postmodum sequetur. Saepe vero contingit ut sancta Ecclesia non solum infideles atque extra positos adversarios toleret, sed eorum quoque insidias atque adversitatem vix ferat, quos intus habet. Unde beati viri voce apte mox subditur:

CAPUT VIII.

VERS. 9. — Rugae meae testimonium dicunt contra me. 10. Rugae Ecclesiae sunt mali Christiani. — Quid per rugas nisi duplicitas designatur? Rugae itaque sunt sanctae Ecclesiae omnes qui in ea dupliciter vivunt, qui fidem vocibus clamant, operibus denegant. Hi nimirum pacis tempore, quia hujus mundi potestatibus eamdem fidem honori esse conspiciunt, fideles se esse mentiuntur. Sed cum 421 sanctam Ecclesiam subita adversitatis procella turbaverit, illico ostendunt quid in perfida mente moliuntur. Has autem rugas in electis suis sancta Ecclesia non habet, quia videlicet nesciunt aliud de se foris ostendere, et intus aliud habere. Unde recte egregius praedicator dicit: Ut exhiberet ipse sibi gloriosam Ecclesiam, non habentem maculam aut rugam (Ephes. V, 27). Maculam quippe et rugam non habet, quae et turpitudine operis et duplicitate sermonis caret. Sed quia nunc intra sinum fidei multos etiam reprobos tenet, cum tempus persecutionis exarserit, ipsos hostes patitur quos praedicationis verbis alere ante videbatur. Dicat itaque quia: Rugae meae testimonium dicunt contra me, id est ipsi me insequendo increpant, qui nunc, in meo corpore positi, duplicitatis suae in se malitiam non mendant. Unde bene adhuc subditur: IBID. — Et suscitatur falsiloquus adversus faciem meam, contradicens mihi. 11. Per malos saevit diabolus. — Etiam pacis suae tempore sancta Ecclesia falsiloquium patitur, dum sunt in ea multi qui de aeternitatis promissione diffidunt, et tamen se fideles esse mentiuntur. Qui dum praedicationi ejus aperte contradicere non praesumunt, falsiloquium non contra faciem, sed quasi post dorsum patitur. Sed cum malitiae tempus eruperit, is qui nunc metuens derogat, ad contradicendum ante faciem venit, quia verbis verae fidei apertis vocibus obsistit. Sciendum vero est quia cum haec a carnalibus patimur, non tam ipsi sunt qui in nostra morte saeviunt quam malignus spiritus qui eorum mentibus principatur, sicut per Paulum dicitur: Non est nobis colluctatio adversus carnem et sanguinem, sed adversus principes et potestates, adversus mundi rectores tenebrarum harum (Ephes. VI, 12). Unde cum hic quoque de falsiloquio loqueretur, apte mox ad describendum ejus falsiloquii principem verba convertit dicens:

CAPUT X.

VERS. 10. — Collegit furorem suum in me, et, comminans mihi, infremuit contra me dentibus suis; hostis meus terribilibus oculis me intuitus est. 12. Per malos saevit diabolus, modo occulta, modo aperta persecutione. — Quid aliud omnes iniqui quam membra sunt diaboli? Ipse itaque per eos agit quidquid in eorum cordibus ut agere debeant immittit.. Habet autem etiam nunc diabolus contra sanctam Ecclesiam furorem, sed sparsus ejus furor est, quia occultas tentationes per singulos movet. Cum vero contra eam in aperta persecutione proruperit, furorem sum in eam colligit, quia in afflictione illius tota se intentione constringit. Membra autem ejus hoc pacis tempore idcirco contra electos collectum furorem non habent, quia malilitiam suam minus se sentiunt posse implere quam volunt. Cum vero sibi suppetere licentiam pravitatis aspexerint, tanto hanc audacius feriunt, quanto et contra illam ex unanimitate glomerantur. Recte itaque nunc dicitur: Collegit furorem suum in me. Cujus adhuc furor ut latius exponatur dicitur: Et comminans mihi, infremuit contra me dentibus suis. De quo et subditur: Hostis meus terribilibus oculis me intuitus est. Ille quippe antiquus hostis Ecclesiae contra hanc dentibus fremit, 422 eamque terribilibus oculis intuetur, quia per alios crudelia exercet, et per alios quae exerceat providet. 13. Diaboli dentes, persecutores; oculi, qui eos consiliis suis regunt. — Dentes namque hujus hostis sunt bonorum persecutores atque carnifices, qui ejus membra laniant, dum electos illius suis persecutionibus affligunt. Oculi vero hujus hostis sunt hi qui contra eam provident mala quae faciant, suisque consiliis persecutorum ejus crudelitates inflammant. Antiquus ergo ejus adversarius fremit contra eam dentibus suis, dum per crudeles reprobos in ea insequitur vitam bonorum. Intuetur hanc terribilibus oculis, qui pravorum consiliis non cessat mala exquirere, in quibus hanc semper deterius affligat. Nam sicut incarnata Veritas in praedicatione sua pauperes idiotas et simplices elegit, sic e contrario damnatus ille homo, quem in fine mundi apostata angelus assumet, ad praedicandam falsitatem suam, astutos ac duplices atque hujus mundi scientiam habentes electurus est.. Unde et per Isaiam dicitur: Vae terrae cymbalo alarum, quae est trans flumina Aethiopiae, quae mittit in mari legatos, et in vasis papyri super aquas (Isai. XVIII, 1). Terra quippe cui vae dicitur ille principaliter homo damnatus est, qui alarum cymbalum vocatur, quia hi qui per superbiam in altitudinem cogitationis evolant, eumdem perversum hominem praedicando sonant. Quae scilicet terra recte trans flumina Aethiopiae esse perhibetur. Aethiopia etenim nigrum populum mittit, et omnem hominem mundus iste, quia peccatorem profert, quasi nigrum Aethiopia populum parit. Sed terra cui vae dicitur trans flumina Aethiopiae esse perhibetur, quia damnatus ille homo tanta immensitate iniquus est, ut omnium peccantium peccata transcendat. Qui mittit in mari legatos, quia praedicatores suos in saeculum spargit. De quibus recte subditur qualiter mittantur, dum dicitur: In vasis papyri super aquas. Ex papyro quippe charta est. Quid itaque per papyrum nisi saecularis scientia designatur? Vasa ergo papyri sunt corda doctorum saecularium. In vasis igitur papyri super aquas legatos mittere est praedicationem suam in sapientum carnalium sensibus ponere, et defluentes ad culpam populos vocare. Qui ergo illic per vasa papyri, ipsi hic, quia carnaliter vident, per oculos designantur. De quibus et adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XI.

VERS. 11. — Aperuerunt super me ora sua, exprobrantes. 14. Os diaboli qui errores praedicant. — Ora sua reprobi exprobrantes aperiunt cum et erroris sui mala praedicare non metuunt, et praedicamenta rectae fidei irrident. De quibus sciendum est quia illos praecipue in sancta Ecclesia persequuntur quos multis conspiciunt esse profuturos, qui vitam carnalium verbo correptionis conterunt, eosque in Ecclesiae corpore spiritaliter vertunt. Unde et subditur.

CAPUT XII.

. IBID. — Percusserunt maxillam meam, satiati sunt poenis meis. 15. Maxilla Ecclesiae sancti praedicatores. — Maxilla quippe Ecclesiae sancti praedicatores sunt, sicut sub Judaeae specie per Jeremiam dicitur: Plorans ploravit in nocte, et lacrymae ejus in maxillis ejus (Thren. I, 2), quia in adversitatibus Ecclesiae illi amplius plangunt qui vitam carnalium confringere 423 praedicando noverunt. Per ipsos quippe sancta Ecclesia iniquos a vitiis conterit, et quasi glutiens in sua membra convertit. Unde ipsi quoque primo praedicatori velut maxillae Ecclesiae dicitur: Occide et manduca (Act. X, 13). (Vet. VIII). Hinc est etiam quod Samson maxillam asini tenuit, et hostes peremit (Judic. XV, 16), quia Redemptor noster simplicitatem atque patientiam praedicantium suae manu virtutis tenens, a vitiis suis carnales interfecit. Et maxilla in terram projecta postmodum aquas fudit, quia data morti praedicatorum corpora magna populis monstravere miracula. Maxillam ergo Ecclesiae perversi feriunt, cum bonos praedicatores insequuntur. Et quia tunc reprobi grande se aliquid fecisse aestimant cum vitam praedicatorum necant, post percussionem maxillae apte subjungitur: — IBID. — Satiati sunt poenis meis. Illa quippe eos poena satiat quae mentem Ecclesiae praecipue castigat. Sequitur:

CAPUT XIII.

VERS. 12. Conclusit me Deus apud iniquum, et manibus impiorum me tradidit. 16. Electi persecutionibus antiqui hostis temporaliter permissi. — Electorum populus apud iniquum concluditur cum ejus caro antiqui hostis persecutionibus temporaliter datur. Qui non spiritui, sed manibus impiorum traditur, quia quo hunc in mente capere nequeunt, eo contra carnem illius crudelius inardescunt. Sed sanctae Ecclesiae populus cum adversa perpeti graviter coeperit, et infirmos suos conspexerit ad deteriora delabi, pacis suae tempora ad mentem revocat, quando fideles suos praedicationis suae opulentia pascebat. Unde apte subjungitur:

CAPUT XIV.

VERS. 13. — Ego ille quondam opulentus reponte contritus sum. 17. — Firmis mentibus nulla adversa repente adveniunt. — In eo quod se repente contritum asseruit infirmorum mentem improvidam designavit. Qui dum mala quae ventura sunt praevidere nesciunt; tanto eis graviora fiunt quanto et ab eis inopinata tolerantur. Firmis autem mentibus repente adversa non veniunt, quia priusquam veniant praevidentur. Quod tamen nunc quoque sancta Ecclesia in quibusdam retro labentibus patitur, qui post doctrinae opulentiam subitis aliquando vitiis conteruntur, ut sic in quibusdam malis corruant, ac si verbi pabulum nunquam habuissent. Sequitur:

CAPUT XV.

IBID. — Tenuit cervicem meam, confregit me, posuit me sibi quasi in signum. 18. Infirmi, urgente persecutione, veritatem praedicare trepidant. — Sicut in malis cervix superbiam, sic in bonis libertatis erectionem signat. Unde nonnunquam ipsa quoque superbia pro erectionis auctoritate ponitur, sicut per prophetam Dominus sanctae Ecclesiae pollicens dicit: Ponam te in superbiam saeculorum (Isai. LX, 15). Et quia persecutionis tempore infirmi quidam vera quae sentiunt praedicare libere non praesumunt, recte de hoc hoste dicitur: Tenuit cervicem meam, confregit me. [Vet. IX.] Fortasse autem hi cervicis appellatione signati sunt qui pacis ejus tempore plusquam decet eriguntur, et sub occasione defendendae rectitudinis vitio deserviunt elationis. Qui persecutionis tempore idcirco adversa plus sentiunt, quia de prosperis extolluntur. De quibus bene dicitur: Tenuit cervicem meam, confregit me. Id est, elationem quam in infirmis habuit, districtione suae percussionis inclinavit. Et posuit me sibi quasi in signum. Constat nimirum quia idcirco signum ponitur, ut sagittarum emissione feriatur. Fidelis itaque populus in signum hosti suo est positus, quia 424 eum semper suis ictibus impetit, eumque suis persecutionibus affligit. Qui enim in hac vita assidua mala tolerat, velut in signum positus, ictus excipit ferientis. Unde et praedicator egregius cum persecutionum mala toleraret, atque sub persecutione adversariorum gemeret, teneram discipulorum mentem de suis afflictionibus consolans, ait: Ipsi enim scitis quod in hoc positi sumus (I Thess. III, 3). Ac si eis aperte dicat: Quid in hoc tempore vulnera nostra miramini, qui si aeterna gaudia quaerimus, huc ad hoc venimus, ut feriamur? Sequitur:

CAPUT XVI.

VERS. 14. — Circumdedit me lanceis suis, convulneravit lumbos meos, non pepercit, et effudit in terram viscera mea. 19. Hostis tentationum jaculis ab omni parte nos impetit. — Haec juxta litteram beato Job congruere posse videbantur, per hoc quod dicitur: Circumdedit me lanceis suis, convulneravit lumbos meos, non pepercit, nisi subderetur quod de eo minime scriptum legitur: Effudit in terram viscera mea. Ex qua re necesse est ut dum hoc juxta litteram invenire non possumus, ea quae in verbis ejus secundum historiam sonant juxta spiritum inquiramus. Sancta Ecclesia lanceis ab hoste suo circumdatur quando in membris suis ab impugnatore callido tentationum jaculis impetitur. Bene autem circumdari lanceis dicimur, quia antiquus hostis tentationis suae vulnere ab omni parte nos impetit. Saepe enim dum gula restringitur, ut libido subigatur, inanis gloriae aculeus mentem pulsat. Si autem corpus abstinentiae afflictione non atteritur, contra mentem libidinis flamma se excitat. Saepe dum servare parcimoniam nitimur, ad tenaciam labimur. Et saepe dum possessa effuse tribuimus, ad avaritiam ducimur, quia rursum colligere quaerimus quod tribuamus. Dum ergo antiqui hostis jacula ubique nos impetunt, recte non dicitur: Circumdedit me lanceis suis. Et quia omne peccatum hostis quidem callidus suadet, sed nos ejus suasionibus consentiendo perpetramus, apte subjungitur: Convulneravit lumbos meos. In lumbis quippe luxuria est. Unde et is qui cupiebat voluptatem libidinis a corde exstinguere, praedicavit dicens: Succincti lumbos mentis vestrae (I Pet. I, 13). Cum ergo antiquus hostis fidelem populum ad luxuriam pertrahit, hunc procul dubio in lumbis ferit. Ubi notandum quoque est quod non ait: Vulneravit, sed Convulneravit lumbos meos. Sicut enim loqui aliquando unius est, colloqui vero duorum, vel fortasse multorum, sic antiquus hostis, quia nos ad culpam sine nostra voluntate non rapit, nequaquam lumbos nostros vulnerare, sed convulnerare dicitur, quia hoc quod nobis ille male suggerit, nos sequentes ex voluntate propria implemus, et quasi cum ipso nos pariter vulneramus, quia ad perpetrandum malum ex libero simul arbitrio ducimur. Sequitur: Non pepercit. Ac si dicat Non destitit. VERS. 17. — Facies mea intumuit a fletu. 23. Filios suos poenitentes fletibus suis adjuvat. Praelati de alienis tanquam de propriis lapsibus se affligant. Facies quippe sanctae Ecclesiae sunt hi qui, in locis regiminum positi, apparent primi, ut ex eorum specie sit honor fidelis populi, etiam si quid in corpore latet deforme. Qui nimirum praelati plebibus plangunt culpas infirmantium, seque sic de alienis lapsibus ac si de propriis affligunt. Et saepe dum quosdam vident ad veniam post culpas redire, quosdam vero in iniquitate persistere, occulta omnipotentis Dei judicia mirantur, sed penetrare nequeunt. Obstupescunt enim quae non intelligunt. Unde et apte subditur:

CAPUT XXI.

IBID. — Et palpebrae meae caligaverunt. 24. Subditorum vias vice oculorum dirigant. — Palpebrae enim recte appellati sunt qui ad praevidenda pedum itinera vigilant. Sed cum occulta Dei judicia nec praepositi vigilantes intelligunt, palpebrae sanctae Ecclesiae caligant. Sed ut saepe jam me dixisse memini, beatus Job sanctae Ecclesiae 426 typum tenens, modo voce corporis, modo autem voce capitis utitur; et dum de membris ejus loquitur, repente ad verba capitis levatur. Unde hic quoque subjungitur:

CAPUT XXII.

VERS. 18. — Haec passus sum absque iniquitate manus meae, cum haberem mundas ad Deum preces. 25. Solus prae omnibus mundas ad Deum preces Christus habuit. — Absque iniquitate enim manus suae pertulit, qui peccatum non fecit, nec inventus est dolus in ore ejus (I Pet. II, 22, seq.), et tamen dolorem crucis pro nostra redemptione toleravit. Qui solus prae omnibus mundas ad Deum preces habuit, quia et in ipso dolore passionis pro persecutoribus oravit, dicens: Pater, dimitte illis, non enim sciunt quid faciunt (Luc. XXIII, 34). Quid enim dici, quid cogitari in prece mundius potest quam cum et illis misericordia intercessionis tribuitur a quibus toleratur dolor? Unde factum est ut Redemptoris nostri sanguinem, quem persecutores saevientes fuderant, postmodum credentes biberent, eumque esse Dei Filium praedicarent. De quo videlicet sanguine apte subjungitur:

CAPUT XXIII.

VERS. 19. — Terra, ne operias sanguinem meum, neque inveniat in te latendi locum clamor meus. 26. Sanguis ejus Abelis sanguine melius loquitur; hic enim ultionem, ille veniam exorat. — Peccanti homini dictum est: Terra es, et in terram ibis (Genes. III, 19). Quae scilicet terra Redemptoris nostri sanguinem non abscondit, quia unusquisque peccator redemptionis suae pretium sumens, confitetur ac laudat, et quibus valet proximis innotescit. Terra etiam sanguinem ejus non operuit, quia sancta Ecclesia redemptionis suae mysterium in cunctis jam mundi partibus praedicavit. Notandum quod subditur: Neque inveniat in te latendi locum clamor meus (Genes. III, 19). Ipse enim sanguis redemptionis qui sumitur clamor nostri Redemptoris est. Unde etiam Paulus dicit: Et sanguinis aspersionem melius loquentem quam Abel (Heb. XII, 24). De sanguine Abel dictum fuerat: Vox sanguinis fratris tui clamat ad me de terra (Genes. IV, 10). Sed sanguis Jesu melius loquitur quam Abel, quia sanguis Abel mortem fratricidae fratris petiit, sanguis autem Domini vitam persecutoribus impetravit. Ut ergo in nobis sacramentum dominicae passionis non sit otiosum, debemus imitari quod sumimus, et praedicare caeteris quod veneramur. Locum enim latendi clamor ejus in nobis invenit, si hoc quod mens credidit lingua tacet. Sed ne in nobis clamor ejus lateat, restat ut unusquisque juxta modulum suum vivificationis suae mysterium proximis innotescat. Libet mentis oculos ad dominicae passionis horam reducere, cum Judaei persequentes saevirent, discipuli timentes fugerent. Qui enim carne mori videbatur nequaquam Deus esse credebatur. Unde hic apte subditur:

CAPUT XXIV.

VERS. 20. — Ecce enim in coelo testis meus, et conscius meus in excelsis. 27. Hominibus Christum nescientibus, conscium et testem habuit Patrem in coelo. — Cum enim Filius labefactaretur in terra, erat ei testis in coelo. Testis quippe Filii Pater est, de quo ipse in Evangelio dicit: Et qui misit me Pater, ipse testimonium perhibuit de me (Joan. V, 37). Qui recte etiam conscius dicitur, quia una voluntate, uno consilio Pater cum Filio semper operatur. Cujus etiam testis est, quia nemo novit Filium nisi Pater (Matth. XI, 27). Tunc ergo in coelo testem et conscium in excelsis habuit, quando hi qui eum morientem in carne cernebant divinitatis ejus 427 potentiam considerare nesciebant. Et cum ignorarent homines, in morte tamen Mediator Dei et hominum noverat quod cum ipso operabatur Pater. Quod fortasse etiam ad vocem ejus corporis referri valet. Sancta namque Ecclesia idcirco adversa vitae praesentis tolerat, ut hanc superna gratia ad praemia aeterna perducat. Carnis suae mortem despicit, quia resurrectionis intendit gloriae. Et transitoria sunt quae patitur, perpetua quae praestolatur. De quibus nimirum bonis perpetuis dubietatem non habet, quia fidele jam testimonium Redemptoris sui gloriam tenet. Carnis quippe ejus resurrectionem mente conspicit, atque ad spem fortiter convalescit quia, quod in suo videt jam factum capite, sperat in ejus quoque corpore, quod videlicet ipsa est absque dubietate secuturum. Quam scilicet Ecclesiam Psalmista conspiciens in perpetua perfectione mansuram, sub appellatione lunae describit, dicens: Luna perfecta in aeternum (Psal. LXXXVIII, 38).

Quam quia ad resurrectionis spem dominica resurrectio roborat, recte subjunxit: Et testis in coelo fidelis, quia ut de sua resurrectione non trepidet, jam eum in coelo, qui resurrexit a mortuis, testem habet. Fidelis itaque populus cum adversa patitur, cum duris tribulationibus fatigatur, ad spem sequentis gloriae mentem erigat, et, de Redemptoris sui resurrectione confidens, dicat: Ecce enim in coelo testis meus, et conscius meus in excelsis. Qui recte conscius dicitur, quia naturam nostram non solum creando novit, sed etiam assumendo. Scire enim ejus est nostra suscepisse. Unde etiam per Psalmistam dicitur: Ipse enim scit figmentum nostrum (Psal. CII, 13). Quid enim mirum si figmentum nostrum dicatur specialiter scire, dum constet nihil esse quod nesciat? Sed figmentum nostrum scire ejus est hoc in seipso ex pietate suscepisse. 28. Idem testis nobis quaerendus. Quae tamen vox cum beato Job congruere nobis etiam singulis potest. Omnis enim qui ex eo quod agit humanas laudes appetit, testem in terra quaerit. Qui autem de actibus suis omnipotenti Deo placere festinat, testem se in coelo habere considerat. Et saepe contingit ut ipsa quoque in nobis bona opera ab incautis hominibus reprehendantur. Sed qui testem in coelo habet, reprehensiones hominum metuere non debet. Unde adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XXV.

VERS. 21. — Verbosi amici mei, ad Deum stillat oculus meus. 29. Non ab hominibus quaerendum testimonium. — Quid enim per oculum nisi cordis intentio designatur? sicut scriptum est: Si fuerit oculus tuus simplex, totum corpus tuum lucidum erit (Matth. VI, 22). Quia cum bona intentione quid agitur, ejus intentionis actio apud Deum minime fuscatur. Cum ergo verbosi amici sunt, id est cum et ipsi derogant qui in fide sociantur, ad Deum necesse est ut oculus stillet, quatenus nostra intentio tota in amoris intimi compunctione defluat, et tanto subtilius se ad interiora erigat, quanto et per exteriora opprobria repulsa intus redire cogitur, ne foras evanescat. Sequitur.

CAPUT XXVI.

VERS. 22. — Atque utinam sic judicaretur vir cum Deo, quomodo judicatur filius hominis cum collega suo! 30. Quoa peccatum in nobis flagellis suis puniat Deus incertum. — Peccatores quidem nos esse semper agnoscimus; sed tamen saepe in flagello positi, pro quo magis peccato flagellemur ignoramus; et nos ipsos 428 subtili inquisitione discutimus, ut, si quo modo possimus, causam percussionis nostrae investigare valeamus. Quae dum plerumque nos latet, fit nobis oneri caecitas nostra, et de eo quod patimur plus dolemus. Quisquis vero cum collega suo ad judicium accedit, et quod sentit dicit, et quidquid contradicitur agnoscit, et quo voluerit pulsat, et novit unde pulsatur. Qui autem divina animadversione percutitur, dum novit quidem quia vapulat, sed cur vapulet ignorat, quasi dicit ipse quod sentit, sed quid contra se dicatur nescit, quia ipse quidem ingemiscit in verbere, sed Deus aperte non declarat pro qua eum feriat ultione. Itaque nunc dicitur: Atque utinam sic judicaretur vir cum Deo, quomodo judicatur filius hominis cum collega suo! Ac si aperte diceretur: Sicut in omni quod dico audior, sic omne quod de me dicitur audirem. Quod tamen in hac vita fieri nullatenus potest, quia magna est interpositio oculis cordis nostri ad contemplandam subtilitatem Dei, ipsa videlicet infirmitas nostra. Sed tunc ad purum intuebimur eum a quo nunc subtiliter intuemur, cum, hac infirmitate deposita, ad contemplationis internae gratiam venerimus, de qua Paulus dicit: Tunc cognoscam sicut et cognitus sum (I Cor. XIII, 12). Unde beatus Job videns eamdem cognitionem plenissime hic perfici nullatenus posse, de caecitate quidem vitae praesentis gemit, sed tamen se de ejus brevitate consolatur, dicens:

CAPUT XXVII.

VERS. 23. — Ecce enim breves anni transeunt, et semitam per quam non revertar ambulo. 31. Vitae miserias ejus brevitas mitigat et sotatur. — Omne quod transit breve est, etiam si tardius terminari videatur. In mortis autem semita, per quam non revertimur, ambulamus, non quod ad vitam carnis minime resurgendo reducimur, sed quod ad labores hujus vitae mortalis, vel ad conquirenda laboribus praemia, iterum non venimus.

CAPUT XXVIII.

CAP. XVII, VERS. 1. — Spiritus meus attenuabitur. 32. Boni brevem vitam, longam vero mali sibi pollicentur. — Attenuatur spiritus timore judicii, quia electorum mentes quo amplius extremo judicio propinquare se sentiunt, eo ad discutiendas semetipsas terribilius contremiscunt, et si quas in se carnales unquam cogitationes inveniunt, poenitentiae ardore consumunt, nec cogitationes suas dilatari carnali voluptate permittunt, quia eo semetipsos dijudicantes subtilius feriunt, quo districtum judicem praestolantur vicinum. Unde fit ut propinquum sibi semper exitum suspicentur. Nam reproborum mentes idcirco multa nequiter agunt, quia hic se vivere diutius arbitrantur. Justorum ergo attenuatur spiritus, sed crassescit iniquorum. Quo enim per elationem tument, eo attenuationem spiritus non habent. Justi vero dum brevitatem suae vitae considerant, elationis et immunditiae culpas declinant. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT XXIX.

IBID. — Dies mei breviabuntur, et solum mihi superest sepulcrum. 33. Hinc elationis et immunditiae culpas declinant illi, isti multiplicant. Perfecta vita est mortis imitatio. — Qui enim considerat qualis erit in morte, semper fit timidus in operatione; atque unde in oculis suis jam quasi non vivit, inde veraciter in oculis sui conditoris vivit. Nil quod transeat appetit, cunctis praesentis vitae desideriis contradicit; et pene mortuum se considerat, quia moriturum 429 minime ignorat. Perfecta enim vita est mortis imitatio, quam dum justi sollicite peragunt, culparum laqueos evadunt. Unde scriptum est: In omnibus operibus tuis memorare novissima tua, et in aeternum non peccabis (Eccli. VII, 40). Unde et beatus Job, quia dies suos considerat breviari, et solum sibi superesse sepulcrum pensat, apte subjungit:

CAPUT XXX.

VERS. 2. — Non peccavi, et in amaritudinibus moratur oculus meus. 34. Non pro corrigenda culpa, sed pro augenda gratia Job percussus. — Ac si aperte dicat: Culpam non feci, et flagella suscepi. Sed hac in re animum movet, quia in multis se hujus historiae locis peccasse confitetur, qua ratione peccasse se nunc abneget? Sed ad haec ratio celeriter occurrit, quia nec tantum peccavit ut flagella mereretur, nec tamen esse sine peccato potuit. Nam quia non pro corrigenda culpa, sed pro gratia augenda percussus est, judex ipse testatur, qui laudat et ferit. Et rursum quia sine peccato non fuerit, nec ipse negat qui a judice laudatur, atque ideo laudatur, quia non negat. Sed credo quod melius haec verba discutimus, si dicta ex voce capitis sentiamus. Redemptor etenim noster ad redemptionem nostram veniens, et non peccavit, et amaritudinem pertulit, quia poenam culpae nostrae sine culpa suscepit, de cujus voce subditur:

CAPUT XXXI.

VERS. 3. — Libera me, et pone me juxta te, et cujusvis manus pugnet contra me. 35. Christus in amaritudine fuit per passionem, liberatus est per resurrectionem. — Ipse etenim non peccavit in cogitatione, vel opere, ipse in amaritudine moratus est per passionem, ipse liberatus est per resurrectionem, ipse juxta Patrem positus est per ascensionem, quia profectus in coelum sedet a dextris Dei. Et quia post ascensionis ejus gloriam Judaea in discipulorum ejus persecutione commota est, recte nunc dicitur: Et cujusvis manus pugnet contra me. Tunc quippe in membris illius furor persequentium saeviit, tunc contra fidelium vitam flamma crudelitatis exarsit. Sed quo irent iniqui, aut quid agerent, dum is quem persequebantur in terra jam sedebat in coelo? De quibus adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XXXII.

VERS. 4. — Cor eorum longe fecisti a disciplina. 36. Pravorum cor longe esse a disciplina Deus tantum permittendo facit. — Si enim disciplinae custodiam nossent, et nequaquam Redemptoris nostri praecepta contemnerent, ipsa eos carnis suae mortalitas ad amorem vitae immortalis excitasset. Hoc ipsum namque in hac vita corruptioni nos esse subjectos, jam de flagello disciplinae est. Aestu enim et frigore, fame sitique turbari, morbis affici, quandoque etiam exstingui, quid sunt haec aliud quam flagella peccati? Sed sunt nonnulli qui et flagella tolerant, et tamen mentem ad flagellantis metum minime reformant. Unde recte nunc dicitur: Cor eorum longe fecisti a disciplina. Quia etsi corpus sub disciplina est, cor sub disciplina non est, dum et flagellatur quisque, et tamen ad humilitatem mentis non reducitur. Neque ita hoc dicitur ac si omnipotens et misericors Deus longe cor hominis a disciplina faciat, sed quod sponte delapsum ibi remanere ubi cecidit judicando permittat, sicut ei in oratione quoque dicimus. Et ne nos inducas in tentationem (Matth. VI, 13); id est, induci minime permittas. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXIII.

IBID. — Propterea non exaltabuntur. 430 37. Disciplinae expertes ab infimis ad coelestia nunquam sublevantur. — Cor enim si sub disciplina esset, superiora appeteret, adipiscendis bonis transeuntibus non inhiaret.

Quorum igitur cor sub disciplina non est, recte de illis dicitur: Propterea non exaltabuntur, quia dum in infimis voluptatibus dimissi terrena bona semper desiderant, cor ad superna gaudia nunquam levant. Exaltarentur quippe si mentem ad spem patriae coelestis erigerent. Sed qui per disciplinam custodire vitam minime student, semper per desideria in imis jacent, et, quod est gravius, jacendo se erigunt, quia de rebus transitoriis extolluntur. Extolli autem possunt, sed exaltari nequeunt, quia inde profundius in imo sunt, unde apud se altiores fiunt. Cor itaque, quod sine disciplina est, exaltari non valet, quia humana mens sicut male elevata in infimis premitur, sic bene pressa in sublimibus levatur. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXIV.

VERS. 5. — Praedam pollicetur sociis, et oculi filiorum ejus deficient. 38. Unum corpus sunt diabolus et iniqui. Ejus socii, angeli apostatae; filii, perversi homines. — Postquam de multitudine iniquorum, id est de antiqui hostis corpore, beatus Job sententiam protulit, mox ad ipsum eorum principem, id est caput omnium perditorum, sententiam vertit, atque a plurali numero ad singularem redit. Ita quippe unum corpus sunt diabolus et omnes iniqui, ut plerumque nomine capitis censeatur corpus, et nomine corporis appelletur caput. Nam capitis nomine censetur corpus cum de perverso homine dicitur: Ex vobis unus diabolus est (Joan. VI, 71). Et rursum nomine corporis appellatur caput cum de ipso apostata angelo dicitur: Inimicus homo hoc fecit (Matth. XIII, 28). Iste igitur princeps omnium perversorum alios socios habet atque alios filios. Qui namque sunt ejus socii, nisi illi apostatae angeli qui cum eo de coelestis patriae sede ceciderunt? Vel quos alios filios habet, nisi perversos homines, qui de ejus prava persuasione in malitiae operatione generantur? Unde etiam Veritatis voce infidelibus dicitur: Vos ex patre diabolo estis (Joann. VIII, 44). 39. Quam praedam sociis polliceatur diabolus. — Perversus itaque iste auctor erroris praedam sociis pollicetur, quia malignis spiritibus pravorum promittit animas in eorum fine rapiendas. Et oculi filiorum ejus deficient, quia dum intentiones hominum ad sola terrena speranda excitat, hoc illos amare facit quod diu tenere non possunt. Neque enim valet amoris pravi intentio permanere, quando et hoc quod amat ipsumque qui amat constat sub celeritate deficere. Possunt quoque et per socios fortasse intelligi crudelissimi quique et omni malitia jam repleti; per filios vero hi qui adhuc deceptoriis promissionibus illusi, augendae pravitati nutriuntur, ut illos jam velut ex merito malitiae diabolus quasi socios habeat qui jam non habent in perditione quo crescant, istos autem quasi filios quos promissionibus lactat ut ad pejora proficiant. Sed oculi filiorum ejus deficient, quia pravorum intentiones cadunt cum omne quod hic appetunt deserunt, et illic quod doleant sine fine patiuntur. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXV.

VERS. 6. — Posuit me quasi in proverbium vulgi: et exemplum sum coram eis. 40. De electorum flagellis stulta vulgi opinio. — Haec beatus Job dicat ex se, dicat ex vocibus omnium electorum. Omnis quippe qui flagello percutitur quasi in proverbium ponitur vulgi, quia 431 stultus quisque dum cuiquam maledicere appetit, ex illius similitudine maledictionem sumit, quem percussum temporaliter videt, eamque poenam suo optat adversario quam evenisse conspicit justo. Sicque fit ut non recte sapientibus in exemplum deducatur rectus, dum et poena justi esse damnatio creditur, et quae illi maneat gloria nulla spe fidei praevidetur. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXVI.

VERS. 7. — Caligavit ad indignationem oculus meus, et membra mea quasi in nihilum redacta sunt. 41. Ad flagella sanctis obstupescentibus et caligantibus, infirmi aliquando corruunt. — Ad indignationem oculus caligat quando ipsi quoque qui in dominico corpore, id est in Ecclesia, lumen veritatis habent, dum se diutius a pravis despici ac dedignari conspiciunt, de occulti judicii admiratione turbantur, et secretum Dei penetrare nequeunt, cur praevalere perversi contra bonorum innocentiam permittuntur. Quis etenim non obstupescat cum Herodias apud temulentum regem saltatu filiae obtinet ut caput amici Sponsi, prophetae et plusquam prophetae, ante ora convivantium in disco deferatur (Marc. VI, 27)? Sed cum justi ad indignationem caligant, infirmi plerumque usque ad infidelitatem corruunt. Unde subditur: Et membra mea quasi in nihilum sunt redacta. Membrorum quippe nomine teneritudo exprimitur infirmorum, qui dum perversos prospiciunt florere justosque cruciari, ad hoc nonnunquam perveniunt, ut se bona vel inchoasse poeniteant; atque ita ad agenda mala citius recedunt, ac si eorum vitae nocuerit bonum quod inchoaverunt. Hoc autem quod ait: Caligavit ad indignationem oculus meus, verbis planioribus aperit, adjungens:

CAPUT XXXVII.

VERS. 8. Stupebunt justi super hoc, et innocens contra hypocritam suscitabitur. 42. Imperfectorum est gloriae perversorum invidere. — Hoc loco innocens necdum perfectus justus accipitur, qui bona adhuc inchoans, etsi nocere aliis non novit, perfecta tamen ipse agere nequaquam valet. Et quia corda parvulorum, dum perversos florere in praesenti vita conspiciunt, invidiae facibus succenduntur; tanto enim quisque plus invidet aliis bona praesentia, quanto ea ipse minus contempserit. Nam quod haberi ab omnibus non valet simul totum, huic desit quod alter habuerit. Succenditur vero contra hypocritam innocens, dum gloriae simulatoris invidet etiam qui nulli nocere solet. Sin vero hoc in loco innocens quilibet in bono perfectus accipitur, contra hypocritam innocens suscitatur quando hunc et florere conspicit, et tamen cum suo eum flore contemnit; et praedicando quae recta sunt, tanto eum despiciendum caeteris esse denuntiat, quanto eum conspicit illa anxie quaerere quae cum eo diu non valeant permanere. In quo adhuc sensu subjungitur:

CAPUT XXXVIII.

VERS. 9. — Et tenebit justus viam suam, et mundis manibus addet fortitudinem. 43. Deus qui malis temporalia bona concedit, justis aeterna non denegabit. — Considerato quippe hypocrita, justus viam suam tenet, quia dum illum ex perversa voluntate obtinere ea quae mundi sunt intuetur, ipse ad amorem coelestium robustius stringitur, sciens quia bonis desideriis praemia aeterna non deerunt, dum et pravis et duplicibus cordibus bona temporalia non negantur. Qua ex re mundis quoque manibus addit fortitudinem, quia conspiciens perversos obtinere terrenam gloriam, bona sua opera provehit 432 ad perfectionem; et tanto altius temporalia despicit, quanto haec abundare etiam malis cernit. Quam enim sint despicienda considerat quae Deus omnipotens etiam perversis praestat. Si enim principaliter magna essent, nequaquam haec conditor adversariis suis tribueret. Unde et indignum sibi esse perpendit ut illa bona appetat quae abundare conspicit et malis, sed ad percipienda coelestia mentem suam dirigit, quae sibi cum reprobis communia esse non possunt. Igitur postquam exteriores profectus malorum, bonorum vero interiores intulit, exhortationis verba protulit, dicens:

CAPUT XXXIX.

VERS. 10. — Igitur omnes vos convertimini, et venite. 44. Ad Deum converti fide, et venire opere debemus. — Quae videlicet exhortationis verba proprie ad electos format, quos ad aeternitatem vocat. Qui duobus modis invitantur, scilicet ut convertantur, et veniant: convertantur nimirum fide, veniant opere. Vel certe convertantur deserendo mala, et veniant bona faciendo, sicut scriptum est: Declina a malo, et fac bonum (Psal. XXXVI, 27). Mirandum vero quod subditur:

CAPUT XL.

IBID. — Et non inveniam in vobis ullum sapientem. 45. Apud semetipsos sapientes, ad veram sapientiam pervenire nequeunt. — Quid est enim quod eos ad sapientiam vocat, et tamen optat ne illos sapientes inveniat, nisi quod ad veram sapientiam venire non possunt qui falsae suae sapientiae fiducia decipiuntur? de quibus scriptum est: Vae qui sapientes estis in oculis vestris, et coram vobismetipsis prudentes (Isai. V, 21). Et quibus rursum dicitur: Nolite esse prudentes apud vosmetipsos (Rom. XII, 16). Unde idem praedicator egregius hos quos carnaliter sapientes invenerat, ut sapientiam veram perciperent, prius fieri stultos quaerebat, dicens: Si quis videtur inter vos sapiens esse in hoc saeculo, stultus fiat, ut sit sapiens (I, Cor. III, 18). Et per semetipsam Veritas dicit: Confiteor tibi, Pater Domine coeli et terrae, quia abscondisti haec a sapientibus et prudentibus, et revelasti ea parvulis (Matth. XI, 25). Quia ergo hi qui apud semetipsos sapientes sunt ad veram sapientiam pervenire non possunt, recte beatus Job, conversionem auditorum desiderans, exoptat ne in eis ullum sapientem inveniat. Ac si eis aperte dicat: Stulti esse apud vosmetipsos discite, ut in Deo vere sapientes esse valeatis. Sequitur:

CAPUT XLI.

VERS. 11. — Dies mei transierunt, cogitationes meae dissipatae sunt, torquentes cor meum. 46. Dies Ecclesiae prosperitas, noctes adversitas. Sancti ad terrena dispensanda coacti torqueri se sentiunt. — Sancta electorum Ecclesia per diurna et nocturna tempora conspicit vitae suae spatia transire, quia noctem in adversitatibus, diem vero in prosperitatibus habere consuevit. Quasi enim lux ei oritur ex tranquillitate pacis, et nox ex dolore persecutionis. Sed cum post quietis otia ad excrescentis contra se persecutionis laborem redit, dies suos transisse testatur. In quibus tamen diebus solet tanto gravioribus curis premi, quanto a se de ipsa tranquillitate pacis subtiliores a judice rationes cogitat exquiri. In tranquillitate enim pacis modo animarum lucra cogitat, modo terrenarum rerum dispensationes curat. Quae videlicet terrenorum actuum dispensationes tanto bonis mentibus graviores sunt, quanto earum intuitu ab intuendis coelestibus vel ad modicum avelluntur. Unde bene beatus Job sive sua, sive voce universalis Ecclesiae, postquam dies suos transisse testatur, illico subjunxit: Cogitationes meae dissipatae sunt, 433 torquentes cor meum. Quia dum bonis mentibus temporalis felicitas transit, etiam cura eis terrenae dispensationis subtrahitur, quae eas in cogitationibus torquere videbatur. Dum enim erectae semper esse ad percipienda coelestia appetunt, eo ipso quo aliquando ex dispensatione terrena ad ima cogitanda descendunt, torqueri se sentiunt. Unde fit ut ipsa quoque adversitas persecutionis vertatur in magnam exsultationem laetitiae, propter adeptam quietem cordis. Unde et apte subditur:

CAPUT XLII.

VERS. 12. — Noctem verterunt in diem. 47. Sancti malunt perpeti mala, quam bonorum cura fatigari. — Dissipatae etenim cogitationes noctem in diem vertunt, quia nonnunquam justis amplius placet ex adversitate mala perpeti quam ex prosperitate terrenae dispensationis cura fatigari. Sed quia noverunt cautius, et adversa transire, et prospera rursus illucescere, apte subjungitur:

CAPUT XLIII.

IBID. — Et rursum post tenebras spero lucem. 48. Sancti post mortem statim coelestibus praemiis donantur. — Lux enim post tenebras speratur, quia vel post noctem vitae praesentis aeternum lumen percipitur, vel ita hic adversitas atque prosperitas alternant, ut sibi succedere vicissim non desinant. Unde fit ut et in luce nox in suspicione sit, et in nocte lux in praesumptione, sicut scriptum est: In die bonorum ne immemor sis malarum, et in die malorum ne immemor sis bonorum (Eccl. XI, 27). Sed ecce quia auctoris nostri gratia redempti sumus, hoc jam coelestis muneris habemus, ut cum a carnis nostrae inhabitatione subtrahimur, mox ad coelestia praemia deducamur, quia dum conditor ac Redemptor noster, claustra inferni penetrans, electorum exinde animas eduxit, nos illo ire non patitur, unde jam alios descendendo liberavit. Hi vero, qui ante ejus adventum in hunc mundum venerunt, quantamlibet justitiae virtutem haberent, ex corporibus educti in sinu coelestis patriae statim recipi nullo modo poterant, quia necdum ille venerat qui inferni claustra sua descensione solveret, et justorum animas in perpetua jam sede collocaret. Unde beatus Job et afflictionem sentiens, et adhuc differri retributionem justorum sciens, apte subjungit:

CAPUT XLIV.

VERS. 13. — Si sustinuero, infernus domus mea est, et in tenebris stravi lectulum meum. 49. Ante Christum justorum animae in inferno tormentorum expertes tenebantur. — Priores etenim sancti et sustinere adversa poterant, et tamen, e corporibus educti, adhuc ab inferni locis liberari non poterant, quia necdum venerat qui illuc sine culpa descenderet, ut eos qui ibi tenebantur ex culpa liberaret. Tunc vero homo suum lectulum in tenebris stravit, quando lucem justitiae persuasori callido consentiendo deseruit. Et quia in ipsis quoque inferni locis justorum animae sine tormento tenebantur, ut et pro originali culpa adhuc illuc descenderent, et tamen ex propriis actibus supplicium non haberent, quasi in tenebris lectulum stravisse est in inferno sibi requiem praeparasse. Grave etenim taedium electis fuit post solutionem carnis adhuc speciem non videre Creatoris. Quod taedium non immerito beatus Job tenebras vocat. Sed quia hoc ex poena infirmitatis venit, recte eamdem mox infirmitatem subdit dicens:

CAPUT XLV.

434 VERS. 14. — Putredini dixi: Pater meus es; mater mea, et soror mea, vermibus. 50. Ex origine vitiata concupiscentiae curarumque vermes trahimus. — Quid est hoc quod dixit putredini: Pater meus es, nisi quod omnis homo ab origine jam vitiata descendit? Unde et additur: Mater mea, et soror mea, vermibus, quia videlicet et ab ipsa putredine et cum ipsa in hunc mundum venimus. Quantum enim ad materiam corruptibilis carnis, mater nostra ac soror vermes sunt, quia et de putredine processimus, et cum putredine venimus, quam portamus. Quod si intelligi spiritaliter potest, et mater natura, et consuetudo non immerito soror vocatur, quia ab illa cum ista sumus. Quae videlicet mater et soror vermes sunt, quia ex natura corruptibili et consuetudine perversa cogimur, ut quasi quibusdam vermibus, sic inquietis cogitationibus in mente fatigemur. Carnis enim natura vitiata et consuetudo perversa, quia innumeras curas in corde infirmitatis nostrae generant, bene mater et soror vermes vocantur. Mordent enim animum curae, dum inquietant. Non enim cessant justi viri vel sollicite cogitare et pertractare quid agant, vel provide inspicere quo post praesentem vitam ducendi sint. Quia ergo tunc electi ante adventum Domini et in labore vitae praesentis se esse cernebant, et tamen post praesentem vitam necdum coelestia bona percipere, multis cogitationibus urebantur. Exspectabant enim gratiam Redemptoris sui, nec tamen ad eam poterant in carne vivendo pervenire. Unde et apte subditur:

CAPUT XLVI.

VERS 15. — Ubi est ergo nunc praestolatio mea? 51. Justorum tot in malis, sola spes Christus. — Quae esse potuit praestolatio justorum, nisi justos justificans Deus, qui ad poenas humani generis sponte descenderet, et captivos mortis justitiae suae virtute liberaret? Hujus enim praesentiam minime cessabant intenta cogitatione praestolari: esse venturam noverant, sed venire citius quaerebant. Unde non ait: Ubi est ergo praestolatio mea? sed ait: Ubi est ergo nunc praestolatio mea? [Vet. XXII.] Dum enim addit nunc, ostendit quia quod quandoque venturum erat venire citius desiderabat. Sequitur:

CAPUT XLVII.

IBID. — Et patientiam meam quis considerat? 52. Ardentibus desideriis ab illis expetitus. — Expressit desiderium quo festinat in carne positus redimi et ab inferis ad superna revocari. Et quidem paucorum hominum ista fuit perpendere, ut scirent de praesentis vitae laboribus vel de subsequenti post mortem dilatione cogitare. Quod utrumque justi ante adventum Redemptoris nostri se perpeti dolebant. Unde et recte dicitur: Et patientiam meam quis considerat? Equidem non deest qui patientiam consideret; sed cum citius non exaudit, quasi minus considerare Deus dicitur. Ipsa enim humani generis quae venit in mundi fine redemptio ab his qui a mundi initio praecesserunt tarda credebatur, quia longo temporis spatio a coelestium remuneratione disjuncti sunt, Veritate attestante, quae ait: Multi prophetae et reges voluerunt vos videre quae vos videtis, et non viderunt (Luc. X, 24). Itaque quod nunc dicitur: Patientiam meam quis considerat? ardentis desiderii vota panduntur. Neque enim, ut praediximus, justorum patientiam 435 non considerat Deus, sed quasi non considerare dicitur ad votum desiderii minus citius apparere, et per prolixiora tempora dispensationis suae gratiam differre. Dicat ergo: Patientiam meam quis considerat? quia quod disponenti breve est, longum est amanti. Unde adhuc dilationis suae damna considerans, hoc quod jam praedixerat repetit, et, descensurus ad ima, vocem doloris ingeminat, dicens:

CAPUT XLVIII.

VERS. 16. — In profundissimum infernum descendent omnia mea. 53. Qui profundissimus infernus, dicantur eorum receptacula. — Cum constet, quod apud inferos justi non in locis poenalibus, sed in superiori quietis sinu, tenerentur, magna nobis oboritur quaestio, quidnam sit quod beatus Job asserit, dicens: In profundissimum infernum descendent omnia mea. Qui et si ante adventum mediatoris Dei et hominum in infernum descensurus erat, liquet tamen quia in profundissimum infernum descensurus non erat. An ipsa superiora loca inferi profundissimum infernum vocat? Quia videlicet, quantum ad sublimitatem coeli, jam hujus aeris spatium non immerito dici infernus potest. Unde cum apostatae angeli a coelestibus sedibus in hoc caliginoso aere sint demersi, Petrus apostolus dicit: Angelis peccantibus non pepercit, sed rudentibus inferni detractos, in tartarum tradidit in judicio cruciandos reservari (II Petr. II, 4). Si itaque, quantum ad celsitudinem coeli, aer iste caliginosus infernus est, quantum ad ejusdem aeris altitudinem, terra quae inferius jacet, et infernus intelligi et profundus potest; quantum vero ad ejusdem terrae altitudinem, et illa loca inferi quae superiora sunt aliis receptaculis inferni, hoc loco non incongrue inferni profundissimi appellatione signantur, quia quod aer ad coelum, terra ad aerem, hoc ille est superior infernorum sinus ad terram. 436 54. Job solam animam totum hominem esse sentit. — Sed mirum valde est quod adjungit: Descendent omnia mea. Cum enim sola anima descensura esset ad inferni loca, quid est quod sanctus vir illuc perhibet omnia sua descendere, nisi quod ibi se esse totum vidit, ubi pondus suae remunerationis intelligit? Quia hoc quod ex se insensibile in terra deserit, quousque ad incorruptionem resurrectionis redeat, se esse non sentit. Omnia itaque sua in infernum profundissimum descensura perhibet, quo solam suam animam descensuram videt, quia ibi totus est, ubi sentire possit quod receperit. Vel certe in infernum omnia ejus descendunt, quia laborum omnium retributio adhuc in sola inferni quiete recipi praestolabatur. Et quasi illuc descendit omne quod egit, quia ibi quietem retributionis suae ex omnibus invenit. Unde etiam ipsa quies praestolata subjungitur, cum illico subinfertur:

CAPUT XLIX.

IBID. — Putasne saltem ibi erit requies mihi? 55. Job de sua salute trepidante, nemo securus sit. — In quibus nimirum verbis et innotescit quod desiderat, et tamen esse se adhuc de suscipienda requie dubium designat, ne cujus sancta opera tot flagella secuta sunt, occulto judicio superni judicis, post flagella temporalia etiam mansura tormenta sequerentur. Qua in re cum magno nobis timore pensandum est quis nostrum jam de requie aeterna securus sit, si de ea adhuc et ille trepidat cujus virtutis praeconia et ipse judex qui percutit clamat: Si enim justus vix salvabitur, impius et peccator ubi parebunt (I Pet. IV, 18)? Beatus etenim Job ad requiem se post flagella perventurum noverat; sed ut nostra timore corda concuteret, ipse visus est de aeternae quietis retributione dubitare cum dicit Putasne? ut nos videlicet perpendamus quanta debemus formidine venturum judicium semper expavescere, quando et ille qui a judice laudatus est adhuc de retributione judicii in suis vocibus securus non est.

LIBER DECIMUS QUARTUS

In quo sanctus Gregorius XVIII et XIX capitum libri Job sensum historicum, allegoricum et moralem aperit.

CAPUT PRIMUM.

1. Superius dictorum anacephalaeosis. — Superiori hujus operis parte (Maxime praefat., c. 2) tractavimus quod omnipotens Deus, ut mentes corrigeret sub lege positorum, beati Job vitam ad testimonium adduxit, qui legem non novit, et tamen tenuit, qui praecepta vitae quae scripto non acceperat custodivit. Hujus prius actio Deo attestante laudatur, et probari postmodum diabolo insidiante permittitur, ut per tentamenta tribulationis ostenderet quantum prius in tranquillitate profecisset. Hujus vitam inimicus generis humani more suo improbus, et laudari Deo attestante cognovit, et tamen ad tentandum expetiit. Quem cum tot damnis rerum, tot orbitatibus percussum sternere nequivisset, uxorem ei in stimulum malae suasionis excitavit, ut saltem per familiaria verba corrumperet quem per tot sternere nuntiorum tormenta minime valeret. Sed cum adjutorio feminae, quod contra Adam prius in paradiso obtinuit, contra hunc secundum in sterquilinio positum roborari non potuit, ad alia se tentandi argumenta convertit, ut amicos ejus quasi consolantes adduceret, et tamen eorum mentes in asperitatem increpationis excitaret; quatenus eum, cujus patientiam flagella non vicerant, inter flagella saltem aspera verba superarent. Sed inimicus callide insidians fraudem quam contra sanctum virum paraverat pertulit, quia sancto viro quot occasiones perditionis intulit, tot causas victoriae ministravit. Contra tormenta quippe patientiam, contra verba sapientiam tenuit, quia et dolores verberum aequanimiter sustinuit, et stultitiam male suadentium sapienter frenavit. Sed quia in ipsis passionibus doctisque 437 locutionibus sanctae Ecclesiae typum tenet, amicis ejus, ut saepe jam diximus, quaedam recta, et quaedam stulta loquentibus, non immerito haeretici figurantur, qui pro eo quod sancto viro amici sunt, multa de reprobis recta dicunt; sed pro eo quod speciem haereticorum tenent, plerumque in oris sui excessu dilabuntur, et verborum suorum jaculis sancti viri pectus feriunt, sed contra mentem inexpugnabilem ipsa sua percussione fatigantur. Nos igitur subtili debemus discretione distinguere, et quid sit in eorum verbis quod vere de reprobis sentiunt, et quid quod contra beatum Job fatuum sonant.

CAPUT II.

CAP. XVIII, VERS. 1, 2. — Respondens autem Balda: Suhites, dixit: Usque ad quem finem verba jactabis? Intellige prius, et sic loquamur. 2. Haeretici Ecclesiam superbiae et ignorantiae insimulant. — Omnes haeretici sanctam Ecclesiam in quibusdam cognitis superbire putant, quaedam vero nec intelligere suspicantur. Unde Baldad Suhites beatum Job quasi in superbiam astruit erupisse, quem fatetur verba jactare. Sed signat ipse quanta elatione tumuerat, qui beatum Job loqui quae non intelligeret putabat. Et quia omnes haeretici in aestimatione sua a sancta Ecclesia despici conqueruntur, apte subjungitur:

CAPUT III.

VERS. 3. — Quare reputati sumus ut jumenta, et sorduimus coram te? 3. Haereticorum in Ecclesiam suspiciones et contumeliae. — Humanae mentis est proprium hoc sibi fieri suspicari quod facit. Arbitrantur enim se despici, qui bonorum mores despicere consueverunt. Et quia in his quae comprehendi valent ratione contra haereticos ostendit Ecclesia rationabile non esse quod astruunt, aestimari se ab ejus judicio velut jumenta suspicantur. Ex qua despectus sui suspicione protinus ad dedignationem prosiliunt, atque ad ejusdem Ecclesiae contumelias excitantur. Unde subditur:

CAPUT IV.

VERS. 4. — Quid perdis animam tuam in furore tuo? 4. Ecclesiae zelum, furorem et insaniam vocant haeretici. — Haeretici vel zelum rectitudinis, vel spiritalem gratiam sanctae praedicationis, non virtutis pondus, sed insaniam furoris aestimant. Quo furore videlicet perire fidelium animas arbitrantur quia inde interire Ecclesiae vitam credunt, unde eam contra se infervere conspiciunt. Sequitur:

CAPUT V.

IBID. — Nunquid propter te derelinquetur terra? 5. Deus extra veram Ecclesiam vere non colitur. — Se enim ubique Deum colere, se totum mundum existimant occupasse. Quid est ergo dicere: Nunquid propter te derelinquetur terra, nisi hoc quod saepe fidelibus dicunt, quia si hoc est verum quod vos dicitis, omnis a Deo terra derelicta est, quam jam prae multitudine nos tenemus; sancta autem universalis Ecclesia praedicat Deum veraciter nisi intra se coli non posse, asserens quod omnes qui extra ipsam sunt minime salvabuntur. At contra haeretici, qui etiam extra ipsam salvari se posse confidunt, in quolibet loco sibi divinum adjutorium adesse profitentur. Unde dicunt: Nunquid propter te derelinquetur terra? id est, ut quisquis extra te fuerit minime salvetur? Unde etiam subditur:

CAPUT VI.

IBID. — Et transferentur rupes de loco suo. 6. 438 Haeretici doctores suos rupes vocant. — Haeretici rupes vocant eos quos sublimibus in humano genere excedere sensibus aestimant, quos profecto doctores se habere gloriantur. Cum vero sancta Ecclesia perversos quosque praedicatores intra sinum rectae fidei colligere studet, quid aliud quam de locis propriis rupes movet, ut intra eam recta sentientes humiliter jaceant, qui in perversis suis sensibus prius rigidi stabant? Sed hoc fieri haeretici omnino contradicunt, et propter ejus vocem rupes de loco proprio transferri renituntur, quia videlicet nolunt ut ad eam venientes vera humiliter sentiant hi qui apud eos elati sensibus falsa sapiebant. Quia habent et impii lucem suam, prosperitatem scilicet vitae praesentis. Sed lux impii exstinguetur; quia fugitivae vitae prosperitas cum ipsa citius vita terminatur. Unde apte subditur: Nec splendebit flamma ignis ejus? 9. Mali quod appetunt, plerumque ad cumulum perditionis obtinent. — Omnis namque impius habet flammam ignis proprii, quem in corde suo ex fervore desideriorum temporalium accendit, dum modo istis, modo illis cupiditatibus aestuat, et cogitationes suas per multiplicia blandimenta saeculi amplius inflammat. Ignis autem si flammam non habet, nequaquam fuso lumine splendet. Flamma itaque ignis ejus est decor, vel potestas exterior, quae de interno ejus ardore procedit, quia quod anxie in hoc mundo 439 adipisci desiderat, plerumque ad cumulum perditionis suae obtinet, et sive in potestate culminis, sive in divitiis multiplicationis, quasi per exteriorem gloriam lucet. Sed non splendebit flamma ignis ejus; cum in die exitus, omnis exterior decor subtrahitur, et solo suo intrinsecus ardore concrematur. Flamma ergo ab igne subtrahitur cum gloria exterior ab interno ejus ardore separatur. Habent etiam et justi flammam ignis sui, sed nimirum quae resplendeat, quia videlicet eorum desideria in bonis operibus lucent. Iniquorum vero flamma minime splendet, quia per hoc quod mala appetunt; ad tenebras pertrahuntur. Unde et sequitur:

CAPUT VIII.

VERS. 6. — Lux obtenebrescet in tabernaculo illius. 10. Iniquorum gaudium cito deficit. Supra ipsos est gaudium; justorum infra. — Si plerumque tristitiam tenebras accipimus, non immerito lucem accipere gaudium debemus. Lux ergo in tabernaculo illius tenebrescit, quia in ejus conscientia, quam male inhabitat, gaudium quod de temporalibus rebus fuerat deficit. Unde et apte subjungitur: IBID. — Et lucerna quae super eum est exstinguetur. Ut enim de usu multorum loquar, lucerna lumen in testa est, lumen vero in testa est gaudium in carne. Lucerna ergo quae super eum est exstinguitur, quia cum malorum suorum retributio impium sequitur, in ejus mente gaudium carnale dissipatur. Bene autem de lucerna hac non dicitur quae apud eum est, sed quae super eum est, quia iniquorum mentem terrena gaudia possident, sicque eam in voluptatibus absorbent, ut super ipsam sint, non apud ipsam. Justi autem etiam cum prosperitatem vitae praesentis habent, eam sub semetipsis premere noverunt, ut hoc quod apud se in bonis hilarescunt, gravitatis consilio transeant, et virtutis regimine excedant. Lucerna ergo impii quae super eum est exstinguitur, quia citius ejus gaudium deficit, quod eum totum in hac vita possedit. Et qui nunc male se in voluptatibus dilatat, eum post in suppliciis poena coangustat. Unde adhuc subditur:

CAPUT IX.

VERS. 7. — Arctabuntur gressus virtutis ejus. 11. Qui nunc in deliciis vagantur, in suppliciis arctabuntur. — Nunc enim quasi toties virtutis suae gressus exerit, quoties potestatis suae violentias exercet. Sed gressus virtutis ejus arctabuntur, quia vires malitiae illius, quas nunc in voluptate sua exhibet, postmodum poena constringit. Sequitur:

CAPUT X.

IBID. — Et praecipitabit eum consilium suum. 12. Suo unusquisque impius consilio in praeceps ruit. — Habet nunc consilium suum omnis iniquus praesentia appetere, aeterna deserere, injusta agere, justa deridere; sed cum judex justorum injustorumque venerit, suo unusquisque impius consilio praecipitatur, quia per hoc quod hic appetere pravis cogitationibus elegit, in aeterni supplicii tenebras mergitur. Quem enim hic gloria temporalis extollit, illic sine termino poena premit. Qui hic in voluptate laetatus est, illic perpetua ultione cruciatur. Et fit plerumque ut ipsa hujus mundi prosperitas, quae ab impiis inhianter appetitur, eorum gressus ita obliget, ut etiam cum ad bona opera voluerint redire, vix possint, quia recta agere non valent cum mundi hujus amatoribus 440 displicere timent. Unde agitur ut per gloriam quam impius ex peccato assequitur ejus adhuc peccata amplius multiplicentur, quod bene Baldad exprimit cum subjungit:

CAPUT XI.

VERS. 8. — Immisit enim in rete pedem suum, et in maculis ejus ambulat. 13. Peccator cum a peccati laqueis expediri nititur, cognoscit quam duris nexibus teneatur, maxime in fine vitae. — Qui pedes in rete mittit, non cum voluerit ejicit, sic qui in peccata se dejicit non mox ut voluerit surgit; et qui in maculis retis ambulat, gressus suos ambulando implicat, et cum expedire ad ambulandum nititur, ne ambulet obligatur. Saepe namque contingit ut quis, hujus mundi delectatione persuasus, in eo ad honoris gloriam pertingat, ut ad desideriorum suorum effectum perveniat, et pervenisse se ad hoc quod expetiit laetetur. Sed quia bona mundi non habita in amore sunt, et plerumque habita vilescunt, percipiendo discit quam sit vile quod expetiit. Unde revocatus ad mentem exquirit qualiter sine culpa fugiat, quod se cum culpa conspicit adeptum; sed ipsa eum dignitas quae implicavit tenet, et sine culpis aliis fugere non valet hoc ubi non sine culpa pervenit. Immisit ergo in rete pedes suos, et in maculis ejus ambulat, quia cum expediri nititur, tunc veraciter conspicit quam duris nexibus tenetur. Neque enim vere obligationem nostram cognoscimus, nisi cum evadere nitentes, quasi levare pedes conamur. Unde et hanc eamdem obligationem aperit subjungens: VERS. 9. — Tenebitur planta illius laqueo. Quia videlicet stringetur finis in peccato. Et quia hostis generis humani, cum uniuscujusque vitam in culpa obligat, ad ejus mortem anxius anhelat, recte subjungitur:

CAPUT XII.

IBID. — Et exardescet contra eum sitis. 14. Cum se obligatum experitur, concupiscentia acrius aestuat peccator. — Antiquus quippe noster inimicus, cum in peccato vitam illaqueat, sitit, ut mortem peccatoris bibat. Quod tamen et aliter intelligi potest. Nam perversa mens, cum in peccatum se venisse conspicit, quadam cogitationis superficie evadere peccati laqueos quaerit; sed vel terrores, vel opprobria hominum timens, eligit in aeternum mori, quam ad tempus aliquid adversitatis perpeti. Unde totum se vitiis deserit, quibus jam se semel obligatum sentit. Cujus ergo usque ad finem vita in culpa constringitur, ejus planta laqueo tenetur. Sed quia se quo malis obligatum pensat, eo de suo reditu desperat, ipsa jam desperatione acrius ad hujus mundi concupiscentias aestuat, fit desideriorum fervor in mente, et peccatis praecedentibus irretitus animus ad majora etiam delicta succenditur. Unde et subditur: Et exardescet contra eum sitis. In ejus quippe animo contra eum sitis exardescit, quia quo agere perversa consuevit, eo ad ebibenda mala vehementer accenditur. Impio quippe sitire est hujus mundi bona concupiscere. Unde et Redemptor noster ante Pharisaei domum hydropicum curat, et cum contra avaritiam disputaret, scriptum est: Audiebant autem omnia haec Pharisaei, qui erant avari, et deridebant illum (Luc. XIV, 12; XVI, 4). Quid est ergo quod ante Pharisaei domum hydropicus curatur, nisi quod per alterius aegritudinem corporis, in altero exprimitur aegritudo cordis? Hydropicus quippe 441 quo amplius biberit, amplius sitit, et omnis avarus ex potu sitim multiplicat, quia cum ea quae appetit adeptus fuerit, ad appetenda alia amplius anhelat. Qui enim adipiscendo plus appetit, hujus sitis ex potu crescit. Sequitur:

CAPUT XIII.

VERS. 10. — Abscondita est in terra pedica ejus, et decipula illius super semitam. 15. Diaboli quanta in decipiendo astutia. Qualitates morum certis vitiis affines. — In terra pedica absconditur cum culpa sub terrenis commodis occultatur. Inimicus quippe insidians ostendit humanae menti in terreno lucro quid appetat, et occultat peccati laqueum, ut ejus animam stringat, quatenus videat quidem quod concupiscere valeat, et tamen nequaquam videat in quo culpae laqueo pedem ponat. Decipula vero a decipiendo vocata est. Et tunc ab antiquo hoste super semitam decipula ponitur, quando in actione hujus mundi, quam mens appetit, peccati laqueus paratur; quae videlicet non facile deciperet, si videri potuisset. Sic quippe decipula ponitur, ut dum esca ostenditur, nequaquam ipsa a transeunte videatur. Quasi esca quippe in laqueo est lucrum cum culpa, et hujus mundi prosperitas cum iniquitate. Dum itaque a concupiscente lucrum appetitur, quasi pedem mentis apprehendit decipula, quae non videtur. Saepe ergo proponuntur animo cum culpa honores, divitiae, salus, et vita temporalis; quae mens infirma dum quasi escam videt, et decipulam non videt, per escam quam videns appetit, in culpa constringitur quae non videtur. Existunt etenim qualitates morum, quae certis vitiis sunt vicinae. Nam mores asperi, aut crudelitati, aut superbiae solent esse conjuncti; mores autem blandi, et quam decet paulo amplius laetiores, nonnunquam luxuriae et dissolutioni. Intuetur ergo inimicus generis humani uniuscujusque mores cui vitio sint propinqui, et illa opponit ante faciem ad quae cognoscit facilius inclinari mentem, ut blandis ac laetis moribus saepe luxuriam, nonnunquam vanam gloriam; asperis vero mentibus iram, superbiam, vel crudelitatem proponat. Ibi ergo decipulam ponit, ubi esse semitam mentis conspicit, quia illic periculum deceptionis inserit, ubi viam esse invenerit propinquae cogitationis. Et quia perversus homo omne quod facit etiam pati metuit, atque hoc sibi ab omnibus fieri aestimat quod ipse omnibus quibus valet parat, recte sequitur:

CAPUT XIV.

VERS. 11. — Undique terrebunt eum formidines. 16. Peccator pravis desideriis ad malam actionem tractus timore irretitur. — Tales enim contra se omnes esse suspicatur, qualis ipse esse contra omnes nititur. Quae nimirum formidines quid in ejus actione faciant, subinfertur cum dicitur: IBID. — Et involvent pedes ejus. Pedes quippe si involuti fuerint, gressus liberos habere non possunt, et nullum carpere iter valent, quia sua eos involumenta retinent. Prava itaque desideria ad pessimam actionem trahunt, sed pessima actio restringit in formidine. Quae videlicet formido involvit pedes, ne in rectam exire valeant actionem. Et saepe contingit ut idcirco quisque bonus esse metuat, ne hoc a pravis ipse patiatur quod se bonis fecisse reminiscitur; dumque hoc pati quod fecit metuit, undique territus, undique suspectus, quasi pedes involutos habet, qui timore irretitur, nil libere agere praevalet, quia in bono opere quasi inde gressum perdidit, unde ad mala 442 quae concupierat excessit. Sequitur:

CAPUT XV.

VERS. 12. — Attenuetur fame robur ejus, et inedia invadat costas illius. 17. Iniquus fame tabescit, quia nulla cibi interni refectione pascitur. — Scripturae sacrae more, optare videtur quod futurum praevidet, scilicet non maledicentis animo, sed praedicentis. Omnis itaque homo, quia ex anima et carne consistit, quasi ex robore et infirmitate compositus est. Ex ea enim parte qua spiritus rationalis est conditus, non incongrue dicitur robustus; ex ea vero qua carnalis, infirmus est. Robur ergo est hominis anima rationalis, quae impugnantibus vitiis resistere per rationem valet. Unde et superius per beatum Job dictum est: Roborasti eum paululum, ut in perpetuum pertransiret (Job. XIV, 20). Ex rationali quippe anima habet homo ut in perpetuum vivat. Hujus ergo iniqui robur fame attenuatur, quia ejus anima nulla interni cibi refectione pascitur. De qua scilicet fame Deus per prophetam loquitur: Emittam famem in terram, non famem panis neque sitim aquae, sed audiendi verbum Domini (Amos VIII, 11). 18. Hinc sensus mentis deficiunt. — Bene autem subditur: Et inedia invadat costas illius. Costae enim viscera constringunt, ut latentia intrinsecus earum soliditate muniantur. Costae ergo uniuscujusque sunt sensus animi, qui latentes cogitationes muniunt. Inedia igitur invadit costas, quando, omni spiritali refectione subtracta, sensus mentis deficiunt, et cogitationes suas regere vel tueri non possunt. Inedia invadit iniqui costas, quia fames interna sensus mentis extenuat, ut cogitationes suas nullatenus regant. Nam dum sensus mentis obtusi fuerint, cogitationes ad exteriora prodeunt, et, quasi costis infirmantibus, ea quae in occulto sana latere potuerant foras viscera funduntur. Unde fit ut, cogitationibus exterius sparsis, exterioris gloriae speciem deceptus appetat animus, nihilque diligat, nisi quod pulchrum foris viderit. Contra quem adhuc apte subjungitur:

CAPUT XVI.

VERS. 13. — Devoret pulchritudinem cutis ejus, et consumat brachia illius primogenita mors. 19. Primogenita mors est superbia quam cavere vix possunt divites. — Pulchritudo cutis est gloria temporalis, quae dum foris concupiscitur, quasi species in cute retinetur. Brachiorum vero nomine non incongrue opera designantur, quia corporale opus brachiis agitur. Quid autem mors nisi peccatum est, quod ab interiore vita animam occidit? unde scriptum est: Beatus et sanctus qui habet partem in resurrectione prima (Apoc. XX, 6), quia ille post in carne feliciter resurget, qui, in hac vita positus, a mentis suae morte resurrexerit. Si igitur peccatum mors, non incongrue primogenita mors superbia valet intelligi, quia scriptum est: Initium omnis peccati superbia (Eccli. X, 15). Pulchritudinem igitur cutis ejus et brachia illius primogenita mors devorat, quia iniqui gloriam vel operationem superbia supplantat. Potuit enim etiam in hac vita sine culpa gloriosus existere, si superbus minime fuisset; potuit auctoris sui judicio quibusdam suis operibus commendari, nisi haec ipsa opera ante ejus oculos elatio supplantaret. Saepe enim quosdam divites videmus, qui opes et gloriam habere sine culpa potuissent, si haec habere cum humilitate voluissent. Sed extolluntur rebus, inflantur honoribus, dedignantur caeteros, omnemque vitae suae fiduciam in ipsa abundantia rerum ponunt. Unde et quidam dives dicebat: 443 Anima, habes multa bona reposita in annos plurimos; requiesce, comede, bibe, epulare (Luc. XII, 19). Quas eorum cogitationes dum supernus judex aspicit, de hac ipsa eos sua fiducia evellit. Unde hic quoque apte subditur:

CAPUT XVII.

VERS. 14. — Evellatur de tabernaculo suo fiducia ejus, et calcet super eum quasi rex interitus. 20. Quos diabolus blandis persuasionibus decipit, violentis nexibus ad supplicium rapit. — Hoc loco interitus nomine ipse hostis generis humani, qui interitum intulit, designatur; qui per suum quemdam satellitem exprimitur, de quo ad Joannem dicitur: Nomen illi mors (Apoc. VI, 8). Iste itaque interitus in die exitus quasi rex super impium calcat, quia quem prius blandis persuasionibus decepit, ad extremum violentis nexibus ad supplicium rapit, tantoque eum durius deprimit, quanto in pravis actibus vehementius astringit. Qui hic quoque reprobi mentem dum possidet calcat, quia quoties eam delectationibus pressit, quasi toties super eam pedes suae tyrannicae dominationis posuit..

VERS. 15. — Habitent in tabernaculo illius socii ejus, quia non est. 22. Satan non esse dicitur, quia bene esse amisit. — Id est, in mente ejus apostatae angeli per cogitationes nequissimas conversentur, ejus videlicet socii, qui idcirco jam non est, quia a summa essentia recessit, et per hoc, quotidie excrescente defectu, quasi ad non esse tendit, quo semel ab eo qui vere est cecidit; qui recte quoque non esse dicitur, quia bene esse perdidit, quamvis naturae essentiam non amisit. Adhuc tamen easdem iniqui cogitationes subtilius exprimens subjungit, dicens:

CAPUT XIX.

IBID. — Aspergatur in tabernaculo ejus sulphur. 23. Peccata carnis sulphuri fetenti et ardenti recte comparantur. — Sulphur quid aliud quam fomentum ignis est? Quod tamen sic ignem nutrit, ut fetorem gravissimum exhalet. Quid itaque in sulphure, nisi peccatum carnis accipimus? Quod dum perversis cogitationibus quasi quibusdam fetoribus mentem replet, aeterna ei incendia praeparat; et dum fetoris sui nebulam in mente reproba dilatat, contra eam flammis subsequentibus quasi nutrimenta subministrat. Nam quia per sulphur fetor carnis accipitur, ipsa sacri eloquii historia testatur, quae contra Sodomam ignem ac sulphur pluisse Dominum narrat (Genes. XIX, 24). Qui cum carnis ejus scelera punire decrevisset, in ipsa qualitate ultionis notavit maculam criminis. Sulphur quippe fetorem habet, ignis ardorem. Quia itaque ad perversa desideria ex carnis fetore arserant, dignum fuit ut simul igne et sulphure perirent, quatenus ex justa poena discerent ex injusto desiderio quid fecissent. Hoc ergo in tabernaculo iniqui sulphur aspergitur, quoties perversa carnis delectatio in ejus mente dominatur. Quem quia indesinenter pravae cogitationes possident, eumque ferre boni operis fructum vetant, recte subjungitur:

CAPUT XX.

VERS. 16. — Deorsum radices ejus siccentur, sursum autem atteratur messis ejus. 24. Iniquorum ariditas et streilitas. — Quid namque radicum nomine, quae in occulto sitae sunt, et germen in apertum ferunt, nisi cogitationes accipimus, quae dum non videntur in corde, visibilia opera producunt? Unde et messis nomine eadem aperta operatio signatur quae videlicet ex latenti radice producitur. Et quia omnis iniquus prius in cogitationibus tentationum arescit, et postea a bonis actibus deficit, recte per Baldad dicitur: Deorsum radices ejus siccentur, sursum autem atteratur messis ejus. Quia dum pravus quisque cogitationes suas in infimis rebus ponit et sempiternae viriditatis gaudia appetere negligit, quid aliud quam radices suas deorsum siccari permittit? Cujus sursum messis atteritur, quia omnis ejus operatio a superno judicio quasi nihilum deputatur, etiam si ante humanos oculos bona videatur. In imo itaque radices sunt, et superius messis, quia hic prius bonas cogitationes mittimus, ut quandoque bonorum operum fructum percipere in aeterna retributione mereamur. Sed iniquus quisque, cum 445 bonas cogitationes deserit, et ad ea quae sunt exterius semetipsum fundit, deorsum siccantur radices ejus. Sursum vero messis ejus atteritur, quia qui hic sterilis persistit, post hanc vitam ad nulla praemia vocatur. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXI.

VERS. 17. — Memoria illius pereat de terra, et non celebretur nomen ejus in plateis. 25. Antichristi et iniquorum omnium quam brevis gloria. — Intuendum est nobis quia sic Baldad Suhites de unoquoque iniquo loquitur ut latenter ad caput omnium iniquorum ejus verba vertantur. Caput quippe iniquorum diabolus est. Ipse quippe, in ultimis temporibus, illud vas perditionis ingressus, Antichristus vocabitur, qui nomen suum longe lateque diffundere conabitur, quod nunc unusquisque imitatur cum de memoria terreni nominis gloriam laudis suae extendere nititur, atque opinione transitoria laetatur. Sic ergo haec verba intelligantur de unoquoque iniquo, ut referri quoque debeant ad ipsum specialiter caput iniquorum. Dicat itaque: Memoria illius pereat de terra, et non celebretur nomen ejus in plateis. Plateae quippe appellatione graeca a latitudine sunt vocatae. Memoriam vero suam in terra statuere Antichristus conatur, cum in terrena gloria appetit, si esset possibile, in perpetuum permanere. Nomen suum in plateis celebrari gaudet, cum longe lateque operationem suae iniquitatis extendit. Sed quia diu haec ejus iniquitas non sinitur extolli, dicatur: Memoria illius pereat de terra, et non celebretur nomen ejus in plateis; id est, et citius laudem terrenae potestatis amittat, et omne gaudium sui nominis perdat, quod longe lateque in brevi temporis prosperitate diffuderat. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXII.

VERS. 18. — Expellet eum de luce in tenebras. 26. Iniquorum gloriam supplicium aeternum excipit. — De luce ad tenebras ducitur cum de honore vitae praesentis ad supplicia aeterna damnatur. Unde et apertius subditur: IBID. — Et de orbe transferet eum. De orbe quippe transfertur cum, superno apparente judice, de hoc mundo tollitur, in quo perverse gloriatur. Qui pro eo quod cum omnibus sequacibus suis, fine mundi interveniente, damnatur, recte subjungitur: VERS. 19. — Non erit semen ejus, neque progenies in populo suo, nec ullae reliquiae in regionibus ejus. Scriptum quippe est, quia Dominus Jesus interficiet eum spiritu oris sui, et destruet illustratione adventus sui (II Thess. II, 8). Dum ergo ejus iniquitas cum mundi statu terminatur, progenies ejus in populo suo non relinquetur, quia et ipse et ejus populus cum ea ad supplicium pariter urgetur, et omnes iniqui, qui de ejus perversa persuasione in pravis actionibus nati sunt, illustratione adventus Domini aeterno interitu cum eodem suo capite ferientur. Ac nulla ejus progenies in mundo remanet, quia districtus judex iniquitates illius cum ipso mundi fine concludit. Quod vero haec aperte de Antichristo intelligi debeant, demonstratur cum subditur:

CAPUT XXIII.

VERS. 20. — In diebus ejus stupebunt novissimi, et primos invadet horror. 27. Antichristi saeva persecutio. Tunc sanctis aderit et constantia ex virtute, et pavor ex carne. — Tanta enim tunc contra justos iniquitate effrenabitur, ut etiam electorum corda non parvo pavore 446 feriantur. Unde scriptum est: Ita ut in errorem inducantur, si fieri potest, etiam electi (Matth. XXIV, 24). Quod videlicet dicitur, non quia electi casuri sunt, sed magnis terroribus trepidaturi. Tunc vero contra eum certamen justitiae, et novissimi electi habere narrantur et primi, quia scilicet et hi qui in fine mundi electi reperientur in morte carnis prosternendi sunt, et illi etiam qui a prioribus mundi partibus processerunt, Enoch scilicet et Elias, ad medium revocabuntur, et crudelitatis ejus saevitiam in sua adhuc mortali carne passuri sunt. Hujus vires in tanta potestate laxatas novissimi obstupescunt, et primi metuunt, quia licet juxta hoc quod spiritu superbiae sublevatur, omnem temporalem ejus potestatem despiciunt, juxta hoc tamen quod ipsi adhuc in carne mortali sunt, in qua cruciari temporaliter possunt, ipsa quae fortiter tolerant supplicia perhorrescunt; ita ut in eis uno eodemque tempore et constantia ex virtute sit, et pavor ex carne, quia etsi electi sunt, ut tormentis vinci nequeant, per hoc tamen quod homines sunt, et ipsa metuunt tormenta quae vincunt. Dicatur ergo: In diebus ejus stupebunt novissimi, et primos invadet horror, quia videlicet tanta tunc signa monstraturus, et crudelia ac dura facturus est, ut ad stuporem perducat quos in fine mundi invenerit, et priores patres qui in ejus expugnationem servati sunt carnalis mortis dolore transfigat. Igitur quia de iniquis omnibus, vel de ipso iniquorum capite multa narravit, generali mox definitione subjungit:

CAPUT XXIV.

VERS. 21. — Haec sunt ergo tabernacula iniqui, et iste locus ejus qui ignorat Deum. 28. Antichristi locus tenebrae sunt, in quas cum iniquis omnibus detrudetur. — Superius enim dixerat: Expellet eum de luce ad tenebras, et de orbe transferet eum. Cujus cum mala subjungeret, adjunxit: Haec sunt tabernacula iniqui, et iste locus ejus qui ignorat Deum, videlicet indicans quia is qui nunc Deum ignorando extollitur, tunc ad propria tabernacula pervenit, quando eum sua iniquitas in supplicia demergit; et locum suum quandoque invenit tenebras, qui dum hic de falsa gauderet luce justitiae, locum tenebat alienum. Perversi enim in omne quod per simulationem faciunt nomen gloriae justorum quasi locum occupare alienum nituntur. Sed ad locum suum tunc perveniunt, cum iniquitatis suae merito perpetuo igne cruciantur. Hic namque per omne quod agunt percipiendae laudis desiderio serviunt, et per imaginem bonorum operum sinum mentis ad avaritiam extendunt. Eat igitur nunc iniquus, et, multis apparatibus tumidus, sua hic habitacula construat, nomen gloriae extendat, rura multiplicet, seque abundantibus opibus delectet; cum vero ad supplicia aeterna pervenerit, profecto cognoscet quia haec sunt tabernacula iniqui, et iste locus ejus qui ignorat Deum. Recte vero haec Baldad dixerat, sed cui diceret ignorabat. Vehementer autem justi cor affligitur, quando contra illum sententiae ex injusta aestimatione proferuntur. Unde beatus Job protinus respondit, dicens:

CAPUT XXV.

CAP. XIX, VERS. 2. — Usquequo affligitis animam meam, et atteritis me sermonibus? 447 29. Quid a malis patiantur justi. — Sancti viri eloquia, ut saepe jam diximus, aliquando ex persona propria, aliquando vero ex voce capitis, aliquando autem ex typo sunt universalis Ecclesiae sentienda. Valde vero affligitur anima justorum quando illi contra bonos districtas sententias intorquent, qui bene vivere ignorant; et ex voce sibi justitiam vindicant, quam moribus impugnant. Unde amicis beati Job, ut saepe jam diximus, haereticorum typum tenentibus, recte ab eodem respondetur: Usquequo affligitis animam meam, et atteritis me sermonibus? Atteruntur enim boni sermonibus iniquorum, quando contra eos illi in verbis tument, qui aut in perversa fide, aut in pravis moribus jacent. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXVI.

VERS. 3. — En, decies confunditis me. 30. Sive sileant justi, sive loquantur, malos semper experiuntur adversarios. — Numeratis vicibus locutionum amicorum Job, adhuc nisi quinquies locutos eos cognoscimus. Sed propter hoc quod ab eis quinquies increpationes audierat, quorum increpationibus quinquies ipse respondit, decies se perhibet esse confusum, quia et in eo graviter laboravit quod frustra increpatus est, et in eo confusionem pertulit quod verba doctrinae non audientibus dixit. Itaque et cum audiens taceret, et cum loquens non audiretur, ipse laborem pertulit, qui et tacendo patienter, et eis loquendo inutiliter, cordis dolorem sensit. Unde et superius dicit: Quid agam? Si locutus fuero, non quiescet dolor meus; et si tacuero, non recedet a me (Job. XVI, 7). Sin vero ad typum sanctae Ecclesiae haec verba referimus, liquet quod magnum ejus est gaudium servare Decalogi praecepta. Sed hanc perversi decies confundunt, quia per omne quod peccant pravis suis moribus Decalogi praecepta relinquunt, et toties bonis confusionem faciunt, quoties in suis actibus divinis vocibus obsistunt. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXVII.

IBID. — Et non erubescitis opprimentes me. 31. Hostes Ecclesiae nec timore Dei, nec hominum pudore refrenantur. — Sunt nonnulli quos ad perpetrandam nequitiam oborta subito malitia invitat, sed tamen humana verecundia revocat. Et plerumque per hoc quod exterius erubescunt, ad interiora sua redeunt, et contra se internum judicium sumunt, quia si propter hominem mala facere metuunt, quanto magis propter Deum, qui cuncta inspicit, nec appetere mala debuerunt? In quibus fit ut mala majora corrigant per bona minima, scilicet per exteriorem verecundiam interiorem culpam. Et sunt quidam qui postquam Deum in mente contempserint, multo magis humana judicia spernunt, atque omne malum quod appetunt, audacter peragere non erubescunt. Quos ad perpetrandum malum occulta iniquitas invitat, et nulla aperta verecundia retardat; sicut et de quodam iniquo judice dicitur: Deum non timebat, et hominem non verebatur (Luc. XVIII, 2). Hinc est etiam quod de quibusdam impudenti fronte peccantibus dictum est: Et peccatum suum quasi Sodoma praedicaverunt (Isai. III, 9). Plerumque ergo tales sunt adversarii sanctae Ecclesiae, qui a perpetrandis malis nec timore Domini, nec hominum pudore refrenantur. Quibus bene per beatum Job dicitur: Et non erubescitis opprimentes me, quia etsi pravum fuit mala voluisse, pejus est male appetita non erubescere. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXVIII.

VERS. 4. — Nempe et si ignoravi, mecum erit ignorantia mea. 448 32. Ecclesiae humilitati haeretici arrogantiam opponunt. — Habent hoc haeretici proprium, ut de inani scientiae suae arrogantia inflentur, et recte credentium simplicitatem saepe derideant, et nullius esse meriti vitam humilium ducant. At contra sancta Ecclesia in omne quod veraciter sapit sensum suum humiliter deprimit, ne scientia infletur, ne in requisitione occultorum tumeat, et perscrutari aliqua quae ultra vires sunt illius praesumat. Utilius etenim studet nescire quae perscrutari non valet quam audacter definire quae nescit. Scriptum quippe est: Sicut qui mel multum comedit, non est ei bonum; sic qui scrutator est majestatis opprimetur a gloria (Prov. XXV, 27). Dulcedo etenim mellis, si plus quam necesse est sumitur, unde delectatur os, inde vita comedentis necatur. Dulcis quoque est requisitio majestatis; sed qui plus hanc scrutari appetit quam humanitatis cognitio permittit, ipsa hunc ejus gloria opprimit, quia velut immoderate mel sumptum, perscrutantis sensum, dum non capitur, rumpit. Nobiscum vero esse dicitur, quod pro nobis est; et rursum non nobiscum esse dicitur quod contra nos est (Luc. XI, 13). Quia ergo scientia sua haeretici cor inflat, fideles autem cognitio ignorantiae suae humiliat, dicat beatus Job voce sua, dicat etiam confessione universalis Ecclesiae: Nempe et si ignoravi, mecum erit ignorantia mea. Ac si aperte haereticis dicatur: Omnis vestra scientia vobiscum non est, quia contra vos est, dum stulta elatione vos erigit. Mea vero ignorantia mecum est, quia pro me est; quoniam dum perscrutari de Deo aliquid superbe non audeo, in veritate me humiliter servo. Et quia haec ipsa haeretici quae scire quaerunt ad usum solius elationis arripiunt, ut contra fideles et humiles docti videantur, recte subjungitur:

CAPUT XXIX.

VERS. 5. — At vos contra me erigimini. 33. Ordo postulat ut primum contra nos, et postmodum contra malos erigamur. Hanc correctionis rationem ignorant mali. — Sed haec fortasse melius verba perpendimus, si ipsis specialiter amicis beati Job quemadmodum congruant demonstremus. Ipsi etenim percussum justum videntes, ad sua intima redire debuerunt, et nequaquam beatum Job verbis increpationis premere, sed se deflere, quia si sic percussus fuerat qui ita serviebat, qua ultione feriri merebantur qui non ita servierant? Quibus bene dicitur: At vos contra me erigimini. Ac si eis apertius dicatur: Qui erigi contra vosmetipsos ex mea percussione debuistis. Ordo quippe erectionis in bono iste est, ut primum contra nos et postmodum contra malos erigamur. Nam qui contra bonos erigitur per superbiam inflatur. Contra nosmetipsos enim erigimur quando, mala propria recognoscentes, districta nosmetipsos poenitentiae ultione ferimus, quando nequaquam nobis in peccatis parcimus, et nullis erga nos cogitationum blandimentis inclinamur. Qui si districte prius nostra in nobis mala insequimur, justum quoque est ut etiam contra aliena mala utiliter erigamur; et ea quae in nobis punimus, etiam in aliis redarguendo superemus. 34. Sed hanc erectionem mali nesciunt, quia se relinquunt, et bonos impetunt. Sibi se intra conscientiam suam mollitie blandae adulationis inclinant, et contra bonorum vitam districtione asperitatis eriguntur. Unde amicis beati Job in ejus flagello tumentibus recte nunc dicitur: At vos contra me 449 erigimini; id est, vosmetipsos redarguendos relinquitis, et me districtis sententiis increpatis. Qui enim semetipsum prius non judicat, quid in alio rectum judicet ignorat. Et si novit fortasse per auditum quod rectum judicare debeat, recte tamen judicare aliena merita non valet, cui conscientia innocentiae propriae nullam judicii regulam praebet. Hinc est enim quod insidiantibus quibusquam, et puniendam adulteram deducentibus dicitur (Joan. VIII, 7). Qui sine peccato est vestrum, primus in illam lapidem mittat (3, q. 7, ca). Ad aliena quippe punienda peccata ibant, et sua reliquerant. Revocantur itaque intus ad conscientiam, ut prius propria corrigant, et tunc aliena reprehendant. Hinc est quod cum tribus Benjamin in carnis scelere fuisset obruta, collectus omnis Israel ulcisci iniquitatem voluit, sed tamen semel et iterum in belli certamine ipse prostratus est. Consulto autem Domino si ad ulciscendum ire debuissent, jussum est. Qui juxta divinae vocis imperium perrexit, et semel et secundo cecidit, et tunc demum peccatricem tribum valde feriens pene funditus exstinxit. Quid est quod in ultionem sceleris inflammatur, et tamen prius ipse prosternitur, nisi quod prius ipsi purgandi sunt per quos aliorum culpae feriuntur, ut ipsi jam mundi per ultionem veniant, qui aliorum vitia corrigere festinant? Unde necesse est ut cum contra nos ultio divini examinis cessat, nostra se conscientia ipsa reprehendat, atque ad lamenta poenitentiae ipsa se contra semetipsam erigat, nec contra bonos elata et sibi humilis, sed contra se rigida sit, bonis vero omnibus submissa. Superbis ergo corripientibus recte nunc dicitur: At vos contra me erigimini, et arguitis me opprobriis meis. Omnes elati grave esse opprobrium deputant mala temporalia; et tanto unumquemque esse a Deo despectum credunt, quanto hunc afflictum percussionis flagello conspiciunt. Nil etenim in moribus, nil in actibus quaerunt; sed quoslibet in hac vita percussos viderint, esse jam divino judicio damnatos arbitrantur. Unde bene nunc beati Job voce dicitur:

CAPUT XXX.

IBID. — Et arguitis me opprobriis meis. 35. Falsa reproborum de justorum flagellis judicia. — Quia hi qui eum justum ante flagella noverant, injustum esse ex ipsa jam sua percussione judicabant. Unde et saepe haeretici, quia affligi quosdam intra sanctam Ecclesiam vident, scriptum quippe de Deo est: Flagellat omnem filium quem recipit (Hebr. XII, 6), tribulationes fidelium non nisi ex peccato esse suspicantur, seque ideo justos credunt, quia, in pravitatis suae sensu dimissi, sine flagello duruerunt. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXI.

VERS. 6. — Saltem nunc intelligite quia Deus non aequo judicio afflixerit me. 36. Quaedam Scripturae sacrae verba prava censentur, quia ad interiorem sui intelligentiam non exiguntur. — O quam durum sonat vox justi verberibus afflicti; quam tamen non elatio, sed dolor expressit! Sed justus non est qui justitiam in dolore deserit. Beatus autem Job, quia mite cor habuit, nec in dura voce peccavit. Nam si hunc peccasse in hac voce dicimus, implesse diabolum astruimus quod proposuit, dicens: Tange os ejus et carnem, si non in faciem benedixerit tibi (Job. II, 5). Gravis itaque quaestio oritur. Si etenim non peccavit in eo quod dicit: Saltem nunc intelligite, quia Deus non aequo judicio afflixerit me, Deum (quod dici nefas est) injuste aliquid egisse consentimus. Si vero 450 peccavit, diabolus de illo quod promisit exhibuit. Astruendum est igitur quia et Deus recte circa beatum Job egerit, et tamen beatus Job ex eo quod dicit se non justo Dei judicio afflictum mentitus non sit, et antiquus hostis in eo quod de beati viri promiserat culpa mentitus sit. Nonnunquam namque ideo prava creduntur verba bonorum, quia interiori sua intelligentia minime pensantur. Beatus enim Job vitam suam attenderat, et ea quae patiebatur flagella pensabat, et videbat aequum non esse ut ad talem vitam talia flagella reciperet. Et cum dicit non aequo se judicio afflictum, hoc libera voce locutus est, quod in secreto suo Dominus de illo adversario ejus dixerat: Commovisti me adversus eum, ut affligerem eum frustra (Ibid., 3). Quod enim dicit Deus, quia frustra beatum Job afflixerit, hoc rursum beatus Job asserit, quia non aequo judicio a Domino sit afflictus. In quo itaque peccavit qui a sententia auctoris sui in nullo discrepavit.. IBID. — Et flagellis suis me cinxerit. 39. Infirma Ecclesiae membra ex assiduis flagellis turbantur. — Aliud quippe est flagellis percuti, aliud cingi. Flagellis namque percutimur cum consolationem et in doloribus ex rebus aliis habemus. Nam cum tanta nos afflictio depremit, ut ex nullius rei consolatione respirare animus possit, non jam flagellis solummodo ferimur, sed etiam cingimur, quia tribulationum verbere ex omni parte circumdamur. Cinctus enim flagellis Paulus fuerat, cum dicebat: Foris pugnae, intus timores (II Cor. VII, 5). Cinctus flagellis fuerat, cum dicebat: Periculis ex genere, periculis ex gentibus, periculis in civitate, periculis in solitudine (II Cor. XI, 26), et caetera, quae ita enumerat, ut nusquam se habuisse requiem ostendat. Sancta vero Ecclesia cum tribulationum suarum flagellis cingitur, in ea infirmi quique in pusillanimitatis casu rediguntur, ita ut se eo jam despectos existiment, quo exaudiri se tardius vident. Recte adhuc etiam ex eorum typo sancti viri voce subjungitur:

CAPUT XXXIII.

VERS. 7. — Ecce clamabo vim patiens, et nemo exaudiet; vociferabor, et non est qui judicet. 40. Dolentium querelas dissimulat Deus, ut utilitatem augeat. — Omnipotens Deus quid nobis profuturum esse valeat sciens, dissimulat exaudire dolentium vocem, ut augeat utilitatem, ut purgetur vita per poenam, et quietis tranquillitas, quae hic inveniri non valet, alibi quaeratur. Sed hanc dispensationis gratiam nonnulli etiam fidelium ignorant. Ex quorum etiam persona nunc dicitur: Ecce clamabo vim patiens, et nemo exaudiet; vociferabor, et non est qui judicet. Non est enim qui judicet dicitur quando judicare dissumulat ipse qui est, quia causam nostram contra adversarium, praeter eum, qui judicet non est. Nec tamen hoc sine judicio est, quod judicium differtur, quia cum haec beatus Job diceret, et sancti viri merita, et adversarii poena crescebat. Hoc ipsum ergo judicium differre judicis est. Sed aliud est quod juste intrinsecus disponit Deus, aliud quod foris flagellis attritus expetit animus. Unde adhuc de ipsa verberum depressione subjungit:

CAPUT XXXIV.

VERS. 8. — Semitam meam circumsepsit, et transire non possum, et in calle meo tenebras posuit. 41. Ex ignorantia et infirmitate peccantibus adest Deus illuminatio et salus nostra. — Circumseptam verberibus semitam suam vidit cum, transire ad securitatem cupiens, evadere flagella non potuit. Et quia se percuti aspexit, nec tamen percussione dignam vitam in semetipso reperit, quasi in calle cordis ignorantiae suae tenebras invenit, qui cur ita flagellaretur penetrare non potuit. Quod ad infirma quoque membra sanctae Ecclesiae non incongrue refertur, quando per hoc quod prave se egisse meminerunt, a 452 bono quoque opere retardantur; et ex infirmitate propria timidi, bona contra haec fortia aggredi non praesumunt. Timent enim magna bona incipere, qui se in suis actibus infirmos esse meminerunt. Et cum plerumque etiam bonum quod eligant nesciunt, quasi in calle suo positas tenebras perhorrescunt. Nam saepe ita de suo opere fit animus incertus, ut ignoret omnino quid virtus, quid culpa sit. In calle ergo suo tenebras invenit, qui in his quae agere appetit quid eligere debeat nescit. Quia igitur saepe infirmitate, nonnunquam vero ignorantia peccatur, ex infirmantibus membris dicitur: Semitam meam circumsepsit, et transire non possum. Ex eis vero quid ad ipsum opus bonum quod eligant caligant subditur: Et in calle meo tenebras posuit. Ex poena etenim culpae est videre bonum quod agere debeat, et tamen implere non posse, et rursum ex graviori poena culpae est quod agere debeat nec videre. Unde et contra haec utraque Psalmistae voce dicitur: Dominus illuminatio mea, et salus mea, quem timebo (Psal. XXVI, 1)? Contra ignorantiae enim tenebras illuminatio, contra infirmitatem vero salus est Dominus, quando et ostendit quid debeat ad agendum appeti, et vires praebet ut quod ostenderit possit impleri. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXV VERS.

9. — Spoliavit me gloria mea, et abstulit coronam de capite meo. 42. Infirma Ecclesiae membra aliquando justitia spoliantur ad tempus. — Quod cuncta haec beati viri in afflictione positi personae conveniant, dubium non est. Sed quia historiae verba patent, juxta litteram expositione non indigent. Oportet ergo ut per sensus debeant mysticos investigari. Ait namque: Spoliavit me gloria mea. Gloria quippe uniuscujusque justitia est. Sicut vero vestimentum tegit a frigore, ita justitia munit a morte. Unde non immerito justitia vestimento comparatur, cum per Prophetam dicitur: Sacerdotes tui induantur justitia (Psal. CXXXI, 9). Quia vero afflictionis suae tempore hoc justitiae vestimentum, quod apud Deum protegit, sancta Ecclesia in membris suis infirmantibus amittit, dicatur recte: Spoliavit me gloria mea; id est, justitia ab infirmis ablata est, quae ab eis auferri non posset si medullitus inhaesisset; sed idcirco tolli potuit, quia more vestimenti exterius adhaesit. Qua in re quaerendum est quomodo sanctae Ecclesiae membra dici valeant qui potuerunt justitiam perdere, quam tenere videbantur. Sed sciendum est quod plerumque a membris ejus infirmantibus justitia ad tempus amittitur; sed cum per cognitionem culpae postmodum ad poenitentiam redeunt, sese ad eamdem justitiam quam perdiderant fortius quam credebatur astringunt. Ubi adhuc subditur: Et abstulit coronam de capite meo. Sicut caput corporis prima pars est, ita principale interioris hominis mens est. Corona vero victoriae praemium est, quod desuper potitur, ut qui certaverit remuneretur. Quia ergo multi adversitatibus pressi minime in certamine perdurant, in eis sancta Ecclesia quasi coronam de capite amittit. Corona quippe in capite est superna remuneratio in mente. Et sunt plerique qui, dum adversitatibus affliguntur, superna praemia cogitare negligunt, et ad perfectionem victoriae pervenire non possunt. In his itaque corona de capite aufertur, quia 453 supernum et spiritale praemium de mentis cogitatione tollitur, ut exteriora jam tranquilla appetant, et aeterna praemia, quia cogitare consueverant, non requirant. 43. Corona de capite Ecclesiae aufertur, cum praelati bona spiritualia negligunt. — Vel certe caput fidelium non immerito sacerdotes accipiuntur, quia pars membrorum Domini prima sunt. Unde et per prophetam caput et cauda exterminari dicitur, ubi videlicet et capitis nomine sacerdotes, et caudae appellatione prophetae reprobi designantur. Corona ergo de capite aufertur cum supernae remunerationis praemia etiam ipsi deserunt qui in hoc Ecclesiae corpore praeesse videbantur. Et plerumque ducibus cadentibus, latius succumbit exercitus qui sequebatur. Unde mox post damna majorum de multimoda labefactione Ecclesiae subsecutus adjunxit:

CAPUT XXXVI.

VERS. 10. — Destruxit me undique, et pereo, et quasi avulsae arbori abstulit spem meam. 44. Praepositis corruentibus infirmi cadunt. — Quasi undique enim Ecclesia destruitur, atque in infirmis membris deperit, quando ipsa quae videbantur fortia corruunt, quando corona de capite abstrahitur, id est quando aeterna praemia etiam a praepositis negliguntur. Bene autem de infirmis cadentibus subditur: Et quasi avulsae arbori abstulit spem meam. Arbor quippe vento impellitur ut cadat. Et quem minae terrent, ut ad injustitiam corruat, quid aliud quam arbor flatum venti pertulit, et statum suae rectitudinis amisit? Quasi enim ex vento spem perdidit, qui, pravorum minis ac persuasionibus devictus, aeterna quae sperabat praemia reliquit. Et quia plerumque contingit ut poenas quis metuens justitiam deserat, fit, judicante Deo, ut etiam justitiam deserens poenas quas timuit non evadat, et qui mentis interitum minime timuit, etiam carnis mala toleret, quae timebat. Unde adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XXXVII.

VERS. 11. — Iratus est contra me furor ejus, et sic me habuit quasi hostem suum. 45. Quosdam ferit Deus tanquam filios, alios tanquam hostes. — Praedicatore quippe egregio attestante dicimus quia fidelis est Deus, et non patietur nos tentari supra id quod possumus ferre, sed faciet cum tentatione proventum, ut possimus sustinere (I Cor. X, 13). Per prophetam quoque Dominus dicit: Plaga inimici percussi te, castigatione crudeli (Jerem. XXX, 14). Qui ergo ita percutitur, ut vires illius a percussione superentur, non hunc Dominus jam quasi filium per disciplinam, sed quasi hostem per iram ferit. Cum ergo virtutem nostrae patientiae flagella transeunt, valde metuendum est ne, peccatis nostris exigentibus, non jam quasi filii a patre, sed quasi hostes a Domino feriamur. Et quia fit plerumque ut etiam maligni spiritus afflictorum cordibus multa suadeant, atque inter flagella quae exterius feriunt cogitationes noxias in mentibus fundant, post furorem Domini recte subjungitur:

CAPUT XXXVIII.

VERS. 12. — Simul venerunt latrones ejus, et fecerunt sibi viam per me. 46. Afflictos maligni spiritus irrumpentes obsident. In eis voluntas injuste est, et potestas justa. — Latrones namque ejus maligni sunt spiritus, qui exquirendis hominum mortibus occupantur. Quia viam sibi in afflictorum cordibus faciunt, quando inter adversa quae exterius tolerantur cogitationes quoque pravas immittere non desistunt. De quibus adhuc dicitur: Et obsederunt in gyro tabernaculum meum. In gyro enim tabernaculum obsident quando 454 ex omni latere suis tentationibus mentem cingunt. Quam modo lugere de temporalibus, modo desperare de aeternis, modo in impatientiam ruere, atque in Deum blasphemiae verba jaculari, pessima suggestione persuadent. Quae tamen verba, ut jam praediximus, beato Job etiam juxta historiam congruunt, qui dum mala quae pertulit ante oculos congessit, non quasi corrigendum filium, sed quasi hostem percussum se esse judicavit. Per quem sibi etiam latrones ejus viam fecerunt, quia maligni contra eum spiritus licentiam percussionis acceperunt. Cujus in gyro tabernaculum obsederunt, quia, sublatis rebus et filiis, etiam corpus ejus omne vulneribus attriverunt. Sed mirum valde est, cum latrones diceret, cur addidit ejus? ut videlicet eosdem latrones Dei esse monstraret. Qua in re si voluntas ac potestas malignorum spirituum discernatur, cur latrones Dei dicantur aperitur. Maligni quippe spiritus ad nocendum nos incessabiliter anhelant; sed cum pravam voluntatem ex semetipsis habeant, potestatem tamen nocendi non habent, nisi eos voluntas summa permittat. Et cum ipsi quidem injuste nos laedere appetunt, quemlibet tamen laedere, non nisi juste a Domino permittuntur. Quia ergo in eis voluntas injusta est, et potestas justa, et latrones dicuntur, et Dei, ut ex ipsis sit quod inferre mala injuste desiderant, et ex Deo, quod desiderata juste consummant. Sed quia, ut saepe jam diximus, sanctus vir positus in dolore poenarum, modo suis, modo Ecclesiae, modo Redemptoris nostri vocibus utitur, et plerumque sic sua narrat, ut tamen per typum ea quae sunt sanctae Ecclesiae ac Redemptoris nostri proferat, postposita paulisper cura historiae, in his quae subjungit qualiter Redemptoris nostri vocibus congruat demonstremus. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXIX.

VERS. 13, 14. — Fratres meos longe fecit a me, et noti mei quasi alieni recesserunt a me. Dereliquerunt me propinqui mei, et qui me noverant obliti sunt mei. ALLEGORICUS SENSUS. — 47. Judaei Christi fratres, noti et propinqui, quem incarnandum praedixerant, incarnatum negarunt. — Hoc melius ostendimus, si Joannis ad medium testimonium proferamus, qui ait: In propria venit, et sui eum non receperunt (Joan. I, 11). Ab eo quippe fratres longe facti sunt, et noti recesserunt, quem tenentes legem prophetare Hebraei noverunt, et praesentem minime recognoscebant. Unde recte dicitur: Dereliquerunt me propinqui mei, et qui me noverant obliti sunt mei. Judaei etenim propinqui per carnem, noti per legis instructionem, quasi obliti sunt quem prophetaverant, dum eum et incarnandum verbis legis canerent, et incarnatum verbis perfidiae negarent. Sequitur:

CAPUT XL.

VERS. 15. — Inquilini domus meae et ancillae sicut alienum habuerunt me. 48. A sacerdotibus et levitis pro alieno habitus fuit Christus. — Inquilini domus Dei fuerunt sacerdotes, quorum origo in Dei servitio deputata jam per officium in conditione tenebatur. Ancillae autem non immerito intelliguntur Levitarum animae, ad secreta tabernaculi, quasi ad interiora cubiculi, familiarius servientes. Dicat ergo de sacerdotibus sedula cura servientibus, dicat de Levitis ad interiora domus Dei obsequentibus: Inquilini domus meae et ancillae sicut alienum habuerunt me, quia incarnatum Dominum, quem dudum per legis verba praedixerant, cognoscere ac venerari noluerunt. 455 Qui adhuc apertius quod ab eorum perversa voluntate non sit cognitus manifestat cum subdit:

CAPUT XLI.

IBID. — Et quasi peregrinus fui in oculis eorum. 49. Christus in propria domo peregrinus. — Redemptor etenim noster, dum a synagoga cognitus non est, in domo sua quasi peregrinus exstitit. Quod aperte propheta testatur, dicens: Quare sicut colonus futurus es in terra, et quasi viator declinans ad manendum (Jerem. XIV, 8)? Quia enim ut Dominus auditus non est, non possessor agri, sed colonus est creditus. Qui quasi viator ad manendum tantummodo declinavit, quia paucos ex Judaea abstulit, et ad vocationem gentium pergens, iter coeptum peregit. Peregrinus ergo in eorum oculis fuit, quia dum sola quae videre poterant cogitabant, non valuerunt intelligere in Domino quod videre non poterant. Dum enim despiciunt carnem visibilem, non pervenerunt ad invisibilem majestatem. Dicatur igitur recte: Et quasi peregrinus fui in oculis eorum. De quo adhuc populo apte subjungitur:

CAPUT XLII.

VERS. 16. — Servum meum vocavi, et non respondit. 50. Christus a suo servo, nimirum a Judaico populo contemptus. — Quid enim Judaicus populus nisi servus fuit, qui non amore filii obsequebatur Domino, sed timore servili? Quo contra nobis per Paulum dicitur: Non accepistis spiritum servitutis iterum in timore, sed spiritum adoptionis filiorum, in quo clamamus, Abba, pater (Rom. VIII, 15). Hunc igitur servum vocavit Dominus, quia, collatis muneribus, quasi emissis eum vocibus ad se ducere studuit. Sed non respondit, quia digna opera donis ejus reddere contempsit. Vocat enim nos Deus cum muneribus praevenit, respondemus vero vocationi ejus cum digne juxta percepta munera deservimus. Quia ergo tot muneribus Judaicum populum praevenit, dicat: Servum meum vocavi. Sed quia etiam post tot munera eum contempsit, subjungat: Et non respondit. Sequitur:

CAPUT XLIII (Vet.

XXII, Rec. XX). IBID. — Ore proprio deprecabar illum. 51. Christus jussis reluctantem deprecatus est, nec exauditus. — Ac si apertius diceret: Ego ille qui ante incarnationem meam tot ei praecepta facienda per prophetarum ora mandaveram, incarnatus ad eum veniens, ore eum proprio deprecabar. Unde et Matthaeus, cum praecepta ab eo dari in monte describeret, ait: Aperiens os suum, dixit (Matth. V, 2). Ac si patenter dicat: Tunc os suum aperuit, qui prius aperuerat ora prophetarum. Hinc est etiam quod de illo a sponsa praesentiam ejus desiderante dicitur: Osculetur me osculis oris sui (Cant. I, 1). Sancta quippe Ecclesia quot praecepta ex ejus praedicatione cognovit, quasi tot oris ejus oscula accepit. Bene autem dicitur: Deprecabar, quia in carne monstratus, dum mandata vitae humiliter dixit, quasi superbientem servum, ut veniret, rogavit. Ubi et apte subditur:

CAPUT XLIV (Rec.

XXI). VERS. 17. — Halitum meum exhorruit uxor mea. 52. Christum exhorruit sponsa synagoga. — Quid uxor Domini nisi Synagoga accipitur, in legis foedere carnali ei intelligentia subjecta? Halitus vero ex carne est. Sed infidelis populus carnem Domini carnaliter intellexit, quia purum hunc hominem credidit. Halitum ergo ejus uxor exhorruit, quia Synagoga eum quem videbat hominem Deum credere expavit. Cumque ab ejus ore verba corporaliter audiret, in eo intelligere divinitatis arcana 456 recusavit, et Creatorem esse non credidit quem creatum vidit. Carnis ergo halitum carnalis uxor exhorruit, quia, carnalibus sensibus dedita, incarnationis ejus mysterium non agnovit. Sequitur:

CAPUT XLV (Rec.

XXII). IBID. — Et orabam filios uteri mei. 53. Qui Deus membra corporea habere dicatur. — In Deo, qui corporis forma non circumscribitur, membra corporis, id est manus, oculus, uterus ita nominantur, ut ex membrorum vocabulis effectus ejus potentiae designentur. Oculos quippe habere dicitur, quia cuncta videt; manus habere describitur, quia cuncta operatur; in utero autem proles concipitur, quae in hac vita profertur. Quid ergo uterum Dei nisi ejus consilium debemus accipere, in quo ante saecula per praedestinationem concepti sumus, ut creati per saecula producamur? Deus ergo qui manet ante saecula uteri sui filios oravit, quia eos quos potenter per divinitatem condidit, incarnatus veniens humiliter rogavit. Sed quia in ipsa carne qua apparuit ab eorum aestimatione despectus est, subjungitur:

CAPUT XLVI.

VERS. 18. — Stulti quoque despiciebant me. 54. Sapientibus a veritate cadentibus, etiam stulti defecerunt. — Sapientibus a veritatis fide cadentibus, recte de stultis quoque additur, quia dum Dominum Pharisaei ac legisperiti despicerent, eorum incredulitatem etiam populi turba secuta est, quae in eo quod hominem vidit, Redemptoris mundi praedicamenta despexit. Nam saepe stultorum nomine hi qui sunt in plebe pauperes designantur. Unde et per Jeremiam dicitur: Dixi, forsitan pauperes sunt et stulti, ignorantes viam Domini, et judicium Dei sui (Jerem. V, 4). Relictis autem mundi sapientibus atque divitibus, Redemptor noster quaerere pauperes et stultos venerat. Unde nunc quasi in augmentum doloris dicitur: Stulti quoque despiciebant me. Ac si aperte diceretur: Ipsi etiam me despexerunt, pro quibus sanandis stultitiam praedicationis assumpsi. Scriptum quippe est: Quia in Dei sapientia non cognovit mundus per sapientiam Deum, placuit Deo per stultitiam praedicationis salvos facere credentes (I Cor. I, 21). Verbum quippe Dei sapientia est, sed stultitia hujus sapientiae dicta est caro Verbi; ut quia carnales quique per carnis suae prudentiam pertingere non valebant ad sapientiam Dei, per stultitiam praedicationis, id est per carnem Verbi sanarentur. Ait ergo: Stulti quoque despiciebant me. Ac si aperte diceretur: et ab ipsis despectus sum pro quibus stultus aestimari veritus non sum. Et quia Judaeorum plebs cum miracula nostri Redemptoris cerneret, hunc ex signis honorabat, dicens: Hic est Christus (Marc. XIII, 21); cum vero humanitatis ejus infirma conspiceret, eum creatorem credere dedignabatur, dicens: Non, sed seducit turbas (Joan. VII, 12); recte subjungitur:

CAPUT XLVII (Vet.

XXIII). IBID. — Et cum ab eis recessissem, detrahebant mihi. 55. Christo a miraculis quiescenti detraxerunt. — Quasi accedebat quippe ad corda populorum Dominus cum eis miracula demonstraret, et quasi recedebat cum nulla signa ostenderet. Sed recedenti Domino detrahebant cum a miraculis quiescenti praebere fidem nolebant. Sed quid mirum eum perpeti ista a plebibus, cum ipsi quoque qui legis doctores esse videbantur, qui eum 457 verbis propheticis incarnandum esse perhibebant, et incarnatum viderunt, et ab eo tamen perfidiae interruptione divisi sunt? De quibus subditur: VERS. 19. — Abominati sunt me quondam consiliarii mei et quem maxime diligebam aversatus est me. 56. Abominati sunt eum legis doctores et Pharisaei. — Cunctis liquet quia Deus consiliariis non eget, qui ipsis quoque consiliariis hominum sapientiae consilium praebet. De quo etiam scriptum est: Quis cognovit sensum Domini, aut quis ejus consiliarius fuit (Rom. XI, 34, ex Isai. XL, 13). Sed quemadmodum cum panis vel vestimentum egenti tribuitur, hoc se Dominus accepisse testatur (Matth.

CAPUT XLVIII.

XXV, 40), ita cum nescienti cuilibet rectum consilium datur, hoc ipse accipit, cujus ille membrum est qui eruditur. Omnes etenim fideles membra nostri Redemptoris sumus; et sicut ipse in nobis per misericordiam largitatis pascitur, ita ipse in nobis per doctrinae consilium juvatur. Scribae itaque et legis doctores, qui erudire populos ad vitam consueverant, quid aliud quam venturi Redemptoris consiliarii fuerunt? Qui tamen dum incarnatum Dominum conspicerent, consiliis suis multos ab ejus fide diviserunt, quamvis prius ad credendum incarnationis ejus mysterium per prophetarum verba multos docuisse viderentur. Et quia ille apud Deum magis in amore est, qui ad ejus amorem plurimos trahit, adhuc de eodem legis doctorum atque Pharisaeorum ordine subditur: Et quem maxime diligebam aversatus est me. Ipse enim ordo, suadente perfidia, a fide veritatis aversus est, qui prius in labore praedicationis serviens, maxime diligebatur; quem non solum ad non credendum, sed usque ad persequendum quoque Dominum populorum turba secuta est, et usque ad passionem illius saevitiae facibus accensa. In qua videlicet passione discipulorum corda turbata sunt. Unde et nunc subditur:

CAPUT XLIX.

VERS. 20. — Pelli meae, consumptis carnibus, adhaesit os meum. 57. Christo patienti, fugientibus apostolis, sanctae mulieres tanquam pellis adhaeserunt. — In osse fortitudo, in carnibus vero infirmitas corporis designatur. Quia igitur Christus et Ecclesia una persona est, quid per os nisi ipse Dominus designatur? Quid per carnem nisi discipuli, qui passionis ejus tempore infirma sapuerunt? Per pellem vero, quae exterior carne manet in corpore, quid nisi illae sanctae feminae figurantur, quae ad praeparanda subsidia corporis exterioribus Domino ministeriis serviebant? Nam cum ejus discipuli quamvis necdum firmi veritatis fidem populis praedicarent, ossi suo inhaerebant carnes. Et cum sanctae mulieres ea quae necessaria erant exteriora praepararent, quasi pellis exterius manebant in corpore. Sed cum ad crucis horam ventum est, ejus discipulos gravis ex persecutione Judaeorum timor invasit: fugerunt singuli, mulieres adhaeserunt. Quasi ergo consumpta carne, os Domini pelli suae adhaesit, quia fortitudo ejus, passionis tempore, fugientibus discipulis, juxta se mulieres invenit. Stetit equidem aliquandiu Petrus, sed tamen post territus negavit (Matth. XXVI, 70). Stetit etiam Joannes, cui ipso crucis tempore dictum est: Ecce mater tua (Joan. XIX, 27.) Sed perseverare minime potuit, quia de ipso quoque scriptum est, quod adolescens quidam sequebatur illum 458 amictus sindone super nudo, et tenuerunt eum; at ille rejecta sindone, nudus profugit ab eis (Marc. XIV, 51). Qui etsi post, ut verba Redemptoris sui audiret, ad horam crucis rediit, prius tamen territus fugit. Mulieres autem non solum non timuisse, neque fugisse, sed etiam usque ad sepulcrum stetisse memorantur. Dicat ergo: Pelli mea, consumptis carnibus, adhaesit os meum. Hoc est, hi qui meae fortitudini propinquius inhaerere debuerant, passionis meae tempore timore consumpti sunt, et eas, quas ad exteriora ministeria posui, in passione mea sine formidine inhaerere mihi fideliter inveni. Ubi et aperte subintelligitur, quod haec verba per mysterium dicantur, dum sequitur:

CAPUT L.

IBID. — Et derelicta sunt tantummodo labia circa dentes meos. 58. Christi dentes apostoli, eo patiente virtutem omnem amiserant. — Quid enim circa dentes aliud quam labia habemus, etiam si nulla flagella patiamur? Sed quid per labia nisi locutio, quid per dentes, nisi sancti apostoli designantur? Qui in hoc Ecclesiae corpore idcirco sunt positi, ut vitam carnalium correptione mordeant, eamque a suae pertinaciae duritia confringant. Unde et eidem primo apostolorum quasi denti in ejus corpore posito dicitur: Macta, et manduca (Act. X, 13). Sed quia passionis ejus tempore isti dentes prae timore mortis amiserunt morsum correptionis, amiserunt fiduciam roboris, amiserunt efficaciam omnimodae operationis, ita ut duo ex illis ambulantes, post ejus mortem ac resurrectionem, in via loquerentur et dicerent: Nos sperabamus quia ipse esset redempturus Israel (Luc. XXIV, 21), recte nunc dicitur: Et derelicta sunt tantummodo labia circa dentes meos. Confabulabantur adhuc de illo, sed jam in illum minime credebant. Tantummodo ergo labia circa dentes ejus remanserant, quia virtutem bonae operationis amiserant, et sola de illo confabulationis verba retinebant. Perdiderant morsum correptionis, et habebant motum locutionis. Labia itaque tantummodo circa dentes relicta sunt, quia adhuc quidem confabulari noverant, sed praedicare jam eum, aut mordere infidelium vitia formidabant. Peractis itaque his quae in voce capitis dixit, ad propria beatus Job verba revertitur, dicens:

CAPUT LI.

VERS. 21. — Miseremini mei, miseremini mei, saltem vos amici mei, quia manus Domini tetigit me. 59. Piorum mens in adversis, ad preces, non ad iram movetur. — Hoc habere solet proprium mens piorum, quod cum injusta ab adversariis patitur, non tam ad iram quam ad preces moveatur, ut si moderari eorum pravitas placide valeat, plus deprecari eligant quam irasci. Unde recte nunc dicitur: Miseremini mei, miseremini mei, saltem vos amici mei, quia manus Domini tetigit me. Ecce eos a quibus semper contumeliis se affligi considerat amicos vocat, quia bonis mentibus etiam ipsa fiunt prospera, quae videntur adversa. Nam perversi quique bonorum dulcedine aut convertuntur, ut redeat, et eo ipso amici sunt quo boni fiunt; aut in malitia perseverant, et in hoc quoque etiam nolentes amici sunt, quia si qua bonorum delicta sunt, ea suis persecutionibus etiam nescientes purgant. Notandum quoque, quod eis 459 quae secreto apud Deum gesta sunt, beati viri in publico verba concordant. A Satan quippe percussus fuerat, nec tamen percussionem suam Satanae tribuit, sed tactum se manu Domini appellat, sicut ipse quoque Satan dixerat: Mitte manum tuam et tange os ejus et carnem, si non in faciem benedixerit tibi (Job. II, 5). Sciebat quippe vir sanctus quia et per hoc ipsum quod perversa voluntate contra se Satan egerat, potestatem non a semetipso, sed a Domino habebat. Sequitur:

CAPUT LII.

VERS. 22. — Quare persequimini me sicut Deus, et carnibus meis saturamini? 60. Deus non saeviendo nos persequitur. — Non abhorret a locutione pietatis quod a Deo se perhibet persequi. Est namque persecutor bonus, sicut de semetipso ore prophetico Dominus dicit: Detrahentem occulte adversus proximum suum, hunc persequebar. Cum vero sanctus quisque flagellari permittitur, scit quod persecutionem contra commissa vitia ex interna dispensatione patiatur. Crudeles autem persecutorum mentes cum potestatem feriendi appetunt, contra bonorum vitam non studio purgationis, sed livoris facibus accenduntur. Et quidem hoc faciunt quod Deus omnipotens fieri permittit. Sed dum una causa cum Deo etiam per eos agitur, non tamen voluntas una in eadem causa servatur, quia cum omnipotens Deus amando purgationem exhibet, injustorum pravitas saeviendo malitiam exercet. Quod ergo dicitur, quare persequimini me sicut Deus? ad exteriorem hoc percussionem retulit, non ad intimam intentionem, quia etsi hoc agunt exterius quod Deus agi disposuit, non tamen hoc quod Deus in sua actione appetunt, ut boni ex afflictione purgentur. Quod intelligi et aliter potest. Tanto enim omnipotens Deus justius aliena vitia percutit, quanto in semetipso nihil habet vitiorum. Homines vero cum per disciplinam alios feriunt, sic alienam infirmitatem debent percutere, ut etiam ad suam noverint oculos revocare, ut ex semetipsis considerent quantum aliis feriendo parcant, cum se quoque ipsos dignos percussionibus non ignorant. Itaque nunc dicitur: Quare persequimini me sicut Deus? Ac si aperte diceretur: Ita me ex infirmitatibus meis affligitis, ac si ipsi more Dei de infirmitate nihil habeatis. Unde considerandum est quod si qui fortasse sint qui asperitate correptionis indigeant, tunc eis dura correptio a nobis admovenda est, cum Dei manus cessat a verbere. Cum vero superna flagella insunt, non a nobis jam correptio, sed consolatio debetur, ne dum in dolore increpationem jungimus, percussionem percussioni sociemus. 61. Detractores belluarum more, homines devorant. — Bene autem subditur: Et carnibus meis saturamini? Quorum mens proximorum poenas esurit, saturari procul dubio alienis carnibus quaerit. Sciendum quoque est quia hi etiam qui alienae vitae detractione pascuntur, alienis procul dubio carnibus satiantur. Unde per Salomonem dicitur: Noli esse in conviviis potatorum, neque comedas cum eis qui carnes ad vescendum conferunt (Prov. XXIII, 20). Carnes quippe ad vescendum conferre est in collocutione derogationis vicissim proximorum vitia dicere. De quorum illic poena mox subditur: Quia vacantes potibus et dantes symbolum consumentur, 460 et vestietur pannis dormitatio (Ibid.). Potibus vacant, qui de opprobrio alienae vitae se debriant. Symbolum vero dare est, sicut unusquisque solet pro parte sua cibos ad vescendum, ita in confabulatione detractionis verba conferre. Sed vacantes potibus et dantes symbolum consumentur, quia sicut scriptum est (Fortasse, Proverb. XV, 5): Omnis detractor eradicabitur. Vestietur autem pannis dormitatio, quia despectum et inopem a cunctis bonis operibus mors sua invenit, quem hic ad alienae vitae exquirenda crimina detractionis suae languor occupavit. Sed tot dura quae beatus. Job sustinet, dignum non est ut per silentium transeant, eaque a notitia hominum ignorantiae obscuritas tegat. Tanti quippe aedificari ad servandam patientiam valent, quanti, implente se superna gratia, ejus patientiae facta cognoverint. Unde et idem beatus Job in exemplum vult pertrahi flagella quae sentit, qui statim subjungit dicens:

CAPUT LIII.

VERS. 23, 24. — Quis mihi tribuat ut scribantur sermones mei? Quis mihi det ut exarentur in libro stylo ferreo, et plumbi lamina, vel certe sculpantur in silice? 62. Per plumbi laminam Judaeorum, per silicem gentilium corda designantur. — Cuncta quae beatus Job pertulit, quia forti patrum sententia edoctus gravis ille Judaeorum populus agnovit, stylo ferreo et plumbi lamina scripta sunt. Quia vero haec etiam dura gentilium corda cognoverunt, quid ea nisi in silice sculpta videmus? Et notandum quia in plumbo quod scribitur ipsa metalli mollitie citius deletur; in silice vero tardius quidem valent litterae imprimi, sed difficilius deleri. Non ergo immerito per plumbi laminam Judaea exprimitur, quae praecepta Dei et sine labore percepit, et cum celeritate perdidit. Recte per silicem gentilitas figuratur, quae verba sacri eloquii vix custodienda suscipere potuit; sed tamen fortiter suscepta servavit. Per stylum vero ferreum quid aliud quam fortis Dei sententia designatur? Unde et per prophetam dicitur: Peccatum Judae scriptum est stylo ferreo in unque adamantino (Jerem. XVII, 1). In ungue finis est corporis. Ita vero lapis durus est adamas, ut ferro non valeat secari. Per stylum vero ferreum fortis sententia, per unguem vero adamantinum finis signatur aeternus. Peccatum itaque Judae stylo ferreo in ungue adamantino scriptum dicitur, quia culpa Judaeorum per fortem Dei sententiam in finem servatur infinitum. 63. Plumbum avaritiam significat. — Recte quoque per plumbi laminam eos accipimus quos avaritiae pondus gravat, quibus per increpantem Prophetam dicitur: Filii hominum, usquequo graves corde (Psal. IV, 3)? Per plumbum namque, cujus natura gravis est ponderis, peccatum avaritiae specialiter designatur, quod mentem quam infecerit ita gravem reddit, ut ad appetenda sublimia attolli nequaquam possit. Hinc enim in Zacharia scriptum est: Leva oculos tuos, et vide. Quid est hoc quod egreditur? Et dixi: Quidnam est? Et ait: Haec est amphora egrediens, et dixit: Haec est oculus eorum in universa terra. (Vet. XXVII.) Et ecce talentum plumbi portabatur, et ecce mulier una sedens in medio amphorae, et dixit: Haec est impietas. Et projecit eam in medio amphorae, et misit massam plumbeam in os ejus (Zach. V, 5, seq.). Qui de hac visione amphorae, et mulieris, et plumbi, ut latius quid cognovisset ostenderet, 461 adhuc secutus adjunxit: Et levavi oculos meos, et vidi; et ecce duae mulieres egredientes, et spiritus in alis earum, et habebant alas quasi alas milvi, et levaverunt amphoram inter terram et coelum. Et dixi ad angelum qui loquebatur in me: Quo istae deferunt amphoram? Et dixit ad me: Ut aedificetur ei domus in terra Sennaar (Ibid., 9, seq.). Quod prophetae testimonium inutiliter pro documento plumbi protulimus, si non etiam repetentes exponamus. Ait enim: Leva oculos, et vide. Quid est hoc quod egreditur? Et dixi: Quidnam est? Et ait: Haec est amphora egrediens (Ibid.). Volens Deus prophetae ostendere humanum genus, ex qua ab eo maxime culpa dilabatur, per imaginem amphorae quasi patens os avaritiae designavit. Avaritia quippe velut amphora est, quae os cordis in ambitu apertum tenet. Et dixit: Haec est oculus eorum in universa terra (Ibid.). Multos obtusi sensus homines cernimus, et tamen eos in malis actibus astutos videmus; propheta quoque attestante, qui ait: Sapientes sunt ut faciant mala, bene autem facere nesciunt (Jerem. IV, 22). Hi itaque sensu torpent, sed in his quae appetunt avaritiae stimulis excitantur; et qui ad bona videnda caeci sunt, excitantibus praemiis, ad peragenda mala vigilantes fiunt. Unde recte de hac eadem avaritia dicitur: Haec est oculus eorum in universa terra. Et ecce talentum plumbi portabatur (Ibid.). Quid est talentum plumbi, nisi ex eadem avaritia pondus peccati? Et ecce mulier una sedens in medio amphorae. Quam mulierem, ne fortassis quae esset dubitare possemus, illico angelus innotuit. Nam illic mox sequitur: Et dixit: Haec est impietas. Et projecit eam in medio amphorae. Impietas in medio amphorae projicitur, quia nimirum in avaritia semper impietas tenetur. Et misit massam plumbi in os ejus. Massa plumbi in os mulieris mittitur, quia scilicet impietas avaritiae peccati sui pondere gravatur. Si enim ad ea quae deorsum sunt non ambiret, erga Deum ac proximum impia nequaquam existeret. Quo etenim pacto credendum est quia ex eo aliquid per figuram insinuat, si eum nobis apertis vocibus non demonstrat? Sed jam quid de eo sentit aperiat, omnesque nobis ambages cogitationum tollat. Sequitur:

CAPUT LIV.

VERS. 25. — Scio enim quod Redemptor meus vivit. 67. Job Christum Redemptorem aperte praenuntiavit. — Qui enim non ait conditor, sed Redemptor, aperte eum denuntiat qui, postquam omnia creavit, ut nos de captivitate redimeret, inter nos incarnatus apparuit, suaque passione nos a perpetua morte liberavit. Et notandum quanta fide se in virtute ejus divinitatis astringat, de quo per Paulum dicitur: Quia etsi crucifixus est ex infirmitate, sed 463 vivit ex virtute Dei (II Cor. XIII, 4). Ait namque: Scio enim quod Redemptor meus vivit. Ac si apertis vocibus dicat: Infidelis quisque illum flagellatum, derisum, palmis caesum, corona spinea coronatum, sputis illitum, crucifixum, mortuum noverit; ego illum post mortem vivere certa fide credo, libera voce profiteor, quia Redemptor meus vivit, qui inter impiorum manus occubuit. Sed quid, beate Job, per resurrectionem illius etiam de tuae carnis resurrectione confidis, aperta, quaeso, voce profitere. Sequitur:

CAPUT LV.

IBID. — Et in novissimo die de terra surrecturus sum. 68. Christus mortuus est ut mori non timeremus; resurrexit ut nos resurgere posse confidamus. — Quia videlicet resurrectionem quam in se ostendit in nobis etiam quandoque facturus est. Resurrectionem quippe quam in se ostendit nobis promisit, quia sui capitis gloriam sequuntur membra. Redemptor ergo noster suscepit mortem, ne mori timeremus. Ostendit resurrectionem, ut nos resurgere posse confidamus. Unde et eamdem mortem non plusquam triduanam esse voluit, ne si in illo resurrectio differretur, in nobis omnimodo desperaretur. Quod bene de illo per Prophetam dicitur: De torrente in via bibet, propterea exaltabit caput (Psal. CIX, 7). Quasi enim de quodam flumine nostrae passionis non in mansione bibere, sed in via dignatus est, quia mortem transitorie, id est ad triduum contigit, atque in ea morte quam contigit, nequaquam sicut nos usque ad finem saeculi remansit. Dum ergo die tertio resurrexit, quid in ejus corpore, id est Ecclesia, sequatur ostendit. Exemplo quippe monstravit quod promisit in praemio, ut sicut ipsum resurrexisse fideles agnoscerent, ita in seipsis in fine mundi resurrectionis praemia sperarent. Ecce nos per mortem carnis usque ad finem mundi remanemus in pulvere, ille autem die tertia ab ariditate mortis viruit; ut divinitatis suae nobis potentiam ipsa innovatione suae carnis ostenderet. Quod bene per Moysen virgis duodecim in tabernaculo positis demonstratur (Num. XVII, 2). Nam cum Aaron sacerdotium, qui de tribu Levi fuerat, despiceretur, nec digna tribus quae offerret holocausta crederetur, duodecim virgae, juxta duodecim tribus, in tabernaculo poni praeceptae sunt; et ecce virga Levi viruit, et quid virtutis in munere Aaron haberet, ostendit (Ibid., 8). Quo videlicet signo quid innuitur, nisi quod omnes qui usque ad finem mundi jacemus in morte, quasi virgae reliquae in ariditate remanemus? Sed cunctis virgis in ariditate remanentibus, virga Levi ad florem redit, quia corpus Domini, veri scilicet sacerdotis nostri in mortis ariditate positum, in florem resurrectionis erupit. Quo flore recte Aaron sacerdos esse cognoscitur, quia hac resurrectionis gloria Redemptor noster, qui de tribu Juda ac Levi ortus est, intercessor pro nobis esse monstratur. Ecce ergo jam virga Aaron post ariditatem floret; sed virgae duodecim tribuum in ariditate remanent, quia jam quidem corpus Domini post mortem vivit, sed nostra adhuc corpora usque ad finem mundi a resurrectionis gloria differuntur. Unde caute hanc eamdem dilationem intulit, dicens: Et in novissimo die de terra surrecturus sum. 464 69. Fiduciam nostram roborat multorum mortuorum resurrectio.

— Habemus ergo spem resurrectionis nostrae, considerata gloria capitis nostri. Sed ne quis vel cogitatione tacita forsitan dicat quod idcirco ille resurrexit a morte, quia unus idemque Deus et homo mortem, quam ex humanitate pertulit, ex divinitate superavit, nos vero, qui puri homines sumus, a mortis surgere damnatione non possumus, recte in resurrectionis ejus tempore etiam multorum sanctorum corpora resurrexerunt, ut et in se nobis exemplum ostenderet, et de aliorum qui nobis per puram humanitatem similes fuerunt nos resurrectione roboraret, quatenus cum se homo desperaret percipere quod in se ostenderat Deus homo, hoc in se fieri posse praesumeret, quod in ipsis factum cognosceret quos puros fuisse homines non dubitaret. 70. Fides resurrectionis astruitur. — Sunt vero nonnulli qui, considerantes quod spiritus a carne solvitur, quod caro in putredinem vertitur, quod putredo in pulverem redigitur, quod pulvis ita in elementa solvitur, ut nequaquam ab humanis oculis videatur, resurrectionem fieri posse desperant; et dum arida ossa inspiciunt, haec vestiri carnibus rursumque ad vitam viridescere posse diffidunt. Qui si resurrectionis fidem ex obedientia non tenent, certe hanc tenere ex ratione debuerant. Quid enim quotidie nisi resurrectionem nostram in elementis suis mundus imitatur? Per quotidiana quippe momenta lux ipsa temporalis quasi moritur, dum, supervenientibus noctis tenebris, ea quae aspiciebatur subtrahitur, et quasi quotidie resurgit, dum lux ablata oculis, suppressa iterum nocte reparatur. Per momenta quoque temporum cernimus arbusta viriditatem foliorum amittere, a fructuum prolatione cessare; et ecce subito quasi ex arescenti ligno velut quadam resurrectione veniente videmus folia erumpere, fructus grandescere, et totam arborem redivivo decore vestiri. Indesinenter cernimus parva arborum semina terrae humoribus commendari, ex quibus non longe post aspicimus magna arbusta surgere, folia pomaque proferre. Consideremus ergo parvum cujuslibet arboris semen, quod in terram jacitur, ut arbor ex illo producatur, et comprehendamus, si possumus, ubi in illa tanta brevitate seminis tam immensa arbor latuit, quae ex illo processit, ubi lignum ubi cortex, ubi viriditas foliorum, ubi ubertas fructuum. Nunquidnam in semine tale aliquid cernebatur cum in terram jaceretur? Et tamen occulto rerum omnium opifice cuncta mirabiliter ordinante, et in mollitie seminis latuit asperitas corticis, et in teneritudine illius absconsa est fortitudo roboris, et in siccitate ejus ubertas fructificationis. Quid ergo mirum, si tenuissimum pulverem, nostris oculis in elementis redactum, cum vult, in hominem roformat, qui ex tenuissimis seminibus immensa arbusta redintegrat? Quia ergo rationales sumus conditi, spem resurrectionis nostrae ex ipsa debemus rerum specie et contemplatione colligere, Sed quia in nobis sensus torpuit rationis, accessit in exemplum gratia Redemptoris. Venit namque conditor noster, suscepit mortem, ostendit resurrectionem, ut qui resurrectionis spem ex ratione tenere 465 noluimus, hanc ex ejus adjutorio et exemplo teneremus. Dicat igitur beatus Job: Scio quod Redemptor meus vivit, et in novissimo die de terra surrecturus sum. Et quisquis resurrectionis in se virtutem fieri posse desperat, verba in gentilitate positi viri fidelis erubescat, et penset quanto poenae sit pondere feriendus, si adhuc non credit suam, qui jam resurrectionem Domini cognovit factam, si et ille suam credidit, qui adhuc Domini Jesu sperabat esse faciendam.. VERS. 26. — Et rursum circumdabor pelle mea. 72. Error Eutychii, corpus impalpabile aereque subtilius futurum asserentis refellitur. — Dum aperte pellis dicitur, omnis dubitatio verae resurrectionis aufertur, quia non, sicut Eutychius Constantinopolitanae urbis episcopus scripsit, corpus nostrum in illa resurrectionis gloria erit impalpabile, ventis aereque subtilius. In illa enim resurrectionis gloria erit corpus nostrum subtile quidem per effectum spiritalis potentiae, sed palpabile per veritatem naturae. Unde etiam redemptor noster dubitantibus de sua resurrectione discipulis, ostendit manus et latus, palpanda ossa carnemque praebuit, dicens: Palpate et videte, quia spiritus carnem et ossa non habet, sicut me videtis habere (Luc. XXIV, 39). Qui cum eidem Eutychio in Constantinopolitana urbe positus, hoc evangelicae veritatis testimonium protulissem, ait: Idcirco Dominus hoc fecit, ut dubitationem resurrectionis suae de discipulorum cordibus amoveret. Cui inquam: Mira est res valde quam astruis, ut inde nobis dubietas surgat, unde discipulorum corda a dubietate sanata sunt. Quid enim deterius dici potest quam ut hoc nobis de ejus vera carne dubium fiat, per quod discipuli ejus ad fidem ab omni sunt dubietate reparati? Si enim non hoc habuisse astruitur quod ostendit, unde fides discipulis ejus confirmata est, inde nostra destruitur. Qui adjungebat etiam, dicens: Corpus palpabile habuit quod ostendit; sed post confirmata corda palpantium, omne illud in Domino quod palpari potuit in subtilitatem est aliquam redactum. Ad haec ipsa respondi, dicens: Scriptum est: Christus resurgens a mortuis, jam non moritur, mors illi ultra non dominabitur (Rom. VI, 9). Si quid ergo in ejus corpore post resurrectionem potuit immutari, contra veridicam Pauli sententiam, post resurrectionem Dominus rediit in mortem. 466 Quod quis dicere vel stultus praesumat, nisi qui veram carnis ejus resurrectionem denegat? Tunc mihi objecit, dicens: Cum scriptum sit: Caro et sanguis regnum Dei possidere non possunt (I Cor. XV, 50), qua ratione credendum est resurgere veraciter carnem? Cui inquam: in sacro eloquio aliter caro dicitur juxta naturam, atque aliter juxta culpam, vel corruptionem. Caro quippe juxta naturam, sicut scriptum est: Hoc nunc os ex ossibus meis, et caro de carne mea (Genes. II, 23); et Verbum caro factum est, et habitavit in nobis (Joan. I, 14). Caro vero juxta culpam, sicut scriptum est: Non permanebit in hominibus istis spiritus meus, eo quod sunt caro (Genes. VI, 3). Et sicut Psalmista ait: Memoratus est quia caro sunt: spiritus vadens, et non rediens (Psal. LXXVII, 39). Unde et discipulis Paulus dicebat: Vos autem in carne non estis, sed in spiritu (Rom. VIII, 9). Neque enim in carne non erant, quibus epistolas transmittebat, sed quia passiones carnalium desideriorum vicerant, jam liberi per virtutem spiritus in carne non erant.

Quod ergo Paulus apostolus dicit: Quia caro et sanguis regnum Dei possidere non possunt, carnem vult secundum culpam intelligi, non carnem secundum naturam. Unde et mox, quia carnem secundum culpam diceret ostendit subdens: Neque corruptio incorruptelam possidebit. In illa ergo coelestis regni gloria caro secundum naturam erit, sed secundum passionum desideria non erit, quia devicto mortis aculeo, in aeterna incorruptione regnabit. Ecce enim jam de spe resurrectionis dubitare non possumus, dum ait: Et in novissimo die de terra resurrecturus sum. Dubietatem quoque de reparatione vera corporis abstulit, qui ait: Et rursum circumdabor pelle mea. Qui adhuc ad auferendas ambages nostrae cogitationis subdit: VERS. 26. — Et in carne mea videbo Deum. 76. Reducendam carnem in integrum statum credidit Job. — Ecce resurrectionem, ecce pellem, ecce carnem apertis fatetur vocibus. Quid ergo remanet unde possit mens nostra dubitare? Si itaque iste vir sanctus ante effectum resurrectionis dominicae reducendam carnem in integrum statum credidit, quis erit reatus nostrae dubitationis, si vera carnis resurrectio nec post exemplum creditur Redemptoris? Si enim post resurrectionem corpus palpabile non erit, profecto alius surgit quam moritur, quod dictu nefas est credere, quia ego morior, et alius resurgat. Unde quaeso te, beate Job, subjunge quae sentis, et hujus nobis questionis scrupulum tolle. Sequitur:

CAPUT LVII.

VERS. 27. — Quem visurus sum ego ipse, et oculi mei conspecturi sunt, et non alius. 77. Caro nostra post resurrectionem eadem futura est per naturam, et diversa per gloriam. — Si enim, sicut quidam errorum sequaces arbitrantur, post resurrectionem corpus palpabile non erit, sed invisibilis corporis subtilitas caro vocabitur, quamvis substantia carnis non sit, profecto alius est qui moritur, et alius qui resurgit. Sed beatus Job hanc eis sententiam veridica voce destruit, qui ait: Quem visurus sum ego ipse, et oculi mei conspecturi sunt, et non alius. Nos autem beati Job fidem sequentes, et Redemptoris nostri post resurrectionem corpus palpabile veraciter credentes, fatemur carnem nostram post resurrectionem futuram et eamdem, et diversam: eamdem per naturam, diversam per gloriam; eamdem per veritatem, diversam per potentiam. Erit itaque subtilis, quia et incorruptibilis. Erit palpabilis, quia non amittet essentiam veracis naturae. Sed sanctus vir eamdem resurrectionis fiduciam qua spe teneat, quanta certitudine praestoletur, 468 adjungit. Sequitur:

CAPUT LVIII.

IBID. — Reposita est haec spes mea in sinu meo. 78. Job de resurrectione sua certissimus. — Nil nos habere certius credimus quam hoc quod in sinu tenemus. In sinu ergo suo spem repositam tenuit, quia veram certitudinem de spe resurrectionis praesumpsit. Sed quia venturum diem resurrectionis innotuit, jam nunc seu voce sua, seu typo sanctae et universalis Ecclesiae pravorum facta redarguit, et judicium quod in resurrectionis die sequitur praedicit. Nam protinus subdit:

CAPUT LIX.

VERS. 28, 29. — Quare ergo nunc dicitis: Persequamur eum, et radicem verbi inveniamus contra eum? Fugite ergo a facie gladii, quoniam ultor iniquitatum gladius est, et scitote esse judicium. 79. Ex judicio quod resurrectionem excepturum est, urget iniquos ad poenitentiam. — Priori quippe sententia iniquorum facta reprehendit, sequenti autem ex divino judicio poenas innotuit. Ait enim: Quare ergo nunc dicitis: Persequamur eum, et radicem verbi inveniamus contra eum? Perversi quilibet quia malo studio bene prolata audiunt, et in lingua justi accusationis aditum invenire appetunt, quid aliud quam contra eum verbi radicem quaerunt, ex qua videlicet loquendi originem sumant, et ramos pravae loquacitatis in accusatione dilatent? Sed vir sanctus cum a pravis talia sustinet, non contra eos, sed magis pro ipsis dolet, et male cogitata redarguit, ac mala eis quae fugiant ostendit, dicens: Fugite ergo a facie gladii, quia ultor iniquitatum gladius est, et scitote esse judicium. Omnis qui perversa agit, eo ipso quo hoc timere despicit, esse Dei judicium nescit. Si enim hoc timendum sciret, quae in illo sunt punienda non ageret. Nam sunt plerique qui extremum esse judicium verbo tenus sciunt, sed perverse agendo testantur quia nesciunt. Quia enim hoc non formidat ut debet, necdum cognovit cum quanto turbine terroris adveniat. Si enim pensare pondus tremendi examinis nosset, irae diem utique timendo praecaveret. Faciem quoque gladii fugere est animadversionis districtae sententiam prius quam appareat placare. Vitari namque terror judicis non nisi ante judicium potest. Modo non cernitur, sed precibus placatur. Cum vero in illo tremendo examine sederit, et videri potest, et placari jam non potest, quia facta pravorum, quae diu sustinuit tacitus, simul omnia reddet iratus. Unde necesse est nunc timere judicem, cum necdum judicium exercet, cum diu sustinet, cum mala adhuc tolerat quae videt, ne cum semel manum in retributione ultionis excusserit, tanto in judicio districtius feriat, quanto ante judicium diutius exspectavit.

LIBER DECIMUS QUINTUS.

In quo XX et XXI capitum libri Job explicatio brevis absolvitur. 469 Quia amici beati Job nequaquam perversi esse potuerunt, Sophar Naamathitis verba testantur, qui de ore ejus terrorem venturi judicii audiens, protinus adjungit:

CAPUT PRIMUM.

CAP. XX, VERS. 2. — Idcirco cogitationes meae varie succedunt sibi, et mens in diversa rapitur. 1. Quanto terrore ex assidua ejus consideratione affici debeamus. — Ac si apertis vocibus dicat: Quia extremi judicii terrorem considero, idcirco cogitationum tumultibus in timore confundor. Tanto se quippe animus amplius, in cogitatione dilatat, quanto illud esse terribile, quod imminet, pensat. Et in diversa mens rapitur, quando modo mala quae egit, modo bona quae agere neglexit, modo reprehensibilia in quibus est, modo recta quae sibi adhuc deesse conspicit, sollicito pavore perpendit. Sed amici beati Job cum assiduitate vitae illius edocti bene vivere noverint, pensare tamen subtiliter Dei judicia nescientes, mala hic justorum quempiam posse recipere non credebant. Unde et eumdem sanctum virum iniquum esse suspicati sunt, quem flagellatum viderunt, atque ex hac suspicione agebatur ut in ejus quoque increpationem dilaberentur; ad quam tamen increpationem quasi sub quadam reverentia descendunt. Unde Sophar subjicit dicens:

CAPUT II.

VERS. 3. — Doctrinam qua me arguis audiam, et spiritus intelligentiae meae respondebit mihi. 2. Multi monita audiunt, ut judicent, non ut sequantur. — Ac si aperte dicat: Tua quidem verba audio, sed an recte prolata sint, spiritu meae intelligentiae discerno. Nam qui docentis verba despiciunt, doctrinam ejus non ad adjutorium, sed ad occasionem certaminis sumunt, ut audita potius judicent quam sequantur. His itaque sub quodam moderamine praemissis, in apertam jam beati viri exprobrationem prosilit, cum subjungit:

CAPUT III.

VERS. 4, 5. — Hoc scio a principio, ex quo positus est homo super terram, quod laus impiorum brevis sit, et gaudium hypocritae ad instar puncti. 3. Breve est quidquid finitur. — Liquet nunc quia, suae intelligentiae spiritu inflatus, eas quas contra impios sententias profert in beati Job redargutionibus inflectit. Quem enim prius justa agere et postmodum poenas tolerare conspexit, omne in illo hypocrisim aestimat fuisse quod vidit, quia videlicet a justo Deo justum famulum affligi posse non credidit. Sed nos easdem ejusdem sententias, quas non recte rectas protulit, sollicita intentione pensantes exsequamur; et contemnentes quod falsum contra beatum Job loquitur, intueamur quam vera dicat si haec contra impios loqueretur. Ait itaque: Hoc scio a principio, ex quo positus est homo super terram, quod laus impiorum brevis sit. [Vet. II.] Dicturus brevitatem vitae praesentis, cordis oculum ad exordium reduxit originis, ut ex anteactis colligat quam nulla sint quae videntur aliqua esse dum sunt. Si enim ab ipso humani generis exortu usque ad hoc tempus in quo sumus mentis oculos ducimus, omne quod finiri potuit 470 quam breve fuerit videmus. Ponamus enim quemlibet hominem a primo die mundi conditi usque ad hodiernum diem vitam ducere, hodie tamen eamdem vitam quam sic longam ducere videbatur finire, ecce finis adest, praeterita jam nulla sunt, quia cuncta transierunt. Futurum in hoc mundo nihil est, quia nullum ad vitam vel brevissimum restat momentum. Ubi est ergo longum tempus quod inter initium finemque deprehensum ita consumitur, ac si nec breve unquam fuisset? 4. Multi non esse, sed dici boni curant. Hypocritae gaudium transit, poena manet. Impii itaque, quia praesentem vitam diligunt, in ea procul dubio elati percipere laudem quaerunt. Linguae favoribus extolluntur, nec esse boni, sed dici appetunt. Quam videlicet laudem longam esse existimant dum assequuntur, sed brevem intelligunt fuisse dum amittunt. In fine quippe eis ostenditur quam nihil fuerit quod amaverunt. Unde recte contra eosdem impios dicitur: Hoc scio a principio, ex quo positus est homo super terram, quod laus impiorum brevis sit. Ubi apte subjungitur: Et gaudium hypocritae ad instar puncti. Saepe hypocrita dum sanctum se simulat, et iniquum exhibere minime formidat, ab omnibus honoratur, eique sanctitatis gloria defertur ab iis qui exteriora cernunt, sed interiora perspicere nequeunt. Unde fit ut gaudeat in prima sessione, hilarescat in primo recubitu, infletur in prima salutatione, elevetur in reverenti voce obsequentium, et superba cogitatione tumeat in famulatu subditorum, sicut voce quoque Veritatis de talibus dicitur: Omnia vero opera sua faciunt, ut videantur ab hominibus. Dilatant enim phylacteria sua, et magnificant fimbrias suas. Amant autem primos recubitus in coenis, et primas cathedras in synagogis, et salutationes in foro, et vocari ab hominibus, Rabbi (Matth. XXIII, 5). Sed hoc eorum gaudium aeternitati comparatum quid erit, quando, irruente mortis articulo, ita consumitur ac si omnino non fuerit? Cujus nimirum gaudii laetitia pertransiit, et poena permanet, et cum res amittitur, causa durat. Bene autem dicitur: Gaudium hypocritae ad instar puncti. In puncto enim stylus mox ut ponitur levatur, nec mora ulla agitur ut per exprimendam lineam trahatur. Gaudium ergo hypocritae ad similitudinem puncti est, quia apparet ad momentum, sed disparet in perpetuum; et sicut stylus in puncto dum ponitur levatur, sic hypocrita praesentis vitae gaudia dum tangit amittit. De quo et subditur:

CAPUT IV.

VERS. 6, 7. — Si ascenderit usque ad coelum superbia ejus, et caput ejus nubes tetigerit, quasi sterquilinium in fine perdetur. 5. Gaudia vitae praesentis, quae iniqui tanti faciunt, justi arbitrantur stercora. — Superbia hypocritae usque ad coelum ascendere dicitur, quando ejus elatio coelestem agere vitam videtur. Cujus etiam caput quasi nubes tangit 471 quando principalis pars, videlicet intellectus illius, sanctorum praecedentium coaequari meritis creditur. Sed quasi sterquilinium in fine perditur, quia in morte sua cum ad tormenta ducitur, stercoribus vitiorum plenus, a malignis spiritibus conculcatur. Gaudia etenim vitae praesentis, quae injusti aestimant magna bona, justi stercora deputant. Unde scriptum est: De stercore bonum lapidatus est piger (Eccli. XXII, 2). Is ergo qui Deum sequi noluerit, ab amore aeternae vitae pigrescit. Et quoties rerum temporalium damno percutitur ex his nimirum affligitur, quae justi viri velut stercora contemnunt. Qui ergo ex terrenarum rerum percussione atteritur, quid aliud quam de boum stercore lapidatur? Et recte hypocrita sterquilinio similis dicitur, quia dum temporalem gloriam habere appetit, modo per cogitationem apud semetipsum tumet, modo eamdem gloriam aliis invidet, eamque alios veraciter habentes irridet. Quot ergo vitiis plenus est, quasi tot stercoribus in conspectu aeterni judicis illius pectus fetet. Dicatur igitur: Si ascenderit usque ad coelum superbia ejus, et caput ejus nubes tetigerit, quasi sterquilinium in fine perdetur. Qui etsi coelestem vitam se agere simulat, etsi intellectum suum esse similem veris praedicatoribus ostentat, quasi sterquilinium tamen in fine perditur, quia mens illius pro vitiorum suorum fetore damnatur. Sequitur:

CAPUT V.

VERS. 7. — Et qui eum viderant dicent: Ubi est? 6. Hypocritarum vita in fine detegitur. — Plerumque hypocritarum vita etiam ab omnibus reproba in fine cognoscitur, ut signis jam apertioribus qui fuerint ostendatur. Qui ergo nunc elatum viderunt, de exstincto dicent: Ubi est? Quia neque hic ubi elatus fuerat apparet, neque in aeternitatis requie, de qua esse putabatur. De cujus brevitate vitae adhuc apte subjungitur:

CAPUT VI.

VERS. 8. — Velut somnium avolans non invenietur, transiet sicut visio nocturna. 7. Vita hypocritae phantasmati similis. — Quid est vita hypocritae, nisi quaedam visio phantasmatis, quae hoc ostendit in imagine, quod non habet ex veritate? Unde recte quoque somnio comparatur, quia ab eo omnis laus et gloria quasi dum tenetur amittitur. Saepe namque in nocturna visione nonnulli pauperes factos se divites admirantur, deferri sibi honores aspiciunt, divitiarum moles, obsequentium multitudinem, pulchritudinem vestium, abundantiam ciborum sibimet adesse considerant; gaudent se evasisse penuriam, quam cum gemitu tolerabant; sed repente, cum evigilant, inveniunt quam falsum fuerit quod gaudebant, eosque evigilasse poenitet, quia vigilantes inopia vera tenet. Sic hypocritarum mentes, dum aliud est quod agunt, atque aliud quod hominibus ostendunt, laudes de ipsa sanctitatis ostentatione recipiunt, in aestimatione hominum multis melioribus praeferuntur, et cum intus apud se tacita cogitatione superbiant, foris se humiles demonstrant. Cumque ab hominibus immoderate laudantur, tales esse se quoque apud Deum existimant, quales se gaudent hominibus innotuisse. Unde fit ut etiam aeternae vitae percepturos se praemia praesumant, et qui hic de humanis favoribus exsultant, illic se habituros requiem omnino non dubitent. Sed 472 inter haec occulta vocationis hora subrepit, et cum carnis oculos claudunt, mentis aperiunt, moxque ut supplicia aeterna receperint, ibi vident quia virtutum aestimatione divites in somnis fuerunt. Bene ergo de hoc hypocrita dicitur: Transiet velut visio nocturna. Quia hoc quod se ad momentum divitem humanis aestimationibus videt, de ostensione est phantasmatis, non de soliditate virtutis. Nam cum mens ejus in morte carnis evigilat, cognoscit procul dubio quia favores circa se hominum dormiens videbat. Sequitur:

CAPUT VII.

VERS. 9. — Oculus qui eum viderat, non videbit, neque ultra intuebitur eum locus suus. 8. Linguae adulantium ei nihil prosunt in judicic. — Quis est locus hypocritae, nisi cor adulantium? Ibi quippe requiescit, ubi favores invenerit. Oculus ergo qui eum viderat, non videbit, quia, subtractus morte, stultis amatoribus suis absconditur, qui eum consueverant admirando conspicere. Nec ultra eum locus suus intuebitur, quia linguae adulantium hunc ad judicium favoribus non sequuntur. Sed tamen quousque vivit, ea quae ipse agit etiam sequaces suos docere non desinit, et per erroris sui pravitatem alios quoque ad eam quam exhibet generat simulationem. De quibus hic apte subditur:

CAPUT VIII.

VERS. 10. — Filii ejus atterentur egestate. 9. Exterius multiplicati hypocritae, interius inanes fiunt. — Scriptum est: In malevolam animam non introibit sapientia (Sap. I, 4). Et per Psalmistam dicitur: Divites eguerunt, et esurierunt (Psal. XXXIII, 11). Si enim de exteriori fame egestas eorum et esuries diceretur, profecto divites non essent, qui pane corporis indigerent. Sed quia dum exterius multiplicantur, interius inanes fiunt, et divites pariter et egentes esse memorantur, quia videlicet pane sapientiae satiari minime merentur. Filii itaque hujus hypocritae atteruntur egestate, quia hi qui in hypocrisi ex ejus imitatione nascuntur, dum veritatis soliditatem non tenent, in cordis egestate deficiunt.

CAPUT IX.

IBID. — Et manus illius reddent ei dolorem suum. 10. Aeternum hypocritis supplicium quasi quoddam debitum solvetur. — Quid per manus nisi opera designantur? Manus itaque illius ei dolorem reddent, quia damnationem justam ex iniqua recipiet operatione. Bene autem non dabunt, sed reddent, dicitur, quia perversae ejus actiones aeternum ei supplicium quasi quoddam debitum solvent. Sed priusquam ad aeterna supplicia perveniat, qualem se hic exhibeat plenius adjungat. Sequitur:

CAPUT X.

VERS. 11. — Ossa ejus implebuntur vitiis adolescentiae ejus, et cum eo in pulvere dormient. 11. Hypocritas vitia nunquam deserunt. — Origo pravae inchoationis causas culpae etiam praesumendo multiplicat. Dum enim mala agere quisque coeperit, usu jam deterius in hoc quod inchoaverat excrescit. Quid itaque adolescentia hujus hypocritae nisi inchoatio pravitatis est? In adolescentia quippe jam libido fervescere inchoat. Et tunc adolescentiam hypocrita habet, cum appetere et amplecti libidinem gloriae coeperit. Quam in eo dum adulantium blanda fomenta multiplicant, robustiorem reddunt, et quasi in ossa convertunt. Hoc enim quod male coepit, pejus quotidie per consuetudinem roborat. Dicatur itaque: Ossa ejus implebuntur vitiis adolescentiae ejus, quia durae in eo pravitatum consuetudines a vitio sumptae sunt pessimae inchoationis. Unde 473 scriptum est in Proverbiis: Adolescens juxta viam suam, etiam cum senuerit, non recedet ab ea (Prov. XXII, 6). Quae nimirum ossa cum eo in pulvere dormient, quia eousque in illo iniquae consuetudines perdurant, quo hunc ad mortis pulverem pertrahant. Cum eo enim in pulvere ossa vel vitia dormire est usque ad pulverem eum non deserere, id est usque ad mortem ab iniquitate minime cessare. Tenent igitur illum pravae consuetudines, quae semel coeperunt, atque quotidie duriores existunt. Et cum illo in pulvere dormiunt, quia non nisi cum ejus vita finiuntur. Sed haec intelligi et aliter possunt.. VERS. 13.

— Parcet illi, et non derelinquet illud, et celabit 474 in gutture suo. 14. Hypocritae est perpetrata nunquam confiteri. — Malo enim quod diligit, parcit, quia non hoc in semetipsum poenitendo persequitur. Unde et additur: Non derelinquet illud. Si enim vellet relinquere, nequaquam parceret, quia persequeretur. Sed hoc celat in gutture, quia sic servat in cogitatione, ut nunquam proferat in voce. Sequitur:

CAPUT XIII.

VERS. 14. — Panis ejus in utero illius vertetur in fel aspidum intrinsecus. 15. Hypocritae qua delectatur gloria, convertitur in fel aspidum. — Quod panis in utero, hoc est satietas temporalis delectationis in mente. Satietur ergo nunc hypocrita illata laude, delectetur honoribus; panis ejus in utero illius vertetur in fel aspidum intrinsecus, quia satietas transitoriae delectationis in retributionis fine ad amaritudinem vertetur; et fel aspidum, id est malignorum, spirituum, persuasio fuisse cognoscitur, quod hic laus gloriae esse credebatur. Tunc enim iniqui vident quod antiqui serpentis veneno infecti sunt, dum, flammis ultricibus traditi, cum eodem suo persuasore cruciantur. Panis itaque iste aliud in ore sapit, sed aliud in utero, quia transitoriae delectationis laetitia dulcis est, cum hic quasi mandendo agitur; sed amarescit in utero, quia peracta laetitia deglutitur ad poenam. VERS. 15. — Divitias quas devoravit evomet, et de ventre illius extrahet eas Deus. 17. Contempto bono opere, saepe etiam scientiam perdit hypocrita. — Vult hypocrita scire divina eloquia, nec tamen facere. Vult docte loqui, nec vivere. Pro eo ergo quod non agit quae novit, etiam hoc quod novit amittit, ut quia scientiae suae puram operationem non sociat, contempta puritate boni operis et scientiam perdat. Divitias igitur sacrae legis, quas legendo devoravit, obliviscendo evomit, easque de ventre illius Deus extrahit, quia quod observare noluit, justo judicio de ejus memoria evellit, ne praecepta Dei saltem in lingua teneat, quae non servavit in vita.

Unde per Prophetam dicitur: Peccatori autem dixit Deus: Quare tu enarras justitias meas, et assumis testamentum meum per os tuum (Psal. XLIX, 16)? Quae etiam verba doctrinae, si quando contingit, ut hypocrita usque ad finem videatur in ore retinere, 475 inde magis damnabitur, unde bono Dei munere etiam malus minime privatur. Scriptum quippe est: Memoria retinentibus mandata ejus, ut faciant ea (Psal. CII, 18). Qui ergo mandata illius memoria retinet, sed nequaquam facit, hic in doctrinae verbis sententias, quibus damnetur, tenet. Quae latitudinem decem cubitorum, longitudinem vero viginti habere perhibetur, quia latitudo operationis nostrae simpla est, et longanimitas spei in duplum tenditur, quoniam pro bono nostro opere et hic nobis mentis requies, et illic gaudia aeterna praeparantur, Veritate attestante, quae ait: Si quis reliquerit domum, aut agros, et caetera, centuplum in hoc saeculo recipiet, et in futuro vitam aeternam possidebit (Matth. XIX, 29; Luc. XVIII, 30). Centenarius quippe numerus decemplicato denario fit perfectus. Hic itaque centuplum recipit, qui etsi nihil habuerit, ipsa tamen perfectione mentis jam in hoc saeculo habere nihil quaerit. Quia ergo per hanc duplum nobis pro simplo redditur, recte hoc volumen per viginti cubitos in longum tenditur, quod per decem dilatatur. Sed quia haec ipsa sacra eloquia ad aeternam damnationem sunt eis qui illa vel scire nolunt, vel certe sciendo contemnunt, recte de hoc volumine dicitur: Haec est maledictio, quae egredietur super faciem universae terrae (Zach. V, 3). Et cur maledictio dicatur, adjungit: Quia omnis fur sicut ibi scriptum est, judicabitur. Hypocrita igitur, quia secundum verba legis quae novit vivere contemnit, et de doctrina favores quaerit, fur judicabitur, quia per hoc quod justa loquitur, laudem sibi vitae justorum rapit. De quo adhuc bene subditur:

CAPUT XV.

VERS. 16. — Caput aspidum suget, et occidet eum lingua viperae. 19. Diabolus in tentatione prius leniter subrepit, postea violenter trahit. — Aspis parvus est serpens, vipera vero prolixioris est corporis; et aspides ova gignunt, atque ex ovis eorum filii procreantur, viperae autem cum conceperint, filii earum in ventre saeviunt, qui ruptis lateribus matrum ex earum ventribus procedunt. Unde et vipera, eo quod vi pariat, nominatur. Vipera itaque sic nascitur ut violenter exeat, et cum matris suae exstinctione producatur. Quid ergo per aspides parvos nisi latentes suggestiones immundorum spirituum figurantur, qui cordibus hominum parva prius persuasione subripiunt? Quid vero per linguam viperae, nisi violenta diaboli tentatio designatur? Prius enim leniter subripit, postmodum vero etiam violenter trahit. Caput itaque aspidum sugit, quia initium suggestionis occultae parvum prius in corde nascitur, sed occidit eum lingua viperae, quia postmodum capta mens veneno violentae tentationis necatur. Primum subtilibus consiliis ad cor hominis immundi spiritus loquuntur, qui dum leniter persuadent, quasi venenum aspidum 476 fundunt. Unde scriptum est: Ova aspidum ruperunt et telas araneae texuerunt. Qui comederit de ovis eorum morietur, et quod confotum est erumpet in regulum (Isai. LIX, 5). Ova quippe aspidum pravis hominibus rumpere est malignorum spirituum consilia, quae in eorum cordibus latent, perversis operibus aperire. Telas quoque araneae texere est pro hujus mundi concupiscentia temporalia quaelibet operari. Quae dum nulla stabilitate solidata sunt, ea procul dubio ventus vitae mortalis rapit. Bene autem additur: Qui comederit de ovis eorum morietur (Ibid.), quia qui immundorum spirituum consilia recipit, vitam in se animae occidit. Et quod confotum est erumpet in regulum, quia consilium maligni spiritus quod corde tegitur ad plenam iniquitatem nutritur. Regulus namque serpentum rex dicitur. Quis vero reproborum caput est, nisi Antichristus? Quod ergo confotum fuerit, erumpet in regulum, quia is qui in se enutrienda aspidis consilia recipit, membrum iniqui capitis factus in corpus Antichristi accrescit. De hoc itaque hypocrita dicitur: Caput aspidum suget, et occidet eum lingua viperae, quia cum iniquam suggestionem antiqui hostis libenter suscipit, violentis se postmodum ejus tentationibus devictus tradit. Unde et in paradiso quoque, stanti homini verba blandae persuasionis intulit (Genes. III, 5 seq.); sed quem semel rapuit ad consensum, jam nunc etiam renitentem trahit, et corruptionis suae delectationibus devictum pene violenter interficit. Sed fortasse haec ipsa intelligere etiam per contrariam interpretationem valemus. Nam quia veneno suo aspis concite, vipera autem tardius occidit, per aspidem violenta et subita, per viperam vero lenis et diuturna tentatio designatur. Unde et illi mors in suctione capitis, viperae autem in lingua esse perhibetur, quia repentina tentatio saepe inopinatam mentem mox ut surgit interficit; longa vero tentatio, quia prava diutius persuadendo suggerit, velut ex lingua vipera occidit. Et quia omnis hypocrita, immundorum suggestione spirituum, quasi serpentum veneno, penetratus, quae sint superna sancti spiritus dona nequaquam considerat, dum intentionem cordis in exterioribus favoribus divulgat, recte subjungitur:

CAPUT XVI.

VERS. 17. — Non videat rivulos fluminis torrentis mellis et butyri. 20. Hypocrita fidei, spei, et charitatis exors. — In Evangelio Dominus dicit: Qui credit in me, sicut dicit Scriptura, flumina de ventre ejus fluent aquae vivae (Joan. VII, 38). Ubi Evangelista subjungit, dicens: Hoc autem dixit de spiritu quem accepturi erant credentes in eum. Rivuli ergo sunt fluminis dona Spiritus sancti. Rivulus est fluminis charitas, rivulus fluminis fides, rivulus fluminis spes. Sed quoniam omnis hypocrita nec Deum, nec proximum diligit, cum transitoriam mundi gloriam quaerit, rivulos fluminis non videt, quia irrigatione non infunditur charitatis. Hypocrita, dum praesentia lucra quaerit, munera futura despicit, et fidem non habens, rivulum fluminis mente non videt, quia est fides rerum argumentum non apparentium (Hebr. XI, 1). Et dum retinet hypocrita quae videntur, spem negligit eorum quae non videntur. Rivulum ergo fluminis per desiderium non videt, quia solis visibilibus intendit. Et scriptum est: Quod enim videt quis, quid sperat (Rom. VIII, 24)? Rivulos ergo fluminis vidisset, si a 477 praesentis mundi gloria oculos clauderet, eosque ad coelestis patriae amorem aperiret. Et notandum quod non rivos, sed rivulos dicit. Accipi enim rivuli fluminis possunt ea dona spiritualia, quae in amantis mentem ita de coelestibus subtiliter currunt, ut per os carnis expleri non possint. Saepe namque amantis animus tanto contemplationis munere repletur, ut videre valeat, quod loqui non valet. Fluvius autem torrens est ipsa inundatio Spiritus sancti, quae in contemplantis animum exuberanti infusione colligitur, cum mens plus quam intelligere sufficit, repletur. Et sciendum quia cum nos Spiritus sancti gratia infundit, melle nos pariter et butyro replet. Mel enim desuper cadit, butyrum vero ex animalium lacte colligitur. Mel itaque ex aere, butyrum vero ex carne est. Summi autem Patris Unigenitus, cum sit Deus super omnia, homo est factus inter omnia. Qui cum nos dulcedine divinitatis suae et mysterio incarnationis replevit, melle nos pariter et butyro satiavit. Quia ergo spiritus Christi mentem quam repleverit, et divinitatis ejus dulcedine, et incarnationis fide laetificat, isti rivuli torrentis fluminis mellis simul et butyri esse memorantur, quia et de cognitione Dei alta mentem suavitate reficiunt, et de incarnationis gratia charismatis hanc mysterio perungunt. Sed iste hypocrita quia, in exterioribus favoribus fusus, haec interna dona non percipit, ad quae post supplicia tendat adjungit, cum subditur:

CAPUT XVII.

VERS. 18. — Luet quae fecit omnia, nec tamen consumetur. 21. Damnati semper moriuntur nunquam morte consumendi. — Persolvit enim in tormento ea quae hic illicite servavit desideria; et, flammis ultricibus traditus, semper moritur, quia semper in morte servatur. Non enim in morte consumitur, quia si consumeretur vita morientis, cum vita etiam poena finiretur. Sed ut sine fine crucietur, vivere sine fine in poena compellitur, ut cujus vita hic mortua fuit in culpa, illic ejus mors vivat in poena. Dicat ergo: Luet quae fecit omnia, nec tamen consumetur, quia cruciatur, et non exstinguitur; moritur, et vivit; deficit, et subsistit; finitur semper, et sine fine est. Haec solo auditu valde sunt terribilia, quanto magis passione! Sed quia multitudo iniquitatis ejus exigit ut carere suppliciis nunquam possit, apte subjungitur:

CAPUT XVIII.

IBID. — Juxta multitudinem adinventionum suarum, sic et sustinebit. 22. Novis inventis cruciantur ad poenam, qui multa invenerunt ad culpam. — Quia enim multa invenit ad culpam, novis inventionibus cruciatur in poena. Nam quod hic suspicari non potuit, hoc illic ultioni traditus sentit. Sicut enim exercitati in bonis operibus electi nonnunquam plus student agere quam eis dignatus est Dominus jubere (carnis enim virginitas nequaquam jussa est, sed tantummodo laudata; nam si illa juberetur, nimirum conjugium jam culpa crederetur, et tamen multi virtute virginitatis pollent, ut videlicet plus impendant obsequio quam acceperunt praecepto), sic plerumque perversi quique in pravis actibus exercentur, ut plus inveniant in perversa operatione quod faciant, quam ex usu reproborum iniquitatis accipere exempla 478 potuerunt. Unde et amplioris retributionis tormento feriuntur, quia et ipsi ex semetipsis amplius actiones pravas, de quibus feriri debeant, invenerunt. Bene itaque dicitur: Juxta multitudinem adinventicnum suarum, sic et sustinebit. Non enim inveniret iniquitatem novam, nisi et quaereret; et non quaereret, nisi ex studio perpetrare festinaret. Pensatur ergo in tormento ejus nimietas malae cogitationis, et dolorem recipit dignae retributionis. Et quamvis damnatorum omnium sit dolor infinitus, graviora tamen tormenta recipiunt, qui multa in iniquitatibus ex suis quoque desideriis invenerunt. Sed quia Sophar hujus hypocritae intulit poenam, protinus adjungit culpam, nec unam quamlibet narrat, sed eam de qua omnes oriuntur. Scriptum quippe est: Radix omnium malorum est cupiditas (I Tim. VI, 10). Cui ergo cupiditas dominari dicitur, subjectus procul dubio malis omnibus demonstratur. Nam subjungit:

CAPUT XIX.

VERS. 19, 20. — Quoniam confringens nudavit pauperis domum, rapuit, et non aedificavit eam, nec est satiatus venter ejus. 23. Aeterna poena multatur qui sua non erogavit; quanto magis qui rapuit aliena. Avaritia obtentis bonis desideratis crescit, non exstinguitur. — Domum pauperis confringit et nudat, qui eum quem per potentiam conterit spoliare quoque per avaritiam non erubescit. Rapit eam, et non aedificat. Ac si aperte diceretur: Qui hanc aedificare debuit insuper rapit. Venturus namque in judicio Dominus dicturus est reprobis: Esurivi, et non dedistis mihi manducare; sitivi, et non dedistis mihi potum; hospes eram, et non collegistis me; nudus, et non operuistis me, et caetera (Matth. XXV, 42). Ex qua culpa subjungitur: Discedite a me, maledicti, in ignem aeternum, qui paratus est diabolo et angelis ejus (Ibid.). Si igitur tanta poena multatur, qui non dedisse sua convincitur, qua poena feriendus est, qui redarguitur aliena abstulisse? Rapuit ergo, et non aedificavit eam, quia non solum de suo nil tribuit, sed etiam quod erat alienum tulit. Bene autem subditur: Nec est satiatus venter ejus. Venter quippe iniqui avaritia est, quia in ipsa colligitur quidquid perverso desiderio glutitur. Liquet vero quia avaritia desideratis rebus non exstinguitur, sed augetur. Nam more ignis cum ligna quae consumat acceperit, accrescit; et unde videtur ad momentum flamma comprimi, inde paulo post cernitur dilatari. Et saepe omnipotens Deus cum avarae menti vehementer irascitur, prius ei permittit ad votum cuncta suppetere, et post hanc per ultionem subtrahit, ut pro eis debeat supplicia aeterna tolerare. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT XX.

VERS. 20. — Et cum habuerit quae concupierat, possidere non poterit. 24. Majoris irae signum est, cum hoc tribuitur quod male desideratur. — Majoris quippe iracundiae est cum hoc tribuitur quod male desideratur, atque inde repentina ultio sequitur, quia hoc quoque obtinuit quod Deo irascente concupivit. Unde et per Psalmistam dicitur, cum escam carnis male populus desiderasse perhibetur: Adhuc esca eorum erat in ore ipsorum, et ira Dei ascendit super eos, et occidit plurimos eorum (Psal. LXXVII, 31). Solent namque tardius apparere divina judicia, cum praepediuntur, ne impleri 479 debeant mala vota. Nam quanto citius malum votum impleri permittitur, plerumque tanto celerius punitur. Unde ergo hypocrita festine multiplicatur ut potens sit, inde agitur cum celeritate ne sit, quia et arbusta quae tardius crescunt annosa perdurant; et quae in temporis brevitate proficiunt celerius arescunt, et quasi cum festinant esse tendunt ad non esse. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXI.

VERS. 21. — Nec remansit de cibo ejus. 25. Cibus ejus est omne hoc quod perverso desiderio concupivit. Sed percusso hypocrita, de cibo suo nil remanet, quia cum ipse ad aeterna supplicia ducitur, a cunctis bonis quae hic possederat alienatur. Unde et adhuc subditur: IBID. — Propterea nihil permanebit de bonis ejus. Si enim de bonis suis ei aliquid permaneret, secum quae habuerat tolleret. Sed quia omnia ambiens timere judicem noluit, ex hac vita subtractus, ad judicem nudus vadit. Cui tamen iniquo ad retributionem minus est quod in subsequenti poena cruciatur, si in hac saltem vita liber esse permittitur. Sed nulla est libertas in culpa, quia scriptum est: Ubi spiritus Domini, ibi libertas (II Cor. III, 17). Et plerumque perversae menti ipsa sua culpa fit poena. Unde et recte subjungitur:

CAPUT XXII.

VERS. 22. — Cum satiatus fuerit, arctabitur. 26. Divitum ex satietate angustia. — Prius quippe anhelat per avaritiam concupita congregare; et cum quasi in quodam ventre avaritiae multa congesserit, satiatus arctatur, quia dum anxiatur qualiter acquisita custodiat, ipsa eum sua satietas augustat. Divitis enim cujusdam uberes fructus ager attulerat, sed quia ubi eos tantos reponeret non habebat, dixit: Quid faciam, quia non habeo quo congregem fructus meos? Et dixit: Hoc faciam, destruam horrea mea, et majora aedificabo (Luc. XII, 17). Qui ergo ex abundantia coangustatus dicebat: Quid faciam? quasi multo cibo pressus aestuabat. Pensemus quot votis appetiit ut uberes fructus ager illius afferret. Ecce autem vota completa sunt, quia fructus uberes ager attulerat. Sed quia ad recondendum loca non sufficiunt, multiplicatus dives quid faciat ignorat. O angustia ex satietate nata! De ubertate agri angustatur animus avari. Dicens namque: Quid faciam? profecto indicat quia, votorum suorum affectibus pressus, sub quodam rerum fasce laborabat. Bene ergo dicitur: Cum satiatus fuerit, arctabitur. Quia mens avari, quae prius ex abundantia requiem quaesierat, post ad custodiam gravius laborabat. Unde hic quoque adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XXIII.

IBID. — Aestuabit, et omnis dolor irruet in eum. 27. In acquirendis et custodiendis divitiis anxietas aeternis suppliciis praeludit. — Prius namque dolorem habuit in ipsa suae concupiscentiae fatigatione, qualiter concupita raperet, quomodo alia blandimentis, alia terroribus auferret; at postquam acquisitis rebus pervenit ad desiderium, alius hunc dolor fatigat, ut cum sollicito timore custodiat quod cum gravi labore meminit acquisitum. Hinc inde insidiatores metuit, atque se hoc perpeti quod ipse fecit aliis pertimescit. Formidat potentiorem alterum, ne hunc sustineat violentum; pauperem vero cum conspicit, suspicatur furem. Ipsa quoque quae congesta sunt curat magnopere, ne ex naturae propriae defectu 480 per negligentiam consumantur. In his itaque omnibus quia timor ipse poena est, tanta infelix patitur, quanta pati timet. Post hoc quoque ad gehennam ducitur, et aeternis cruciatibus mancipatur. Omnis ergo dolor super eum irruit, quem et hic prius poena concupiscentiae, postmodum vero cura custodiae, et illic quandoque poena ultionis cremat.. VERS. 24. — Fugiet arma ferrea, et irruet in arcum aereum. 30. Temporalem inopiam cavens, perpetuae, simulque aeternis suppliciis addicitur avaritia. — Sciendum quod avaritia aliquando per elationem subrepit, aliquando vero per timorem. Sunt namque nonnulli qui dum potentiores videri appetunt, ad alienarum rerum ambitum succenduntur. Et sunt nonnulli qui dum sibi subsidiorum necessaria deesse timent, mentem ad avaritiam relaxant, et aliena ambiunt, cum sua sibi sufficere non posse suspicantur. Omnis vero necessitas non incongrue ferrum vocatur, quia vitam inopis moeroris vulnere cruciat, sicut de ejus quoque necessitatibus scriptum est qui a fratribus venditus afflictam vitam ducebat: Ferrum pertransivit animam ejus (Psal. CIV, 18). Quid ergo sunt arma ferrea, nisi necessitates vitae praesentis, quae dure premunt, et vitam inopis insequuntur? Ferrum quippe aerugo consumit, aes autem consumere difficilius solet. Ferro ergo necessitas praesens, quae transitoria est, aere autem sententia aeterna figuratur. Et quia judicium supernum ab iniqui mente non attenditur, juste arcui comparatur, quoniam velut ex insidiis percutit, dum illud is qui percutitur non attendit. Fugiet ergo arma ferrea, et irruet in arcum aereum, quia dum, praesentes necessitates metuens, multa per avaritiam rapit, extremi judicii districtis se percussionibus anteponit. Et cum fugit arma ferrea, ab arcus aerei sagittis invenitur, quia, mala temporalia stulte praecavens, sententia aeterna 481 percutitur. Qui enim hic inopiae duritiam cum culpa fugit, illic perpetuitatem justae ultionis invenit. Sed priusquam ad judicium rapiatur, adhuc quae iniquus iste hic operetur insinuat. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXVI.

VERS. 25. — Eductus, et egrediens de vagina sua, et fulgurans in amaritudine sua. 31. Ad peccatum a diabolo tracti, propria voluntate egredimur. — Iniquus iste insidiatur depraedationibus proximorum; sed dum prava in cogitationibus machinatur, quasi adhuc gladius in vagina est; dum vero malum quod cogitavit inique perficit, de vagina sua egreditur, quia de occultatione cogitationis suae per iniquitatem malae operationis aperitur. Ostenditur in opere qualis latuit in cogitatione. Et notandum quod ait: Eductus, et egrediens de vagina sua; eductus scilicet per seductorem, egrediens vero per propriam voluntatem. Nam is qui ducitur ducentem procul dubio sequitur; qui autem egreditur, secundum suam pergere voluntatem videtur. Qui ergo ad mala quaeque opera et ab antiquo hoste trahitur, et tamen suo libero arbitrio in eorum desideriis obligatur, de vagina sua eductus et egrediens dicitur, quoniam hoc quod ex prava cogitatione exit ad pessimam operationem, et illius est spiritus qui suggessit, et ejus nequitiae qui ex propria voluntate consensit. 32. Iniqui quo magis splendent, eo acrius punientur. Cujus adhuc potentiae terror ostenditur cum protinus subinfertur: Et fulgurans in amaritudine sua. — Fulgur quippe cum repente desuper venit, cum terrore ante oculos clarescit, claritatem ostendit, et anteposita percutit. Sic sic videlicet iniquus cum gloriam vitae praesentis assumpserit, unde in hoc mundo per potentiam clarus ostenditur, inde agitur ut in ultimo feriatur. Quasi enim fulgurare iniqui est in hujus vitae honore clarescere. Sed quia splendor gloriae illius aeternis gehennae suppliciis mancipatur, recte nunc dicitur: Fulgurans in amaritudine sua. Qui enim modo quasi ex terrore et claritate feriens gaudet, inde post supplicia in perpetuum sustinet. Et quidem de quodam divite scriptum est (Luc. XVI, 19) quia epulabatur quotidie splendide. Sed aliud est splendere, atque aliud fulgurare. Nonnunquam quippe splendor sine percussione est, fulguris vero nomine splendor exprimitur cum percussione. Qui itaque in potestate positus aliis nocet, non incongrue fulgurans dicitur, quia unde ipse contra bonos quasi ex luce gloriae extollitur, inde bonorum vita cruciatur. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXVII.

IBID. — Vadent, et venient super eum horribiles. 33. Quot vitiis sibi succedentibus premitur peccator, tot malignis spiritibus euntibus ac redeuntibus devastatur. — Qui hoc loco horribiles, nisi maligni spiritus appellantur, bonis videlicet mentibus pavendi atque fugiendi? Et quia iidem maligni spiritus certis quibusque vitiis singuli obsequi sunt credendi, cum perversus iste alia quidem vitia ad momentum deserere videtur, sed alia agere incipit, super hunc profecto horribiles vadunt et veniunt, quia perversi mentem, etsi alia mala deserunt, alia occupant. Saepe namque videas iniquum in terrena potestate constitutum, gravi furore commoveri, quidquid ira suggesserit exsequi; et cum furor abscesserit, mox 482 ejus mentem luxuria devastat; cum luxuria ad tempus intermittitur, elatio protinus quasi de continentia in ejus cogitatione subrogatur, atque ut a caeteris timeatur, appetit videri terribilis. Sed cum res exigit ut loqui quid dupliciter debeat, quasi postposito terrore superbiae, remissa locutione blanditur; et cum superbus videri desierit, duplex effici non pertimescit. In cujus ergo mentem vitia vitiis succedunt, recte de eo dicitur: Vadent, et venient super eum horribiles, quia quot vitiis decedentibus et succedentibus premitur, tot malignis spiritibus ejus animus quasi euntibus ac redeuntibus devastatur. Sed haec quae agit extrinsecus per partes prodeunt; nam menti ejus simul omnia mala colligantur. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT XXVIII.

VERS. 26. — Omnes tenebrae absconditae sunt in occultis ejus. 34. Omnia vitia in hypocritae mente sunt colligata. — Quamvis enim hypocrita actiones bonas in superficie ostendat, quaedam tamen in eo malorum operum tenebrae apparent; sed tamen minus prodit in opere quam in ejus latet cogitatione. Nam qui cuncta simul in effectu non explet, cuncta quae noceant in mente tacitus tenet. Omnes ergo tenebrae in occultis ejus absconditae dicuntur, quia etsi in se mala omnia non ostendit, omnia tamen inferre proximis appetit. Sed mens ista sic reproba qua ultione sit ferienda subjungat. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXIX.

IBID. — Devorabit eum ignis, qui non succenditur. 35. Ignis gehennae mire fovetur, et animam et corpus cruciat. — Miro valde modo paucis verbis expressus est ignis gehennae. Ignis namque corporeus, ut esse ignis valeat, corporeis indiget fomentis. Qui cum necesse est ut servetur, per congesta ligna procul dubio nutritur; nec valet nisi succensus esse, et nisi refotus subsistere. At contra gehennae ignis, cum sit corporeus, et in se missos reprobos corporaliter exurat, nec studio humano succenditur, nec lignis nutritur, sed creatus semel durat inexstinguibilis, et succensione non indiget, et ardore non caret. Bene ergo de hoc iniquo dicitur: Devorabit eum ignis, qui non succenditur, quia Omnipotentis justitia, futurorum praescia, ab ipsa mundi origine gehennae ignem creavit, qui in poena reproborum esse semel inciperet, sed ardorem suum etiam sine lignis nunquam finiret. Sciendum vero est quod omnes reprobi, quia ex anima simul et carne peccaverunt, illic in anima pariter et carne cruciantur. Unde per Psalmistam dicitur: Pones eos ut clibanum ignis, in tempore vultus tui; Dominus in ira sua conturbabit eos, et devorabit eos ignis (Psal. XX, 10). Clibanus namque intrinsecus ardet, is vero qui ab igne devoratur, ab exteriori incipit parte concremari. Ut ergo sacra eloquia ardere et exterius et interius reprobos demonstrarent, eos et ab igne devorari, et sicut clibanum poni testantur, ut per ignem crucientur in corpore, et per dolorem ardeant in mente. Unde hic quoque cum de hoc impio diceretur: Devorabit eum ignis, qui non succenditur, protinus de ejus spiritu additur:

CAPUT XXX.

IBID. Affligetur relictus in tabernaculo suo. 36. Mali qui de corpore nunc nolentes educuntur, in corpore tenebuntur inviti. — Iniqui enim tabernaculum caro est, quia ipsam laetus inhabitat, et si sit possibile, optat ut eam nunquam relinquat. Justi vero, quia gaudium suum in spe coelestium 483 ponunt, eorumque conversatio in coelis est (Philip. III, 26), cum adhuc in carne sint quasi in carne jam non sunt, quia nulla carnis delectatione pascuntur. Unde et quibusdam dicitur: Vos autem non estis in carne, sed in spiritu (Rom. VIII, 9). Neque enim in carne non erant qui per magistri epistolas exhortationis eloquia suscipiebant; sed quasi jam non in carne esse est de amore carnalium nihil habere. At contra iniquus iste, quia omne gaudium suum in carnali vita posuit, in tabernaculo carnis habitavit. Quam videlicet carnem cum in resurrectione receperit, cum ea gehennae igni traditus ardebit. Tunc ab ea educi appetit, tunc ejus tormenta evadere, si valeat, quaerit; tunc incipit velle vitare quod amavit. Sed quia eamdem carnem Deo praeposuit, judicante Deo agitur, ut ex ea amplius in igne crucietur. Hic itaque eam relinquere non vult, et tamen ab ea abstrahitur; illic eam relinquere appetit, et tamen in ea propter supplicia servatur. Ad augmentum itaque tormenti et hic de corpore nolens educitur, et illic in corpore tenetur invitus. Quia ergo ejus spiritus carnem quam sibi male amando praeposuit evadere in tormento volet et non valet, recte nunc dicitur: Affligetur relictus in tabernaculo suo. De cujus accusatione mox dicitur:

CAPUT XXXI.

VERS. 27. — Revelabunt coeli iniquitatem ejus, et terra consurget adversus eum. 37. Iniqui in judicio accusatores experientur justos et injustos. — Quid per coelos nisi justos, et quid per terram nisi peccatores accipimus? Unde et in Dominica oratione petimus: Fiat voluntas tua sicut in coelo et in terra (Matth. VI, 10), ut videlicet voluntas nostri conditoris sicut in omnibus justis perficitur, ita et in omnibus quoque peccatoribus impleatur. De justis quoque scriptum est: Coeli enarrant gloriam Dei (Psal. XVIII, 1). Et peccanti homini sententia infertur, qua dicitur: Terra es, et in terram ibis (Genes. III, 19). Hujus itaque impii ad illud terribile judicium deducti revelant coeli iniquitatem, et terra consurgit adversus eum, ut qui hic nec bonis unquam nec malis pepercit, in illo eum tremendo examine et justorum vita et peccatorum pariter accuset. Et gravius quidem est si quis justis potius quam peccatoribus noceat. Unde et per prophetam dicitur: Sanguis ejus in medio ejus est, super limpidissimam petram effudit illum; non effudit illum super terram, ut possit operiri pulvere (Ezech. XXIV, 7). Per terram videlicet et pulverem peccatores, per petram vero limpidissimam justum signans, qui gravibus peccatorum contagiis non exasperatur. Sanguis ergo super limpidissimam petram effunditur, quando malitia cruentae mentis in afflictione justae animae grassatur. Cum ergo sit gravius justos quam injustos injuste affligere, multo tamen est gravius et justis pariter et injustis nocere. Quia ergo hic iniquus et justis pariter nocuit et injustis, in accusatione condemnationis revelabunt coeli iniquitatem ejus, et terra consurget adversus eum, quia et illis obstitit qui coelestia, et eos pressit qui ima sapuerunt. Possunt vero per terram non peccatores et reprobi, sed hi qui, terrenis actibus occupati, eleemosynarum et lacrymarum ope ad aeternam vitam perveniunt designari, de quibus per Psalmistam dicitur, cum venire Dominus ad judicium nuntiaretur: Advocavit coelos sursum 484 et terram, ut discerneret populum suum (Psal. XLIX, 4). Coelos quippe sursum advocat cum hi qui, sua omnia relinquentes, conversationem coelestis vitae tenuerunt ad consedendum in judicio vocantur, atque cum eo judices veniunt. Terra etiam sursum vocatur cum hi qui terrenis actibus obligati fuerant, in eis tamen plus coelestia quam terrena lucra quaesierunt, quibus dicitur: Hospes eram et collegitis me; nudus, et operuistis me (Matth. XXV, 43). Hypocritae itaque hujus coeli iniquitatem revelant, atque adversus eum terra consurgit, dum et hi qui cum Deo judices veniunt, et hi qui per judicium liberantur pravitatis illius testes existunt. Nihil ergo de his quae egit in tempore damnationis ejus absconditur, et si quidem acta illius modo hominibus per duplicitatem multa celantur, sed in damnationis die quidquid in eo intrinsecus latebat ostenditur. Unde apte subjungitur:

CAPUT XXXII.

VERS. 28. — Apertum erit germen domus illius, detrahetur in die furoris Dei. 38. In judicio mala intus latentia revelabuntur. — Tunc germen domus illius aperitur, cum omne malum quod in conscientia illius nascebatur ostenditur. Modo quippe germen domus hypocritae manet occultum, quia etsi bona in imagine apparet ejus operatio, sed latet intentio. Aliud est namque quod agit, aliud quod intendit. Sed cum, adveniente judice, uniuscujusque conscientia ad testimonium fuerit deducta, unde scriptum est: Cogitationibus accusantibus, aut etiam defendentibus (Rom. II, 15), in hoc hypocritae germen domus aperitur, quia in ejus mente cogitatio perversa detegitur. Et in die furoris Dei detrahitur, quia, ostensa ira judicis, flammis ultricibus traditus, ab ejus conspectu separatur. Qui enim summa cogitare dum viveret noluit, peccatorum suorum pondere depressus, a facie judicis in ima suppliciorum cadet. Nunc autem et peccantem considerat judex et tolerat, atque ad conversionem singulos, quia dies patientiae, et necdum est dies furoris, exspectat. Sed in hoc die patientiae quasi immobilis manet hypocrita, dum et multa mala perpetrat, et hunc flagella nulla castigant. Sed in furoris die detrahetur, quia, vindictae tempore raptus ad supplicia, ab aeterni judicis vultu separatur. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXIII.

Haec est pars hominis impii a Deo, et haereditas verborum ejus a Domino. 39. In judicio vel minima mala punientur. — Si enim bene agere in hac positus vita voluisset, partem apud Dominum coelestis regni consortium haberet. Sed quia pravis subdi desideriis elegit, partem suam a Domino in tormentis invenit, quia ejusdem Domini participare gratiam non quaesivit. Bene autem dicitur: Et haereditas verborum ejus a Domino. Qui enim pro magnis malis in supplicium mergitur, fortasse credebatur quod pro verbis quae male dixerat minime judicaretur. Sed cum districta Dei omnipotentis justitia supplicium a reprobis pro perversis actibus exigit, eis mala usque ad verborum retributionem reddit, ut qui de magnis malis debitores sunt, suppliciis traditi, etiam novissimum quadrantem solvant. Illis enim minima parcuntur qui majora in se districte male defleverunt. Nam quos magna premunt, etiam mala minima in gehenna pariter affligunt. 485 Sancti autem viri non partem a Domino accipere, sed partem suam ipsum Dominum habere desiderant. Unde Propheta deprecatur, dicens: Portio mea Dominus (Psal. LXXII, 26) Iniquus vero quia portionem suam habere ipsum Dominum non quaesivit, partem suam extra Dominum ignem invenit, ut ab ejus facie exclusus, quia gaudere in ipso non appetiit, sub ipso crucietur. Haec Sophar ita intulit, ut per ea quae contra hypocritam dixerat beati Job vitam feriret, existimans quod is qui a Domino percussus esset cuncta bona quae egerat mente simplici non egisset. Quem enim percussum vidit, Deo displicuisse credidit. Sed amici beati Job etiam in hac re haereticorum speciem tenent, qui in sancta Ecclesia dum quosdam bene agentes aspiciunt sub flagellis gemere, eos existimant bona merita in bonis actibus non habere, et malos credunt quos affligi verbere divino conspiciunt, videlicet nescientes quia multae tribulationes justorum (Psal. XXXIII, 20); et flagellat omnem filium quem recipit (Hebr. XII, 6). Sed beatus Job more sanctae et universalis Ecclesiae, quae a perversis verborum jacula aequanimiter tolerat, et cum superborum dicta audit, humilitatis suae tramitem non relinquit, cum magna cordis humilitate subjunxit, dicens:

CAPUT XXXIV.

CAP. XXI, VERS. 2. — Audite quaeso sermones meos, et agite poenitentiam. 40. Sancti dum recte docent, irrideri non metuunt. — Qui enim cum diceret Audite, addidit Quaeso, cum quanta humilitate loquatur insinuat, dum contra se superbientes rogat, ut eorum sensum ad salutis doctrinam reducat. Sancti autem viri dum intra universalem Ecclesiam non solum docere recta, sed etiam perversa tolerare parati sunt, irrideri non metuunt. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT XXXV.

VERS. 3. — Sustinete me, ut et ego loquar, et post mea, si videbitur, verba ridete. 41. Sancti in verbis suis quaerunt auditoribus suis, et sibi prodesse. Superbis auditoribus grave onus est doctrina humilitatis. — Boni etenim, cum loquuntur, duo sunt quae in suis locutionibus attendunt, ut videlicet aut sibi et auditoribus suis, aut sibimet solis prosint, si auditoribus prodesse non possunt. Cum enim bene audiuntur bona quae dicunt, sibi simul et auditoribus prosunt. Cum vero ab auditoribus deridentur, sibi procul dubio profuerunt, quos a culpa silentii liberos fecerunt. Beatus itaque Job ut sibi et suis auditoribus prosit, dicat: Audite quaeso sermones meos, et agite poenitentiam. Ut autem ipse quod debet exsolvat, etiam si auditoribus prodesse non valeat, adjungit: Sustinete me, ut et ego loquar, et post, mea, si videbitur, verba ridete. Et notandum quia dum subjungeret Agite poenitentiam, praemisit Audite; cum vero subderet: Post mea, si videbitur, verba ridete, praemisit Sustinete me. Audire quippe volentis est, sustinere nolentis. Amici ergo ejus si doceri appetunt, audiant; si autem irridere parati sunt, sustineant quae dicuntur, quia videlicet superbis mentibus pondus grave est oneris doctrina humilitatis. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXVI.

VERS. 4. — Nunquid contra hominem disputatio mea est, ut merito non debeam contristari? 42. Job ex flagellis humilior, Deo displicuisse tantum timuit. — Omnis qui Deo placens hominibus displicet, causas tristitiae nullas habet. Qui autem aut hominibus placens Deo displicet, aut simul Deo et hominibus 486 displicere se credit, si hunc tristitia non afficit, a virtute sapientiae alienus existit. Beatus autem Job displicuisse Deo inter flagella se credidit, et idcirco animum ad tristitiam revocavit, quia despiciendus non erat cui se displicuisse formidabat. Si autem de vitae suae meritis contra hominem disputaret, nequaquam contristari debuisset; sed quia per flagella praesentia anceps factus de anteacta vita fuerat, in flagello tristitiam jure requirebat. Unde etiam subdit:

CAPUT XXXVII.

VERS. 5. — Attendite me, et obstupescite. 43. Ex Job percussionibus discendum quid formidare debeamus. — Id est, considerate quae egi, et admiramini in hac percussione quae patior. Qui adhuc recte subinfert, dicens: IBID. — Et superponite digitum ori vestro. Ac si aperte dicat: Scientes bona quae egi, et considerantes mala quae patior, vosmetipsos etiam a verborum culpa compescite, atque in meis percussionibus vestra damna formidate. Vel certe quia digitis quaeque discernimus, non incongrue per digitum discretio designatur. Unde et per Psalmistam dicitur: Benedictus dominus Deus meus, qui docet manus meas ad praelium, et digitos meos ad bellum (Psal. CXLIII, 1). Per manus videlicet operationem, per digitos vero discretionem designans. Digitus ergo ori superponitur cum per discretionem lingua refrenatur, ne per hoc quod loquitur in stultitiae culpam delabatur. Ait ergo: Superponite digitum ori vestro, id est, locutioni vestrae discretionis virtutem adjungite, ut per haec quae recta contra hypocritam dicitis quibus sint dicenda videatis. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXVIII.

VERS. 6. — Et ego quando recordatus fuero, pertimesco, et concutit carnem meam tremor. 44. Quaedam ironice et per irrisionem a sanctis dicuntur. — Quia beatus Job actuum suorum oblitus non fuerit, extrema locutio ejus ostendit. Qua ex re hoc quod ab eo nunc amicis dicitur: Et ego quando recordatus fuero, pertimesco, et concutit carnem meam tremor, constat nimirum quod per irrisionem dicatur. Ac si aperte diceretur: Si me aliquid hypocritae habuisse meminero, in poenitentiae mox fletu contremisco. Carmen vero suam, si recordatus fuerit, tremore perhibet concuti, id est infirmitatem operis ultionis pavore fatigari. Sed quia multa Sophar de subita damnatione impii, in quibus beati Job potentiam momordit, asseruit, sanctus vir contra ejus dicta subjungit, dicens:

CAPUT XXXIX.

VERS. 7. — Quare ergo impii vivunt, sublevati sunt, confortatique divitiis? 45. Expenditur hujus vitae felicitas, in dignitatibus et divitiis, in liberis et propinquis; in pacata domo; in armentorum fecunditate; in familiae multitudine et exsultatione. — Nisi enim eos patientia divina toleraret, nequaquam diu vitam in peccatis ducerent. Sublevantur namque divitiis cum esse potentes incipiunt, confortantur vero cum diu in hac vita subsistere permittuntur. Quos enim substantia elevat, in suae fastu potentiae dierum longitudo confortat. Vel certe sublevati et confortati referuntur, quia sublevantur honoribus, confortantur rebus. Sed sunt plerique qui et honoribus sublevati, et divitiis confortati, ea quae in hac concupiscunt vita accipiunt, successione autem sobolis privantur. Istis nimirum ipsa sua potentia poena est, cum et magnam se habere haereditatem considerant, et haeredes non habent quibus relinquant. Quid itaque prodest 487 si adsint omnia, et desint filii qui successores fiant? Sequitur:

CAPUT XL.

VERS. 8. — Semen eorum permanet coram eis. 46. In augmentum magnae felicitatis, cum magno patrimonio dantur et haeredes; ac ne qua necessitas saltem temporalis ab oculis subtrahat eos in quibus animus exsultat, de hoc eorum semine dicitur: Permanet coram eis. Quid autem si filii dati sunt, sed ipsi sterilitate feriuntur? Sic in eis genus exstinguitur, sicut parentum sterilitate exstingui timebatur. Sequitur: IBID. — Propinquorum turba et nepotum in conspectu eorum. Ecce adest vita, adsunt honores et divitiae, adsunt filii, adsunt nepotes. Quid si qua mentem intestina cogitatio exurat, et securitatis gaudia domestica rixa transverberet? Quae est mundi hujus felicitas, si laeta non est? Sequitur:

CAPUT XLI.

VERS. 9. — Domus eorum securae sunt et pacatae, et non est virga Dei super illos. 47. Securae et pacatae sunt, quia peccantes vivunt, lugenda agunt, et gaudia non relinquunt. Virga eos supernae disciplinae non percutit, et tanto amplius in culpa proficiunt, quanto minus ex culpa feriuntur. Sed quia intus quae prosperantur audivimus, in agris quoque quae prosperitas arrideat videamus. Sequitur: VERS. 10. — Bos eorum concepit, et non abortivit; vacca peperit, et non est privata fetu suo. Vulgaris locutionis usus est ut bovem masculum et vaccam feminam vocet, sed litteraturae (Id est, grammaticae), locutio bovem communis generis appellat. Unde nunc dicitur: Bos eorum concepit, et non abortivit; vacca peperit, et non est privata fetu suo. Dominis gregum prima felicitas est, si grex sterilitatem non habens concipit; secunda, si conceptus ad partum venit; tertia autem, si hoc quod partum est per nutrimenta ad provectum ducatur. Ut ergo tota simul adesse impiis demonstraret, eorum greges beatus Job asserit concepisse, et non abortisse; peperisse, et fetu proprio non esse privatos. Minor autem est felicitas, si cum greges crescunt, custodes quoque gregum non proficiunt. Unde et ad fecunditatem gregum mox fecunditas familiae subrogatur. Nam dicitur:

CAPUT XLII.

VERS. 11. — Egrediuntur quasi greges parvuli eorum, et infantes eorum exsultant lusibus. 48. Ut sicut majora ad habendum concessa sunt, ita multi germinent ad custodiendum. Sed quia dixit Exsultant lusibus, ipsum quoque infantium lusum in domo iniquorum ne vilem valde esse crederemus, subjungens, ait: VERS. 12. — Tenent tympanum et citharam, gaudent ad sonitum organi. Ac si patenter dicat: Cum domini honoribus et rebus tument, subjecti in ludicris actibus gaudent. Sed, o beate vir, quid tam multa nobis de iniquorum voluptatibus narras? Jam diu est quod in eorum descriptione loqueris, post multa breviter distingue quae sentis. Sequitur:

CAPUT XLIII.

VERS. 13. — Ducunt in bonis dies suos, et in puncto ad inferna descendunt. 49. Quidquid finem habet, momentaneum. Prosperitas innocentiae, adversitas iniquitatis non est argumentum. — Ecce, beate vir, eorum gaudia diu narraveras; quomodo nunc asseris quod in puncto ad inferna descendant, nisi quod omnis longitudo temporis 488 vitae praesentis punctus esse cognoscitur, cum fine terminatur? Cum enim ad extremum quisque perducitur, de praeterito jam nil tenet, quia tempora cuncta delapsa sunt; in futuro nil habet, quia unius horae momenta non restant. Vita ergo quae sic angustari potuit punctus fuit. Ut enim praediximus, in puncto stylum ponimus, et levamus. Quasi ergo in puncto vitam tetigit, qui hanc accepit et amisit. Potest in puncto hoc quoque intelligi, quod saepe hi qui diu in iniquitate tolerati sunt subita morte rapiuntur, ut nec flere ante mortem liceat quae peccaverunt. Sed quia nonnunquam etiam vita justorum subito fine terminatur, melius illud accipimus, si hoc de eorum temporali vita sentiamus, quia quidquid transire potuit subitum fuit. Amicis autem beati Job, qui idcirco hunc injustum esse crediderunt, quia flagellatum viderunt, recte ejusdem sancti viri voce de iniquorum flore et perditione ostensum est quia praesentis vitae prosperitas innocentiae testis non est, quia multi ad perennem vitam per flagella redeunt, et plerique ad infinita supplicia perducendi sine flagello moriuntur. De quibus adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XLIV.

VERS. 14. — Qui dixerunt Deo: Recede a nobis. 50. Qui Dei mandatis non obsequuntur, eum a se abigunt. — Haec verbis dicere vel stulti minime praesumunt; sed tamen perversi omnes Deo Recede, non verbis, sed moribus dicunt. Qui enim illa agunt quae Deus omnipotens prohibet, quid aliud faciunt quam suum animum contra Omnipotentem claudunt? Sicut enim ejus praecepta cogitare eum ad se introducere est, ita ejus mandatis obsistere eum a cordis inhabitatione repellere est. Dicunt ergo: Recede a nobis, qui ei ad se aditum praebere recusant, eumque pravis actibus impugnant, etiam si verbis laudare videantur. Dicunt etiam:

CAPUT XLV.

IBID. — Scientiam viarum tuarum nolumus. 51. Aliud est nescire vias Dei, aliud scire nolle. — Eo ipso quo ejus scientiam apprehendere contemnunt. Sunt namque nonnulli qui ex eo quod Veritas dicit: Servus qui non cognovit voluntatem domini sui, et facit digna plagis, vapulabit paucis; et servus sciens voluntatem domini sui, et non faciens juxta eam, vapulabit multis (Luc. XII, 47, 48); nolunt scire quod faciant, et quasi minus se vapulaturos existimant, si nesciant quod operari debuerunt. Sed aliud est nescisse, aliud scire noluisse. Nescit namque qui apprehendere vult, et non valet. Qui autem ut nesciat aurem a voce veritatis avertit, iste non nesciens, sed contemptor addicitur. Via autem Dei pax, via Dei humilitas, via Dei patientia est. Sed quia haec omnia iniqui despiciunt, dicunt: Scientiam viarum tuarum nolumus. Dum enim in praesenti vita superbiunt, dum honoribus inflantur, dum etiam si non habent appetunt, vias Dei in sua cogitatione contemnunt. Quia enim via Dei in hac vita humilitas fuit, ipse hic Deus et Dominus redemptor noster ad probra, ad contumelias, ad passionem venit, et adversa hujus mundi aequanimiter pertulit, prospera fortiter vitavit, ut et prospera doceret aeternae vitae appeti, et adversa praesentis vitae non formidari. Sed quia iniqui gloriam vitae praesentis appetunt, ignominiam fugiunt, dicere memorantur: Scientiam viarum tuarum nolumus. Scire quippe nolunt quod facere contemnunt. 489 Quorum adhuc verba subduntur, cum dicitur:

CAPUT XLVI.

VERS. 15. — Quis est Omnipotens, ut serviamus ei? 52. Carnales, aut Deum non esse suspicantur, aut ei servire contemnunt. — Mens enim hominis male exterius fusa, sic in rebus corporeis sparsa est, ut neque ad semetipsam intus redeat, neque eum qui est invisibilis cogitare sufficiat. Unde carnales viri jussa spiritalia contemnentes, Deum quia corporaliter non vident, quandoque ad hoc perveniunt, ut etiam non esse suspicentur.

Unde scriptum est: Dixit insipiens in corde suo: Non est Deus (Psal. XIII, 1). Unde nunc quoque dicitur: Quis est Omnipotens, ut serviamus ei? Plerumque enim plus appetunt homines servire hominibus, quos corporaliter vident, quam servire Deo, quem non vident. Per omne enim quod faciunt, ad finem oculorum tendunt; et quia in Deum oculos corporis tendere non possunt, ei obsequia praebere vel despiciunt, vel si coeperint, fatigantur. Esse enim, sicut dictum est, non credunt, quem corporaliter non intuentur. Qui si auctorem omnium Deum humiliter quaererent, id quod non videtur, ei rei quae videtur, esse melius, in semetipsis invenirent. Ipsi quippe ex anima invisibili et corpore visibili subsistunt; sed si hoc ab eis quod non videtur, abstrahitur, illico corruit quod videtur. Et patent quidem carnis oculi; sed videre quidquam vel sentire non possunt. Sensus enim visionis periit, quia habitator recessit; et domus carnis remanet vacua, quia abscessit ille invisibilis spiritus, qui per ejus respicere fenestras solebat. Quia ergo rebus visibilibus invisibilia praestantiora sunt, carnales quique ex semetipsis pensare debuerunt, atque per hanc, ut ita dixerim, scalam considerationis tendere in Deum: quia eo est, quo invisibilis permanet, et eo summus permanet quo comprehendi nequaquam potest. Sunt vero nonnulli qui Deum et esse et incomprehensibilem esse non ambigunt; qui tamen ab eo non ipsum, sed dona exteriora quaerunt. Quae cum ei servientibus deesse conspiciunt, ipsi servire contemnunt. De quorum adhuc verbis adjungitur:

CAPUT XLVII.

IBID. — Et quid nobis prodest, si oraverimus illum? 53. Ordo rerum in oratione postulandarum. — Cum Deus in oratione non quaeritur, citius in oratione animus lassatur: quia cum illa quisque postulat, quae fortasse juxta occultum judicium Deus tribuere recusat, ipse quoque venit in fastidium, qui non vult dare quod amatur. Sed se magis Dominus quam ea quae condidit, vult amari, aeterna potius quam terrena postulari, sicut scriptum est: Quaerite primum regnum Dei et justitiam ejus, et haec omnia adjicientur vobis (Matth. VI, 33). Qui enim non ait, dabuntur, sed adjicientur: profecto indicat aliud esse quod principaliter datur, aliud quod superadditur. Quia enim nobis in intentione aeternitas, in usu vero temporalitas esse debet, et illud datur, et hoc nimirum ex abundanti superadditur. Et tamen saepe homines, cum bona temporalia postulant, aeterna vero praemia non requirunt, petunt quod adjicitur, et illud non desiderant ubi adjiciatur. Nec lucrum suae esse petitionis deputant, si hic sint temporaliter pauperes, et illic beatitudine divites in aeternum vivant; sed solis, ut dictum est, visibilibus intenti, labore postulationis renuunt invisibilia mercari. 490 Qui si superna quaererent, jam cum fructu laborem exhiberent: quia cum mens in precibus ad auctoris sui speciem anhelat, divinis desideriis inflammata, supernis conjungitur, ab inferioribus separatur, amore fervoris sui se aperit ut capiat, et capiens inflammat; et superiora amare jam sursum ire est; dumque magno desiderio ad coelestia inhiat, miro modo hoc ipsum quod accipere quaerit degustat. Sequitur:

CAPUT XLVIII.

VERS. 16. — Verumtamen quia non sunt in manu eorum bona sua, consilium eorum longe sit a me. 54. Justi bona sua possident, non ab eis possidentur; secus iniqui. — Bona in manu habet, qui despiciendo temporalia sub dominio mentis premit. Nam quisquis ea nimie diligit, se magis illis quam sibi ipsa supponit. Multi etenim justorum in hoc mundo divites fuerunt, rebus et honoribus fulti habere multa videbantur, quorum mentem quia eorum quae aderant delectatio nimia non possidebat, bona illorum in manu erant: quia potestati animi subjecta tenebantur. At contra iniqui ita se totis desideriis in exteriorum rerum appetitionibus fundunt, ut non magis ipsi habita teneant, sed ab his quae habent, captiva mente teneantur. Quia igitur non sunt in manu eorum bona sua, recte subjungitur:

Consilium eorum longe sit a me. Quid namque est iniquorum consilium nisi terrenam gloriam quaerere, aeternam negligere, salutem temporalem cum damno interiori appetere, et dolores transitorios ad aeternos gemitus commutare? Vir igitur sanctus has iniquorum cogitationes intuens aspernetur, et dicat: Consilium eorum longe sit a me. Quia nimirum esse bonum incomparabiliter videt, ad breve tempus eligit hic sub flagello gemere quam aeternae ultionis supplicia tolerare. Sed neque in hac vita hi qui in ea prosperari appetunt, continue prosperantur. Nam plerumque eorum gaudia, suborti gemitus interrumpunt. Unde subditur:

CAPUT XLIX.

VERS. 17. — Quoties lucerna eorum exstinguetur, et superveniet eis inundatio, et dolores dividet furoris sui. 55. Quot et qualibus poenis afficiuntur mali. — Saepe impius lucernam suam, filiorum vitam aestimat; sed cum filius qui nimie amatur, subtrahitur, lucerna impii, quae videbatur, exstincta est. Saepe impius praesentis honoris gloriam lucernam putat; sed dum, sublata dignitate, dejicitur, lucerna exstincta est, quae ei juxta desiderium lucebat. Saepe impius opes terrenae substantiae adesse sibi, quasi magnam luminis lucernam putat; sed cum, irruente damno, divitias, quas plus se amabat, perdiderit, quid iste aliud quam lucernam, in cujus lumine gaudebat, amisit? Qui ergo gaudere de aeternis non appetit, neque hic ubi solidari vult, potest continue laetari. Nam quoties lucerna impiorum exstinguitur, et supervenit eis mundatio, et dolores dividit furoris sui. Inundatio impiis supervenit, cum dolorum fluctus ex aliqua adversitate patiuntur. Omnipotens enim Deus cum se despici et in terrena videt concupiscentia laetari, hoc quoque doloribus percutit quod sibi videt in cogitatione impii praeferri. Bene autem dicitur: Et dolores dividet furoris sui. Qui enim aeternos dolores impio per retributionem servat, et aliquando ejus mentem etiam 491 temporali dolore transverberat: quia hic quoque et illic percutit, furoris sui super impium dolores dividit. Neque enim poena praesens, quae injusti animam a pravis desideriis non immutat, ab aeternis suppliciis liberat. Unde et per Psalmistam dicitur: Pluet super peccatores laqueos, ignis, sulphur et spiritus procellarum pars calicis eorum (Psal. X, 7). Dicendo enim laqueos, ignis, sulphur et spiritus procellarum, multos nimirum dolores intulit. Sed quia ab eis doloribus peccator, qui non corrigitur, ad aeterna supplicia vocatur, eosdem dolores non jam totum calicem, sed partem calicis dixit: quia videlicet eorum passio hic quidem per dolores incipitur, sed in ultione perpetua consummatur. De quorum adhuc fine subjungitur:

CAPUT L.

VERS. 18. — Erunt sicut paleae ante faciem venti, et sicut favilla quam turbo dispergit. 56. Tanquam paleae ab irae divinae flatu ad ignem asportantur. — Iniquus cum in potestate conspicitur, cum valde in oppressionibus et violentiis effrenatur, ab infirmorum cogitationibus gravis nimium, et quasi in hoc mundo radicatus aestimatur. Sed cum districti judicis sententia venerit, omnes iniqui quasi paleae ante ventum erunt: quia, ut ita dicam, irae flatu subito levantur atque asportantur ad ignem, quos hic in suis quondam praejudiciis quasi duri ponderis superjacentem molem indigentium lacrymae movere non poterant. Et ad rapientis judicii manus leves sunt, qui per injustitiam proximis graves fuerunt. Et sicut favilla, quam turbo dispergit. Ante omnipotentis Dei oculos iniqui vita favilla est: quia, etsi apparet ad momentum viridis, ab ejus tamen judicio jam consumpta cernitur; quia consumptioni est aeternae deputata. Hanc favillam turbo dispergit: quia Deus manifestus veniet; Deus noster, et non silebit. Ignis in conspectu ejus ardebit, et in circuitu ejus tempestas valida (Psal. XLIX, 3). Hujus enim tempestatis turbine ab aeterni conspectu judicis iniqui rapiuntur; et qui hic mentem desiderio perverso solidaverant, ibi paleae et favilla videbuntur: quia eos ad aeterna supplicia turbo rapiens asportat. Sequitur:

CAPUT LI.

VERS. 19. — Deus servabit filiis illius dolorem patris: et cum reddiderit, tunc sciet. 57. Qui Deus peccata parentum puniat in filiis. — Scriptum novimus: Qui reddis peccata patrum in filios ac nepotes, in tertiam et quartam generationem (Exod. XXXIV, 7). Et rursum scriptum est: Quid est (De Poenit., dist. 4, c. 13) quod inter vos parabolam vertitis in proverbium istud in terra Israel, dicentes: Patres comederunt uvam acerbam, et dentes filiorum obstupuerunt? Vivo ego, dicit Dominus Deus, si erit vobis ultra parabola haec in proverbium in Israel. Ecce omnes animae, meae sunt; ut anima patris, ita et anima filii, mea est. Anima quae peccaverit, ipsa morietur (Ezech. XVIII, 2; Jerem. XXXI, 29). In utraque igitur hac sententia dum dissimilis sensus invenitur, auditoris animus ut discretionis viam subtiliter requirat instruitur. Peccatum quippe originale a parentibus trahimus; et nisi per gratiam baptismatis solvamur, etiam parentum peccata portamus: quia unum adhuc videlicet cum illis sumus. Reddit ergo peccata parentum in filios, dum pro culpa parentis, ex originali peccato anima polluitur prolis. Et rursum non reddit parentum peccata 492 in filios: quia cum ab originali culpa per baptismum liberamur, jam non parentum culpas, sed quas ipsi committimus, habemus. Quod tamen intelligi etiam aliter potest: quia quisquis pravi parentis iniquitatem imitatur, etiam ex ejus delicto constringitur. Quisquis autem parentis iniquitatem non imitatur, nequaquam delicto illius gravatur. Unde fit, ut iniquus filius iniqui patris non solum sua quae addidit, sed etiam patris peccata persolvat; cum vitiis patris, quibus iratum Dominum non ignorat, etiam suam adhuc malitiam adjungere non formidat. Et justum est, ut qui sub districto judice vias parentis iniqui non timet imitari, cogatur in vita praesenti etiam culpas parentis iniqui persolvere. Unde et illic dictum est: Anima patris mea est, et anima filii mea est. Anima quae peccaverit, ipsa morietur: quia in carne nonnunquam filii etiam ex patris peccato perimuntur. Deleto autem originali peccato, ex parentum nequitia in anima non tenentur. Quid enim est quod parvuli filii plerumque a daemonibus arripiuntur, nisi quod caro filii ex patris poena multatur? In semetipso enim percutitur pater iniquus, et percussionis vim sentire contemnit. Plerumque percutitur in filiis, ut acrius uratur; et dolor patris carni filiorum redditur, quatenus per filiorum poenas mens patris iniqua puniatur. Cum vero non parvuli, sed jam provectiores filii ex parentum culpa feriuntur, quid aliud aperte datur intelligi, nisi quod illorum etiam poenas luunt, quorum facta secuti sunt? Unde et recte dicitur: Usque ad tertiam et quartam progeniem. Quia enim usque ad tertiam et quartam progeniem, eam quam imitantur filii parentum vitam possunt videre, usque ad eos ultio extenditur, qui viderunt quod male sequerentur. Sed ecce cum haec audimus, cordi nostro quaestio oritur, cur omnipotens et misericors Deus in tantam caecitatem cadere rationem mentis humanae permiserit? Ne vero quisquam ultra quam debet occulta Dei judicia discutere praesumat, recte subjungitur:

CAPUT LIV.

VERS. 22. — Nunquid Deum quispiam docebit scientiam, qui excelsos judicat? 61. Occulta Dei judicia curiosius non scrutanda. — Cum in his quae de nobis aguntur ambigimus, debemus alia quae nobis sunt certa conspicere, et eam quae de nostra nobis incertitudine surrexerat cogitationis querelam placare. Ecce enim quod electos ad vitam flagella revocant, et a malis actibus reprobos nec flagella compescunt, omnipotentis Dei judicia super nos valde occulta sunt, et injusta non sunt. Sed si tendamus oculum mentis ad superiora, in illis aspicimus quia de nobis quid juste conqueri non habemus. Omnipotens enim Deus angelorum merita discernens, 494 alios in aeterna luce sine lapsu permanere constituit, alios sponte lapsos a statu suae celsitudinis in aeternae damnationis ultione prostravit. Nobiscum igitur injuste nil agit, qui et subtiliorem nobis naturam juste judicavit. Dicat ergo: Nunquid Deum quispiam docebit scientiam, qui excelsos judicat? Qui enim super nos mira facit, constat procul dubio quia de nobis scienter omnia disponit. His itaque praemissis, adjungitur ubi humanus animus in requisitione fatigatur. Nam subditur:

CAPUT LV.

VERS. 23-25. — Iste moritur robustus et sanus, dives et felix, viscera ejus plena sunt adipe, et medullis ossa illius irrigantur; alius vero moritur in amaritudine animae suae absque ullis opibus. 62. Electorum et reproborum vita dispar, at mors carnis eadem. Iniqui laetitia transit ad poenam, innocentis poena ad laetitiam. — Ista cum ita sint, quis omnipotentis Dei secreta discutiat cur haec ita esse permittat? Sed electis et reprobis vita quidem dispar est, carnis autem in morte corruptio dispar non est. Unde subjungitur: VERS. 26. — Et tamen simul in pulvere dormient, et vermes operient eos. Quid ergo mirum, si prosperitate vel adversitate praesentis saeculi dissimiliter ad momentum currunt, qui per corruptionem carnis ad terram similiter redeunt? Illa est ergo solummodo vita cogitanda, in qua cum resurrectione carnis ad finem dissimilem pertingitur retributionis. Quae est enim iniquis salus aut robur, qui adeps et divitiae, dum totum hic cum celeritate relinquitur, et illic retributio, quae nunquam relinqui possit, invenitur? Sicut autem hujus iniqui laetitia transit ad poenam, ita afflicti innocentis poena transit ad laetitiam. Nec divitiae ergo debent mentem extollere, nec inopia perturbare. Unde beatus Job inter damna rerum nulla admittit ad animum damna cogitationum, sed ad eos qui se in percussione despiciunt redarguendo subjungit, dicens:

CAPUT LVI.

VERS. 27, 28. — Certe novi cogitationes vestras, et sententias contra me iniquas. Dicitis enim: Ubi est domus principis, et ubi tabernacula impiorum? 63. Job infractus, quia amissis caeteris Deum non amiserat. — Impium enim crediderant quem, ablatis rebus, temporaliter destructum videbant. Sed sanctus vir tanto eos alta consideratione dijudicat, quanto inter damna quae pertulerat infracta rectitudine stabat. Quid enim ei foris rerum damna nocuerant, qui illum non amiserat quem interius amabat? Allegoricus sensus. — 64. Ex copia superbia nascitur. — Hoc vero quod dicitur: Simul in pulvere dormient, et vermes operient eos, si quis forsitan accipere per allegoriam velit, explere breviter possumus, si de iniquo hoc divite ea quae sunt jam dicta replicemus. Dicitur namque: Viscera ejus plena sunt adipe. Sicut enim ex abundanti cibo adeps, ita ex abundantia rerum superbia nascitur, quae impinguat mentem divitis, dum elevatur animus superbientis. Superbia quippe cordis quasi quaedam pinguedo est crassitudinis. Unde quia plerique ex abundantia peccata perpetrant, per Prophetam dicitur: Prodiit quasi ex adipe iniquitas eorum (Psal. LXXII, 7). Sequitur: Et medullis ossa illius irrigantur. Amatores hujus saeculi quasi ossa habent, quando in hoc mundo fortitudinem dignitatum possident. 495 Sed si in exteriori dignitate desint terrenae et domesticae divitiae, quantum ad judicium suum ossa quidem habent, sed medullas in ossibus non habent. Quia ergo sic iste amator hujus saeculi exteriori potestate fulcitur, ut etiam interiori terrenae domus abundantia saginetur, dicitur: Et medullis ossa illius irrigantur. Vel certe ossa sunt hujus divitis pravae et durae consuetudines, medullae vero in ossibus sunt ipsa desideria male vivendi, quae neque ex pravitatis satisfactione satiantur. Quae medullae quasi ossa irrigant, cum prava desideria perversas consuetudines suas in voluptatum delectatione conservant.. VERS. 29, 30. — Interrogate quemlibet de viatoribus, et haec eadem illum intelligere cognoscetis. Quia in diem perditionis servatur malus, et ad diem furoris ducitur. 68. Consulendi sunt, qui vitam sibi viam esse, non patriam cogitant. — Saepe etenim diu divina patientia tolerat quos jam ad supplicia praescita condemnat, permittit florere quos adhuc cernit deteriora perpetrare. Quia enim videt ad quam damnationis foveam tendant, hoc eis pro nihilo esse existimat, quod hic perversi relinquenda multiplicant. Sed quisquis praesentis vitae gloriam diligit, magnam esse felicitatem deputat hic secundum votum florere, quamvis cogatur postmodum supplicia aeterna tolerare. Solus ergo ille conspicit nil esse quod iniquus floret, qui jam gressum cordis ab amore praesentis saeculi amovit. Unde recte cum de subsequenti damnatione impii diceretur, praemittitur: Interrogate quemlibet de viatoribus, et haec eadem illum intelligere cognoscetis. Viator quippe dicitur qui praesentem vitam viam sibi esse et non patriam attendit, qui in dilectione praetereuntis saeculi cor figere despicit, qui non remanere in transeuntibus, sed ad aeterna pervenire concupiscit. Qui enim in hac vita viator esse non appetit, hujus vitae prospera minime contemnit, et ea quae ipse desiderat, cum abundare aliis viderit, miratur. Unde David propheta quoniam a dilectione praesentis saeculi jam corde transierat, iniqui gloriam describens, dicebat: Vidi impium superexaltatum et elevatum sicut cedros Libani (Psal. XXXVI, 35). Sed quia cor huic mundo non subdidit, hunc jure despexit, dicens: Transivi, et ecce non erat (Ibid., 36). Esset quippe aliquid in ejus aestimatione impius, si ipse ab hoc saeculo per intentionem minime transisset. Sed is cui non transeunti magnum aliquid esset, transeunti animo quam nihil esset apparuit, quia dum aeterna retributio cogitatur, praesens gloria quam sit nulla cognoscitur. Hinc Moyses, cum supernae contemplationis gloriam quaereret, dixit, Transiens videbo visionem (Exod. III, 3). Nisi enim gressum cordis a saeculi amore removisset, nequaquam intelligere superna potuisset. Hinc Jeremias luctum cordis sui considerari deposcens, ait: O vos omnes qui transitis per viam, attendite et videte, si est dolor sicut dolor meus (Thren. I, 12). Qui enim praesentem vitam non quasi viam transeunt, sed quasi patriam attendunt, luctum cordis electorum considerare nesciunt. Illos ergo ut dolorem suum considerent propheta exquirit, quos in hoc mundo contigit 497 animum non fixisse. Hinc per Salomonem dicitur: Aperi os tuum muto, et causis omnium filiorum qui pertranseunt (Prov. XXXI, 8). Muti enim dicuntur qui praedicatorum verbis contradicendo minime resistunt. Qui etiam pertranseuntes sunt, quia intentionem mentis in amore vitae praesentis figere dedignantur. Igitur quia malus ad diem perditionis servatur, et ad diem furoris ducitur, hoc non nisi qui est viator intelligit, quoniam qui cor in praesentibus fixit, quae iniquum sequuntur supplicia non deprehendit. De quo adhuc subditur:

CAPUT LVIII VERS.

31. — Quis arguet coram eo viam ejus? et quae fecit, quis reddet illi? 69. Antichristum tantis signis, ostensione sanctitatis tanta elatum, solus Christus debellaturus est. — Saepe malus indignationem conditoris sui, quam in aeternum passurus est, et in hac quoque vita positus experitur, dum prosperitatem quam amat amittit, et adversitatem quam formidat invenit. Et quamvis increpari de suis pravitatibus a justorum lingua etiam in prosperis valeat, scimus tamen quod cum facta sua perversum quemque dejiciunt, justorum increpatio convalescat. Qua autem ratione nunc dicitur: Quis arguet coram eo viam ejus? dum etiam, justis tacentibus, hoc quoque notum sit, quia toties hic iniqui via arguitur, quoties ejus prosperitas interveniente adversitate turbatur. Sed beatus Job dum de omnium malorum corpore loqueretur, subito ad omnium iniquorum caput verba convertit. Vidit enim quod in fine mundi Satan hominem ingrediens, quem sacra Scriptura Antichristum appellat, tanta elatione extollitur, tanta virtute principatur, tantis signis et prodigiis in sanctitatis ostensione elevatur, ut argui ab homine ejus facta non valeant quia cum potestate terroris adjungit etiam signa ostensae sanctitatis, et ait: Quis arguet coram eo viam ejus? Quis videlicet hominem illum increpare audeat, cujus visum ferre pertimescit? Sed tamen ejus viam non solum Elias et Enoch, qui in ejus exprobrationem ad medium deducuntur, sed etiam omnes electi arguunt, dum contemnunt, dum virtute mentis ejus malitiae resistunt. Sed quia hoc ex divina gratia, et non suis viribus faciunt, recte nunc dicitur: Quis arguet coram eo viam ejus? Quis etenim, nisi Deus, cujus adjutorio electi, ut resistere valeant, fulciuntur? Aliquando enim in Scriptura sacra cum interrogando Quis ponitur, Omnipotens designatur. Unde scriptum est: Quis suscitabit eum (Genes. XLIX, 9)? De quo per Paulum dicitur: Quem Deus suscitavit a mortuis (Gal. I, 1). In eo ergo quod sancti viri ejus iniquitati contradicunt, non ipsi sunt qui viam ejus arguunt, sed ille est ex cujus gratia confortantur. Et quia praesentia ejus, qua in homine venturus est, multo atrocior in persecutione erit quam nunc, cum minime cernitur, quia specialiter adhuc illo vase suo proprio non gestatur, bene dictum est: Coram eo. Multi enim nunc vias Antichristi dijudicantes corripiunt, sed hoc quasi in ejus absentia faciunt, dum illum arguunt quem adhuc specialiter non intuentur. Cum vero 498 in illo damnato homine venerit, quisquis ejus praesentiae resistit, coram eo viam ejus arguit, cujus vires et conspicit et contemnit. Vel certe viam ejus arguere est prosperitatem cursus ejus aeterno supplicio interveniente turbare. Quod quia solus Dominus propria virtute facturus est, de quo scriptum est. Quem Dominus Jesus interficiet spiritu oris sui, et destruet illustratione adventus sui (II Thess. II, 8.), recte dicitur: Quis arguet coram eo viam ejus? Unde et sequitur: Et quae fecit, quis reddet illi? Quis nimirum, nisi Dominus? Qui solus illi perdito homini quae fecit reddet, dum potestatem ejus tam validam per adventum suum aeterna damnatione contriverit. Sed elatus iste princeps malorum, in hac vita quandiu est positus, quid agat, audiamus. Sequitur:

CAPUT LIX.

VERS. 32. — Ipse ad sepulcra ducetur, et in congerie mortuorum vigilabit. 70. In multitudine peccantium tanquam in congerie mortuorum, et in sepulcris Satan vigilat. — Quia sepulcra mortuos tegunt, quid aliud per sepulcra quam reprobi designantur, in quibus exstinctae a vita beatitudinis animae velut in sepulcris latent? Iniquus ergo iste ad sepulcra ducetur, quia in pravorum cordibus recipietur, quoniam soli eum illi suscipiunt, in quibus mortuae a Deo animae reperiuntur. De quo recte etiam, dum ejus supplicia describuntur, per prophetam dicitur: In circuitu illius sepulcra ejus, omnes interfecti, et qui ceciderunt gladio (Ezech. XXXII, 22). Illi quippe in inferno juxta illum sunt, in quibus idem malignus spiritus mortuus jacet. Qui iniquitatis ejus gladio percussi ceciderunt. Unde scriptum est: Qui liberasti David servum tuum de gladio maligno (Psal. CLIII, 10). Recte autem dicitur: Et in congerie mortuorum vigilabit, quia nunc in congregatione peccantium astutiae suae insidias exerit. Pro eo autem quod in mundo raritas bonorum est, et multitudo malorum, recte mortuorum congeries nominatur, ut ipsa iniquorum multitudo signetur. Lata enim via est quae ducit ad perditionem, et multi sunt qui ingrediuntur per eam (Matth. VII, 13). Satanae itaque in congerie mortuorum vigilare est in reproborum cordibus malitiae suae astutias exercere. De quo adhuc subditur:

CAPUT LX.

VERS. 33. — Dulcis fuit glareis Cocyti. 71. Ut amarus est electis, ita reprobis vitia suggerendo dulcis est. — Graeca lingua cocytus luctus dicitur, qui tamen luctus feminarum vel quorumlibet infirmantium solet intelligi. Sapientes vero hujus saeculi, a luce veritatis exclusi, quasi umbras quasdam veritatis inquisitione tenere conati sunt. Unde Cocytum fluvium currere apud inferos putaverunt, videlicet designantes quod hi qui digna doloribus opera faciunt, in infernum ad luctum decurrunt. Sed nos despiciamus umbram carnalis sapientiae, qui jam de veritate lucem tenemus et cognoscamus voce beati viri Cocyton luctum infirmantium dici. Scriptum quippe est: Viriliter agite, et confortetur cor vestrum (Psal. XXX, 25). Qui enim in Deo confortari renuunt, ad luctum per animi infirmitatem tendunt. Glareas vero lapillos fluminum appellare, consuevimus, quos aqua defluens trahit. 499 Quid ergo per glareas Cocyti nisi reprobi designantur, qui, suis voluptatibus dediti, quasi semper a flumine ad ima detrahuntur? Qui enim contra voluptates hujus saeculi stare fortiter nolunt, glareae Cocyti fiunt qui suis quotidie lapsibus ad luctum tendunt, ut in aeternum post lugeant, qui modo se in suis voluptatibus delectabiliter relaxant. Et quia antiquus hostis suum vas illum reprobum hominem ingressus, dum dona perversis tribuit, dum eos in hoc mundo honoribus extollit, dum eorum oculis prodigia ostendit, fluxae mentes hunc in suis prodigiis admirantur et sequuntur, bene de eo dicitur: Dulcis fuit glareis Cocyti. Cum enim hunc electi despiciunt, cum mentis calce contemnunt, illi eum sequentes diligunt, qui velut ab aqua voluptatis ad perpetuum luctum trahuntur, qui per terrenam concupiscentiam more glareae quotidianis lapsibus ad ima dilabuntur. Aliis namque gustum suae dulcedinis per superbiam, aliis per avaritiam, aliis per invidiam, aliis per fallaciam, aliis per luxuriam porrigit; et ad quanta vitiorum genera pertrahit, quasi tot suae dulcedinis potus propinat. Nam cum aliquid superbum in mente persuadet, fit dulce quod dicit, quia videri praelatus caeteris homo perversus appetit. Dum menti avaritiam infundere molitur, fit dulce quod occulte loquitur, quia per abundantiam necessitas vitatur. Dum aliquid de invidia suggerit, fit dulce quod dicit, quia perversa mens dum alium deterescere viderit, exsultat se eo minorem minime videri. Cum aliquid de fallacia persuadet, fit dulce quod suggerit, quia eo ipso quo fallit caeteros, prudens videtur sibi. Cum luxuriam deceptae menti loquitur, fit dulce quod suadet, quia in voluptate animum resolvit. Quot ergo vitia carnalium cordibus inserit, quasi tot potus suae dulcedinis eis porrigit. Quam tamen, ut praedixi, ejus dulcedinem non percipiunt, nisi qui, praesentibus voluptatibus dediti, ad perpetuum luctum trahuntur. Bene ergo dicitur: Dulcis fuit glareis Cocyti, quia amarus electis, et suavis est reprobis. Illos enim solummodo suis delectationibus pascit, quos quotidianis lapsibus ad gemitum impellit. Sequitur: CAPUT. LXI. IBID. — Et post se omnem hominem trahit, et ante se innumerabiles. 72. Per Antichristum, urgente mundi fine, carnales omnes ad se trahet, nunc tantum plurimos. — Hoc loco homo humana sapiens dicitur. Sed cum plus sint omnes quam innumerabiles quaerendum est nobis cur ante se innumerabiles et post se omnes trahere dicatur, nisi quod antiquus hostis reprobum tunc hominem ingressus 500 cunctos quos carnales invenerit sub suae jugum ditionis rapit? Qui et nunc priusquam appareat innumerabiles quidem, non tamen omnes, carnales trahit, quia quotidie a carnali opere ad vitam multi revocantur, atque ad statum justitiae alii per brevem, alii vero per longam poenitentiam redeunt. Et nunc innumerabiles rapit, cum falsitatis suae stupenda hominibus signa non exhibet. Cum vero coram carnalium oculis miranda eis prodigia fecerit, post se tunc non innumerabiles, sed omnes trahit, quia qui bonis praesentibus delectantur potestati illius se absque retractatione subjiciunt. Sed, sicut praefati sumus, quia plus est omnem hominem quam innumerabiles trahere, cur prius dicitur quia omnem hominem trahit, et post in augmento innumerabiles subjiciuntur? Ratio namque expetit ut prius quod minus est et post in augmento quod plus est diceretur. Sed sciendum quia hoc loco plus fuit innumerabiles dixisse quam omnes. Post se enim omnem hominem trahit, quia in tribus annis et dimidio omnes quos in studiis vitae carnalis invenerit jugo suae dominationis astringit. Ante se vero innumerabiles traxit, quia per quinque millia et adhuc amplius annorum curricula, quamvis carnales omnes trahere minime potuit, multo tamen plures sunt in tam longo tempore hi quos ante se innumerabiles rapit, quam omnes quos in tam brevi tempore rapiendos invenerit. Bene ergo dicitur: Post se omnem hominem trahit, et ante se innumerabiles, quia et tunc minus tollit cum omnes tulerit, et nunc amplius diripit cum corda innumerabilium invadit. Haec beatus Job, quia contra iniquorum principem mire disseruit, qui in hac vita extolli permittitur, sed in adventu Domini destruetur, de se patenter ostendit quia flagella dominica non ex offensione susceperit, quoniam si iniquus quisque in hac vita permittitur prosperari, necesse est ut electus Dei debeat sub flagelli freno retineri. Ex qua re amicos arguit, dicens:

CAPUT LXII.

VERS. 54. — Quomodo igitur consolamini me frustra, cum responsio vestra repugnare ostensa sit veritati? 73. Sanctis quam odiosum mendacium. — Amici beati Job eum consolari non poterant, in quo suis sermonibus veritati contraibant. Cumque hunc hypocritam vel impium dicerent, per hoc quod ipsi mentientes perpetrabant culpam, augebant procul dubio poenam justi vulneribus afflicti. Nam sanctorum mentes, quia veritatem diligunt, etiam culpa fallaciae torquet alienae. Quanto enim grave mendacii esse crimen aspiciunt, tanto hoc non solum in se, sed etiam in aliis oderunt.

LIBER DECIMUS SEXTUS.

Decursis brevi explicatione libri Job capitibus XXII, XXIII et XXIV, usque ad medium versum 20 tertiam partem claudit.

501 Qui contra veritatis verba in allegatione deficiunt, saepe etiam nota replicant, ne tacendo victi videantur. Unde Eliphaz, beati Job sermonibus pressus, ea dicit quae nullus ignorat. Ait enim:

CAPUT PRIMUM.

CAP. XXII, VERS. 2. — Nunquid Deo comparari potest homo, etiam cum perfectae fuerit scientiae? 1. Scientia nostra divinae comparata, ignorantia est. — In comparatione enim Dei, scientia nostra ignorantia est. Ex Dei namque participatione sapimus, non comparatione. Quid ergo mirum cum illud quasi per doctrinam dicitur, quod sciri potuit etiamsi taceretur? Qui adhuc Dei potentiam quasi defendendo subjungit:

CAPUT II.

VERS. 3. — Quid prodest Deo, si justus fueris? aut quid ei confers, si immaculata fuerit vita tua? 2. Justitia nostra Deus non indiget. — In omni quippe quod bene agimus, nosmetipsos, non autem Deum juvamus. Unde et per Psalmistam dicitur: Dixi Domino: Deus meus es tu, quoniam bonorum meorum non indiges (Psal. XV, 2). Ipse enim vere nobis Dominus, quia et utique Deus est, qui bono non indiget servientis, sed bonitatem confert quam recipit, ut oblata bonitas non ipsi, sed prius accipientibus et post reddentibus prosit. Nam etsi in judicium Dominus veniens dicit: Quandiu fecistis uni de his fratribus meis minimis, mihi fecistis (Matth. XXV, 40), mira hoc pietate loquitur ex suorum compassione membrorum. Et ipse nos per hoc quod caput nostrum est adjuvat, qui per nostra bona opera in suis membris adjuvatur. Adhuc adjungit Eliphaz, quod nullus ignorat, dicens:

CAPUT III.

VERS. 4. — Nunquid timens arguet te, et veniet tecum ad judicium? 3. Otiose de Deo dicitur quod a nemine ignoratur. — Quis hoc vel desipiens sentiat, quod Dominus ex timore nos arguat, et ex metu judicium contra nos suum proponat? Sed qui verba sua metiri nesciunt, procul dubio ad otiosa dicta dilabuntur. In quibus si se minime reprehendunt, statim ad noxia et contumeliosa verba prosiliunt. Unde Eliphaz, qui otiosa intulit, ad contumeliosa protinus verba prorupit, dicens:

CAPUT IV.

VERS. 5. — Et non propter malitiam tuam plurimam, et infinitas iniquitates tuas? 4. A verbis otiosis ad contumeliosa venitur. — Ecce a torpenti corde ad verba venit otiosa, ab otiosis autem verbis per crimen fallaciae ad contumelias exarsit. Isti quippe sunt casus culpae crescentis, ut lingua cum non restringitur nequaquam ubi ceciderit jaceat, sed semper ad deteriora descendat. Ea vero quae subjuncta sunt, quia valde juxta historiam patent, exponenda ad litteram non sunt. 5. Sed quia amicos beati Job haereticorum speciem tenere diximus (Sup., in praef., et alibi saepissime), ipsum vero significationem sanctae Ecclesiae gerere, jam nunc Eliphaz verba quo modo haereticorum falsitati congruant, demonstremus. Nam sequitur:

CAPUT V.

502 Abstulisti enim pignus fratrum tuorum sine causa, et nudos spoliasti vestibus. Aquam lasso non dedisti, et esurienti subtraxisti panem. In fortitudine brachii tui possidebas terram, et potentissimus obtinebas eam.

TYPICUS SENSUS. 6. Haeretici suos errare et Spiritum sanctum amittere, dum ad Ecclesiam redeunt, mentiuntur. — In Scriptura sacra pignoris appellatione aliquando dona Spiritus sancti, aliquando vero signatur confessio peccati. Pignus namque accipitur donum Spiritus sancti, sicut per Paulum dicitur: Qui dedit nobis pignus Spiritus (II Cor. I). Ad hoc enim pignus accipimus, ut de promissione quae nobis fit certitudinem teneamus. Donum ergo sancti Spiritus pignus dicitur, quia per hoc nostra anima ad interioris spei certitudinem roboratur. Rursum pignoris nomine peccati confessio solet intelligi, sicut in Lege scriptum est: Cum debet tibi quidpiam frater tuus, et abstuleris pignus ab eo, ante solis occasum pignus restitue (Exod. XXII, 26). Frater etenim noster debitor nobis efficitur cum quilibet proximus in nos aliquid deliquisse monstratur. Peccata quippe debita vocamus. Unde peccanti servo dicitur: Omne debitum dimisi tibi (Matth. XVIII, 32). Et in Dominica oratione quotidie precamur: Dimitte nobis debita nostra, sicut et nos dimittimus debitoribus nostris (Matth. VI, 12). A debitore autem nostro pignus accipimus, quando ab eo qui in nos peccasse cognoscitur peccati ejus jam confessionem tenemus, per quam relaxare peccatum quod in nos perpetratum est postulamur. Qui enim peccatum quod commisit fatetur, et veniam petit, jam quasi pro debito pignus dedit. Quod nimirum pignus ante solis occasum reddere jubemur, quia priusquam in nobis per dolorem cordis sol justitiae occidat, debemus ei confessionem veniae reddere a quo confessionem accipimus culpae, ut qui se deliquisse in nos meminit a nobis mox relaxatum sentiat quod deliquit. Quia ergo sancta Ecclesia cum quoslibet ab haereticis ad veritatem fidei revertentes recipit, prius ut confiteri erroris sui culpam debeant persuadet, quasi sub haereticorum specie per Eliphaz dicitur: Abstulisti enim pignus fratrum tuorum sine causa. Id est, ab his qui a nobis ad te veniunt inutiliter confessionem erroris exegisti. Si vero, ut praediximus, pignus sancti Spiritus dona sentiamus, haeretici sanctam Ecclesiam fratrum suorum pignus dicunt abstulisse, quia eos qui ad illam veniunt dona spiritalia suspicantur amittere. Unde et sequitur: Et nudos spoliasti vestibus. Sed cum nudus exspoliari nequeat, quaerendum nobis est quomodo prius nudi, et post spoliati memorantur? 503 Sed sciendum est quia omnis qui cordis puritate perfruitur, eo ipso quo duplicitatis tegumentum non habet, nudus est. Et sunt nonnulli apud haereticos qui cordis quidem puritatem habent, sed tamen doctrinae eorum dogmata perversa suscipiunt. Hi nimirum et ex sua puritate nudi sunt, et quasi ex eorum praedicatione vestiuntur. Et quia tales quique facile ad sanctam Ecclesiam redeunt, eo quod duplicitatis malitia non utuntur, eos haeretici nudos fatentur, quos ab ea dicunt vestibus exspoliatos, quia simplices quosque pigros atque hebetes putant, quos prava sua dogmata perdidisse considerant. 8. Ecclesiam inscitiae arguunt, cum incognita loquuntur. — Sequitur: Aquam lasso non dedisti, et esurienti subtraxisti panem. Haeretici quo veritatis soliditatem non tenent, eo nonnunquam student ut loquaciores appareant, et contra catholicorum fidem quasi de doctrinae scientia gloriantur; cunctos quos aspiciunt pravis ad se trahere sermonibus quaerunt, et unde sibi alios ad interitum sociant, inde se agere aliquid vivaciter putant. Eos vero lassos dicimus qui sub hujus saeculi onere laborioso fatigantur. Unde et per semetipsam Veritas dicit: Venite ad me omnes, qui laboratis, et onerati estis, et ego reficiam vos (Matth. XI, 28). Haeretici igitur, quia sua dogmata praedicare non cessant, sanctam Ecclesiam quasi de imperitia irrident, dicentes: Aquam lasso non dedisti, et esurienti panem subtraxisti. Se enim aquam lasso dare existimant cum quibusdam sub terreno fasce laborantibus sui poculum erroris praebent. Et panem se esurientibus non subtraxisse suspicantur, quia etiam de invisibilibus atque incomprehensibilibus requisiti, cum superba audacia respondent. Et tunc se doctos prae omnibus credunt cum loqui de incognitis infelicius praesumunt. Sancta vero Ecclesia dum quempiam videt esurire quod ei non prosit accipere, aut si jam sunt sibi cognita, modeste supprimit, aut si adhuc videntur incognita, humiliter fatetur, eosque ad ordinatae humilitatis sensum revocat cum per suum illis praedicatorem dicit: Non plus sapere quam oportet sapere, sed sapere ad sobrietatem (Rom. XII, 3). Et rursum: Noli altum sapere, sed time (Rom. XI, 20). Atque iterum: Altiora te ne quaesieris, et fortiora te ne scrutatus fueris (Eccli. III, 22). Et rursum: Mel invenisti, comede quod sufficit tibi, ne forte satiatus evomas illud (Prov. XXV, 15). Mel quippe invenire est sancti intellectus dulcedinem degustare. Quod tunc sufficienter comeditur, quando nostra intelligentia juxta mensuram sensus sub moderamine tenetur. Nam satiatus mel emovit, qui plus appetens penetrare quam capit, et illud perdit unde potuit nutriri. Quia ergo sancta Ecclesia ab infirmis mentibus prohibet alta perscrutari, beato Job dicitur: Esurienti subtraxisti panem.. VERS. 12-14. — An cogitas quod Deus excelsior coelo sit, et super stellarum vertices sublimetur? Et dicis: Quid enim novit Deus? et quasi per caliginem judicat. Nubes latibulum ejus, nec nostra considerat, 505 et circa cardines coeli perambulat. 12. Immensitatis et providentiae divinae eximia descriptio. Deus sic intendit omnibus, ut adsit singulis. — Sunt plerique ita hebetes ut formidare nesciant nisi quod corporaliter vident. Unde fit ut Deum non metuant, quem videre non possunt. Haeretici autem, quia se esse sapientes arbitrantur, verba contra catholicos irrisionis proferunt, atque ab eis illum non timeri suspicantur, quem videre corporaliter nequeunt ut quasi per torporem sensus auctorem suum existiment, quia coelo excelsior est, et super stellarum vertices sublimatur, ex longinquo videre non posse; et quia inter nos et coelestem sedem partes aereae intersunt, quasi in nube latens per caliginem judicet, et superioribus intentus, minus ima perpendat; et dum coeli cardines ambiendo constringit, interiora non videat. Sed quis de Deo ista vel desipiens suspicetur, qui nimirum cum sit semper Omnipotens, sic intendit omnibus, ut adsit singulis; sic adest singulis, ut simul omnibus nunquam desit? Nam etsi quosdam peccantes deserit, eisdem tamen ipsis adest per judicium, quibus deesse cernitur per adjumentum. Sic itaque exteriora circumdat, ut interiora impleat; sic interiora implet ut exteriora circumdet; sic summa regit, ut ima non deserat; sic imis praesens est, ut a superioribus non recedat; sic latet in sua specie, ut tamen cognoscatur in operatione; sic cognoscitur in suo opere, ut tamen comprehendi non valeat a cognoscentis aestimatione; sic adest, ut videri nequeat; sic videri non valet, ut tamen ejus praesentiam ipsa sua judicia testentur; sic se nobis intelligendum praebet, ut tamen ipsum nobis radium sui intellectus obnubilet; et rursum sic caligine nos ignorantiae reprimit, ut tamen menti nostrae radiis suae claritatis intermicet: quatenus et sublevata quidpiam videat, et reverberata contremiscat; et quia eum, sicuti est, videre non potest, aliquatenus vivendo cognoscat. Sed haec haeretici sanctam Ecclesiam scire non aestimant, quia stulto judicio solos se esse sapientes putant. Ex quorum adhuc typo subjungitur:

CAPUT IX.

VERS. 15. — Nunquid semitam saeculorum custodire cupis, quam calcaverunt viri iniqui? 13. Christi semita humilitas mundi superbia. — Sicut semita Redemptoris nostri humilitas, ita semita saeculorum superbia est. Saeculorum itaque semitam viri iniqui calcant, quia per hujus vitae desideria in elatione perambulant. De quibus adhuc iniquis subditur:

CAPUT X.

VERS. 16. — Qui sublati sunt ante tempus suum et fluvius subvertit fundamentum eorum. 14. Iniqui semper ante tempus quod sibi praefixerunt nunquam ante constitutum a Deo moriuntur. — Cum tempus vitae a divina nobis praescientia sit procul dubio praefixum, quaerendum valde est qua ratione nunc dicitur quod iniqui ex praesenti saeculo ante tempus proprium subtrahantur. Omnipotens enim Deus etsi plerumque mutat sententiam, consilium nunquam. Eo ergo tempore ex hac vita quisque subtrahitur, quo ex divina potentia ante tempora praescitur. Sed sciendum quia creans et ordinans nos omnipotens Deus, juxta singulorum merita, disponit et terminos, ut vel malus ille breviter vivat, ne multis bene agentibus 506 noceat; vel bonus iste diutius in hac vita subsistat, ut multis boni operis adjutor existat; vel rursum malus longius differatur in vita ut prava adhuc opera augeat, ex quorum tentatione purgati justi verius vivant; vel bonus citius subtrahatur, ne si hic diu vixerit, ejus innocentiam malitia corrumpat. Sciendum tamen quia benignitas Dei est peccatoribus spatium poenitentiae largiri. Sed quia accepta tempora non ad fructum poenitentiae, sed ad usum iniquitatis vertunt, quod a divina misericordia mereri poterant amittunt. Quamvis omnipotens Deus illud tempus uniuscujusque ad mortem praesciat quo ejus vita terminatur, nec alio in tempore quisquam mori potuit, nisi ipso quo moritur. Nam si Ezechiae anni additi ad vitam quindecim memorantur (IV Reg. 20, 6), tempus quidem vitae crevit ab illo termino quo mori ipse merebatur. Nam divina dispositio ejus tempus tunc praescivit, quo hunc postmodum ex praesenti vita subtraxit. Cum ergo ita sit, quid est quod dicitur: Quia iniqui sublati sunt ante tempus suum, nisi quod omnes qui praesentem vitam diligunt longiora sibi ejusdem vitae spatia promittunt? Sed cum eos mors superveniens a praesenti vita subtrahit, eorum vitae spatia, quae sibi longiora quasi in cogitatione tendere consueverant, intercidit. De quibus recte dicitur:. VERS. 18. — Cum ille implesset domos eorum bonis. 17. Deus etiam malos beneficiis cumulat. Quo consilio. — Malorum domos Dominus bonis implet, quia etiam ingratis sua dona non denegat, ut aut benignitatem conditoris erubescant, et ad bonitatem redeant; aut redire omnimodo contemnentes, inde illic gravius puniantur, unde hic et bonis Dei largioribus mala reddiderunt, ut duriora eos tunc supplicia puniant, quorum hic malitiam nec dona vicerunt. Sequitur: IBID. — Quorum sententia procul sit a me. Aliud sententia, aliud consilium. — Hoc etiam per beatum Job dictum est. Ait namque: Quorum consilium longe sit a me (Job. XXI, 16), quamvis aliud sententia, atque aliud consilium possit intelligi. Sententia quippe in ore est, consilium in cogitatione. Dum ergo Eliphaz longe se a malorum sententia, beatus vero Job a consilio optavit, constat nimirum quia iste malorum verbis, ille vero etiam cogitationi desiderat esse dissimilis. Sequitur:

CAPUT XIII VERS.

19. — Videbunt justi, et laetabuntur, et innocens subsannabit eos. 18. Justi de iniquorum peccatis nunc tabescunt, de eorum interitu quandoque laetaturi. — Justi cum hic injustos errare conspiciunt, de errore pereuntium laetari non possunt. Si enim gaudent erroribus, justi non sunt. Rursum si per insultationem laetantur eo quod tales non sunt quales alios esse conspiciunt, omnino superbi sunt. Unde et pharisaeus justificationem perdidit, quia publicani meritis gaudendo se praetulit, dicens: Gratias ago tibi, quia non sum sicut caeteri homines, raptores, injusti, adulteri, velut etiam hic publicanus (Luc. XVIII, 11). Rursum si dicimus quod perfecto gaudio exsultare justi possunt de morte pravorum, quale est in hoc mundo gaudium de ultione peccantium, in quo adhuc incerta est vita justorum? Discernamus igitur tempora tremoris et exsultationis. Vident etenim nunc injustos justi, et de eorum nequitia tabescunt. Cumque eos feriri conspiciunt, de sua quoque vita suspecti fiunt. Quando ergo videbunt justi iniquorum interitum, et laetabuntur, nisi cum districto judici perfecta jam securitate exsultationis inhaeserint, cum in illo extremo examine illorum damnationem conspicient, et de se jam quod metuant non habebunt? Nunc itaque reprobos aspiciunt et gemunt, tunc aspicient et subsannabunt, quia eos exsultando despicient, quos modo nec sine gemitu iniqua perpetrantes, nec sine metu vident pro iniquitate morientes. Unde per hoc quod subditur, quia de damnatione eorum ultima dicatur ostenditur; nam protinus subinfertur:

CAPUT XIV.

508 VERS. 20. Nonne succisa est erectio eorum et reliqua eorum devoravit ignis? 19. Mali nunc florent, aliquando succidendi, et tam in carne quam in anima puniendi. — Hic namque iniqui erecti sunt, quia in pravis actionibus extolluntur, quia et perverse agunt, et tamen pro perversis actibus minime feriuntur. Peccant et florent peccata augent et terrena bona multiplicant. Sed eorum erectio tunc succiditur, cum vel a praesenti vita ad interitum, vel a conspectu aeterni judicis ad aeternum gehennae incendium pertrahuntur. Qui etsi hic mortuam suam carnem relinquunt, ipsam quoque in resurrectione recipiunt, ut cum carne ardeant, in qua peccaverunt. Sicut enim eorum culpa in mente fuit et corpore, ita eorum poena in anima erit pariter et carne. Quia ergo nec hoc eis erit a tormento liberum, quod hic mortuum relinquunt, recte nunc dicitur: Reliquias eorum devoravit ignis. Sequitur:

CAPUT XV.

VERS. 21, 22. — Acquiesce igitur ei, et habeto pacem, et per haec habebis fructus optimos. Suscipe ex ore illius legem, et pone sermones ejus in corde suo. 20. Haereticorum superbia et praesumptio. — Culpa superbiae est docere meliorem, quam saepe haeretici perpetrant, qui de his quae prave sentiunt quasi docere catholicos praesumunt. Tunc enim eos putant Deo acquiescere, si illos contigerit eorum perversitatibus consentire. Et acquiescentibus pacem promittunt, quia contra eos qui sibi consentiunt jam jurgari desistunt. Fructus autem optimos sibi consentientibus pollicentur, quia eos solos bona opera agere existimant, quos ad sua dogmata se trahere exsultant. Quibus et hoc congruit, quod adjungit: Suscipe ex ore illius legem. Quia ea quae ipsi sentiunt ex ore Dei procedere suspicantur: Et pone sermones ejus in corde tuo. Ac si aperte astruat, dicens: Quos nunc usque in ore, et non in corde tenuisti. Quia enim eorum perversa dogmata respuit, non eum verba Dei in sensu, sed in ostensione habuisse criminantur. Unde quasi sub quadam specie dulcedinis infundunt virus pestiferae persuasionis, ut verba Dei Ecclesiam in corde suo ponere admoneant. Quae si unquam a corde illius recessissent, ab illis talia nullatenus audiret. Sequitur:

CAPUT XVI.

VERS. 23. — Si reversus fueris ad Omnipotentem, aedificaberis, et longe facies iniquitatem a tabernaculo tuo. 21. Quid ad Deum post peccata revertitur, in cogitatione et opere munducatur. — Fidelem populum haeretici a Deo discessisse existimant, quia eum suis praedicationibus resistentem vident. Quem cum malis praesentibus afflictum conspiciunt, quasi per admonitionem ad conditoris gratiam trahere conantur, dicentes: Si reversus fueris ad Omnipotentem, aedificaberis. Ac si aperte dicant: Quia nostris dogmatibus resistendo a Domino recessisti, idcirco a justitiae aedificatione destructus es. Tabernaculum vero aliquando accipimus habitaculum corporis, aliquando vero habitaculum cordis. Nam sicut anima habitamus in corpore, ita per cogitationes habitamus in mente. Iniquitas ergo in tabernaculo mentis, est perversa intentio in studio cogitationis, iniquitas autem in tabernaculo corporis per expletionem operis actio carnalis. Eliphaz itaque quia amicus beati viri exstitit, quaedam vera sentiens, et tamen in his, in quibus a rectitudine deviat, haereticorum speciem tenens, beatum Job ex virtutibus flagellatum nesciens 509 errasse credidit, quem percussum vidit, eique, si reversus ad Omnipotentem fuerit, pollicetur dicens: Longe facies iniquitatem a tabernaculo tuo, ac si patenter dicat: Quisquis ad Deum post errata revertitur, in cogitatione simul et in opere mundatur. Sequitur:

CAPUT XVII.

VERS. 24. — Dabit pro terra silicem, et pro silice torrentes aureos. 22. Infirmi, sanante Deo, fortes evadunt, et aliis doctrina praelucent. — Quid per terram nisi infirmitas actionis, quid per duritiam silicis, nisi fortitudo signatur? quid per torrentes aureos, nisi doctrinam intimae claritatis accipimus? Omnipotens autem Deus ad se conversis pro terra dat silicem, quia pro infirma actione fortitudinem tribuit robusti operis. Dat etiam pro silice torrentes aureos, quia pro robusto opere doctrinam multiplicat clarae praedicationis, ut peccator quisque conversus, et ex infirmo fortis existere valeat, et in sua fortitudine usque ad proferenda verba intimae claritatis exsurgat, quatenus in eo et infirmitas actionis, in qua velut solvitur, bene vivendi fortitudine solidetur; et rursus cum sensus ex vita trahitur, ex ipsa fortitudine torrentes aurei defluant, quia in ore bene viventium doctrinae claritas inundat. Sequitur:

CAPUT XVIII.

VERS. 25. Eritque Omnipotens contra hostes tuos, et argentum coacervabitur tibi. 23. Deus, fugatis hostibus, divini eloquii argento nos ditat. — Quos magis alios hostes patimur quam malignos spiritus, qui in nostris nos cogitationibus obsident, ut civitatem valeant nostrae mentis irrumpere, eamque sub sui jugo dominii captam tenere? Argenti autem nomine sacra eloquia designati testatur Psalmista, qui ait: Eloquia Domini eloquia casta, argentum igne examinatum terrae (Psal. XI, 7). Et saepe cum eloquiis sacris intendimus, malignorum spirituum insidias gravius toleramus, quia menti nostrae terrenarum cogitationum pulverem aspergunt, ut intentionis nostrae oculos a luce intimae visionis obscurent. Quod nimirum Psalmista pertulerat, cum dicebat: Declinate a me, maligni, et scrutabor mandata Dei mei (Psal. CXVIII, 115). Videlicet patenter insinuans quia mandata Dei perscrutari non poterat cum malignorum spirituum insidias in mente tolerabat. Quod etiam in Isaac opere sub Allophylorum pravitate cognoscimus designari, qui puteos quos Isaac foderat terrae congerie replebant (Genes. XXVI, 15). Hos enim nos nimirum puteos fodimus cum in Scripturae sacrae abditis sensibus alta penetramus. Quos tamen occulte replent Allophyli quando nobis ad alta tendentibus immundi spiritus terrenas cogitationes ingerunt, et quasi inventam divinae scientiae aquam tollunt. Sed quia nemo hos hostes sua virtute superat, per Eliphaz dicitur: Eritque Omnipotens contra hostes tuos, et argentum coacervabitur tibi. Ac si aperte diceretur: Dum malignos spiritus Dominus a te sua virtute repulerit, divini intus eloquii talentum lucidum excrescit. Sequitur:

CAPUT XIX.

VERS. 26. — Tunc super Omnipotentem deliciis afflues. 24. Deliciis affluunt qui multiplices in sacris Scripturis sensus discernere sciunt. — Super Omnipotentem deliciis affluere est in amore illius Scripturae sacrae epulis satiari. In cujus nimirum verbis tot delicias invenimus, quot ad profectum nostrum intelligentiae diversitates accipimus, ut modo nuda nos pascat historia, modo sub textu litterae velata medullitus nos reficiat moralis allegoria, modo ad altiora suspendat contemplatio, in praesentis vitae tenebris jam de lumine aeternitatis 510 intermicans. Et sciendum quod quisquis deliciis affluit in quadam sui remissione solvitur, atque a laboris studio quasi ex lassitudine relaxatur, quia nimirum anima cum internis deliciis abundare coeperit, terrenis jam operibus incubare minime consentit; sed amore conditoris capta, et sua captivitate jam libera, ad contemplandam ejus speciem deficiendo suspirat, et quasi lassescendo convalescit, quia dum sordida onera portare jam non valet, ad illum per quietem properat, quem intus amat. Hinc etiam in admiratione sponsae scriptum est: Quae est ista quae ascendit de deserto deliciis affluens (Cant. VIII, 5)? Quia nimirum sancta Ecclesia nisi verborum Dei deliciis afflueret, de deserto vitae praesentis ascendere ad superiora non posset. Deliciis ergo affluit, et ascendit, quia dum mysticis intelligentiis pascitur, ad superna quotidie contemplanda sublevatur. Hinc etiam Psalmista ait: Et nox illuminatio mea in deliciis meis (Psal. CXXXVIII, 11), quia dum per intellectum mysticum studiosa mens reficitur, jam in ea vitae praesentis obscuritas fulgore diei subsequentis illuminatur, ut etiam in hujus corruptionis caligine in intellectum illius vis futuri luminis erumpat, et verborum deliciis pasta praegustando discat quid de pabulo veritatis esuriat. Sequitur:

CAPUT XX.

IBID. — Et elevabis ad Deum faciem tuam. 25. Ad Deum faciem levare, est cor poenitentia mundatum ad divina investiganda attollere. — Ad Deum faciem levare, est cor ad sublimia investiganda attollere. Nam sicut per corporis faciem homini, ita per interiorem imaginem Deo noti atque conspicabiles sumus. Cum vero reatu culpae deprimimur, ad Deum levare cordis nostri faciem veremur. Dum enim nulla bonorum operum confidentia fulcitur, intueri summa mens trepidat, quia ipsa se conscientia accusat. Cum vero jam poenitentiae lamentis culpa diluitur, et sic perpetrata planguntur, ut plangenda minime perpetrentur, magna menti fiducia nascitur, et ad conspicienda supernae retributionis gaudia cordis nostri facies levatur. Sed haec Eliphaz recte diceret si infirmum moneret. Cum vero justum virum propter flagella despicit, quid aliud quam verba scientiae nesciens fundit? Quae nimirum dicta si ad haereticorum typum ducimus, ipsi falsis promissionibus ad Deum nos faciem levare pollicentur. Ac si fideli populo patenter dicant: Quandiu praedicationem nostram non sequeris, cor in infirmis premis. Quia vero Eliphaz beatum Job ad Deum reverti admonuit, a quo videlicet idem vir beatus nunquam recessit, adhuc pollicendo subjungit:

CAPUT XXI.

VERS. 27. — Rogabis eum, et exaudiet te. 26. Frustra Deum rogant qui ejus praecepta contemnunt. — Rogant quippe Dominum, sed exaudiri minime merentur, qui jubentis Domini praecepta contemnunt. Unde scriptum est: Qui declinat aurem suam ne audiat legem, oratio ejus erit exsecrabilis (Prov. XXVIII, 9). Quandiu ergo Eliphaz beatum Job non exaudiri credidit, hinc nimirum in suo opere errasse judicavit. Unde et adhuc subdit: IBID. — Et vota tua reddes. Qui vota vovit, sed haec prae infirmitate solvere non valet, ei ex peccati poena agitur ut volenti bonum posse subtrahatur. Cum vero in conspectu intimi judicis ea quae obsistit culpa detergitur, fit protinus ut votum possibilitas sequatur. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXII.

511 VERS. 28. — Decernes rem, et veniet tibi. 27. Falsa hominum de adversis et prosperis judicia. — Hoc esse proprium infirmantium judicium solet, ut tanto quempiam existiment justum, quanto hunc adipisci conspiciunt omne quod appetit. cum videlicet noverimus nonnunquam bona terrena justis subtrahi, quae largo munere tribuuntur injustis, quia et desperatis aegris medici quidquid poposcerint dari praecipiunt, et eis quos reduci posse ad salutem praevident quae appetunt dari contradicunt. Sed si dicta haec Eliphaz de donis spiritalibus intulit, sciendum quod res decernitur et venit cum virtus quae ex desiderio appetitur, largiente Deo, etiam effectu prosperatur. Unde et adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XXIII.

IBID. — Et in viis tuis splendebit lumen. 28. Mirus virtutis splendor. — In viis quippe justorum lumen splendere est per mira opera virtutum signa suae claritatis aspergere, ut quocunque per intentionem pergunt, ab intuentium cordibus peccati noctem excutiant, et exemplo sui operis in eis justitiae lumen fundant. Sed quantalibet sit justitia operis, apud internum judicem nulla est, si nanc elevat tumor mentis. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT XXIV.

VERS. 29. — Qui enim humiliatus fuerit, erit in gloria; et qui inclinaverit oculos suos, ipse salvabitur. 29. Humilitatis commendatio. — Quae nimirum sententia a Veritatis ore non discrepat dicentis: Omnis qui se exaltat, humiliabitur, et qui se humiliat, exaltabitur (Luc. XIV, 11). Unde et per Salomonem dicitur: Antequam conteratur, exaltatur cor hominis; et antequam glorietur, humiliatur (Prov. XVIII, 12). Recte autem dicitur: Qui inclinaverit oculos suos, ipse salvabitur, quia, quantum per membrorum ministerium deprehendi potest, prima superbiae ostensio esse in oculis solet. Hinc enim scriptum est: Et oculos superborum humiliabis (Psal. XVII, 28). Hinc de ipso superbientium capite dicitur: Omne sublime videt (Job XLI, 25). Hinc de illa quae ei per infidelitatem adhaesit scriptum est: Generatio cujus excelsi sunt oculi, et palpebrae ejus in altum subrectae (Prov. XXX, 13). Oculos ergo inclinare est nullum respiciendo despicere, sed se minorem atque imparem cunctis quos aspicit aestimare. Salvabitur itaque qui oculos inclinat, quia qui falsum superbiae verticem deserit, veritatis altitudinem ascendit. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXV.

VERS. 30. — Salvabitur innocens, salvabitur autem munditia manuum suarum. 30. Gratiae praevenientis necessitas, quam comitari et subsequi debet liberum arbitrium. — Quae scilicet sententia si de coelestis regni retributione promitur, veritate fulcitur, quia cum de Deo scriptum sit: Qui reddit unicuique secundum opera ejus (Rom. II, 6), illum in extremo examine justitia aeterni judicis salvat, quem hic ejus pietas ab immundis operibus liberat. Sin vero ad hoc salvari quisque hic munditia manuum suarum creditur, ut suis viribus innocens fiat, procul dubio erratur, 512 quia si superna gratia nocentem non praevenit, nunquam profecto inveniet quem remuneret innocentem. Unde veridica Moysis voce dicitur: Nullusque apud te per se innocens est (Exod. XXXIV, 7). Superna ergo pietas prius agit in nobis aliquid sine nobis, ut, subsequente quoque nostro libero arbitrio, bonum quod jam appetimus agat nobiscum, quod tamen per impensam gratiam in extremo judicio ita remunerat in nobis, ac si solis processisset ex nobis. Quia enim divina nos bonitas, ut innocentes faciat, praevenit, Paulus ait: Gratia autem Dei sum id quod sum (I Cor. XV, 10). Et quia eamdem gratiam nostrum liberum arbitrium sequitur, adjungit: Et gratia ejus in me vacua non fuit, sed abundantius illis omnibus laboravi. Qui dum se de se nihil esse conspiceret, ait: Non autem ego. Et tamen quia se esse aliquid cum gratia invenit, adjunxit: Sed gratia Dei mecum. Non enim diceret mecum si cum praeveniente gratia subsequens liberum arbitrium non haberet. Ut ergo se sine gratia nihil esse ostenderet, ait: Non ego. Ut vero se cum gratia operatum esse per liberum arbitrium demonstraret, adjunxit: Sed gratia Dei mecum. Munditia itaque manuum suarum innocens salvabitur, quia qui hic praevenitur dono ut innocens fiat, cum ad judicium ducitur, ex merito remuneratur. Quae cuncta Eliphaz, sicut praedictum est, etsi recte protulit, cui tamen proferret ignoravit, quia docere meliorem non debuit, sed audire. Quae tamen omnia per typum haereticorum promissionibus congruunt, qui cum fideles quosque in praesenti vita afflictos inveniunt, eos ex culpa perfidiae percussos arbitrantur, eisque si sua dogmata sequantur, salutem innocentiae per bonorum operum munditiam promittunt. Sed mens fidelium tanto eos altius despicit, quanto illos innocentiam non videt habere quam pollicentur. Unde bene per Salomonem dicitur: Frustra jactatur rete ante oculos pennatorum (Prov. I, 17). Pennati quippe sunt bonorum spiritus, qui dum ad altiora per spem veritatis evolant, apposita pravorum hominum deceptionis retiacula declinant. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXVI.

CAPUT XXIII, VERS.

1, 2. — Respondens autem Job dixit: Nunc quoque in amaritudine est sermo meus, et manus plagae meae aggravata est super gemitum meum. 31. Inordinata consolatio dolorem auget. — More suo beatus Job planioribus verbis inchoat, sed dicta sua alta mysterii prosecutione consummat. Mederi quippe dolor afflicti ex amicorum consolatione debuerat; sed quia consolatio ad blandimenta fallaciae erupit, afflicti dolor inhorruit. Quia, enim Eliphaz spondere converso meliora non timuit, quasi ex noxio medicamine vulnus crevit. Unde recte dicitur: Nunc quoque in amaritudine est sermo meus, et manus plagae meae aggravata est super gemitum meum, quia videlicet 513 inordinatae consolationis intentio percussionem quam minuere debuit multiplicavit. In quibus nimirum verbis per typum sanctae Ecclesiae etiam fidelium dolor exprimitur, qui eo amplius gemunt, quo malos blandiri conspiciunt, qui juxta Pauli vocem: Per dulces sermones et benedictiones seducunt corda innocentium (Rom. XVI, 18). 32.. VERS. 3. — Quis mihi tribuat ut cognoscam et inveniam illum, et veniam usque ad solium ejus? 33. Ardor electorum Dei conspectu frui cupientium. — Electus quisque nisi Deum cognovisset, utique non amaret. Sed aliud est cognoscere per fidem, atque aliud per speciem; aliud invenire per credulitatem, aliud per contemplationem. Ex qua re agitur ut electi omnes eum quem fide cognoverunt videre quoque per speciem anhelent. Cujus amore flagrantes aestuant, quia ejus dulcedinis suavitatem jam in ipsa suae fidei certitudine degustant. Quod bene ille in Gerasenorum regione sanatus a daemonibus designat, qui vult abire cum Jesu; sed ei a magistro salutis dicitur: Redi in domum tuam, et narra quanta tibi fecerit Deus (Luc. VIII, 39). Amanti enim adhuc dilatio imponitur, ut ex dilati amoris desiderio meritum retributionis augeatur. Fit ergo nobis omnipotens Deus dulcis in miraculis, et tamen in sua celsitudine manet occultus, ut et quiddam monstrando de se occulta nos inspiratione in suo amore succendat, et tamen abscondendo Majestatis suae gloriam amoris sui vim per aestum desiderii augeat. Nisi enim sanctus vir videre hunc in sua Majestate quaereret, non utique subinferret: Et veniam usque ad solium ejus [Vet. XIV]. Quid namque est solium Dei, nisi illi angelici spiritus 514 qui, Scriptura teste, throni vocati sunt? Qui ergo usque ad solium Dei venire vult, quid aliud quam interesse angelicis spiritibus concupiscit, ut nulla jam defectiva temporum momenta sustineat, sed ad permanentem gloriam in contemplatione aeternitatis exsurgat? 34. Electi occulta Dei judicia venerantur. — Quae tamen verba etiam in hac vita positis justis conveniunt. Nam cum contra votum suum atque desiderium quodlibet agi conspiciunt, ad occulta Dei judicia recurrunt, ut in eis videant quia inordinate intus non disponitur quod inordinatum foris currere videtur. Cum enim praesidentem angelicis spiritibus Creatorem omnium fidei oculis contemplantur, ad ejus nimirum solium veniunt. Et quia considerant quoniam is qui mire angelos regit injuste homines non disponit, profecto inveniunt causales rationes quam justae sint, dum ipsae causae extrinsecus videantur injustae; dumque id humiliter faciunt, semetipsos saepe in sua voluntate reprehendunt, sua in se nonnunquam vota dijudicant, dum meliora esse ea quae disponit conditor pensant. Unde bene adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XXVIII.

VERS. 4. — Ponam coram eo judicium, et os meum replebo increpationibus. 35. Ex occultorum Dei judiciorum consideratione ad poenitentiam accenduntur electi. — Coram Deo judicium ponere est intra secretum mentis per fidei contemplationem ad tremendum examen majestatis illius oculos nostrae considerationis aperire, quid peccator homo mereatur attendere, et occultus nunc et tacitus judex quam terribilis post appareat considerare. Ex qua re agitur ut ad cognitionem sui anima subtilius revocetur, et quo occultum judicem suum magis terribilem videt, eo de suis actibus formidolosius angustetur. Anxie trepidat, culpas suas lamentis insequitur, poenitendo increpat, qualem fuisse se meminit. Unde nunc quoque postquam dictum est: Ponam coram eo judicium, recte subjungitur: Os meum replebo increpationibus. Qui enim sibi in conspectu Dei judicium ponit, os suum increpationibus replet, quia dum subtile examen tremendi contra se judicis contemplatur, amarae se poenitentiae invectione persequitur. Saepe autem dum culpas nostras pensare negligimus, quae earum reprehensio in judicio sequatur ignoramus; dum vero eas poenitendo persequimur, quid nobis de eis judex in suo examine dicere possit invenimus. Unde adhuc apte subjungitur:

CAPUT XXIX.

VERS. 5. — Ut sciam verba quae mihi respondeat, et intelligam quid loquatur mihi. 36. Occulta Dei judicia, dum metuunt, evadunt electi. — Tunc enim culpas plangimus cum pensare coeperimus. Sed tunc subtilius pensamus, cum sollicitius plangimus, atque ex lamentis in corde nostro plenius nascitur quid peccantibus divina districtio minatur, quae erunt illa reproborum improperia, qui terror, quae implacabilis Majestatis aversio. Tanta enim tunc Dominus reprobis iratus dicet; quanta eos pati ex aequitate permiserit. Quae nimirum verba animadversionis illius justi, dum modo sollicite metuunt, evadunt. Sed quis in illo examine inveniri justus valeat, si secundum suae fortitudinis Majestatem vitam hominum 515 discutiat Deus? Apte ergo subjungitur:

CAPUT XXX.

VERS. 6. — Nolo multa fortitudine contendat mecum; nec magnitudinis suae mole me premat. 37. Dei fortitudinem formidantes, infirmitatem in assumpta humanitate desiderant. — Mens etenim quamlibet justi, si ab omnipotente Domino districte judicatur, mole magnitudinis premitur. In quibus nimirum verbis hoc quoque intelligendum est, quod sanctus vir, dum Dei fortitudinem devitat, quid ejus aliud quam infirmitatem desiderat? Et scriptum est: Quod infirmum est Dei, fortius est hominibus (I Cor. I, 25). Unde et protinus adjungit: VERS. 7. — Proponat aequitatem contra me, et perveniet ad victoriam judicium meum. Quis enim alius nisi Mediator Dei et hominum, homo Christus Jesus (I Tim. II, 5), aequitatis nomine designatur? de quo scriptum est: Qui factus est sapientia nobis a Deo et justitia (I Cor. I, 30). Quae scilicet justitia dum in hunc mundum contra vias peccatorum venit, antiquum hostem vincimus, a quo captivi tenebamur. Dicat ergo: Nolo multa fortitudine contendat mecum, nec magnitudinis suae mole me premat; proponat aequitatem contra me, et perveniet ad victoriam judicium meum. Id est, ad redarguendas vias meas incarnatum Filium mittat, et tunc insidiantem adversarium per absolutionis meae judicium victor excludam. Si enim in divinitatis fortitudine sic unigenitus Dei Filius invisibilis maneret, ut nil de nostra infirmitate susciperet, infirmus homo ad eum invenire accessum gratiae quando potuisset? Consideratum quippe pondus ejus magnitudinis opprimeret potius quam juvaret. Sed fortis super omnia apparuit infirmus inter omnia, ut dum nobis ex assumpta infirmitate congrueret, ad permanentem nos suam fortitudinem elevaret. In altitudine enim sua divinitas a nobis utpote parvulis apprehendi non potuerat, sed stravit se hominibus per humanitatem, et quasi in jacentem ascendimus; surrexit, et levati sumus. Unde hoc quoque mox subditur, per quod divinitas invisibilis atque incomprehensibilis demonstretur. Nam sequitur:

CAPUT XXXI.

VERS. 8, 9. — Si ad Orientem iero, non apparet; si ad Occidentem, non intelligam eum; si ad sinistram, quid agam? non apprehendam eum; si me vertam ad dexteram, non videbo illum. 38. Deus invisibilis et incomprehensibilis, non in parte sed ubique quaerendus. — Creator quippe omnium in parte non est, quia ubique est. Et tunc minus invenitur, quando is qui totus ubique est in parte quaeritur. Incircumscriptus namque spiritus omnia intra semetipsum habet, quae tamen et implendo circumdat, et circumdando implet, et sustinendo transcendit, et transcendendo sustinet. Bene autem postquam dictum est: Si ad Orientem iero, non apparet; si ad Occidentem, non intelligam eum; si ad sinistram quid agam? non apprehendam eum; si me vertam ad dexteram, non videbo illum; illico adjunxit: Ipse vero scit viam meam. Ac si aperte dicat: Videre non valeo videntem me, et eum qui me subtiliter intuetur intueri non possum; ut videlicet ostendat quia tanto cautius formidandus est, quanto conspicabilis non est. Qui enim ita nos aspicit, ut a nobis aspici nequeat, eo magis timendus est, quo cuncta videns minime videtur. Cum enim contra nos latere quempiam in insidiis credimus, eo illum amplius metuimus, quo minime videmus. 516 Cumque ejus insidias nequaquam deprehendimus ubi sunt, et ibi eas metuimus ubi non sunt. Creator autem noster, qui ubique totus est, et cernens cuncta non cernitur, tanto magis metuendus est, quanto invisibilis permanens, de nostris actibus quando et quid decernat ignoratur. Quae tamen verba intelligi et aliter possunt. Ad Orientem quippe imus, cum mentem in consideratione majestatis ejus attollimus. Sed non apparet, quia qualis in natura sua est a cogitatione mortali videri non praevalet. Si ad Occidentem non intelligam eum. [Vet. XVI.] Ad Occidentem imus cum sublevatum in Deo cordis oculum, sed ipsa immensitate luminis reverberatum, ad nosmetipsos reducimus, et lassati discimus valde super nos esse quod quaerebamus, nostramque mortalitatem considerantes, indignos nos adhuc esse deprehendimus qui immortalem videre valeamus. Si ad sinistram, quid agam non apprehendam eum. Ad sinistram ire est peccatorum delectationibus consentire. Et nimirum constat quia Deum apprehendere non valet qui adhuc in delectatione peccati per sinistram jacet.

Si me vertam ad dexteram, non videbo illum. In dexteram procul dubio vertitur qui de virtutibus elevatur. Sed Deum videre non valet qui privata laetitia de bonis actibus gaudet, quia in eo cordis oculum tumor elationis premit. Unde bene alias dicitur: Non declines ad dexteram, aut ad sinistram (Deut. XVII, 11). In quibus cunctis plerumque se anima discutit, nec tamen plene deprehendere semetipsam valet. Unde hic apte subditur:

CAPUT XXXII.

VERS. 10. — Ipse vero scit viam meam. 39. Deus justorum vias explorat eosque probat. — Ac si patenter dicat: Ego me et districte discutio, et perfecte me scire non possum; et tamen ille quem videre non valeo, videt subtiliter cuncta quae ago. Sequitur: Et probabit me quasi aurum quod per ignem transit. Aurum in fornace ad naturae suae claritatem proficit, dum sordes amittit. Quasi aurum ergo quod per ignem transit probantur animae justorum, quibus exustione tribulationis et subtrahuntur vitia et merita augentur. Nec elationis fuit quod sanctus vir in tribulatione se positum auro comparavit, quia qui Dei voce justus ante flagella dictus est, non idcirco tentari permissus est ut in eo vitia purgarentur, sed ut merita crescerent, aurum vero igne purgatur. Minus ergo de se aestimavit ipse quam erat, dum, tribulationi traditus, purgari se credidit, qui purgandum in se aliquid non habebat. 40. Justi quantumvis humiles, sua bona opera non ignorant. — Sciendum vero est quia quamvis de se humilia sentiat animus justorum, ea tamen quae agunt quam sint recta conspiciunt, sed de eorum rectitudine non praesumunt: Unde adhuc subditur: Vestigia ejus secutus est pes meus: viam ejus custodivi, et non declinavi ex ea. A mandatis labiorum ejus non recessi, et in sinu meo abscondi verba oris ejus. Sed in his omnibus an se esse aliquid existimet videamus. Sequitur: Ipse enim solus est [Rec. XVI]. Qua sententia subjuncta ostendit quia in tot bonis quae egerat nil esse se credidit. Sed haec ipsa superius verba repetentes, ut possumus perstringamus.

CAPUT XXXIII.

517. VERS. 11. — Vestigia ejus secutus est pes meus. 41. Dei longanimitas et pietas nobis unitandae. Exempla Christi sequenda. — Quasi quidam namque gressus Dei sunt, quas cernimus, operationes ejus, quibus bonus quisque malusque regitur, quibus justi injustique suis ordinibus disponuntur, quibus et subjectus quisque ad meliora quotidie ducitur, et adversus ad deteriora corruens toleratur. De quibus nimirum gressibus Propheta dicebat: Visi sunt gressus tui, Deus (Psal. LXVII, 25). Nos itaque cum virtutem longanimitatis atque pietatis ejus intuemur, et intuentes imitari contendimus, quid aliud quam gressuum ejus vestigia sequimur, quia extrema quaedam ejus operationis imitamur. Haec enim Patris sui vestigia Veritas admonebat imitari, cum diceret: Orate pro persequentibus et calumniantibus vos, ut sitis filii Patris vestri, qui in coelis est, qui solem suum oriri facit super malos et bonos (Matth. V, 45; Luc. VI, 28). Potest tamen beatus Job, qui certa fide jam dixerat: Scio quod Redemptor meus vivit, et in novissimo die de terra surrecturus sum (Job. XIX, 25), sic in futura operatione incarnandae sapientiae intendere, sicut nos ejusdem sapientiae jam praeterita opera per fidem videmus, quod Mediator Dei et hominum benignus ad tribuendum, humilis ad sustinendum, patiens ad exemplum praebendum fuerit. Cujus nimirum vitam dum beatus Job, superno spiritu repletus, sollicita intentione conspiceret, futuram mansuetudinis illius humilitatem praevidens, quasi ad exemplum sibi propositum recurrit, ut quidquid in hac vita ageret, ad imitationis illius vestigia ligaret, quatenus qui occultae dispositionis ejus sublimia videre non poterat, quasi in terra conspiciens, ad imitationem ejus vestigia teneret. De quibus ejus vestigiis per Petrum dicitur: Christus passus est pro nobis, vobis relinquens exemplum, ut sequamini vestigia ejus (I Petr. II, 21). De quo adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XXXIV.

IBID. — Viam ejus custodivi, et non declinavi ex ea. 42. Justorum sollicitudo est vias veritatis observare. — Custodit et non declinat, qui hoc ubi intendit operatur. Custodire quippe per intentionem, est non declinare per operationem. Haec namque est sollicitudo justorum, ut actus suos quotidie juxta vias veritatis examinent, et, ea sibi in regulam proponentes, a rectudinis earum tramite non declinent. Super semetipsos quippe quotidie ire contendunt, et quo in virtutum verticem provehuntur, cauta reprehensione dijudicant, quidquid de eis ex semetipsis remanet infra semetipsos, et totos se illo festinant trahere, ubi se inveniunt ex parte pervenisse. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXV.

VERS. 12. — A mandatis labiorum ejus non recessi. 43. Dei voluntatem in Scripturis scrutari, alia justorum sollicitudo. — Sicut bene obsequentes famuli dominorum suorum vultibus semper intenti sunt, ut ea quae praeceperint, festine audiant et implere contendant, sic justorum mentes per intentionem suam omnipotenti Domino assistunt, atque in scriptura ejus quasi os ejus intuentur, ut quia per eam Deus loquitur omne quod vult, tanto a voluntate ejus non discrepent, quanto eamdem voluntatem illius in ejus eloquio agnoscunt. Unde fit ut ejus verba non per eorum aures supervacue transeant, sed haec in suis cordibus figant. Unde hic subditur:

CAPUT XXXVI 518.

IBID. — Et in sinu meo abscondi verba oris ejus. 44. Verba Dei in sinu abscondere, alia justorum sollicitudo. — In sinu etenim cordis verba oris ejus abscondimus, quanto mandata illius non transitorie, sed implenda opere audimus. Hinc est quod de ipsa matre Virgine scriptum est: Maria autem conservabat omnia verba haec, conferens in corde suo (Luc. II, 19). Quae nimirum verba, et cum ad operationem prodeunt, in sinu cordis absconsa latent, si per hoc quod foris agitur intus agentis animus non elevatur. Nam cum conceptus sermo ad opus ducitur, si per hoc humana laus quaeritur, sermo Dei in sinu mentis procul dubio non occultatur. Sed nosse velim, beate vir, cur te tanta intentione examines, cur te tanta sollicitudine astringas? Sequitur:

CAPUT XXXVII.

. VERS. 13. — Ipse enim solus est, et nemo avertere potest cogitationem ejus. 45. Deus solus est, in cujus essentiae comparatione esse nostrum non esse est. — Nunquid non sunt angeli et homines, coelum et terra, aer et maria, cuncta volatilia, quadrupedia, atque repentia? Et certe scriptum est: Creavit ut essent. omnia (Genes. II, 3, seq.). Cum ergo in rerum natura tam multa sint, cur beati viri voce nunc dicitur: Ipse enim solus est. Sed aliud est esse, aliud principaliter esse; aliud mutabiliter, atque aliud immutabiliter esse. Sunt enim haec omnia, sed principaliter non sunt, quia in semetipsis minime subsistunt, et nisi gubernantis manu teneantur, esse nequaquam possunt. Cuncta namque in illo subsistunt; a quo creata sunt, nec ea quae vivunt sibimetipsis vitam tribuunt, neque ea quae moventur et non vivunt suis nutibus ad motum ducuntur, sed ille cuncta movet, qui quaedam vivificat, quaedam vero non vivificata in extremam essentiam mire ordinans servat. Cuncta quippe ex nihilo facta sunt, eorumque essentia rursum ad nihilum tenderet, nisi eam auctor omnium regiminis manu retineret Omnia itaque quae creata sunt, per se nec subsistere praevalent, nec moveri; sed in tantum subsistunt, in quantum ut esse debeant acceperunt; in tantum moventur, in quantum occulto instinctu disponuntur. Ecce enim peccator flagellandus est de rebus humanis: arescit in ejus laboribus terra, concutitur in ejus naufragiis mare, ignescit in ejus sudoribus aer, obtenebrescit contra eum inundationibus coelum, inardescunt in ejus oppressionibus homines, moventur in ejus adversitate et angelicae virtutes. Nunquidnam haec, quae inanimata vel quae viventia diximus, suis instinctionibus et non magis divinis impulsionibus agitantur? Quidquid est itaque quod exterius saevit, per hoc ille intuendus est, qui hoc interius disponit. In omni igitur causa solus ipse intuendus est, qui principaliter est. Qui etiam ad Moysen dicit: Ego sum qui sum. Sic dices filiis Israel: Qui est, misit me ad vos (Exod. III, 14). Cum itaque flagellamur per ea quae videmus, illum debemus sollicite metuere, quem non videmus. Vir itaque sanctus despiciat quidquid exterius terret, quidquid per essentiam suam, nisi regeretur, ad nihilum tenderet, et mentis oculo, suppressis omnibus, intueatur unum in cujus essentiae comparatione esse nostrum non esse est, et dicat: Ipse enim solus est. 519. IBID. — Et anima ejus quodcunque voluit, hoc fecit. 47. — Deo nec illa obsistunt quae contra voluntatem illius fieri videntur. — Cum sit cunctis corporibus exterior, cunctis mentibus interior Deus, ea ipsa vis ejus, qua omnia penetrat, cunctaque disponit, anima illius appellatur. Cujus videlicet voluntati nec illa obsistunt, quae contra voluntatem illius fieri videntur, quia ad hoc nonnunquam permittit fieri etiam quod non praecipit, ut per hoc illud certius impleatur quod jubet. Apostatae quippe angeli perversa voluntas est, sed tamen a Deo mirabiliter ordinatur, ut ipsae quoque ejus insidiae utilitati bonorum serviant, quos purgant dum tentant. Sic itaque ejus anima quodcunque voluit hoc fecit, ut inde quoque voluntatem suam impleat, unde voluntati illius repugnari videbatur. Terreatur ergo vir justus, et tantae majestatis pondus considerans, infirmum se esse deprehendat. 48. Sed inter verba haec percunctari libet, ac dicere: O beate Job, inter tot flagella positus cur adhuc adversa formidas? jam tribulationibus cingeris, jam innumeris afflictionibus angustaris. Malum timeri debet quod necdum susceptum est; tu in tanto positus dolore quid metuis? Sed ecce vir justus nostris inquisitionibus satisfaciens adjungit:

CAPUT XXXIX.

VERS. 14. — Cum expleverit in me voluntatem suam, et alia multa similia praesto sunt ei. 49. Ex his quae patimur, formidare discimus quae nondum passi sumus. — Ac si aperte dicat: Jam perpendo quae patior, sed adhuc formido quae pati possum. Explet enim in me voluntatem suam, quia multis me percussionibus affligit. Sed multa similia praesto sunt ei, quia si ferire cogitat, adhuc invenit ubi plaga crescat. Hinc itaque pensandum est quam pavidus ante flagellum fuit, qui etiam percussus adhuc metuit ne feriatur. Incomprehensibilem quippe vim ei inesse considerans et potestatis et examinis, esse vir justus noluit nec de flagello securus. Unde adhuc metuens adjungit:

CAPUT XL.

VERS. 15. — Et idcirco a facie ejus turbatus sum, et considerans eum, timore sollicitor. 50. Malis securitatem prae se ferentibus, justi semper timent. — Bene a facie Domini turbatur, qui terrorem majestatis illius cordis sui obtutibus proponit, et ejus rectitudinis pavore concutitur, dum 520 se reddendis rationibus conspicit idoneum non esse, si dictricte judicetur. Recte autem dicitur: Et considerans eum, timore sollicitor, quia divinae animadversionis vim cum minime quisque considerat, minime formidat; et tanto magis in hac vita quasi securus est, quanto a consideratione internae districtionis alienus. Semper etenim justi viri ad cordis secretarium redeunt vim occultae districtionis intuentur, majestatis intimae judicio assistunt, ut eo magis quandoque securi sint, quo hic quandiu viverent securi esse noluerunt. Nam malorum mentes cum renuunt considerare quod timeant, ad hoc quandoque gaudentes perveniunt quod timentes nullo modo evadant. Sed ecce de beato Job novimus quod crebris Dei sacrificiis deditus, quod hospitalitatibus, quod indigentiis pauperum impensus, quod suis etiam subditis humilis, quod sibi adversantibus benignus fuit, et tamen tot flagella suscepit nec jam securus exstitit inter flagella, sed adhuc metuit, adhuc divinae districtionis vim considerans contremiscit. Quid nos itaque miseri, quid peccatores dicimus, si sic timet, qui sic egit? Sed tanti timoris pondus an a semetipso habeat, innotestat. Sequitur:

CAPUT XLI.

VERS. 16. Deus mollivit cor meum, et Omnipotens conturbavit me. 51. Timor hic donum Dei est. — Ex divino munere cor justi moliri dicitur, quia superni judicii timore penetratur. Molle est enim quod penetrari potest, durum quod penetrari non potest. Unde per Salomonem dicitur: Beatus homo qui semper est pavidus, qui vero mentis est durae corruet in malum (Prov. XXVIII, 14). Virtutem ergo suae formidinis non sibi, sed auctori tribuit, qui ait: Deus mollivit cor meum, et Omnipotens conturbavit me. Non autem secura, sed perturbata sunt corda bonorum, quia dum futuri examinis pondus considerant, quietem hic habere non appetunt, securitatem suam districtionis intimae consideratione perturbant. Qui tamen inter ipsa timoris supplicia saepe animum revocant ad dona, et ut semetipsos consolatione refoveant, inter hoc quod metuunt reducunt oculum ad dona quae acceperunt, ut spes sublevet quem timor premit. Unde et sequitur:

CAPUT XLII.

VERS. 17. — Non enim perii propter imminentes tenebras, nec faciem meam operuit caligo. 52. Flagella justorum aut mala perpetrata purgant, aut futura devitant. — Ille enim in flagello positus a salute corporis propter imminentes tenebras perit, qui idcirco pro transactis percutitur, ut a futuris suppliciis abscondatur. Flagella quippe bonorum aut vitia perpetrata purgant, aut ea quae poterant perpetrari futura devitant. Beatus autem Job, quia in flagello positus, nec a peccatis praecedentibus purgabatur, nec ab imminentibus tegebatur, sed ejus tantummodo in flagello virtus augebatur, fiducialiter dicit: Non enim perii propter imminentes tenebras, nec faciem meam operuit caligo. Qui enim semper divinae formidinis pondus aspexit, ejus cordis faciem caligo peccati non operuit. Et is quem supplicia nulla sequebantur, salutem corporis propter imminentes tenebras non amisit. 53. A pravis cogitationibus nemo immunis. — Et notandum quod ipse priora denuntians nequaquam ait: Faciem meam non tetigit; sed: Non operuit caligo. Saepe enim etiam corda justorum 521 subortae cogitationes polluunt, terrenarum rerum delectationibus tangunt, sed dum citius manu sanctae discretionis abiguntur, festine agitur ne cordis faciem caligo operiat, quae hanc jam ex illicita delectatione tangebat. Nam saepe in ipso orationis sacrificio importunae se cogitationes ingerunt, quae hoc rapere vel maculare valeant, quod in nobis Deo flentes immolamus. Unde Abraham cum ad occasum solis sacrificium offerret, insistentes aves pertulit, quas studiose, ne oblatum sacrificium raperent, abegit (Genes. XV, 11). Sic nos cum in ara cordis holocaustum Deo offerimus, ab immundis hoc volucribus custodiamus, ne maligni spiritus et perversae cogitationes rapiant quod mens nostra offerre se Domino utiliter sperat. Sequitur:

CAPUT XLIII.

CAP. XXIV, VERS. 1. — Ab Omnipotente non sunt abscondita tempora; qui autem noverunt eum, ignorant dies illius. 54. Dies Dei ejus aeternitas. Deus est quod habet. — Quid dies Dei, nisi ipsa ejus aeternitas appellatur? quae nonnunquam unius diei pronuntiatione exprimitur, sicut scriptum est: Melior est dies una in atriis tuis super millia (Psal. LXXXIII, 11). Nonnunquam vero pro sua longitudine dierum multorum appellatione signatur, de quibus scriptum est: In saeculum saeculi anni tui (Psal. CI, 25). Nos itaque intra tempora volvimur, per hoc quod creatura sumus. Deus autem qui creator est omnium aeternitate sua tempora nostra comprehendit. Ait ergo: Ab Omnipotente non sunt abscondita tempora; qui autem noverunt eum, ignorant dies illius. Quia ipse quidem nostra comprehensibiliter conspicit, nos autem ea quae ejus sunt comprehendere nullatenus valemus. Sed natura Dei cum simplex sit, mirandum valde est, cur dicit: Qui noverunt eum, ignorant dies illius. Neque enim aliud ipse, atque aliud dies ejus sunt. Deus namque hoc est quod habet. Aeternitatem quippe habet, sed ipse est aeternitas. Lucem habet, sed lux sua ipse est. Claritatem habet, sed ipse est claritas sua. Non est ergo in eo aliud esse, et aliud habere. Quid est itaque dicere: Qui noverunt eum, ignorant dies illius, nisi quia et qui cognoscunt eum adhuc nesciunt? Nam et qui jam eum fide tenent, adhuc per speciem ignorant. Et cum ipse sibi sit aeternitas, quem veraciter credimus, qualiter tamen sit ipsa ejus aeternitas ignoramus. In hoc namque quod de divinae naturae potentia audimus, ea nonnunquam cogitare consuevimus quae per experientiam scimus. Omne enim quod coepit et desinit, initio et fine concluditur. Quod si mora aliquantula differtur ut finiatur, longum dicitur; in qua videlicet longinquitate cum quisque mentis oculos reducit retro per memoriam, tendit ante per exspectationem, quasi per spatium temporis dilatat in mente. Cumque audit aeternitatem Dei, humano more intendenti animo longa vitae spatia proponit, in quibus metiatur semper et quid abiit retro, quod retineatur in memoria, et quid ante restat, quod exspectetur ex intentione. 55. In aeternitate nihil praeteritum aut futurum. — Sed quoties in aeternitate ista cogitamus, aeternitatem necdum cognovimus. Ibi quippe est quod nec initio incipitur, nec fine terminatur, ubi neque exspectatur quod veniet, neque percurrit quod debeat recordari, sed est unum quod 522 semper esse est. Quod etsi nos et angeli cum initio esse videre incipimus, esse tamen hoc sine initio videmus, ubi sic semper sine fine esse est, ut nunquam se animus tendat ad sequentia, ac si multiplicentur quae sunt et longa fiant. Nam etsi per prophetiae spiritum dictum est: Domine, qui regnas in aeternum, et in saeculum, et adhuc (Fortasse, Exod. XV, 18, ubi legitur: Dominus regnabit in aeternum [Hebr., in saeculum] et ultra), more sacri eloquii, humano modo spiritus hominibus est locutus, ut ibi adhuc diceret, ubi exspectatio non inesset. Adhuc enim aeternitas non habet, quae semper esse habet, in qua nulla pars suae longitudinis praeterit, ut pars alia succedat, sed totum simul esse est, ut nil deesse videatur quod non cernat; in qua omne quod est animus videt et tardum non esse, et longum esse. Sed haec de aeternitatis diebus loquentes, conamur magis videre aliquid quam videmus. Dicatur igitur recte: Qui autem noverunt eum, ignorant dies illius, quia etsi jam Deum per fidem novimus, qualiter tamen sit ejus aeternitas, sine praeterito ante saecula, sine futuro post saecula, sine mora longa, sine praestolatione perpetua, non videmus. Beatus itaque Job sanctae Ecclesiae typum tenens, quia sub magno se scientiae freno moderatur, ne plus sapiat quam oportet sapere, et dies Dei non posse comprehendi testificans, ad haereticorum mox superbiam respectum mentis reducit, qui alta sapere appetunt, et quod capere utcunque non possunt perfecte se scire gloriantur. Nam sequitur:

CAPUT XLIV.

VERS. 2. — Alii terminos transtulerunt, diripuerunt greges, et paverunt eos.

56. Haeretici terminos a patribus constitutos transferunt. — Quos aliorum nomine nisi haereticos designat, qui a sanctae Ecclesiae gremio extranei existunt? Ipsi enim terminos transferunt, quia constitutiones patrum praevaricando transcendunt. De quibus nimirum constitutionibus scriptum est: Ne transgrediaris terminos antiquos, quos posuerunt patres tui (Prov. XXII, 28). Qui greges diripiunt et pascunt, quia imperitos quosque perversis ad se persuasionibus trahunt, et doctrinis pestiferis ad interficiendum nutriunt. Nam quod gregum nomine imperiti populi designentur, sponsi verba testantur, qui sponsam suam alloquitur dicens: Nisi cognoveris te, o pulchra inter mulieres, egredere, et abi post vestigia gregum (Cant. I, 7), id est nisi honorem tuum, quo ad similitudinem Dei es condita, bene vivendo cognoveris, a conspectu meae contemplationis egredere, et imperitorum vitam imitare populorum. Sequitur:

CAPUT XLV.

VERS. 3. — Asinum pupillorum abegerunt, et abstulerunt pro pignore bovem viduae. 57. Electi pupilli sunt. — Quos hoc loco pupillos accipimus, nisi electos Dei, in mentis teneritudine positos, qui magna fidei gratia nutriuntur, et patris sui jam pro se mortui faciem necdum vident? Et sunt plerique in Ecclesia qui quosdam conspiciunt coelestia appetere, terrena omnia despectui habere; et quamvis ipsi in hujus mundi laboribus insudent, eis tamen quos ad coelestia anhelare conspiciunt de rebus quas in hoc mundo possident hujus vitae adjutorium ferunt. Et quamvis ipsi agere spiritalia nequeant, ad summa tamen tendentibus libenter subsidia ministrant. Portare enim asinus 523 onera hominum solet. Quasi ergo quidam asinus electorum est, qui, terrenis actibus deserviens, deportat onera usibus hominum. Et saepe cum haeretici quemlibet talem a sanctae Ecclesiae gremio avertunt, quasi pupillorum asinum abigunt, quia cum hunc ad perfidiam suam pertrahunt, a ministerio bonorum repellunt. 58. Vidua est Ecclesia. — Quae autem vidua nisi sancta Ecclesia debet intelligi, quae occisi viri sui interim visione privata est? Bos autem hujus est viduae, unusquisque praedicator. Et saepe contingit ut haeretici perversis suis dogmatibus ipsos etiam qui praedicatores videbantur trahant. Bovem ergo viduae auferunt, cum de sancta Ecclesia etiam praedicantem tollunt. Ubi recte est adjunctum: Pro pignore. Pignus namque cum tollitur, aliud quidem est quod tenetur, sed tamen adhuc aliud quaeritur. Et plerumque haeretici ideo eos conantur auferre qui praedicant, ut eorum etiam sequaces trahant. Pro pignore ergo bos viduae tollitur, quando idcirco ipse qui praedicabat rapiatur, ut alii sequantur. Ex cujus ruina plerumque agitur ut hi quoque de sanctae Ecclesiae gremio exeant, qui in ea bonis moribus praediti mites atque humiles esse videbantur. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT XLVI.

VERS. 4. — Subverterunt pauperum viam, et oppresserunt pariter mansuetos terrae. 59. Pauperum nomine humiles intelligendi. — Paupertatis namque nomine saepe humilitas designari solet. Et nonnunquam hi qui mansueti atque humiles videntur, si servare discretionem nesciunt, exemplis aliorum cadunt. Sunt vero nonnulli haeretici qui populis admisceri fugiunt, sed recessum vitae secretioris petunt; qui plerumque eos quos inveniunt eo amplius peste suae persuasionis inficiunt, quo quasi ex vitae meritis reverentiores videntur. De quibus subditur:

CAPUT XLVII.

VERS. 5. — Alii quasi onagri in deserto egrediuntur ad opus suum. 60. Onagris similes sunt haeretici. Non Dei opus, sed suum peragunt. — Onager enim agrestis est asinus. Et recte hoc in loco onagris comparantur haeretici, quia, in suis voluptatibus dimissi, a vinculis sunt fidei et rationis alieni. Unde scriptum est: Onager assuetus in solitudine, in desiderio animae suae attraxit ventum amoris sui (Jerem. II, 24). Onager quippe in solitudine assuetus est, quia dum terram cordis sui disciplinae virtute non excolit, ibi habitat ubi fructus non est. Quia in desiderio animae suae ventum amoris sui attrahit, quia ea quae ex desiderio scientiae in mente concipit inflare praevalent, non aedificare. Contra quos dicitur: Scientia inflat, charitas vero aedificat (I Cor. VIII, 1). Unde hic quoque congrue infertur: Egrediuntur ad opus suum. Non enim Dei, sed suum opus peragunt, dum non recta dogmata, sed propria desideria sequuntur. Scriptum quippe est: Ambulans in via immaculata, hic mihi ministrabat (Psal. C, 6).

Qui ergo non in via immaculata ambulat, sibi magis quam Domino ministrat. Sequitur:

CAPUT XLVIII.

IBID. — Vigilantes ad praedam, praeparant panem liberis. 61. Haeretici ad praedam vigilant. — Ad praedam vigilant qui verba justorum ad sensum proprium semper rapere conantur, ut per haec perversis filiis panem erroris parent. De quo videlicet pane apud Salomonem verbis mulieris pravitatis haereticae typum gerentis dicitur: 524 Aquae furtivae dulciores sunt, et panis absconditus suavior (Prov. IX, 17). Sequitur:

CAPUT XLIX.

VERS. 6. — Agrum non suum demetunt, et vineam ejus quem vi oppresserint vindemiant. 62. Qui agrum non suum, et vineam alienam devastent haeretici. — Potest agri nomine Scripturae sacrae latitudo signari, quam haeretici non suam demetunt, quia ex ea sententias longe a suis sensibus diversas tollunt. Quae vineae quoque appellatione exprimitur, quia per veritatis sententias botros virtutum profert. Cujus vineae dominum, id est Scripturae sacrae conditorem, quasi vi opprimunt, quia ejus sensum in verba sacri eloquii inflectere violenter conantur, qui dicit: Servire me fecisti in peccatis tuis, praebuisti mihi laborem in iniquitatibus tuis (Isai. XLIII, 24). Et eamdem vineam vindemiant, quia ex ea sententiarum botros pro suae intelligentiae intentione coacervant. Potest agri vel vineae nomine universa Ecclesia designari, quam perversi praedicatores demetunt, et auctorem ejus in membris suis opprimendo vindemiant, quia Creatoris nostri gratiam persequentes, dum quosdam de illa qui recti videbantur rapiunt, quid aliud quam spicas vel botros animarum tollunt? De quibus adhuc subditur:

CAPUT L.

VERS. 7. — Nudos dimittunt homines, indumenta tollentes, quibus non est operimentum in frigore. 63. Bona opera destruendo, nudos dimittunt homines haeretici. — Sicut vestimenta corpus, sic bona opera protegunt animam. Unde cuidam dicitur: Beatus qui vigilat, et custodit vestimenta sua, ne nudus ambulet (Apoc. XVI, 15). Haeretici itaque cum in quorumdam mentibus bona opera destruunt, nimirum velamina indumentorum tollunt. Bene autem dicitur: Quibus non est operimentum in frigore. Operimentum quippe ad justitiam pertinet, frigus ad culpam. Et sunt nonnulli qui in quibusdam rebus peccata faciunt, in quibusdam vero recta opera sequuntur. Qui ergo ex aliis actibus delinquit, atque ex aliis justitiam peragit, quid iste nisi in frigore vestitur; alget, et tegitur; quia ex alio opere fervescit ad justitiam, ex alio frigescit ad culpam? Sed cum haeretici bona opera talibus subtrahunt, agunt ne in frigore habeant quo vestiantur. Recte ergo dicitur: Nudos dimittunt homines, indumenta tollentes, quibus non est operimentum in frigore, ut videlicet solum culpae frigus interimat quos calor alterius operis ex parte aliqua tegebat. Potest vero per frigus desiderium, per vestimentum operatio signari. Et sunt plerique qui adhuc perversis desideriis aestuant, sed, contra se spiritaliter decertantes, rectis sibi operibus repugnant, et bonis actibus tegunt hoc quod sinistrum sibi resultare per tentationem sentiunt. Hi itaque unde mala desiderant, inde algent; unde autem bona operantur, inde vestiti sunt. Cum vero haeretici perversis allegationibus rectae fidei opera subtrahunt, quid agunt, nisi ut hi qui adhuc desideriorum carnalium frigora sentiunt, sine bonorum actuum vestimento moriantur? Sequitur:

CAPUT LI.

VERS. 8. — Quos imbres montium rigant, et non habentes velamen amplexantur lapides. 64. Sanctorum Patrum sententiis tanquam fluentis rigamur. Sanctorum martyrum invocatio. — Imbres montium sunt verba doctorum. De quibus montibus voce sanctae Ecclesiae dicitur: Levavi oculos meos ad montes (Psal. CXX, 1). Hos itaque imbres montium rigant, quia sanctorum Patrum 525 fluenta satiant. Velamen autem, ut jam praediximus, boni operis tegmen accipimus, quo quisque tegitur, ut ante omnipotentis Dei oculos, pravitatis ejus foeditas operiatur. Unde scriptum est: Beati quorum remissae sunt iniquitates, et quorum tecta sunt peccata (Psal. XXXI, 1). Quos autem lapidum nomine nisi fortes intra sanctam Ecclesiam viros accipimus? quibus per primum pastorem dicitur: Et vos tanquam lapides vivi superaedificamini (I Pet. II, 5). Hi itaque qui de nullo suo opere confidunt, ad sanctorum martyrum protectionem currunt, atque ad sacra eorum corpora fletibus insistunt, promereri se veniam, eis intercedentibus, deprecantur. Quid ergo isti in hac humilitate faciunt, nisi quia bonae actionis velamen non habent, lapides amplexantur? Sequitur:

CAPUT LII.

VERS. 9. — Vim fecerunt depraedantes pupillos, et vulgus pauperum spoliaverunt. 65. Haeretici infirmos et indoctos, qua vi qua blandimentis aucupantur. — Cum prosperitatem vitae praesentis haeretici non habent, infirmis mentibus verbis blandioribus perversa persuadent. Si qua vero illis prosperitas temporis praesentis arriserit, etiam violenter trahere quos praevalent non desistunt. Pupillorum itaque nomine designantur hi qui adhuc sunt teneri intra sanctam Ecclesiam constituti, quorum vitam misericors pater moriendo servavit, qui ad bonam jam intentionem deducti sunt, sed adhuc in bonis actibus nulla virtute roborantur. Haeretici igitur depraedantes pupillos vim faciunt, quia contra infirmas fidelium mentes verborum et operum violentia grassantur. Vulgus autem pauperum est populus indoctus, qui si verae sapientiae divitias haberet, vestimentum suae fidei nequaquam amitteret. Quasi quidam quippe intra sanctam Ecclesiam senatores sunt, veri doctores, qui cum scientiam in corde multiplicant, veris apud se divitiis abundant. Sed haeretici vulgus pauperum spoliant, quia dum doctos non praevalent, indoctos quosque a valamine fidei praedicatione pestifera denudant. Sequitur:

CAPUT LIII.

VERS. 10. — Nudis et incedentibus absque vestitu, et esurientibus tulerunt spicas 66. Haeretici sanctorum Patrum doctrinam auferunt otiosis et incautis. — Quod ait nudis, hoc replicat, absque vestitu; sed aliud est nudum esse, aliud nudum incedere. Omnis enim qui nec bona nec mala operatur, nudus est et otiosus; qui autem mala agit, nudus incedit, quia sine velamine boni operis per iter pravitatis pergit. Sunt vero nonnulli qui, malum suae nequitiae cognoscentes, satiari pane justitiae festinant, percipere sacri eloquii dicta desiderant. Qui quoties Patrum sententias pro aedificandis mentibus in cogitatione versant, quasi de bona segete spicas portant. Haeretici igitur nudis et incedentibus absque vestitu et esurientibus spicas tollunt, quia sive quidam otiosi sint, et in nullis se bonis exerceant, seu per iter impudentiae absque velamine boni operis pergant, etiam si quando jam ad poenitentiam redire cupiunt, et pabulum verbi concupiscunt, eis esurientibus spicas tollunt, quia in eorum mente perniciosis persuasionibus Patrum sententias destruunt. Nec immerito spicas signare Patrum sententias dicimus, quia saepe dum per figurata eloquia proferuntur, 526 ab eis tegmen litterae quasi aristarum paleas subtrahimus, ut medulla spiritus reficiamur. Sequitur:

CAPUT LIV.

VERS. 11. — Inter acervos eorum meridiati sunt, qui calcatis torcularibus sitiunt. 67. Persecutionum quas fidelibus haeretici indicunt utilitas. Saeculi potentes adversus eos commovent. — Omnes qui sanctam Ecclesiam persequuntur, quid aliud quam torcular calcant? Quod divina agi dispositione permittitur, ut animarum botri in spiritale vinum defluant, quae, carne corruptibili exutae, ad regna coelestia velut in apothecam currant. Nam injusti dum justos deprimunt, quasi botros sub pedibus mittunt. Compressi autem botri ad superni convivii satietatem exuberant, qui prius quasi in hujus aeris libertate pendebant. Unde David propheta, sanctae Ecclesiae afflictionem conspiciens, psalmum pro torcularibus scribit (Psal. VIII, aut LXXXIII). Sed omnes qui vitam fidelium persequuntur, calcant et sitiunt, quia agendo crudelia, crudeliores fiunt, impietatis suae meritis caecati, eo ambiunt graviora facere, quo jam gravia fecerunt. Haeretici autem cum per se potestatem persecutionis non habent, hujus saeculi potentes commovent, eorumque mentes ad persequendum trahunt, et quibus valent persuasionibus accendunt. Quos cum crudelia agere contra catholicorum vitam conspiciunt, quasi in ipso solis fervore requiescunt. Bene ergo nunc dicitur: Inter acervos eorum meridiati sunt, qui calcatis torcularibus sitiunt, quia eorum se multitudini adjungunt, quos jam vident gravia agere, et adhuc sitire graviora. Quorum fervor dum eorum desideria satiat, in eorum actibus, quasi in meridie, quiescunt. Sequitur:

CAPUT LV.

VERS. 12. — De civitatibus fecerunt viros gemere. 68. Haeretici Ecclesiae unitatem solvere nituntur. — Quia civitates a conviventibus populis appellantur, non immerito civitatum nomine verae sunt fidei Ecclesiae designatae, quae in singulis mundi partibus positae unam catholicam faciunt, in qua fideles omnes de Deo recta sentientes concorditer vivunt. Hanc namque in Evangelio Dominus conviventium populorum etiam per locorum distinctionem concordiam designavit, cum satiaturus de quinque panibus populum, quinquagenos per turmas, vel centenos discumbere praecepit, ut videlicet turba fidelium escam suam et locis disjuncta et moribus conjuncta perciperet. Jubilaei quippe requies quinquagenarii numeri mysterio continetur, et quinquagenarius bis ducitur, ut ad centenarium perducatur. Quia ergo prius a malo quescitur opere, ut post anima plenius quiescat in cogitatione, alii quinquageni, alii autem centeni discumbunt, quoniam sunt nonnulli qui jam a pravis actibus habent requiem operis, et sunt nonnulli qui a perversis cogitationibus habent jam requiem mentis. Heretici igitur, quia, perversis saepe hujus mundi potentibus adhaerentes, bonorum socialem vitam atque concordiam persequuntur, recte nunc dicitur: De civitatibus fecerunt viros gemere. Quos recte beatus Job memorat viros, quia illos magis haeretici exstinguere ambiunt qui perfectis gressibus per viam Dei non fluxe et enerviter, sed viriliter currunt. Qui cum vulnus perfidiae ingeri in parvulorum fidelium mente conspiciunt, 527 semper ad clamorem et gemitus redeunt. Unde et recte dicitur:

CAPUT LVI.

IBID. — Et anima vulneratorum clamavit, et Deus inultum abire non patitur 69. Haereticorum scelera Deus inulta non relinquet. — Vulneratur quippe anima justorum cum fides turbatur infirmorum, quibus jam hoc ipsum clamare est de alieno lapsu tabescere. Sed Deus inultum abire non patitur, quia etsi justo ordine injustum aliquid fieri permittit, inultum tamen abire non sinit injustum quod fieri juste permisit, quia et per reproborum injustitiam quasdam, quas inesse considerat, culpas percutit electorum, et tamen aeterna justitia ferire non negligit injustitiam ferientium. Sequitur:

CAPUT LVII.

VERS. 13. — Ipsi fuerunt rebelles lumini. 70. Divinum lumen respuentium poena caecitas. — Plerumque perversi et cognoscunt recta quae sequi debeant, et tamen sequi despiciunt quae cognoscunt. Lumini ergo rebelles sunt, quia, sua desideria sequendo, bonum despiciunt quod noverunt. Qui ergo non per ignorantiam, sed per superbiam delinquunt, elationis suae scutum jaculis veritatis objiciunt, ne salubriter in corde feriantur. Ex qua videlicet eorum superbia agitur ut quia nolunt facere quae cognoscunt, nec cognoscant jam bona quae faciant, sed sua eos caecitas a veritatis lumine funditus excludat. Unde et apte subditur:

CAPUT LVIII IBID.

— Nescierunt vias ejus, nec reversi sunt per semitas illius. 71. Perversi ideo reprobo sensui traduntur, quia divino lumini rebelles fuerunt. — Qui enim prius sciendo rebelles sunt, postmodum caecantur ut nesciant, sicut de quibusdam dicitur: Quia cum cognovissent Deum, non sicut Deum glorificaverunt, aut gratias egerunt (Rom. I, 21). De quibus paulo post additur: Tradidit illos Deus in reprobum sensum, ut faciant ea quae non conveniunt (Ibid., 28). Quia enim glorificare noluerunt quem cognoverant, reprobo sensui traditi, ad hoc relicti sunt, ut nescirent jam pensare mala quae faciebant. Bene autem dicitur: Nescierunt vias ejus, nec reversi sunt per semitas illius. Angustior quippe est semita quam via. Qui autem bona manifestiora agere contemnunt, nequaquam ad subtiliora intelligenda perveniunt. Exspectavit autem omnipotens Deus, ut per ejus semitas pergerent; sed utinam per eas vel reverti voluissent, ut vitae itinera quae noluerunt per innocentiam saltem per poenitentiam tenerent! Qua in re quantae sint misericordiae viscera Dei omnipotentis ostenditur, qui eos quos a se discedentes aspicit, ut revertantur, quaerit. Unde post enumeratas culpas delinquentium Synagogam per vocem propheticam revocat, dicens:

Ergo saltem amodo voca me, pater meus, dux virginitatis meae tu es (Jerem. III, 4). Sequitur:

CAPUT LIX.

VERS. 14. — Mane primo consurgit homicida, interficit egenum et pauperem; per noctem vero erit quasi fur. 72. Perversi prosperitate vitae praesentis ad opprimendos justos abutuntur. — Cum homicida in nece proximorum per nocturnum maxime silentium soleat grassari, cur hoc in loco mane primo consurgere ad interficiendum egenum et pauperem dicitur, in nocte vero quasi fur esse perhibetur? Sed ipsis verbis litterae 528 dum sibi non congruunt, ad indaganda spiritus secreta revocamur. In Scriptura sacra mane aliquando adventus dominicae incarnationis, aliquando adventus jam terribilis et districti judicis, aliquando vero praesentis vitae prosperitas poni consuevit. Mane etenim adventus dominicae incarnationis exstitit, sicut propheta dicit: Venit mane et nox (Isai. XXI, 12), quia et novae lucis primordia in Redemptoris praesentia fulserunt, et tamen a persecutorum cordibus perfidiae suae tenebrae non sunt detersae. Rursum per mane adventus judicis designatur. Unde per Psalmistam dicitur: In matutinis interficiebam omnes peccatores terrae (Psal. C, 8). Sicut et electorum quoque personam exprimens, ait: Mane astabo tibi et videbo (Psal. V, 5). Rursum per mane, praesentis vitae prosperitas designatur, sicut per Salomonem dicitur: Vae tibi, terra, cujus rex est puer, et cujus principes mane comedunt (Eccl. X, 16). Quia enim mane primum diei tempus est, et vespere extremum, nequaquam reficiendi sumus de hujus vitae prosperitatae quae praevenit, sed de his quae in fine diei, id est in mundi termino sequuntur. Mane ergo comedunt, qui de hujus mundi prosperitatibus extolluntur, et dum praesentia vehementer curant, futura non cogitant. Omnis enim qui odit fratem suum, homicida est (I Joan. III. 15). Mane itaque primo consurgit homicida, quia in praesentis vitae gloria perversus quisque erigitur, et illorum vitam deprimit qui, dum sequentem gloriam sitiunt, quasi satiari in vespere exquirunt. Pravus etenim quisque, in hoc mundo dignitatem transitoriae potestatis arripiens, tanto se acrius ad peragenda mala dilatat, quanto per charitatis viscera nullum amat. Quoties enim cogitationibus contra bonos saevit, toties innocentium vitam interimit. 73. Mali homines adversitate pressi perversis consiliis latenter laedunt. — Qui si, disponente Deo, subito gloriam acceptae potestatis amiserit, locum mutat, sed mentem non mutat, quia ad hoc protinus dilabitur quod subinfertur: Per noctem vero erit quasi fur. [Vet. XXVIII.] In nocte quippe tribulationis atque dejectionis suae, etsi exerere crudelitatis manum non valet, eis tamen quos praevalere conspicit consilia perversitatis praebet; huc illucque discurrit, et quaeque potest in bonorum laesionem suggerit. Qui recte quasi fur dicitur, quia in ipsis suis perversis consiliis metuit ne deprehendatur. Qui ergo contra egenum et pauperem mane homicida est, per noctem quasi fur absconditur, quia perversus quisque, qui in prosperitate vitae praesentis humilium vitam deprimendo interimit, in adversitate atque dejectione positus, per iniqua consilia latenter laedit, atque id quod per se explere non valet, adhaerendo hujus mundi potentibus exercet. Sequitur.

CAPUT LX.

VERS. 15. — Oculus adulteri observat caliginem, dicens: Non me videbit oculus. 74. Verbum Dei adulterant haeretici. — Hoc etiam juxta litteram nil obstat intelligi, quia qui adulterium perpetrare desiderat tenebras exquirit. Sed quia contra haereticos sententia promitur, dignum est ut hoc quod dicitur 529 mystice sentiantur. Nam Paulus ait: Non enim sumus, sicut plurimi, adulterantes verbum Dei (II Cor. XVII, 2). Adulter quippe in carnali coitu non prolem, sed voluptatem quaerit. Et perversus quisque ac vanae gloriae serviens recte adulterare verbum Dei dicitur, quia per sacrum eloquium non Deo filios gignere, sed suam scientiam desiderat ostentare.

Quem enim libido gloriae ad loquendum trahit, voluptati magis quam generationi operam impendit. Ubi et apte subditur: Non me videbit oculus, quia adulterium quod in mente agitur valde est difficile ut ab humano visu penetretur. Quod perversa mens tanto securius perpetrat, quanto se ab hominibus videri non metuit, quos erubescat. Sciendum quoque est quia sicut is qui adulterium facit carnem alienae conjugis sibi illicite conjungit, ita omnes haeretici, cum fidelem animam in suum errorem rapiunt, quasi conjugem alienam tollunt, quia videlicet mens Deo spiritaliter inhaerens, et ei quasi in quodam amoris thalamo conjuncta, cum perversis persuasionibus ad pravitatem dogmatis perducitur, quasi aliena conjux a corruptore maculatur. Bene autem subditur:

CAPUT LXI.

IBID. — Et operiet vultum suum. 75. Haeretici adulterorum more vultum operiunt. — Idcirco faciem suam adulter operit, ne cognoscatur. Omnis autem qui sentiendo vel agendo nequiter vivit, vultum suum operit, quia ad hoc perversitate dogmatis vel operis tendit, ut ab omnipotente Deo in judicio recognosci non possit. Unde quibusdam in fine dicturus est: Nunquam novi vos; discedite a me, qui operamini iniquitatem (Matth. VII, 23). Quid autem vultus cordis humani est, nisi similitudo Dei? Quem videlicet vultum perversus operit, ut cognosci nequeat, cum vitam suam vel malis actibus, vel perfidiae errore confundit. Sed talis quisque cum prosperitate vitae praesentis justos fulciri conspicit, eis perversa suadere minime praesumit; si qua vero illos procella adversitatis invenerit, ad verba protinus pestiferae persuasionis erumpit. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT LXII.

VERS. 16. — Perfodiunt in tenebris domos, sicut in die condixerant sibi, et ignoraverunt lucem. 76. Haeretici in adversitatis nocte justorum

conscientiam perfodere tentant. — Quid namque hoc loco domorum nomine nisi conscientiae designantur, in quibus habitamus cum tractando quid agimus? Unde cuidam sanato dicitur: Vade in domum tuam ad tuos, et annuntia illis quanta tibi Dominus fecerit (Luc. VIII, 39), id est, a peccati jam vitio securus ad conscientiam revertere, et in vocem praedicationis excitare. Justi itaque cum in praesenti saeculo die prosperitatis clarescunt, eis errorum magistri perversa suadere metuunt. Sed consilia exquirunt, dejectionem prosperitatis eorum summopere praestolantur, ut in adversitatis tenebris eorum mentes suadendo perfodiant, quibus prospere viventibus perversa loqui minime audebant. Quos mox ut in adversitate viderint, exsurgunt, et non nisi ex peccati merito talia illos perpeti asserunt, quia solam praesentis vitae gloriam diligentes, flagellum damnationem credunt. In tenebris ergo domos perfodiunt, quia bonorum mentes ex ipsa eorum corrumpere adversitate moliuntur. Bene autem dicitur: Sicut in die condixerant sibi, quia cum justos conspicerent 530 prosperitatis luce claruisse, quoniam loqui non poterant, ad maligna solummodo contra eos consilia vacabant. Sive autem haeretici, sive perversi quilibet, cum justos in dejectione conspiciunt, gaudent; cum vero eos ad regendae potestatis viderint culmen erumpere, perturbantur, metuunt, afflictionibus tabescunt. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT LXIII.

VERS. 17. — Si subito apparuerit aurora, arbitrantur umbram mortis. 77. Iniqui ex justorum prosperitate turbantur. — Iniqui semper afflictionem fidelium exspectant, eosque in tribulatione videre desiderant. Et in tenebris domos perfodiunt, dum cor innocentium, sed tamen infirmorum, dejectionis tempore pessima collocutione corrumpunt. Sed plerumque contingit ut dum bonos quosque in dejectione conspiciunt, subito occulta dispensatione divina justus quispiam qui videbatur oppressus, aliqua saeculi potestate fulciatur, eique prosperitas vitae praesentis arrideat, quem prius adversitatis tenebrae premebant. Quam nimirum prosperitatem illius cum perversi conspiciunt, sicut dictum est, perturbantur. Mox enim ad corda sua redeunt, ante mentis oculos revocant quidquid se perverse egisse meminerunt, vindicari in se omne vitium formidant, et unde lucet ille qui potestatem suscipit, inde perversus quisque qui corrigi metuit in tristitia tenebrescit. Bene ergo dicitur: Si subito apparuerit aurora, arbitrantur umbram mortis. Aurora quippe mens justi est, quae, peccati sui tenebras deserens, ad lucem jam erumpit aeternitatis, sicut de sancta quoque Ecclesia dicitur: Quae est ista quae progreditur quasi aurora consurgens (Cant. VI, 9)? Quo igitur justus quisque justitiae luce irradians in praesenti vita honoribus sublimatur, eo ante perversorum oculos tenebrae mortis fiunt, quia qui perversa se egisse meminerunt corrigi pertimescunt. Semper namque desiderant in suis pravitatibus relaxari, incorrecti vivere, et de culpa gaudium habere. Quorum ipsa lethalis laetitia convenienter exprimitur, cum protinus subinfertur:

CAPUT LXIV.

IBID. — Et sic in tenebris quasi in luce ambulant. 78. Iniqui ita gaudent in nocte peccati, ac si eos lux justitiae circumfunderet. — Perversa etenim mente gaudent in facinoribus, per culpam suam quotidie ad supplicium trahuntur, et securi sunt. Unde et per Salomonem dicitur: Sunt impii qui ita securi sunt, quasi justorum facta habeant (Eccle. VIII, 14). De quibus rursum scriptum est: Qui laetantur cum male fecerint, et exsultant in rebus pessimis (Prov. II, 14). Sic itaque in tenebris quasi in luce ambulant, quia ita gaudent in nocte peccati, ac si eos lux justitiae circumfundat. Vel certe, quia tenebrae vitam praesentem non inconvenienter exprimunt, in qua alienae conscientiae non videntur; lux vero nostra patria aeterna est, in qua dum vultus aspicimus, corda in nobis nostra vicissim videmus; iniqui autem quia vitam praesentem ita diligunt, atque haec exsilii tempora complectuntur ac si jam in patria regnent; recte dicitur: Sic in tenebris quasi in luce ambulant, quia sic in praesenti caecitate laeti sunt, ac si jam aeternae patriae luce perfruantur. Sequitur:

CAPUT LXV.

VERS. 18. — Levis est super faciem aquae. 531 79. Iniqui ad omnem tentationis aut erroris ventum leves sunt. — A plurali numero ad singularem redit, quia plerumque unus mala inchoat, et imitando multi subsequuntur. Sed ejus principaliter culpa est qui perversis sequentibus exempla praebuit iniquitatis. Unde ad illum redit crebro sententia qui auctor exstitit in culpa. Aquae autem superficies huc illucque aura impellitur, et nulla stabilitate solidata passim movetur. Iniqui igitur mens plusquam aquae superficies levis est, quia quaelibet hanc aura tentationis attigerit, sine tarditate aliqua retractationis trahit. Si enim cor fluxum cujuslibet perversi cogitamus, quid aliud quam in vento positam aquae superficiem cernimus? Nunc namque illum aura impellit ire, nunc aura superbiae, nunc aura luxuriae, nunc aura invidiae, nunc aura fallaciae pertrahit. Super faciem ergo aquae levis est is quem quilibet erroris ventus cum venerit impellit. Unde bene quoque per Psalmistam dicitur: Deus meus, pone illos ut rotam, et sicut stipulam ante faciem venti (Psal. LXXXII, 14). Ut rota quippe ponuntur iniqui, quia, in circuitu laboris missi, dum ea quae ante sunt negligunt, et ea quae deserenda sunt sequuntur, ex posterioribus elevantur, et in anterioribus cadunt. Qui recte quoque stipulae ante faciem venti comparantur, quia, irruente aura tentationis, dum nulla subnixi sunt ratione gravitatis, elevantur ut corruant, et saepe eo se alicujus meriti existere aestimant, quo eos in alta flatus erroris portat. Sequitur:

CAPUT LXVI.

IBID. — Maledicta sit pars ejus in terra, nec ambulet per viam vinearum. 80. Iniqui, amissa fidei vel justitiae rectitudine, reatu maledictionis ligantur. — Quisquis in vita praesenti recta agit et adversa sustinet, laborare quidem in adversitate cernitur, sed ad benedictionem haereditatis perpetuae consummatur. Quisquis vero perversa agit, et tamen prospera recipit, seque a malis actibus nec donorum largitate compescit, prosperari quidem conspicitur, sed reatu perpetuae maledictionis ligatur. Unde recte nunc dicitur: Maledicta sit pars ejus in terra. Quia etsi ad tempus benedicitur, in reatu tamen maledictionis tenetur. De quo et apte subditur: Nec ambulet per viam vinearum. Via namque vinearum est rectitudo Ecclesiarum. Qua in re sive haereticum, sive carnalem quempiam nil obstat intelligi, quia via vinearum, id est rectitudo Ecclesiarum amittitur, dum vel fides recta, vel rectitudo justitiae non tenetur. Ille namque per viam vinearum ambulat, qui, sanctae universalis Ecclesiae praedicationem pensans, neque a fidei, neque a bonorum actuum rectitudine declinat. In via quippe vinearum ambulare est sanctae Ecclesiae Patres velut dependentes botros aspicere, quorum verbis dum intendit in labore itineris, amore debriatur aeternitatis. Sequitur:

CAPUT LXVII.

VERS. 19. — Ad nimium calorem transeat ab aquis nivium. 81. Sapere ad sobrietatem quam difficile. — Idcirco iniquitas frigori comparatur, quia peccantis mentem torpore constringit. Unde scriptum est: Sicut frigidam fecit cisterna aquam suam, sic frigidam fecit malitiam suam (Jerem. VI, 7). Quo contra charitas calor est, quia videlicet mentem accendit quam replet. De quo calore scriptum est: Abundabit iniquitas, refrigescet charitas multorum (Matth. XXIV, 12). Et sunt nonnulli qui, dum iniquitatum suarum frigora 532 declinant, ad veram fidem, vel ad sanctitatis habitum veniunt. Sed quia plus quam necesse est de suis sensibus praesumunt, saepe in fide, quam accipiunt, ea quae non capiunt perscrutari volunt, ut ratione magis in

Deo quam fide teneantur. Quia vero humana mens perscrutari non valet divina secreta, omne quod ratione perscrutari non possunt credere contemnunt, et per inquisitionem nimiam in errorem labuntur. Hi itaque cum necdum crederent, vel adhuc ad iniquitatis opera vacarent, aquae nivium fuerunt. Sed cum, carnalia facta deserentes, in fide ad quam perducti sunt, plus appetunt perscrutari quam capiunt, amplius profecto calent quam calere debuerunt. Bene ergo de hoc perverso quolibet prophetantis duntaxat sententia, non optantis dicitur: Ad nimium calorem transeat ab aquis nivium. Ac si aperte diceretur: Qui humiliter sub disciplinae vinculo non restringitur, ab infidelitate sua, vel perversi operis frigore, per immoderatam sapientiam in errorem labitur. Unde bene quoque egregius praedicator, discipulorum suorum cordibus hunc exquisitae sapientiae nimium calorem devitans, ait: Non plus sapere quam oportet sapere, sed sapere ad sobrietatem (Rom. XII, 3). Ne fortasse nimius calor interimeret quos prius aquae nivium, id est infidelitatis, vel torpentium actionum frigora morituros tenebant. Et quia valde difficile est ut is qui se sapientem aestimat mentem ad humilitatem reducat, et recta praedicantibus credat, sensumque suae perversitatis abjiciat, recte subjungitur:

CAPUT LXVIII.

IBID. — Et usque at inferos peccatum illius. 82. Peccatum quod hic non emendatur, irremissibile. — Peccatum quippe usque ad inferos ducitur, quod ante finem vitae praesentis per correctionem ad poenitentiam non emendatur. De quo videlicet peccato per Joannem dicitur: Est peccatum ad mortem, non pro illo dico ut roget quis (I Joan. V, 16). Peccatum namque ad mortem est peccatum usque ad mortem, quia scilicet peccatum quod hic non corrigitur, ejus venia frustra postulatur. De quo adhuc subditur VERS. 20. — Obliviscatur ejus misericordia. Omnipotentis Dei misericordia oblivisci ejus dicitur qui omnipotentis Dei justitiae fuerit oblitus, quia quisquis eum nunc justum non timet, postea invenire non valet misericordem. Quae nimirum sententia non solum ei intenditur qui verae fidei praedicamenta deserit, sed etiam ei qui in fide recta positus carnaliter vivit, quia ultio aeternae animadversionis non evaditur, utrum in fide an in opere peccetur. Nam etsi damnationis dispar est qualitas, culpae tamen quae nequaquam per poenitentiam tergitur nulla absolutionis suppetit facultas. Sequitur.

CAPUT LXIX VERS.

21. — Dulcedo illius vermis. 83. Carnales delectant curae saeculares, quibus tanquam vermibus roduntur. — Quisquis in hoc appetit mundo prosperari, caeteros excedere, rebus et honoribus tumere, huic nimirum cura saecularis in delectatione est, et quies in labore. Valde etenim fatigatur, si desit cura saeculi qua fatigetur. Quia autem naturae est vermium momentis singulis incessanter moveri, non immerito signatur nomine vermium inquietudo cogitationum. Perversae itaque mentis 533 dulcedo vermis est, quia inde delectabiliter pascitur, unde per inquietudinem incessanter agitatur. Potest quoque apertius vermis nomine caro designari. Unde et superius dicitur: Homo putredo, et filius hominis vermis (Job. XXV, 6). Luxuriosi igitur cujuslibet atque carnis voluptatibus dediti quanta sit caecitas demonstratur cum dicitur: Dulcedo illius vermis. Quid namque caro nisi putredo ac vermis est? Et quisquis carnalibus desideriis anhelat, quid aliud quam vermem amat? Quae enim sit carnis substantia, testantur sepulcra. Quis parentum, quis amicorum fidelium, quamlibet dilecti sui tangere carnem scaturientem vermibus potest? Caro itaque cum concupiscitur, pensetur quid sit exanimis, 534 et intelligitur quid amatur. Nil quippe sic ad edomandum desideriorum carnalium appetitum valet, quam ut unusquisque hoc quod vivum diligit, quale sit mortuum penset. Considerata etenim corruptione carnali, citius cognoscitur quia cum illicite caro concupiscitur, tabes desideratur. Bene ergo de luxuriosi mente dicitur:

Dulcedo illius vermis; quia is qui in desiderio carnalis corruptionis aestuat, ad fetorem putredinis anhelat. Haec sicut in hujus partis tertiae initio (Lib. XI, in exord.) promisisse me memini, sub brevitate transcurri: ut ea quae in hoc opere sequuntur, quia magna obscuritate implicata sunt.

LIBROS SEX LIBER DECIMUS SEPTIMUS.

Quae supersunt ca a versu 20 dimidiato, cum capitibus 25 et 26 integris exponit morali potissimum sensu.

CAPUT PRIMUM.

533 Sancti Doctoris scopus, historiam Job typice et ad mysticum sensum exponere. Quoties in sancti viri historia per novum volumen enodare mysterium typicae expositionis aggredimur, oportet ut ex ejusdem viri vel nomine, vel passione significationem mysticam principaliter proferamus, quatenus habitaculorum more, dum superscriptionem tituli in ipsa postis fronte praefigimus, quia cujus est domus agnoscitur, securius intretur. Crebro autem dixisse me memini quoniam beatus Job passiones Redemptoris nostri, ejusque corporis, id est sanctae Ecclesiae, et passione sua signavit et nomine. Job quippe in interpretatur dolens. Et quis alius in hoc dolente figuratur, nisi is de quo scriptum est: Vere languores nostros ipse tulit, et dolores nostros ipse portavit (Isai. LIII, 4)? De quo rursum dicitur: Livore ejus sanati sumus (Ibid., 5). Amici vero ejus haereticorum speciem tenent, qui, ut saepe jam diximus, Deum dum defendere nituntur, offendunt. Sanctus ergo vir per vulnera et verba sic loquatur sua, ut etiam nostra significet, et plerumque per prophetiae spiritum ventura narret, praesentia transcendat; nonnunquam vero sic de praesentibus disserat, ut de futuris 534 reticescat. Cognita itaque discretionis hujus custodia, cum immutatione vocis illius nostra quoque intelligentia alternet, ut tanto verius ejus sensibus congruat, quanto se et cum ejus vocibus immutat. Verbis itaque praecedentibus sanctus vir per disertas prudentiae arte sententias iniqui cujuslibet culpas protulit, et quam sit damnanda ejus actio expressit. De cujus poena mox subjicit, dicens:

CAPUT II [Rec. II].

VERS. 20. Non sit in recordatione, sed conteratur quasi lignum infructuosum. 2. Poena iniquorum est ex Dei memoria deleri.In recordationem enim conditoris non reducitur, quisquis usque ad finem vitae vitiis subjugatur. Nam si hunc superni respectus memoria tangeret, procul dubio ab iniquitate revocaret. Ejus quippe merita exigunt ut funditus ab auctoris recordatione deleatur. Sciendum vero est quod recordari Deus nequaquam proprie dicitur. Qui enim oblivisci non potest, quo pacto recordari potest? Sed quia eos nos quorum recordamur amplectimur, ab his autem quorum obliviscimur elongamur, humano usu et recordari Deus dicitur, cum dona tribuit, et oblivisci, cum in culpa derelinquit. Sed quia cuncta pensat, cuncta sine intermissionis alternatione 535 considerat; et recordatur bonorum, quorum tamen nunquam obliviscitur; et nullatenus recordatur malorum, quos tamen per judicium semper intuetur. Quasi enim redit ad bonorum memoriam, quam tamen nunquam deseruit; et quasi nequaquam malos respicit, quorum tamen facta considerat, sed super haec damnationis judicium in ultimis servat. Hinc enim scriptum est: Oculi Domini contemplantur bonos et malos (Prov. XV, 3). Hinc per Psalmistam dicitur: Vultus Domini super facientes mala, ut perdat de terra memoriam eorum (Psal. XXXIII, 17). Considerat igitur quos puniat, sed eosdem ipsos ante non vidit, quos nescit. Nam quibusdam in fine dicturus est: Nescio vos unde sitis; discedite a me omnes operarii iniquitatis (Matth. VII, 23; Luc. XIII, 27). Miro igitur modo pravorum vitam et intuetur, et obliviscitur, quia quos per districtionem sententiae judicat, quantum est ad memoriam misericordiae ignorat. 3. Qui tanquam infructuosum lignum conterentur.Qui quoniam in ejus recordationem non veniunt, quasi infructuosum lignum ex cujus judicio conteruntur. Terra quippe eos temporali sumptu aluit, praedicationis desuper pluvia infudit. Sed quia eorum vita nequaquam fructum boni operis protulit, iratus hanc agricola abscidit, ut juxta Veritatis sententiam locum non occupet quem tenere alius ad fructum valet (Luc. XIII, 7). De hoc infructuoso ligno per Joannem dicitur: Jam securis ad radicem arboris posita est. Omnis ergo arbor, quae non facit fructum bonum, excidetur, et in ignem mittetur (Matth. III, 10; Luc. III, 9). Hoc autem loco, ut aeterna reprobi supplicia designentur, nequaquam lignum dicitur abscidi, sed conteri, quia videlicet reprobos mors quidem carnis abscindit, sed poena subsequens conterit. Quasi enim hic inciditur, cum a praesenti vita separatur. Sed in gehenna conteritur, cum perpetua damnatione cruciatur. Vir autem sanctus, quia districtam perversi poenam protulit, protinus ad culpam recurrit, ut ex injustitiae immensitate edoceat quod tanta ejus damnatio non sit injusta. Sequitur:

CAPUT III [Rec. III].

VERS. 21. Pavit enim sterilem, et quae non parit, et viduae bene non fecit. 4. Iniquus carnem pascens sterilem, curam animae deserit. Quae hoc loco sterilis, nisi caro nominatur? Quae dum sola praesentia appetit, bonas gignere cogitationes nescit. Quae autem vidua, nisi anima nuncupatur? Quam quia sibi conditor conjungere voluit, ad thalamum uteri carnalis venit, Psalmista attestante, qui ait: Et ipse tanquam sponsus, procedens de thalamo suo (Psal. XVIII, 6). Quae recte vidua dicitur, quia ejus vir pro ea mortem pertulit, et nunc in coeli penetralibus ab ejus oculis occultus, quasi in parte alterius regionis vivit. [Vet. II.] Iniquus ergo sterllem pascit, et viduae benefacere negligit, quia carnis desideriis serviens, curam animae vitamque contemnit. Tota namque intentione omnique studio cogitat, quam sine ullis necessitatibus caro moritura subsistat, et curare animae vitam despicit, quae vel in morte vel in beatitudine procul dubio in perpetuum vivit. Recte autem cum diceretur: Pavit sterilem, protinus adjungitur: Et quae non parit. Quasdam namque ex sacra historia feminas novimus 536 steriles exstitisse, sed tamen in tempore extremo peperisse. Caro autem non solum sterilis, sed etiam quae non parit dicitur, quia suo sensu bonas cogitationes gignere nec in ultimis valet. A vigore enim jam proprio deficit, et tamen adhuc transitoria concupiscere non desistit, jamque a pristino robore lassata, pene ab ipso quem diligit mundo repellitur, et tamen adhuc annisu improbo obtinere temporalia conatur. Agere jam perversa non sufficit, sed tamen cogitare vel quae non agit nequaquam desistit. Recte ergo non solum sterilis, sed etiam non pariens dicitur, quae suo sensu, ut diximus, ad bonae cogitationis prolem, nec cum infirmata fuerit, fetatur. 5. Labores haereticorum steriles. Quod tamen intelligi etiam de haereticis praedicantibus potest. Unusquisque enim praedicator erroris, dum plebem extra unitatem Ecclesiae positam docet, profecto sterilem, et eam quae parere non valet, pascit, quia et ei usum sui laboris impendit, quae spiritales fructus nequaquam reddit. Bene autem viduae non facit, quia videlicet sanctae universali Ecclesiae, cujus vir adversa mortis pertulit, vivere ac deservire contemnit. Viduae enim benefacere est in ejus quae mortui viri sui amore conteritur consolatione laborare. Unde et Psalmistae voce haec eadem vidua, scilicet sancta Ecclesia queritur, dicens: Consolantem me quaesivi, et non inveni (Psal, LXVIII, 21). Tunc solum quippe consolantem invenit, cum ex ea morte quam vir ejus pertulit multos intra semetipsam surgere ad vitam cernit. Saepe autem praedicator erroris hujus mundi divitibus jungitur, qui pro eo quod terrenis occupationibus incubant, dictorum deprehendere astutias ignorant; et cum potentes esse exterius ambiunt, perversae praedicationis laqueo sine labore capiuntur. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT IV.

VERS. 22. Detraxit fortes in fortitudine sua. 6. In fortitudine quippe suae pravitatis fortes quosque detrahit, cum per sui erroris astutiam mundi hujus potentes rapit. Quos contra per Paulum dicitur: Infirma mundi elegit Deus, ut confunderet fortia (I Cor. I, 27). Fortitudo autem perversi praedicatoris est elata scientia locutionis, qua inflatus, caeteros despicit, atque in contemptu omnium quasi singulariter apud se peritus intumescit. Qui magna de se sentiens, sed vera de Domino ignorans, longe a fidei cognitione disjungitur, et tamen videri fidei praedicator conatur. Unde adhuc subditur:

CAPUT V [Vet. III].

IBID. Et cum steterit, non credet vitae suoe. 7. Omni peccator incredulitatis reus. Stat in hoc mundo perversus quisque praedicator, quousque terreno vivit in corpore. Sed vitae suae credere renuit, quia de Deo vera cognoscere contemnit. Vitae enim suae crederet, si de conditoris sui substantia recte sentiret. Haec itaque superius de quolibet iniquo prolata dicebamus, sed repente ad erroris praedicatorem intellectum vertimus. Unde sciendum est quia sic ad speciem ducimur, ut nequaquam tamen a genere funditus evellamur. Nam perversus quisque etiam si rectam fidem in sinu universalis Ecclesiae tenere videatur, stat, 537 et vitae suae non credit, quia recta quidem sunt quae per fidem de conditore intelligit, sed tamen fidei opera tenere contemnit; et incredulitatis redarguitur, quia ab eo quod se ostendit credere, vivendo reprobatur. Hinc enim per Joannem dicitur: Qui dicit se nosse Deum, et mandata ejus non custodit, mendax est (I Joan. II, 4). Hinc Paulus ait: Confitentur se nosse Deum, factis autem negant (Tit. I, 16). Hinc Jacobus dicit: Fides sine operibus mortua est (Jac. II, 20, 26). Sed inter haec conditor mira dispensatione consilii et culpas respicit, et vivendi tempora impendit, ut longiora temporalis vitae spatia aut converso fiant in adjutorium muneris, aut non converso ad augmentum damnationis. Unde adhuc subditur:

CAPUT VI [Rec. IV].

VERS. 23. Dedit ei Deus locum poenitentiae, et ille abutitur eo in superbia. 8. Misericordia peccatori impensa et neglecta, in poenam vertitur. Quisquis delinquit et vivit, idcirco hunc divina dispensatio in iniquitate tolerat, ut ab iniquitate compescat. Sed qui diutius toleratur, nec tamen ab iniquitate compescitur, munus quidem supernae patientiae percipit, sed reatus sui vinculis, ex ipso se munere arctius astringit. Nam quia accepta poenitentiae tempora divertit ad culpam, districtus in ultimis judex impensa argumenta misericordiae convertit ad poenam. Hinc namque per Paulum dicitur: An ignoras quia patientia Dei ad poenitentiam te adducit? Tu autem secundum duritiam tuam et cor impoenitens thesaurizas tibi iram in die irae et revelationis justi judicii Dei (Rom. II, 4, 5). Hinc Isaias ait: Puer centum annorum morietur, et peccator centum annorum maledictus erit (Isai. LXV, 20). Ac si aperte nos deterreat, dicens: Vita quidem pueri in longum trahitur, ut a factis puerilibus corrigatur; sed si a peccati perpetratione nec temporis longinquitate compescitur, haec ipsa vitae longinquitas, quam per misericordiam accepit, ei ad cumulum maledictionis crescit. Unde necesse est ut cum nos diutius exspectari conspicimus, ipsa praerogatae pietatis tempora quasi damnationis argumenta timeamus, ne ex clementia judicis crescat supplicium peccatoris; et unde quisque eripi a morte poterat, inde gravius ad mortem tendat. Quod idcirco plerumque agitur, quia nequaquam a praesentibus mentis oculus separatur. Considerare namque peccator Redemptoris vias negligit, et idcirco in suis itineribus sine cessatione veterascit. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT VII [Vet.

IV, Rec. V]. IBID. Oculi enim ejus sunt in viis illius. 9. Peccator viis Domini relictis, in suis, hoc est in vitiis delectatur. Vias enim suas peccator intuetur, quia sola cogitare, sola cernere nititur quae sibi ad commodum temporale suffragentur. Hinc etenim Paulus dicit: Omnes quae sua sunt quaerunt, non quae Jesu Christi (Philip. II, 21). Via namque elati, superbia; via raptoris, avaritia; via est lubrici, concupiscentia carnalis. In viis ergo suis iniquus quisque oculos deprimit, quia solis vitiis, ut per haec animo satisfaciat, intendit. Unde per Salomonem dicitur: Oculi stultorum in finibus terrae (Prov. XVII, 34), quia hoc solum tota cordis intentione conspiciunt, per quod ad finem terreni desiderii perducantur. Nequaquam vero suae considerationis obtutum in terra peccator figeret, si 538 ad sancta sui Redemptoris itinera mentis oculos levaret. Unde per Salomonem rursum dicitur: Oculi sapientis in capite ejus (Eccle. II, 14), quia videlicet sapiens quisque illum tota intentione considerat, cujus se membrum esse per fidem pensat. Has namque humanae conversationis vias videre contempserat, qui dicebat: In mandatis tuis me exercebo, et considerabo vias tuas (Psal. CXVIII, 15). Ac sic aperte spondeat, dicens: Quae mea sunt, jam videre refugio, quia per imitationis tuae viam pergere conversationis gressibus inardesco. Qui enim praesenti jam mundo contradicit, amoris excitatione continua Redemptoris sui vias cordis oculis objicit, ut mens prospera fugiat, ad adversa praeparetur; nihil quod demulcet appetat, nihil quod deterrere creditur pertimescat; moerorem gaudium deputet; praesentis vitae gaudia damna moeroris penset; abjectionis detrimenta non timeat, sed per haec manentis gloriae locum quaerat. Has etenim vias sequentium monstrabat oculis Veritas, cum dicebat: Si quis mihi ministrat, me sequatur (Joan. XII, 26). Ad has vias tumentia discipulorum corda revocabat, cum locum jam gloriae quaererent, sed ejusdem gloriae iter ignorarent, dicens: Potestis bibere calicem quem ego bibiturus sum (Matth. XX, 22)? Confessionis quippe illius celsitudinem a dextris sinistrisque quaesierant, sed quanta ad hanc esset itineris angustia non videbant. Unde et eorum mox oculis imitandus passionis calix objicitur, ut videlicet si ad sublimitatis gaudia tenderent, prius viam humilitatis invenirent. Quia igitur considerare peccator vias Dei negligit, sed solis in quibus carnaliter delectetur intendit, recte nunc dicitur: Oculi enim ejus sunt in viis illius. Sequitur:

CAPUT VIII.

VERS. 24. Elevati sunt ad modicum, et non subsistent. 10. Inani gloria elatus ad modicum cadit. Iniquorum gloria cum plerumque in annorum multitudinem tenditur, ab infirmorum mentibus esse longa et quasi stabilis aestimatur. Sed cum repentinus hanc finis intercipit, brevem procul dubio fuisse redarguit, quoniam finis determinans innotescit, quia quod praeterire potuit, modicum fuit. Elevantur ergo ad modicum, et minime subsistunt, quia eo ipso quo videri alti appetunt, a vera Dei essentia longe per elationem fiunt. Subsistere etenim nequeunt, quia ab aeternae essentiae soliditate dividuntur, atque hanc primam ruinam tolerant, quia per privatam gloriam in semetipsis cadunt. Hinc enim per Psalmistam dicitur: Dejecisti eos, cum allevarentur (Psal. LXXII, 18), quia eo intrinsecus corruunt, quo male extrinsecus surgunt. [Vet. V]. Hanc brevitatem gloriae temporalis aspiciens, iterum dicit: Vidi impium superexaltatum et elevatum sicut cedros Libani; transivi, et ecce non erat (Psal. XXXVI, 35). Hinc iterum ait: Pusillum adhuc, et non erit peccator (Ibid. 10). Hinc Jacobus dicit: Quae est enim vita vestra? vapor est ad modicum parens (Jac. IV, 15). Hinc propheta brevitatem gloriae carnalis pensans, denuntiat, dicens: Omnis caro fenum, et omnis gloria ejus sicut flos feni (Isai. XL, 6). Iniquorum quippe potentia feni flori comparatur, quia nimirum carnalis gloria dum nitet, cadit; dum apud se extollitur, repentino intercepta fine 539 terminatur. Sic namque aurarum flatu in altum stipula rapitur, sed casu concito ad ima revocatur. Sic ad nubila fumus attollitur, sed repente in nihilum tumescendo dissipatur. Sic ab infimis nebula densescendo se erigit; sed exortus hanc solis radius, ac si non fuerit, abstergit. Sic in herbarum superficie nocturni roris humor aspergitur, sed diurni luminis subito calore siccatur. Sic spumosae aquarum bullae inchoantibus pluviis excitatae, ab intimis certatim prodeunt; sed eo celerius diruptae depereunt, quo inflatae altius extenduntur. Cumque excrescunt ut appareant, crescendo peragunt ne subsistant. De iniquis igitur temporalis gloriae elatione tumentibus, sed tamen nulla in hac soliditate durantibus, dicatur recte: Elevati sunt ad modicum, et non subsistent. De quibus adhuc subditur:

CAPUT IX.

IBID. Et humiliabuntur sicut omnia, et auferentur. 11. Terra in essentia semper stabit, licet in imagine continuo transeat. Sic provectus esse contemplationis debet, ut ex paucis ad multa, ad omnia consideranda rapiatur, quatenus gradatim educta proficiat, et transitoria omnia dijudicans, ipsa comprehendendo pene incomprehensibiliter excrescat. Unde sanctus vir cum pravorum gloriam defectumque discuteret, ad cuncta protinus mentis oculum tetendit, dicens: Humiliabuntur sicut omnia, et auferentur. Omnia profecto terrena. Ac si aperte dicat: Stare ullo modo nequeunt, quia ipsa quoque fugiunt quibus innituntur; dumque temporalia diligunt, cum his ex temporis volubilitate percurrunt. Sed quaeri potest cum per Salomonem dicitur: Generatio praeterit, et generatio advenit, terra vero in aeternum stat (Eccle. I, 4), cur beatus Job omnia humiliari asserat et auferri? Quod tamen facile discutimus, si terra et coelum vel qualiter transeat, vel qualiter maneat distinguamus. Utraque namque haec per eam quam nunc habent imaginem transeunt, sed tamen per essentiam sine fine subsistunt. Hinc namque per Paulum dicitur: Praeterit enim figura hujus mundi (I Cor. VII. 31). Hinc per semetipsam Veritas dicit: Coelum et terra transibunt, verba autem mea non transibunt (Matth. XXIV, 35). Hinc ad Joannem angelica voce perhibetur: Erit coelum novum, et terra nova (Apac, XXI, 4). Quae quidem non alia condenda sunt, sed haec ipsa renovantur. Coelum igitur et terra et transit et erit quia et ab ea, quam nunc habet, specie per ignem tergitur, et tamen in sua semper natura servatur. Unde per Psalmistam dicitur: Mutabis ea, et mutabuntur (Psal. CI, 27). Quam quidem ultimam commutationem suam ipsis nobis nunc vicissitudinibus nuntiant, quibus nostris usibus indesinenter alternant. Nam terra a sua specie hiemali ariditate deficit, vernali humore viridescit. Coelum quotidie caligine noctis obducitur, et diurna claritate renovatur. Hinc ergo hinc fidelis quisque colligat et interire haec, et tamen per innovationem refici, quae constat nunc assidue velut ex defectu reparari [Vet. et Rec. VI]. Inter haec igitur vir sanctus cum pravorum cursum conspicit, quanta quandoque animadversione deficiant innotescit, dum protinus subdit:

CAPUT X.

IBID. Et sicut summitates spicarum conterentur. 12. Mali divites etsi ad opprimendos justos concordes, ab invicem cupiditatibus sejuncti sunt. Spicarum quippe summitates, aristae sunt. Aristae autem conjunctae in spica prodeunt, sed crescendo paulisper, a se hirsutae et rigidae disjunguntur. 540 Sic nimirum sic ad hujus mundi gloriam pravi divites surgunt. Naturae enim sibi communione conjuncti sunt, sed contra se vicissim crescendo dividuntur. Alius quippe alium despicit, et alter in alterum invidiae facibus ignescit. Qui ergo ex tumore mentis a charitatis unitate se separant, quasi aristarum more contra se rigidi stant. Quid ergo pravos hujus mundi divites dixerim, nisi aristas quasdam generis humani? Qui dum contra se superbiunt, sed bonorum vitam unanimiter affligunt, adversum se quidem divisi sunt, sed tamen concorditer grana deorsum premunt. 13. Reprobi aristarum more nunc eriguntur; electi ut grana latent. Nunc igitur aristae ad alta prosiliunt, grana latent, quia et reproborum potentia eminet, et electorum gloria non apparet. Illi se honorum fastibus ostendunt, isti in humilitate se deprimunt. Sed triturae tempus adveniet, quod et aristarum rigiditatem frangat, et solida grana non conterat. Tunc quippe superbia iniquorum comminuitur, tunc electorum vita quanta integritate fulgeat declaratur, quia cum injusti deficiunt, ex hac ipsa aristarum contritione agitur ut grana appareant quae latebant. Cumque aristae franguntur, granorum candor ostenditur, quia iniquis in supplicia aeterna cadentibus, sanctorum justitia quanta veritate candeat demonstratur. Unde recte quoque per Joannem dicitur: Cujus ventilabrum in manu sua est, et permundabit aream suam; et triticum quidem recondet in horreo suo, paleas autem comburet igni inexstinguibili (Matth. III, 12; Luc. III, 17). Beatus igitur Job pravorum elatio quanta animadversione frangatur aspiciat, eosque aristis pereuntibus comparans dicat: Sicut spicarum summitates conterentur, quia nimirum rigiditas superborum triturae ultimae fortitudine frangitur, quae nunc electorum vitam despiciens elevatur. Sequitur:

CAPUT XI.

[Rec. VII.] VERS. 25. Quod si non est ita, quis me arguere poterit esse mentitum, et ponere ante Deum verba mea? 14. Justi si delinquant, ab improbis minime corripiendi. Si ita non est ut loquitur, profecto de falsitate hunc omnes arguere possunt. Cur ergo dicitur: Si non ita est, quis me arguere poterit esse mentitum, dum scilicet noverimus quod fallacem cuilibet reprehendere licet? Sed si loquentis sensum subtili interrogatione discutimus, quam sint recta quae protulit citius invenimus. Justus namque etsi quid unquam delinquendo loquitur, dignum non est ut ab injustis et prave viventibus judicetur. Unde sanctus vir amicorum superbiam deprimens, non solum si ita est, verum etiam si ita non est ut protulit, nequaquam se reprehendi posse confidit, quia nimirum illi recte redarguere falsa possunt, qui falsa agere nesciunt. Nam correptionis ausum contra fallaciam perdunt, qui adhuc fallaciter vivunt. Ait ergo: Quod si ita non est, quis me poterit arguere esse mentitum? Ac si aperte dicat: Ita sunt cuncta ut protuli, quae tamen si ita non essent, a vobis redargui nequaquam possem, quia dum adhuc propriae succumbitis, alienam reprehendere fallaciam non valetis. 15. Judicia nostra coram supremo judice ponderanda. Ubi et apte subditur: Et ponere ante Deum verba mea. Quisquis enim dicta fallacia veraciter reprehendit, audita cogitans, atque haec ex regula veritatis pensans, verba ante Deum ponit: quia 541 apud se in conspectu veritatis examinat, quid foris contra fallaciam decernat. Ante Deum quippe verba ponere est considerato intimo judice, exteriora dicta pensare. Vir igitur sanctus ab amicis superbientibus verba sua ante Deum poni posse non aestimat. Ac si aperte dicat: Idcirco quae loquor ponere ante judicem non valetis, quia ejus vobis faciem peccantes absconditis. Quod tamen et ex typo sanctae Ecclesiae nil obstat intelligi, quae cum de infirmis suis ab haereticorum irrisione reprehenditur, ipsam irrisionis eorum astutiam dedignatur, quia tolerabilius Deo est ut in infirmitate quis atque ignorantia cum humilitate jaceat, quam cum elatione alta comprehendat. Sed quia sanctus vir multa contra eos protulit qui fugitiva potestate superbiunt, et ventosis honoribus intumescunt Baldad Suhites ex ejus correptione proficiens, apud quem vera sit potentia agnoscit, dicens:

CAPUT XII [Vet.

VII, Rec. VIII]. CAP. XXV, VERS. 2 Potestas et terror apud eum est, qui facit concordiam in sublimibus suis. 16. Deus solus potens et metuendus. Ac si aperte dicat: Solus corda mortalium veraciter terret, qui ex divinitatis suae potentia veraciter haec possidet. Humana enim potentia quem terrorem incutit, quae jure ejusdem potentiae quando careat nescit? Recte autem dicitur: Qui facit concordiam in sublimibus suis, quia multa sibimet inferius dissident, sed ad concordem supernorum plenitudinem currunt; et ex internae pacis causa agitur, ut saepe ea quae sunt exterius sine pace disponantur. Nam bonos omnipotens Deus ad meritum provehit, cum contra eorum vitam malos saevire permittit. Atque in concordia componuntur summa, dum confunduntur infima, quia inde in coelestibus electos suos angelorum choris sociat, unde in terrenis et infimis reproborum mores suis nutibus adversantes portat. 17. Qui angeli summe concordes inter se confligere dicantur. Sed inter haec libet inquirere si pax in sublimibus summa retinetur, quid est quod per angelum Danieli dicitur: Ego veni propter sermones tuos: princeps autem regni Persarum restitit mihi viginti et uno diebus; et ecce Michael, unus de principibus primis, venit in adjutorium mihi (Dan. X, 13). Et paulo post: Nunc revertar ut praelier adversum principem Persarum. Cum enim egrederer, apparuit princeps Graecorum adveniens (Ibid., 20). Quos itaque alios principes gentium, nisi angelos appellat, qui sibi resistere exeunti potuissent? Quae ergo esse pax in sublimibus potest, si inter ipsos quoque angelicos spiritus praeliandi certamen agitur, qui semper conspectui veritatis assistunt? Sed quia certa angelorum ministeria dispensandis singulis quibusque gentibus sunt praelata, cum subjectorum mores adversum se vicissim praepositorum spirituum opem merentur, ipsi qui praesunt spiritus contra se venire referuntur. Is namque angelus qui Danieli loquebatur captivis Israelitici populi in Perside constitutis praelatus agnoscitur. Michael autem eorum qui ex eadem plebe in Judaeae terra remanserant praepositus invenitur. Unde et ab hoc eodem angelo paulo post Danieli dicitur: Nemo est adjutor meus in omnibus his, nisi Michael princeps vester (Ibid. 21). De quo et hoc, quod praemisimus, dicit: Et ecce Michael unus de principibus primis venit in adjutorium mihi (Ibid., 13). Qui dum nequaquam simul esse, sed venire in adjutorium dicitur, 542 aperte ei populo praelatus agnoscitur, qui captivus in alia parte tenebatur. Quid est ergo angelum dicere: Ego veni propter sermones tuos, princeps autem regni Persarum restitit mihi (Ibid., 13), nisi sua subditis opera nuntiare? Ac si aperte dicat: Precum quidem tuarum merita exigunt ut Israeliticus populus a jugo suae captivitatis exuatur, sed est adhuc quod in eodem populo Persarum dominio purgari debeat, ut de ereptione illius Persarum princeps mihi jure contradicat, quamvis preces tuas eorum quoque lacrymae qui in Judaea relicti sunt adjuvent. Unde hoc quoque quod diximus subjungit: Michael princeps vester venit in adjutorium mihi. Cumque ut adversus principem Persarum praelietur egreditur, Graecorum sibi princeps adveniens apparet. Qua ex re innuitur quod adversum Graecos quoque aliquid Judaea commiserat, quorum profecto causa ereptioni illius resistebat. Prophetae igitur preces angelus exaudit, sed Persarum princeps resistit, quia etsi jam vita justi deprecantis ereptionem populi exigit, ejusdem tamen populi adhuc vita contradicit, ut quia necdum hi qui in captivitatem fuerant ducti plene purgati sunt, jure eis adhuc Persae dominentur. Michael adjuvat, sed Graecorum princeps ad praelium venit, quia mereri quidem veniam tam longa oppressorum captivitas poterat, sed ereptionis eorum beneficio hoc quoque quod in Graecos deliquerant obviabat. Recte ergo dicitur quod contra se angeli veniunt, quia subjectarum sibi gentium vicissim merita contradicunt. Nam sublimes spiritus eisdem gentibus principantes nequaquam pro injuste agentibus decertant; sed eorum facta juste judicantes examinant. Cumque uniuscujusque gentis vel culpa vel justitia ad supernae curiae consilium ducitur, ejusdem gentis praepositus vel obtinuisse in certamine, vel non obtinuisse perhibetur. Quorum tamen omnium una victoria est sui super se opificis voluntas summa, quam dum semper aspiciunt, quod obtinere non valent nunquam volunt. Bene ergo dicitur: Qui facit concordiam in sublimibus suis. Sequitur:

CAPUT XIII [Rec. IX].

VERS. 3. Nunquid est numerus militum ejus? 18. Angelorum numerus etsi Deo finitus, hominibus est infinitus. In cognitione humanae rationis supernorum spirituum numerus non est, quia quanta sit illa frequentia invisibilis exercitus nescit; de quo per Danielem dicitur: Millia millium ministrabant ei, et decies millies centena millia assistebant ei (Daniel., VII, 10). Supernorum civium numerus infinitus et definitus exprimitur, ut qui Deo est numerabilis, esse hominibus innumerabilis demonstretur. Quamvis aliud est assistere, aliud ministrare. Assistunt enim illae procul dubio potestates, quae ad quaedam hominibus nuntianda non exeunt. Ministrant vero hi qui ad explenda officia untiorum veniunt, sed tamen ipsi quoque contemplatione ab intimis non recedunt. Et quia plures sunt qui ministrant, quam hi qui principaliter assistunt, assistentium numerus quasi definitus, ministrantium vero indefinitus ostenditur. Vet. VIII] 19. Dei milites cur dicantur. Angelicos vero spiritus recte Dei milites dicimus, quia decertare eos contra potestates aereas non ignoramus. Quae tamen certamina non labore, sed imperio peragunt, quia quidquid agendo contra immundos spiritus appetunt, ex adjutorio cuncta regentis possunt. De hac namque 543 militia, nascente rege nostro, scriptum est: Subito facta est cum angelo multitudo militiae coelestis (Luc., 13). Cui tamen militiae electorum quoque hominum numerus jungitur, qui per sublime mentis desiderium, a terrenae conversationis servitute liberantur. De quibus per Paulum dicitur: Nemo militans Deo implicat se negotiis saecularibus (II Tim. II, 4). Qui licet nunc pauci appareant, in invisibili tamen patria innumerabiles regnant, quia etsi ex comparatione pravorum pauci sunt, in congregationis suae frequentia metiri nequaquam possunt. Quia vero eorumdem militum virtus non propriis viribus, sed supernae gratiae infusione roboratur, recte subjungitur:

CAPUT XIV.

IBID. Et super quem non surget lumen illius? 20. Non propriis viribus, sed gratiae dono fortes sunt. Lumen quippe Dei est gratia praeveniens. Quae si in nostro corde nequaquam gratuito consurgeret, profecto mens nostra in peccatorum suorum tenebris obscura remaneret. Unde et subditur:

CAPUT XV [Rec. X].

VERS. 4. Nunquid justificari potest homo comparatus Deo aut apparere mundus natus de muliere? 21. Nemo justus nisi Dei illustratione, non comparatione. Versus iste superius a beato Job dicitur, et nunc in ejus exprobratione replicatur. Omnis namque vir justus Dei illustratione justus est, non comparatione. Humana quippe justitia, auctori comparata, injustitia est, quia etsi in ipsa sui conditione homo persisteret, creatori non posset aequari creatura (Job. IX, 2). Cui tamen ad graviora defectus pondera, accessit et culpa, quam serpens insidians intulit, et mulier infirmata persuasit (Genes. III, 6). Unde nunc quia homo per mulierem culpae subditam nascitur, reatus primi infirmitas in prole propagatur. Et quia in radice putruit humani generis ramus, in conditionis suae viriditate minime subsistit. Unde recte nunc dicitur: Nunquid justificari potest homo comparatus Deo, aut apparere mundus natus de muliere? Ac si aperte diceretur: Ne contra auctorem suum homo superbiat, consideret unde huc venit, et intelligat quid sit. Sed ecce nonnulli per donum spiritus adjuti contra infirmitatem suae carnis eriguntur, virtutibus emicant, signorum quoque miraculis coruscant; nullus tamen est qui sine culpa vitam transeat, quousque carnem corruptionis portat. Unde adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XVI.

VERS. 5.Ecce etiam luna non splendet, et stellae non sunt mundae in conspectu ejus. 22. Nemo ita justus, ut in carne corruptibili omni peccato careat. Quid per lunam, nisi cuncta simul Ecclesia; quid per stellas, nisi singulorum bene viventium animae designantur? qui inter pravorum hominum conversationes, dum magnis virtutibus eminent, quasi in tenebris noctis lucent. Unde per Paulum quoque discipulis dicitur: Inter quos lucetis sicut luminaria in mundo (Philipp. II, 15). Quia enim sancta Ecclesia lunae appellatione exprimitur, propheta testatur, dicens: Elevatus est sol, et luna stetit in ordine suo (Habac. III, 11). Elevato enim sole, in suo ordine luna statuitur, quia ascendente ad coelos Domino, sancta protinus Ecclesia in praedicationis auctoritate roboratur. Et quia stellarum nomine electi signantur, rursum Paulus insinuat, dicens: Stella enim a stella differt in claritate (I Cor. XV, 41) [Vet. IX.] Luna ergo non splendet, et stellae non sunt mundae in conspectu ejus, quia nec sancta Ecclesia virtute propria tot miraculis emicat, nisi hanc praevenientis gratiae dona perfundant, nec singulorum 544 bene viventium mentes a peccatorum maculis mundae sunt, si remota pietate judicentur, quia apud districti judicis oculos, sua unumquemque corruptibilitas inquinat, nisi hanc quotidie gratia parcentis tergat. Electorum quippe animus prodire ad libertatem justitiae nititur, sed adhuc compede infirmitatis tenetur; et culpas quidem subigere perfecte desiderat, sed quousque corruptione carnis astringitur, ejus vinculis, etiam cum non vult, ligatur. Hinc itaque colligat quanto peccatorum pondere pressi sint qui contra haec decertare negligunt, si plene culpam nec illi superant, qui contra hanc viriliter pugnant. Unde et postquam dictum est: Ecce etiam luna non splendet, et stellae non sunt mundae in conspectu ejus, protinus additur:

CAPUT XVII VERS.

6. Quanto magis homo putredo, et filius hominis vermis? 23. Si sanctiores maculae non sunt expertes, quot sordent qui carnis spurcitiis immerguntur. Ac si aperte diceretur: Si ipsi quoque esse sine contagio non valent, qui inter praesentis vitae tenebras virtutibus lucent, quanto reatu iniquitatis obstricti sunt qui adhuc carnaliter vivunt? Si a peccato esse liberi nequeunt qui jam in coelestibus desideriis conversantur, qui peccatorum pondera tolerant qui, carnis suae voluptatibus dediti, adhuc putredinis jugum portant? Hinc Petrus ait: Si justus vix sulvabitur, impius et peccator ubi parebunt (I Pet. IV, 18)? Hinc per Isaiam dicitur: Super humum populi mei spinae et vepres ascendent, quanto magis super omnem domum gaudii civitatis exsultantis (Isai. XXXII, 13)? Humum quippe populi sui Dominus electorum omnium mentem vocat, super quam spinas ac vepres ascendere perhibet, quia nec ipsam quoque esse absque punctionibus vitiorum videt. Domus vero gaudii civitatis exsultantis est mens pravorum, quae dum ventura supplicia conspicere negligit, in carnis voluptate se deserens, inaniter hilarescit. Ait ergo: Super humum populi mei spinae et vepres ascendent, quanto magis super omnem domum gaudii civitatis exsultantis? Ac si aperte dicat: Si et illorum mentem vitia deprimunt, qui se pro coelestis patriae desiderio affligunt, quibus culpis substrati sunt qui sine ulla formidine sese in carnis voluptate derelinquunt? 24. Primus homo putredo, cujus filii vermes. Notandum vero in sermone suo quantum Baldad ordinem conditionis nostrae tenuit et nativitatis, qui hominem non vermem, sed putredinem, filium vero hominis vermem vocat. Primus namque humani generis parens, homo, non filius hominis, ex quo quisquis prodiit, non solum homo, sed filius quoque hominis fuit. Sicut ergo ex homine filius hominis, ita ex putredine nascitur vermis. Unde recte homo putredo, filius vero hominis vermis vocatur. Primus quippe homo putredo, non vermis, quia etsi per mortem putruit, non tamen ex putredine per nativitatem venit. Qui autem hominis est filius, vermis dicitur, quia jam ex mortalium corporum corruptione propagatur. 25. Igitur quia amicorum verba finita sunt, beatus Job altiori acumine prosecutionis innititur, ejusque dicta tam sunt valida, quam extrema, quia et sic usus esse jurisperitorum solet, ut argumentum, quo adversariis suis eminere se praevident, ad prosecutionis conclusionem servent. Sequitur:

CAPUT XVIII [Vet.

X, Rec. XI]. CAP. XXVI, VERS. 1, 2. 545 Respondens autem Job, dixit: Cujus adjutor es? nunquid imbecillis? et sustentas brachium ejus, qui non est fortis? 26. Imbecillem adjuvare velle, charitatis; potentem, elationis est. Adjuvare imbecillem, charitatis est; adjuvare potentem velle, elationis. Quia igitur amici ejus haereticorum speciem tenentes, quasi adjuvantes Deum, sapientiam suam ostendere conabantur, juste Baldad reprehenditur, ut dicatur: Cujus adjutor es? nunquid imbecillis? et sustentas brachium ejus, qui non est fortis? Ac si aperte dicat: Dum eum juvare niteris, sub cujus magnitudine succumbis, omne quod impendis solatium, de ostentatione est, non de pietate. 27. Quo sensu Deum adjuvare dicimur. Sed inter haec sciendum est, quod plerumque etiam Deum, qui videlicet imbecillis non est, humiliter agentes adjuvamus. Unde et per Paulum dicitur: Adjutores enim Dei sumus (I Cor. III, 9). Nam cum ei quem ipse per internam gratiam infundit nos exhortationis voce concurrimus, hoc quod ille per spiritum agit intrinsecus nos exterius ministerio vobis adjuvamus, et tunc solum nostra exhortatio ad perfectionem ducitur, cum in corde Deus fuerit qui adjuvetur. Unde et alias dicit: Neque qui plantat est aliquid, neque qui rigat, sed qui incrementum dat Deus (Ibid., 7). Plantare quippe et rigare, adjuvare est. Quod utrumque vacuum erit ministerium, si in corde Deus non dat incrementum. Sed qui de sensu suo alia sapiunt, esse humiliter Dei adjutores nolunt, quia dum se Deo utiles esse aestimant, a fructu se utilitatis alienant. Unde et Veritatis voce discipulis dicitur: Cum feceritis omnia quae praecepta sunt vobis, dicite: Servi inutiles sumus, quod debuimus facere fecimus (Luc. XVII, 10). Sequitur:

CAPUT XIX.

VERS. 3. Cui dedisti consilium? forsitan illi, qui non habet sapientiam? 28. Stulto consilium dare, charitatis, sapienti, ostentationis; ipsi sapientiae, perversitatis est. Dare stulto consilium, charitatis est; dare sapienti, ostentationis; dare vero ipsi Sapientiae, perversitatis. Et quia hi quos tenere haereticorum speciem diximus per locutionem suam ostentationi potius quam utilitati serviebant, recte adhuc contra Baldad subditur: IBID. Et prudentiam tuam ostendisti plurimam. Omnis cui prudentia recta est, plurima non est, quia, juxta Pauli vocem, non plus appetit sapere quam oportet sapere (Rom. XII, 3). Cui vero est plurima, non est recta, quia dum ultra modum tenditur, in quolibet latere culpae declinatur. Prudentiam vero suam plurimam ostendunt qui videri prae aliis prudentiores appetunt. Unde fit plerumque ut cum moderate sapere nesciunt, etiam fatua loquantur. Pro qua re ipse adhuc excessus prudentiae subjungitur, ut dicatur:

CAPUT XX.

VERS. 4. Quem docere voluisti? nonne eum, qui fecit spiramentum? 29. Quanta Baldad insipientia, divinae sapientiae suam praeferentis. Per spiramentum vivimus, per prudentiam sapientes sumus. Prius autem nostrum est vivere, postmodum sapere, quia ut sapientes esse valeamus, prius agitur ut simus. Qui ergo vitam dedit, ipse procul dubio et prudentiam contulit. Baldad autem, quia beatum Job flagellatum pro culpa credidit, occultum Dei judicium, quod humiliter venerari debuit, superba nisus est temeritate penetrare. Ipsi ergo se per prudentiam praetulit, cujus judicium non intelligendo judicavit. Ipsi se per prudentiam praetulit, a quo vivendi spiraculum accepit; 546 ac si plus ipso esset sapiens a quo habebat ut esset. Sed quia beatus Job, sanctae Ecclesiae typum tenens, pauca in superborum correptione protulit, quos tenere haereticorum speciem non ignoravit, sicut superius dixit: Disputare cum Deo cupio, prius vos ostendens fabricatores mendacii, et cultores perversorum dogmatum (Job. XIII, 3); repente se ad doctrinam erigit, et contra elatorum imperitiam scientiae suae latitudinem per sententias expandit, dicens:

CAPUT XXI [Vet.

XI, Rec. XII]. VERS. 5. Ecce gigantes gemunt sub aquis. 30. Angeli et homines superbi, ignorantiae abysso involvuntur. Dignum quippe erat ut per increpationem prius tumorem sapientiae terrenae retunderet, et per doctrinam postmodum ad plena mysteriis verba transiret. Gigantes enim vel apostatas angelos, vel superbos quosque homines, nil obstat intelligi. Hinc enim per prophetam dicitur: Mortui non vivent, gigantes non resurgent (Isai. XXVI, 16). Quos namque mortuos nisi peccatores nominat? Et quos gigantes nisi eos qui de peccato etiam superbiunt appellat? Illi autem non vivunt, quia peccando vitam justitiae perdiderunt. Isti etiam resurgere post mortem nequeunt, quia post culpam suam inflati per superbiam, ad poenitentiae remedia non recurrunt. Hinc rursum scriptum est: Vir qui erraverit a via doctrinae, in coetu gigantum commorabitur (Prov. XXI, 16); quia quisquis iter rectitudinis deserit, quorum se numero nisi superborum spirituum jungit? Bene autem contra elatos dicitur: Ecce gigantes gemunt sub aquis. Ac si aperte diceretur: Cur de scientia homo superbiat, cum ignorantiae abyssus et ipsos superbissimos angelorum spiritus premat? 31. Qui caeteris praeesse ambiunt, iisdem supponuntur. Si autem gigantum nomine potentes hujus saeculi designantur, in aquis possunt populi figurari, Joanne attestante, qui ait: Aquae enim sunt populi (Apoc. XVII, 15). Bene autem contra superbientem dicitur: Ecce gigantes gemunt sub aquis, quia elati omnes dum in hac vita assequi honorum celsitudinem cupiunt, sub ponderibus populorum gemunt. Nam quanto quisque hic alterius erigitur, tanto curis gravioribus oneratur; eisque ipsis populis mente et cogitatione supponitur, quibus superponitur dignitate. Et bene his verbis breviter indicatur quia omnis superbia eo ipso in imo jacet quo in alta se erigit, ut inde magis cunctis supposita sit, unde cunctis expetit superesse. Homo quippe in sublimibus elevatus, tantos super se sustinet, quantos suppositos regit. Hi autem qui talibus sociantur, ipsi etiam laboris eorum participatione deprimuntur. Nam cum eis laborem etiam tolerant ponderis, dum pariter gloriam affectant honoris. Unde cum diceret: Ecce gigantes gemunt sub aquis, protinus adjunxit:

CAPUT XXII.

IBID. Et qui habitant cum eis. 32. Faciliorem vitiis viam aperiunt majores curae. Desideratae dignitates absque peccato ministrari non possunt. Ac si dicat: Pariter gemunt qui eorum gloria ex delectatione sociantur. Ipsa autem occupatio saecularium dignitatum tanto facilioribus vitiis premitur, quanto majoribus curis gravatur. Humanus namque animus videre et devitare peccata utinam valeat vel quietus. Quia ergo vidit desideratas rerum celsitudines absque peccatis ministrari non posse, et quia divinae irae non absconditur quidquid illicitum perpetratur, apte secutus adjunxit:

CAPUT XXIII.

VERS. 6. Nudus est infernus coram illo, et nullum est operimentum perditioni. 33. Irae divinae nullum peccatum absconditur. Quod Paulus Apostolus quoque ait: Omnia 547 enim nuda et aperta sunt oculis ejus (Hebr. IV, 13). Inferni vero et perditionis nomine diabolum omnesque damnationis ejus socios designavit. Quis vero ille sit coram quo infernus est nudus, sequitur dicens:

CAPUT XXIV [Rec. XIII].

VERS. 7. Qui extendit Aquilonem super vacuum. 34. Corda divino amore vacua diabolus replet. Aquilonis nomine, in sacro eloquio appellari diabolus solet, qui ut torporis frigore gentium corda constringeret, dixit: Sedebo in monte testamenti, in lateribus Aquilonis (Isa. XIX, 13). Qui super vacuum extenditur, quia illa corda possidet quae divini amoris gratia non replentur.

Sed tamen omnipotenti Deo suppetit etiam vasa diaboli cunctis virtutibus vacua suae gratiae munere implere, in eisque divini timoris soliditatem ponere, quos nulla conspicit rectitudinis actione roborari. Unde apte subjungitur:

CAPUT XXV.

IBID. Et appendit terram super nihilum. 35. Ecclesia super gentiles et Judaeos ad nihilum per peccatum redactos fundata. Quid enim terrae nomine nisi sancta Ecclesia designatur, quae dum verba praedicationis suscipit, fructum boni operis reddit? De qua per Moysen dicitur: Audiat terra verba ex ore meo, exspectetur sicut pluvia eloquium meum (Deut. XXXII, 2). Et quid per nihilum, nisi gentiles populi designantur? De quibus per prophetam dicitur: Omnes gentes velut nihilum et inane reputatae sunt (Isai. XL, 17). In eo ergo nihilo terra suspenditur, quod prius vacuum ab Aquilone tenebatur, quia illa corda gentilium repleta sunt charitate Dei, quae pressa prius fuerant torpore diaboli. [Vet. XII.] Potest vero et per hoc vacuum Judaeae infidelitas et per terram, sicut diximus, sanctae Ecclesiae fructificatio designari. Vir ergo sanctus Judaeae pereuntis casum aspiciat, et gentilitatis merita ad veniam redeuntis cernat, ac dicat: Qui extendit Aquilonem super vacuum, et appendit terram super nihilum. Nam quia Judaeorum corda fide vacua diabolo sunt subdita, extendit Aquilonem super vacuum. Quia vero nullis existentibus meritis sicut dictum est: Pro nihilo salvos facies eos (Psal. LV. 8), super gentes Dominus fundavit Ecclesiam suam, quae per prophetam nihilum sunt vocatae, apte secutus adjungit: Appendit terram super nihilum. Hoc vero quo ordine factum sit, mirifica subdens ratione contexit. Ait enim:

CAPUT XXVI [Rec.

XIV] VERS. 8. Qui ligat agnas in nubibus suis, ut non erumpant pariter deorsum. 36. Nubium nomine designati Apostoli et praedicatores.Quid hoc loco aquam nisi scientiam, quid nubes nisi praedicatores appellat? Nam quia in sacro eloquio aliquando aqua scientia dicatur, Salomone attestante didicimus, qui ait: Aqua profunda verba ex ore viri, et torrens redundans fons sapientiae (Prov. XVIII, 4). Aqua signari scientiam David propheta testatur, dicens: Tenebrosa aqua in nubibus aeris (Psal. XVII, 12). Id est, occulta scientia in prophetis, qui ante adventum Domini, dum occultis sacramentis gravidi, mysteria immensa gestarent, intuentium oculis eorum intelligentia caligabat. Nubium vero nomine quid hoc in loco aliud quam praedicatores sancti, id est apostoli, designantur, qui per mundi partes circumquaque transmissi, et verbis noverant pluere, et miraculis coruscare? Quos Isaias propheta longe ante intuens, dixit: Qui sunt 548 isti qui ut nubes volant? Quia igitur vir iste, prophetico plenus spiritu, in hac locutione sua ad laudem Dei initia nascentis Ecclesiae desiderat exordiri, studet ejus ordinem ab apostolorum praedicatione narrare, qui curaverunt summopere rudibus populis plana et capabilia, non summa atque ardua praedicare. Nam si scientiam sanctam, quae hic aquae nomine designatur, ut hauriebant corde, ita ore funderent, immensitate ejus auditores suos opprimerent potius quam rigarent. Unde religata intrinsecus scientia, ut non pariter deorsum erumperet, auditores suos distillatione verborum nutriens, nubes illa loquebatur, dicens: Non potui loqui vobis quasi spiritalibus, sed quasi carnalibus, tanquam parvulis in Christo lac vobis potum dedi, non escam (I Cor. III, 1, 2). Quis enim ferre potuisset, si raptus ad tertium coelum, raptus in paradisum, etiam arcana verba audiens quae loqui homini non liceret, tam immensos supernae scientiae sinus aperiret (II Cor. XII, 2)? Aut cujus non virtutem auditoris opprimeret, si ea quae intrinsecus haurire poterat, in quantum carnis lingua sufficeret, extrinsecus inundans aquae hujus immensitas emanasset 37. Rudes auditores non inundatione sed distillatione scientiae sunt irrigandi. Ut vero auditores rudes non inundatione scientiae, sed moderata praedicationis distillatione foveantur, ligat Deus aquas in nubibus, ut non erumpant pariter deorsum, quia doctorum praedicationem temperat, ut auditorum infirmitas, dictorum rore nutrita convalescat. Quod bene in Evangelio mystica descriptione narratur, dum dicitur: Ascendit Jesus in naviculam Petri, et rogavit ut a terra reduceret pusillum, et ita sedens praedicabat turbis (Luc. V, 3). Per navem Petri quid aliud quam commissa Petro Ecclesia designatur? De qua ut Dominus turbis confluentibus praedicet, eam a terra paululum reduci jubet. Quam nec in altum duci, et tamen a terra praecipit removeri, profecto significans praedicatores suos rudibus debere populis, nec alta nimis de coelestibus, nec tamen terrena praedicare. Aqua itaque ligatur in nubibus, quia praedicatorum scientia infirmorum mentibus loquens quantum sentire valet docere prohibetur. [Vet. XIII]. 38. Infirmis mentibus tegenda est altior scientia. Nam plerumque si auditorum cor verbi immensitate corrumpitur, lingua docentium indiscretionis poena multatur. Unde scriptum est: Si quis aperuerit cisternam et foderit, et non operuerit eam, cecideritque bos vel asinus in eam, dominus cisternae reddet pretium jumentorum (Exod. XXI, 33). Quid est enim aperire cisternam, nisi intellectu valido Scripturae sacrae arcana penetrare? Quid autem per bovem et asinum, mundum scilicet et immundum animal, nisi fidelis quisque et infidelis accipitur? Qui ergo cisternam fodit, cooperiat, ne illud bos vel asinus ruat, id est, qui in sacro eloquio jam alta intelligit, sublimes sensus coram non capientibus per silentium tegat, ne per scandalum mentis aut fidelem parvulum, aut infidelem, qui credere potuisset, interimat. Ex morte enim jumentorum debet pretium, quia illud scilicet admisisse convincitur, unde ad agendam poenitentiam reus tenetur. Operienda est itaque cisterna, quia coram parvulis 549 mentibus legenda est alta scientia, ne unde cor docentium ad summa attollitur, inde infirmitas auditorum ad ima dilabatur. Dicatur igitur recte: Qui ligat aquas in nubibus, ut non erumpant pariter deorsum. Pariter namque aquae erumperent, si coram infirmis auditoribus, quanta est scientia ex ore loquentis emanaret, si simul se omnis plenitudo praedicationis effunderet, et nil sibi cum proficientibus reservaret. Dignum quippe est ut qui praedicat audientis modum consideret, quatenus ipsa praedicatio cum auditoris sui incremen tis crescat. Sic quippe agere unusquisque praedicator debet, sicut cum illo divinitus agitur, ut nequaquam cuncta quae sentit infirmis insinuet, quia et quousque ipse carne mortalitatis infirmus est, ea quae superna sunt cuncta non sentit. Praedicare ergo rudibus non debet quantum cognoscit, quia et ipse de supernis mysteriis cognoscere non valet quanta sint. Hinc est enim quod Paulus apostolus, postquam mysteriis coelestibus interfuit, dicit: Videmus nunc per speculum in aenigmate, tunc autem facie ad faciem (I Cor. XIII, 12). Unde et continuo hic sequitur:

CAPUT XXVII [Rec. XV].

VERS 9. Qui tenet vultum solii sui, et expandit super illud nebulam suam. 39. In hac vita gloria Dei ex parte tantum cognoscitur. In vultu solet cognitio demonstrari. Solii ergo ejus vultus tenetur, quia a nobis in hac vita regni ejus gloria non quanta intrinsecus habetur agnoscitur. Super quo recte expandi nebula dicitur, quia sicut est illa coelestis regni gloria non videtur. Nam corpus quod corrumpitur, aggravat animam, et deprimit terrena inhabitatio sensum multa cogitantem (Sap. IX, 15). A videndo ergo eo nebula aspergimur, quia ipsa nostrae ignorantiae obscuritate caligamus. Unde recte per Psalmistam dicitur: Caligo sub pedibus ejus, et ascendit super cherubim, et volavit, volavit super pennas ventorum, et posuit tenebras latibulum suum (Psal. XVII, 10). Caligo namque est ei sub pedibus, quia non in ea claritate ab inferioribus cernitur, qua in superioribus dominatur. Ascendit enim super cherubim, et volavit. Cherubim quippe plenitudo scientiae dicitur. Proinde super plenitudinem scientiae ascendisse perhibetur, et volasse, quia majestatis ejus celsitudinem scientia nulla comprehendit. Volavit igitur, quia longe in altum ab intellectu nostro se rapuit. Volavit super pennas ventorum, quia scientiam transcendit animarum. Qui posuit tenebras latibulum suum, quia dum caligine nostrae infirmitatis obscuramur per ignorantiam nostram nobis absconditur, ne a nobis modo in aeterna et intima claritate videatur. Unde ei et in Canticis canticorum a sponsa dicitur: Fuge, dilecte mi, fuge (Cant. VIII, 14). [Vet. XIV.] Fugit nos, dicimus, quoties menti nostrae id quod reminisci volumus non occurrit. Fugit nos, dicimus, quando id quod volumus memoria non tenemus. Sancta ergo Ecclesia postquam mortem ac resurrectionem Domini, ascensionemque describit, clamat ei prophetico plena spiritu: Fuge, dilecte mi, fuge. Ac si diceret: Tu qui ex carne comprehensibilis factus es, ex divinitate tua intelligentiam nostri sensus excede, et in teipso nobis incomprehensibilis permare. Tenet ergo vultum solii sui, quia majestatis suae potentiam mortalibus abscondit. 40. Ipsa angelorum ministeria minime cognita. Sed si ejus solium angelicas virtutes accipimus, ipsis quippe velut sedi regiae praesidet, sui nobis 550 solii vultum tenet, quia quandiu in hac mortali carne subsistimus, quae quantaque sint illa Angelorum ministeria non videmus. Et expandit super illud nebulam suam, quia procul dubio et cor nostrum ad quaerendum sublevat, et tamen occulta moderatione agitur, ut ipsa requisitionis suae immensitate reprimatur. Unde scriptum est: Dedit abyssus vocem suam, ab altitudine phantasiae suae (Habac. III, 10). Exclamare enim mens humana in admiratione compellitur, dum in altitudine considerationis in requisitionibus suis eo ipso quo latius extenditur, angustatur. Vel certe, quia solium Dei ipsi nos sumus, vultum solii sui non immerito tenere dicitur, dum nostra scientia progredi ad altiora prohibetur. Super quod solium suum suam nebulam Deus aspergere dicitur, quia invisibilis manens, occulta super nos judicia exerit, ut et fiat in promptis quod videre possimus, et tamen origo facti lateat in abditis, ut cur fiat, nescire debeamus. Unde et apte subditur:

CAPUT XXVIII [Rec XVI].

VERS. 10. Terminum circumdedit aquis, usque dum finiantur lux et tenebrae. 41. Perfecta aeternitatis scientia, nulli tribuitur quandiu vivimus. Quia plerumque in sacro eloquio, ut supra diximus, aquarum nomine populi designantur, aquas Dominus termino circumdat, quia humani generis ita scientiam moderatur, ut quousque vicissitudines alternantium temporum transeant, perfecte ad cognitionem claritatis intimae non pertingat. Sin vero lucis nomine justos accipimus, tenebrarum vero appellatione peccatores (unde et Paulus dicit: Eratis aliquando tenebrae, nunc autem lux in Domino [Ephes. V, 8]), hoc ipsum quod diximus sentiri nil obstat, quia perfecta aeternitatis scientia nulli tribuitur, quousque cursus justorum injustorumque finiatur. Sed quia mirum non est carnales populos superna nescire, sanctus vir in ejusdem divinae potentiae admiratione se erigit, et quod ipsam quoque angelorum perfectorumque hominum scientiam transeat, intuetur dicens:

CAPUT XXIX [Rec. XVII].

VERS. 11. Columnae coeli contremiscunt, et pavent ad nutum ejus. 42. Columnae coeli sunt vel angeli, vel summi Ecclesiae praedicatores, vel etiam Ecclesiae ipsae. Quid aliud columnas coeli quam vel sanctos angelos, vel summos Ecclesiae praedicatores appellat? Super quos in coelestibus crescens universa spiritalis fabricae structura surrexit, sicut alias sancta Scriptura testatur, dicens: Qui vicerit, faciam illum columnam in templo Dei mei (Apoc. III, 12). Nam quisquis in Dei opere recta intentione firmatur, columna in structura fabricae spiritalis erigitur, ut in hoc templo, quod est Ecclesia, positus, et utilitati sit et decori. Eos vero Job columnas coeli quos

Apostolus columnas vocat Ecclesiae, dicens: Petrus, et Jacobus, et Joannes, qui videbantur columnae esse, dextras dederunt mihi (Galat. II, 9). 43. Possumus etiam columnas coeli et ipsas Ecclesias non inconvenienter accipere, quae multae unam catholicam faciunt toto terrarum orbe diffusam. Unde et septem Ecclesiis scribit Joannes apostolus, ut unam catholicam septiformis gratiae plenam spiritu designaret (Apoc. I, 4; II, 29). Et de Domino novimus dixisse Salomonem: Sapientia aedificavit sibi domum, excidit columnas septem (Prov. IX, 1). Qui ut id de septem Ecclesiis se dixisse innotesceret, secutus etiam sacramenta ipsa diligenter inseruit, dicens: Immolavit victimas, miscuit vinum, et proposuit mensam, 551 misit ancillas suas, ut vocarent ad arcem et maenia civitatis: Si quis est parvulus, veniat ad me (Ibid.). Immolavit enim Dominus victimas, seipsum offerendo pro nobis. Miscuit vinum, praeceptorum suorum poculum ex narratione historica et intelligentia spiritali contemperans. Unde alias dictum est: Calix in manu Domini, vini meri, plenus est misto (Psal. LXXIV, 9). Et posuit mensam, id est Scripturam sacram, quae fessos ad se atque a saeculi oneribus venientes pane verbi nos reficit, et contra adversarios sua refectione nos roborat. Unde et alias ab Ecclesia dicitur: Posuisti in conspectu meo mensam, adversus eos qui tribulant me (Psal. XXII, 5). Misit ancillas suas, apostolorum videlicet animas, in ipso suo initio infirmas, ut vocarent ad arcem et moenia civitatis, quia dum internam vitam denuntiant, ad alta nos moenia supernae civitatis levant, quae profecto moenia nisi humiles non ascendunt. Unde illic ab eadem Sapientia subditur: Si quis est parvulus, veniat ad me (Prov. IX, 4). Ac si aperte dicat: Quisquis se apud se magnum aestimat, aditum sibi mei accessus angustat, quia tanto ad me altius pertingitur, quanto uniuscujusque mens apud severius humiliatur. [Vet. XV.] 44. Judicia Dei nemo potest indagare. Sed quantalibet quisque virtute proficiat, quantalibet scientia excrescat, penetrate non sufficit quo nos conditor moderamine judiciorum regat. Dicat ergo:

Columnae coeli contremiscunt, et pavent ad nutum ejus, quia in plerisque nec ipsi pertingere ad voluntatis ejus celsitudinem praevalent qui ejusdem voluntatis praemia denuntiantes vident. Quod, sicut superius diximus, de sanctis quoque angelis nil obstat intelligi, quia ipsae quoque virtutes coelestium, quae hunc sine cessatione conspiciunt, in ipsa sua contemplatione contremiscunt. Sed isdem tremor ne eis poenalis sit, non timoris est, sed admirationis. Quia vero quantus pavor sit admirationis ejus intulit, nunc ordinem nostrae salutis narrat. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXX [Rec. XVIII].

VERS. 12. In fortitudine illius repente maria congregata sunt, et prudentia ejus percussit superbum. 45. Incarnatione Domini mundus presso tumore domitus. Quid aliud maris nomine quam praesens saeculum designatur, in quo corda hominum terrena quaerentium diversis cogitationum fluctibus intumescunt? qui elatione superbiae concitati, dum alterna intentione se impetunt, quasi adversante se unda collidunt. Sed jam in fortitudine illius maria congregata sunt, quia incarnato Domino discordantia saecularium corda concorditer credunt. Jam Petrus in mari ambulat, quia nimirum Christi praedicatoribus illa quondam tumida humili auditu corda substracta sunt ut recte etiam in Evangelio hujus mundi mansuetudinem figuraverit, quod procellosa maris aqua Domini pedibus, presso tumore, calcata est. Sed quonam modo id actum sit aperitur, dum dicitur: Et prudentia ejus percussit superbum. 46. Deus maluit prudentia percutere diabolum, quam fortitudine. Incarnationis oeconomia. Quis hic superbus alius appellatur, nisi ille qui dixit: Ascendam super altitudinem nubium, similis ero Altissimo (Isai. XVI, 14)? Et de quo voce Dei dicitur: Qui factus est ut nullum timeret, et ipse est rex super omnes filios superbiae (Job. XLI, 25). De quo etiam huic sententiae 552 David propheta concordat, dicens: Tu humiliasti, sicut vulneratum, superbum (Psal. LXXXVIII, 11). Sed quamvis simplici naturae divinitatis non sit aliud esse, et aliud sapere, nec aliud sapere, et aliud fortem esse, quippe quia ipsa fortitudo quae sapientia, et ipsa sapientia quae divinitatis essentia est, vigilanter tamen intuendum puto quod vir iste prophetico plenus spiritu superbum diabolum prudentia Dei potius maluit dicere quam fortitudine esse percussum. Non enim ait fortitudo, sed prudentia ejus percussit superbum. Nam quamvis, sicut dictum est, propter naturam simplicem, Dei fortitudo sapientia sit, Dominus tamen diabolum, quantum ad faciem spectat, non virtute, sed ratione superavit. Ipse namque diabolus in illa nos parentis primi radice supplantans, sub captivitate sua quasi juste tenuit hominem, qui, libero arbitrio conditus, ei injusta suadenti consensit. Ad vitam namque conditus in libertate propriae voluntatis, sponte sua factus est debitor mortis. Delenda ergo erat talis culpa, sed nisi per sacrificium deleri non poterat. Quaerendum erat sacrificium, sed quale sacrificium poterat pro absolvendis hominibus inveniri? Neque enim justum fuit ut pro rationali homine brutorum animalium victimae caederentur. Unde ait Apostolus: Necesse est ergo exemplaria coelestium his mundari, ipsa autem coelestia hostiis quam istis (Hebr. IX, 23). Ergo si bruta animalia propter rationale animal, id est pro homine, dignae victimae non fuerunt, requirendus erat homo qui pro hominibus offerri debuisset, ut pro rationali peccante rationalis hostia mactaretur. Sed quid, quod homo sine peccato inveniri non poterat, et oblata pro nobis hostia quando nos a peccato mundare potuisset, si ipsa hostia peccati contagio non careret? Inquinata quippe inquinatos mundare non potuisset. Ergo ut rationalis esset hostia, homo fuerat offerendus, ut vero a peccatis mundaret hominem, homo, et sine peccato. Sed quis esset sine peccato homo, si ex peccati commistione descenderet? Proinde venit propter nos in uterum virginis Filius Dei, ibi pro nobis factus est homo. Sumpta est ab illo natura, non culpa. Fecit pro nobis sacrificium, corpus suum exhibuit pro peccatoribus victimam sine peccato, quae et humanitate mori, et justitia mundare potuisset. [Vet. XVI.] Hunc ergo cum post baptisma vidit antiquus hostis, mox tentationibus impetiit, et per diversos aditus ad interiora ejus molitus inexpugnabilis mentis ejus integritate prostratus (Matt. IV, 1 seq.). 47. Diabolus frustra tentato interius Christo, eum exterius agressus est. Sed qui ad interiora non valuit, ad ejus se exteriora convertit, ut quia mentis virtute victus est, eum quem decipere tentatione non valuit, carnis saltem videretur morte superare, atque, ut ante nos dictum est, permissus est in illud quod ex nobis mortalibus Mediator acceperat. Sed ubi potuit aliquid facere, tibi ex omni parte devictus est; et unde accepit exterius potestatem Dominicae carnis occidendae, inde interior potestas ejus qua nos tenebat occisa est. Ipse namque interius victus est, dum quasi vicit exterius; et qui nos jure debitores mortis tenuit, jure in nobis jus 553 mortis amisit, quia per satellites suos ejus carnem perimendam oppetiit, in quo nil ex culpae debito invenit. Dominus ergo noster pro nobis mortem solvit indebitam, ut nobis mars debita non noceret. Bene itaque dictum est: Prudentia ejus percussit superbum, quia antiquus hostis per excessum praesumptionis suae eum etiam perdidit quem iniquae persuasionis lege possedit; et dum audacter eum in quo nihil sibi competebat appetiit, jure illum quem quasi juste tenebat amisit. Prudentia itaque non virtute percussus est, qui dum ad tentandum Deum solvitur, ab homine possidendo religatur, ut inde eum qui sub ipso erat perderet, unde cum illo qui super ipsum est congredi praesumpsisset. Occiso autem carne Domino, quae praedicatores ejus virtutum gloria sit secuta, narratur, cum subditur:

CAPUT XXXI [Rec. XIX].

VERS. 13. Spiritus ejus ornavit coelos. 48. Infirmitas apostolorum eorumque principis, ante acceptum Spiritum sanctum. Quos coelos, nisi eos de quibus scriptum est: Coeli enarrant gloriam Dei (Psal. XVIII, 1)? Quos tunc ornavit Spiritus, cum replevit. Quod Luca referente didicimus, qui ait:

Factus est repente de coelo sonus, tanquam advenientis spiritus vehementis, et replevit totam domum ubi erant sedentes. Et apparuerunt illis dispertitae linguae tanquam ignis, seditque super singulos eorum. Et repleti sunt omnes Spiritu sancto, et coeperunt loqui variis linguis, prout Spiritus sanctus dabat eloqui illis (Act. II, 2). Ex eo ergo acceperunt ornamenta virtutis, quos immensa ante possederat foeditas timoris. Scimus enim, ille apostolorum, id est coelorum primus, ante acceptam hujus Spiritus gratiam, quoties dum mori timuit, vitam negavit. Qui non poenis, non afflictionibus, non terribili potestate cujusquam, sed unius mancipii sola est interrogatione prostratus. Et quidem mancipium ne sexus firmior terribile demonstraret, ancilla est inquirente tentatus (Matth. XXVI, 70). Rursusque ut talis sexus infirmitas etiam officii sui dejectione vilesceret, non ab ancilla tantummodo, sed ab ostiaria est ancilla requisitus (Joan. XVIII, 25). Ecce quam vilis est ad tentandum persona requisita, ut aperte proderetur quanta eum timoris infirmitas possideret, qui nec ante vocem ostiariae ancillae subsisteret. [Vet. XVII.] 49. Petri fortitudo eo accepto. Sed jam hic paulo ante timidus, qualis post adventum Spiritus exstiterit videamus. Certe, Luca testante didicimus contra sacerdotes ac principes quanta Dominum auctoritate praedicavit. Nam cum facto miraculo, quaestio fuisset exorta (Act. IV, 14), et sacerdotum principes, seniores, ac scribae in apostolorum persecutione concurrerent, eos in medio statuentes in qua virtute miraculum fecerint percunctari curaverunt. Quibus repletus Spiritu sancto Petrus dixit: Principes populi et seniores, si nos hodie dijudicamur in benefacto hominis infirmi, in quo iste salvus est factus, notum sit omnibus vobis, et omni plebi Israel, quia in nomine Jesu Christi Nazareni, quem vos crucifixistis, quem Deus suscitavit a mortuis, in hoc iste astat coram vobis salvus (Ibid. 8). Cumque erga haec persequentium furor excresceret, eosque sacerdotes ac principes Jesum praedicare prohiberent, contra iram principum qua auctoritate Petrus excreverit indicatur, cum illic protinus 554 subditur:

Petrus vero et apostoli dixerunt: Obedire oportet Deo magis quam hominibus (Ibid., I, 9). Sed cum auctoritatem praedicantium, resistentium praecepta non premerent, ad flagella pervenitur. Nam subditur: Tunc principes sacerdotum caesis denuntiaverunt ne loquerentur in nomine Jesu, et dimiserunt eos (Ibid., V, 40). Sed quia apostolorum virtutem premere nec flagella valuerunt, patenter ostenditur, cum protinus subinfertur: Et illi quidem ibant gaudentes a conspectu concilii, quoniam digni habiti sunt pro nomine Jesu contumeliam pati (Ibid., 41). Mox etiam post flagellorum gaudia quid agerent indicatur: Omni autem die in templo et circa domos non cessabant docentes et evangelizantes Christum Jesum. Ecce ille paulo ante timidus, jam linguis loquitur, coruscat miraculis, infidelitatem sacerdotum ac principum libera voce increpat, ad praedicandum Jesum, exemplum auctoritatis caeteris praestat, ne in nomine ejus loqui debeat verberibus prohibetur, nec tamen compescitur. Contemnit flagella caedentium, qui paulo ante requirentium verba timuerat; et qui ancillae vires requisitus expavit, vires principum caesus premit. Sancti enim Spiritus jam virtute solidatus, hujus mundi altitudines libertatis calce deprimebat, ut in imo esse cerneret quidquid contra creatoris gratiam altum tumeret. [Vet. XVIII.] 50. Quibus donis et virtutibus, effuso in se Spiritu sancto, fulserint apostoli. Haec sunt ornamenta coelorum, haec sunt dona Spiritus, quae diversis manifestari virtutibus solent, quas occultae dispensationis munere divisas Paulus enumerat, dicens: Alii quidem per Spiritum datur sermo sapientiae, alii autem sermo scientiae secundum eumdem spiritum, alteri fides in eodem spiritu, alii gratia sanitatum in uno spiritu, alii operatio virtutum, alii prophetia, alii discretio spirituum, alii genera linguarum, alii interpretatio sermonum (I Cor. XII, 8, 9, 10). Quae mox generali definitione concludens, ait: Haec autem omnia operatur unus atque idem Spiritus, dividens singulis prout vult. De his etiam coelis in psalmo dictum est: Verbo Domini coeli firmati sunt (Psal. XXXII, 6). De his quoque ornamentis spiritus subditur:

Et spiritu oris ejus omnis virtus eorum. Bene itaque dicitur: Spiritus ejus ornavit coelos, quia praedicatores sancti nisi promissa Paracliti dona perciperent, nullo fortitudinis decore claruissent. Sed quia sanctis apostolis virtutum gratia decoratis, vitae praedicatio contra infidelium corda convaluit, et antiquus hostis obsessas infidelium mentes praedicatorum vocibus expulsus reliquit, post ornamenta coelorum apte subjungitur.

CAPUT XXXII [Rec. XX].

Ibid. Et obstetricante manu ejus, eductus est coluber tortuosus. 51. Serpens antiquus Dei manu ex peccatorum cordibus quasi ex cavernis suis, ejectus est. Quis enim colubri appellatur nomine, nisi antiquus hostis, et lubricus, et tortuosus, qui decipiendo homini colubri ore locutus est? De quo per prophetam dicitur: Leviathan serpentem, vectem tortuosum (Isa. XXVII, 1). Qui idcirco loqui serpentis ore permissus est, ut ex ipso vase ejus homo cognosceret qualis esset qui intus habitaret. Serpens quippe non solum tortuosus est, sed etiam lubricus. Quia ergo in rectitudine veritatis non stetit, tortuosum animal intravit. Quia vero suggestioni ejus, si primae non resistitur, repente totus ad interna cordis dum 555 non sentitur illabitur, verba ad hominem per animal lubricum fecit. Cavernae vero hujus colubri corda fuerunt iniquorum. Quae quia ad pravitatem propriam traxit, quasi in eorum habitatione requievit. Sed obstetricante manu Domini, tortuosus coluber de propriis cavernis expulsus est, quia dum nobis divina gratia medetur, is qui nos tenuerat antiquus a nobis hostis ejicitur, sicut incarnata Veritas dicit: Nunc princeps hujus mundi ejicietur foras (Joan. XII, 31). Unde jam nunc sanctos omnes non tenendo possidet, sed tentando persequitur. Nam quia non in eis intrinsecus regnat, contra eos pugnat extrinsecus; et quia intus dominium perdidit, bella molitur foris. Ille enim eum de carnalibus hominum cordibus expulit, qui propter homines ad incarnationem venit; dumque corda infidelium tenuit, quasi manum ad latibula serpentis misit. Unde recte per prophetam dicitur: Delectabitur infans ab ubere super foramine aspidis; et in caverna reguli qui ablactatus fuerat manum suam mittet. Non nocebunt, et non occident in universo monte sancto meo (Isai. XI, 8). Quem namque infantem ab ubere, vel eum qui ablactatus fuerit nisi Dominum appellat? Quid vero foramine aspidis et cavernis reguli nisi corda signavit iniquorum? Quia antiquus hostis dum totum se in eorum consensum contulit, quasi in foramine proprio coluber tortuosus, sinus astutiae colligendo glomeravit. Quem et aspidis nomine appellat occulte saevientem, et reguli aperte ferientem. Manum ergo suam Dominus in foramine reguli atque aspidis misit, quando iniquorum corda divina potestate tenuit; et comprehensum exinde aspidem, vel regulum, id est captivum diabolum traxit, ut in monte sancto ejus, quod est Ecclesia, electis fidelibus non noceret. 52. Diabolus leoni comparatus. Hinc namque in Canticis canticorum sponso veniente dicitur: Coronaberis de capite Amana, de vertice Sanir et Hermon, de cubilibus leonum (Cant. IV, 8). Quid enim aliud leonum nomine quam daemonia designantur, quae ira contra nos atrocissimae crudelitatis insaeviunt? Et quia peccatores ad fidem vocati sunt, quorum quondam corda leonum cubilia fuerunt, dum vicisse mortem Dominus eorum confessione creditur, quasi de leonum cubilibus coronatur. Remuneratio quippe victoriae corona est. Toties ergo ei coronam fideles offerunt, quoties hunc vicisse mortem ex resurrectione confitentur. Leo ergo de cubilibus suis pellitur, quia, obstetricante manu Domini, tortuosus coluber in cavernis quas tenuerat habitare prohibetur. Nam victus a fidelium cordibus exiit, qui super haec antea sceptro perfidiae regnavit. 53. Primus Christi adventus in humilitate, secundus in terrore. Ecce in paucis brevibusque sententiis sanctus vir adventus dominici ordinem retulit, pondera expressit, quid ex ejus incarnatione fieri potuit admirando narravit. [Vet. XIX, Rec. XXI.] Sed qui mira fecit in humilitate veniens, considerari non potest cum quanto terrore venturus est, in majestatis suae fortitudine apparens. Ordo primi adventus illius pensari et conspici in tantum potuit, in quantum ad redimendos carnales veniens, divinitatis suae magnitudinem carnalibus oculis temperavit. Quis vero ejus celsitudinis terrorem ferat, cum secundi adventus potentia per 556 ignem judicium exercens, in potestatis suae majestate canduerit? Unde vir sanctus adventum illius narrat primum, sed lassatur ad secundum, dicens:

CAPUT XXXIII VERS.

14. Ecce haec ex parte dicta sunt viarum ejus; et cum vix parvam stillam sermonum ejus audierimus, quis poterit tonitruum magnitudinis illius intueri? 54. Terribilis judicii Dei descriptio. Quid hoc loco viarum nomine nisi actiones Domini appellat? Unde et per prophetam Dominus dicit: Non enim sunt viae meae sicut viae vestrae (Isai. LV, 8). Adventum ergo Domini narrans, vias Dei ex parte retulerat, quia alia ejus actio fuit, qua nos condidit, alia qua redemit. Ea itaque quae de Domini actione narravit, extremi judicii comparatione levigans, ait: Ecce haec ex parte dicta sunt viarum ejus. Quod et parvam stillam sermonum ejus appellat, quia quidquid altum, quidquid terribile in hac vita positi de ejus consideratione cognoscimus ex immensitate coelestium secretorum, velut tenuis ad nos gutta superni liquoris emanat: Et quis poterit tonitruum magnitudinis ejus intueri? Ac si aperte dicat: Si humilitatis ejus admiranda vix ferimus, sonorum atque terribilem majestatis ejus adventum qua virtute toleramus? Hunc tonitruum adventus illius etiam Psalmista insonat, dicens: Deus manifeste veniet, Deus noster, et non silebit; ignis in conspectu ejus ardebit, et in circuitu ejus tempestas valida (Psal. XLIX, 3). Hinc Sophonias propheta denuntiat, dicens: Juxta est dies Domini magnus, juxta et velox nimis. Vox diei Domini amara, tribulabitur ibi fortis. Dies irae dies illa, dies tribulationis et angustiae, dies calamitatis et miseriae, dies tenebrarum et caliginis, dies nebulae et turbinis, dies tubae et clangoris (Sophon. I, 14).

Terrorem ergo districti examinis, quem Sophonias tubam, beatus Job tonitruum appellat. Quem Joel quoque considerans ait: Conturbentur omnes habitatores terrae, quia venit dies Domini, quia prope est dies tenebrarum et caliginis, dies nubis et turbinis: Magnus enim dies Domini, et terribilis valde, et quis sustinebit eum (Joel. II, 1)? Sed quam incomprehensibilis sit atque inconsiderabilis illa magnitudo, qua in secunda ostensione venturus est, bene utcunque perpendimus, si primi adventus pondera sollicita consideratione pensamus. Certe ut nos a morte redimeret, mori Dominus venit, et defectum nostrae carnis in suo corpore poenasque toleravit. Qui priusquam ad crucis patibulum perveniret, teneri, conspui, illudi, et alapis caedi se pertulit. Ecce ad quanta propter nos venire probra consensit; et tamen priusquam se teneri permitteret, persecutores suos requisivit, dicens (Joan. XVIII, 4): Quem quaeritis? Cui illico responderunt: Jesum Nazarenum. Quibus cum repente diceret, Ego sum, vocem solummodo mitissimae responsionis edidit, et armatos persecutores suos protinus in terram stravit. Quid ergo facturus est, cum judicaturus venerit, qui una voce hostes suos perculit, etiam cum judicandus venit? Quod est illud judicium quod immortalis exerit, qui in una voce non potuit ferri moriturus? Quis ejus iram toleret, cujus et ipsa non potuit mansuetudo tolerari? Consideret ergo vir sanctus, et dicat: Cum vix parvam stillam sermonum ejus audierimus, quis poterit tonitruum magnitudinis illius intueri?

LIBER DECIMUS OCTAVUS.

557 (Continet expositionem capitum XXVIII et libri Job usque ad versum 21 dimidiatum, secundum multiplices sensus). [Rec. I.] 1. Scripturae sacrae obscuritas ad altiorem ejus sensum investigandum nos movet. Plerumque in sacro eloquio sic nonnulla mystica describuntur, ut tamen juxta narrationem historicam prolata videantur. Sed saepe dicta talia in eadem historica narratione permista sunt, per quae superficies historiae cuncta cassetur: quae dum nil historicum resonant, aliud in eis inquirere lectorem cogunt. His enim dictis quae aperta credimus, cum interjecta aliqua obscurius invenimus, quasi quibusdam stimulis pungimur, ut ad aliqua altius intelligenda vigilemus, et obscurius prolata sentiamus, ea etiam quae aperte dicta putavimus. Cum ergo beatus Job de sermone Domini et de magnitudine tonitrui loqueretur, eisdem verbis protinus subinfertur:

CAPUT PRIMUM [Vet.

I, Rec. II]. CAP. XXVII, VERS. 1. Addidit quoque Job, assumens parabolam suam, et ait. 2. Loquendi genus Job parabolicum et mysticum. Quo profecto versu ostenditur hujus sanctissimi viri dicta quam mystice sint prolata, dum parabola, id est similitudo assumpta narratur ab eo qui nihil inferius per comparationem vel similitudinem loquitur. Absit enim ne hoc loco parabolam illud musicae organum sentiamus. Neque enim fas est credere quod in afflitione poenarum musicis uteretur, cum per Scripturam suam veritas dicat: Musica in luctu importuna narratio est (Eccli. XXII, 6). Nominata ergo parabola, ecce textu ipso loquente jam discimus, ne justa textum tantummodo ejus verba pensemus. Ad eam itaque similitudinem cuncta trahenda sunt qua figurate Ecclesia designatur. Et in ipso quidem locutionis exordio dicta aperte prolata sunt, sed subjunctis obscurioribus implicantur. Nam plana, ut solet, locutione inchoat, sed verba sua per mysticos sensus gravida narratione consumat. Itaque ait:

CAPUT II [Rec. III].

VERS. 2. Vivit Deus, qui abstulit judicium meum, et Omnipotens qui ad amaritudinem adduxit animam meam. 3. Contra verba detrahentium sapientia, contra persequentium gladios patientia necessaria. 3. Quibus nimirum verbis beatus Job et sua narrat, et sanctae Ecclesiae tempora afflictae significat, in quibus aperta infidelium pervicacia premitur, et persecutionis amaritudine perturbatur. Duobus namque modis Ecclesia tentari ab adversariis solet, ut videlicet persecutionem aut verbis patiatur, aut gladiis. Sancta vero Ecclesia summopere habere sapientiam et patientiam studet. Sed exercetur ejus sapientia cum tentatur verbis, exercetur ejus patientia cum tentatur gladiis. Nunc vero de ea persecutione loquitur, in qua non gladiis, sed falsis assertionibus lacessitur. Multos autem novimus qui cum in hac vita aliqua adversa patiuntur, Deum esse credunt. Nonnulli vero Deum esse aestimant, sed res humanas minime curare. De illis quippe per David dicitur: Dixit insipiens in corde suo, Non est Deus (Psal. XIII, 1). Isti vero apud eum dicunt: 558 Quomodo scit Deus, et si est scientia in excelso (Psal. LXXII, 11)? Et rursus: Et dixerunt, non videbit Dominus, nec intelliget Deus Jacob (Psal. LXXXXIII, 7). Vir ergo iste sanctae Ecclesiae typum gestans in ipsa afflictionis suae amaritudine constitutus, contra utrosque respondit. Nam quia essentiam vita habet, mors non habet, ut Deum esse fateretur, ait: Vivit Deus. Ut vero eum res humanas curare perhiberet, subdidit: Qui abstulit judicium meum, et ad amaritudinem adduxit animam meam. Ista etenim quae patitur, non casu se perpeti, sed Deo omnia disponente testatur; nec tentatori suo amaritudinis suae potestatem tribuit, sed auctori. 4. Diabolus nullam, nisi Deo per mittente tentandi potestatem habet. Scit namque quia diabolus licet afflitionem justorum semper appetat, tamen si ab auctore nostro potestatem non accipit, ad tentationis articulum nullatenus convescit. Unde et omnis voluntas diaboli injusta est, et tamen permittente Deo omnis potestas justa. Ex se enim tentare quoslibet injuste appetit, sed eos qui tentandi sunt, prout tentandi sunt, non nisi tentari Deus juste permittit. [Vet. II.] Unde etiam in libris Regum de diabolo scriptum est: Quia spiritus Domini malus irruebat in Saul (I Reg. XVIII, 10). Ubi juste quaeritur: si Domini, cur malus; et si malus, cur Domini dicatur? Sed duobus verbis comprehensa est et potestas justa in diabolo, et voluntas injusta. Nam et ipse dicitur spiritus malus per nequissimam voluntatem; et idem spiritus Domini per acceptam justissimam potestatem. Bene ergo dicitur: Vivit Deus, qui abstulit judicium meum, et Omnipotens qui ad amaritudinem adduxit animam meam, quia etsi hostis saevit, qui ferire appetit, creator tamen est qui eum ad aliquid praevalere permittit. Sed quia sanctus vir ad aliquid invocat a Dei vita se constrinxit, audiamus quid sese constringendo subjungit. Sequitur:

CAPUT III [Rec. IV].

VERS. 34. Quia donec superest halitus in me, et Spiritus Dei in naribus meis, non loquentur labia mea iniquitatem, nec lingua mea meditabitur mendacium. 5. Cum omne amendacium iniquitas sit, ne quidem licet vitam cujuslibet mendacio defendere. Quod prius iniquitatem, hoc postmodum repetens mendacium dicit. Nam et omne mendacium iniquitas est, et omnis iniquitas mendacium, quia profecto ab aequitate discrepat quidquid a veritate discordat. Sed inter hoc quod ait, loqui, et postmodum subdit, meditari, magna distantia est. Nonnunquam enim pejus est mendacium meditari, quam loqui. Nam loqui plerumque praecipitationis est, meditari vero studiosae pravitatis. Et quis ignoret in quanta distantia culpa distinguitur utrum praecipitatione aliquis, an studio mentiatur? Sed vir sanctus, ut perfecte adhaereat veritati, nec studio se perhibet, nec praecipitatione mentiri. Summopere enim cavendum est omne mendacium, 559 quamvis nonnunquam sit aliquod mendacii genus culpae levioris, si quisquam praestando mentitur. Sed quia scriptum est: Os quod mentitur, occidit animam (Sap. I, 11). Et: Perdes omnes qui loquuntur mendacium (Psal. V, 7), hoc quoque mendacii genus perfecti viri summopere fugiunt, ut nec vita cujuslibet per eorum fallaciam defendatur, ne suae animae noceant, dum praestare vitam carni nituntur alienae; quanquam hoc ipsum peccati genus facillime credimus relaxari. Nam si quaelibet culpa (22, q. 2, c. 20), sequenti solet pia operatione purgari; quanto magis haec facile abstergitur, quam mater boni operis pietas ipsa comitatur? 6. Respondetur objectioni ex obstetricum Aegyptiarum mendacio petitae. Nonnulli vero ex obstetricum fallacia conantur asserere hoc mendacii genus non esse peccatum, maxime quod illis mentientibus scriptum est: Quia aedificavit illis Dominus domos (Exod. I, 21). In qua magis recompensatione cognoscitur quid mendacii culpa mereatur. Nam benignitatis earum merces, quae eis in aeterna potuit vita retribui, pro admista culpa mendacii, in terrenam est recompensationem declinata, ut in vita sua quam mentiendo tueri voluerunt ea quae fecerunt bona reciperent, et ulterius quod exspectarent mercedis suae praemium non haberent. Nam si subtiliter perpendatur, amore vitae praesentis mentitae sunt, non intentione mercedis. Parcendo quippe conatae sunt infantium vitam tegere; mentiendo, suam. 7. In vet. test. mendacium levior erat culpa, quam in novo. Et licet in testamento veteri nonnulla possint talia reperiri, pene nunquam tamen hoc vel tale genus mendacii a perfectis admissum studiosus ibi lector inveniet, quamvis mendacium quamdam tenere veritatis imaginem videatur, et sub veteri forsitan testamento minoris culpae esse potuit, in quo per taurorum hircorumque victimas sacrificium non fuit ipsa veritas, sed umbra veritatis. Nam in testamento novo praeceptis altioribus manifestata per carnem Veritate proficimus; justumque est ut facta quaedam quae in illo populo umbrae veritatis deservierant deseramus. [Vet. III.] Si quis vero per testamentum vetus vult suum tueri mendacium (22, q. 2, c. 19), quia minus illic quibusdam fortasse nocuerit, dicat necesse est rerum alienarum raptum, et retributionem injuriae, quae infirmis illic concessa sunt, sibi nocere non posse. Quae omnia cunctis liquet quanta adnimadversione Veritas insequitur, quae nobis, jam significationis suae umbra postposita, in vera carne declaratur. Sed quia sanctus vir nec loqui se, nec meditari mendacium spondet, haec ipsa in quibus veritati congruit exsequendo subjungit:

CAPUT IV.

VERS. 5. Absit a me ut justos vos esse judicem, donec deficiam, non recedam ab innocentia mea. 8. Peccatoribus adulari quam noxium. Ab innocentia quippe recederet, si bona de malis aestimaret, Salomone attestante, qui ait: Qui justificat impium, et qui condemnat justum, uterque abominabilis est ante Deum (Prov. XVII, 15). Sunt namque nonnulli (Dist. XLVI. c. 2) qui dum male facta hominum laudibus efferunt, augent quae increpare debuerunt. Hinc enim per prophetam dicitur: Vae qui consuunt pulvillos sub omni cubito manus, et faciunt cervicalia sub capite universae aetatis (Ezech. XIII, 18). Ad hoc quippe pulvillus 560 ponitur, ut mollius quiescatur. Quisquis ergo male agentibus adulatur, pulvillum sub capite, vel cubito jacentis ponit, ut qui corripi ex culpa debuerat, in ea fultus laudibus molliter quiescat. Hinc rursum scriptum est: Ipse aedificabat parietem, illi autem liniebant eum (Ibid. XIII, 10). Parietis quippe nomine peccati duritia designatur. Aedificare ergo parietem est contra se quempiam obstacula peccati construere. Sed parietem liniunt, qui peccata perpetrantibus adulantur, ut quod illi perverse agentes aedificant, ipsi adulantes quasi nitidum reddant. Sed sanctus vir sicut mala de bonis non aestimat, ita judicare bona de malis recusat, dicens: Absit a me ut justos vos judicem, donec deficiam, non recedam ab innocentia mea. Ubi aperte subjunxit:

VERS. 6. Justificationem meam quam coepit tenere, non deseram. Coeptam namque justificationem desereret, si in peccantium laudem declinaret. Sed quia tunc verius a peccatis alienis absistimus, cum prius nos a propriis custodimus, cur de eis peccare pertimescat, rationis causas insinuat, cum subjungit:

CAPUT V [Rec. V].

IBID. Neque enim reprehendit me cor meum in omni via mea. 9. Audientes praecepta divina nec facientes coarguit. Ac si aperte dicat: Pro vobis non debeo ad culpam pertrahi, qui peccare in propriis formidavi. Sciendum vero est quod quisquis a praeceptis dominicis discordat opere, quoties ea audit a corde suo reprehenditur atque confunditur, quia id quod non fecerit memoratur. Nam in quo se errasse considerat, ipsa se latenter conscientia accusat. Unde David propheta deprecatur, dicens: Tunc non confundar, dum respicio in omnia mandata tua (Psal. CXVIII, 6). Graviter namque unusquisque confunditur quando mandata Dei vel legendo, vel audiendo respicit, quae vivendo contempsit. Hinc enim Joannis voce dicitur: Si cor nostrum non reprehenderit nos, fiduciam habemus ad Deum; et quidquid petierimus ab eo, accipiemus (Joan. III, 21); ac si diceret: Si id quod praecipit facimus, id quod petimus obtinebimus. 10. Oratione actio, et actione oratio fulciatur. Valde namque apud Deum utraque haec sibi necessario congruunt, ut et oratione operatio, et operatione fulciatur oratio. Hinc enim Jeremias ait: Scrutemur vias nostras, et quaeramus, et revertamur ad Dominum. Levemus corda nostra cum manibus ad Deum in coelos (Thren. III, 40). Vias etenim nostras scrutari est cogitationum interna discutere. Corda vero cum manibus levat, qui orationem suam operibus roborat. Nam quisquis orat, sed operari dissimulat, cor levat, et manus non levat. Quisquis vero operatur, et non orat, manus levat, et cor non levat. Juxta ergo Joannis vocem, tunc cor fiduciam in oratione accipit, cum sibi vitae pravitas nulla contradicit. De qua recte fiducia a sancto viro nunc dicitur: Neque enim reprehendit me cor meum in omni vita mea. Ac si aperte dicat: Nequaquam se fecisse reminiscitur unde in suis precibus confundatur. [Vet. IV.] Sed quaeri potest quo pacto a corde suo reprehendi se denegat, qui se peccasse superius accusat, dicens: Peccavi, quid faciam tibi, o custos 561 hominum (Job. VII, 20)? Vel certe: Si justificare me voluero, os meum condemnabit me (Job. IX, 20). 11. Quaedam peccata vitari nequeunt. Sed sciendum est quod sunt peccata quae a justis vitari possunt, et sunt nonnulla quae etiam a justis vitari non possunt. Cujus enim cor in hac corruptibili carne consistens in sinistra cogitatione non labitur, vel si usque ad consensus foveam non mergatur? Et tamen haec ipsa prava cogitare peccare est. Sed dum cogitationi resistitur, a confusione sua animus liberatur. Mens ergo justorum etsi libera est a perverso opere, aliquando tamen corruit in perversa cogitatione. Et in peccatum ergo labitur, quia saltem in cogitatione declinatur; et tamen unde semetipsam postmodum flendo reprehendat, non habet, quia ante se reparat, quam per consensum cadat. Recte ergo is qui peccatorem se confessus est, nequaquam se a suo corde reprehendi confitetur, quia etsi qua illicita fortasse cogitando defuit unquam rectitudini, forti tamen mentis certamine restitit cogitationi. Sequitur:

CAPUT VI [Rec. VI].

VERS. 7. Sicut impius inimicus meus, et adversarius meus quasi iniquus. 12. Ecclesia pro infideli habet, quem intra se positum, pravis moribus videt. In sacro eloquio sicut, et quasi, aliquando non pro similitudine ponitur, sed pro veritate. Unde est illud: Vidimus gloriam ejus, gloriam quasi unigeniti a Patre (Joan. I, 14). Unde et hic quoque sicut, et quasi, pro affirmatione potius quam pro similitudine dictum videtur. Inter impium vero et iniquum, hoc distare nonnunquam solet, quia omnis impius iniquus, non tamen omnis iniquus est impius. Impius namque pro infideli ponitur, id est a pietate religionis alienus; iniquus vero dicitur, qui pravitate operis ab aequitate discordat, vel si fortasse Christianae fidei nomen portat. Beati igitur Job voce typica sancta Ecclesia, quae alios rectae fidei contradicentes tolerat. impium se habere fatetur inimicum. Quia vero alios sub praetextu fidei intus positos in pravis operibus patitur, iniquum suum adversarium detestatur. Si autem sicut, et quasi, oportet magis ut pro similitudine positum sentiamus, sancta Ecclesia eos quos viventes carnaliter intra se tolerat de similitudine impiorum notat. Intus quippe ei inimicus est, qui fidelem se dum affirmat vocibus, moribus negat. Et quia eum velut infidelem aestimat qui illam specie tenus intus positus vitio pravae actionis impugnat, recte dicit: Sicut impius inimicus meus, et adversarius meus quasi iniquus. Ac si aperte dicat: A me etiam fide discrepat, qui mihi opere non concordat. Sequitur:

CAPUT VII [Rec. VII].

VERS. 8. Quae enim spes est hypocritae, si avare rapiat, et non liberet Deus animam ejus? 13. Hypocrita avarus est et raptor. Hypocrita, qui Latina lingua dicitur simulator, justus esse non appetit, sed videri. Et idcirco avarus raptor est, quia dum inique agens desiderat de sanctitate venerari, laudem vitae rapit alienae. Studium vero esse hypocritarum solet ut et quod sunt supprimant, et hoc quod non sunt esse se hominibus innotescant, quatenus mensuram suam per aestimationem transeant, et praeire se caeteros actionis nomine ostendant. Refugiunt videri quod sunt, et ante oculos hominum superducta quadam innocentiae honestate se vestiunt. 562 Unde recte per Evangelium voce nostri Redemptoris increpantur, cum eis dicitur: Vae vobis, hypocritae, quia similes facti estis sepulcris dealbatis, quae a foris quidem apparent hominibus speciosa, intus vero sunt plena ossibus mortuorum, et omni spurcitia. Ita et vos foris quidem apparetis hominibus justi, intus vero pleni estis avaritia et iniquitate (Matth. XXIII, 27; Luc. XI, 39). [Vet. V.] Quo contra omnes veraciter sancti non solum gloriam supra modum suum omnino non appetunt, sed etiam hoc ipsum videri refugiunt quod esse meruerunt. Unde ille praedicator egregius veritatis, contra pseudoapostolos loquens, dum virtutes eximias operationis suae pro discipulorum eruditione narraret (II Cor. XI, 13, seq.), dum tot se pericula tolerasse coacervata persecutione describeret, et post haec usque ad tertium coelum, rursumque in paradisum raptum se esse memoraret, ubi tanta cognoscere potuisset, quanta loqui omnino non posset (Ibid. XII, 2), erat de se adhuc fortasse admirabiliora locuturus, sed ab humana laude alta se consideratione temperans, subdit: Parco autem, ne quis me existimet supra id quod videt in me, aut audit aliquid ex me (Ibid. XII, 6). Habebat ergo adhuc dicendum de se aliquid, qui parcit dicere; sed egit utrumque doctor egregius, ut et loquendo quae egerat discipulos instrueret, et tacendo sese intra humilitatis limitem custodiret. Nimis namque esset ingratus, si de se discipulis tota reticeret, et fortasse nimis incautus, si de se tota vel discipulis proderet. Sed mirabiliter, ut dictum est, egit utrumque, ut loquendo erudiret vitam audientium, et tacendo custodiret suam. 14. Sancti aliquando se laudant innoxie. Sciendum vero est quod sancti viri quoties de se aliquid sequentibus innotescunt, morem creatoris sui imitantur. Nam Deus, qui nos prohibet ne proprio ore laudemur, per Scripturam sacram laudes suas loquitur, non quia ipse eis indiget, qui proficere laudibus nescit, sed dum suam nobis magnitudinem narrat, nostram ad se imperitiam sublevat; et bona sua loquendo nos edocet, quem omnino homo non cognosceret, si de se tacere voluisset. Idcirco ergo laudes suas indicat, ut valeamus eum audientes cognoscere, cognoscentes amare, amantes sequi, sequentes adipisci, adipiscentes vero ejus visione perfrui. Unde Psalmista ait: Virtutem operum suorum annuntiabit populo suo, ut det illis haereditatem gentium (Psal. CX, 6). Ac si aperte dicat: Idcirco fortitudinem suae operationis insinuat, ut eam qui audierit donis ditescat. Morem ergo sui creatoris imitantes sancti viri, nonnunquam quaedam de se, ut audientes instruant, non ut ipsi proficiant, manifestant; et tamen in his alta se consideratione custodiunt, ne dum alios a terrena intentione erigunt, ipsi in terrenae laudis appetitione mergantur. Quorum plerumque dicta imitantur hypocritae, sed dictorum sensum penitus ignorant, quia quod justi agunt ad utilitatem proximi, hoc ipsi faciunt ad extensionem nominis sui. Sanctus autem vir hypocritas intuens, nequaquam gloriam futuram appetere, sed cupere praesentem tenere ait: Quae enim spes est hypocritae? quia dum praesentia diligit, futura minime sperat. Scriptum namque est: Quod enim videt quis, quid sperat (Rom. VIII, 24)? Idcirco ergo ab hypocrita ad aeterna praemia per spem minime tenditur, quia quod alio quaerendum 563 fuerat, hic se tenere gloriatur. Cujus quia culpa prolata est, etiam poena subjungitur, cum protinus subinfertur:

CAPUT VIII.

VERS. 9. Nunquid clamorem ejus audiet Deus, cum venerit super illum angustia? 15. Qui Deum non audit in lege loquentem, orans in extremis a Deo non audietur. Clamorem ejus angustiae tempore Deus non audit, quia tranquillitatis tempore in praeceptis suis ipse clamantem Dominum non audivit. Scriptum quippe est: Qui avertit aurem suam ne audiat legem, oratio ejus erit exsecrabilis (Prov. XXVIII, 9). Sanctus itaque vir intuens quia omnes qui nunc operari recta contemnunt extremo se tempore ad petitionis verba convertunt, dicit: Nunquid clamorem ejus audiet Deus? Quibus profecto verbis vocibus nostri Redemptoris obsequitur, qui ait: Novissime veniunt et fatuae virgines, dicentes: Domine, Domine, aperi nobis. Et respondetur eis: Amen dico vobis, nescio vos (Matth. XXV, 11); quia tanto magna tunc exercetur severitas, quanto nunc major misericordia prorogatur; et districte tunc judicium non correctis exerit, qui pietatem nunc delinquentibus patienter impendit. Hinc etenim propheta ait: Quaerite

Dominum dum inveniri potest, invocate eum dum prope est (Isai. LV, 6). Modo enim non videtur, et prope est; tunc videbitur, et prope non erit. Necdum in judicio apparuit, et si quaeritur, invenitur. Nam miro modo cum in judicio apparuerit, et videri potest, et non potest inveniri. [Vet. VI.] Hinc Salomon sapientiam refert et suaviter blandientem, et terribiliter judicantem, dicens: Sapientia foris praedicat, in plateis dat vocem suam (Prov. I, 20). Cujus vocem quoque insinuat, subdens: Usquequo parvuli diligitis infantiam, et stulti ea quae sibi sunt noxia cupiunt, et imprudentes odibunt scientiam (Ibid., 22)? Convertimini ad correptionem meam; en proferam vobis spiritum meum, et ostendam verba mea (Ibid., 23). En qualibus verbis expressa est dulcedo vocantis. Videamus nunc quibus insinuatur modis severitas increpantis, ut in fine quandoque se exerceat districtio punientis. Quia vocavi, inquit, et renuistis; extendi manum meam, et non fuit qui aspiceret; despexistis omne consilium meum, et increpationes meas neglexistis (Ibid., I, 24). Dicat jam qualiter feriat, quos ad se nullatenus revertentes tanta longanimitate sustentat. Ego quoque in interitu vestro ridebo et subsannabo, cum vobis quod timebatis advenerit, cum irruerit repentina calamitas, et interitus quasi tempestas ingruerit, quando venerit super vos tribulatio et angustia. Tunc invocabunt me, et non exaudiam; mane consurgent, et non invenient me (Ibid., I, 26). Ore itaque sapientissimi Salomonis cuncta de superno judicio diligenter expressa sunt, quia et prius dulciter vocat, et postmodum terribiliter increpat, et ad extremum inretractabiliter damnat. Bene ergo dicitur: Nunquid clamorem ejus audiet Deus, quando venerit super illum angustia? Quia nimirum omnis hypocrita tunc remedium in clamore non invenit, qui nunc tempus congruum clamoris perdit. De cujus adhuc pravitate subjungitur:

CAPUT IX [Rec. VIII].

VERS. 10. Aut poterit in Omnipotente delectari? 16. Utrique amores Dei et mundi, uno in corde se non capiunt. Qui enim terrenarum rerum amore vincitur, in Deo nullatenus delectatur. Esse quidem sine delectatione anima nunquam potest, nam aut infimis 564 delectatur aut summis, et quanto altiori studio exercetur ad summa, tanto majori fastidio torpescit ad infima; quantoque acriore cura inardescit ad infima, tanto tepore damnabili frigescit a summis. Utraque enim simul et aequaliter amari non possunt. Unde Joannes apostolus sciens inter spinas amorum saecularium supernae charitatis messem germinare non posse, priusquam aeterni amoris semina proferat, de audientium cordibus sancta verbi manu amorum saecularium spinas eradicat, dicens: Nolite diligere mundum, neque ea quae in mundo sunt (I Joan. II, 15). Moxque subjungit: Quia si quis diligit mundum, non est charitas Patris in eo. Ac si aperte dicat: Utrique se amores in uno corde non capiunt; nec in eo seges supernae charitatis pullulat, in quo illam spinae infimae delectationis necant. Atque illas ex hac infima delectatione nascentes enumerat punctiones, dicens: Quia omne quod in mundo est, concupiscentia carnis est, et concupiscentia oculorum, et superbia vitae, quae non est ex Patre, sed ex mundo est; et mundus transit, et concupiscentia ejus (Ibid. II, 16). Delectari ergo in Deo hypocrita non valet, quia in ejus mente desideria superna non prodeunt, quam profecto spinae terreni amoris premunt. De quo apte subditur.

CAPUT X.

IBID. Et invocare Deum omni tempore? 17. Hypocrita Deum non invocat, nisi in angustiis positus. Tunc quippe hypocrita Deum invocat, cum hunc terrenarum rerum tribulatio angustat. Nam cum in hoc saeculo effectum quaesitae felicitatis invenerit, auctorem qui hanc ipsam felicitatem tribuit non requirit. Quia vero, ut praediximus, esse ars docentium debet ut in auditorum suorum mentibus prius studeant perversa destruere, et postmodum recta praedicare, ne bonum sanctae praedicationis semen plena malis corda non capiant; unde ad Jeremiam dicitur: Ecce constitui te hodie super gentes et regna, ut evellas et destruas, et disperdas et dissipes, et aedifices, et piantes (Jerem, I, 10) (prius itaque jubetur ut destruat, et postmodum aedificet; prius ut evellat, et postmodum plantet, quia nequaquam rectae veritatis fundamentum ponitur, nisi prius erroris fabrica destruatur); beatus Job postquam causas universalis Ecclesiae amicorum suorum dictis quasi contra haereticorum verba respondit, eorumque elationem multimoda responsione dextruxit, jam docere se perhibet, ut videlicet aperte videatur in his quae subdidit recta plantare, in his vero quae praemisit evulsisse perversa. Sequitur:

CAPUT XI [Rec. IX].

VERS. 11. Docebo vos per manum Dei, quae Omnipotens habeat, nec abscondam. 18. Sancti Deo suam sapientiam tribuunt, superbi sibi. Sic beatus Job loquitur verbis suis, ut aliquid signet ex nostris. Nam sancta Ecclesia docens, in quantum cognoscere expedit, nihil veritatis abscondit. Quia enim manus Dei vocatur Filius (Omnia quippe per ipsum facta sunt (Joan. I, 3), per manum Dei docere se perhibet eos quos in propria sapientia remanere fatuos videt. Ac si aperte dicat: Ego ex me aliquid nescio; sed quidquid de veritate sentio, hoc ex ejusdem Veritatis largitate comprehendo. Vos idcirco recta non sapitis, quia hanc eamdem vestram sapientiam non Dei manui, sed vobismetipsis datis. Nam hostes sanctae Ecclesiae, si quid veri aliquando sentiunt, id propriis 565 viribus tribuunt; et tanto magis se privant superna sapientia, quanto illam quasi ex suo ingenio habere privatam volunt. Quibus aliquando datur ad judicium suum ut recte quidem aliqua sciant, sed ex ipsa hac scientia obligatiores ad poenam fiant. Unde apte subditur:

CAPUT XII [Vet. VII].

VERS. 12. Ecce vos omnes nostis, et quid sine causa vana loquimini? 19. Quibusdam datur ad judicium ut recte nonnulla sciant. Scriptum est: Servus qui cognovit voluntatem domini sui, et non praeparavit, et non fecit secundum voluntatem ejus, vapulabit multis. Qui autem non cognovit, et non fecit digna, plagis vapulabit paucis (Luc. XII, 47). Rursumque scriptum est: Scienti igitur bonum facere, et non facienti, peccatum est illi (Jac. IV, 17). Ad majoris ergo culpae cumulum hostes suos sancta Ecclesia perhibet et scire quod sequi debeant, et sequi nolle quod sciant. De quibus alias dictum est: Descendant in infernum viventes (Psal. LIV, 16). Vivi sunt qui sentiunt quae erga illos fiunt. Mortui enim nec sciunt omnino, nec sentiunt. Mortui itaque qui non sentiunt pro nescientibus, viventes vero qui sentiunt pro scientibus poni solent. Viventes ergo in infernum descendere est scientes sentientesque peccare. [Rec. X.] Sequitur, VERS. 13, Haec est pars hominis impii apud Deum, et haereditas violentorum, quam ab Omnipotente suscipient. Quam profecto partem haereditatemque protinus insinuat, cum subjungit:

CAPUT XIII.

VERS. 14. Si multiplicati fuerint filii ejus, in gladio erunt, et nepotes ejus non saturabuntur pane. 20. Haeretici sacrae Scripturae vim inferentes a Deo feriendi. Non absurde impii vocantur haeretici, qui per errorem pravi dogmatis a cognitione sunt veritatis alieni, quos sequenti verbo etiam violentos appellat, quippe qui Scripturae sacrae sententias recta dogmata continentes ad intellectum pravum conantur violenter inflectere. Violenti ergo sunt, et si non rebus hominum, certe sensibus praeceptorum. Filii autem violentorum sunt sequaces haereticorum, qui dum eorum errori consentiunt, quasi ex eorum praedicatione generantur. Sed multiplicati in gladio erunt, quia quamvis modo immensa multitudine in perdita libertate succrescant, venturi tamen judicis sententia feriuntur. Unde per Moysen Dominus dicit: Gladius meus manducabit carnes (Deut. XXXII, 42). Dei enim gladius carnes comedit, quia in extremo judicio ejus sententia eos qui carnaliter sapiunt occidit. Qua in re quaerendum est cur dicatur quod hanc partem atque haereditatem suam pravi ab Omnipotente percipiunt. Sed recte considerantibus liquet quia etsi a seipsis habuerunt injuste agere, supernae tamen aequitati suppetit injuste acta juste judicare, ut divina sententia ordinet in poenam quos inordinata sua actio traxit ad culpam. De quibus apte subjungitur: Et nepotes ejus non saturabuntur pane. 21. A veritatis cognitione jejunant Scripturam legentes ad quaestionem, non ad refectionem. Nepotes quippe haereticorum sunt qui de errantium filiorum praedicatione nascuntur. Quos nequaquam panis satiat, quia dum in sacri verbi pabulo plus quaerunt sentire quam capiunt, semper a veritatis cognitione jejunant; et praedicamenta doctrinae quae student ad quaestionem quaerere, 566 habere non valent ad refectionem. Quia vero nonnullos ex iisdem haereticis sancta Ecclesia colligit, nonnullos in malitia sua pertinaces relinquit, protinus additur:

CAPUT XIV VERS.

15. Qui reliqui fuerint ex eo, sepelientur in interitu. 22. In errore morientium poena. Ex eo videlicet haereticorum populo derelicti sepeliuntur in interitu, quia dum ad lucem veritatis non redeunt, profecto in poena perpetua, intelligentia terrena deprimuntur. Et quia nonnunquam dum auctor errantium plebium rapitur ad poenam, seductae plebes reformantur ad veritatis scientiam, et tunc ad veram cognitionem redeunt subditi, cum ad aeterna supplicia perveniunt hi qui male fuerant praelati, apte subjungitur: IBID. Et viduae illius non plorabunt. 23. Erroris doctoribus ad poenam raptis, deceptae plebes saepe resipiscunt. Quas viduas ejus accipimus, nisi subjectas plebes morte illius feliciter destitutas? Quia saepe, ut dictum est, dum praedicator erroris ad aeterna supplicia rapitur, subjectae plebes illius ad cognitionis verae gratiam revertuntur. His enim plebibus perversus praedicator quasi maritus praefuit, quia male eis conjunctus inhaeserat corruptor mentis. Nequaquam ergo viduae, vel destitutae plorant, quia morte pravi doctoris viam veritatis inveniunt, ex cujus interitu affligi posse videbantur. Vel certe non plorant viduae, quia in suo errore remanentes, dum sanctum fuisse aestimant praedicatorem suum, spe falsa ne lugeant consolantur. Sequitur:

CAPUT XVI [Vet.

VIII, Rec. XI]. VERS. 16, 17. Si comportaverit sicut terra margentum, et sicut lutum praeparaverit vestimenta, praeparabit quidem, sed justus vestietur illis, et argentum innocens dividet. 24. Catholici haereticos eisdem Scrip. sacrae testimoniis quae proferunt, debellant. Argentum intelligi sacri eloquii claritas solet, sicut alias dicitur: Eloquia Domini eloquia casta, argentum igne examinatum (Psal. XI, 7). Et quia nonnulli eloquium Dei non interius per exhibitionem, sed exterius per ostensionem habere concupiscunt; idcirco per prophetam dicitur: Disperierunt omnes involuti argento (Saphon. I, 11). Hi nimirum qui eloquio Dei non interiori refectione se replent, sed exteriori ostensione se vestiunt. Unde et horum argentum, id est haereticorum eloquium, terrae est comparatum, quia de Scriptura sacra ut aliquid sciant ex appetitu terrenae laudis elaborant. Qui etiam sicut lutum praeparant vestimenta, quia fluxe et inquinabiliter ea quibus se tueri volunt Scripturae sacrae contexunt testimonia. Praeparabit quidem, sed justus vestietur illis, quia vir recta fide plenus, quae sanctis solet ad justitiam deputari, ea ipsa Scripturae sacrae quae haereticus affert testimonia colligit, et erroris ejus pertinaciam inde convincit. Contra nos namque dum sacrae legis testimonia apportant, secum nobis afferunt unde vincantur. Unde et

David typum Domini, Golias vero haereticorum superbiam signans, hoc rebus locuti sunt quod nos verbis aperimus. Golias quippe cum gladio, David vero cum pera pastorali venit ad praelium. Sed eumdem Goliam David superans suo gladio occidit, quod nos quoque agimus, qui promissi David 567 membra ex ejus fieri dignatione meruimus. Nam cum superbientes haereticos et sacrae Scripturae sententias deferentes, eisdem verbis atque sententiis quas proferunt vincimus, quasi elatum Goliam suo gladio detruncamus. Justus ergo vestitur eis vestimentis quae praeparat injustus, quia vir sanctus eisdem sententiis ad veritatem utitur, quibus se perversus quisque doctum ostendere contra veritatem conatur. 25. Verbum Dei discrete debet exponi, et singulis aptari. Et argentum innocens dividet. Argentum innocens dividere, est eloquia Domini minute discreteque exponere, et unicuique quid digne congruat coaptare. Nam eloquium Domini, quod hic argentum, vel vestimenta, hoc alibi spolia nominatur. Quod etiam Psalmista testatur per comparationem, dicens: Laetabor ego super eloquia tua, sicut qui invenit spolia multa (Psal. CXVIII, 162). Quae spolia idcirco vocata sunt, quia ad fidem Domini gentilitate transeunte, Judaei sacris eloquiis, quibus induti fuerant, exuuntur. [Vet. IX.] De hac quoque argenti vel spoliorum divisione alias dicitur: Benjamin lupus rapax, mane comedet praedam, vespere dividet spolia (Genes. XLIX, 27). Quibus profecto dictis Paulus apostolus designatur, de Benjamin stirpe progenitus, qui mane praedam comedit, quia in primordiis suis fideles quos potuit rapiens crudelitati propriae satisfecit. Vespere spolia divisit, quia fidelis postmodum factus sacra eloquia exponendo distribuit. 26. Discernenda sunt quae salubriter ab haereticis dicta. Quamvis hoc argentum quod dividit innocens intelligi et aliter potest. Haeretici namque, ut facile valeant perversa suadere, dictis suis quaedam recta permiscent, ut animos audientium ex rectis sensibus trahant, ex perversis feriant. Qui in praeceptis Dei, quia sana insanaque locutione variantur, bene in Evangelio decem leprosorum sunt specie designati (Luc. XVII, 12), quorum colori sano dum vitiosus candor aspergitur, immoderato hoc candore foedantur. Unde admonemur non plus sapere, quam oportet sapere, sed sapere ad sobrietatem (Rom. XII, 3). Qui etiam quia necdum Deum diligunt, de quo male sentiunt, nec proximum, a quo dividuntur, decalogi praeceptis adversi sunt, atque ideo ad deprecandum Dominum decem veniunt. Pro eo autem quod sanis insana miscuerunt, coloris diversitate variantur. Sed quia in ejus praeceptis offenderunt, id illum unde offenderant vocant dicentes: Jesu praeceptor (Luc. XVII, 13); unde et mox curari meruerunt. Ergo quia vir catholicus quae ab eis recte, vel quae prave sentiuntur, intelligit, argentum innocens dividit, id est quae ab eis salubriter, vel quae pestifere fuerint dicta discernit. Sequitur:

CAPUT XVII.

VERS. 18. Aedificavit sicut linea domum suam. 27. Haeresum magistri mentes quas occupant corrumpunt. Tinea sibi domum corrumpendo aedificat. Nec meliori potuit comparatione haereticus demonstrari, qui locum suae perfidiae non nisi in mentibus quas corruperit facit, qui etiam sequaces suos ab aeterno igne liberos esse pollicetur. Spondet quippe eis refrigerium quietis aeternae; sed verba ejus soliditatem non habent, quia plenitudine veritatis carent. Unde subjungitur: Et sicut custos fecit umbraculum. Umbraculum namque custodis nullo fundamento solidatur, sed tempore mox transeunte destruitur. Et promissa ab haereticis requies 568 cum tempore destruitur, quae post hanc vitam nullatenus invenitur. Et quia saepe haeretici in contemptu universalis Ecclesiae potentum saeculi patrociniis fulciuntur, eisque divites protectione atque administratione quanta praevalent opitulari non cessant, ipse etiam quilibet contra conditorem suum rebus temporalibus intumescens sancti viri nunc sententia tangitur, atque ab speciali haereticorum interitu ad generalem elatorum omnium definitionem sermo derivatur, cum subditur:

CAPUT XVIII.

VERS. 19. Dives cum dormierit, nihil secum auferet; aperiet oculos suos, et nihil inveniet. 28. Bona temporalia nobis servando amittimus, pauperibus erogando servamus. Cui nimirum sententiae Psalmsta concinens dicit: Turbati sunt omnes insipientes corde; dormierunt somnum suum, et nihil invenerunt omnes viri divitiarum in manibus suis (Psal. LXXV, 6). Ut enim in sua manu divites post mortem quidquam inveniant, eis ante mortem dicitur divitias suas in quorum manibus ponant: Facite vobis amicos de mammona iniquitatis, ut cum defeceritis, recipiant vos in aeterna tabernacula (Luc. XVI, 9). Dives cum dormierit, nihil secum auferet [Rec. XII]. Res suas cum moreretur secum tolleret, si ad petentis vocem cum viveret sibi tulisset. Nam terrena omnia quae servando amittimus, largiendo servamus; patrimoniumque nostrum retentum perditur, manet erogatum. Diu enim cum rebus nostris durare non possumus, quia aut nos illas moriendo deserimus, aut illae nos viventes quasi deserunt pereundo. Agendum ergo nobis est ut res absolute perituras, in non pereuntem cogamus transire mercedem. [Vet. X.] 29. Peccatoris oculos mors aperit, ut fugere a se bona temporalia videat, poenamque succedere. Sed mirandum valde est quod dicitur: Cum dormierit, aperiet oculos suos, et nihil inveniet. Ut dormiamus quippe, oculos claudimus, et evigilantes aperimus. Sed hac in re, quia homo ex anima constat et corpore, cum unius rei somnus dicitur, alterius vigiliae demonstrantur, quia cum corpus obdormiscit in morte, tunc anima evigilat in vera cognitione. Et dormit ergo dives, et oculos aperit, quia cum carne moritur, ejus anima videre cogitur, quod providere contempsit. Tunc profecto in vera cognitione evigilat, tunc nihil esse conspicit quod tenebat. Tunc se vacuam invenit, quae plenam rebus prae caeteris se hominibus esse laetabatur. Dormit, et nihil secum aufert, nihil nimirum de rebus quas tenuit. Nam culpa rerum simul ducitur, quamvis hic omnia, pro quibus culpa perpetrata est, relinquantur. Eat ergo nunc, et acceptis rebus tumeat, seseque super caeteros extollat, glorietur se habere quod proximus non habet. Veniet quandoque tempus ut evigilet, et tunc cognoscat quam vacuum fuerit quod in somno tenuerat. Saepe namque contingit dormienti inopi ut se per somnium divitem videat, atque ex eisdem rebus animum extollat, laetetur se habere quod non habuit, jamque dedignari quaerat a quibus dedignatum esse se doluit. Sed repente evigilans, evigilasse se doleat, qui interim divitiarum imaginem vel dormiens tenebat. Gemit enim protinus sub paupertatis pondere, et inopiae suae angustiis premitur; et eo pejus, quo ad tempus brevissimum, vel vacue dives fuit. Sic sic nimirum hujus mundi sunt divites, qui rebus acceptis tument. Bene operari de sua abundantia nesciunt, 569 quasi dormientes sunt divites; sed paupertatem suam evigilantes inveniunt, quia nihil secum ad illud judicium quod permaneat ferunt, et quanto nunc ad breve tempus sublimius elati sunt, tanto contra se in perpetuum gravius ingemiscunt. Dicat ergo: Aperiet oculos suos, et nihil inveniet, quia illic aperit ad supplicia, quos hic ad misericordiam clausos tenebat. Aperit oculos suos, et pietatis fructum non invenit, quos hic clausos tenuit cum invenit. Tarde quoque illi oculos aperiunt, qui, teste Sapientia, damnationis suae tempore dicturi referuntur: Quid nobis profuit superbia, divitiarum jactantia quid contulit nobis? Transierunt omnia illa tanquam umbra, et tanquam nuntius percurrens (Sap. V, 8). Vilia et fugitiva fuisse quae tunuerant, jam amissa cognoscunt, quae quandiu aderant stultis eorum cordibus et magna et mansura videbantur. Sero dives aperuit oculos (Luc. XVI, 23), quando Lazarum requiescentem vidit, quem jacentem ante januam videre contempsit. Intellexit ibi quod hic facere noluit; in damnatione sua cognoscere compulsus est quid fuit quod perdidit, quando indigentem proximum non agnovit. De quo adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XIX.

VERS. 20. Apprehendet eum quasi aqua inopia, nocte opprimet eum tempestas. 30. Stupenda reprobi divitis post mortem inopia. Videamus nunc inopiam ardentis divitis, cujus tanta abundantia fuit epulantis. Ait enim: Pater Abraham, miserere mei, et mitte Lazarum, ut intingat extremum digiti sui in aquam, et refrigeret linguam meam quia crucior in hac flamma (Luc. XVI, 24). Quibus verbis nobis non hoc innotescitur, quia illic in tanto ardore una tunc ad sufficientiam refrigerii aquae stilla requiratur, sed quod is qui de abundantia peccaverit, illic aestuante nimis crematur inopia. Videmus enim in verbis divitis ex subtilissimo Dei judicio quam digna tali culpae poena responderit. Agente namque inopia, illic usque ad minima petenda compulsus est, qui hic, agente tenacia, usque ad minima neganda pervenit. Quid retribui subtilius, quid districtius potest? Guttam aquae petit, qui micas panis negavit. Apprehendit ergo eum quasi aqua inopia. Non immerito aquae tunc illa inopia comparatur, quia in inferno cruciat, qui susceptos in profundis absorbens, solet lacus nomine designari. Unde per prophetam quoque humani generis voce dicitur: Lapsa est in lacum vita mea (Thren. III, 53). Ereptorum vero exsultatione cantatur: Domine Deus meus, clamavi ad te, et sanasti me; Domine, abstraxisti ab inferis animam meam, salvasti me a descendentibus in lacum (Psal. XXIX, 3). [Vet. XI.] 31. Divini judicii turbo, qua non putat hora, ideoque nocte, eum opprimet. Nocte opprimet eum tempestas. Quid hoc loco noctem, nisi absconditum tempus repentini exitus appellat? Tempestatis vero nomine, judicii turbinem designat. Quod etiam Psalmista testatur, dicens: Deus manifeste veniet, Deus noster, et non silebit; ignis in conspectu ejus ardebit, et in circuitu ejus tempestas valida (Psalm. XLIX, 3). De qua tempestate etiam Sapientia per Salomonem dicit: Ego quoque in interitu vestro ridebo, et subsannabo, cum vobis quod timebatis advenerit, cum irruerit repentina calamitas, et interitus quasi tempestas ingruerit (Prov. I, 26). Et quia ipsa venturi exitus ignorantia nox vocatur, nocte opprimet eum tempestas, id est turbo eum divini 570 judicii dum ignorat apprehendet. Hinc est namque quod per semetipsam Veritas dicit: Si sciret paterfamilias qua hora fur veniret, vigilaret utique, et non sineret perfodi domum suam. Et vos estote parati, quia qua hora non putatis Filius hominis veniet (Matth. XXIV, 43). Hinc etiam contra malum servum dicitur: Si autem dixerit malus servus ille in corde suo: Moram facit dominus meus venire, et coeperit percutere conservos suos; manducet autem et bibat cum ebriis; veniet dominus servi illius in die qua non sperat, et hora qua ignorat (Ibid., 48). Hinc Paulus discipulis dicit: Vos autem, fratres, non estis in tenebris, ut vos dies illa tanquam fur comprehendat. Omnes enim vos filii lucis estis, et filii diei: non sumus noctis neque tenebrarum (I Thess. V, 4). Hic superbienti diviti Dei voce dicitur: Stulte, hac nocte animam tuam repetunt a te; quae autem praeparasti, cujus erunt (Luc. XII, 20)? Nocte animam reddere perhibetur qui, mortem non praevidens, in tenebris cordis abstrahitur. Ait ergo: Nocte opprimet eum tempestas. Quia enim non vult agere bona quae videt, deprehenditur interitus sui tempestate quam non videt. De quo adhuc subditur.

CAPUT XX.

VERS. 21. Tollet eum ventus urens, et auferet. 32. Auferetur a diabolo, qui merito dicitur ventus urens. Quis hoc loco ventus urens, nisi malignus spiritus vocatur, qui desideriorum flammas in corde excitat, ut ad aeternitatem suppliciorum trahat? Perversum ergo quemlibet ventus urens tollere dicitur, quia insidiator malignus spiritus, qui viventem quemque accendit ad vitia, morientem trahit ad tormenta. Nam quia ventus urens immundus spiritus solet intelligi, qui malae suggestionis flatu ad terrena desideria iniquorum corda succendit, Jeremias propheta testatur, dicens: Ollam succensam ego video, et faciem ejus a facie Aquilonis (Jerem. I, 13). Olla namque succensa est cor humanum, saecularium curarum ardoribus, desideriorumque anxietatibus fervens. Quae a facie Aquilonis succenditur, id est diaboli suggestionibus inflammatur. Ipse enim vocari nomine Aquilonis solet, qui dixit: Sedebo in monte testamenti, in lateribus Aquilonis, ascendam super altitudinem nubium (Isai. XIV, 13). Ad hujus igitur urentis venti uniuscujusque electi mens adustione temperatur, quando in ea vitiorum fervor exstinguitur, et desideriorum carnalium flamma frigescit. Unde et sancta Ecclesia in sponsi sui laudibus laeta clamat: Sub umbra illius quem desideraveram sedi (Cant. II, 3). De hujus ardoris temperie ei per Isaiam promittente Domino dicitur: Pro saliunca ascendet abies, et pro urtica crescet myrtus (Isai. LV, 13). Pro saliunca namque in ea ascendit abies, dum in sanctorum corde pro abjectione terrenae cogitationis altitudo supernae contemplationis exoritur. Urtica vero igneae omnino naturae est. Myrtus autem temperativae fertur esse virtutis. Pro urtica igitur crescit myrtus, cum justorum mentes a prurigine et ardore vitiorum ad cogitationum temperiem tranquilitatemque perveniunt, dum jam terrena non appetunt, dum flammas carnis desideriis coelestibus exstinguunt. [Vet. XII.] 33. Mentis refrigerium Mariae datum. Propter hoc quoque mentis refrigerium coelitus datum Mariae dicitur: Virtus Altissimi obumbrabit tibi (Luc. I, 35). Quamvis hac in re per obumbrationis 571 vocabulum incarnandi Dei utraque potuit natura signari. Umbra enim a lumine formatur et corpore. Dominus autem per divinitatem lumen est, qui, mediante anima, in ejus utero fieri dignatus est per humanitatem corpus. Quia ergo lumen incorporeum in ejus erat utero corporandum, ei quae incorporeum concepit ad corpus dicitur: Virtus Altissimi obrumbabit tibi; id est, corpus in te humanitatis accipiet incorporeum lumen divinitatis. Sed jam de iniquo quolibet quod coepimus exsequamur. Tollit ergo eum ventus urens, quia videlicet malignus spiritus eum quem nunc succenderit igne perversae concupiscentiae, rapit postmodum ad flammas gehennae. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXI.

IBID. Et velut turbo rapiet eum de loco suo. 34. Quis sit iniquorum locus. Locus perversorum est temporalis vitae delectatio et carnis voluptas. Quasi turbine igitur unusquisque de loco suo rapitur, cum a cunctis suis delectiationibus extremo territus die separatur. De quo extremo die apte mox subditur:

CAPUT XXII [Rec. XIII].

VERS. 22.Emittet super eum, et non parcet. 35. Deus electos flagellat hic ut parcat, reprobos ut punire incipiat. Omnis percussio divina, aut purgatio vitae praesentis est, aut initium poenae sequentis.Peccatorem Deus quoties feriendo corrigit, ad hoc flagellum emittit, ut parcat. Cum vero ejus vitam in peccato permanentem feriendo concludit, flagellum emittit, sed nequaquam parcit. Qui enim flagellum emisit ut parceret, ad hoc emittit quandoque ne parcat. In hac namque vita Dominus tanto magis studet ut parcat, quanto magis exspectando flagellat, sicut ipse voce angeli ad Joannem ait: Ego quos amo, arguo et castigo (Apoc. III, 19). Et sicut alias dicitur: Quem diligit Daminus castigat, flagellat autem omnem filium quem recipit (Hebr. XII, 6). Econtra autem de flagello damnationis scriptum est: In operibus manuum suarum comprehensus est peccator (Psal. IX, 17). De quo per Jeremiam Dominus dicit, dum incorrigibiliter delinquentes populos videt, quos non jam sub disciplina filios, sed sub districta percussione intuetur ut hostes: Plaga inimici percussi te, castigatione crudeli (Jerem. XXX, 14). Et quod hic dicitur: Non parcet; ibi quoque verbis aliis declaratur: Quid clamas super contritione tua? insanabilis est dolor tuus (Ibid., 15). Unde hoc semper electi provident, ut ante ad justitiam redeant, quam sese ira judicis inexstinguibiliter accendat, ne ultimo flagello deprehensi simul eis finiatur vita cum culpa. Flagellum namque tunc diluet culpam, cum mutaverit vitam. Nam cujus mores non mutat, non expiat actiones. Omnis ergo divina percussio, aut purgatio in nobis vitae praesentis est, aut initium poenae sequentis. Propter eos enim qui ex flagello proficiunt dictum est: Qui fingis dolorem in praecepto (Psalm. XCIII, 26). Quia dum flagellatur iniquus, et corrigitur; audire praeceptum noluit, audit dolorem. Dolor ergo in praecepto fingitur, ei qui a malis operibus quasi praecepti vice, dolore cohibetur. De his vero quos damnant flagella et non liberant, dicitur: Percussisti eos, nec doluerunt; attrivisti eos, et renuerunt accipere disciplinam (Jerem. V, 3). His flagella ab hac vita inchoant, et in aeterna percussione perdurant. Unde per Moysen Dominus dicit: Ignis exarsit ab ira mea, et ardebit usque ad inferos deorsum (Deut. XXXII, 22). Quantum ad praesentem etenim percussionem spectat, recte 572 dicitur: Ignis exarsit ab ira mea (De Poenit., d. 3, c. 43). Quantum vero ad aeternam damnationem, apte mox subditur: Et ardebit usque ad inferos deorsum. Licet a quibusdam dici soleat illud quod scriptum est: Non judicat Deus bis in idipsum (Nahum. I, 9). Qui tamen hoc quod per prophetam de iniquis dicitur, non attendunt: Et duplici confusione contere eos (Jerem. XVII, 18). Et quod alias scriptum est: Jesus populum de terra Aegypti salvans, secundo eos qui non crediderunt, perdidit (Judae, V). Quibus tamen si consensum praebemus, quamlibet culpam bis feriri non posse, hoc ex peccato percussis atque in peccato suo morientibus debet aestimari, quia eorum percussio hic coepta illic perficitur, ut incorrectis unum flagellum sit quod temporaliter incipit, sed in aeternis suppliciis consummatur, quatenus eis qui omnino corrigi renuunt jam praesentium flagellorum percussio sequentium sit initium tormentorum. Emittet ergo super eum, et non parcet. Sequitur:

CAPUT XXIII [Vet. XIII].

IBID. De manu ejus fugiens fugiet. 36. Ferientis manum sola emendatione evadimus.Ille etenim de manu fugit ferientis, qui suae pravitatem corrigit actionis. Vel certe quia in sacro eloquio manus operatio solet intelligi, de manu percussi fugit qui, dum pravi interitum conspicit, vias pravitatis relinquit. Unde adhuc subditur:

CAPUT XXIV.

VERS. 23.Stringet super eum manus suas. 37. In aliorum poena quid nobis timendum sit conspicimus. Manus quippe stringere est vitae suae opera in rectitudine confirmare. Unde etiam Paulus ait: Remissas manus et dissoluta genua erigite (Hebr. XII, 12). Dum itaque alienum interitum conspiciunt, revocantur ad cor, ut recogitent suum; et unde alius ad tormenta ducitur, a tormento alius inde liberatur. Stringit ergo super eum manus suas, quia conspicit in aliena poena quid timeat; et dum delinquentem sic percussum conspicit, dissoluta sua opera justitiae vigore constringit. Sicque fit ut qui iniquus vivens multos ad culpam traxerat delectatione peccati, quosdam moriens a culpa revocet terrore tormenti. Quod etiam provenire bonis Psalmista testatur, dicens: Laetabitur justus cum viderit vindictam impiorum, manus suas tavabit in sanguine peccatorum (Psal. LVII, 11). In peccatorum morientium sanguinne justi lavantur manus, quia dum eorum poena conspicitur, conspicientis vita mundatur. Sequitur.

CAPUT XXV.

IBID. Et sibilabit super illum, intuens locum ejus. 38. Sicque a peccato compescimur. Quid in sibilo, nisi intentio admirationis exprimitur? Si vero in sibilo alia fortasse significatio quaeritur moriente peccatore, hi qui interitum ejus aspiciunt, os in sibilo stringunt, dum ad ea quae contempserant verba spiritalia convertuntur, ut jam credere et praedicare incipiant quae prius dum iniquum florere cernerent non credebant. Nam fit plerumque ut infirmorum animus eo magis de auditu veritatis trepidet, quo florere contemptores veritatis videt. Sed dum justa ultio injustos subtrahit, alios a pravitate compescit. Unde per Salomonem dicitur: Multato pestilente, sapientior erit parvulus (Prov. XXI, 11). Vir igitur sanctus postquam potentum poenas qui extolluntur in saeculo sufficienter explevit, 573 rursus ad haereticorum superbiam, qui extolluntur in eloquio, verba convertit. Nam sequitur:

CAPUT XXVI [Vet.

et Rec. XIV]. CAP. XXVIII, VERS. 1. Habet argentum, venarum suarum principia: et auro locus est in quo conflatur. 39. Haeretici ad sacras paginas veterumque patrum libros provocandi. In argento eloquium, in auro vitae vel sapientiae claritas designari solet. Et quia haeretici sic de eloquii sui nitore superbiunt, ut nulla sacrorum librorum auctoritate solidentur (qui libri ad loquendum nobis quasi quaedam argenti venae sunt, quia de ipsis locutionis nostrae originem trahimus), eos ad sacrae auctoritatis paginas revocat, ut si vere loqui desiderant, inde sumere debeant quid loquantur. Et ait: Habet argentum, venarum suarum principia. Ac si aperte dicat: Qui ad verae praedicationis verba se praeparat, necesse est ut causarum origines a sacris paginis sumat, ut omne quod loquitur ad divinae auctoritatis fundamentum revocet, atque in eo aedificium locutionis suae firmet. Ut enim praediximus, saepe haeretici dum sua student perversa astruere, ea proferunt quae profecto in sacrorum librorum paginis non tenentur. Unde et discipulum suum praedicator egregius admonet, dicens: O Timothee, depositum custodi, devitans profanas vocum novitates (I Tim. VI, 20); quia dum laudari haeretici tanquam de excellenti ingenio cupiunt, quasi nova quaedam proferunt, quae in antiquorum Patrum libris veteribus non tenentur; sicque fit ut dum videri sapientes desiderant, miseris suis auditoribus stultitiae semina spargant. 40.
